To the woman of Samaria the Lord revealed himself:--

> "I that speak unto you am" (iv. 26).

To the Jews the Lord said:--

> "If ye believe not that I am, ye shall die in your sins" (viii. 24).
> "When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am" (viii. 28).

At the time of the betrayal the Lord again refers to this great title (xiii. 19); and in the garden of Gethsemane the mere utterance of the words caused those who were about to take Him to fall backwards (xviii. 6).

To His people this great title takes more concrete form. There are seven avenues of blessing through which the believer draws upon the Saviour as the great I AM.

1. I AM the Bread of Life (vi. 35).
2. I AM the Light of the World (viii. 12).
3. I AM the Door of the Sheep (x. 7).
4. I AM the Good Shepherd (x. 11).
5. I AM the Resurrection and the Life (xi. 25).
6. I AM the True and Living Way (xiv. 6).
7. I AM the True Vine (xv. 1).

The Lord's title as revealed to Martha is twofold and refers to the two classes of believers that must come under the beneficent effects of His mighty power.

> To the dead believer, He is the Resurrection.
> To the believer who is alive at His coming, He is the Life.

No words could indicate more clearly the Lord's consciousness of triumph than these; yet what condescension! What lowly sympathy is exhibited in that smallest of verses, "Jesus wept" (verse 35)! Though He is indeed a great High Priest, yet He is not untouched with the feeling of our infirmities. When Martha interposed with the fact that Lazarus had been dead four days, the Lord said, "Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldst believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?"

Christ was raised by the "glory of the Father" (Rom. vi. 4). It is a great pity that some, not seeing the close relationship between the "glory" and the "resurrection", render the words of Eph. i. 17, "the glorious Father". We must retain the rendering "The Father of glory", seeing how closely it is connected with the exceeding greatness of the power which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead. The Lord had already said:--

> "The hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear His voice, and shall come forth" (John v. 28).

And here before the grave of Lazarus He gave a foretaste of that blessed day:--

> "Lazarus, come forth! and the dead man came forth" (xi. 43, 44).

The last sign given by the Lord before His sufferings is the sign of Israel's restoration. Rom. xi. 15 says:--

> "For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?"

Ezekiel's vision of the valley of dry bones also looks forward to that same blessed day. Indeed there is no blessing that can be enjoyed in its fullness apart from resurrection. The blessings of our pilgrimage are foretastes of coming glory. The life that is life indeed is future.

While we may not range ourselves with those whose hope is defined in John v. 29, may we nevertheless ever remember that our "blessed hope" can never be realized apart from Him who is the Resurrection and the Life.

#8. The Miraculous Draught of Fishes. The One Sign following Resurrection (xxi. 1-14).

pp. 39 - 41

In the first sign the Lord manifested (phanaroō) His glory, in the last He manifested Himself, "shewed" (xxi. 14) being phaneroō. In the first sign we read "They have no wine" (ii. 3), in the last that "they caught nothing", and had nothing (xxi. 3, 5).

There is a dispensational reason for this correspondence of subject. What the Lord came to do at His first advent, He will fully accomplish at His second. Resurrection is the master key of the Bible. Quite apart from human guilt, it was the purpose of God to establish a Kingdom with His Son as King, and when the intruding element of sin has been removed that purpose will be brought to a consummation. That is the teaching of the first and the eighth signs. The fresh start follows the Lord's own resurrection, and in the numerical sequence of the signs it follows the seventh which sees the raising of Lazarus.

Two confessors of the faith are in immediate contextual connection with the first and last signs—Nathaniel and Thomas. Nathaniel was told by Philip that they had found the Messiah, but Nathaniel objected that no good thing could come out of Nazareth. Philip's argument was "Come and see" (i. 46). Thomas was told by the disciples that they had seen the Lord, but Thomas objected that he would not believe their statement apart from actually seeing the wound prints themselves (xx. 25). When Nathaniel was convinced, his confession went farther than that of any of the others at that time. "Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God, Thou art the King of Israel" (i. 49). So Thomas, when he did see the Lord, went beyond the confession of Peter himself, saying, "My Lord and my God" (John xx. 28).

Nathaniel was an Israelite indeed in whom there was no guile, but he was not a representative of the nation. Alas, a truer picture of the apostate nation is found in the blinded Jew of Acts xiii., to whom Paul addressed the words "O full of all subtilty" (same word as "guile"). There were but few Nathaniels. Thomas represents the redeemed and awakened nation, who shall indeed "look upon Him whom they pierced", and shall confess "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for Him", and this confession, like that of Thomas, comes after resurrection, for the verse before says, "He will swallow up death in victory" (Isa. xxv. 8, 9).

Closely associated with the eight signs is an unfolding of the titles of Christ. At the beginning just before the first sign, His disciples spoke of Him as Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph, the Messiah. Nathaniel's confession, as it were, adjusts the focus, and He is seen as the Son of God and the King of Israel. From His own lips now comes the title the Son of Man.

The sign of walking on the sea reveals Him as the "I AM" (vi. 20), while the feeding of the 5,000 leads on to the title "The bread of life" (vi. 35). In the sign of the man born blind (ix.) Christ is revealed as the Sent One, and immediately following the confession of the man born blind comes the title "The Good Shepherd" (x. 11). At the raising of Lazarus is revealed that blessed and majestic title "The Resurrection and the Life" (xi. 25). Thomas' confession, "My Lord and my God" (xx. 28), and that of the disciples "It was the Lord" (xxi. 12) round off the wondrous list. The signs were wrought with the object that they might believe that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God; and that believing they might have life through His Name (xx. 31). Each sign contributes something to our knowledge and understanding of the Christ.

One item in the final sign has always presented a difficulty, and that is the number of fish brought to land, viz., 153. The number is too definite to pass by. It must have a meaning. From earliest days men have displayed a varied ingenuity in explaining the meaning of this number. Dr. Bullinger, in NUMBER IN SCRIPTURE, draws attention to the fact that the gematria of the Hebrew words Beni Ha-Elohim "Sons of God" is exactly 153. It is also suggestive that the gematria of the word "fishes" ichthues and "the net" to diktuon are both 1,224 or 8*153. If we may be allowed to see any teaching in these facts, the final sign emphasizes the certainty that all who have been given to Christ by the Father shall come to Him, the presence of the 8 in the words "fishes" and "the net" occurring in the 8th sign emphasizing resurrection. Appendix 176 of the Companion Bible, speaking of the first and last signs, says:--

> "When Messiah gives joy to the nation, it will be filled up to the brim (ii. 7 cf. Isa. ix. 2-7. John xxi. 11); and when He fills the Land with restored Israel in resurrection, it will be to the last one (Ezek. xxxvii. 12-14). For in the eighth sign Messiah was the Caller, signifying that He will be the Gatherer" (Jer. xxxi. 10).

Lt.-Col. F. ROBERTS has present another interpretation which amplifies the foregoing. He has drawn up a list of those that Scripture records as having received direct blessing from Christ, and this list totals 153 individual cases. We will not attempt to repeat the list, but it may be consulted by any interested in NUMBER IN SCRIPTURE. Peter and the other disciples were to be fishers of men. The Risen Christ stood by them. Their net should not break, and they should lose none. In their own strength they would toil all night and catch nothing, but upon His word they should let down their net and catch a net full.

Should any reader be in possession of further light upon this subject we shall deem it a favour to hear from them.

Lessons for Little Ones.

#15. A Matter of Method.
"Apt to Teach" (II Tim. ii. 2).
pp. 30, 31

In teaching children it should be our endeavour to draw from them correct answers to questions rather than put the answers ready made before them. The reason is this: if you define for a child, say, "sin" as "unrighteousness", the child will accept the statement, but probably will have no clear idea as to what "unrighteousness" means. If you draw out from the child the words "naughty", "not doing what we are told", "doing wrong", etc., you will define "unrighteousness" in intelligible terms, and unrighteousness will become simply that which is "not right".

Some time ago we stood before a gathering of children, and our subject was the words, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God". It may be of service to go over the method then adopted.

Teacher—If I stand here with this blackboard for the next twenty minutes and SAY nothing and WRITE nothing, will you understand what I want to tell you?

Scholar—No.

Teacher—What then must I do if you are to hear and understand the WORDS I have in MIND?

Scholar—You must TELL us.

Teacher—So far so good. God intends that we shall know His Will. His Will is expressed in His Word, and in order that this Word may be heard and understood, He must tell us. We proceed.

Teacher—What ways have we of "telling" anything?

Scholar—Speaking. Writing, Acting*.

Teacher—Yes, these are the three principal means we use. God has spoken His mind—That is His Word. God has caused that Word to be written—That is the Scripture. God has sent His Son, Whose name also is the Word and by His life, death and resurrection, as well as by His sayings, He has revealed God himself. Let us now see how this helps us with our texts, All Scripture.

Teacher—What other words do you know which sound like Scripture?

Scholar—Scribe . . . . . Scribble . . . . . Script.

Teacher—What do all these indicate?

Scholar—Scripture is something WRITTEN.

Teacher—Boys and girls may like to know the actual word God used for Scripture. It is graphé. Do you know any words which include this in their composition?

Tele-graph = Distance-writing.

Teacher—Inspiration. What other words do you know which have any relation to the word Inspire?

Scholar—Respire . . . . . Perspire . . . . . Transpire.

Teacher—Yes, all have something to do with BREATHING. Perhaps you would like to know the actual word used in II Tim. iii. 16. It is Theopneustia. The part of the word I want you to look at is connected with Pneuma, which is the word Spirit. Do you know any words having the word Pneuma in them?

Scholar—(Silence.)†

Teacher—Surely some boy or girl has a bicycle—

Scholar—(The light having dawned by this suggestion) Pneumatic!

Teacher—Yes, and is a pneumatic tyre solid?

Scholar—No. It has to be inflated with AIR.

Teacher—So then we come back to the meaning of inspiration. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, means all the WRITTEN Word is God-BREATHED.

We will not pursue this method further, as we trust the idea has been conveyed. The foundation of truth cannot be too truly laid, and nothing is more disastrous than early misconceptions. Sympathy with the child's mind and view point is all important, and the most advanced students and teachers will find the teaching of the child to be their greatest test.

While the words of II Tim. ii. 2 "apt to teach" may not strictly apply here, the fact that they are to be found there shows that something more than faithfulness is necessary to qualify for satisfactory teaching. The word "Scripture" may be merely a pious shibboleth—once to realize it means "that which is written" is important knowledge.

The Superintendent summarized this address in the language of the school child. "Scripture is Dictation, not Composition". That sentence, intelligible to any school boy, expresses much more than "The plenary and verbal inspiration of Scripture".

[NOTE: * - This third item was not brought forward on this particular occasion as we were confining ourselves to the Inspiration of Scripture.

† - We have purposely included this lack of response in order to show how the answer may still be called forth from the child. Only as a last resource should the answer be given by the teacher, and when this is done, let the teacher recognize that he has failed in that one particular, and so be led to seek grace to help.]

The Gospel according to Matthew.

#1. Matthew Twofold in Scope.
pp. 74, 75

We have during the past years devoted some considerable space to the parables and the miracles of the Gospel according to Matthew, and a consciousness of the great claim which the epistles of Paul have upon our time, thought and testimony, turned our attention from a fuller consideration of the teaching of the Gospel as a whole. The statements of the critic of dispensational truth, which have been touched upon in these pages, together with some evident misconception held by those who "for the time ought" to be clearer, lead us to realize that it will not be going over a well-worn subject if we embark upon an exposition of the Gospel according to Matthew in these pages.

The book opens with a statement which indicates with no uncertainty the theme of the Gospel.

> "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the Son of David, the Son of Abraham" (Matt. i. 1).

The word "generation", Greek genesis, means genealogy or pedigree, and indicates the first 17 verses of the Gospel. Now it is a common saying among many that the gospel of Matthew is the gospel of the kingdom. This is true, but not true in the sense that some intend the words. We refer to that view of things that suggests that Matt. i. 1 reads, "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the Son of David" and stops there. This is but stating half the truth. He was the Son of David, His genealogy establishes His right to the throne, He therefore was truly King, and this gospel sets forth this aspect so prominently that it merits the designation, The Gospel of the King and Kingdom. The other half of the truth that is needed to make perfect balance and to avoid disproportion is contained in the words 'the Son of Abraham". This is a title that is wider than Israel and the Kingdom, and therefore we must be careful not to teach error either by unconscious suppression or by undue emphasis.

Christ's ministry as presented by Matthew is twofold. First He is set forth as the Son of David, and then as the Son of Abraham. Solomon the son of David is the great type of the kingly element, Isaac the son of Abraham the great type of the Abrahamic feature. Now this twofold title of Christ not only divides the first verse, but dominates the literary structure of the whole Gospel; and unless we see this we shall be liable to read into that which pertains to Christ as Son of Abraham those things which belong to Him only as Son of David. This twofold character can be clearly seen from the following:--

The Gospel of Matthew.

A | Birth (genesis, i. 1-18).
B | Baptism in water.
C | Threefold temptation in wilderness. "Kingdoms of the World."
D | SON OF DAVID (Solomon).
a | iii. 17. Voice from heaven, "Beloved Son."
b | xvi. 16. Confessed by Peter (Israelite).
iv. 17. "From that time began Jesus to preach"—Kingdom.
D | SON OF ABRAHAM (Isaac).
a | xvii. 5. Voice from heaven, "Beloved Son."
b | xxvii. 54. Confessed by Centurion (Gentile).
xvi. 21. "From that time began Jesus to show"—Death and Resurrection.
C | Threefold agony in the garden. "The cup."
B | Baptism in death.
A | Resurrection ("This day have I begotten thee", gennaō).

It will be observed that the two sections D & D are in most respects parallel. Both open with the voice from heaven. It is evident that the Transfiguration commences something fresh, by the way in which it echoes the Baptism of John at the beginning. Both sections ends with the confession. The Davidic sections ends with the confession of Peter, an Israelite; the Abrahamic section ends with the confession of the Centurion, a Gentile. Not only so; each section has a definite time mentioned connected with these two distinct phases.

> iv. 17. "From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent, for the KINGDOM of the heavens is at hand."
> xvi. 21. "From that time Jesus began (absolutely identical with iv. 17) to shew unto His disciples how He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day."

These time divisions are not merely human or arbitrary, they are inspired. The apparent recommencement in xvii., on the Mount of Transfiguration, the balancing of the Israelite and Gentile confession that Christ was the Son of God, are entirely in line with these inspired divisions, and further, they exactly coincide with the statement in Matt. i. 1 that Jesus Christ was (1) The Son of David, (2) The Son of Abraham. This twofold character of the Gospel therefore must be kept in mind if our understanding is to be clear. It is a case of "rightly dividing" that meets us here—as everywhere.

#2. The Son of David.
pp. 97 - 100

Let us now gather together the passages in Matthew where Christ is spoken of as the Son of David. There are nine passages in all. The first is i. 1, with which the Gospel opens. The next is found in ix. 27; two blind men follow the Lord crying, "Thou son of David, have mercy on us". In chapter xx. 30 and 31 another pair of blind men cry out, "Have mercy upon us, O Lord, Thou Son of David", the one addition to the title being that of "Lord". The significant fact concerning this is that NO miracle other than these two is recorded by Matthew as being performed by Christ as the Son of David. Israel were blind, they did not recognize their long-promised King. Is that suggested by this strange fact?

The reader may possibly think that the miracle of chapter xv. has been forgotten. There a Gentile woman approached the Lord with the title of Son of David and with the plea for mercy upon her lips, but in this instance she was met with silence. In her hearing the Lord said, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel". David was the shepherd king, taken by God from minding the sheep to shepherd His people, and Christ as the Son of David was the Shepherd King of Israel too. When the Canaanite left the title Son of David for the wider title "Lord" (xv. 27), then the Lord granted her request, recognizing at the same time the greatness of her faith. It is true therefore to say that the only miracles which Christ performed as the Son of David were those to do with blindness and with Israel. This is the first miracle possibly that He will perform when He comes at length to take the Kingdom and reign. He will open their blind eyes that they may look upon Him Whom they pierced. The fact that in each case there were two blind men is suggestive, for the prophets make mention many times of the coming together again of the house of Israel and the house of Judah. Another feature that is associated with this title is that the Pharisees began to realize that unless they definitely discounted the notion, the people would receive Christ as King.

As the outcome of a miracle in which a man possessed of a demon, blind and dumb, was healed, we read, "And all the multitude (ochloi) were amazed, and said, Is not this the Son of David?" (xii. 23). What was the immediate result? "When the Pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out demons, but by Beelzebub the prince of the demons" (xii. 24). Christ replied, "If I cast out demons by the Spirit of God, then the Kingdom of God is come unto you" (xii. 28).

This approach to public recognition, and the immediate attempt of the leaders of the people to discredit Christ, it will be noted is recorded in Matt. xii., where the rejection of Christ is clearly indicated. In that chapter He speaks of Himself as "greater than the temple" (6), "greater than Jonah" (41), and "greater than Solomon" (42), but in each case and capacity He was rejected. Then comes the chapter of PARABLES and mystery because Isa. vi. 10 was being fulfilled in Israel. Here comes the rejection of the Son of David, and for the first time we read of the "Mysteries of the kingdom of the heavens", which speak of bad ground, birds of the air, tares sown by an enemy, corrupting leaven, a treasure found and hidden again, and a harvest "at the end of the age".

In chapter xxi. the Lord makes His public entry into Jerusalem. He will bring before the people yet once again the fact that in Himself the prophecies of the King and Kingdom found their fulfillment. He rides into Jerusalem, fulfilling the words of Zechariah, "Behold, THY KING COMETH" (xxi. 5). The multitudes (ochloi) cried:-- > "Hosannah to the Son of David. Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosannah in the highest" (xxi. 9).

Luke xix. 38 renders the cry:--

> "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord; peace in heaven and glory in the highest."

Mark xi. 9, 10 reads:--

> "Hosannah, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord, Blessed is the Kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosannah in the highest."

A crowd never says exactly the same words throughout a period of acclamation and each Gospel gives a faithful report of the varied utterances, while all assert the one great fact, that here, in the person of the Son of David, was the promised King and Kingdom. Once more the leaders of the people are displeased:--

> "When the chief priests and scribes saw the wonderful things that he did, and the children crying in the temple, and saying, Hosannah to the Son of David; they were sore displeased" (Matt. xxi. 15).

Once again it is evident that the public recognition of Christ as the Son of David threatened their own position and authority.

The last occurrence of the words "Son of David" coincides with the last question addressed to the Lord by His enemies:--

> "While the Pharisees were gathered together (after having endeavoured in vain to entangle Him by their questions), Jesus asked them, saying, What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is He? They say unto Him, The Son of David. He saith unto them, How then doth David in spirit call Him Lord, saying, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou on My right hand, till I make Thine enemies Thy footstool? If David then call Him Lord, how is He his Son? And no man was able to answer Him a word, neither durst any man from that day forth ask Him any more questions" (xxii. 41-46).

Immediately following this passage comes the terrible denunciation of woe against the leaders of the people who sit in Moses' seat and bind heavy burdens upon their backs, which is concluded by the lament over Jerusalem and the solemn allusion to the Hosannah of xxi. 9:--

"Ye shall not see Me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is He that cometh in the Name of the Lord" (xxiii. 39).

Israel, now blind, shall yet see Him. He shall yet "sit upon the throne of His glory" (xxv. 31). His title, Son of David, carries this pledge with it, and His title as David's Lord ensures that this pledge will be fulfilled.

We drew attention to the picture of Israel's blindness in the blind men who cried to the Saviour for mercy, and the reader, with xxii. 42 in mind, will appreciate the prophetic hint in the added title "Lord" in the confession of the second pair of blind men who cried for mercy to the Son of David.

The nine occurrences of the title "Son of David" form a group of seven items as follows:--

A | i. 1. Jesus Christ, the Son of David (cf. i. 23).
B | a | ix. 27. Two blind men. Israel.
b | xii. 23. The people's confession. The leader's opposition.
C | xv. 22. Gentile misuse of the title.
B | a | xx. 30, 31. Two blind men. Israel.
b | xxi. 9, 15. The people's confession. The leaders' opposition.
A | xxii. 42-45. The Son of David is David's Lord (cf. Rev. xxii. 16).

The two groups are dispensationally suggestive. The blind men are grouped with Israel. In each case the leaders of the people, blind leaders of the blind as they were, led Israel into the ditch of rejection.

#3. The Three Great Discourses.
v.-vii., xiii., and xxiv. & xxv.
pp. 130 - 132

There are three outstanding discourses in the Gospel according to Matthew which must be considered together:--

The Teaching given on the Mountain (v.-vii.).
The Parables given at the Sea side (xiii.).
The Prophecy on the Mountain (xxiv., xxv.).

each discourse having the kingdom prominently in view.

In the Sermon on the Mount the opening beatitudes speak of the kingdom of heaven. The question of being least and great in that kingdom, and of entering into it is spoken of in the opening chapter. In chapter vi. the prayer given to the disciples as a pattern includes the prayer for the coming of the kingdom, and the kingdom of God is to be sought above all else. Chapter vii. reverts to the theme of entry into the kingdom.

Upon the rejection so manifest in Matt. xii. comes the series of parables which speak of the "mysteries of the kingdom of heaven". These parables have been dealt with at some length in earlier volumes of The Berean Expositor.

The third discourse is the great prophecy given immediately consequent upon the words of Christ when He said:--

> "Ye shall not see Me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Matt. xxiii. 39).

The prophecy refers to the "end", when the Son of man shall come in great glory, when Daniel's prophecy shall be fulfilled, when the days of Noah shall once more be upon the earth, and when the nations shall gathered before the Lord to hear His verdict concerning entry into the kingdom. Entry into the kingdom is a recurring theme in these great passages. We shall see this better when we give them a more detailed study.

In the Sermon on the Mount which comes in the first portion of Matthew, the part connected principally with the Son of David, the law of Moses is quoted and the temple at Jerusalem is referred to. The practice of making offerings at the altar, the danger of the Sanhedrin and Gehenna, the taking of oaths, the ceremonies in the synagogues, the fasting and the anointing of the head, the reference to Solomon in all his glory, the reference to the Gentiles as in contrast with those addressed; all link this discourse primarily with Israel.

In Matt. xxiv., xxv. those addressed shall be hated of all nations; the gospel of the kingdom is to be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations. When the King comes and sits upon the throne of His glory, all nations shall be gathered before Him. The law of Moses is not applied to them. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me"; this is the law that decides the question of entry or non-entry into the kingdom. This is parallel with the words of Rom. ii. 26, "Therefore if the uncircumcision keep the righteousness of the law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision?" This wider aspect of Matt. xxiv., xxv. and its reference to "all nations" are fittingly placed in that part of Matthew which is associated with Christ as the Son of Abraham.

The parables of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven speak of both Israel and the nations at the end of the age, under the figures of wheat, tares and fish.

We must now turn our attention more directly to the place and purpose of the Sermon on the Mount. This we hope to do in the next article of this series.

#4. The Sermon on the Mount. What is its Place and Purpose?

pp. 162 - 164

What is the purpose of Matt. v.-vii.? A great variety of opinions exist as to the place of the Sermon on the Mount in the revelation of truth. To speak broadly, the varying views come under two heads:--

1. The Sermon on the Mount is the great outline of Christian practice (Bloomfield), and applies to the church to-day.
2. The Sermon on the Mount does not apply to the church to-day, but constitutes the laws of the kingdom which is yet to be set up on the earth.

Readers of The Berean Expositor will not require a detailed refutation of position #1, while the majority will already have arrived at conclusion #2. It is our duty however to reject both conclusions and to examine the theme independently. It will first be necessary to go into the reasons for rejecting position #2, especially as this has been taken up by many who have sought rightly to divide the Word of truth, and who are clear as to the distinction between kingdom and church.

Let us look at the Sermon on the Mount and consider the claim upon our faith for the conception that these verses constitute "the laws of the kingdom". The opening beatitudes speak of "mourning" and being "persecuted for righteousness' sake". A blessing is pronounced upon those who are "reviled", "persecuted", and "slandered" falsely for the sake of Christ. We believe that the Scriptures testify that, when the kingdom of prophecy is set up and Christ reigns as the Son of David:--

> "In his days shall the righteous FLOURISH, and abundance of PEACE so long as the moon endureth" (Psa. lxxii. 7).

The "needy" and the "poor" are to be his special care and:--

> "They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat; for as the days of a tree are the days of My people, and Mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands . . . . . They shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountain, saith the Lord" (Isa. lxv. 22-25).

One cannot but realize that a different atmosphere pervades the references of the O.T. to the kingdom of the Messiah, than that of the Sermon on the Mount. The beatitudes of verses 1-12 are not the only references to the persecuted and outside position of those addressed here.

Under the conditions recognized by the Sermon on the Mount a man may be in danger of gehenna or of prison and the payment of the uttermost farthing. Divorce is still contemplated as a possibility, which we feel can find no warrant from O.T. prophecy of the future kingdom. Again, the injunction to resist not evil, and being sued for one's coat, or being compelled to go a mile, etc., bring before the mind a totally different economy from that which fills the vision of the prophets of old. Enemies are still abroad, and those that curse and hate. In the great prayer taught by the Lord to His disciples, the kingdom is still future. They pray, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven". Those addressed still "fasted", and had the possibility of serving "two masters". The kingdom of God is to be the first object of their seeking, and "evil" is still to be expected day by day. "Dogs" and "swine" may still turn and rend those who indiscriminately dispense holy things, and those addressed are still in the condition that can be spoken of like this, "If ye then, being evil, etc." False prophets will still deceive, and some still build upon sand.

We cannot reconcile the general tenor of the teaching of these three Chapters with the conception of those with whom in the main we agree, viz., that the Sermon on the Mount gives us the laws of the kingdom. Rather do we see a persecuted, waiting people, suffering during the absence of their rightful king, sustained by the hope that, when He comes and the kingdom is set up, they will then receive their great reward which is in heaven, awaiting the day when they, the meek, shall inherit the earth.

We have dealt with the subject negatively in order to free ourselves from the tradition mentioned above. We can now approach the passage to search and see as true Bereans its purpose and place in the Gospel of the kingdom.

The Ministry of Consolation.

#1. "A Word in season" (Isa. l. 4).

pp. 28, 29

One of the most enviable gifts that we can possess when seeking to minister to those in distress or sorrow is the ability to speak a word "in season" to him that is weary. There are many weary hearts that cry our for comfort, yet how many are rebuffed and chilled simply because the word of comfort has not been spoken "in season". The word in season cannot be learned by rote, neither can it be acquired by any artificial means. Words that reach the heart must come from the heart.

In Isa. l. 4 we may learn the precious secret.

1. The Tongue.

> "The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learner, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary."

The gift of tongues surely never included a more precious gift than this. It is most important for us to observe that the word rendered "learned" in the A.V. should be "learner". Of all the people most unfit to speak to sorrowing ones is the "learned" one as such. Isaiah uses the word so rendered, four times. "Disciples" (viii. 16); "Taught of" (liv. 13); and "learned" (l. 4) (twice).

The learner, the one who has passed through the school of experience, is alone fitted to minister comfort to the weary. How is the tongue of the learner obtained?

2. The Ear.

> "He waketh morning by morning, he wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learner" (Isa. l. 4).

Here is the blessed secret. The tongue is influenced by the ear. This is so in the physical world. There are many who are dumb solely because they are deaf. They do not know that they can make an articulate sound, therefore they never speak. It is the same in the spiritual world. Many a believer is dumb in testimony, in prayer, in proclamation, because he is deaf. To have the tongue of the learner we need the wakened ear. The wakened ear means more than merely "hearing", for "to hearken" in the Scriptures includes obedience. So, in Isa. l. 5, the opened ear is associated with meek subjection.

> "The Lord God hath opened mine ear and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back."

3. The Face.

The tongue can only speak as the ear is opened, and the opened ear cannot be disassociated from suffering and reproach:--

> "I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting" (Isa. l. 6).

The words reveal the Saviour here. He was and is the One Who pre-eminently has the tongue of the learner. As the great High Priest He is able to succour the tempted and tried, because He has suffered, being tempted, Himself; He does give a "word in season" to the weary. In Matt. xi. we have those memorable words:--

> "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

The context is instructive. The cities wherein the Lord had done many mighty works repented not. Humanly speaking His ministry had been most discouraging. Yet:--

> "AT THAT TIME Jesus answered and said, I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth because Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so Father: for so it seemed good in Thy sight" (Matt. xi. 25).

Here is the glorious illustration of Isa. l. He Who was so meek and lowly that He could look up under these circumstances and say, "Even so", He was the One Who could say "Learn of Me". He could speak a work "in season" for He was not rebellious. He had the tongue because He had the ear and the heart.

Shall we not learn this lesson, and in our pilgrimage be better fitted to pour in the oil and wine of comfort, speaking a word in season to the weary ones whom we meet, and learning not only what but how to speak the word that shall minister true consolation?

#3. "Together, with them" (I Thess. iv. 17).
pp. 47, 48

The view which the enlightened believer upon conversion receives of the carnal nature often produces in certain minds an unscriptural repudiation of homely and domestic affections. To such their Lord is "an austere man", and holiness is synonymous with mortification. To such the possibility of a practical working combination of holiness and natural affection does not seem possible. The Apostle when foretelling the apostate times of the end could place side by side, "unholy, without natural affection" (II Tim. iii.) and could enjoin young widows to re-marry (I Tim. v. 14).

To that man of God there was nothing carnal in the full appreciation of God's Fatherly care, and while being thoroughly conversant with the joys of independence in the midst of privation, he could nevertheless write of creature comforts, that God had given them "richly to enjoy".

There are many, who, by the workings of this selfsame austerity, are deprived of the "comfort of the Scripture" with reference to "that blessed hope". Waiving for the moment the dispensational position of I Thess. iv., and seeking from it the comfort for which it was primarily written, we would draw attention to one feature which has gripped our own hearts, and turned the tears of sorrow into those of joy. The austere view, touched upon above, tends to rule out the God-given natural affection that should find a sanctified place in the hope of the believer. True it is that our hope is to meet the Lord, be with Him and be like Him, whether the meeting take place on earth, in the air, or far above all.

Some there are who have become persuaded that the meeting once again of loved ones however is not to be uttered in the same breath. Yet, we feel sure that many whose lips with all sincerity give utterance to these self-effacing words, will often feel their hearts crying out for the assurance that the hope of meeting their Lord need not banish into the background the hope of meeting their loved ones too.

It is here where the consolation of the Scripture is fuller and kinder than the conceptions of man. The Divine order we find in I Thess. iv. 17 is "together with them . . . . . to meet the Lord". There will be no furtive glances, no aching hearts, when we enter into the presence of the Saviour. All we have loved and lost in the faith shall meet again, and TOGETHER WITH THEM (and not otherwise) shall we MEET THE LORD, and ever in unbroken unity be with Him.

"Wherefore comfort one another with these words" (verse 18).

#4. "Fret Not Thyself" (Psa. xxxvii.).
pp. 140, 141

The English word "fret" comes from the Anglo-Saxon fretan = to gnaw. The Hebrew word used here means to burn, to kindle (Gen. xliv. 18, Num. xi. 33). The LXX translates the Hebrew by parazēloō. This word is also used in the Greek translation of Deut. xxxii. 21, I Kings xiv. 22, and Psa. lxxviii. 58, and in the N.T. in Rom. x. 19, xi. 11 & 14. It is therefore very evident that the command "Fret not thyself" in Psa. xxxvii. must not be rendered by the English idea of to fret, to be peevish, to mourn, or to grieve.

One has only to look at the context of the command in Psa. xxxvii. to see that the word contains the thought of envy and jealousy. It is not the fretting because of the wickedness of men, but fretting because of their prosperity. It is not the overburdened mourner that is addressed, but the believer, tempted by the temporal successes of the ungodly, to leave the pilgrim pathway. In verse 7 this thought finds expression:--

> "Fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass."

This kind of fretting leads to evil. Verse 8 shows this by immediately following with:-

> "Cease from anger, and forsake wrath; fret not thyself in anywise TO DO EVIL."

This fretting is the result of forgetting, and of shortness of vision. David assures us that those successful wicked men > "shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb" (verse 2).

Later, in verses 35 and 36, he enlarges upon this saying:--

> "I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. Yet he passed away, and, lo, he was not; yea, I sought him, but he could not be found."

Instead of envying the wicked and their successes, the Psalmist urges the more excellent way of trust in the Lord.

> "Delight thyself also in the Lord, and He shall give thee the DESIRES OF THINE HEART. Roll thy way upon the Lord; trust also in Him; and He shall BRING IT TO PASS . . . . . Be silent to the Lord, and wait patiently for Him" (verses 4-7).

What words are here! How they breathe the very atmosphere of quiet confidence and simple trust! "Delight thyself"; how much better this than "fretting thyself"! "Roll thy way" instead of bearing the burden alone. "Be silent"; "wait patiently"; what holy calm!

Peace with God is unalterable. The enjoyment of that peace is another thing. Phil. iv. 5-7 is a far-off echo of Psa. xxxvii.:--

> "Be anxious for nothing, in everything by prayer . . . . . with thanksgiving . . . . . AND THE PEACE OF GOD . . . . ."

Fret no thyself.

#5. The Ram caught in a Thicket (Gen. xxii. 13).
pp. 158, 159

Not a few of the readers of The Berean Expositor are passing through seasons of trial owing to the growing problems in the industrial and commercial world. For their encouragement we draw attention to a well-known passage, which in a time of difficulty came with new force.

Gen. xxii. must ever remain pre-eminently prophetic of the great act of Calvary, yet this does not prevent its light and blessing radiating into the lesser corners of our private lives. Scripture itself gives us the argument:--

> "He that spared not His Own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not WITH HIM also freely give us all things?" (Rom. viii. 32).

We are told that Abraham rejoiced to see the day of Christ (John viii. 56), and if, as we may reasonably suppose, he understood in some degree the prophetic import of the trial through which he passed, that would by no means lessen the personal and practical effects of the provision of the Lord in the "ram caught by his horns in a thicket". Indeed, Abraham does not name the place "Jehovah-Jireh" until after he had seen the ram and had offered it instead of Isaac his son.

Some of our everyday trials and experiences, resulting, as they may do, from the chaotic state of finance and commerce, may nevertheless be permitted in order that the Lord may be able to say "Now I know that thou fearest God . . . . ." (Gen. xxii. 12). In such hours and places of trial look out for the ram caught by his horns in a thicket. The ram was "behind" Abraham, and unobserved until the critical moment had come, but all the same it was seen at that moment, and gratefully accepted as a provision of love.

While we therefore in stedfast faith would "lift up our eyes, and see the place afar off" (Gen. xxii. 4), let us, by the same undoubting faith, lift up our eyes to see what providence the Lord may send to deliver us at the time of crisis. "In the mount of the Lord it shall be seen" (Gen. xxii. 14), not while we are "afar off". We may have to stretch forth the hand and take the knife, before the ram caught by his horns is revealed to us.

It is rather suggestive that in the preceding chapter we have a parallel with the ram caught in the thicket. Hagar took her son also:--

> "And wandered in the wilderness of Beer-sheba. And the water was spent in the bottle" (Gen. xxi. 14, 15).

Hagar felt that the end had come. She cast the child under one of the shrubs and went about a bowshot away, for she said, "Let me not see the death of the child" (verse 16).

Then came the voice from heaven; not recognizing faith as in the case of Abraham, but remembering the promise made to Abraham, viz.:--

> "Fear not, for God hath heard the voice of the lad WHERE HE IS" (Gen. xxi. 17).

The lad was Ishmael; Where he is was under a shrub dying of thirst. "I will make him a great nation" (verse 18) was the promise.

> "And God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water" (Gen. xxi. 19).

It does not say that God made a well; He simply opened the woman's eyes.

Are there rams caught by the horns in every thicket? Are there wells of water in every desert? It appears so. Maybe instead of praying for deliverances we should seek the ever opened eye.

pp. 170, 171

Psalm lxxiii. reveals the fact that it is necessary to look from the right standpoint, especially when the providential and dispensational dealings of God are concerned. Asaph saw the proud and the wicked, and observed that they often flourished, and were at ease, whereas the righteous were plagued all the day long, and chastened every morning. He said, "I was envious at the foolish". Then something happens to clear his vision, something adjusts his focus. He shall sees the same wicked, but no longer with envious eyes. He now can see the slippery place whereon their feet stand, he sees how quickly desolation falls upon their prosperity. Where once he envied the ill-gotten wealth, or unchastened ease of the proud, he now says:--

> "There is none upon earth that I desire beside Thee" (verse 25).

Verse 17 contains the secret of the change in Asaph:--

> "Until I went into the sanctuary of God, then understood I their end."

Not only may we there understand the end of the wicked, but the end in its fuller and vaster meaning. The word translated "end" is also rendered "the latter days" (Numb. xxiv. 14; Deut. iv. 20, etc.), and "latter end" (Deut. viii. 16, etc.). Psa. xxxvii. brings the "end" of the wicked and the righteous together for comparison:--

> "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace. But the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off" (verses 37, 38).

It appears from these passages that the truer view does rest upon the present transitory phase with its varied and unequal experiences. A little more or less of pleasure, sorrow, ease, or distress, is more than counterbalanced by the end.

It is also of great help, not only to think of the vast purpose and end that God has in view, but also to consider the narrower circle of our own pilgrimage and to echo the prayer of Psa. xxxix. 4:--

> "Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know how frail I am."

The answer to this prayer immediately follows:--

> "Behold, Thou hast made my days as an handbreath: and mine age as nothing before Thee: verily every man at his best state is altogether vanity" (Psa. xxxix. 5).

When we were tracing the theme of Ecclesiastes we were led to the conclusion that life is a purposeless puzzle apart from resurrection (The Berean Expositor, Volume X, pp. 122-127). The dominion of sin and death involves all in the bondage of corruption, and were it not that there is "hope" in the "end" life would be unbearable. It is in this spirit that the apostle wrote I Cor. x. 13:--

> "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, Who will not allow you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will WITH the temptation MAKE THE END, that ye may be able to bear it."

So in II Cor. iv. 17 he can call his afflictions "light" as he views the "exceeding weight" of glory; he can speak of them as "but for a moment" when he knows the weight of glory to be "age-lasting".

> "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen . . . . ." (I Cor. xv. 19, 20).

James bids us not only to dwell upon the "patience of Job", but also the "end of the Lord". He tells us that temptations have a perfecting work, and with Heb. xii. directs us to the "afterwards".

> "Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord . . . . . there is HOPE in thine END" (Jer. xxxi. 16, 17).

#7. "Jesus wept" (John xi. 35).
p. 191

It would not be possible for the Lord to avoid tears, and at the same time to enter into the experiences of those who are flesh and blood, for the pilgrim's path leads through the valley of Baca (Heb. v. 7). There is blessed consolation however for the weeper in the words:--

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning" (Psalm xxx. 5).

This is our stay as with tears we press on; the tears are but for the night. A day is coming when "God shall wipe away all tears" (Rev. xxi. 4).

Service cannot be faithfully carried on without tears. "Serving the Lord . . . . . with many tears" (Acts xx. 19 and 31), expressed the active devotion of the great apostle. "Much love" cannot be expressed without the price of tears (Luke vii. 36-50); but whether the strenuous devotion of a Paul, or the quieter devotion of the woman who was a sinner, it remains true that "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy" (Psalm cxxvi. 5). When therefore the tears will come, let us remember that they unite us with a holy fellowship. The Lord Himself, the sweet singer of Israel, Jeremiah the prophet, Paul the apostle, the woman who loved much, form a part of that goodly company, as do the great multitude whom no man could number, that pass through the tribulation and stand, overcomers, before the Lord (Rev. vii. 17).

Weeping is the portion of the believer while absent from the Lord (John xvi. 20), but in the presence of the Lord there is fullness of joy and pleasures for evermore.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning" (Psalm xxx. 5).

Studies in the Epistles of the Mystery.

#48. The Dispensation given to Paul (Eph. iii. 2).
pp. 23 - 25

We have seen that the imprisonment of Paul was very vitally connected with his ministry to the Gentiles after the setting aside of Israel. That ministry he called "the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward".

Before going further into this chapter, let us see whether we can realize a little more just what the apostle meant by the word "dispensation". The word is a translation of oikonomia, which occurs nine times in the New Testament. Every reference is found either in Paul's writings, or in those of his companion, Luke. In Luke xvi. 2, 3, 4 the word is rendered "stewardship". In I Cor. ix. 17; Eph. i. 10, iii. 2, 9 (R.V.); Col. i. 25 it is rendered "dispensation", and in I Tim. i. 4 (A.V.) "edifying" occurs instead of "dispensation", owing to a variant reading in MSS.

The cognate word oikonomos occurs ten times. Of these occurrences four are in Luke, five in Paul's Epistles, and one in I Pet. iv. 10. It is mostly translated "steward". Luke xii. 42; xvi. 1, 3, 8 render it thus. So do I Cor. iv. 1, 2; Gal. iv. 2 (R.V.); Tit. i. 7; I Pet. iv. 10. Rom. xvi. 23 uses it of "Erastus, the chamberlain of the city". The steward is variously connected with charge over household goods and affairs, the municipal oversight of a city, Paul's stewardship of the mysteries of God, the charge of young children, the responsibility of a bishop, and the stewardship of the manifold grace of God.

The Septuagint uses the word oikonomia in Isa. xxii. 19, 21 to speak of the "station" and "government" of Shebna who was the "treasurer; and it frequently uses oikonomos in the expression, "that was over the household", as in Isa. xxxvii. 2. Heb. iii. 1-6 in the light of these references evidently has stewardship or a dispensation in view.

Coming back therefore to Eph. iii. 2 with these facts in mind we read again the words, "Since ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward". The dispensation was given to Paul as a steward of the mystery of God (I Cor. iv. 1). The household over which he was placed is clearly defined in Eph. ii. 19. His treasurership was to do with greater treasures than ever Shebna dreamed—they were "the unsearchable riches of Christ"; "the riches of the glory of this mystery."

The dispensation which was given to Paul is called "the dispensation of the grace of God". The dispensation given to Moses was that of law. What mysteries have been made out of the "keys of the kingdom of heaven" which were given to Peter! Read in the light of Isa. xxii. 15-25 it is seen to be the symbol of stewardship. The trusted servant who is "over the household", like Joseph in the house of Potiphar, had the keys. He shut and no one opened, he opened and no one shut (Isa. xxii. 22). Peter therefore had the dispensation of the kingdom of the heavens committed to him. Paul and Apollos were stewards of the mysteries of God. When Paul became the prisoner of Christ, after the crisis of Acts xxviii., he was given the dispensation of the grace of God to the Gentiles.

The character of this dispensation is twofold:--

1. It is pure grace.
2. It is for Gentiles.

Grace threads its way throughout this epistle as woven in the very texture of the theme. We quote from an earlier article. Speaking of the structure of the occurrences of "Grace" in Ephesians (Volume VI, page 19) we read:--

> "How truly does the divine arrangement of this word emphasize its place and importance. No salvation is complete without it, and the parting benediction is enriched by it. It runs through the whole fabric of redemption, covering the ages past and to come with its unction. It gives its name to the special dispensation committed to the Apostle Paul, marking it off as pre-eminently one of grace. It vitalizes the outcome of redemption, namely service, being as much a necessity for the inspired and gifted Apostle while preaching the Word, as for the individual believer in his everyday conversation."

God had already shown grace to Israel and to the Gentiles, but never before so fully, and so richly, and never before in such a fashion.

The title of the dispensation given in Eph. iii. 2 is not complete without verse 9. Reading oikonomia (as in the R.V.) instead of koinōnia, we have the full rounding out of the title—"And to make all men see what is the dispensation of the mystery". The grace of God which flows to the Gentiles under the stewardship of Paul has not to do with the promises made to Abraham or to David, but with a dispensation hidden by God from the ages.

One further item is gathered from Col. i. 24-26. There we find the dispensation committed to Paul is associated on the one hand with the "church which is His body" (24), and on the other hand with that mystery which had been hidden from the ages and generations (26).

The dispensation given to Paul therefore may be said to be:--

As to Subject, Gospel, Attitude and Basis	The Grace of God.
As to Form, Limits, Manifestations	The Church of the One Body.
As to Nationality	The Gentiles.
As to Distinctive Character	The Mystery never before made known.

We must turn our attention in the next article to the claim which the apostle makes to the "revelation of the mystery", and to the parenthesis of verses 4 & 5, wherein we must try the things that differ and so approve of those which are more excellent.

#49. The Mysteries of Eph. iii. 1-13.
pp. 55 - 58

The great theme of the first half of chapter iii. is "The Mystery". This subject, like several other equally weighty themes in Paul's epistles, is introduced by way of a parenthesis. Chapter iii. opens with the words, "For this cause" and verse 14 resumes the statement. The chapter may be sub-divided simply as follows:--

A | iii. 1. For this cause.
B | 2-13. The ministry of the mystery.
A | 14-. For this cause.
B | -14-21. Prayer for believers.

Our subject for the present is confined to the first half of the Chapter, viz., B | 2-13. Again we must set out before the eye the literary arrangement of the passage so that we may perceive the subject upon which the attention should be focused.

B | 2-13.

A | 1. Prisoner for you.
B | 2. Dispensation of the grace of God.
C | 3. Revelation of mystery.
D | 4-7. Ministry of mystery.
C | 8. Unsearchable riches.
B | 9. Dispensation of mystery.
A | 13. Affliction for you.

The apostle, instead of seeking the commiseration of the saints with his imprisonment, shows them the ground he and they have for glorying in such affliction, seeing that in that condition and state he had been entrusted with the dispensation of the mystery, unveiling a purpose which hitherto had never been made known (A | 1 and A | 13). The dispensation of the grace of God to the Gentiles is further explained as the dispensation of the mystery which had hitherto been hidden by God, the one expression magnifying the wondrous grace that has been manifested to the far-off Gentiles, the other indicating the peculiar character of that grace inasmuch as it was the outworking of a secret purpose of the ages which God had never before made known (B | 2 and B | 9).

But, some reader may interpose, How can you speak of the mystery as being kept an absolute secret until revealed to the apostle Paul, when verse 5 declares that it had been made known in measure at least to other generations, and had been revealed not to Paul only but to other apostles and prophets too? The question is an important one, nevertheless it is an evidence of failure to rightly divided the Word of truth here. Let us examine the passage for ourselves.

Verse 4 speaks of the Mystery of Christ. This mystery evidently was not something entirely new at the time, for the apostle definitely makes a comparison between the knowledge possessed by former generations and that of his own time. "As" indicates this comparison. However much we may stress the greater knowledge of the apostles and prophets, such comparison necessitates that the sons of men in other generations did have a knowledge of the same truth. If however we read on in the chapter we shall find that the apostle appears to change his tone. Instead of sharing the revelation with other apostles and prophets, he emphasizes his own peculiar stewardship. Instead of instituting a comparison with former generations, he stands alone and incomparable:--

> "To me, the less than least of all saints, was this grace given, to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ among the Gentiles, and to enlighten all as to the dispensation of the mystery which hath been hidden from the ages in God" (Eph. iii. 8,9).

The epistle to the Colossians should always be considered when any difficulty is found in Ephesians. It always amplifies, illustrates or illuminates. The distinctive character of Paul's ministry of the mystery is the subject of Col. i. 23-27. There the apostle speaks of himself as a minister:--

> "according to the dispensation of God which is given to me to you, to complete the Word of God, even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and generation, but is now made manifest to His saints."

Let us take this passage back with us to Eph. iii. First of all we should know that Eph. iii. 5 is incorrectly translated in the A.V. Instead of reading "in other ages", it should read "in other generations". The A.V. has so translated the word in Col. i. 26. We are now able to make a more positive statement. The mystery spoken of in Eph. iii. 5 WAS made known in some measure in other generations. The mystery of Col. i. 26 was NOT made known either in other generations or ages. This fact helps us to see more clearly than ever that there are two subjects, both mysteries, with which the apostle deals in Eph. iii. 2-7. The one, revealed in fuller measure to apostles and prophets than it had been in the past, is the Mystery of a CHRIST. The other, never made known in any generation or age, and revealed only to the apostle Paul, to whom the trust was committed to enlighten all as to its teaching, is called simply the MYSTERY, and pertains to the members of the Body of Christ. The mystery of Christ speaks of the Head. The mystery exclusively revealed to Paul speaks of the members.

We can now the better appreciate the opening up of the central members of the structure C | 3, C | 8, and D | 4-7:--

C | 3. The mystery made known TO PAUL.—"unto me."
D | 4-7. | a | 4. The Mystery of CHRIST.
b | 5. Apostles and Prophets (plural).
a | 6. The Threefold Fellowship.—"The Mystery" (verse 3).
b | 7. Paul (singular).
C | 8. Unsearchable riches made known BY PAUL.—"unto me."

It will be seen by the above arrangement that verse 8 reads on from verse 3, verses 4-7 being in parenthesis:--

> "How that by revelation He made known UNTO ME the mystery, UNTO ME, the less than the least of all saints is this grace given" (verses 3 and 8).

Immediately before verse 3 is the reference to the dispensation of the grace of God, and immediately following verse 8 is the reference to the dispensation of the mystery.

The parenthesis, verses 4-7, may now be studied in its right relationship with the context, and this we propose to do in our next paper.

#50. The Two Mysteries of Eph. iii. 4-7.
pp. 86 - 88

The "mysteries" are practically peculiar to the N.T. Out of eight different words rendered "secret" in the O.T. the LXX translated but one of them by the Greek word musterion, and that is confined to the Chaldee section of the book of Daniel (chapters ii. and iv.). The Chaldee portion of Daniel pertains to the Gentiles and the transfer of the sovereignty from Israel to Nebuchadnezzar. This is an important and suggestive fact.

The word mystery was not used by Christ when on earth until his rejection by Israel became evident. The mysteries of the kingdom of heaven are revelations of that phase of God's purpose that came into operation consequent upon Israel's rejection of the Lord. It is vitally associated, by the Lord Himself, with Isa. vi. 10. When Israel of the dispersion had followed in the same steps as Israel in the land, Isa. vi. 10 was again quoted, and again was closely associated with mystery. The epistle to the Ephesians, of which the mystery is the theme, follows the setting aside of Israel in Acts xxviii.

Eph. iii. speaks not only of the mystery as it relates to the new dispensational dealings of God with the Gentiles, but also with the mystery of Christ. Now this mystery must not be read as meaning simply the fulfillment of prophecy. While many in Israel saw the teaching of their Scriptures as to the coming of the Messiah in glory and dominion, few saw the mystery of the Messiah which related to His Coming in lowliness, rejection and suffering. Christ said, speaking of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, "Many prophets and righteous men have desired to see these things . . . . . but have not seen them" (Matt. xiii. 17), and into the mystery of Christ "angels desired to look" (I Pet. i. 12). Mystery necessitates revelation. It is something that cannot be inferred or arrived at by study.

We pointed out in our last paper that verses 4-7 are a parenthesis and that verse 3 reads on to verse 8. We have therefore the means to a clearer view of the theme before the apostle by leaving the parenthesis out for a time and observing his teaching concerning the wondrous dispensation which he had received. Some features we have already considered, so we will merely tabulate them in order to have a full statement.

The Mystery; its Special Characteristics.

1.	A special minister.	Paul, as prisoner (1). Me (2, 3, 8). I (8).
2.	A special ministry.	For you Gentiles (1). To youward (2).
		Among the Gentiles (8).
3.	A special communication.	Made known by revelation (3).
4.	A special theme.	Unsearchable (8). Mystery (3, 9). Hid (9).
5.	A special period.	The dispensation of the grace of God (2).
		The dispensation of the mystery (9). Now (10).
6.	A special witness.	Unto principalities (10). Manifold wisdom (10).
7.	A special purpose.	According to the purpose of the Ages (11).

Such is the theme of verses 1-11 omitting the parenthesis. Coming to verses 4-7 we learn more concerning this mystery by way of contrast. The mystery of verses 1-3 and 8-11 is contrasted with the mystery of Christ. Let us again seek an analysis.

The Mystery of Christ.

1. Not exclusive to this dispensation. It was made known in other generations (5).
2. Not exclusive to the Apostle Paul. It was revealed unto prophets and apostles (5).

The Mystery.

1. It was exclusive to the Apostle Paul. Verses 1, 2, 3, 8 & 9, already considered, and verse 7, "Whereof I was made a minister", the words defining the gospel intended in verse 6.
2. It was peculiar in its composition. It gives a threefold equality to the Gentile believer never before known or enjoyed (6).

Verse 6 in the A.V. reads on from verse 5, being connected by the word "that". The R.V. makes the connection closer by adding in italic type the words "to wit". Any literal translation however is obliged to render einai as a statement of fact, and there is no word nor construction which necessitates "that" or "to wit". Instead of connection, contrast is intended. Instead of the threefold fellowship of the Gentiles being the mystery revealed to the apostles and prophets and before them the sons of men in other generations, it is entirely associated "with that gospel" whereof Paul was made a minister, who in that capacity received the commission to enlighten all as to the dispensation of the mystery, which instead of being revealed in other ages, or at the time to many prophets and apostles, had never been revealed at all, but had been hid from the ages and revealed only to the one chosen Apostle, Paul, when the time for its publication had arrived. Instead therefore of linking verse 6 with 5, we should link verse 6 with 7 & 8.

We do not arrive at the truth if we stop at the word gospel in verse 6. Scripture speaks of a series of sets of good news or "gospels" and to ascertain the truth we must know that the gospel under consideration was that which the Apostle Paul preached according to the gift of grace of God which had given him the dispensation of this secret to administer. The parenthesis of verses 4-7 stands therefore thus:--

THE MYSTERY OF CHRIST	/ \	Made known in other ages. Revealed now to apostles and prophets, including Paul.
THE MYSTERY	/ { \	The threefold fellowship of the Gentiles. Revealed in the special gospel of Paul. Given to him to the exclusion of others.

Isaiah, when he penned the 53rd chapter of his prophecy, entered in some degree into the "mystery of Christ" and shared with Paul, Peter and others that blessed truth. David too, when he wrote Psa. xxii., perceived the sacred secret of Christ's rejection.

But neither Isaiah, David, nor Peter had any knowledge of the terms of the mystery as revealed in Eph. iii. 6. That was hidden by God. It constituted a part of the purpose of the ages, but was a part, pertaining to the heavenly section, which had never been made known.

A fuller examination of iii. 6 must be reserved for our next paper.

#51. Sphere and Character of Blessing (Eph. iii. 5, 6).

pp. 118 - 121

It is difficult to decide between the A.V. rendering of Eph. iii. 5, which joins the words en pneumati (by the spirit) to the apostles and prophets, thereby declaring the source of their inspiration, and the alternative rendering which makes the words "in spirit" commence the statement as to the threefold fellowship of the Gentiles.

Matt. xxii. 43 supplies an instance where en pneumati is used of inspiration, "How then doth David in spirit call him Lord?" Rom. viii. 9 supplies an instance where the words are used not of inspiring apostles and prophets, but as indicating a sphere of blessing. "You are not in flesh, but in spirit." The general trend of the context and the recognition of the canon that the apostle's style allows of no superfluous words causes every sentence to be pregnant with meaning. No item can be eliminated without injury to the sense and teaching. The question of inspiration is not in view. Whatever had been made known of the subject under discussion, either to Paul or to the other apostles, had been "revealed" which carries with it the thought of inspiration.

On the other hand a change of sphere is a feature which the apostle emphasizes in this epistle. Its blessings are "in the heavenlies" and "in Christ". Its practical outworkings are "in the Lord", and the special feature with which Eph. iii. 6 is in direct contrast is given in Eph. ii. 11, en sarki "in flesh". In verse 12 another sphere is mentioned "in the world".

In flesh	is set over against	in spirit.

With the addition of the word "one" the change is found indicated in ii. 18, "Access to the Father in One Spirit", and again in ii. 22, an habitation of God in Spirit". In chapter iii. the apostle pursues the theme of the change of dispensation. The inspiration of Scripture or of apostles is extraneous to the subject. Consequently, as we are free to choose, we feel that iii. 6 must commence with the words "In spirit". This is the essential condition of blessing in this dispensation. The blessings themselves are "all spiritual" and can only be received by those who are "in spirit".

In the next place we pause to note the class who are spoken of as being thus blessed in spirit. It is usual for the words to be added, at least mentally, to make the verse read, "That the Gentiles together with the Jews should be fellow-heirs, etc.", but this idea is unwarranted. If for the moment we concede that the Jew is in view, the teaching then must be accepted as a veritable revelation of an hitherto hidden mystery, for where, since the call of Abraham to the writing of the epistle to the Romans (where the apostle says "the Jew first", etc.), has the Gentile ever received the threefold equality revealed here.

Millennial blessings, which fulfils the promises to Israel, necessarily give the blessed Gentile a secondary place; they who were once aliens to the commonwealth of Israel, but who are finally blessed under the covenant of promise, are nevertheless "tail" and not "head", and their national distinctions remain. Here, in the dispensation of the Mystery, the sphere is "in spirit" and the equality is concerning the Gentiles. The only place that a Jew can have here is to lose his nationality and enter this unity as a sinner saved by grace, even as the Gentile did.

The threefold equality of this new sphere must now be noted:--

Sunkleronoma, Sussōma, Summetocha.

In each case the word commences with su which means "with". The best word in English to fit the three statements is the word "joint". We can say "joint-heirs", a "joint-body", and "joint-partakers".

In Heb. xi. 9 we read of Isaac and Jacob who sojourned with Abraham as "heirs with him of the same promise".

God does not call Himself merely the God of Abraham, or the God of Abraham and Isaac. His full title in this connection is "The God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob". They were co-heirs. In I Pet. iii. 7 the husband, though recognizing his wife as a "weaker vessel", is nevertheless enjoined to remember that they were both "heirs together of the grace of life". The equality among all believers in the dispensation of the Mystery is expressed in similar terms. Co-heirs. This inheritance is the subject of Eph. i. 11 & 18, and of Col. i. 12. It is a predestined allotment, it is "in the light".

The joint-body (sussōma) is as unique as is the word used to express it. The word occurs nowhere else in the N.T. or in the LXX. Words arise in response to needs, and never before in all the varied ways of God with man had there been the necessity for such a term. Kingdom, Firstborn, Church, Bride, Wife, Flock, these and other terms had been necessitated by the unfolding of the purpose of the ages, but not until the revelation of the Mystery was there necessity to use such an expression as "joint-body". The equality in the body is opened up in Eph. iv. 16. There is but One Head and the rest of the body are members one of another.

The third item is "joint-partakers", but such an expression does not convey the truth until the statement is completed:--

> "Joint-partakers of the promise in Christ, through the gospel of which I became minister."

The better readings omit the words "of Him", and give the title "Christ Jesus".

"The promise in Christ Jesus."—Paul, when writing to Timothy his last "prison epistle", calls himself:--

> "An apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, according to the promise of life, which is in Christ Jesus" (II Tim. i. 1).

Writing to Titus between the two imprisonments he speaks of the :-- > "hope of aionian life which God, that cannot lie, promised before age times, but hath in due times (or, its own particular seasons) manifested His word through a proclamation with which I (egō) was entrusted" (Titus i. 2, 3).

The Gentiles, here called and blessed, may indeed have been "strangers from the covenants of promise" while "in flesh", but "in spirit" they are "joint-partakers" of a promise which goes back before the age times, and before the overthrow of the world.

Such is the sphere and character of the unity created by the Lord during this time of Israel's blindness.

We rejoice at the testimony of "All Scripture" to the joys and blessings which are stored up for Israel, the nations, the groaning creation, and the church of God. nevertheless, we, according to His promise, look for higher things than Abraham hoped or the Prophets dreamed.

> "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory" (I Cor. xv. 41).

#52. Two aspects of the Apostle's ministry (Eph. iii. 7, 8).
pp. 149 - 152

We have considered the great threefold statement concerning Gentile blessing. We now pass on to observe the added statements of the passage. In verses 7 and 8 appear two descriptions of one office, the one viewed from the standpoint of Divine appointment, the other from the standpoint of human fitness. From the standpoint of Divine appointment the wording is direct, unapologetic, full of the consciousness of spiritual importance. On the human side there is intense humility, but in both there is grace. The apostle speaking of his ministry says that it was:--

> "According to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of His power."

The wording here is noteworthy. "Effectual working" is in the original energeia = "inworking" or "energy". Power is the word dunamis. In Eph. i. 18-20, speaking of the resurrection of Christ at the conclusion of the first prayer, the apostle says:--

> "That ye may know . . . . . what is the exceeding greatness of His power (dunamis) to usward who believe, according to the working (energeia) of the strength of His might, which He wrought (energeō) in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead."

We say "speaking of the resurrection of Christ", but the passage is more strictly concerning the power which is to "usward who believe". The mighty power which raised Christ from the dead is "to usward who believe". Such a statement when compared with the poverty of our present experiences of the grace of God may sound strange, but it is a Scripture for us and about us. Again in chapter iii. 20, 21, at the conclusion of the second prayer of the epistle, the apostle says:--

> "Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power (dunamis) that worketh (energeō) in us. Unto Him be glory."

Here again the fulfillment of this prayer is associated with the same marvelous power and energy. In chapter iv. 16 this energy is seen pulsating through every member of the One body as its very life blood:--

> "From Whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working (energeia) in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."

In direct contrast with these passages comes the statement in Eph. ii. 2:--

> "According to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh (energeō) in the children of disobedience."

This dread energizing is manifested in the "lust of the flesh, fulfilling the wills of the flesh and of the mind" (verse 3) and those thus energized have no idea that in thus following their own bent they are being so led and empowered. This is probably so with regard to the believer. In the ordinary way this energy of God which flows to us through the risen Christ may not make any great show of power, but just as the children of disobedience are unconsciously energized by the evil spirit to fulfil the will of the flesh, so the believer is unconsciously energized to do the will of God. The hymn expresses the thought perhaps as well as any words we could say:--

"And every virtue we possess,
And every victory won.
And every thought of holiness,
Are His alone."

The whole spiritual life and service of the believer is the outworking of the risen life of Christ. In the case of the apostle the ministry of the one body was carried out by the same glorious power. The smallest and most insignificant member of the body likewise cannot minister to his fellow-member apart from this same power. If we keep to the figure of the body, we can say of this energy, "the blood is the life". Without this "power of His resurrection" the body would be dead, and all activity would cease.

The reader may be stimulated to review the teaching of the Scriptures with regard to this word energeia by the complete list of occurrences which are as follows: Eph. i. 19, iii. 7, iv. 16; Phil. iii. 21; Col. i. 29, ii. 12; II Thess. ii. 9-11.

This apostle, in no degree behind the chiefest apostles, this apostle, who "glorified" his office, could nevertheless write in the very next verse, "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints is this grace given". Fearless proclamation, unflinching courage, immovable convictions, are not necessarily separated from lowliness of mind. Moses, the master mind of Israel, was the meekest man on earth. Paul, who would not yield in subjection for an hour at Jerusalem (Gal. ii. 5), could nevertheless call himself the chief of sinners and one utterly unworthy of the sacred trust given to him. Let us notice the humble mind of this great apostle, and seek to emulate it also:--

> "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints" (Eph. iii. 8).
> "I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God. But by the grace of God I am what I am" (I Cor. xv. 9, 10).
> "I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, Who hath enabled me, for that He counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry, who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious; but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief . . . . . sinners, of whom I am chief" (I Tim. i. 12-15).

The conscience of the apostle was still tender when he wrote to Timothy. Years of faithful service, of unparalleled suffering, of heroic conflicts, of glorious testimony, never hid from the great apostle's eyes, his own personal unworthiness. It was the grace of God that made him what he was. It was His mercy that placed him in the ministry.

It is one of the trials of Christian service to feel constrained to be emphatic with regard to truth, uncompromising with regard to stewardship, and ever conscious of a sacred trust, and yet to be ever reminded of those things that one did "ignorantly in unbelief", and of the many personal fallings and shortcomings so palpable to the senses of those who do not believe one's testimony. It is however a cause for great thankfulness that in the example of the apostle we find encouragement to continue in the narrow and difficult path, even though we have continually to confess our own unworthiness and failure. The gospel of grace, in the dispensation of grace, is carried on by grace, and grace speaks of favour to the unworthy.

The same Paul who in real humility wrote to the Corinthians that he was the "least of the apostles" was equally inspire to write to the same church that he was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles (II Cor. xi. 5), repeating the claim, with the added touch of conscious personal demerit:--

> "In nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though I be nothing" (II Cor. xii. 11).

May grace be given to every reader so happily to combine true zeal with the grace of true humility.

#53. The Gospel of Unsearchable Riches (Eph. iii. 8).
pp. 184 - 187

The two presentations of the apostle's conception of his calling, the one the minister gifted by grace and energized by power, the other gifted by grace because so personally unworthy, is followed by two aspects of his special ministry:--

1. "That I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ" (iii. 8)
2. "And to make all men see what is the dispensation of the mystery" (iii. 9).

He had already spoken of two mysteries; the one, the mystery of Christ, the other, the mystery of the dispensation; and had claimed a great knowledge of the former (verse 4), and an exclusive revelation of the latter (verses 3, 9). The mystery of Christ finds its utterance in the unsearchable riches of Christ; the mystery itself is explained by the words of verse 9. Let us examine these parallel statements. Firstly, the unsearchable riches of Christ. Three items should be observed here. Following the order of the original:--

(1). Among the Gentiles.
(2). To preach as a gospel.
(3). The unsearchable riches of Christ.

The sphere of the apostle's witness is defined as among the Gentiles. We are still dealing with his special ministry. The nature of the announcement must be noted. It is not a kērugma, or the proclamation of a herald, but it is an evangel, a preaching as of a gospel. The special for the Church of the One Body is here indicated. There are two "preachings" mentioned in Ephesians, viz., (1) "He came and preached peace" (ii. 17 - this had to do with the constitution of the New man, all faction being destroyed, and reconciliation being perfected); and (2) "That I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ" (iii. 8). The two together make up the good news concerning the rejected yet glorified Head, and the members of His body. There are four references to a gospel in Ephesians:--

"The gospel of your salvation" (i. 13).
"The gospel whereof Paul was made a minister" (iii. 6, 7).
"The preparation of the gospel of peace" (vi. 15, which echoes ii. 17).
"The mystery of the gospel" (vi. 19, which echoes the gospel of the unsearchable riches of iii. 8).

The subject of this gospel as we have already seen is the unsearchable riches of Christ. The word translated "unsearchable" occurs elsewhere in the N.T. only once. In Rom. xi. 33 it is rendered "past finding out". The LXX uses the word three times in Job:--

"Which doeth great things and unsearchable" (v. 9*)
"Who doeth mighty works, past finding out,
And wondrous things, in number infinite.
Behold! He passeth, but I see Him not;
He sweepeth by, but is invisible" (ix. 10, 11*).
"He breaks the strong in ways we cannot trace;
And others, in their stead, He setteth up" (xxxiv. 24*).
[* - Metrical Version, see The Companion Bible.]

The important part of anexichniastos is ichnos = "a step" (see Rom. iv. 12; II Cor. xii. 18, and I Pet. ii. 21). The idea of the word is expressed by "untraceable", no footmark being found. The main features of Messianic prophecy are plainly marked upon the page of Scripture. The "mystery of Christ", the "mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven", were not so plainly understood. The special phase of the mystery of Christ which is related to the Church of the One Body was untrackable—no trace being found. The apostle Paul preached Christ in a manner impossible to others before him. Who, before the preaching of Paul, knew that the rejected Christ had been raised far above all principality and power, and had been made Head over all things to the Church which is His body, during the very time when He had been rejected as Head over all things in the wider sphere of God's purposes? Christ is essential to the Church, and it is not possible to speak of the constitution of the Church until the position of Christ is first realized. Is he severed for the time from Israel and earthly things? then I can understand the status of the Church of the One Body, and its political seat in heaven. Is He nevertheless raised to the very right hand of God in the super-heavenlies? then I can appreciate the revelation of that blessed sphere as being that of the Church's blessing. The order of verse 8 and 9 is inspired and logical. First the unsearchable riches of Christ, then the dispensation of the mystery. Let us not pass over the fact that we are dealing with "riches".

The tragedy of Israel's fall became "the riches of the Gentiles" (Rom. xi. 12), and the rejection of their Messiah did not rob Him, it but revealed His boundless reserves of wealth. Old Testament prophecy, type and ritual is full of the riches of Christ, riches of the majesty of His kingship, riches of the fullness of His one offering, riches of the plenitude of His doctrine, but these by no means exhausted the statement of His wealth. He had riches in glory, that had never been made known, and they are revealed in the mystery of Christ, for the first time in this epistle. Here are riches of grace (i. 7); riches of glory (i. 18, iii. 16); and exceeding riches of grace (ii. 7).

The mystery of Christ, the unsearchable riches of Christ, constitute the riches of the glory of the mystery. Without these unsearchable riches the dispensation of the mystery would be a dispensation of beggary. Every member of the One Body would be a Syrophenician suing for crumbs from Israel's table. The apostle makes this clear in Col. i. 27:--

> "To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles."

What is it? Shall we enumerate the spiritual blessings? Shall we dilate upon heavenly places? Shall we exult in the threefold equality? We cannot. These are valueless and empty without the risen and ascended Christ. The riches of the glory of the mystery among the Gentiles is "Christ among you the hope of the glory". In Rom. i. 1-4 the gospel of God is defined as:--

> "Concerning His Son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead."

The Christ of Eph. iii. is the same blessed person. He is still so far as the flesh is concerned "the seed of David", but the revelation of His present position is much more wonderful than that given in Rom. i.:--

> "Dost thou remember Jesus Christ, the One having been raised from the dead, of the seed of David, according to my gospel, wherein I suffer trouble, as an evildoer, even unto bonds" (II Tim. ii. 8, 9).

Without a knowledge of the mystery of Christ we cannot preach the gospel that harmonies with the truth of the One Body.

We must reserve the consideration of the message of Eph. iii. 9 for another paper. Meanwhile may we rejoice in the riches here revealed to our faith, and find our hearts knit together and comforted as we meditate upon all that they mean to us and to our blessed Lord.

Paul and his Traducers.

#1. "Christ or Paul?"
pp. 79, 80

The opposition and misrepresentation which marked the course of the Apostle Paul's ministry has never died down and to-day among Christian people many hard, biased and untrue things are said against this servant of Christ.

Our sub-title "Christ or Paul?" is the quintessence of prejudice and ignorance, we only use it in order to show its untruth. The words "Christ OR Paul?" imply that Paul set himself up in opposition to Christ and that his doctrine is a substitute for the doctrine of Christ. Let the apostle speak for himself, and upon the testimony of his own words let both the apostle and his traducers be judged:--

> "Was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized into the name of Paul? I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius, lest any should say that I had baptized in mine own name" (I Cor. i. 13-15).
> "But we preach Christ crucified" (I Cor. i. 23).
>
> "Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed?" (I Cor. iii. 5).
>
> "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase" (I Cor. iii. 6, 7).
> "Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God" (I Cor. iv. 1).
>
> "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ" (I Cor. xi. 1).
>
> "The Head of every man is Christ" (I Cor. xi. 3).
>
> "We preach NOT OURSELVES, but Christ Jesus the Lord" (II Cor. iv. 5).
>
> "We have this treasure in earthen vessels" (II Cor. iv. 7).
>
> "Now then we are ambassadors for Christ" (II Cor. v. 20).
>
> "Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me" (II Cor. xii. 9).
> "Since ye seek a proof of CHRIST speaking in me" (II Cor. xiii. 3).

We have limited ourselves for the time being to a few passages in I & II Corinthians. If we quoted nothing further, these statements of the apostle in his letters to one church only would be sufficient to set aside as biased and untruthful the insinuation contained in the words "Christ or Paul?" In the epistles Christ speaks through Paul, the latter being His ambassador, His minister.

We hope to return to this subject again.

#2. "The Slave of Christ."
pp. 126 - 128

What is Paul's own statement as to his relationship to the Lord Jesus Christ? "Paul, a bond servant (doulos) of Jesus Christ". So opens the epistle to the Romans. After speaking of the Risen Christ, Paul says:--

> "By Whom we have received grace and apostleship, for obedience to the faith among all nations for His name" (Rom. i. 5).

Then towards the close of this wonderful epistle the apostle says:--

> "I written the more boldly unto you in some sort, as putting you in mind, because of the grace that is given me of God, that I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles" (Rom. xv. 15, 16).

In Galatians we have this utterance:--

> "From henceforth let no man trouble me: for I bear in my body the marks (stigmata, the brand marks upon slaves) of the Lord Jesus" (Gal. vi. 17).

In Ephesians, Paul says:--

> "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ" (Eph. iii. 8).

Philippians presents a deeper and more loyal love and service to Christ than has ever been shown by mortal man:--

> "With all boldness, as always, so now also Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether by life, or by death. For to me to live—CHRIST" (Phil. i. 20, 21).

Writing to Timothy years after the day of his conversion, Paul says:--

> "I thank Christ Jesus our Lord Who hath enabled me, for that He counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry: who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious" (I Tim. i. 12, 13).

And again:--

> "Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me His prisoner" (II Tim. i. 8).

Paul rarely refers to the Saviour as "Jesus"; to him "Jesus is LORD" (I Cor. xii. 3). "To us there is but ONE LORD Jesus Christ" (I Cor. viii. 6). The glory of the sevenfold unity of the Spirit is the central figure, viz., "One Lord" (Eph. iv. 5) and looking forward to the day that is coming this slave of the Lord could glory in the thought that then "every knee should bow . . . . . and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. ii. 10, 11). In the same introduction to the Romans where the apostle styles himself the bond-slave, he gives the full title of his Master, as "Jesus Christ His Son, our Lord" (Rom. i. 3).

We have observed that many of those who are antagonistic to the teaching of Christ through Paul rarely speak of the Saviour by His risen title of "Lord", but usually and familiarly speak of Him as "Jesus". His bond-slaves, "bought with a price", will only too gladly confess Him continually as Lord.

Truth and lies have no neutral ground between them. Whether the unjust statements concerning Paul proceed from ignorance or malice, from untaught zeal or from hatred to truth, such statements are lies and those utter them are liars, the Scriptures quoted above being witness.

#3. "The name of Jesus . . . . . Lord."
pp. 143, 144

As mentioned briefly in our last article, many who speak slightingly of the Apostle Paul, and who make a great show of love and loyalty to Christ speak of Him continually as "Jesus". The man whom they traduce ever owned Him as "Lord". The very first utterance of the converted Pharisee was "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" (Acts ix. 6). These words epitomized his ministry. To Paul "Jesus was Lord", and Paul his bond slave. What a contrast to the unholy familiarity of those who continually use the name "Jesus" is Paul's declaration in Rom. i. 3 that the gospel of God is concerning "His Son Jesus Christ our Lord"!

Paul, as soon as he was converted and had entered Damascus:--

> "Straightway preached Jesus in the synagogues, that He is the Son of God . . . . . proving that this is very Christ . . . . . he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus" (Acts ix. 20-27).

Throughout his testimony he spoke of Christ in terms that acknowledged His glory and Headship. Where the many, to-day, who are not worthy to unloose the latchet of Paul's shoes, so familiarly address the Risen Son of God as "Jesus", Paul bows before Him and owns Him "Lord". To Paul He is "The great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus ii. 13).

In the short epistle of II Thessalonians Paul makes reference to Christ twenty-four times. Eleven times he uses the title "The Lord Jesus Christ", nine times "The Lord", twice "Christ", once "Lord Jesus", and once "the Lord of Peace". Surely the man who within the brief compass of 47 verses uses these full titles so frequently (one to every two verses) manifests the attitude of heart and mind that was his toward the Saviour. We know not whether other epistles would reveal more or less than II Thessalonians—we simply picked upon this as being brief.

In Phil. ii. and Eph. iv., where Paul does use the name "Jesus", the exceptions prove the rule. In the one passage "every knee is to bow and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is LORD", in the other, Christ is seen as the Head of the New Creation. The few occasions where Paul departs from the usual acknowledgment of the Lordship of the Christ are all justified by their contexts.

Again we feel that Paul has a lesson to teach those who prefer "the teachings of Jesus" to the "opinions of Paul".

#4. "Paul's Opinions."
pp. 171, 172

Those who speak against the apostle Paul and place the "teaching of Jesus" in contrast with the epistles, speak of the teaching of those epistles as "Paul's opinions". Let us therefore have Paul's own testimony concerning the doctrine he proclaimed, for which he lived, and for which he eventually died:--

> "I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man, for I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the REVELATION of Jesus Christ . . . . . it pleased God . . . . . to REVEAL His Son in me . . . . . immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood" (Gal. i.).

In proof the apostle brings forward his known manner of life to show how impossible it was for the doctrine he preached to have originated in his own mind, further, he declares that no man taught him, and in proof he shows that three years of preaching went by before he even saw Peter, and fourteen years before he went up to the Council at Jerusalem. In I Thessalonians he reminds them of the way in which the gospel came to him:--

> "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance" (i. 5).
> "When ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as word of men, but as it is in truth, the WORD OF GOD, which effectually worketh also in you that believe" (ii. 13).
> "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain, etc." (iv. 15).

Apart from the personal inspiration of the apostle, his epistles are replete with references to the Old Testament Scriptures. During the Acts period he could say of his ministry:--

> "Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come" (Acts xxvi. 22).

Not only could Paul declare that his message was "according to the Scriptures", but Peter, who confessed that there were many things in Paul's writings "hard to be understood", which the unlearned wrested unto their own destruction, Peter, who so clearly expresses his understanding of the inspiration of Scripture (II Pet. i. 19-21), Peter includes Paul's epistles among the Scriptures (II Pet. iii. 16). Paul wrote by the same authority as did Moses, Matthew, Peter and John.

#5. Christ Risen.
pp. 189, 190

There are some who say with Mary, "They have taken away my Lord", when they refer to the supposed results of following the teaching of the epistles of Paul.

Unconsciously by so quoting Mary's statement they reveal the true state of affairs. Shorn of sentiment Mary's utterance amounts to a confession of unbelief in the resurrection of Christ. Those who oppose the teaching of Paul's epistles know Christ after the flesh, but seem to have no practical place for Christ risen. When once the fact has been grasped that the same Person, Christ Himself, speaks whether in the Sermon on the Mount, Peter's epistles, the Apocalypse, Romans or Ephesians, all such invidious distinctions must cease, and Matthew, Peter, John and Paul are channels only, ambassadors, servants, mouthpieces, but not originators.

Paul's conversion was by the personal revelation of the risen Christ (Acts ix.). His gospel was > "Concerning His Son . . . . . declared to be the Son of God with power . . . . . by the resurrection from the dead" (Rom. i. 3, 4).

So vital was the truth of the resurrection to the apostle's ministry, that he declared that forgiveness of sins, future hope, and present faith were vain, if Christ were not risen. The life which the apostle lived in the flesh he lived by faith of the Son of God (Gal. ii. 20), and heart belief that God had raised Christ from the dead meant salvation (Rom. x. 9).

Apart from resurrection Christ could not have entered into His office as the last Adam (I Cor. xv.).

> "To this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that He might be Lord both of the dead and living" (Rom. xiv. 9).

Paul's teaching starts with the death and resurrection of Christ, whereas Matthew's ends with it. In the prison epistles the emphasis is not only upon the risen Christ, but also upon the ascended Lord, for resurrection does not necessarily remove from earth to heaven. To those who turn a deaf ear to the words of the risen Christ by reason of antipathy towards the instrument He has chosen, we would quote Heb. xii. 25:--

“See that ye refuse not Him that speaketh. For if they escaped not who refused Him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from Him that speaketh from heaven.”

Redemption.

#1. The Kinsman-Redeemer.

pp. 109 -112

It may appear in the eyes of some readers that a series of articles upon "Redemption" can be intended only for those who are in need of the first principles of the truth, and that those to whom The Berean Expositor chiefly addresses its testimony may pass these articles by without much loss. We believe, however, that some of the most advanced readers of this magazine entertain views that have come down the age as truth, but which will not stand the test of impartial scriptural investigation, and if this should be so, it necessarily follows that our understanding of the whole purpose of the ages must suffer, and our views on many related themes be distorted.

It is possible that some doctrines which have been held very tenaciously may be seriously called in question, and that other and perhaps neglected aspects will have to take a more prominent place. We therefore trust that all our readers will realize the fundamental importance of the subject and will, as a result, be the more desirous that the teaching of the Scriptures shall be accepted in full. It is not possible to consider the teaching of Scripture with regard to Redemption, without also taking into account the teaching of the same Word as to the Redeemer. Redemption is not an abstract thing, it is the work of a Personal Redeemer. That Redeemer is set forth in clear, unmistakable characters, and when we have grasped the essential conditions that had to be fulfilled before one could become a Redeemer, we shall at the same time grasp more fully the scope of Redemption itself.

In the A.V. O.T. there is but one word translated Redeemer, that word being Goel. The book which most vividly portrays the Scriptural features of the Redeemer is the book of Ruth. A certain man left Bethlehem-Judah, by reason of famine, and went into Moab, taking with him his wife Naomi and two sons, Mahlon and Chilion. There Elimelech dies, and the two sons marry. They also die, and Naomi, hearing that the Lord had visited His people with bread, arises to return to Bethlehem. The two daughters-in-law go with her, but one, Orpah, turns back, Ruth alone accompanying Naomi back to Bethlehem, arriving at the beginning of barley harvest, and therefore at the time of the Passover.

A kinsman of Naomi's husband, a man of wealth, named Boaz, owned fields of corn, and into this man's field Ruth goes to glean. Boaz deals very kindly with her on account of her faithful conduct toward Naomi. When Ruth returned with the result of her day's gleaning and told Naomi of the attitude of Boaz, Naomi praised the Lord, and said, "The man is near of kin unto us, one of our next kinsmen" (Ruth ii. 20). The A.V. margin reads "One that hath right to redeem". Acting upon Naomi's instructions Ruth lies at the feet of Boaz on the threshing floor, and at midnight upon being discovered Ruth answers, "I am Ruth thine handmaid, spread therefore thy wing over thine handmaid, for thou art a near kinsman" (iii. 9). Again the A.V. margin reads, "One that hath right to redeem". Boaz now reveals a fact that made a pause in the accomplishment of Naomi's purpose.

> "It is true that I am thy near kinsman: howbeit there is a kinsman nearer than i. Tarry this night, and it shall be in the morning, that if he will perform unto thee the part of a kinsman, well; let him do the kinsman's part: but if he will not do the part of a kinsman to thee, then will I do the part of a kinsman to thee, as the Lord liveth" (Ruth iii. 12, 13).

It is evident from what has been already quoted that pity, love, power, or any other attribute associated in our minds with Redemption cannot be put into operation until kinship is established.

The fourth chapter of Ruth shows us Boaz obtaining the right of redemption, and putting it into operation:--

> "Then went Boaz up to the gate, and sat him down there; and, behold, the kinsman of whom Boaz spake came by" (Ruth iv. 1).

Boaz puts before this kinsman the case of Naomi, saying:--

> "If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it: but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me, that I may know: for there is none to redeem it beside thee: and I am after thee. And he said I will redeem it" (Ruth iv. 4).

When, however, Boaz gave this kinsman to understand that the redemption of the inheritance of Naomi involved the raising up of the name of the dead husband of Ruth, the kinsman withdrew. The law says:--

> "If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath sold some of his possessions, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then shall he redeem that which his brother sold" (Lev. xxv. 25).
> "If brethren dwell together, and one of them die, and have no child, the wife of the dead shall not marry without unto a stranger: her husband's next kinsman (margin) shall take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of an husband's next kinsman unto her. And it shall be, that the firstborn which she beareth shall succeed in the name of his brother which is dead, that his name be not put out of Israel. And if the man like not to take his next kinsman's wife, then let his brother's wife go up to the gate unto the elders, and say, My husband's brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel, he will not perform the duty of my husband's next kinsman . . . . . Then shall his brother's wife come unto him in the presence of the elders, and loose his shoe from off his foot, and spit in his face, and shall answer and say, So shall it be done unto that man that will not build up his brother's house, and his name shall be called in Israel, The house of him that hath his shoe loosed" (Deut. xxv. 5-10).

Boaz said before the elders:--

> "Ye are witnesses this day that I have bought all that was Elimelech's, and all that was Chilion's and Mahlon's, of the hand of Naomi, Moreover, Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of Mahlon, have I purchased to be my wife, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance, that the name of the dead be not cut off among his brethren, and from the gate of his place: Ye are witnesses this day" (Ruth iv. 9, 10).

Here we have emphasized the great outstanding fact that the Redeemer must be Kinsman. We must devote further space to the consideration of the following points:--

(1). Christ as the Kinsman-Redeemer.
(2). The typical meaning of the Kinsman nearer than Boaz.
(3). The declared purpose of this redemption, and its bearing upon the doctrine of Redemption at large.

#2. Immanuel, God with us.
pp. 113 - 115

Every occurrence of the word "Redeemer" in the A.V. Old Testament is a translation of goel and means, as is Ruth, the Kinsman-Redeemer. The many passages in Isaiah where the word occurs reveal most plainly that the Redeemer is Jehovah. He is called "The Holy One of Israel", "Creator", "King of Israel", "Lord of Hosts", "The Lord Thy God", "Him Whom man despiseth and the nation abhoreth", "The Mighty One of Jacob", "The God of the whole earth shall He be called", "The Redeemer shall come to Zion", "Thou Lord art our Father, our Redeemer from everlasting" (olam).

If we quote no further, we have given sufficient to cause the careful reader to think. If Jehovah, the Creator, is at the same time Kinsman to the sons of Adam, then the remaining testimony of Isaiah is absolutely necessary to make the revelation rational. God must become flesh and blood. Isaiah names this mighty Redeemer, Immanuel, God with us. Not only so, he reveals in plain terms that Jehovah was to be born of a virgin, "Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call His name Immanuel". The fulfillment of this remarkable statement is found in Matt. i. 20-23. John, in the opening verses of his Gospel, also reveals this mighty truth. "The Word was God", "The Word became flesh . . . . . the only begotten of the Father." In Gal. iv. 4, 5 the apostle passes from the question of the heir and the inheritance, to Christ as the Kinsman-Redeemer of that inheritance:--

> "When the fullness of time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem . . . . ."

Heb. ii. 14, 15 speaks of this kinship in strong terms:--

> "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same; that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage."

The office of the Kinsman-Redeemer is twofold, and that twofold character is plainly indicated in Heb. ii. "Flesh and blood . . . . . destroy . . . . . deliver."

The very same word (goel) which we have looked at in the rendering Kinsman-Redeemer is also translated, The Revenger, in the title "the revenger of blood" (Numb. xxxv. 19, etc.). "The day of vengeance is in My heart, and the year of My redeemed is come" (Isa. lxii. 4) shews the intimate association of the two thoughts. Christ as the Kinsman-Redeemer came to destroy and to deliver. This is not only set forth in Heb. ii., but in I John iii. 5-8:--

> "And ye know that He was manifested to take away our sins; and in Him is no sin . . . . . For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil."

The Lord Jesus Christ bears the title "Firstborn of every creature" (Col. i. 15). This tells us that He stands intimately related to the whole creation, and renders the deliverance of the groaning a possibility, for the right of redemption is His. The same Lord is also "The Seed of the Woman", "The Last Adam", "The Second Man" and "The Son of Man". This renders possible the wondrous redemptive words of I Cor. xv. 22:--

> "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

Christ moreover is the Seed of Abraham, and this brings the blessings of Abraham to both Jew and Gentile (Gal. iii.). He is moreover the Son of David, and can alone redeem the forfeited Kingdom. Possibly the reader will by this time perceive the fallacy which lies in the argument of those who speak of Christ as either Redeemer or King. Matt. i. brings into close association "Son of David", "Son of Abraham", "Jesus, Who saves His people from their sins" and "Immanuel, God with us".

We feel that the place of redemption in the purpose of the ages has been very much misunderstood, but its consideration we must leave until other phases of the subject have been seen. Sufficient for our purpose has been brought together. Christ is the true Kinsman-Redeemer, and the birth of Christ at Bethlehem was absolutely essential to His rendering work.

#3. The Nearest of Kin who failed.
pp. 129, 130

When studying the book of Ruth we are at first somewhat disappointed to find that Boaz, the mighty and merciful deliverer of the afflicted, was not the nearest of kin:--

> "It is true that I am thy kinsman: howbeit there is a kinsman nearer than I" (Ruth iii. 12).

If Boaz be typical of Christ, of whom is the nearer kinsman typical? In Psa. xlix. 7, 8 we read:--

> "No man can by any means redeem (Heb. padah) his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him (for the redemption of their soul is so costly that it ceaseth for ever)."

The word "ceaseth" is sometimes translated "forbear", "leave off", the idea being that the redemption of man is so infinitely beyond his own powers that it must be left alone; if no redeemer is to be found except man himself, redemption is impossible.

The nearest of kin, nearer than Boaz himself, is mankind. Man however can never be his own saviour. He stands exposed before all as a failure. Every son of Adam bears the reproach of Deut. xxv. 10:--

> "His name shall be called in Israel, The house of him that hath his shoe loosed."

In Isa. lix. 20 we read:--

> "And the Redeemer (Goel) shall come to Zion."

This Redeemer is the Lord Jesus Christ, and the context suggests the kinsman nearer than He, who failed:--

> "And He saw there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor: therefore His arm brought salvation" (Isa. lix. 16).

The word translated intercessor, occurs in Isa. liii. 6 and 12. "The Lord hath made to meet on Him the iniquity of us all", and "made intercession for the transgressors". Man's failure is further set forth in such passages as Rom. viii. 3 together with the triumph of Christ, the true Redeemer:--

> "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending His own Son IN THE LIKENESS of sinful flesh (did)."

The utter inability of man by nature to accomplish his own redemption is too fully set forth in Scripture, and is too really fundamental to need further proof. The whole plan of redemption presupposes man's hopeless state, and indicates most clearly the antitype of the man who failed to redeem his brother's forfeited inheritance.

#4. Resurrection Life.
pp. 145 - 147

The declared purpose of the redemption by the kinsman-redeemer in the law, and in the book of Ruth, is "to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance". The firstborn which the wife of the dead man bears as a result of the kinsman taking her to wife "shall succeed in the name of his brother which is dead, that his name be not put out in Israel" (Deut. xxv. 6).

Types fail, and wherever resurrection is typified a certain amount of accommodation is necessitated. When the death and resurrection of Christ was set forth by the killing of a bird and the setting free of a bird, two birds were necessary, but not to set forth two Persons; so with this great type of the redemption set forth in Ruth and the law. It was not possible for the dead man to be brought to life again in order that he may enjoy his inheritance. That is redemption in reality, but in the type his name is perpetuated as a symbol of himself. The idea of new life as a result of redemption is suggested in the prayer of Psa. cxix. 154:--

> "Plead my cause, and deliver me (as a kinsman-redeemer), quicken me according to Thy word."

Psa. lxix., so full of Messianic prophecy, suggests a similar thought:--

> "Draw nigh unto my soul and redeem it" (verse 18).

Heb. v. tells us that Christ prayed unto Him that was able to save Him out of death and that He was heard. This could not possibly mean that the Saviour sought to escape death, but it means, as Psa. xvi. so fully declares, that His soul was not left in Sheol, in other words, redemption here indicates new life in resurrection. Psa. ciii. 4 includes among the "benefits" meet for thanksgiving, "Who redeemeth thy life from destruction". Hosea however most powerfully sets forth this glorious goal of redemption:--

> "I will ransom them from the power of the grace, I will redeem them from death" (Hosea xiii. 14).

We had occasion to quote Psa. xlix. when explaining the nearer kinsman than Boaz. This Psalm also strongly emphasizes that resurrection is the one grand effect of the Hebrew conception of redemption:--

> "None of them can by any means redeem his brother . . . . . that he should still live for ever and not see corruption" (Psa. xlix. 7-9).

The testimony of Job xix. 25-27 is to the same effect:--

> "I know that my Redeemer (ever) lives,
> And at the latter day on earth shall stand;
> And after (worms) this body have consumed,
> Yet in my flesh I shall Eloah see:
> Whom I, e'en I, shall see upon my side
> Mine eyes shall see Him—stranger now no more:
> (For this) my inmost soul with longing waits."
> (New Metrical Version.—See Companion Bible.)

Redemption enables us to look death in the face and call it by its ugly name. It enables us to speak of corruption and the grave, and to recognize that death is an "enemy". Philosophy and Religion glory over death. They speak of death as a bright angel, as the great adventure, a transition, as the gate to life—anything but its true character. The believer who realizes redemption is delivered from the bondage of the fear of death. We quote the passage from Heb. ii. again:--

> "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same: that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil: and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage" (Heb. ii. 14, 15).

The great goal of redemption as applied to the wide circle of creation is expressed in terms that run parallel with the hope of Job:--

> "The creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of CORRUPTION into the glorious liberty of the children of God . . . . . the redemption of our body" (Rom. viii. 21-23).

Christ Himself expresses this glorious truth in Rev. i. 17, 18:--

> "Fear not . . . . . I am He that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of Hades and of death."

#5. Redemption and its Implications.
pp. 161, 162

We have seen in the previous articles sufficient to warrant the following conclusions:-

1. REDEMPTION INVOLVES KINSHIP.—The Lord Jesus Christ, in order that He may redeem, must be partaker of flesh and blood as we are. He must be not only Son of David, Son of Abraham, Son of God, but He must be Son of MAN.

2. REDEMPTION IMPLIES THE RIGHT TO REDEEM.—Boaz possessed wealth, kindness, desire, but these availed nothing until he also established the "right to redeem" in the presence of the elders of the city.

3. REDEMPTION IMPLIES A FORFEITED INHERITANCE.—This item is so vital and so important that we pass on, devoting a separate article to its bearing upon the subject.

4. REDEMPTION ALSO IMPLIES BONDAGE.—This too demands a careful separate study.

5. REDEMPTION INVOLVES UNION WITH THE REDEEMER.—Boaz not only purchased the inheritance, but he married Ruth. This marriage was not a mere personal fancy, it was the essential feature of the contract that prevented the nearer kinsman from entering into his right to redeem.

The reader will call to mind many passages of Scripture which make union with Christ a vital part of the great plan of redemption. This we must see more fully together.

Questions such as "Does man suffer the penalty of sin?" "Did Christ bear the punishment of sin?" "To whom was the ransom paid?" can only be truthfully answered by those who have a scriptural (as opposed to a theological) conception of redemption. The subject is so personal, so vital, so fundamental, that freedom from error, and clearness of understanding, seem to be essential to a right understanding of the Purpose of the Ages.

#6. The Forfeited Inheritance.
pp. 177 - 180

If we take the inspired type of Redemption as our guide, much that is dealt with under different heads of systematic theology will appear somewhat beside the mark.

Let us take as our guide in this article the underlying thought contained in the Hebrew goel, or kinsman-redeemer, namely that of the redemption of a forfeited inheritance. And further, let us adjust our focus upon that passage of Scripture which is the Charter of the Church of the One Body (Eph. i. 3-14). The general arrangement of the passage is known to most readers. In these few verses we have:--

The blessings of the Father (3-6).
The blessings of the Son (7-12).
The blessings of the Spirit (13, 14).

As we read through these verses we observe that each set has its own distinctive features. Verses 3-6 are taken up with the great purpose of the Father before the overthrow of the world, which chose certain sons of Adam in Christ and blessed them with every spiritual blessing in the super-heavenlies, the great purpose in this choice being that such should be holy and without blemish before Him. These happy and blessed children of men, moreover, have an inheritance (the adoption—a term which necessitates a separate article) in those heavenly places, love having predestined them for this high honour, and their choice by the Father "in Christ" is filled out in the closing term:--

> "To the praise of the glory of His grace wherein He hath highly favoured us in the Beloved" (verse 6).

Now, contrary to what most teach, and contrary to what we ourselves have held, we submit that in these verses there is no place for redemption. This choice was definitely made BEFORE the overthrow (it makes no difference if any reader chooses to retain the word "foundation"). Sin is nowhere in sight. The choice "in Christ", and the high favour "in the Beloved", are in perfect harmony with the high glory which Christ had before the overthrow of the world (John xvii.) as the Firstborn of all creation. Sinless beings, chosen that they may be holy and without blemish and destined to occupy the very highest conceivable position in glory, such is the inheritance provisioned by the Father "before age times".

When we come to the second set of verses (7-12) we are in a different atmosphere. Here we read of redemption, and that through the blood of Christ, Who therefore must have become partaker of flesh and blood and hence our Kinsman. Here we read of sins and their forgiveness as something essentially connected with this redemption. Not only do we read now of grace, but of riches of grace, for the truth is that those who were marked off for the high inheritance of glory by the Father are found "sold under sin". Adam, the first father, by his one act of disobedience involved all his descendants in the forfeiture of the inheritance, and brought them under the bondage of corruption, sin and death. Here then is the place for redemption.

To intrude redemption by blood into verses 3-6 is a gross blunder. Did the Father of grace and glory need the shedding of blood to move Him to choose and plan His purposes of love? This is not the case. The truth is that sin and death, entering in and temporarily cutting across His mighty purpose, could not thwart Him of His goal. His chosen shall yet sit in heavenly places, and if needs be God Himself will provide the ransom. The horrible idea so often uttered that a "kind Jesus" interposed between the sinner and "an angry God" cannot find support in the Word. The "angry God" Himself "so loved the world that HE GAVE His only begotten Son". God provided the ransom, and certainly He did not pay it to Himself. Redemption becomes understandable and real when viewed in the light of the forfeited inheritance. Sins barred the way to glory, not only by reason of their utter opposition to the one great quality expressed in the words "holy and without blame", but also in the related penalty of death which ended all possibility of inheritance. Sins therefore are included in the great act of redemption. They are "forgiven" (aphesis = "forgiveness" and aphiemi = "to forgive".). Matt. vi. 12 uses the word in its primitive sense of discharging a debt. In Matt. xix. 14 the rendering "suffer" in the sense of "allow", "do not dismiss", and Matt. iv. 11, "to leave", further illuminate the word.

The debt of the sinner is cancelled by the redeeming blood, a fact wonderfully indicated by the apostle in the "nailing" of the "blotted out" handwriting to the cross (Col. ii. 14). Then the secret of God's will is made known. This Kinsman-Redeemer is going to bring back the forfeited inheritance. Whether it be the destined place of the Church of the One body, the spotless glory of the Bride the Lamb's wife, the wondrous ministry of the Kingdom of Priests, or the inclusion of the "ends of the earth" in the day when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, the great secret of the Will of God is here made known. The forfeited inheritance is made secure "in Christ" the Redeemer. There is to be a period known as the fullness of the appointed times when God shall gather together under one head (anakephalaiomai) all things in Christ, the things in heaven and the things on earth, "in Him". Now note the sequence:--

> "In Whom also we have an inheritance, having been previously marked out according to the purpose of Him Who is operating all things agreeably to the counsel of His own Will" (Eph. i. 11).

In this re-union, this grand re-gathering, we shall find our forfeited inheritance. Predestination in this chapter is linked with two allied subjects, (1) "the adoption" according to the good pleasure of His will, (2) "the inheritance" according to the purpose of Him, etc. In the first place we have the purpose stated, in the second the purpose fulfilled. But, sin and death having intervened, the purpose is not carried through by the Father, but by the Mediator:--

> "The man Christ Jesus, Who gave Himself a Ransom for all, the testimony for its own appointed times" (I Tim. ii. 6).

The purpose “that we should be holy and without blame before Him” cannot be attained now, apart from redemption, and so we find this great purpose of the Father brought to pass by the Son (Eph. v. 25-27, “sanctify, cleanse, present it a church in glory . . . . . holy and without blemish.”). So also Col. i. 22: by redemption those who had forfeited their inheritance “are made meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in the light”.

Space will not allow much upon the present witness of the Spirit (Eph. i. 13, 14). There we read of the “earnest”, the pledge, and that earnest is nothing less than the earnest of our INHERITANCE, which, being connected with such an expression as “unto the redemption of the purchased possession”, shews once more that redemption has in view, primarily, the purchase of the forfeited inheritance.

Studies in the Book of the Revelation.

#43. The Everlasting Gospel (xiv. 6, 7).
pp. 13 - 16

> "And I saw another angel flying in mid-heaven, having the aiõnion gospel to preach unto those sitting upon the earth, and upon every nation, and tribe, and language and people, saying with a loud voice, 'Fear God, and give glory to Him, because the hour of His judgment is come, and worship Him that made the heaven, and the earth, and the sea, and the fountain of waters'."

Before considering the "everlasting gospel" we ask the reader's attention to the people to whom that gospel is preached. "Them that dwell on the earth" appear to be one section, and "every nation, and tribe, and language and people", appear to be the other. It will be noticed, however, in our rendering above that we have the words "those sitting upon the earth". Our endeavour must always be first to realize what God says, and then to seek to understand the meaning of His words.

The expression "them that dwell upon the earth" is frequent in the Revelation, and the ordinary reader would most probably take it for granted that xiv. 6 was but another occurrence of the familiar phrase. This is not so however. The usual expression is found in xiii. 8, hoi katoikountes epi tēs gēs. Katoikeō means "to dwell", and is a cognate of oikos, "a house". The best texts do not read this word in xiv. 6, but kathēmai. This word is of frequent occurrence in the Apocalypse, and in many cases it has a special connection with the idea of authority.

In Rev. iv. 2, 3, 4, 9; v. 13; vii. 10, 15; xi. 16; xix. 4; xx. 11; xxi. 5 the references are to "sitting upon a throne". In Rev. vi. 2, 4, 5, 8; ix. 17; xix. 11, 18, 19, 21 the references are to "sitting upon a horse". Rev. xiv. 14, 15, 16, refers to "one sitting upon a cloud". None of these passages convey the idea of merely resting but of sitting in authority, as King, as Elder, as Soldier. There are but five more occurrences of the word in Revelation, and they will identify the people to whom the aionion gospel is preached, and illuminate the true meaning of the clause that follows their mention:--

> "The great whore that SITTETH upon many waters" (xvii. 1)
> "A woman SITTING upon a scarlet coloured beast" (xvii. 3).
> "The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman SITTETH, and they are seven kings" (xvii. 9).
> "The waters . . . . . where the whore SITTETH, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues" (xvii. 15).
> "I SIT a queen" (xviii. 7).

There is no passage in the Revelation where the verb "to sit" is used in any other way. Every occurrence has to do with rule. The one that "sitteth" on the many waters, and upon the beast, is Babylon. We can now view xiv. 6 in clearer light. "They that SIT upon the earth" are the leaders of the great Babylonian Apostasy.

The next consideration must be the relation which this great system has to those who are spoken of as "every nation", &c. As the A.V. stands, the gospel is addressed.

1. To them that dwell upon the earth.
2. To every nation, &c.

But the word epi which occurs in the phrase "upon the earth" is repeated in the next sentence, "and upon every nation". With xvii. 15 as our authority we can positively say that the meaning is that those same ones who are said to SIT upon the earth, are also said to SIT upon every nation, &c., for the very enumeration comes in xvii. 15. The beast of xiii. 7 received authority over (epi) every tribe, and people, and language and nation. This was the extent of Nebuchadnezzar's dominion. His herald addressed the King's command to "people, nations, and languages" (Dan. iii. 4, 7). The very strangeness of the expression, namely that of "languages" being "commanded" to fall down and worship Nebuchadnezzar's golden image, is a connecting link with Rev. xiv.

Babylon and all that it means will SIT upon the very earth and its peoples. The scene on the plains of Dura will be re-enacted. The image of the beast takes the place of the golden image of Nebuchadnezzar, and death is the penalty, as before, for disobedience. The very throne of God is usurped. The creator Himself is denied. That throne is described in chapter iv., where we found our first occurrence of the word "sit". There too heaven's worship goes up to God as "Creator" (iv. 11). Soon evolution and kindred theories will have done their work. The whole of Science and Philosophy will have become enslaved by their teaching, and God Himself will be scientifically reduced to a cypher. Then the Man of Sin will mount the throne. Then the false prophet will demand universal worship of the beast and his image, and then will go forth the "everlasting gospel".

We are sufficiently acquainted with the meaning and usage of aiōn and aiōnios to obviate the necessity of enlarging upon them here. The words mean, "an age, that which has to do with an age", and this gospel announced from heaven by an angel is peculiarly fitted for the awful time of Babylon's last grasp for Godless power. Unlike the gospel of the Kingdom, or the gospel of Grace, it does not call for repentance or for faith, but simply to "Fear God". Do any of the oppressed nations, tribes, languages and peoples, hearken to this elemental message? Turn to chapter xv. There a company are seen who have overcome the beast, his image and his mark, and sing unto the Lord as to the King of the Ages saying:--

> "Who shall not FEAR Thee, O Lord, and glorify Thy Name? for Thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and worship before Thee, FOR THY JUDGMENTS are made manifest" (verse 4).

> "Fear God, and give glory to Him, FOR THE HOUR OF HIS JUDGMENT IS COME, and worship Him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters" (xiv. 7).

We are too prone to take our own times as a standard for judging other periods. We have no authority to preach as a gospel the fear and the worship of the Creator, but this will be the "good news" for the time of Babylonian supremacy. Further light upon this necessity will be found in Rom. i. 18-32. There it will be seen that the apostasy of the Gentile world in its beginnings foreshadows its final phase (Rev. xiii., xiv., xvii., xviii.). The Nations knew God, they were taught His relationship to creation, but they "glorified" Him not as God; they changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like corruptible man, birds, beasts, and reptiles. They changed the truth of God into THE LIE (see pages 161-163 of Volume IX for the close connection that this establishes between the 144,000 and this aiōnion gospel) and "worshipped" and served the creature more than the CREATOR. Babel, at the beginning (Gen. xi.), in the middle (Dan. iii.), and at the end (Rev. xiii.) remains the same. Deliverance however comes to the oppressed peoples, when the image is broken, and the Son of man comes. Then will be given to Him "dominion, and glory, and a Kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve Him".

Turning back once more to Rev. xiv., let us note what immediately follows the announcing of this gospel, "Babylon is fallen, is fallen", shewing by its sequence the true nature of "those that SIT upon the earth".

#44. "They have no rest." "They may rest." (xiv. 9-13).
pp. 41 - 45

The first angelic message in the days of the Beast and the False Prophet will be that of the aionian gospel. The second which immediately follows will herald the fall of Babylon. As this is dealt with in detail in chapters xvii. and xviii. we pass on to note the message of the third angel:--

> "And another, a third angel, followed them, saying with a loud voice, If anyone worshippeth the Beast and his image, and receiveth his mark on his forehead or on his hand, even he shall drink of the wine of God's fury, which is prepared undiluted in the cup of His wrath; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb. And the smoke of their torment ascendeth for the ages of the ages, and they have no respite day or night who are worshipping the Beast and his image, and if anyone receiveth the mark of his name" (xiv. 9-11).

Here is the solemn, the awful witness of the third angel. In Psa. lxxv. 8 we read:--

> "For in the hand of the Lord there is a cup, and the wine is red; it is full of mixture, and He poureth out the same: but the dregs thereof, all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out, and drink thereof."

There is in many prophecies of this period an indication that the punishments Israel are made to suffer under the permission of God will be ultimately turned upon the great oppressor. For instance, in Psa. lxxiii. 10 it is "His people" to whom "the waters of a full cup are wrung out". So in Isa. li. 17:--

> "Awake, awake, stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of His fury; thou hast drunken the dregs of the cup of trembling, and wrung them out."

Look at verses 9-16. There is the wounding of the dragon, the fear of a man that shall die and the fury of the oppressor. Here too is an illusion to the terms of the aionian gospel:--

> "And forgettest the Lord thy Maker, that hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth" (Isa. li. 13).

Then in Isa. li. 21-23 comes the great transfer:--

> "Behold, I have taken out of thine hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my fury; thou shalt no more drink of it again: but I will put it into the hands of them that afflict thee: which have said to thy soul, Bow down, that we may go over."

Again in Jer. li. 7 we read:--

> "Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord's hand; that made all the earth drunken. The nations have drunken of her wine, therefore the nations are mad."

Then comes the parallel with Rev. xiv. 8:--

> "Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed . . . . . it is the vengeances of the Lord, the vengeance of His temple" (Jer. li. 8-11).

The language of Rev. xiv. 10, 11 is based upon a passage in Isa. xxxiv. The whole chapter should be read and its bearing upon the Revelation noted. We draw attention to one verse in particular. The land of Idumea is to become:-- > "burning pitch. It shall not be quenched night nor day: the smoke thereof shall go up for ever, from generation to generation it shall lie waste, none shall pass through it for ever and ever" (verse 10).

We would not seek to diminish the awfulness of the punishment which falls upon those who worship the Beast, but we do ask that this terrible penalty shall not be unscripturally applied to unsaved sinners of all times and places. It is the peculiar punishment of a special class. "Day and night" apply to time, not to eternity. A strict adherence to the tense of the verb makes us translate in Rev. xiv. 11:--

> "They have no rest day or night who are worshipping the Beast."

as though their moment is already in operation while they live upon the earth. Further, chapters xvii. and xvii. expand and expound these verses. There we read:--

> "How much she hath glorified herself and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her" (xviii. 7).
> "She shall be utterly burned with fire . . . . . the Kings of the earth shall bewail her when they see the smoke of her burning" (xviii. 8, 9).

> "With violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all . . . . and again they said, Hallelujah, and her smoke rose up for ever and ever" (xviii. 21 - xix. 3).

During the Millennial Kingdom Babylon will remain a burnt mountain, a monument of wrath to all the nations of the earth. During the same period the smoke of the torment of those who received the mark of the beast and who worshipped his image will be an awful object lesson to those in the heavens. Both symbols shall pass away with the "former things" when the ages of the ages finish their course, and when He that sits upon the throne shall say, "Behold, all things are new" (xxi. 5).

There is another portion of the angel's message which must receive attention, namely the words of xiv. 12, 13:--

> "Here is the patience of the saints—those who keep the commandment of God, and the faith of Jesus. And I hear a voice from heaven, saying, Write, Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours, for their works follow with them."

In Rev. xiii. 10 we have an explanation of what constitutes "The patience and the faith of the saints"—captivity and sword under the cruel oppression of the Beast. This is expanded in xiv. 12, which coming in immediate sequence to the reference to those who worship the image of the Beast suggests the character of their trial. A voice speaks from heaven, saying, "Write". On four different occasions the apostle is commanded in the Apocalypse to write.

A | i. 11, 19; ii., iii. Write to the seven churches.
B | xiv. 13. Write, Blessed are the dead.
B | xix. 9. Write, Blessed are they which are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb.
A | xxi. 5. Write, Behold, I make all things new.

There is a real connection between xiv. 13 and xix. 9. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth." The death here spoken of is evidently martyrdom. Under the fierce persecution of the Beast the believer is called upon to think of death as "blessed" rather than by yielding to pressure to purchase an extension of life by worshipping the image. Such overcomers are specially mentioned in Rev. xv. 1-4 and xx. 4, and are clearly referred to in xiv. 1 (cf. xiii. 16). See also second half of Heb. xi. 35. These enter into "rest" and their works following them bear testimony to their victory over the Beast and the False Prophet.

The same word is used of both classes. The one have "no rest day and night", the other "rest from their troubles". The martyrs under the fifth seal likewise are told to "rest" a little season until their fellow servants should also be killed (vi. 11). There is an evident reference here to xiv. 13.

The passage which we have here before us brings very vividly to light the two classes into which the actors in the Revelation are to be divided. It is not so much saved and unsaved, but

The worship of the Beast	or	the worship of God.
The receiving of his mark	or	the mark of the Father.
The earth dwellers	or	the pilgrims.
Those who bow to the Beast	or	the overcomers.
Those who save their lives by idolatry	or	those who love not their live unto the death.

The one class constitute the great supper of God (xix. 17), and the other is called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb (xix. 9). The one class are devoted to a special and signal punishment, the other to a special and signal reward. The one class are ranged under the Dragon and the other under the Lamb.

The exhortation to patience will be needed in those days of trial and fierce temptation. John could write sympathetically of this, for he describes himself as "Your brother and companion in tribulation and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus" (i. 9). The churches of Ephesus and Thyatira are commended for their patience, and the church of Philadelphia will receive a wonderful deliverance because it keeps the Word of the Lord's patience.

The only other reference to patience are those of Rev. xiii. 10 and xiv. 12 ("Here is patience"), both of which refer directly and exclusively to the period of the Beast and the False Prophet. The references in other scriptures, particularly those in the epistle of James, are also very applicable to this period of tested faith.

Our lot is cast in a different day. Our trial may be of a different character, but to us, as to all saints, at all times the Word is true, "Ye have need of patience" (Heb. x. 36). "Let patience have her perfect work" (Jas. i. 4).

#45. The Harvest and the Vintage (xiv. 14-20).
pp. 76 - 78

Immediately following the cry of the third angel and the indication that wickedness had reached its height comes the twofold scene of judgment, represented under the figures of the Harvest and the Vintage.

It will enable us to see more clearly the bearing of these visions upon the theme of the book and their place in its outworking if we take a wider view than the limits of chapter xiv.

In Volume IV & V, page 46, the structure of the Revelation as a whole is given. The central member is composed of a series of seven pairs of visions. It will be seen that xiv. 6-20, "The six angels" is echoed in the structure by xvi. 1 - xviii. 24. "The seven vials". This helps us to place the Harvest and the Vintage and to see that both will be fulfilled in the doom of Babylon and the Beast.

It is pardonable to hesitate in accepting the statement that the harvest here refers to judgment, seeing that in many passages the reaping of the harvest includes the righteous. One prophecy seems to speak directly of this same period. We refer to Joel iii. 12-14:--

> "Let the nations be weakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat; for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about. PUT YE IN THE SICKLE, FOR THE HARVEST IS RIPE; come, get you down; for the PRESS is full, the FATS overflow; for their wickedness is great. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of threshing: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of threshing."

Here without doubt is a scene of judgment, and here the figures both of harvest and vintage are used. Further, there is a verbal connection which should be remembered. In Rev. xiv. 15 the word "thrust" is the Greek word pempō = to send. In Joel iii. 13 the LXX has exapostellō, which likewise means "send" (see Joel ii. 25). The sickle is sent, just as the other agencies of judgment and mercy, and just what will answer to the symbol we may not at present know. Another passage bearing upon the subject is Jer. li. 33:--

> "The daughter of Babylon is like a threshing floor, it is time to thresh her; yet a little while, and the time of her harvest shall come."

While judgment is manifestly the setting of these visions, the harvest at the end of the age is a reaping of both wheat and darnel. In this case the "tares" or darnel, the "children of the wicked one", are the worshippers of the image. These are bound in bundles to be burned. The "wheat" are the children of the Kingdom, the blessed dead who die in the Lord at that time. With regard to the Vintage the language is plain. It represents unmitigated wrath. The clusters of the vine of the earth are cast into the great winepress of the wrath of God. This is but an echo of the figure of verse 10, "the wine of the wrath of God", Isa. lxiii. 1-6 speaks of this terrible vintage:--

> "Who is This That cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? This That is glorious in His apparel, traveling in the greatness of His strength? I that speak in righteousness, Mighty to save . . . . . I have trodden the winepress alone . . . . . I will tread them in Mine anger, and trample them in My fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon My garments, and I will stain all My raiment. For the day of vengeance is in Mine heart, and the year of My redeemed is come."

When we were dealing with the earlier portion of Rev. xiv. we found Isa. xxxiv. applicable. That chapter contains much that fits in with the Vintage of Rev. xiv. There we read of a "sacrifice in Bozrah". The same awful emphasis upon "blood". "The land shall be soaked (drunken) with blood". And the same period is indicated as that of Isa. lxiii.:--

> "For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion" (Isa. xxxiv. 8).

Israel is represented as a vine. Sometimes they become worse than the "vine of Sodom" (Deut. xxxii. 32), or "the degenerate plant of a strange vine" (Jer. ii. 21), yet in the day of their restoration they shall "grow as the vine" (Hos. xiv. 7), and the vine that the Lord brought out of Egypt shall once again blossom and bud and fill the earth with fruit (Psa. lxxx. 8-19). The vine of Sodom, the degenerate plant of a strange vine, to which Israel approximated in the apostasy, was the vine of the earth. Sodom and Babylon are included under this figure. The vine of the earth becomes ripe, iniquity reaches its height. The Man of Sin ascends the throne of Deity, and the sharp sickle is thrust in and the vintage gathered. This vine has not yielded that wine which rejoices the heart of God and man, but the intoxicating wine of Babylon that has sent the nations "mad drunk" (Jer. li. 7). Now the clusters are cast into the winepress of the wrath of God, and the awful result is expressed in the words:--

> "And blood came forth out of the winepress even to the bridles of the horses, a thousand six hundred furlongs" (Rev. xiv. 20).

The sixth vial leads to Armageddon (xvi. 12-16). The actual treading of the winepress takes place at the riding forth from heaven of Christ as the Word of God, the King of kings and the Lord of lords. As a result of the battle which then ensues, the birds that fly in mid-heaven are called to partake of the great supper of God, when they shall eat the flesh of kings, officers and mighty men, horse and rider (xix. 11-21).

The distance, 1,600 furlongs, cannot be spiritualized; it stands as an actual measurement and indicates some feature of importance. The furlong is the Roman Stadium, which is about 202 English yards. 1,600 stadia, therefore, represent about 183 English miles. What tract of land can this point to? The southern extremity of Palestine was Kadesh-barnea (Numb. xxxiv.), the northern boundary, Mount Hermon (see note in Companion Bible to Numb xxxiv. 7). Kitto's Cyclopœdia reads as follows:--

> "The length, from Mount Hermon in the north, to which the territory of Manasseh beyond Jordan extended (Josh. xiii. 11), to Kadesh-barnea in the south, to which the territory of Judah reached was 180 miles."

The 1,600 furlongs give, practically, the extreme measurement north to south of the land of Israel. The whole of the land will be drenched with blood. Just how all will take place we do not know, and we are thankful that such details do not belong to our sphere. The cry goes up from beneath the altar:--

> "How long dost Thou not avenge our blood?" (vi. 10).

When the day of vengeance sets in, the second vial of wrath turns the sea into blood (xvi. 3), the third vial turns the rivers and fountains into the same. The cry goes up at this:--

> "They have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and Thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy" (Rev. xvi. 6).

The woman, Babylon, is discovered "drunken with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus" (xvii. 6), and in Babylon was found "the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth" (xviii. 24).

The nations by their policy, their social developments, their science and their religions, are heading straight for this awful end. The wrath of God is terrible beyond words. Blessed are they who have been redeemed from wrath and for whom there can be no condemnation.

#46. The Song of Moses, and the Song of the Lamb (xv. 1-4).
pp. 100 - 103

Chapter xiv. occupied with a brief foreshadowing of the seven vials of wrath and the condition of the Lord's people during that dread period. It indicates that the climax sin is reached under the commands of the False Prophet, and that the fall of Babylon is closely connected with the blasphemy associated with the Beast. The torment of fire and brimstone and the smoke of that torment which ascends for the ages of the ages reveals the intensity of these seven last plagues, while the blessedness of the dead "from henceforth" shows the frequency of martyrdom during this time. The whole is summarized under the figures of the harvest and the vintage.

Before this series is given we are permitted a glimpse of the FIRST FRUITS (xiv. 1-5), and these sing a NEW SONG. In chapter xv., before the seven vials are poured out, we see the overcomers of the Beast, who also are a kind of FIRST FRUITS from the harvest of the earth. These, instead of singing a new song, sing the Song of Moses and of the Lamb. The key to the understanding of the seven vials of wrath is found in the "Song of Moses".

There is a division of opinion as to what is intended by the title "The Song of Moses". Some contend with a fair show of reason that the triumph over the host of Pharaoh in the Red Sea is echoed by the greater triumph over the Beast and his image. This looks to Exod. xv. as the Song of Moses. The Companion Bible and others however see a reference to Deut. xxxii., which is distinctly and repeatedly called the "Song" of Moses, and which rehearses the ways of God with His people, vindicating the justice of His judgments, and revealing the inner causes both of Israel's defection and the nation's apostasy.

In Deut. xxxi. 19 we read, "That this song may be a witness for Me against the children of Israel". In verse 21 and in verse 22 that "Moses wrote this song the same day". The burden of the song is given in verse 29, the evil which will befall them in the latter days. The song itself occupies the whole of Deut. xxxii. It traverses the dealings of God with His people right to the end: the idolatry of Israel, the worshipping of strange gods, the forgetting of God, their resemblance to the vine of Sodom. The song concludes with a call to the nations to rejoice with His people, the threat of vengeance for the blood of His servants, and the promise of mercy to His land and people.

In Exod. xxxiv. 10 the Lord makes a covenant that before all the people He would do marvels such as have not been done in all the earth, nor in any nation. This is primarily a covenant with reference to Israel as a stiff-necked people, but seems to cover the judgments of the Apocalypse. It is noticeable how closely the miraculous judgments of the Revelation resemble the plagues sent by God upon Pharaoh and Egypt. These we shall have an opportunity of observing later.

In Rev. xv. 3 we read, "And they sing the Song of Moses . . . . . and the Song of the Lamb, saying . . . . ." This indicates that the overcomers do not repeat Deut. xxxii., but give a summary of its principles in the words that follow. In their summary they emphasize at the commencement the greatness and the marvelous character of the works of God, and that His ways are just and true. They then ask the question, "Who should not fear, and glorify Thy name, O Lord?" and give a threefold reason.

(1). Because of the Lord's holiness.
(2). Because all nations shall come and worship.
(3). Because of the manifestation of His righteous judgments.

In verse 3 of the A.V. reads, "Just and true are Thy ways, Thou King of Saints", and gives in the margin "Or nations, or ages". The R.V., G., L., Tr., A. and WH. read "nations". The Numeric N.T. used the Greek text of Westcott and Hort, but has found it necessary to differ from them here. The two titles "King of Nations" and "King of the Ages" occur together in a most significant passage in Jeremiah. In the tenth chapter of Jeremiah the prophet warns Israel against idolatry. After proving the utter futility of idolatry, the prophet says in verses 6 and 7:--

> "Forasmuch as there is none like unto Thee, O Lord; Thou art great, and Thy name is great in might. WHO WOULD NOT FEAR THEE, O KING OF NATIONS?"

Again the prophet interjects a word on the worthlessness of idolatry, and then in verse 10 says:--

> "But the Lord is the true God, He is the living God, and KING OF THE AGES. At His wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide His indignation."

Then follows a verse which is written in Chaldee, the language of Babylon:--

> "The gods have not made the heavens and the earth, even they shall perish . . . . . and from under these heavens."

Surely here is a reference to the state of things that necessitated the aiōnian gospel of Rev. xiv.

The words "Who would not fear Thee, O King of Nations?" are echoed in Rev. xx. 3, 4. The portion of Jeremiah addressed to Israel contains the title "King of Nations". The title that immediately precedes the Chaldee verse is "King of the Ages". Whichever reading we accept in Rev. xv. appears from Jer. x. that both titles are related, both speak of the Lord's purpose through the ages with regard to Israel and the nations, and there, for the time being, our limited knowledge stays.

One further note must conclude this paper. The word rendered "holy" in Rev. xv. 4 is not the usual word so translated. It is hosios. Cremer, linking it with the Hebrew chesed, speaks of it as denoting God's holy love toward His people Israel. Hosios denotes a holiness established by a right or custom, but chesed "must not be taken as implying any praiseworthy virtue or merit, but simply an hereditary advantage" (Hupfeld). In Acts xiii. 34 the word occurs in the sentence "I will give you the sure mercies of David", and the A.V. margin calls attention to the use of ta osia, holy, or, just things, which the LXX frequently uses for the Hebrew mercies.

The occurrence of this word in Rev. xv. 4 and xvi. 5 is closely associated with the fulfillment of the sure mercies of David and the restoration of Israel. The Song of Moses and the Song of the Lamb bring before us the truth, the righteousness, the mercy of Him who is both King of Nations and King of Ages, Who in the midst of wrath remembers mercy and, while judging the nations for their idolatry, yet speaks of the day when all the nations shall worship before Him.

#47. The Vengeance of His Temple. The Seven Vials (xvi.).

pp. 135 - 138

We now approach the great crisis of the book. Chapters xvi., xvii. and xviii. are taken up with the seven last plagues. These seven vials of wrath are, in the language of Jer. li. 11, "The vengeance of His temple".

This expression is found in the same context as the words "Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord's hand, that made all the earth drunken". Because these seven vials are peculiarly the "vengeance of His temple", we find in Rev. xv. 5, xvi. 1 that the seven angels who are commissioned to pour them out are connected with the very innermost shrine of the tabernacle. "The temple of the tabernacle of the testimony" is the basis of these judgments. They have to do with idolatry, with the usurpation of the place of God, with the blood of the saints.

The order of the seven vials is very similar to that observed of the seven seals and the seven trumpets. It will be remembered that the sixth seal takes us right on to the day of the wrath of the Lamb, and that the seventh seal is divided off from the rest by the half-hour's silence in heaven, and that the seventh seal covers the whole period of the seventh trumpets. So here; the first six vials run in sequence. The seventh is detached and is largely taken up with the judgments of Babylon. The order of the vials is as follows:--

1st.	On the Earth.
2nd.	On the Sea.	\	Blood.
3rd.	On the Rivers.	/
I Heard.	The Angel of the Waters.		"Thou art just."
	One from the Altar.		"They are worthy."
4th.	On the Sun.	\	Blasphemy.
5th.	On the Throne.	/
6th.	On the Great River Euphrates.
I saw.	The Demons.		Armageddon.
7th.	On the Air.	Voice from Temple.		It is done.
		Lightnings.
		Thunders.
		Voices.
		Great Earthquake.
		Great Babylon.
		Great Hail.

There is a great similarity between these vials of wrath and the plagues of Egypt.

Vials.	Judgments.	Plagues.	Judgments.
1st.	Sores.	6th.	Boils.
2nd and 3rd.	Water becomes Blood.	1st.	Water becomes Blood.
5th.	Darkness.	9th.	Darkness.
6th.	Demons like Frogs.	2nd.	Frogs.
7th.	Hail.	7th.	Hail.

The exodus of Israel from Egypt is continually mentioned as a type of the greater day of their deliverance which is surely coming. In face of the literal character of the plagues of Egypt we cannot accept any spiritualizing in Rev. xvi.

THE 1ST VIAL.—When the Philistines took the Ark, they were smitten with "emerods". Israel was threatened with "the botch of Egypt" (Deut. xxviii. 27). Miriam and Uzziah were smitten with leprosy. Elymas was smitten with blindness. When the first vial is poured out on the earth, "a bad and evil ulcer" broke out upon those who had the mark of the beast and who worshipped his image.

THE 2ND VIAL.—Just as Moses caused the waters of Egypt to turn into blood, so the second angel pours his vial into the sea and it becomes as the blood of the dead, bringing death to every creature in it. Words cannot convey to the mind the horror of this judgment.

THE 3RD VIAL.—This touches the rivers and springs, and all drinking water becomes blood. However much the senses revolt at the awful character of these judgments we must bear in mind the sins that have merited them. It is at this point that John says he heard the angel of the waters justifying the judgment of God.

> "Righteous art Thou, Who art, and Who wast, The Holy and Merciful One (ho hosios), because Thou didst judge these things; because they shed the blood of saints and prophets, and Thou hast given them blood to drink; worthy are they" (xvi. 5, 6).

After this John heard "the altar" saying, "Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are Thy judgments". We are not told whether the angel of the altar, or the souls that waited beneath the altar, is intended in this intensely figurative expression. Most probably it indicates the concurrence of the martyrs, which is repeat in xix. 1, 2.

Many translators render the words axioi eisi "they deserve it", and while this is certainly the meaning, yet we feel that the contrast with the words axios ei of Rev. v. 9, "Thou art worthy", is important. Further axios is derived from a word meaning "the beam of a balance" and amplifies the thought in the words that precede the exclamation, namely, "Because they shed the blood of saints and prophets, Thou hast given them blood to drink"—the judgment corresponds with the crime; eye to eye, tooth for tooth, the beam of the balance indicating the equivalent judgment.

THE 4TH VIAL.—The effect of this vial is the intensification of the heat of the sun:--

> "And men were scorched with the vehement heat, and they blasphemed the name of God, Who hath authority over these plagues: and they repented not to give Him glory" (xvi. 9).

It is evident by the preceding words that these final judgments are so arranged (humanly speaking) to give the last opportunities to the worshippers of the beast to repent. Instead of repenting they blaspheme, both here, under the fifth, and under the seventh vial.

THE 5TH VIAL.—A direct attack is made upon the throne of the beast. The throne of Satan will be at Pergamos (ii. 13), and Satan will give the beast his throne and great authority. Whether the seat of Government will continue at Pergamos we cannot say. Rev. ii. 13 seems to indicate that at least during one part of the time it will be there.

The day of the Lord is connected with "darkness and gloominess, clouds and thick darkness" (Joel ii.). The sun will turn to darkness before the day of the Lord (Mark xiii. 24, 25). It is the beginning of the end.

THE 6TH VIAL.—The Euphrates is dried up with a purpose—"that the way of the Kings of the East might be prepared". In Isa. xi. 15, 16 we read that "the river" is to be smitten in the seven streams, so that men may go over dry shod:--

> "And there shall be an highway for the remnant of His People which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt."

The passage through the Red Sea was real and the account of it literal, so will be the drying up of the river Euphrates. Both the remnant of Israel from Assyria, and the Kings of the East will pass over this way. Zech. x. 10, 11 has words much to the same effect as Isa. xi. 15, 16. The Kings of the East evidently lead their armies across the Euphrates, and the verses following shew that their objective is Armageddon.

Three unclean spirits, demon spirits working miracles, proceed from the mouth of the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet, with the express object of gathering the Kings of the habitable world to the battle of that great day of God, the Almighty. East and West (for the oikoumenē signifies the "civilized" world) meet together in joint opposition to the Lamb. At this critical period the Lord speaks to His own enjoining watchfulness. The "blessedness" of watchfulness here is to be compared and contrasted with the "blessedness" of a martyr's death "from henceforth" in chapter xiv.

Armageddon, or more correctly Har-mageddon, means "The mount of Meggido". Judges v. 19, II Kings xxiii. 29, II Chron. xxxv. 22-25, Zech. xii. 11 and Septuagint version of Isa. x. 28 give a foreshadowing of the Har-mageddon of the Apocalypse.

THE 7TH VIAL.—This introduces the judgment upon Babylon, and we must leave this over to our next paper.

#48. The Seventh Vial (xvi. 17-21).
pp. 167 - 169

The seventh angel will pour his vial on the air. Why the air? We are not told that men were suffocated as a result—indeed, no result is actually mentioned. Yet the outpouring of this vial, reserved to the end, must be the climax. The fifth vial will be poured out upon the throne of the beast, the seventh will be directed against Satan himself. Unless we mistake the reference, Eph. ii. speaks of Satan as "The prince of the authority of the air". The casting out of the dragon, called the Devil and Satan, from the heavens to the earth is followed by the words:--

> "Now is come salvation and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of His Anointed" (Rev. xii. 10-12).

The casting down of the Devil speaks woe to the inhabitants of the earth:--

> "Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time" (Rev. xii. 12).

When therefore the seventh vial falls upon the air, a great voice is hear out of the temple from the throne saying "ACCOMPLISHED". The word here ranks in sacred importance with the word "FINISHED' of John xix. 30. The state of the text renders Rev. xxi. a little uncertain, but many feel that the A.V. should be retained. If so, this is a blessed counterpart of Rev. xvi. 17. One of the features that follows this vial is an unprecedented earthquake:--

> "Such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty and so great" (Rev. xii. 18).

Seeing that this earthquake must be akin to the mighty geological upheavals that have left their mark upon the crust of the earth, when mountains were formed and islands rose or disappeared, the words of verse 20 need not be figuratively understood at all: "Every island fled away, and (certain) mountains disappeared". The shock divided Babylon into three parts, and the cities of the nations collapsed.

The mighty army that comes up against Israel, which Ezekiel addresses as Gog (xxxviii. 14-23), is met by a terrible earthquake:--

> "So that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the face of the earth, shall shake at My presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground . . . . . I will plead with him with pestilence and with blood . . . . . great hailstones, fire and brimstone" (Ezek. xxxviii. 20-22).

The passage seems to refer to the seventh vial. Twice in Isa. ii. in connection with the day of the Lord we read of the time "when He shall shake terribly the earth". Hag. ii. 6, 7, 21 & 22 says:--

> "Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; and I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come."
> "I will shake the heavens and the earth; and I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the nations, and I will overthrow the chariots and those that ride in them; and the horses and the riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother."

This again speaks plainly of Har-mageddon. The first earthquake in the experience of man is described as a "creation", being something new. It was occasioned by the presumption of Korah, and Moses said:--

> "If the Lord make a new thing (margin, create a creature), and the earth open her mouth and swallow them up . . . . . then shall ye understand that these men have provoked the Lord" (Numb. xvi. 30).

The earthquake is associated with the judgment of God upon those who sinned in connection with holy things. Deut. xxxii. 21, 22 declares that the idolatry of Israel kindled a fire which shall consume the earth and set on fire the foundations of the mountains. Thus the volcano and the earthquake are both associated with "the vengeance of His Temple". The earthquake that Zechariah tells us shall split the Mount of Olives in the midst is likened to the earthquake in the days of Uzziah, the king, who followed Korah's sinful example, and was smitten (like the men under the first vial) with leprosy. Not only is the earth convulsed, but there falls from heaven hailstones of almost incredible weight. The Jewish talent has been computed as equal to 114 lbs. troy (Moses Stuart), avoirdupois (Companion bible), the Attic talent 57 lbs. troy. Whichever we take the talent to mean, the judgment is beyond thought. The construction of the sentence and the words used in verse 21 justify some such rendering as "terrific!"

Some readers have passed through the mental and physical agonies of the bombardment of modern war in the trenches, or the terrors of an air raid at home. What therefore must this unparalleled earthquake be, followed by a storm of hail, each stone weighing at least about a half hundred weight, falling from heaven! By far the most important feature of this section is that of verse 19, "And great Babylon came into remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of His wrath". This feature occupies chapters xvii. and xviii., and to this we must address ourselves in following papers.

DEAR FELLOW-MEMBERS,

"The night is far spent, the day is at hand."

As the darkness deepens with the close of this dispensation, and as the day approaches unto which we press, so it becomes increasingly incumbent upon us to "redeem the time". In view of "the night" and "the day" may every article of The Berean Expositor be written—and read.

We cannot please all our readers, as some would appreciate this or that innovation, but we seek to fulfil our ministry as accountable to one Master only. It is, however, with great thankfulness that we quote from a letter just received, and we trust it may find an echo in the hearts of our readers. It expresses what is, at least, our desire if not our achievement.

> "We are thankful for The Berean Expositor; and the friends who are willing prayerfully to study, and to go over things quietly, are learning to appreciate it. It does not appeal to some—they want a reading magazine, quite easy—and such things as are written in this make demand upon us to tarry and seek the light and power of the Spirit of God."

"Let us therefore cast of . . . . . Let us put on . . . . . Let us walk decently . . . . ." (Rom. xiii. 11-14).

Yours in the fight of faith,

"I am the Almighty God." El Shaddai ("The God Who is enough, or sufficient") carries the meaning.

"Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us" (John xiv. 8).

"My grace is sufficient for thee, for My strength is made perfect in weakness" (II Cor. xii. 9).

"God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work" (II Cor. ix. 8).

No. 29. An esteemed reader (W.H.G.T.) of The Berean Expositor writes:--

> "I am preparing a series of papers on Hebrews, and I have just given special attention to your most interesting interpretation of Heb. ii. 16, on p. 120 of Volume XI. While I do not yet see that your view is correct, I readily and gladly recognize that it is worthy of careful attention. My object, however, in writing to you is to raise one question connected with it. You say in the B.E. for last June (page 91 of Volume XII), that you continually find help and light on vexed questions by following the simple self-made motto, 'When in doubt consult the Septuagint'. But I cannot see in your treatment of Heb. ii. 16 that you have applied this principle. In the Septuagint of Isa. xli. 8, 9, the phrase 'seed of Abraham' occurs, together with the verb found in Hebrews, and I observe that some commentators think that Hebrews is a reminiscence of this passage in Isaiah. Now there can be no doubt that the verb in Isa. xli. 9 means, 'taken hold' in the sense of the Revised Version of Heb. ii. 16. While, therefore, you rightly say that the word itself is colourless, with no moral meaning inherent in it, I should much like you to consider Heb. ii. 16 in the light of the Septuagint and give a further comment on the passage."

Of all the letters that we receive, one of this description is the most encouraging. It has been suggested that we take a dose of our own medicine, and test the suggested interpretation of Heb. ii. 16 by the Septuagint. This we gladly do, and should the further investigation indicate that our suggestion is not tenable, we shall gladly set it aside and still seek the mind of God in His Word. The interpretation referred to reads:--

> "For truly it (i.e., the fear of death, or death itself) does not lay hold of, or seize on angels, but of the seed of Abraham it does lay hold."

Upon opening the LXX at Isa. xli. 9 we find the word used is antilambanomai, whereas in Heb. ii. 16 the word is epilambanomai. The difference is slight, but as the inspired Word uses every word with precision, we have to conclude that the two passages are not strictly parallel. We drew attention to the usage and meaning of antilambanomai, and as both words occur in the N.T. we must believe that the word that expresses the Spirit's meaning has been rightly chosen. While we set Isa. xli. 9 aside, we very gladly give heed to the usage of epilambanomai in the LXX:--

> "His hand took hold on Esau's heel" (Gen. xxv. 26).
> "Take it by the tail" (Exod. iv. 4).
> "They took him, and slew him" (Judges xii. 6).

These first occurrences are a fair sample of the thirty or more passages that contain the word; "colourless and without moral meaning inherent" must be said of the LXX usage as of the N.T. There are however three passages where the usage of the word turns the scale of evidence in favour of the suggested interpretation of Heb. ii. 16:--

"Fear took hold upon them there, and pain, as of woman in travail" (Psa. xlviii., [xlvii.] 6).

"Fear hath seized on her: anguish and sorrows have taken here, as a woman in travail" (Jer. xlix. 23, [24]).

"Therefore this evil hath happened unto you" (Jer. xliv. 23).

If "fear" and "evil" can be said to "take hold upon" those concerning whom the Psalmist and the Prophet wrote, "the fear of death" can be said "lay hold of" those concerning whom the Apostle wrote. It is suggestive that those passages, which do take upon themselves any colour at all, are parallel with the suggested interpretation of Heb. ii. 16. While we would not say that these three passages prove anything, we must say that Heb. ii. 16 should still be considered on its merits, our survey of the LXX giving us just a little more inclination to believe that the interpretation offered above is the true one.

Will others readers search and see and let us hear from them? Our desire is the truth, and while endeavouring to teach others we are anxious and willing from others to learn also.

No. 30.—K.E.B.(Lanarkshire). "There seems to be a contradiction in Exod. xxxiii. 11 and 20. 'The Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend', and 'He said, Thou canst not see My face: for there shall no man see Me and live'."

The sense of contradiction arises out of the mental addition to the statement in verse 11, that Moses saw the face of the Lord, which you will observe is neither the statement nor the meaning of the passage. It will be a help to us to notice that the Hebrew word "face" is of wider application than the English usage, and we must not fall into the error of judging Hebrew thought and expression by modern western ideas. We will confine ourselves in the first place to chapter xxxiii., and give every occurrence of the Hebrew word "face":--

"I will send an angel before thee" (verse 2).
"The Lord spake unto Moses face to face" (verse 11).
"My presence shall go with thee" (verse 14).
"If Thy presence go not with me" (verse 15).
"Upon the face of the earth" (verse 16).
"My goodness pass before thee . . . . .
the name of the Lord before thee" (verse 19).
"Thou canst not see My face" (verse 20).
"My face shall not be seen" (verse 23).

It will be seen that in the immediate context of the verses under consideration, the word "face" is used in a way which demands the recognition of a figurative sense in order to interpret the passages truthfully and intelligibly. This usage will be abundantly confirmed if we glance at a few more verses in this same book of Exodus:--

"Evil is before you" (lit. your faces) (x. 10).
"Laid before their faces all these words" (xix. 7).
"Thou shalt have no gods before Me" (lit. before my face) (xx. 3).
"*Shew*bread" (lit. bread of faces) (xxv. 30).
"Upon the fore*front* (lit. over against the face) of the mitre" (xxviii. 37).
"Before the tabernacle" (xxix. 10).

Coming to Exod. xxxiii. once again, let us notice what is actually said in the verses which appear contradictory. First the positive statement of verse 20:--

> "Thou (i.e. Moses) canst not see My face: for there shall no man (Heb. Adam) see Me and live."

There is no ambiguity in the wording here. Privileged as Moses was, in this particular he was like the rest of mankind, utterly unable to look upon the face of God. Let us now look at verse 11. verse 9 says:--

> "And it came to pass, as Moses entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar descended, and stood at the door of the tabernacle, and the Lord talked with Moses."

Note, it was the Lord Who talked with Moses, and not Moses who talked with the Lord. Verse 11 adds:--

> "And the Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend."

The only part of the verse which demands attention is the expression "face to face". Now seeing that in the same chapter it is categorically stated that neither Moses nor any other man could see the face of God, and seeing that verse 11 does not say that Moses did see the face of the Lord, and moreover, remembering the great latitude which the figurative use of "face" has in the Hebrew of Exodus, the contradiction is one more of the imagination than of the text. Unless we are prepared to understand the word "face" literally in every occurrence quoted above, "face to face" can mean no more than that in the case of Moses the mediation necessary in the case of Aaron and others was not demanded.

In Numb. xii. 8 the figure is retained, but the wording is altered, there instead of "face to face" we read "mouth to mouth". The context too illuminates the intention of Exod. xxxiii. 11:--

> "If there be a prophet among you, I the Lord will make Myself known unto him in A VISION and will speak unto him in A DREAM. My servant Moses is NOT SO, who is faithful in all Mine house. With him will I speak MOUTH TO MOUTH, even apparently (plainly), and not in dark speeches; and the similitude of the Lord shall he behold" (xii. 6-8).

We are not to be found trifling over the literality of the words "mouth to mouth" (would not "mouth to ear" be more literal?), but see them as contrasted favourably with the lesser means of communication, i.e. a dream, a vision. Face to face, mouth to mouth, eye to eye, hand in hand, shoulder to shoulder, hip and thigh, head to foot, these and many more will come to the mind of the reader, and not one figure, if found in ordinary literature, but what would be accepted without question.

Before leaving this subject, we would observe that the quotation from Numb. xii. introduces a deeper theme than that of the question of figures of speech.

> "The similitude of the Lord shall he behold."

This is a definite statement, and demands attention. There can be no question as to the meaning of the word "similitude", for it comes in the law of Sinai:--

> "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, nor any likeness of anything" (Exod. xx. 4).

Numb. xii. 8 can only be understood in the light of the following passages, which speak of the Son of God.

> "Who is the IMAGE of the INVISIBLE God" (Col. i. 15).
> "Who being in the FORM of God . . . . . took upon Him the FORM of a servant" (Phil. ii. 6, 7).
> "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him" (John i. 18).

If we stress the contradiction of Exod. xxxiii., we must also carry our objection over into the N.T. and find that the words of Christ, of John, of Paul also come short. This is by its very presumption revealed as a false objection, and is met by the simple recognition of the anthropomorphism of the language of revelation, without which God Who is Spirit and Infinite would remain unknown to the sons of men. Till we attain to that perfect day when we shall know even as we are known, let us thank God for the condescension revealed in the use of "figures of speech".

Studies in Ecclesiastes.

#18. Wisdom (viii.).
pp. 24 - 26

Chapter viii. opens with a reference to the wise man, "Who is as the wise man? and who knoweth the interpretation of a thing?" (viii. 1). Speaking of the work of God, the writer concludes the chapter by saying, "though a wise man think to know it, yet shall he not be able to find it" (viii. 17).

We must keep well in mind that Ecclesiastes is discussing "What is that good", and among other things he has declared that "Wisdom is good, like an inheritance . . . . . it giveth life to them that have it" (vii. 11, 12). Though wisdom is so excellent, there are bounds set to its flight; if we observe them it shall be well with us, but if we despise or ignore them, we shall surely come to grief.

> "I said, I will be wise, but it was far from me. That which is far off, and exceeding deep, who can find it out?" (vii. 23, 24).

So the Preacher asks the question, "Who is like the wise man?" and explains the special feature of the wise man that he has in mind by adding "And who knoweth the interpretation of a thing?"

The Hebrew pesher = "interpretation" occurs but once in Scripture, but the parallel Chaldee p'shar is used in Dan. ii. 4 - vii. 16 thirty-two times, and always in connection with the dreams of prophetic import given to Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar and Daniel. This is entirely in line with the recurring thought of Ecclesiastes as to "what shall come after", or as Daniel said, "what should come to pass hereafter", which the wise men of Babylon could not interpret.

It is very suggestive that another expression that comes in Eccles. viii. 1, "The strength of his face shall be changed" is also found nowhere else but in Daniel. Dan. v. 6 reads "The King's countenance was changed": so also verses 9, 10. The passage however that bears most upon Eccles. viii. 1 is that which relates to Daniel himself. In Dan. vii. Daniel had a dream which revealed the future of the kingdoms of earth and the final triumph of the kingdom of the saints of the Most High. At the close he wrote:--

> "Hitherto is the end of the matter. As for me, Daniel, my cogitations much troubled me, and my countenance changed in me."

Yet another connection is made by the word "cogitation", which in Eccles. i. 17, ii. 22, and iv. 16, is rendered "vexation". We return to Eccles. viii. 1, and guided by the most evident parallels of Daniel, find that this verse divides up as follows:--

A | The wise man.
B | Interpretation.
A | Wisdom makes face to shine.
B | Interpretation often, by lifting the veil of the future, changes the strength of face and plunges one into sorrow.

A little further on in Eccles. viii. the writer returns to the same thought by saying, "A wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment" (verse 5). So far this is wisdom and will made the face to shine, but the Preacher continues:--

> "Because to every purpose there is time and judgment, therefore the misery of man is great upon him. For he knoweth not that which shall be: for who can tell him when it shall be?" (verses 6 and 7).

What is troubling the man? Verse 8 explains:--

> "There is no man that hath power over the spirit to retain the spirit, neither hath he power in the day of death: and there is no discharge in that war."

Here we have an example of those who all their lifetime were held in bondage by the fear of death. Resurrection we have already seen unlocks the teaching of Ecclesiastes.

"All this have I seen", said Ecclesiastes, "and applied my heart unto every work that is done under the sun", and then he gives some examples. He sums up his observations in verse 12:--

> "Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before Him."

This is true, even though there be a vanity done upon the earth:--

> "that there be just men, unto whom it happeneth according to the work of the wicked; again there be wicked man to whom it happeneth according to the work of the righteous" (verse 14).

This in no wise alters the previous conclusion that it shall be well with them that fear God. We now come to "that good", which is the object of search in this book:--

> "Then I commended mirth (joy, gladness), because a man hath no better thing (see the series of 'better things' in chapter vii.) under the sun, than to eat, and to drink, and to be merry, for that shall abide with him of his labour the days of his life, which God giveth him under the sun" (viii. 15).

The question arises as one reads these words, Is this God's truth, or is it merely the opinion of man? To arrive at a satisfactory conclusion necessitates a continuance of our study into chapter ix. We will therefore suspend judgment and seek grace that we may find the truth as we proceed. Meanwhile we may profit by what we have seen. Wisdom may give us a child-like and simple faith. It will enable us to see all the baffling perplexities of every-day life, the wicked prospering and the righteous suffering, and it will keep ever before our minds the fact that:-- "It is good that thou shouldest take hold of this; yea, also from this withdraw not thine hand; for he that feareth God shall come forth of them all" (vii. 18).

"I know that it shall be well with them that fear God" (viii. 12).

This is wisdom, it causes the face to shine. To probe and worry about all the mysteries of Providence however, to ignore the fact that "Though a wise man think to know it, yet shall he not be able to find it out", this is seeking trouble, vexation, misery. Wisdom believes God, and the only persons who can really "enjoy life" are those who have thus realized practically, as well as theoretically:--

"that the righteous, and the wise, and their works, are IN THE HAND OF GOD" (ix. 1).

We must pursue the subject further in our next paper.

#19. Contentment (viii., ix.).

pp. 55 - 57

We arrived in our last article at the point where the Preacher commended mirth saying, "A man hath nothing better than to eat, and to drink, and be merry". It must be admitted that these words are associated in some parts of Scripture with worldly unbelief, e.g., Luke xii. 19, but we must see whether this is the only context of these words before we judge the passage in Ecclesiastes. Prov. xvii. 22 says:--

"A merry heart doeth food like a medicine."

Of Boaz it is written:--

"And when Boaz had eaten and drunk, and his heart was merry, he went to lie down at the end of the heap of corn" (Ruth iii. 7), but there is no suggestion that Boaz was anything but a proper and God-fearing man in so doing. The Scripture describes the peace and prosperity of Israel under the reign of Solomon with these words:--

"Judah and Israel were many, as the sand which is by the sea in multitude, eating and drinking, and making merry" (I Kings iv. 20).

It is rather unfortunate that the present-day conception of the word "merry" dissociates it rather from spiritual things. While however the occasions are few where the word is translated "merry", it is rendered many times "rejoice", "joy", "glad". Such passages as "In Thy presence is fullness of joy", "Serve the Lord with gladness", will shew that the word carries a wider and deeper meaning than merely that of merriment.

Mirth may be very wrong, as Eccles. ii. shews, but like many things mirth, merriment, joy, gladness, may also be very right. Many there are who can walk by a hard and fast rule, few there are who can rise to the height of the apostle who can say

"Circumcision is nothing and uncircumcision is nothing". Partisans for either side could easily be found. So with eating, drinking and being merry. It may be a sign of reckless worldliness. It may also be a sign of godly contentedness. In Eccles ix. 7-9 the subject is repeated, and with emphasis:--

> "Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy (same word 'mirth' and 'merry' in viii. 15) and drink thy wine with a good heart; for God now accepteth thy works. Let thy garments be always white; and let thy head lack no perfume. Live joyfully (Hebrew 'see life') with the wife whom thou lovest all the days of the life of thy vanity, which He hath given thee under the sun, all the days of thy vanity: for that is thy portion in this life, and in thy labour which thou takest under the sun."

We can imagine that such language comes as a shock to some, whose conception of spirituality is something devoid of either natural affection, a merry heart, or a cheerful countenance. If however I have given up the futile search into the mysteries of providence and have gratefully fallen back upon the blessed words of Eccles. ix. 1 that "The righteous and the wise and their works are in the hand of God"; if when I see oppression and injustice I remember that "He that is higher than the highest regardeth; and there be higher than they"; then I too can say with the Preacher:--

> "Behold that which I have seen: it is good and comely for one to eat and drink, and to enjoy the good of all his labour that he taketh under the sun all the days of his life which God giveth him: for it is his portion . . . . . power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoice in his labour; this is the gift of God" (Eccles. v. 18, 19).

This by no means conflicts with the teaching of vii. 4, "The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning, but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth", for a house of mirth, in that sense, can never be a true description of the house of one redeemed by precious blood and taught by God. Sin and its ugly accompaniments press too closely for that. Nevertheless the admonition of the Preacher is salutary and true.

The commendation of mirth or rejoicing, and the finding that a man hath no better thing under the sun than to eat, drink and be joyful, follows immediately upon that inequality seen in the affairs of men where the righteous suffer evil, and the wicked prosper. The parallel in ix. 7-9 "Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, etc." follows immediately upon the statement concerning the "one event' that comes alike to all. In the centre, between the two passages, comes ix. 1:--

> "The righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God."

The man who believes that, in face of the inequalities of providence and the "one event" which comes alike to all, he of all men can "eat, drink, and rejoice", and "live joyfully with the wife whom he loves", etc.

> "There is that neither day nor night seeth sleep with his eyes" (viii. 16).
> "The sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep soundly" (v. 12).

The reference to eating and drinking is incidental; the true and inner thought is summed up in the word "content". What Ecclesiastes expressed in his way and for his hearers Paul says to us:--

> "I have learned, in whatsoever state I am to be content" (Phil. iv. 12).

#20. The Conclusion of the Matter.
pp. 86 - 88

We have passed in review many of the outstanding features of this book, and while many and weighty passages remain unexamined, we feel the key-thought of the book has been discovered and applied. The quest before the writer was to discover "what is that good" that should be the aim and portion in this life. "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter". Ecclesiastes does not leave it to his readers to draw their own conclusions; he sets it out before us:--

> "Fear God, and keep His commandments, for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil" (xii. 13, 14).

"FEAR GOD." –It is fitting that this book which so emphasizes the excellence of wisdom should conclude thus. In Prov. i. 7 we read, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge", and in Ecclesiastes the fear of God is the conclusion of the matter. The outstanding features of Ecclesiastes may be said to revolve around the following words and themes.

1. VANITY.—We have already considered the reiterated cry of the Preacher, "Vanity of vanities". The number of references prevents us from citing them all again; and their scope takes in all the activities of this mortal span from birth to death. Does Koheleth apply his "conclusion of the matter" to this? He does. "In the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vanities: but fear thou God" (v. 7). "A dream cometh through the multitude of business", says verse 3, and therefore, instead of becoming entangled therein, "Fear God".

2. INEQUALITIES.—Over and over again the Preacher speaks of the righteous suffering as the wicked, or the wicked prospering. He speaks of the vanity of the careful labour of a father being dissipated by a foolish son. He further sees that the wise man dieth as the fool, and that one event happens to all, to him that is wicked and to him that is righteous. Does Ecclesiastes find refuge in his "conclusion of the matter"? He does:--

> "There is a just man that perisheth in his righteousness, and there is a wicked man that prolongeth his life in his wickedness . . . . . It is good that thou shouldest take hold of this. Yea, also from this withdraw not thine hand: for he THAT FEARETH GOD shall come forth of them all" (vii. 15-18).

Under this same head may be included viii. 12:--

> "Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that FEAR GOD, which fear before Him: but it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which are as a shadow; because he FEARETH NOT GOD" (viii. 12, 13).

What is there in this wholesome fear of God that can so compensate, so calm one in the midst of the surge and strife of life?

3. THE TRUTH CONCERNING THE AGES.--

> "I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for the AGE (olam) . . . . . and God doeth it that men should FEAR before Him" (iii. 14).

Associated with this thought is the fact that:--

> "God shall judge the righteous and the wicked: for there is a time THERE for every purpose and for every work" (iii. 17).

and knowing this, the believer quietly holds on his way. Connected with the fear of God is the keeping of His commandments. Israel was allowed to wander in the wilderness, to suffer hunger, to experience the miraculous supply of their needs, that they may be humbled, proved, and shown what was in their hearts, whether they would keep His commandments or no. Ecclesiastes sees that every believer's life is typified in the wilderness experience of Israel.

Psa. xix. 8 says, "The commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes", and this thought enters into "the conclusion of the matter". Dispensations change, and the commandments of the Lord change with them, but to keep whatever is the truth for the time is the one sure way of peace.

To fear God and to keep His commandments is the whole of man. The word "duty" is not needed. Instead of vexing himself with the crooked things that God alone can straighten, he fears God, keeps His commandments, lives his life as the Lord prospers, and knows that a future day, a future life, a future judgment are a necessity and that there all crooked places will be made straight, all inequalities rectified. So the book ends:--

> "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil" (xii. 14).

"EVERY WORK."—Many saints hold such a view of grace as to preclude a judgment of their works. The judgment of works is found in both sets of Paul's epistles, those of the Mystery as well as those of the Acts. While it is right to ponder with chastened heart the judgment of secret things that are evil, surely it is an encouragement to know also that the secret things that are good shall also be fairly judged in that day?

Many problems arising out of this book are still left unsolved, but we feel that the main issue, the search for what is that good that man should do in this life, had been rewarded, and is now in the possession of the reader.

If the articles on Ecclesiastes have been of no help to our readers, the writer has drawn great comfort and guidance from the book while preparing them. We commend a further and fuller reading and revision of Ecclesiastes to all our readers, and pray that its salutary findings may be a continual help to all while walking “under the sun”.

Fundamentals of Dispensational Truth.

#43. The Beginning of Months (Exod. xii.).
pp. 37 - 39

Nine plagues had descended upon Egypt afflicting man and beast and exposing the grossness of Egypt's idolatry and the utter failure of their gods. At the end of the ninth plague Pharaoh had brazenly told Moses that if he saw His face again he should die. Moses went out from the royal presence saying, "Thou hast spoken well, I will see thy face again no more" (x. 29). Nine separate solemn warnings had fallen upon deaf ears and a hard heart. Before Moses entered into the presence of Pharaoh, the Lord had said:--

> "I am sure that the King of Egypt will not let you go, no, not by a mighty hand" (iii. 19).

When Moses was ready to leave Midian and return to Egypt, the Lord said:--

> "See that thou do all those wonders before Pharaoh, which I have put in thine hands: but I will harden his heart, that he shall not let the people go" (iv. 21).

One verse throws a strong light upon the vexed question of the hardening of Pharaoh's heart:--

> "But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite, he hardened his heart" (viii. 15).

Again in ix. 34:--

> "When Pharaoh saw that the rain and the hail and the thunders were ceased, he sinned yet more, and hardened his heart."

It is not our intention to presume to defend the righteousness of God; Rom. ix. silences all replies against God. Some can only accept the teaching of Rom. ix. concerning Pharaoh if it be allowed that God foresaw the salvation of Pharaoh at or before the reconciliation of all things. Rom. ix. however cuts all argument short, and leaves us and all men as clay in the hands of the Potter. Nevertheless be it noted that Pharaoh sinned when he hardened his heart, "as the Lord had said". To return however to Exod. iv. 21-23. Moses was commanded to say to Pharaoh:--

> "Thus saith the Lord, Israel is My Son, even My firstborn: and I say unto thee, let My Son go that he may serve Me! and if thou refuse to let him go, behold, I will slay thy son, even thy firstborn."

And so, as we have seen, plague after plague fell, revealing the long-suffering and the goodness of God which should have led to repentance. The destruction of the firstborn, though threatened first, falls only after nine plagues had revealed the obdurate character of Pharaoh's heart:--

> "Thus saith the Lord, About midnight will I go out into the midst of Egypt, and all the firstborn in the land of Egypt shall die" (xi. 4, 5).

Before the stroke falls Israel is instructed concerning the Passover, the first great typical ordinance of redemption given to this people. It is a matter of great importance to realize that indissolubly connected with the Passover is the unleavened bread. The connection is maintained in the reference by Paul to this great chapter of Israel's history in the epistle to the Corinthians. How does he introduce this glorious type of redemption? Does he speak of it in chapter i., where he speaks of the gospel as the preaching of Christ crucified? No, neither does he refer to it in chapter ii. It is in chapter v., where he is dealing with moral evil in the assembly, that the Passover is brought to bear, and it is introduced by a reference to the unleavened bread:--

> "Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. FOR even Christ our Passover hath been sacrificed for us, THEREFORE let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth" (I Cor. v. 7, 8).

Possibly, in our view, the Passover appears so great, so essential, that it overshadows the associated feast, but not so in the eyes of God. The sprinkled blood outside, and the unleavened bread inside, present a complete picture. This relation between the Passover and the unleavened bread is shewn by the structure.

Exod. xii. 1-20.

A | 1, 2. The beginning of months.
B | 3-11. The Passover.
C | 12, 13. For I will pass through . . . . . I will pass over.
B | 14-17-. The Unleavened Bread.
C | -17. For this day I brought you out.
A | 18-20. The first month.

It will be noticed that the section is bounded by the reference to the month:--

> "This month shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be the first month of the year to you" (xii. 2).

It was not the first month naturally, the first month of the year was originally Tisri, corresponding to our October. The Jews still keep their New Year at this date, in spite of the definite change instituted at the time of their redemption, sad evidence of their unregenerate condition. From the Autumn of falling leaf and fading flower we are called to Springtime with its parable of resurrection. Notice the words "To you", indicating that the change was not intended to interfere with unredeemed Egypt. In this change of time, made when the nation of Israel was born and redeemed, we have the great truth of regeneration. The two "musts" of John iii. come to mind here:--

> "Ye must be born again" (7).
> "Even so must the Son of Man be lifted up" (14).

Newness of life is the blessed fruit of redemption by blood. We must pause here, and more carefully consider the further teaching of Exod. xii. in another paper; but may the truth of the "beginning of months to you" be no strange doctrine to any of our readers.

#44. The Lamb without Blemish (Exod. xii.).
pp. 73 - 76

"A lamb", "The lamb", "Your lamb", such is the suggestive progression in verses 3, 4 and 5, as they speak of the shadow and type of the Lamb of God. Surely in every heart there is the prayer that Christ shall become increasingly the great central and personal factor. That from A Saviour, we may have passed to The Saviour, and not have rested until we can also say My Saviour.

"The whole congregation of Israel shall kill IT" (Exod. xii. 6).

So merges the type, the many lambs, into one "it", the one great Passover of God.

"Your lamb shall be without blemish" (Exod. xii. 5).

The law in Leviticus is most particular, descending to minute details, that the holiness and perfection of the great Antitype should ever be before the mind of the faithful:--

> "Blind, or broken, or maimed, or having a wen, or scurvy, or scabbed, ... that which is bruised, or crushed, or broken, or cut" (Lev. xxii. 22-24).

> "Whatsoever hath a blemish, that shall ye not offer: for it shall not be acceptable for you . . . . . IT SHALL BE PERFECT TO BE ACCEPTED" (Lev. xxii. 19-21).

The lamb was to be taken on the tenth day of the month, and sacrificed on the fourteenth. This would give time and opportunity for careful inspection. Luke xxiii. contains the finding of those who examined the true Lamb of God.

PILATE.	"I find no fault in this man." "I have found no fault in this man."
HEROD.	"No, nor yet Herod: for I send you to him, and lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto Him."
PILATE.	"What evil hath He done? I have found no cause of death in Him."
The MALEFACTOR.	"We receive the due reward of our deeds, but this man hath done nothing amiss."
The CENTURION.	"Glorified God saying, Certainly this was a righteous man."

Matt. xxvii. adds further evidence.

JUDAS.	"I have betrayed innocent blood."
PILATE'S WIFE.	"Have thou nothing to do with that just man."

Scripture everywhere teaches and assumes the holiness and spotless sinlessness of Christ the Lamb of God. If doctrine necessitates the tremendous statement that Christ was "made sin for us", it immediately adds "Who knew no sin" (II Cor. v. 21). If it is emphasized that Christ as Kinsman-Redeemer actually took our human nature, it is careful to say that while He actually was made flesh, it was in the likeness of sinful flesh that He came (Rom. viii. 3). Before Peter says, "Who His Own self bare our sins", he writes of Him, "Who did no sin" (I Pet. ii. 22-24), and in the same epistle Peter speaks of redemption as being by "the precious blood of Christ, as of lamb without blemish and without spot" (i. 18, 19).

If Heb. iv. declares that Christ was touched with the feeling of our infirmities and in all points had been tempted like as we are, it does not omit to add "sin excepted". There is need that every believer should hold with no shadow of uncertainty that Christ was "holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners". "It shall be PERFECT to be accepted." Such is the Lamb of God, such is our Saviour.

"And the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where ye are: and when I see the blood, I will pass over you" (Exod. xii. 13).

The word "token" will repay a little study. It first occurs in Gen. i. 14 "Let them be for signs". Gen. iv. 15 A.V. reads "The Lord set a mark upon Cain"; it should read "The Lord set a token for Cain, lest any finding him should kill him". It was a token for Cain's safety. The bow in the cloud is called "the token of the covenant" (Gen. ix. 12) as also is circumcision (Gen. xvii. 11).

Many times the word translated "sign" in Exodus is this word, and indeed this is its most frequent translation. "The blood shall be to you for a sign." The blood signified something. It signified life laid down:--

> "The soul of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement by reason of the soul" (Lev. xvii. 11).

The blood atoned for "YOUR SOUL" "BY REASOn OF THE SOUL" in it. The blood sprinkled upon the doorpost was a "sign" that redemption had been made. Nothing else was a "sign", nothing else did the Lord "see". No genealogy showing direct descent from Abraham could be a "sign", no promises, vows, prayers, nothing but the sprinkled blood.

The words "I will pass over you" must also be considered. As they stand, they give the mind the impression that the Lord "passed over" the houses of Israel without smiting them, and went on to the houses of the Egyptians. In verse 23 however this idea does not seem fully to fit the statement there made:--

> "The Lord will pass over the door, and will not suffer the destroyer to come in unto your houses to smite you."

The "passing over" here is synonymous with protecting. In I Kings xviii. 21 we meet the word in the question of the prophet "How long halt ye between two opinions". The idea of "hovering" or "suspense" suits the thought better than "passing over" and leaving. Isa. xxxi. 5 says:--

> "As birds flying, so will the Lord of Hosts defend Jerusalem; defending also He will deliver it; and passing over He will preserve it."

The allusion to Deut. xxxii. 11 here seems clear.

> "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings."

Instead of repeating the words "fluttereth over", Isaiah goes to Exod. xii. for a synonym, and says "passing over". This gives us the blessed meaning of "Passover". The Lord, like the eagle, spread abroad His wings, hovered over the house, and protected it from the destroyer that went through the land. Psalm xci. 4 expresses the feeling of pasach "To pass over" without using the word.

> "He shall cover thee with His feathers, and under His wings shalt thou trust."

We would not suggest any alteration in the A.V.; the words are too precious and have too sacred associations, but we can keep in mind the meaning as we read as being "When I see the blood I will PAUSE over you, (not PASS over you)". "The two side posts and the upper door post" were sprinkled with the blood, but not the threshold, not the floor. The apostacy is characterized by "Trampling under foot the Son of God, and counting the blood . . . . . common" (Heb. x. 29).

The Jews reckoned a double evening, the first from noon to three, the second from three until sunset. In Exod. xii. 6 the margin shews that the Passover Lamb was killed "between the two evening", which would be at three o'clock. Matt. xxvii. 46 shews that the Lord Jesus died at the ninth hour, and after that "when even was come" Joseph of Arimathea begged of Pilate the body. The sixth hour was noon, the ninth hour was 3.0p.m. Even such a detail as the exact time was fulfilled. John xix. 36 draws attention to yet another feature which links type and Antitype together.

> "These things were done that the Scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of Him shall not be broken."

Roman practice must give place to the sure word of prophecy. The Roman soldiers must bear their testimony together with the Centurion that "this was a righteous man", for Psa. xxxiv. 20 speaking of the righteous says:--

> "He keepeth all his bones; not one of them is broken."

When David was led to see his sinfulness before God, instead of saying, "I am unrighteous", he said:--

> "Make me to hear joy and gladness, that the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice."

Unblemished in life, unbroken in death, God's true Passover Lamb was perfect , and in Him alone can we find redemption and acceptance.

#45. Feast of Unleavened Bread (Exod. xii.).
pp. 101 - 104

We imagine that some readers may say occasionally, "We do not come across the word dispensational, or rightly divide, very much in this series; why then does it use the title, "Fundamentals of Dispensational Truth"? We desire to correct a wrong impression. All truth is dispensational. The whole circle of God's aionian purpose is subdivided into a series of dispensations. The preaching of the gospel cannot be accomplished with clearness apart from dispensational truth.

It was suggested to the Editor by those responsible for another magazine, that they would accept a series of articles on Romans if the dispensational side were kept out! How could one ignore the dispensational bearing of such passages as "To the Jew first", and "My Gospel"? How could one deal with Rom. v., ix.-xi., or xv. without reference to dispensations?

The Scripture record of Adam or Abraham, of Israel or the Church, is so written because God's dealings with these men, nations, or assemblies show the varying dispensations in which the purpose of the ages is unfolded and accomplished. The Passover is a part of dispensational truth, and to see where and how it applies is to grasp the very fundamentals.

We must now give attention to the associated feast of unleavened bread. Throughout Scripture the truth set forth by the Passover and the unleavened bread is constantly associated. Take for instance Eph. ii. 8-10. "For by grace are ye saved through faith . . . . . not out of works", this is the N.T. doctrinal presentation of the truth set forth in the sign of the sprinkled blood. "Created in Christ Jesus unto good works": this is the equivalent to the unleavened bread. The blood, outside, of the unblemished lamb calls for the unleavened bread within.

> "And they shall eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire, and unleavened bread; and with bitter herbs they shall eat it" (Exod. xii. 8).

In the law given subsequently in Exodus occurs this command:--

> "Thou shalt not offer the blood of My sacrifice with leavened bread" (Exod. xxiii. 18).

In Lev. ii. 11 we read:--

> "No meal offering . . . . . shall be made with leaven."

In the N.T. leaven consistently typifies evil. Matt. xvi. 6-12:--

> "Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees . . . . . Then understood they how that He bade them beware . . . . . of the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees."

Luke xii. 1 adds the words:--

> "Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy."

I Cor. v. 8 speaks of "the leaven of malice and wickedness", contrasting it with the "unleavened bread of sincerity and truth". Summing up the evil that had corrupted the simple faith of the Galatians, the apostle says, "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump" (verse 6). Leaven therefore represents evil in doctrine and practice. It is the purpose of God that His children should be "without blemish". As a result of the great offering of Christ they shall one day be presented "holy and unblameable and unreproveable in His sight" (Col. i. 22).

Notice the basis of the exhortation of I Cor. v. 7:--

> "Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened."

In Christ the Corinthians were "unleavened". They are addressed as "saints", but their walk was far from being "as becometh saints". They could not make themselves holy, but being sanctified in Christ they can be urged to walk worthy.

Another associated meaning which Scripture attaches to the feast of unleavened bread is connected with the pilgrim character of those who first partook of it:--

> "Thus shall ye eat it (the lamb, the bread and the herbs), with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand; and ye shall eat it in haste" (xii. 11).
>
> "And the people took their dough before it was leavened, their kneading troughs being bound up in their clothes upon their shoulders" (xii. 34).
> "And they baked unleavened cakes of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt, for it was not leavened; because they were thrust out of Egypt and could not tarry" (xii. 39).

The feast of unleavened bread speaks of separation from Egypt, of a people who are not at home, whose hopes are beyond and above.

It is evident that the observance of the feast of the Passover lamb alone was not a sufficient memorial:--

> "Ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread; FOR in this selfsame day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt: THEREFORE shall ye observe this day in your generations for an ordinance for ever" (xii. 17).

Redemptions saves from and saves to. The Passover not only saved Israel from the destroyer, but from further contamination with or service to Egypt. The Passover naturally led to the Red Sea and the wilderness. The lives of the people had been made "bitter with hard bondage". This is easily forgotten, as can be seen in the case of Israel in the wilderness. There, when the dreadful experiences of the Passover and the Red Sea were things of the past, they remembered "the flesh pots" and "bread to the full" (xvi. 3).

> "We remember (said they) the fish which we did eat in Egypt gratuitously; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and garlick" (Numb. xi. 5).

That is what they "remembered", six items! They soon forgot the wonders of their deliverance and the bitterness of their bondage. Therefore added to the unleavened bread was "bitter herbs", "bitterness" as the Hebrew really is. God it is that appoints the bitterness of the pilgrim's path. Israel met it at the beginning of their wilderness experience, and the first stage of their journey is named Marah, or Bitter.

Let us accept these indications without murmuring, for they are sent in love to wean us from the flesh pots of Egypt, and to remind us of the bitterness of our former bondage. May we all rejoice in the redemption which is in Christ Jesus, and experimentally realize the place and importance of the feast of the unleavened bread.

#46. The Great Mixture (Exod. xii. 37, 38).
pp. 116 - 118

We have seen the emphasis which the close association of the unleavened bread with the Passover lamb gives to the fact that redemption must always be manifested by separation from evil: that those who are "called saints" should act as "becometh saints"; that those who are "unleavened" should put away the "leaven of malice and wickedness". This is the ideal, and nothing lower than this can have the sanction of the Word. The Scripture, however, reveals the fact which everywhere presses upon us to-day, that the meaning and truth of the unleavened bread is not practically realized.

> "And the children of Israel journeyed from Rameses to Succoth, about six hundred thousand on foot that were men, beside children. And a mixed multitude went up also with them; and flocks, and herds, even very much cattle" (xii. 37, 38).

When Moses stood before Pharaoh he demanded that not only should the men go, but said he:--

> "We will go with our young and with our old, with our sons and with our daughters, with our flocks and with our herds we will go" (x. 9).

When the exodus actually took place it is found that in between the "men and the children" and their "flocks and herds", is "a mixed multitude also", or as the margin reads "a great mixture". The effect of this mixture is seen in Num. xi. 4: "And the mixt multitude that was among them fell a-lusting": that is what we might expect. There is however a sad echo of the "also" of Exod. xii. 38, for Numb. xi. 4 continues:--

> "And the children of Israel also wept again, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat? . . . . . there is nothing at all, beside this manna before our eyes."

"This manna" is elsewhere called "angel's food", "bread from heaven", and is type of Him Who is the bread of life that came down from heaven. The influence of the mixed multitude is clearly seen. The heart is turned back to Egypt, and the things of God are lightly esteemed.

Some of this mixed multitude were allied to Israel by marriage. This is no fancy, for we have at least one such alliance and its disastrous effect recorded in Lev. xxiv. 10:--

> "And the son of an Israelitish woman, whose father was an Egyptian, went out among the children of Israel."

The words "went out among" seem to imply some definite purpose. We are told in Exod. ii. 11 that when Moses was grown:--

> "He went out unto his brethren . . . . . and he spied an Egyptian smiting an Hebrew."

Here, however, we find, "The son of the Israelitish woman and a man of Israel strove together in the camp". To the fleshly lusts of Numb. xi. therefore must be added the "strife" of Lev. xxiv. Not only so, but the dreadful sin of blasphemy must be included:--

> "And the Israelitish woman's son blasphemed the name of the Lord, and cursed."

Instead of loving that name, and revering it, this son of an Israelitish woman blasphemed, and blasphemy is the germ of Antichrist.

Neh. xiii. 1-3 shows how Israel, when returned from the captivity, mingled with the Ammonite and the Moabite, and these are called "the mixed multitude". In Neh. xiii. 23, 24 Ashdod, Moab and Ammon are cited as nations which had intermarried with Israel, and Nehemiah draws a sad lesson from Solomon:--

> "Did not Solomon king of Israel sin by these things? Yet among many nations was there no king like him, who was beloved of his God, and God made him king over all Israel, nevertheless even him did outlandish women cause to sin" (Neh. xiii. 26).

Ezra ix. 1, 2 likewise mourns over the fact that Israel had not:--

> "separated themselves from the people of the lands . . . . . the holy seed have mingled themselves with the people of those lands."

Jehoshaphat was another king who had a good record, for he "walked in the first ways of his father David, and sought not unto Baalim, but sought the Lord God of his father". In the third year of his reign he sent Princes and Levites with the book of the law of the Lord to teach in Judah. Yet like Solomon and like Israel of the exodus he failed, for II Chron. xviii. 1 says:-- and that "affinity" was his ruin. It is interesting to note that chatan, "to join in affinity", is translated "to be a son-in-law", "to make marriages", "father-in-law", and "mother-in-law", showing the closeness of the union between Jehoshaphat and Ahab.

Returning to Israel and the mixed multitude we see the failure to put into practice the truth contained in the type of the unleavened bread.

The Corinthians, we have seen, were "called saints", and Christ had been made to them "sanctification" as well as "redemption". They were "unleavened" in Christ, but they had failed to realize their position.

II Cor. vii. 1, summing up the argument of II Cor. vi. 14-18 where the unequal yoke and unholy fellowship is seen in all its ugliness, says:--

> "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, PERFECTING holiness in the fear of God."

Holiness we can neither make nor merit, but when the grace of God separates us, by the blood of Christ (as of a lamb without blemish and without spot) from sin and death with its bondage and its bitterness that are worse than those of Egypt, then "our reasonable service" must include this heart and life separation, the absence of which worked such disaster in the spiritual experience of Israel, of Solomon, of Jehoshaphat and of the Corinthians. This is "perfecting holiness".

> "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty" (II Cor. vi. 17).

#47. The Self-same Day (Exod. xii.).
pp. 150 – 152

As one reads the book of Exodus, especially that part which deals with Pharaoh's opposition, the interplay of human fear and cupidity, of Divine forbearance and judgment, the long period of Israel's bondage, or the policy of the new king that knew not Joseph, all seem to move so naturally, cause and effect is so obvious, that the sovereign will and purpose of God is not apparent on the surface. Yet through all the years of Israel's changing fortunes, whether the inhuman hatred of Joseph's brethren, the famine that forced Jacob into Egypt, the dreams of Pharaoh, or the change of dynasty, God's great purpose was unfolding, and neither the premature advent of Moses, nor the obstinacy of Pharaoh altered the prearranged plan by so much as one day:--

> "Now the sojourning of the children of Israel (who dwelt in Egypt) was four hundred and thirty years. And it came to pass at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, EVEN THE SELFSAME DAY it came to pass, that all the hosts of the Lord went out from the land of Egypt. It is a night to be much observed unto the Lord" (Exod. xii. 40-42).

The "sojourning" of the children of Israel dates back beyond the birth of Jacob's twelve sons, and includes the pilgrimage of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. From the call of Abraham out of Ur of the Chaldees he became a "sojourner", and all his children were sojourners too. Incidentally Exod. xii. says that they "dwelt in Egypt", but this did not alter the fact that they were sojourners and away from the land of promise. Gal. iii. 17 gives the same period time, namely 430 years, as covering the time that elapsed from the promise given to Abraham in Gen. xv. until the giving of the law from Mount Sinai, which took place soon after the exodus from Egypt.

There is another period connected with the same event (the exodus) that starts from another point, and covers a period of 400 years. This prophetic utterance is given in Gen. xv. 13-16, and it will be seen that not only did God speak of a definite period of time, but of the chief features that led up to the exodus. Let us enumerate them:--

1. "Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs (and shall serve them and they shall afflict them) 400 years.
2. And also that nation, whom they shall serve, will I judge;
3. And afterward shall they come out with great substance.
4. In the fourth generation they shall come hither again,
5. For the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full."

How are we to account for the fact that Gen. xv. speak of a period of 400 years, whereas Gal. iii. 17 speaks of the same events as occupying 430 years? At the time of writing this article, the writer endorsed the explanation of The Companion Bible which makes the 400 years commence with the recognition of Isaac as the seed when Isaac was 5 years old. Since writing, however, a beloved fellow-helper has suggested a much simpler explanation which we gladly give in his own words.

> "This explanation (referring to that of The Companion Bible and also our own), I have always personally regarded as unsatisfactory. Surely Isaac was 'recognized as the Seed' before his birth—'In Isaac shall thy seed be called'. Surely the point is that Gen. xii. 4 tells us that Abraham was seventy-five when he left Haran (not Ur), where he had remained till the death of Terah. But Stephen (Acts vii. 1) says that the glorious God appeared to Abraham while he was still in Ur, before he went to live in Haran. If we reckon that the sojourning began (as Stephen implies) when Abraham left Ur, the five years are accounted for by the sojourn in Haran. Thus:--
> | | | | |
> |---|---|---|---|
> | Departure from Ur . . . | Abram | 70 | 0 |
> | Death of Terah and departure from Haran . . | Abram | 75 | 5 |
> | Birth of Isaac . . . | Abraham | 100 | 25 |
> | | | | ----- |
> | | | | 30 |
> | Sojourning of Seed . . . | | | 400 |
> | | | | ----- |
> | Total: Sojourning until Exodus . . . | | | 430" |

We are grateful for this explanation and commend it to our readers.

The Scripture tells us that at the end of the 430 years, even the selfsame day, the children of Israel went out of Egypt. Such is the way that God keeps His word, and carries out His purpose.

We believe it to be a fundamental of dispensational truth that prophecy shall be fulfilled literally. The prophetic statements of Scripture concerning the Messiah which have found their fulfillment in the Lord Jesus Christ at His first coming have been fulfilled literally. His place of birth, His manner of life, His ministry, His death, burial and resurrection, have all been literal fulfillments of prophecy. These Scriptures which concern Him that await their fulfillment at His second coming, these too, we most surely believe shall be likewise fulfilled to the very letter. How comforting it is to realize that "all are in the hand of God"! Habakkuk was assured that in spite of apparent delay:--

> "The vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry" (Hab. ii. 2).

Job seemed to perceive this grand fundamental, when he said:--

> "If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer Thee; Thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands" (Job xiv. 14, 15).

To the one who looks upon the Bible as a collection of "texts", this article may not mean much, but to everyone who has learned to look upon the Word as the unfolding of the purpose of the ages, every confirmation of the faithfulness of God in the fulfillment of His word is a source of joy and peace:--

> "Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read: no one of these shall fail, none shall want here mate" (Isa. xxxiv. 16).

#48. The Lord's Leading (Exod. xiii. 21, 22).
pp. 172 – 175

How many readers could say, without referring to the chapter, with what subject the book of Exodus closes? Some may say the tabernacle, and be partly right, but the actual closing reference is to the pillar of cloud and fire "throughout all their journeys".

In the book of the Psalms the exodus of Israel is several times epitomized, and among the features of that memorable time that are remembered is the fact that He who redeemed the people, led them out and on through sea and wilderness until they reached the land of promise. Notice the following:--

> "In the daytime also He led them with a cloud and all night with a light of fire" (Psa. lxxviii. 14), "And He led them on safety, so that they feared not; but the sea overwhelmed their enemies" (Psa. lxxviii. 53).

He "guided (same word as led) them by skillfulness of His hands" (Psa. lxxviii. 72). "He spread a cloud for a covering; and a fire to give light in the night" (Psa. cv. 39).

So in Exod. xiii. 21, 22 we read:--

> "And the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them in the way: and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light: to go by day and night: He took not away the pillar of the cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night from before the people."

Let us notice the following features:--

1. The leading was Personal.

"The Lord went before them." When Moses rehearsed, before his death, the ways of the Lord with Israel, speaking of His leading he said, "So the Lord alone did lead him" (Deut. xxxii. 12). It is the Lord's prerogative to lead His people, and the solemn statement of Moses here seems to suggest that all other "leading" is nothing less than idolatry. This should give pause to any who rather freely use the expression "I felt led". This personal Presence of the Lord was clearly realized by Moses as being essential to the accomplishment of the Lord's purpose:--

> "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest. And he said unto Him, If Thy presence go not with men, carry us not up hence" (Exod. xxxiii. 14, 15).

This presence of the Lord was manifested by an angel. "Behold Mine angel shall go before thee" (Exod. xxxii. 34). So in Exod. xiv. 19, 20 we find:--

> "The angel of God, which went before the camp of Israel, removed and went behind them; and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and stood behind them; and it came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Israel; and it was a cloud and darkness to them, but it gave light by night to these."

The presence of the Lord, the leading of the Lord, is a great dividing line between the saint and the world. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God" (Rom. viii. 14). The leading may be by lowlier means than that of an angel. Psa. lxxvii. 20 says, "Thou leddest Thy people like a flock by the hand of Moses and Aaron", yet though the means be more fallible, the Lord alone is the leader, whatever medium He may choose from time to time. The children of God to-day may not see visible signs of the Lord's presence, nevertheless the Lord still leads His people, and largely uses the inspired Word. "Send out Thy light and Thy truth, let them lead me" (Psa. xliii. 3). We may be more certain that we "feel led" when we are led by God's own Word.

2. The leading was adapted to the need.

By day a pillar of cloud, but this would not have been visible by night, and so the Lord manifested His presence at night by means of a pillar of fire. The experience of one time is not necessarily the experience of another. In the daytime and sunshine of life the Lord's presence will be manifest in one way. In the dark night of life's experiences His presence, just as real, will be manifest in another way. Whatever the mode of manifestation, the Lord's personal presence is the blessed fact.

3. Leading is a part of redemption.

> "HE TOOK NOT AWAY the pillar of cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night, from before the people" (Exod. xiii. 22).

Israel many, many times failed, so grievously indeed that many forfeited the land of promise and perished in the wilderness; nevertheless, the pillar of cloud went before them. This is the closing testimony of the book of Exodus. Coming where it does in the book (Exod. xl. 34-38) it reveals the reason why the presence of the Lord manifested in the pillar of cloud could remain. Exod. xl. speaks of the setting up of the tabernacle, and Lev. xvi. 2 says:--

> "I will appear (or, I am wont to appear) in the cloud upon the mercy seat."

Num. ix. 15-23 speaking of the same event says:--

> "And on the day that the tabernacle was reared up the cloud covered the tabernacle, namely, the tent of testimony; and at even there was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire until the morning, SO IT WAS ALWAYS."

Notice the way in whish this closing statement of Exodus is introduced:--

> "So Moses FINISHED the work. THEN a cloud covered the tent" (Exod. xl. 33, 34).

The Lord's leading is one of the results of the Lord's redemption, one of the fruits of a finished work. The Good Shepherd who gave His life for the sheep, as the risen One leads them in green pastures for His name's sake.

4. The pillar of cloud regulated all Israel's journeyings.

> "When the cloud was taken up from the tabernacle, THEN AFTER THAT the children of Israel journeyed: and IN THE PLACE where the cloud abode, THERE the children of Israel pitched their tents" (Numb. ix. 17).

The time when and the place where is decided alone by the Lord. Further, we read, "whether it was by day or by night that the cloud was taken up, they journeyed". The Lord's leading did not always conform to custom, nor to convenience, but day or night Israel had to be prepared to follow. "Or whether it were two days, or a month, or a year" that the cloud tarried, there in unquestioning obedience Israel had to remain (Num. ix. 15-23). What a blessed condition to be in, led by the Lord! By day or by night, to Elim with its palm trees and wells, or on into the desert, all is well if we are led by the Lord.

> "And thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart" (Deut. viii. 2).
> "Lead me in a plain path, because of mine enemies" (Psa. xxvii. 11).

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

#29. Melchisedec. The Priest of the Perfected (v.-viii.).
pp. 30 - 32

We have reached a passage in this epistle which is of great importance. It reveals the Lord Jesus Christ as a Priest after the order of Melchisedec. Before seeking the relation of this order of priesthood with the theme of the epistle we must be clear as to its place in the context, and therefore call the reader's attention to the structure of Heb. v., vi.:--

Hebrews v., vi.

A | v. 1-6. Melchisedec. Priest.
B | v. -6-10. The Priest perfected.
C | v. 11-vi. 1. The Slothful (dull) versus the Perfect.
B | vi. -1-10. The Saints. Let us go on unto perfection.
C | vi. 11-19. The Slothful versus the Overcomers.
A | vi. 20. Melchisedec. Priest.

It will be seen that the subject enclosed within these references to Melchisedec is that of the two classes under notice through this epistle, namely:

(1). Those who attain unto perfection.
(2). Those who fail of it—slothful.

There must be something peculiarly fitting therefore in this great title of Christ, and we propose to seek its meaning and connection.

The opening reference is in a sphere of suffering:--

> "Prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears . . . . . learned obedience by the things which He suffered, and being made perfect (by these sufferings, ii. 10) He became the author of a salvation which is age-lasting unto all them that obey Him, called of God an high priest after the order of Melchisedec" (v. 7-10).

The closing reference in this section gives to Christ the further title of "The Forerunner". The Greek word Prodromos does not occur elsewhere in the N.T., but in the LXX it occurs twice. In Isa. xxviii. 4 the Hebrew is unfortunately rendered "hasty fruit". The Hebrew equivalent bikkur is translated elsewhere by the word "Firstfruit" 14 times. Cognates are translated firstborn, firstling and birthright. This reflects upon the teaching of the Epistle to the Hebrews, for the saints who go on unto perfection are Firstfruits, and The Church of the Firstborn, who do not, like Esau, sell their birthright for a little ease in this life. The other occurrence of Prodromos is found in Num. xiii. 20 and is very similar; there the word is a translation of the Hebrew from which we have the English "First-ripe". It will be seen therefore that if we keep to Scriptural usage we shall not think of our Lord as having gone to heaven as a kind of Forerunner going on before us to clear the way, but as the first ripened fruit, a pledge to the Father of the harvest that was to follow, a harvest of the many sons that He was leading through suffering to glory. The passage in Heb. xii. 1-3 which speaks of Christ as the Captain and Perfecter of faith, the race to be run, the endurance ending in exaltation and glory, will come before the mind as we think of Christ as the Forerunner, and the Apostle uses the word Dromos in the parallel passage of II Tim. iv. 7.

In Heb. vii. we find a further explanation given of the Melchisedec priesthood. We are taken back to Gen. xiv. where Abraham is met by the Priest after his victory over the armies of the Kings. It was here that Abraham renounced all rights and dues as a result of his triumph, taking not a thread nor shoelatchet, lest the King of Sodom should say "I have made Abraham rich". There he also learned something more of the all-sufficiency of the Most High God, the possessor of heaven and earth. The Melchisedec Priesthood blesses the overcomer. That is an important truth to be remembered here.

The greatness of this priesthood is further emphasized by an elaboration of a number of details that occur in the passage in Genesis. The name has a meaning. Melchisedec means King of Righteousness, and King of Salem means King of Peace. The fact that no genealogy is given in Scripture is taken to typify the risen and unending priesthood of the Son of God. The greatness of this priesthood is still further shewn by the fact that even Abraham the Patriarch gave a tenth of the spoil to Melchisedec, and the blessing of Abraham by Melchisedec shewed that "without contradiction the less is blessed of the greater". The perfection of which the epistle speaks is not connected with the Levitical priesthood (vii. 11), and the essential difference between the Aaronic order and that of Melchisedec is found in the fact that this priesthood is not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life (vii. 16). The introduction of the Levitical order of priesthood moreover was not accompanied by an oath, but in the case of Christ:--

> "The Lord SWARE and will not repent . . . . . by so much was Jesus made a surety of a better covenant" (vii. 21, 22).

The subject is summed up in viii. 1, 2 in these words:--

> "Now of the things of which we have spoken, this is the sum: We have such an high priest, Who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man."

The verse, so often repeated in this section, "Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec", is taken from Psa. cx., which speaks of Christ sitting at the right hand of the Lord until His foes be made a footstool, and which speaks of His people presenting themselves as free-will offerings in the day of His power, which day seems closely linked with the day of His wrath (5) when He shall strike through Kings. The first mention of Melchisedec is connected with the slaughter of the Kings near Sodom, the last (in the O.T.) speaks prophetically of "striking through Kings in the day of His wrath". In the book of the Revelation we have Christ presented to us as both Priest and King. Hebrews dwells mainly on the priestly side, Revelation unites the two offices and shews how this royal priesthood of Christ in the heavens, and fashioning of that royal priesthood on earth ("kings and priests unto God", Rev. i. 6) is the goal of the "perfecting" of Hebrews and the "overcoming" of the Apocalypse.

We have much more to learn concerning this wonderful King-Priest, but the main associations which we find in Scripture have now been indicated. We will return to chapter v. in order to gather up some further instruction, and this we must do in our next article.

#30. Dull of Hearing (v. 7-11).
pp. 61 - 63

At the close of chapter iv. we have brought before us the (1) Greatness, and (2) Sympathy, of Christ, the High Priest. This is expanded in chapters v.-viii. First the greatness is touched upon in v. 4-6, and then His sympathy. We are taken both to Gethsemane and to Calvary to witness the strong crying and the tears. He was saved out of death (ek) by resurrection.

The parallel is enforced in Heb. xii, where it is said that for the joy set before Him the Lord:--

> "Endured the cross, despising the shame and has sat down at the right hand of the throne of God . . . . . Ye have not yet resisted unto blood."

Suffering before glory, cross before crown, is the testimony of these passages.

Of Christ it is written, "He was heard in that He feared".

The Greek word eulabeia does not occur anywhere else except Heb. xii. 28:--

> "Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear."

Here the word is used of those who seek perfection and are thus "all of one" with Him Who sanctifies them (see chapter ii.). The R.V. renders v. 8 "Though He was a Son", which is better than the A.V. "Though He were a Son", for the use of "were" indicates an hypothetical case, whereas Christ WAS a Son and YET went through all the suffering of Gethsemane and Calvary. "Though He was a Son yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered". Turning yet again to chapter xii., we find that Sonship includes the thought of chastening, and that with the object that we might be partakers of His holiness. He scourgeth every son whom He receiveth.

There is a paranomasia in Heb. v. 8, which seems intentional, emathen and epathe, "learned" and "suffered", as though by the very similarity of sound their intimacy should be established. This is no book learning, not the secondhand knowledge of other people's history, it is personal. In that closely parallel epistle, Philippians, the Apostle shews that he too had passed along this pathway as he sought perfection (iii. 12-15) saying:--

> "I have learned, in whatsoever state I am to be content. I know both what it is to be brought low, and I know what it is to abound; in every place and in all things I have been initiated both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to be destitute" (iv. 11, 12).

This is the only pathway to scriptural perfecting. The Sermon on the Mount teaches it, Philippians teaches it, Hebrews teaches it:--

> "And having been perfected, He became to those obeying Him a cause of aionian salvation, having been declared by God a High Priest according to the order of Melchisedec" (v. 9, 10). [It must be observed that "obedience" is the word that is carried over. "He learned obedience . . . . . those obeying Him."]

By reading Heb. ii. 10 with v. 8 we understand that to be perfected through suffering and to learn obedience through suffering are allied, and further, that He Who became the Cause of aionian salvation to those obeying Him must be considered together with Him Who became the Captain of salvation leading many sons to glory (ii. 10) and the Captain and Perfecter of faith who has endured and overcome before us (xii. 1-3). Concerning this High Priest with His suffering and glory, His perfecting and His reward, the Apostle said he had "much to say, and of difficult interpretation", not because he himself did not know, but because his hearers had become "dull of hearing". We drew attention in the structure to the fact that the word here translated "dull" and the word in chapter vi. "slothful" are the same, and as these are the only occurrences of the word in the N.T. the parallel is evidently intentional.

The LXX uses the word in Prov. xxii. 29 to translate "mean" in the expression "mean men", and the verse speaks of one diligent in his business. In Prov. xii. 8 it is used for "perverse". It would appear from the usage of the word that the A.V. "dull" is hardly strong enough. The Hebrew word in Prov. xxii. 29 is chashok = "obscure", or "darkened", and the cognate choshek is translated scores of times "darkness".

The spiritual ear and eye are of the first importance. Peter in his second epistle uses the word myopia ("cannot see afar off") of those who had become forgetful of the purification of old sins. We trust our readers will immediately remember the strong emphasis upon "purification for sins" found in Hebrews, especially the fact that in the opening summary this alone is written of the Lord's work on earth. "When He had made purification for sins" (Heb. i. 3) (see also Volume IX, page 150). II Pet. i. speaks of "adding to their faith", a parallel expression to the words of Heb. vi., "things that accompany salvation". These added things have in view the rich furnishing of the entry into the aionian kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ (II Pet. i. 11). So in Hebrews the perfecting is connected with the aionian salvation.

This reference to the dullness of hearing is further a gathering up of the words of the great historic type of chapters iii. and iv. "To-day if ye will HEAR His voice." "Some when they had HEARD, did provoke." "The word preached did not profit them, because they were not united by faith with them that HEARD." Dullness of hearing, moreover, is another mode of expressing the truth of chapter ii. 1:--

> "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we drift away."

"Hearing" together with "seeing" may be reckoned as the chiefest of the senses. How sad to allow any precious sense, even in the physical realm, to be atrophied through lack of use. How doubly sad to have the precious gift of hearing spiritually, and then through not having "the senses EXERCISED" (Heb. v. 14) to fail, to come short, to drift. Over against this drifting and dullness the apostle places endurance, obedience, suffering, steadfastness unto the end. Surely we, too, need the exhortation of the Lord, "Take heed how you hear".

#31. Babes v. Perfect (v. 12-14).

pp. 104 - 107

The apostle in verse 12 proceeds to expand what lies in the expression "dull of hearing".

(1). It indicates lack of progress.

> "For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you."

(2). It indicates spiritual infancy.

> "Ye have need of milk and not of solid food."

(3). It indicates lack of experience.

> "For every one that partaketh of milk is without experience of the word of righteousness."

(4). It indicates the opposite of being "perfect".

> "But solid food belongeth to them that are perfect."

(5). It indicates a culpable neglect.

> "Perfect, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised."

(6). It indicates lack of discernment.

> "Senses exercised to discern both good and evil."

Let us take these six points and gather their lessons.

1. Teachers are placed together with those who can take solid food, have senses exercised and are perfect. No articles could be written for this or any magazine did we understand the word "perfect" in its ultimate sense. The passage does come to us very solemnly however and says that the qualification for teaching is something more than head knowledge and ready speech. In the Sermon on the Mount breaking the commandments and doing them are associated with teaching men so, and also with losing or gaining a position in the kingdom of heaven. James utters the warning, "My brethren, be not many teachers, knowing that we shall receive a greater judgment" (iii. 1). Instead of progress there was retrogression.

> "For even when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again certain rudiments of the beginning of the oracles of God."

Ta stoicheia tes arches, "The rudiments of the beginning". Stoicheia are the initial steps in knowledge, and also the "elements" of the natural world. See Gal. iv. 3, 9; Col. ii. 8, 20; II Pet. iii. 10, 12. The verb stoicheo comes in Acts xxi. 24, "Walkest orderly"; Rom. iv. 12, "Walk in the steps of the faith"; Gal. v. 25, "Walk by the Spirit"; Gal. vi. 16, Phil. iii. 16, "Walk by rule".

These Hebrew believers had progressed no further than the initial steps of the faith, and indeed needed teaching in these things all over again. An intellectual grasp of the teaching of men on any subject may be sufficient. The doctrine and faith of the early church was rightly called "The Way", for it was walk as well as word, life as well as lip.

> "Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord" (Hos. vi. 3).

What these "first principles" were that they needed to be re-taught we shall see better when we come to Heb. vi.

2. The spiritual infancy of these saints is indicated by the figurative use of foods for doctrine. "Ye have need of milk and not of solid food".

The apostle had occasion to use this same figure when writing to the Corinthian Church, and for similar reasons:--

> "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you AS unto spiritual, but AS unto carnal, even AS unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able" (I Cor. iii. 1, 2).

The milk, the rudiments of the beginning of the oracles of God, to them had been "Jesus Christ and Him crucified" (ii. 2). "Howbeit", said the apostle, "we speak wisdom among them that are PERFECT" (ii. 6). The thought is resumed and developed in chapter xiii. 8-13.

Milk diet is natural and right for infants, but it has a purpose and a limit. "As new-born babes desire the sincere milk of the word that ye may GROW thereby." The apostle Peter adds a word to this that links it with Heb. vi. "If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious" (I Pet. ii. 2, 3). Some believe that there is a definite reference to the epistle to the Hebrews in II Pet. iii. 15, 16, where Peter speaks of "our beloved brother Paul" who had written unto the readers of I & II Peter. In verse 16 there is a word very like the word "difficult to interpret", dusermeneutos, of Heb. v. 11, where "some things hard to be understood", dusnoetos, which those that are unlearned and unstable wrest to their own destruction, are spoken of. In contrast Peter urges them to "Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (II Pet. iii. 18).

There is much in Peter's two epistles that bears upon the teaching of the epistle to the Hebrews. Such subjects as the saving of the "soul", the "fiery trial", "suffering and glory", come to mind at once as obvious parallels.

3. The outstanding feature of the babe that the apostle mentions in Heb. v. is that such is "without experience". We have drawn attention in previous articles to the place that "temptation" occupies in the epistles of the race and the crown, see Heb. ii. 18; xi. 17, 37; James i. 2, 12; I Pet. i. 6; Rev. iii. 10, etc. The Greek word for "tempt" is peirazo. The Greek word for unskillful is apeiros, and carries with it the thought "untested". Solid food belongs to the perfect. The perfect are placed in opposition to the untested. It is one of the marks of those pressing on to perfection that they endure "temptation". The wilderness journey, we have seen, is the great historical type of the early part of Hebrews, and that wilderness journey was a "day of temptation" in more than one sense.

An important note is struck in the expression "senses exercised". In Phil. i. 9, where the apostle prays for the saints who, like the Hebrews, were reaching forward unto perfection (see chapter iii.) he writes:--

> "And this I pray, that your love may yet abound more and more in knowledge and in all discernment, or perception."

The word is aesthesis. Luke ix. 45 uses the verb aisthanomai, "to perceive". The word "senses" in Heb. v. is aistheterion. It will be seen that the senses in their capacity of discernment, of discrimination, of right division, of trying the things that differ, are intended. These senses are "exercised" in the perfect. The word "exercise" comes from gumnazo, which gives us our word gymnasium, etc. In Heb. xii. 11, where the discipline and correction of the son by the father is the subject, the word occurs again:--

> "But all discipline, indeed as to the time being, does not seem to be joyous, but grievous, nevertheless afterward it gives back the peaceable fruit of righteousness to those who have been EXERCISED thereby."

This exercise of the perceptions enables the perfect to discriminate between good and evil. It does not necessarily mean moral good and moral evil. Agathos is the usual word for "good", here it is kalos. Those concerning whom the apostle entertained doubts had "tasted the good (kalos) word of God", but had failed to realize the difference between that which belonged to perfection and that which was "the word of the beginning". The two words kalos and kakos differ only in one letter. The doctrines for which they stand are often confused and said to be "all one and the same". We need "senses exercised" if we are to discriminate, and "go on unto perfection".

#32. "The Word of the Beginning" (vi. 1, 2).
pp. 124 - 128

Whatever view we may entertain as to what constitutes "the principles of the doctrine of Christ", one thing is certain and beyond controversy—that Heb. vi. 1 bids us LEAVE THEM:--

> "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection" (Heb. vi. 1).

Whatever view we may entertain as to these "principles", this verse not only says "leave them", but sets over against them "perfection".

"Therefore LEAVING . . . . . let us GO ON."

Yet again, whatever place in the doctrine of Christ we may give the same verse says "not laying again the foundation". Leaving for the moment the question of the exactness of this translation, we feel that no system of sound exegesis can ignore the obvious relation established in this verse between the commands "Leave . . . . . go on . . . . . not lay again". "Leave" is echoed by "not lay again", and by parity of reasoning and structural correspondence "the principles of the doctrine of Christ" are echoed by the six items of doctrine mentioned in verses 1 and 2. It must strike the ordinary reader as somewhat strange to be urged by Scripture itself to leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ, and therefore it becomes us patiently to search the Scriptures to find the mind of God on the subject.

> "Repentance from dead works, faith toward God, the doctrine of baptisms, the laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and aionian judgment."

Casting our eye back to chapter v. we find that these Hebrews who for the time ought to have been teachers were so dull of hearing that they needed to be taught again certain rudiments of the beginning of the oracles of God. The word "principles" in Heb. vi. 1 is the same word "beginning". The word, "doctrine" is the ordinary logos, very like logion ("oracles") in v. 12. So that the theme of Heb. v. 12 is resumed in vi. 1: "Therefore leaving the word of the beginning of the Christ, let us go on unto perfection." Let us return to Heb. v. These believers who needed re-instruction in the rudiments were "babes", who are set in direct contrast with "full-grown" or "perfect" (teleios); this is parallel with the thought of Heb. vi. 1, which says, "let us go on unto teliotes". We are not told to forsake PRINCIPLES, but leave rudiments, babyhood, beginnings.

"NOT LAYING AGAIN A FOUNDATION."—Most readers of The Berean Expositor know that we translate the words "Before the foundation of the world" by "Before the overthrow of the world". In an earlier Volume evidence is given of the usage of kataballo and katabole in the LXX and the N.T. and the new rendering appears abundantly justified. The word "laying" in Heb. vi. 1 is kataballesthai, and has been translated by Erhard, among others, "not demolishing". Bloomfield's note is:--

> " 'Not demolishing' is forbidden by the usus loquendi , for I cannot find a single example of the Middle form in the sense 'to demolish', but only in the sense of jacere 'to lay down', whether in a literal or figurative sense."

While therefore leaving the new translation of Eph. i. 4 unimpaired we allow this Middle form of the verb its meaning as in the A.V. "not laying again". Following the word "baptisms" in verse 2 is the word "of instruction" which is somewhat peculiar. We might have felt that didache could as well prefixed to repentance or faith. There must therefore be some reason not quite visible on the surface, and it appears to be this. Before a believer could be accepted for baptism and the laying on of hands, he must have already accepted these four words of the beginning of Christ:--

1. Repentance from dead works.
2. Faith toward God.
3. Resurrection of the dead.
4. Aionian judgment.

Although this explanation is not devoid of difficulties no explanation offered is entirely free from them, and an open mind is necessary so that we may be ready to follow the light as the Lord shall give it.

REPENTANCE FROM DEAD WORKS.—Repentance is a foundation truth. In I Thess. i. 9 it is suggested in the words, "how ye turned to God from idols". It is manifest that it is not to be contemplated that this act of turning or repentance was to be repeated. Turning from idols and repentance from dead works, alike were marks of a great and vital change. To need a repetition would indicate a most serious lapse. Similarly with the balancing doctrine of—

FAITH TOWARD GOD.—In Acts xx. 21 the apostle sums up his testimony in the words:--

> "Testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ."

Repentance from, and faith toward, are two views of one movement, much in the same way as "turned to God from idols" contains the negative and positive aspects of the same action.

"THE DOCTRINE OF BAPTISMS AND OF LAYING ON OF HANDS."—This pair has reference to ordinances and recognition in the church. It will be observed that the word is "baptisms", not "baptism". Reference is made again to these "baptisms" in Heb. ix. The context of the occurrence is a valuable commentary upon Heb. vi. 2 and we must therefore give it. The chapter opens with a description of the tabernacle and its furniture, going on to distinguish between the daily service of the priests and the annual ministry of the High Priest alone:--

> "The Holy Spirit shewing this, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was standing (which was a figurative representation for that season which was present) according to which both gifts and sacrifices were offered that could not make him that did the service PERFECT, as pertaining to the conscience, being imposed (as to meats and drinks and divers BAPTISMS, fleshly ordinances) until the time of reformation. But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more PERFECT tabernacle . . . . ." (Heb. ix. 1-11).

Here we se the place of these "baptisms"; they were fleshly or typical ordinances, and while they may have some place in the education of babes, and had a place in the church of the Acts period, they had no place with those who sought to go on unto perfection.

THE LAYING ON OF HANDS was the means used to bestow spiritual gifts. One has only to be familiar with the teaching of I Corinthians to understand that the possession of these miraculous gifts was not one of the marks of the "perfect" (see I Cor. xii., xiii., xiv.). To rest in them would be to fail. The third pair is eschatological.

THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD.—Some think like "baptisms" have to be left behind in the sense of being undispensational, others like repentance and faith because they are elemental and do not bear the idea of continual repetition. Others, like resurrection, are fundamental, and to be under the necessity for continual proof and instruction on such a point argued no good for the doubter. The further teaching of Heb. xi. 35 and 40 where a "BETTER resurrection" is linked with being "made PERFECT" naturally assumes as fundamental the resurrection of the dead.

AIONIAN JUDGMENT (Din Olamim) is the eleventh fundamental of the Jewish creed. The student of Ecclesiastes will the more clearly see the fundamental nature of this truth. It involves both reward and punishment. It is the basis upon which alone the apostle could urge believers to take joyfully the spoiling of their goods, and to follow in the steps of those who obtained a good report, who in this life were losers, but who believed unto the "GAINING OF THE SOUL" (x. 39).

Such is the foundation. There was something more needed for the "perfect" however than a bare foundation. I Cor. iii. is a commentary upon that fact. To have the foundation beneath one's feet means salvation, but to have nothing more means salvation "so as by fire". The reader has only to glance along to Heb. vi. 8 to see the parallel. None such have gone on unto perfection. This is the goal of the epistle and every item introduced is a factor in the process. It will be easier when we have gone over them all to bring them together and observe their inter-relation than it would be now at the beginning of our enquiry. The word of the beginning of Christ and of the oracles of God is milk for babes. The perfect must have solid food. "Therefore", says the apostle:--

> "Leaving . . . . . let us go on . . . . . not laying again . . . . . and this we will do if God permit" (Heb. vi. 1-3).

#33. If God Permit (vi. 3).
pp. 142 – 144

"If God permit."—It is most essential that every believer who contemplates running the race, pressing for the prize, gaining the crown, and being numbered among those who are called "the Perfect", should realize the meaning hidden behind the apostle's words, "If God permit". The verses that follow are an explanation, speaking as they do of the impossibility of renewing again unto repentance those who, having tasted the heavenly gift, fall away. The type given later, of Esau, is very explicit.

> "Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright. For ye know how that afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected, for he found no place of REPENTANCE, though he sought it carefully with tears" (xii. 16, 17).

The only occurrences of the word "repentance" in Hebrews are in vi. 1, 6 and xii. 17. It is evident that the case of Esau is an amplification or an illustration of the case of those spoken of in Heb. vi.

The words "If God permit" glance back to that period of Israel's history that has already provided the great basis of exhortation in chapters iii. and iv.—"the day of temptation in the wilderness". It will be remembered that upon hearing the evil report of the ten spies Israel murmured, and said, "Let us make a captain, and let us return to Egypt". The Lord then bade Moses say:--

> "As truly as I live, ... your carcases shall fall in this wilderness . . . . . and the people mourned greatly." It would appear also that their mourning was in some measure a repentance, for "they rose up early in the mourning and gat them up into the top of the mountain, saying, Lo, we be here, and will go up into the place which the Lord hath promised: for we have sinned. And Moses said, Wherefore now do ye transgress the commandment of the Lord? but it shall not prosper. Go not up, for the Lord is not among you: that ye be not smitten before your enemies . . . . . But they presumed to go up into the hill top: . . . . . then the . . . . . Canaanites . . . . . smote them . . . . ." (Num. xiv.).

In the words "but they presumed", we have a parallel with the expression in Heb. xi. 29, "the Egyptians assaying to do".

This passage together with those of Heb. vi. and xii. cause one to pause and think of the seriousness of the lesson here being taught. Of a similar import is the saying of the Lord:--

> "No one, having put his hand to the plough, and looking unto the things that are behind, is well placed with a view to the kingdom of God" (Luke ix. 62).

The exact repetition of the words "The things that are behind" in Phil. iii. 13 is too pointed to be a coincidence, the context being so closely connected with those we have been considering. Having turned to Phil. iii. it may be as well to observe another parallel before proceeding. In Heb. vi. 6 there occurs that strong expression, "having crucified again the Son of God, and are exposing Him to shame", and again in x. 29, "having trampled on the Son of God, and having esteemed the blood of the covenant a common thing". So in Phil. iii. we have "Many walk as the enemies of the cross of Christ".

Returning for a moment to Num. xiv., we must remember that although that great multitude perished in the wilderness, they were a pardoned people. Moses had prayed:

> "Pardon, I beseech Thee, the iniquity of this people, ... and the Lord said, I have pardoned" (verses 19, 20).

Yet it was not possible to renew again unto repentance that people, pardoned though they were. If this had been remembered when dealing with Heb. vi. many would have been spared the awful error that some have taught from this chapter, namely, the possibility of a child of God losing his salvation. This epistle, as we have said again and again, and this chapter particularly, deals with things that accompany salvation, things that belong to the perfect and the overcomer. These things may be lost or forfeited, but salvation is by grace, and works or reward have no place in it.

"If God permit" therefore reveals that sometimes God may not permit. To attempt to ascend the mountain and enter the land of Canaan without the assurance of His presence was madness and destined to fail. Our first and greatest concern must be to walk with Him. If for any failure on our part the permission to go on unto perfection should be withdrawn, let us humbly bow to the will of God, and in lowliness of mind seek the presence of the Lord. While we feel the crown and the prize will but add to His glory, and therefore we should run with patience the race set before us, the prize is valueless, the crown a bauble if it does not glorify Him.

pp. 152 - 155

It is impossible to be too keenly sensitive to the serious nature of the failure dealt with in this chapter. To be "dull of hearing", to remain "a babe", to be satisfied with the "milk" of the word, and to make no advance may seem bad but not serious. The inspired apostle takes another view. To remain a babe is really to go back, and this may be the beginning of apostacy. Let us see how the Scriptures speak of those who failed to go on unto perfection.

> "It is impossible to renew them again unto repentance if they should fall away, having crucified again to themselves the Son of God, and put Him to an open shame" (Heb. vi. 6).
> "If we should voluntarily sin after having received the full knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more a sacrifice for sins . . . . . having trampled under foot the Son of God" (Heb. x. 26-29).

We must distinguish between the fact that many, if not all, saints after conversion lapse into sin of one sort or another, and the falling away intended here. It is the teaching of the Scriptures that if a man be overtaken in a fault, the spiritual ones of the church must restore him in a spirit of meekness, considering themselves lest they also should be tempted (Gal. vi. 1). The exhortations to the seven churches of Rev. ii., iii. are further illustrations of the same truth. It is evident that here in the epistle to the Hebrews something more serious is involved.

> "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the holy spirit, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the coming age, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance, seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put Him to an open shame" (Heb. vi. 4-6).

We must first of all seek to understand the nature of these blessings so that we may the better understand the nature of the falling away from them.

1. They were once enlightened (photizo).—In chapter x. this word occurs again, and the context is so helpful that we must draw attention to it. To save space we will not quote fully:--

> "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together . . . . . for if we sin willfully after receiving the full knowledge of the truth . . . . . no more sacrifice . . . . . fearful expectation of judgment . . . . . consume the adversaries . . . . . trampled on the Son of God . . . . . but remember the former days in which having been enlightened ye endured a great contest of sufferings . . . . . cast not away your confidence, which has great recompense of reward . . . . . if any man draw back . . . . . we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them who believe unto the acquiring of the soul" (Heb. v. 26-29).

This is a valuable commentary, setting Heb. vi. in its true light and preventing us from making erroneous applications of its solemn teaching. Some who do not realize the setting of Heb. vi. have sought to minimize the force of the word "enlighten", so that it only means an external, but not a real and inward illumination. If this be proved, then of course we are dealing merely with professors and the problem is ended. But Heb. x. 32, wherein is the only other occurrence of the word photizo in Hebrews, does not allow of such an interpretation. These enlightened ones were believers, not empty professors.

2. They had tasted of the heavenly gift: They were made partakers of the holy spirit.—These two statements explain one another. They moreover look back to the laying on of hands which usually was instrumental in the bestowal of this gift. It will be remembered that when "Simon saw that through the laying on of the apostle's hands the holy spirit was given, he offered them money", and that Peter said, "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that THE GIFT OF GOD may be purchased with money."

3. They had tasted the good Word of God, and the powers of the coming age.—The promise of restoration from Babylon is thus called in Jer. xxix. 10:--

> "After seventy years be accomplished at Babylon I will visit you and perform My good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place."

The miraculous gifts of the "Acts" were foretastes of the age to come. It will be seen that a great place is occupied in this list by the Holy Spirit and His gifts. This we find is likewise true of Hebrews. There, as we find in Heb. x., the punishment that followed the violation of the law of Moses is small when compared with that which shall follow the despising of the Holy Spirit's witness of Christ:--

> "How shall we escape if we neglect . . . . . which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard Him, God also bearing them witness both with signs and wonders and with divers miracles and distributions of holy spirit according to His own will? For unto the angels hath He not subjected the world to come whereof we speak" (Heb. ii. 3-5).

One quotation from Heb. x. we now include, as bearing out the strong emphasis placed upon the Holy Spirit here—"and done despite unto the Spirit of grace" (Heb. x. 29).

This falling away which occupies so large a place in Hebrews is variously referred to as "letting slip", "neglecting", "hardening hearts as in the provocation", "lest any fall after the same example of unbelief", "forsaking the assembling of selves together", "sinning willfully after full knowledge", "drawing back unto perdition". The falling away was after enlightenment and partaking of holy spirit, and herein lies the extreme danger. This aspect of teaching in Hebrews is but the application to the Hebrews of the teaching of the Lord given in Matt. xii. 31, 32:--

> "All sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven to men, but blasphemy of the Spirit shall NOT BE FORGIVEN. And whoever may speak a word against the Son of man it shall be forgiven him: but whoever may speak against the Holy Spirit, it will in no wise be forgiven him, neither in this age, nor in the coming one."

Here is the sore punishment awaiting those who after having all the confirmation of the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven, and after having embraced the witness and having become partakers of the Spirit's gifts, fall away. They echo the fatal words of Num. xiv., appointing themselves a Captain to return to Egypt. The more one penetrates into the structure and atmosphere of Hebrews, the more marked the gracious distinctions of the dispensation of the mystery become. Let us try the things that differ and approve those things that are more excellent, at the same time learning from these other records the essential need for growth in grace.

#35. "Things That Follow Salvation" (vi. 7-9).
pp. 170 - 172

The character of the falling away of Heb. vi. 4-6 may be understood by a consideration of the illustration which immediately follows in verses 7 and 8. The figure is that of a field. The Greek word translated "earth", ge, stands for "land, as distinct from water; or earth as distinct from heaven; or region or territory, used of one special land or country, as distinct from other countries, in which peoples dwell, each on its own soil" (The Companion Bible, Appendix 129/4).

> "For land which hath drunk in the rain which often comes upon it, and which bringeth forth vegetation useful to those for whom also it is cultivated, receives blessing from God; but that yielding thorns and thistles is disapproved and near to a curse; the end of which is for burning" (Heb. vi. 7, 8).

Two words are of special importance as indicating the line of teaching that we are to observe here, the word "disapproved", which in the A.V. is rendered "rejected", and the word "near" or "nigh" unto cursing. Adokimos = "disapproved" is best understood by observing the context of the word in I Cor. ix. 27. The scene is the Corinthian racecourse.

> "Know ye not that they which run in a race course run all, but one receives the prize? So run that ye may obtain. But every one that striveth in the games, in all things useth self-control; they indeed then that a corruptible crown they may receive; but we an incorruptible. I therefore so run, as not uncertainly. I am boxing, as not beating air, but I am beating my body under, and leading it captive, lest by any means having proclaimed the contest to others, I myself become disapproved" (I Cor. ix. 24-27).

The verses that follow, viz., I Cor. x., are very strongly reminiscent of Heb. iii. & iv. The argument hinges upon the "all" and the "many". All may have passed out from Egypt as the redeemed of the Lord, but all did not enter the promised land. We now see that the whole of Heb. vi. is dealing with the question of "going on unto perfection", or of being disqualified or disapproved in the race. The entry into the land of promise is placed in the same place as the crown at the end of the race. The showers of God's love and grace had fallen for many years upon Israel, but comparatively few brought forth fruit.

We must observe that it does not say that the alternatives are blessing or cursing, but blessing or disapproval, which places such nigh unto a curse. Take for example the two servants of Matt. xxiv. 44-51. The one is rewarded by being made ruler over all his Lord's goods, the other servant is cut asunder, and finds his position with the hypocrites, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. The same fate awaits the unprofitable servant of Matt. xxv. who hid his talent in the earth. Both suffer loss and are certainly perilously "near unto a curse". In neither case is salvation in view, but service. "The end of which is for burning." When a field produces thorns and thistles "the end" is burning. The field itself is not destroyed, but that which it has produced. This is quite in harmony with I Cor. iii. The foundation remains unchanged whether the building be destroyed by fire or whether it stands the test:--

"He shall suffer loss, but he himself shall be saved, YET SO AS BY FIRE" (I Cor iii. 15).

In Heb. xii. 16, 17, Esau is brought before us as one who forfeited his birthright. There is an evident parallel with Heb. vi., the words "he found no place of repentance" echoing "it is impossible to renew unto repentance". So also the word adokimos (disapproved or rejected) is echoed by Heb. xii. 17, apodokimazo ("rejected"). The "blessing" also is one received by "inheritance". The chapter ends with the words "For our God is a consuming fire" which are parallel with the words "whose end is burning". The whole situation is summed up in Heb. vi. 9 where the apostle says:--

"But beloved, we are persuaded THE BETTER things."

Readers will remember that the word "better" is a key word of Hebrews, closely associated with "perfect" throughout the epistle. "The better resurrection" is expressed by the words, "The spirits of perfect righteous ones". Here in chapter vi. those who go on unto perfection produce the better things, "even those things which accompany salvation although we thus speak" (verse 9). The word "accompany" is a rendering of the middle voice of echo, "to have, to hold". So in Mark i. 38, "next towns", and Luke xiii. 33, "the day following". The epistle to the Hebrews does not deal with salvation, but the things that accompany it. Not the "resurrection of the dead" (vi. 2), but the "better resurrection", not the exodus from Egypt, but the entrance of the land of promise. Not justification by faith, but the emphasis upon the fact that the just shall live by faith. We find the distinction observed in vi. 10 and throughout the chapter. May we, called though we be with a different calling, produce the better things, even those things that "follow salvation".

#36. The work that perfects faith (vi. 10).
pp. 177 - 181

The apostle, though uttering the terrible warnings against apostacy, hastens to tell his readers that though he thus speaks he is persuaded that they possess those things that accompany salvation. He now proceeds to unfold these "better things that accompany salvation" and to consider them from various points of view. It is evident from the very next verse (10) what these "better things" include.

"For God is not unrighteous to forget your work, and the love which ye have shown unto His name, in that ye ministered unto the saints, and are ministering" (Heb. vi. 10).

The word translated labour is not found in the best texts. In x. 22-24 we have a somewhat similar passage. There we have "full assurance of faith"; in v. 9-11 we have "full assurance of hope". In the former the exhortation is based upon the fact that "He is faithful that promised", whilst in the latter we are told that "God is not unrighteous to forget your work, etc." and moreover that "He swear by himself" (verse 13) to make the assurance of hope doubly sure. In the former the believers are exhorted to "provoke unto love and good works", whilst in the latter "your work and love unto His name" is remembered. The things accompany salvation are those things that indicate the perfecting of faith. We have only to remember James ii. 11 where we learn that "faith if it hath not works is dead, being alone". The great illustration of James ii. is the faith of Abraham, but not the faith of Gen. xv. when Abraham believed God and it was reckoned unto him for righteousness, but the faith of Gen. xxii. when Abraham was willing to offer up his beloved son. Of this James says:--

> "Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made PERFECT? and the Scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God and it was imputed unto him for righteousness" (James ii. 22, 23).

We are upon exactly the same ground as in Heb. vi. The things that accompany salvation are those things that "perfect faith". The perfected faith "fulfilled" the promise of its inception. Gen. xv. 6 was filled out when Abraham's faith manifested itself in acceptable works. If we glance down Heb. vi. we shall find that the same illustration is used by Paul. There once again Abraham's faith as manifested in Gen. xxii. is brought forward. It is therefore important to remember that a man is justified without works, but is perfected by works (Rom. v.; James ii.). A man is saved by faith "not of works", but he has been saved to walk in "good works" (Eph. ii.). While Titus iii. declares that we were saved by faith and "not by works of righteousness which we have done", Titus ii. reveals that we were redeemed in order that we might be a peculiar people "zealous of good works".

It is surprising the antipathy that some of God's children show to any mention of works. We yield to none, we trust, in a steadfast belief that grace and works, so far as salvation is concerned, cannot blend. If we are saved by grace, then that initial salvation cannot be "of works" for grace excludes works as works exclude grace (Rom. xi. 6). We do however feel that much vital truth is dimmed to the eyes of many by carrying their opposition to works beyond the limits of truth. It is a case of failure rightly to divide the Word of truth. What is true in the case of the origin of salvation may not necessarily be true in the case of the fruits of that same salvation. The law is excluded as a factor in justification, but the law is nevertheless holy, just, good and spiritual, and it is the will of God that it shall operate in the kingdom yet to come.

> "But the God of peace . . . . . adjust you by every good work unto the doing of His will, doing in you that which is well pleasing in His presence, through Jesus Christ" (Heb. xiii. 20, 21).

We cannot "do His will" without at the same time "doing good works", but these good works will not take their rise from the flesh, but will be the Lord's own "doing" within us, through Jesus Christ. Heb. x. 24 says, "provoke unto love and good works"; Heb. vi. 10 links work and love together. This reveals the essential character of the good works that are well pleasing to God. It is a good work to bestow all one's goods to feed the poor; it is a good work to suffer one's body to be burned rather than give up the faith, but only so if love is the spring of such actions; if love be absent "it profiteth me nothing".

> "For in Christ, neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but faith through love inworking . . . . . for all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (Gal. v. 6, 14).

The same emphasis upon "serving one another" is found in Rom. xiii. 8:--

> "Owe no man anything, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law."

Then the commandments that relate to man's relations with man. Adultery, murder, stealing, false witness, coveting. It is surprising to note that both in Gal. v. and Rom. xiii. that love which fulfils the law is manifested not to God but to man.

> "And if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (Rom. xiii. 9).

Are we to understand then that mere philanthropy satisfies the requirements of the case? Not at all. The strong emphasis upon the manward side is because of a weakness in human nature. It does not say in I John ii. 9, 10 that he that loveth God is in the light, but:--

> "He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light."

Again, I John iii. 14 does not say that the possession of new life is manifested by our love to God, but:--

> "We know that we have passed from death into life, because we love the brethren."

The same test is applied to the profession of the love of God in verse 17:--

> "Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, HOW DWELLETH THE LOVE OF GOD IN HIM?"

The same apostle brings the argument to a climax in iv. 20, 21, when he says:--

> "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God Whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from Him. That he who loveth God loveth his brother also."

There is no thought in any of these passages of teaching that the love to our neighbour or brother comes before love to God. This is made clear in I John v. 2:--

> "By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God and keep his commandments."

We may trace the same spirit in Mark vii. 10-13. The law said that a man was to honour his father and mother, but the tradition of the Pharisees allowed a man to assume a hypocritical piety, and say, "It is corban". He could say to his parents, I have given all to God, and therefore that which I might have allowed you in your old age has been devoted to higher and holier uses. The Lord has only one word for such—hypocrites. There is a danger of similar hypocrisy among believers to-day. We speak about "the Lord's work". What is the Lord's work? When we contribute to the expenses of a meeting do we more than the man of the world who pays for his ticket for a lecture or concert? When we subscribe for a copy of a magazine have we done more than the man who pays for his morning paper? May we not be deceived with meaningless words. On the other hand, to withdraw from the claims of those connected with us by ties of flesh and blood because we are devoting our means to the Lord may come under the severe censure of Mark vii. and I John. When we have these things clearly before us we may learn without distraction the true order as given in Heb. vi. 10:--

> "The love which ye have shewn forth unto His Name, in that ye have ministered unto the saints."

The love shown for the name of God was manifested towards His people.

Unto His name.—Why does the Scripture use the "name" and not the "Lord"? What is a name? Is it not the sum of many qualities, and used by us as a convenient means of expression? When we speak of The Berean Expositor we use the sum of the following component parts, viz., paper, print, articles written on special themes. When we say the word house it is the sum of such items as bricks, mortar, wood, glass, &c. Thought would for ever remain unexpressed if it were not for this ability to "sum up" in one name. The name of God expresses all that He is. The varied names of God express his many-sided relations with His creatures. What attributes are expressed in the names Father, Saviour, Lord, God! Love shewn to His name is love that goes out to One who possesses those wondrous qualities that have been revealed to us in Christ. We pray in the name of Christ. We are forgiven for His name's sake. His name is called upon us. We are enjoined to do all in the name of the Lord Jesus.

Love unto the name of the Lord is shown by ministry unto the saints. This does not bring the love of God down, but lifts the ministry to the saints up to a higher level. We minister to the saints and we love our brethren because we love the Lord.

> "Every one that loveth Him that begat loveth Him also that is begotten of Him" (I John v. 1).

We cannot love the Father if we do not love the Son, and we cannot love the Father if we do not love His sons also. Here then is the practical manifestation of the apostle's desire. "Let us go on unto perfection." Faith is perfected in such works of love. These are the things that accompany salvation; these are the things that:-- > "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour. For the grace of God saves . . . . . teaches us . . . that we should live . . . . . looking . . . . . zealous of good works" (Titus ii. 10-15).

Key-thoughts of I John.

#1. "Manifest."
pp. 100, 101

If we compare John's Gospel with his first Epistle, we find several items which, if not in contrast, yet by their different point of view indicate for us the peculiar key-thoughts of the Epistle.

The Gospel commences with Him Who was IN the beginning, whereas the Epistle commences with Him Who was FROM the beginning. The Gospel declares that IN Him was life, the Epistle however tells us that the life was manifested.

> "For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and shew unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and has been manifested unto us" (i. 3).

The words "manifest" and "appear" in this epistle are translations of phaneroo and phaneros, the former occurring nine times, the latter once, and such is the inimitable character of the inspired Scripture, that God's supervision of the distribution of single words is seen to be perfectly planned and harmoniously arranged.

"Manifest" (I John).

A | i. 2. LIFE manifested.
  B | ii. 18, 19. ANTICHRISTS manifested "not of us".
    C | ii. 28, iii. 2. EFFECTS of future manifestation.
    C | iii. 5, 8. EFFECTS of past manifestation.
  B | iii. 10. Children of GOD and the DEVIL manifested.
A | iv. 9. LOVE manifested.

The opening statement of i. 2 is savourless or powerless without the grand conclusion of iv. 9. Life may be manifested, yet the darkness comprehends it not. To a lost world came the Son of God, not to demand the homage of His creatures, though He was Creator (John i. 3), not to claim His kingly prerogatives, either as Israel's King, or as the only rightful occupant of the throne of universal dominion, but He came as the meek and lowly, the despised and the rejected, the sorrowing, sin-bearing, suffering Son of man. This leads to I John iv. 9. If life was to be received as well as manifested, love must be made manifest also. He Who manifested the life manifested also the love of God, in death, "that we might live through Him". Life can only be fully realized when righteousness and peace have kissed each other. The fact that God IS love does not save. The fact that God IS righteousness does not justify. The love must be manifested, the righteousness revealed, before it can become effective.

How and in what way was the love of God manifested and with what object? The epistles declares that God's love has been manifested in the gift of Christ. "Because that God sent His only Begotten Son into the world." With what object? "In order that we might live through Him." This life once received begins in its turn to manifest itself.

This brings us to the second pair in the structure. The parallel between the many Antichrists who were manifested as being "not of us" and the manifestation of the children of God and the children of the Devil is obvious. The central pair brings us to the pivot of the whole issue. First it deals with the future manifestation of Christ:--

> "And now, little children, abide in Him, that when He shall be made manifest, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before Him at His coming . . . . . Beloved, now are we the children of God, and it has not yet been made manifest what we shall be. We know, however, that when He shall be made manifest, we shall be like Him, because we shall see Him as He is" (I John ii. 28-iii. 2).

Secondly it deals with the past manifestation which alone makes the future one possible.

> "And ye know that He was manifested to take away our sins . . . . . for this was the Son of God manifested, that He might destroy the works of the Devil" (I John iii. 5, 8).

May we who have received life through His name increasingly manifest the same, until made manifest with Him in glory.

#2. "As He is."
pp. 135-137

Likeness to the risen Christ, both here and in the glory, is the theme of our meditation under the heading of "As He is".

> "If we walk in the light AS HE IS in the light" (i. 7).

"HE IS IN THE LIGHT."—Verse 5 declares the "God is light". In the full blaze of the Shekinah glory our Saviour stand. Not only is He there by reason of His own Deity, He is there because of the perfectness of His redeeming work. Nothing but absolute righteousness and perfect holiness could endure the light in which our great Advocate stand. Yet, fellow-believer, weak and failing though we be in ourselves, that and nothing less is our position in Christ. Chapter ii. 29 tells us "He is righteous"; iii. 3 tells us "He is pure", both statements being implied in the words "He is in the light". In iv. 17 we have another strong statement.

> "In this hath been perfected love with us, in order that we may have boldness in the day of judgment, that AS HE IS, SO ARE WE in this world."

To understand the meaning of the verse, and to realize the goal of God's perfecting love, we must distinguish the main sentence. Let us read it again, placing the secondary part in brackets:--

"In this hath been perfected love with us (. . . .) that as He is, so are we in this world."

God's love to us is perfected in this, that the believer be as His Lord. God has revealed nothing higher than this throughout the Scriptures. Every grace-taught believer echoes the words of the Psalmist in Psa. xvii. 15, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with Thy likeness".

"We know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him" (I John iii. 2).
"AS HE IS—WE ARE" (iv. 17).
"AS HE IS—WE SHALL BE" (iii. 2).

What is to be the outcome of such a blessed position?

"Every one that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even AS HE IS pure" (iii. 3).
"If ye know that HE IS righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of Him" (ii. 29).

By comparing iv. 17 with ii. 5, 6, it will be seen that God's love to us and our love to God meet together in the same goal, viz., likeness to the Lord Jesus. The believer's love urges him continually to seek closer conformity to the likeness of Christ, and God's love has fixed nothing less as the goal and glory of redemption. We will quote ii. 5, 6:--

"But whoso keepeth His word, truly in this one the love of God has been perfected. By this we know that we are in Him. He that saith he abideth in Him ought himself also so to walk, as He walked."

Here then is the balancing teaching of the Word.

AS HE IS--we are.
AS HE IS--we shall be.
AS HE WALKED--let us walk.

#3. "We Know."
pp. 145 - 147

When John wrote his "gospel" he tells us that what he wrote was with the object that:-

> "Ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through His name" (xx. 31).

While this aspect is by no means omitted from the epistle (iii. 23, v. 1, 5, 10), it is better expressed in the words of I John v. 13:--

> "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, THAT YE MAY KNOW that ye have eternal life."

There is such a thing as "blessed assurance". What a triumph! what a testimony! to be able to stand in the midst of the wrecking of one's life-work, to be deserted by those for whom labour and toil unstinting have been given, and still to be able to say:--

> "Nevertheless I am not ashamed, for I KNOW WHOM I HAVE BELIEVED" (II Tim. i. 12).

There are some who hesitate to express certainty with regard to salvation. This is because they are not clear on the fact that salvation is of the Lord, is by grace, is not of works, and is entirely the work of Christ. John, however, does not provide us with a meaningless emphasis, that parrot-like we may repeat "we know" without a "reason for the hope that is in us". He says "These things have I written . . . . . that ye may know". What "things"?

> "We know that we have passed from death unto life, BECAUSE WE LOVE the brethren" (I John iii. 14).

In the gospel we have the fact of passing from death to life connected with faith. In the epistle it is manifested by love.

> "He that heareth My word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life" (John v. 24).

Love to the brethren is one of the "things" whereby we "know". "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." The apostle enforces his argument by an appeal to the action of God. How do we know the love of God?

> "Hereby we know (A.V. perceive) the love of God, because He laid down His life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren" (I John iii. 16).

Again in I John iii. 19 the apostle says:--

> "Hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before Him."

How shall we know that we are of the truth? By loving not in word or tongue, but in deed and in truth, for the apostle says:--

> "But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" (I John iii. 17).

To such there is no "blessed assurance" and rightly so, for a graceless doctrinaire is an abomination. To this same thought the apostle returns at the close of chapter iv.:--

> "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar (see above 'we are of the truth'): for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" (I John iv. 20).

Thought answers to thought in this chapter, as the mirror reflects the face. "No man hath seen God at any time." We know His love by His great gift. We have never seen God. Our profession of love to Him will be measured by the love we actually show to the brethren we can see. As the first epistle nears its end, the number of "knows" seems to increase.

> "That ye may know that ye have eternal life" (v. 13).
> "If we know that He hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired" (with the condition, of course, of verse 14) (v. 15).
> "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not, but He that is the Begotten of God keepeth him, and that wicked one toucheth him not" (v. 18).
> "We know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in the wicked one. And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know Him that is true . . . . ." (v. 19, 20).

It is a blessed thing to know. Lack of love plunges us in darkness, and we know not whither we go, because that darkness hath blinded our eyes:--

> "I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth" (I John ii. 21).

May we all perceive that such knowledge is not barren or unfruitful, but is expressed in life, light, and love.

#4. "The Liar."
pp. 161, 163

The words translated "liar" in the N.T. occur thirteen times. Three of these occurrences are found in the epistles of Paul, one in Acts, and nine in the writings of John. Of these nine the first epistle has five. A cognate word "To lie" comes twelve times, but only one of these references is found in I John. Once, in combination, we have in this epistle the word "false prophets", making in all eight passages therein where psuedos, pseustes, pseudomai and pseudoprophetes occur.

In the immediate context of the two passages where the word "lie" occurs, we have a reference to the spirit of truth. In ii. 21, "Ye know . . . . . that no lie is of the truth". Immediately before we read, "But ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things". In ii. 27, "The same anointing (same word as 'unction') teacheth you all things, and is truth, and is no lie". In the early church there were two kinds of supernatural gifts, the one of God, the other of Satan. In I Cor. xii. 3 the two kinds are noted, and an infallible test is provided.

> No man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus anathema, and no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by holy spirit" (the gift of the Holy Spirit).

So in I John iv. 1-3 two sources of inspired gifts are noted with an infallible test.

> "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh is of God: and every spirit that confesseth not Jesus is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist."

The antichrist and the false prophet of Rev. xiii. are foreshadowed in the denial of these many forerunners. It is most important that we should pay attention to the actual words of inspiration here and in II John 7, for by so doing we shall add to our understanding. In the passage already quoted the words are "Has come in the flesh" (I John iv. 3), referring to the past. In II John 7 the words "is come" are a rendering of erchomenon, meaning "coming", "The One who is to come" of Rev. i. 4, etc.

> "For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is coming in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist" (II John 7).

"HAS COME', "IS COMING." These two great facts are the supreme confession, and the supreme denial. Let it be observed that antichristianism does not so much deny the Deity of Christ, as that it denies Bethlehem and Olivet. The reality of the first and second comings "in the flesh" is vital to faith. The alternation of "truth" and "lie" is found in I John i. 8 and 10:--

> "If we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves, and the TRUTH is not in us."
> "If we say that we have not sinned, we make Him a LIAR, and His word is not in us."

Here is no mincing of matters. The apostle of love calls all men by a plain term who deny the scriptural truth of universal sin. But let not the believer, who does acknowledge the doctrine of Gen. iii. and Rom. iii. & v., plume himself on mere assent to truth, for the apostle, still pursuing the theme of mere affirmation, writes:--

> "He that saith, I know Him, and keepeth not His commandments, is a LIAR, and the TRUTH is not in him" (I John ii. 4).

The liar is summed up in ii. 22 as the one that denies the Lord. The words are emphatic:--

> "Who is THE LIAR, but he who denies that Jesus is THE CHRIST? This is THE ANTICHRIST, THE ONE WHO DENIES the Father and the Son."

We are not allowed, however, to stay upon this ground of high doctrine, but are brought once more face to face with practical truth. "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a LIAR" (iv. 20).

The final statement leaves doctrine, prophecy and practice, and deals with the witness of the gospel. It should be remembered that witness", "testify", and "record" here are variations introduced for euphony. We will translate "witness" throughout:--

> "If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God which He hath witnessed of His Son. He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made Him a LIAR; because he believeth not the witness that God gave of His Son. And this is the witness, that God hath given us eternal life, and this life is in His Son" (v. 9-11).

The denial of human guilt, the denial of God's witness of Christ in the gospel, the denial that the Son of God has come and is coming in the flesh, the denial that Jesus is the Christ, and the failure to practice what we preach, constitute the great antichristian LIE. Let us walk in truth. (III John 3).

Lessons for Little Ones.

#17. The Concordance.
pp. 10, 11

We have for some time desired to direct the little one's studies in the direction of the Concordance, but did not quite know how to set about it. Matt. xxiii., the chapter we had reached, seemed very difficult for the little scholar, so we gave the following question:--

> Matt. xxiii. 13-39.—Write down the numbers of the verses which say "Woe unto you" and underline the words in your Bible.

The answer was, Verses 13, 14, 15, 16, 23, 25, 27, 29. This showed that the little one had sufficient concentration to advance to the use of the Concordance. The next question was:--

Matt. xxiii. 13-32.
(1). Write down the numbers of the verses which say "blind".
(2). Underline in you Bible.
(3). What is the Greek word?

When the answer was presented we took up Young's Analytical Concordance. Along the red edge of the book we had already written the alphabet for our own convenience, so we said:--

> "What letter must we open at to find the word 'blind'?"

When the place had been found, we checked off the answer, and then noted the Greek word tuphlos, which was written down in Greek characters. Our next questions were based upon Matt. xxv. 1-13:-- (1). Write out the numbers of the verses which speak of WISE and FOOLISH.

(2). What are the Greek words?

This again was answered correctly. It will be seen that the introduction of two words made the question much more difficult, but placing the verses under the headings WISE and FOOLISH, and keeping the two columns separate, made the question less complicated. The next question was:--

Matt. xxvi. 1-5.
(1). What feast is here?
(2). Can you tell me where else we read about it?
(3). What is the Greek word?

The answer was as follows:--

(1). The Passover.
(2). Exodus xii.; I Corinthians v. 7; Christ our Passover.
(3). Pascha.

The two questions that follow asked in addition to the above what was the meaning of the word under consideration.

Matt. xxvi. 14-25.--
(1). Write the verses which speak of the words “Betray” and “Betrayed”.
(2). What does Betray mean?
(3). What is the Greek word?

For the Greek the little one obtained the mother’s help and wrote parado. We had to explain how the Concordance could not give every part of the word and that there we should find paradidomi.

Matt. xxvii. 11-26.
(1). What verses have the word “release”?
(2). What does release mean?
(3). Who was released?
(4). What is the Greek word?

In this case we had to show that some Concordances and Dictionaries use apoluein, while others use apoluo. This may sound very terrible to read, but our principle is to face the difficulties, and not shelve them. Even though the little one cannot follow the grammatical reasons, the puzzle and the mystery have been dispelled. In this last question, one further feature was added, “Who was released?” to test whether the more mechanical noting of words dulled the intelligent reading of the passage.

It will be seen that given a little sympathetic guidance, the little feet may soon be started upon that way, all the paths of which are peace and pleasantness. There is nothing exceptional we admit, and we have given the plain unvarnished record in the hope that it may stimulate others to go and do likewise.

Matthew.

#5. The Sermon on the Mount. Reward and Entry.

pp. 5 - 8

Amplifying our last article we find that the majority express their views in some such way as "The Sermon on the Mount gives the laws of Christ's kingdom". Is this true? Let us again look carefully at the subject. By "The kingdom" is understood that future and literal kingdom of which Christ is King and saved Israel the first and nearest to the throne. If these words of Matt. v.-vii. are the "laws of that future kingdom", what do we find?

1. When Christ reigns in person on the earth, His people will still be subject to persecution! For this read v. 3-12, 44.

The most elementary acquaintance with prophecy will dispose of such an idea. Persecution for righteousness' sake is a mark of the absent Lord, not of the reigning king.

2. The "laws" of v. 21-48 legislate for those who entertain "murder" and "adultery" in their hearts, who evade the law concerning "divorce" and "oaths", who smitten on the cheek, who are sued at law for their cloak, who are pressed into the service of the state, who are cursed and hated, despitefully used and persecuted.

Is this the state of affairs that shall obtain when the kingdom comes?

3. The kingdom is future in this Sermon:--

> "Thy kingdom COME, Thy will BE DONE in earth as it is in heaven" (vi. 10).
> "They SHALL inherit the earth" (v. 5).
> "They SHALL be filled" (v. 6).
> "Many will say unto Me IN THAT DAY" (vii. 22).

4. These "laws" are in force while there lie before men two paths, the strait and narrow that FEW find and the wide and broad into which the MANY go.

If this represents the state of affairs when Christ reigns as King, then the glowing words of prophecy are an illusion, evil is supreme, hope will be made ashamed, vanity and vexation will still mark the steps of man. We believe that the Sermon on the Mount relates to the "kingdom" and not to the "church", nevertheless we believe much harm has been done to the cause of dispensational truth (which is the essence of all truth) by the rather hasty conclusion that this sermon gives the "LAWS of the kingdom". The passage contains its own explanation, which is enforced by the literary structure, and echoed by the whole of the Gospel according to Matthew. This explanation we will now consider.

Leaving the examination of opinions, we turn our attention to that which is more profitable, viz., the testimony of the Word itself.

The BEATITUDES, with which the Sermon on the Mount opens, contain the key thought, and if we do not find the key here we shall miss our way through the remainder of the passage. That key word is REWARD. Verse 12 sums up all that is said under varying aspects in verses 3-11:-- > "Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your REWARD in heaven."

The literary structure now comes to our aid by expanding this idea of reward. In chapter vi. the reward which the hypocrite receives now is set over against the reward which shall be given by the Lord at His coming. Almsgiving must not be done to be seen of men, otherwise there will be no reward from the Father in heaven. Those who give alms as the hypocrites do have their reward. The same thing is said of prayer and of fasting. There is a present reward given by mortal man, or there is a future reward to be given openly by the Father, and the section reaches its climax in the words, "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon" (vi. 24).

The second feature of this Sermon on the Mount, and one which expands and expounds the character of the reward, is the emphasis upon ENTRY INTO THE KINGDOM. Unless the righteousness of those addressed exceeded that of the Scribes and Pharisees, the Lord said they should in no case enter the kingdom of heaven. In the conclusion of the Sermon He says, "Not everyone that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven" (vii. 21), and a little earlier He gives the exhortation to enter in at the strait gate (vii. 13). Suffering now, with the reward of the Father and entry into the kingdom as a future compensation, is held out by the Lord to those who possessed certain qualities which are summed up in v. 48, "Be ye therefore PERFECT".

Our previous studies under the titles of "The Hope and the Prize" and the "Epistles to the Hebrews" will have prepared us to see the fitness of associating reward, and entry into the kingdom, with perfection. The structure places the "wise man" in correspondence with the perfect, which further emphasizes and illuminates the great theme. This we shall see the better when we deal with the Sermon in the light of the whole Gospels. There remain the references to the Law and the Prophets, and the sayings of the Lord Himself. The authority of the Law and the Prophets is upheld and enforced, while a deeper and more spiritual apprehension of their teaching is required of those who would enter the kingdom. We can now appreciate the main outline of the Sermon on the Mount:--

A | v. 3-16. Reward.
B | 17. The Law and the Prophets.
C | 19, 20. Entry into the Kingdom.
D | 21-44. But I say unto you.
E | 45-48. The Perfect.

A | vi. 1 - vii. 11. Reward.
B | 12. The Law and the Prophets.
C | 13-23. Entry into the Kingdom.
D | 24-29. These sayings of Mine.
E | 24. The Wise.

It seems fairly clear that the "laws" of the Sermon on the Mount relate not to the time when the kingdom will be set up, but to the period that precedes the kingdom, when suffering for truth is sustained by hope of future blessedness, and when those that are to enter the kingdom shall be brought by means of the testings through which they pass to that condition which is called "perfect" and which figures so prominently in Phil. iii., Hebrews and James.

#6. The Sermon on the Mount. "Entry" into the kingdom, continues a distinctive feature in the remainder of Matthew's Gospel.

We have seen that entry into the kingdom is the great feature of the sermon on the mount, and that the endurance and high standard of spirituality which is inculcated has in view the entry of that kingdom. Let us take a wider view of the subject, this time looking at the whole Gospel instead of sequel to the sermon on the mount, namely the prophecy on the mount, given in xxiv., xxv. After outlining before us the times that will lead up to the setting up of the kingdom of heaven, the Lord speaks of the characteristics of those who shall enter into that kingdom. The two passages are the parable of the ten virgins, and its fulfillment in the case of the living nations (Matt. xxv.).

Truth is truth, whether we who utter it realize its fullness at the time or not, and in Volume VI, page 183, 184, the fact is stressed that the words which are cognates of the verb "To enter" are "pivotal" in the structure of the parable of the ten virgins. We will not repeat the structure here, but call attention to the fact that the great point of the parable is that of "entering". The five wise virgins "went in" (eiserchomai) to the marriage, and the door was shut. Here we have the Lord in His last discourses referring back to His first. The man who heard His sayings, and who did them, is likened to a WISE man who built upon a rock. The other man is likened to a FOOLISH man. In the day of testing the wise man's building stands. Reward is promised to the servant who is not only faithful, but WISE (Matt. xxiv. 45-47). The Lord does not use the word "foolish" of any others except those cited in Matt. vii. and xxv. Immediately following the parable of the virgins comes the parable of the talents, where the reward for faithfulness is expressed in the words, "enter thou into the joy of thy Lord".

We now come to another, but parallel case, where the two classes are not classified as wise and foolish, but as sheep and goats. The time when this takes place is when the Son of man comes in His glory and sits upon the throne of His glory. Before Him all the nations are gathered together, and to those who have been kind to the least of the brethren of the King upon the throne are addressed the words:--

> "Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you since the overthrow of the world."

By their own confession the nations did not render "Christian service", for they will say, "When saw we Thee a stranger, etc.?"

In sharp contrast with these nations who, though they have never professed the name of Christ, yet did those things that were well pleasing, come those of the favoured nation who said:--

> "Lord, Lord, have we not taught in Thy Name, and in Thy Name cast out demons, and in Thy Name done many wonderful works?"

To these the Lord will say:--

> "I never approved of you, depart from Me, ye that work iniquity."

The threefold insistence upon "in Thy Name" is in contrast with "When saw we Thee?" Rom. ii. deals with these nations and the conditions of their entry, particularly in verses 6-11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 26, 27. A fuller exposition of Rom. ii. will be found in a subsequent publication (D.V.).

Let us come back a little. Matt. xxii. speaks of the marriage of the King's son. This is the same marriage into which the five virgins had entrance. In verse 12 our special word "enter" (eiserchomai) comes. A man is observed by the King as being without the wedding garment, and he says:--

> "Friend, how didst thou enter here, not having a wedding garment?"

His punishment is the same as that awarded to the evil servant (xxiv. 51), and the unprofitable servant (xxv. 30). Outer darkness and gnashing of teeth are always associated with the loss of place in the kingdom (see Matt. viii. 12; xiii. 42, 50). The context of the one occurrence in Luke (xiii. 28) includes references to the sermon on the mount, the shut door of the wedding feast, and the parallel to Matt. viii. 12. What is the wedding garment? It is the righteous award of the saints (Rev. xix. 8), granted to those who like the five wise virgins were "ready" (cf. Rev. xix. 7); in other words, the wedding garment is fashioned out of obedience to the higher law of the sermon on the mount. In Matt. xxi. 31 there is a statement concerning forfeiture of place in the kingdom:--

> "The publicans and harlots GO BEFORE you into the kingdom of God."

Chapter xix. however contains the fullest exposition of the spirit of the sermon on the mount. A rich young Ruler asks the Lord what good thing he must do in order to have aionian life (which Matt. xxv. 46 uses synonymously with inheriting the kingdom). Both in Matt. xix. and xxv. "doing good" and "keeping the law" are the only terms given by Christ. How anyone can, without violence to context and conscience, preach as a gospel message eternal life and eternal punishment from these two chapters of works and law passes understanding. The Lord without ambiguity refers the young man to the Law of Moses. The first commandment is that dealing with murder, it is the same in Matt. v. The second is the command concerning adultery, which is also the second in Matt. v. Other laws are instanced which come in a different order. To this the young man replies:--

> "All these have I kept from my youth up, what more do I want?"

The Lord did NOT say to the young man that he boasted of a false obedience, or possessed a false righteousness. He acknowledged the young man's statement and bases His added teaching upon it; and here we arrive once more at the pith of the sermon on the mount:--

> "Jesus said, If thou art willing to be PERFECT, go, sell thy possessions, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow Me" (Matt. xix. 21).

Aionian life was one thing, treasure in heaven another. The good thing required for aionian life was obedience to the law of Moses. Perfection, however, came by the higher law of Christ. He said, "I say unto you" that murder is in the heart of the man who merely desires. This is the strait gate that few find. Many are going the easy road that ends in the destruction of all their works, "saved so as by fire". When the disciples heard that it was more difficult for a rich man to enter into the kingdom than for the camel to pass through the eye of a needle, they expressed surprise. Both camel and rich man must be unloaded before such entry is possible (The eye of a needle is the small door fixed in the city gate and opened after dark). When Peter heard these things he said:--

> "Behold, we have forsaken all and followed Thee: What shall we have therefore?" (Matt. xix. 27).

Then comes the reply which links all these great passages together:--

> "Ye which have followed Me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of His glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel; and everyone that hath forsaken houses . . . . . inherit aionian life" (Matt. xix. 28, 29).

Our last passage is Matt. xviii., where the little child is set in the midst as the pattern:--

> "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not ENTER into the Kingdom of heaven" (verse 3).

Verse 8 uses the parallel expressions "enter into life" and "aionian fire".

Space is limited; much more might have been said in bringing out the underlying harmony of all these passages. We write for "Bereans", and must leave the matter here.

We trust that it is at least clear that the question of gaining or losing an entry into the kingdom is one of supreme importance in this testimony of Christ while on earth, and that around this theme the sermon on the mount revolves.

#7. The Sermon on the Mount.
The Law for the Perfect.
pp. 77 - 79

Having gathered from the structure the emphatic words, and parallels in other parts, the scope and object of the Sermon on the Mount, we can safely look at some of its details without fear of misapplying their teaching.

It is perfectly evident that one and the same people are addressed throughout and the exhortations, warnings and teaching are focused upon one point. The kingdom of heaven of v. 3 is seen to be closely connected with the earth in verse 5. This is seen again in chapter vi. 10, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven". Those who are addressed here hold a twofold responsibility towards the world, which may or may not be fully entered and realized:--

> "Ye are the salt of the earth" (v. 13).
> "Ye are the light of the world" (v. 14).

Salt may lose its savour and so be worthless. Light may be hidden under a bushel and so be valueless. The light of good works was so to shine that men should be led to glorify the Father which is in heaven.

The coming of Christ to Israel with its proclamation of king and kingdom did not set aside the law:--

> "Think not that I am come to destroy the law and the prophets, I am not come to destroy but to fulfil" (v. 17).

The "therefore" of verse 19 shows that the "least commandments" there spoken of are those of "the law". Whoever breaks (lou, destroy being kataluo) one of the least of these commandments, and shall teach men so, forfeits position in the coming kingdom. Whoever shall do and teach them (note the order), this one shall be called great in the kingdom. But the doing of the law was not the highest attainment, as the rich young man learned in Matt. xix. Perfection requires something more. The Lord therefore proceeds to take the law and open its fuller and deeper spiritual application. A righteousness greater than that of the Scribes and Pharisees would obtain an entrance into the kingdom, but reward and treasure in heaven were connected with something more. Six times in chapter v. does the Lord speak of the old law and the new.

"Ye have heard." "But I say." (Matt. v. 22-44).

A | v. 21-26. Anger.
B | 27-30. Desire.
C | 32. Subterfuge to avoid keeping covenant.
C | 33-37. Subterfuge to avoid keeping oath.
B | 38-42. Non-resistance.
A | 43, 44. Love to enemies.

The words "without cause" in verse 22 are to be omitted. The law read, "Whosoever shall KILL shall be amenable to the judges". Christ said, "Whosoever is angry with his brother shall be amenable to the judges". To say "Raca" to one's brother, that is, to speak contemptuously, is to make oneself amenable to the Sanhedrin, the great national council. To go further and say "wicked reprobate" is to make oneself amenable to the "Gehenna of fire".

The three grades of punishment occur again in the sequel (25, 26) viz., the adversary, the judge, the officer. Prison is equivalent to Gehenna. Some may feel that a proof text for the orthodox hell is being taken from them, but we make bold to say that the modern conception of hell does not enter into the scope of the passage. Entrance into the kingdom is joy; rejection is outer darkness and gnashing of teeth. It is not a question of salvation or damnation, nor of heaven or hell here, any more than it is in Matt. xxv. 31-46. It is entry or non-entry into the kingdom. The three stages of verse 22 indicate the straitness of the gate, and the "destruction" towards which the broad way leads. If the Gehenna of verses 29, 30 be taken literally, of course the cutting off of the hand and the plucking out of the eye must be literal too. We do not remember ever meeting, even among the most devoted advocates of the Sermon on the Mount, one who had plucked out his eye or cut off his hand, yet many if not all had been "offended" sometime or other.

The deeper spiritual commandment that is given to those who seek the kingdom and its blessedness is focused in the closing verses of the chapter.

A | 45-. That ye may become children of your Father in heaven.
B | -45. For. / Sun on evil and good.
\ Rain on just and unjust.
B | 46, 47. For. / If love them that love – what reward?
\ If salute brethren only – where differ?
A | 48. Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven.

This insistence upon being like the Father is seen in the great prayer of chapter vi., "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors", and in the Lord's comment:--

> "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive you your trespasses" (verses 14, 15).

See also Matt. xviii. 23-35. This truth however is not a part of the gospel of the Grace of God and cannot be preached as such without confusion and harm. It is however an essential element in the perfecting of the believer in view of the kingdom and its rewards.

#8. The Sermon on the Mount.
The Theme of Chapter vi.—"Seek ye FIRST."
pp. 109 - 111

We have already seen that the subject of Reward is a prominent theme in Matt. v.-vii., forming the key-word of the opening verses, and punctuating the first part of chapter vi. The fact that "reward" is emphasized so much shows that the question as to whether the basis of the sermon is "law" or "grace" is not relevant. The subject is not a question of salvation, either by works or by faith, but of perfecting, of reward, of enduring in view of the kingdom.

Let us notice the way in which the subject of reward runs through chapter vi.:--

Verse.
1.	Alms given before men.	No reward in heaven.
2.	Hypocrites who seek glory of men.	They have their reward.
4.	Alms in secret.	The Father shall reward openly.
5.	Prayers as hypocrites.	They have their reward.
6.	Prayer in secret.	The Father shall reward openly.
16.	Hypocrites fasting.	They have their reward.
18.	Appear not to fast.	The Father shall reward openly.

If we were to concentrate our attention upon the subject of Alms-giving, of Prayer, of Fasting, etc., we should doubtless learn much for our good, but we should probably miss the essential lesson of the chapter, and the real object which the Lord had in view at the time. If we step back as it were and obtain a comprehensive view, the true theme is so evident that minor details can then be considered with safety. In the accompanying structure it will be seen that there is a repetition of theme too obvious not to be intentional. This repetition emphasizes the theme for us.

Matt. vi.

A | vi. 1-4. Almsgiving.
B | 5-15. Prayer. | a | Not as Gentiles.
b | Your Father knoweth.
c | Pray "Thy", "Thy", "Thy".
C | 16-18. Fasting.

A | 19-24. Treasure.
B | 25-34. Anxiety. | a | The Gentiles seek.
b | Your heavenly Father knoweth.
c | Seek ye FIRST.

The first thing for us to notice is the fact that in the prayer which the Lord gave as a model the believer "seeks first the kingdom of God and His righteousness", and has the assurance that the Father knows his needs before he asks. Instead of elaborating the opening words of the prayer, "Our Father", with subdivisions upon "Re-generation", etc., let us see that the real import is in the fact that the believer does not say "my", "me", but prays, Hallowed be THY name, THY kingdom come, THY will be done.

In the corresponding portion (25-34) undue anxiety concerning food and drink and clothing is forbidden; the Gentiles seek these things; instead of so doing, the Lord says:--

> "Seek ye FIRST the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

The only prayer for temporal needs in the model given by the Lord is the clause, "Give us this day our daily bread". The word which is translated "daily" is epiousios, and apart from the one other occurrence in the parallel passage of Luke xi. 3 this word is entirely unknown in either Biblical or Classical Greek—it seems to be a word invented by the Spirit of God to express His purpose. Literally we might translate it "The bread which cometh down upon us". We cannot believe it possible for any Jew in the days of Christ to have missed the allusion to the Manna of the wilderness. It gives point to the prayer to notice this. Pilgrims journeying through the wilderness are here. They have no continuing city, but seek one to come. Their great prayer is for the coming of the kingdom. For the rest, just the daily manna will suffice until the land of promise shall be reached.

To have seen the Sermon on the Mount in the light of the wilderness with its teaching concerning suffering and glory, endurance and crown, temptation and perfecting, would have saved many a page of useless argument as to the meaning of "temptation" in this prayer, or whether the basis of the Sermon be "law" or "grace". Future blessedness is held out as a "reward" to those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake, who seek first the kingdom, who go on unto perfection.

Perhaps a few words upon the "evil eye" of verses 22-24 may be appreciated. Edwin Hatch in his Essays in Biblical Greek under the word poneros=evil gives as a secondary meaning "grudging", "niggard", and cites passages where "the grudging eye", "the eye of the miser", "the niggard eye" are placed in antithesis to liberality. The Hebrew word for evil (ra) is usually translated poneros, but is sometimes translated baskanos. This use of poneros in the sense of "niggardly" or "grudging", especially in connection with the idea of the "evil eye", throws a clear light upon a well-known passage of the Sermon on the Mount, which if taken in its context will be seen to refer not to goodness or badness in general, but specially to the use of money:--

> "Lay not up . . . . . treasures upon earth . . . . . treasures in heaven . . . . . where thy treasure is, there will thy heart be also. The lamp of the body is the eye. If therefore thine eye be liberal, thy whole body shall be full of light: but if thine eye be grudging (poneros), they whole body shall be full of darkness . . . . . Ye cannot serve God and mammon" (Matt. vi. 19-24).

Matt. xx. 15, "Is thine eye evil, because I am good?" may be rendered, "Art thou envious at my being liberal?" This strong emphasis upon the snare of wealth brings the parallel of Matt. xix. closer. "The strait gate" which few find and the "eye of the needle" are the same.

One cannot have the niggard's eye, or lay up treasure on earth, or seek first the things of self, or walk the broad and easy road, if one seeks perfection and an entrance into the kingdom. Matt. v.-vii., Hebrews, Philippians, and Rev. ii., iii. may each have their distinct departments in the Divine Plan, but one great principle runs through them all.

#9. The Sermon on the Mount. Parallels with Philippians.

pp. 139 - 142

We have sought to show that the Sermon on the Mount, while not the "Laws of the kingdom" or the "Charter of the Church", gives exhortations and commands to those believers who in a period of rejection look forward to the kingdom and give up all in their desire to be counted worthy to obtain an entrance and receive the reward.

It will be confirmatory evidence to show the parallels that exist between the Sermon on the Mount and the epistle to the Philippians. We already know that Philippians is the epistle of the Prize. It stand to the church of the one body in the same relationship as the Sermon on the Mount stand to the subject of the kingdom of heaven. While the sphere of these two parts of Scripture varies, the underlying principle is the same.

(1). THE PLACE OF SELF.—We observed that the believer is urged in Matt. vi. to "seek first the kingdom of God", so in Phil. ii. the apostle writes:--

> "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others . . . . For all seek their own, not the things that are Jesus Christ's."

(2). SUFFERING, REJOICING AND REWARD.—The Sermon on the Mount says:--

> "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for My sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven" (Matt. v. 11, 12).

Philippians says:--

"But I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel; so that my bonds in Christ are manifest in all the palace and in all other places . . . . . some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife, and some also of good will . The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds . . . . . what then? . . . . . I therein do rejoice, yea and will rejoice . . . . . For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for His sake" (i. 12-18, 29).

(3). PERFECTION, THE STANDARD.

"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" (Matt. v. 48).

"Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfected . . . . . Let us therefore, as many as would be perfect, be thus minded. According to a mark I press toward the prize" (Phil. iii. 12-15).

(4). SONSHIP SHOULD BE MANIFEST.

"Love your enemies . . . . . that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven" (Matt. v. 44, 45).

"That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke" (Phil. ii. 15).

(5). THE LIGHT MUST SHINE.

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matt. v. 16).

"Shine ye (A.V. margin) as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life" (Phil. ii. 15, 16).

(6). A SPIRIT OF YIELDING IN CONTRAST WITH SELF-ASSERTION.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit." "Blessed are the meek." "Resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain" (Matt. v. 3, 6, 39-41).

"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus . . . . . The form of God . . . . . the form of a servant . . . . . He humbled Himself." "Let your moderation (yieldingness) be known unto all men" (Phil. ii. and iv.).

(7). ANXIETY OVER DAILY AFFAIRS.

"Take no thought (merimnao) for your life." "Take no thought for the morrow" (Matt. vi. 25, 34).

"Be careful (merimnao) for nothing" (Phil. iv. 6).

The verb merimnao, "to take anxious thought", "Be anxious", occurs in the prison epistles only in Philippians. There in that epistle it occurs twice. Seen together they present the truth complete.

> "Be anxious for nothing" (Phil. iv. 6).
> "I have no man likeminded, who will naturally care (be anxious) concerning your affairs, for all seek their own" (Phil. ii. 20, 21).

It is impossible to be anxious over self, if one seeks first the kingdom of God and the blessing of others. This spirit should be that of all who seek the prize.

(8). CONTRASTED WITH THE REWARD IS DESTRUCTION.

> "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction (apoleia), and many there be which go in thereat" (Matt. vii. 13).
>
> "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? . . . . . depart from Me ye that work iniquity" (Matt. vii. 22, 23).
> "Many walk . . . . . whose end is destruction" (apoleia) (Phil. iii. 18, 19).

For further light on this meaning of destruction consider the bearing of I Cor. iii. 11-17, also Matt. xxv. 31-46, where entry into the kingdom is contrasted with aionian fire, "Depart from Me".

(9). A CENSORIOUS SPIRIT IS TO BE SHUNNED.

> "Judge not that ye be not judged." "Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?" (Matt. vii. 1, 3).
> "In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves." "Whatsoever things are true . . . . . honest . . . . . just . . . . . if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, impute these things" (Phil. ii. 3 and iv. 8).

If it were necessary, we could turn to the epistles to the Hebrews and of James for further parallels, but we feel the truth is sufficiently established, and space is valuable. While clearly seeing the place which the Sermon on the Mount occupies, let us beware of that supercilious spirit, that spiritual pride which, alas, sometimes contradicts the professed faith of those who "rightly divide the Word of truth".

We have dealt with the parables and miracles of Matthew in previous volumes, and without assuming to have in any measure plumbed their depths, we believe the dispensational character of these two great sections has been clearly demonstrated.

With the added light and direction we have now received by our study of the Sermon on the Mount, we feel that it is established beyond doubt that the Gospel of Matthew is concerned not with the Church of Christ, but with the Kingdom of the heavens, which kingdom embraces the throne of David and the wider inheritance of Abraham under the headship of Christ as the Son of David and Son of Abraham.

The Ministry of Consolation.

#8. "What time I am afraid, I will trust in Thee" (Psa. lvi. 3).
pp. 79, 80

The above words were uttered by David in the midst of daily conflict (vv. 1, 2). Trust is the Lord, is very closely related to trust in His Word. Immediately after David says "I will trust in THEE", he adds, "In God I will praise His WORD" and balances it with "In God I have put my trust" (verse 4). Trust in the Lord and His Word dispels fear, even before deliverance itself comes. This was David's experience as may be seen from verses 10 and 11:--

> "In God will I praise His Word; in the Lord will I praise His Word. In God have I put my trust; I WILL NOT BE AFRAID what man can do unto me."

We commence with "what time I am afraid", we end with "I will not be afraid". There is also a direct effect upon the cause of David's fear, as well as upon David himself:--

> "When I cry, then shall mine enemies turn back" (verse 9).

The very cry for help becomes a weapon of defence. Trust begets trust, even as fear begets fear. David's confidence grows stronger as prayer leads him to the Most High (verse 2). He looks at what God has done in the past, and makes an Ebenezer of it, a starting point for future deliverances:--

> "For Thou hast delivered my soul from death; wilt not Thou deliver my feet from falling that I may walk before God in the light of the living?" (verse 13).

The "soul" is greater than the "feet", and "death" is more than "falling". He Who delivered from death and translated into life will surely continually deliver from falling that we may walk in the light.

Psa. lvi. should be read through, noting the progress of thought. David's deliverer is called "God", "The Most High", "The Lord". There are many things that occur around us that send the chill of fear into our hearts, but let us take courage and say with the Psalmist:--

> "What time I am afraid, I will trust in Thee."

#9. An Aspect of Answered Prayer.
pp. 158, 159

What constitutes answer to prayer? To be able to comprehend the subject sufficiently so as to give a full answer seems to be beyond our present attainment, but it may be helpful to consider one of the many aspects of the question. The examples we give tend to show that many times the answer to our prayer is close at hand, and that in supplying our need God has no necessity to work a miracle, but only to open our eyes that we may see. The case of Hagar comes to mind in this connection.

> "The water was spent in the bottle . . . . . she . . . . . lift up her voice and wept . . . . . God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is . . . . . and God OPENED HER EYES, and she saw a well of water" (Gen. xxi. 15-19).

There is nothing to lead us to believe that the well of water miraculously provided, it was there all time, and the child was dying of thirst not because of the lack of water, but because of the lack of vision.

In Gen. xxii. the great test of Abraham's faith is recorded. Once more we do not gather from the narrative that the ram caught by its horns dropped down from heaven at the critical moment, rather do we understand that it was there all the time, but that Abraham did not see it until the necessity arose:--

> "And Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold behind him a ram caught in a thicket by his horns . . . . . And Abraham called the name of that place Jehovah-jireh: as it is said to this day. In the mount of the Lord it shall be seen" (Gen. xxii. 13, 14).

In both cases there is a personal act of faith accompanying the vision:--

> "And God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water: and she WENT and FILLED the bottle."
> "And Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked . . . . . and Abraham WENT and TOOK the ram."

The incident recorded in II Kings vi. will doubtless come to the mind of the reader. The servant of Elisha when he saw the great host encompassing the city cried:--

> "Alas, my master! how shall we do?" (verse 15).

Elisha stilled his fears, not by saying that God would send deliverance, but by simply praying:--

> "Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes, THAT HE MAY SEE. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha" (verse 17).

Our greatest need is not for the miraculous provision of water in the wilderness, not for deliverance, not for chariots of fire, but eyes to see.

In Christ is our all. We do not need to pray so much for this or for that, but for the opened eye of faith that perceives that already in Him we are filled to the full:--

> "And Jesus stood still, and called unto them, and said, What will ye that I shall do unto you? They say unto Him, Lord, THAT OUR EYES MAY BE OPENED" (Matt. xx. 32, 33).

#10. "The Mould of Doctrine" (Rom. vi. 17).
pp. 163, 164

The closing words of the book of Judges seem to epitomize the ideal latent or expressed in the heart of man.

> "In those days there was NO KING in Israel, and every man did that which was right IN HIS OWN EYES" (Judges xxi. 25).

Iniquity according to Isa. liii. is synonymous with "turning every one to his own way". Human nature rebels against the idea of being "run into a mould", and this resentment is by no means confined to the unsaved and the ungodly. The schisms that have rent the church, the differences that ruin the unity of the Spirit, may be trace back to this source. It is true that no one of us has the right to endeavour to make other believers little copies of ourselves, that is the baneful travesty of the truth, and lends some colour of equity to the resentment expressed by Christendom. Nevertheless, it is the purpose of God that we should be "run into a mould", the mould however being that of the image of His Son:--

> "For Whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son" (Rom. viii. 29).

As a means to that end is the doctrine of the Scriptures:--

> "But thanks be to God, that—Whereas ye were servants of sin, ye became obedient out of the heart unto the mould of teaching into which ye were delivered" (Rom. vi. 17, Rotherham).

A footnote adds "As if to be fashioned thereby". The A.V. of this verse makes it appear that the doctrine had been delivered to us, the margin, agreeing with Rotherham, shows that we have been delivered into the mould of the doctrine instead. Do we come to the Word of God that it may mould us? It will lead us into close conformity to the walk (I John ii. 6), meekness (I Pet. ii. 21-23), death (Phil. iii. 10), resurrection (Rom. vi. 5, 6), and coming glory (Phil. iii. 20, 21) of Christ into Whose image we must one day be conformed.

Consequent upon this must come a growing likeness to each other. Phil. iii., which speaks of the wondrous conformity of the believer to the death and the glory of the Son of God, is preceded by Phil. ii., which emphasizes a "like mindedness, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind". In Rom. xv. 5, 6 also we read:--

> "Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be likeminded one toward another, according to Christ Jesus: that ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."

While, therefore, we must rightly oppose any attempt on the part of man to mould us to his liking, or to make us all faulty repetitions of equally faulty patterns, let us not be misled by our zeal and turn aside from the great and glorious goal that God has placed before Him, that we shall one day be conformed to the image of His Son. May the whole Word of God, the great and glorious image of Christ, the lesser reflections of that image in the lives of those, such as Paul, who followed the Lord, the experiences of daily life through which we pass, may they all be blessed by God to us in fashioning and moulding us after "the image of the heavenly".

#11. A Testimony to a Simple Faith.
pp. 189, 190

It was an agreeable surprise to receive the following simple testimony from one who is, we believe, officially connected with one of our great national museums, and we pass it on that others may take heart both from the lesson itself and from the fact that in spite of the apostasy of these days, even in high places the Lord has His own who have not bowed the knee to the modern Baal of higher criticism.

The conversation had turned to the subject of Governments and Kings, the chaotic state of Europe, and the position of the child of God. This led to the following comment on the book of Daniel.

> You remember that in the prophecy of Daniel there is recorded the two parallel incidents, the casting of the three Hebrews into the burning furnace, and the casting of Daniel into the den of lions. The first act was that of a despot. Nebuchadnezzar was an absolute monarch. Of him Daniel said:--
> > "Whom he would he slew; and whom he would he kept alive; and whom he would he set up; and whom he would he put down."
>
> The second act was that of a limited monarch Presidents of the kingdom, governors, princes, counselors, and captains are seen consulting together and advising King Darius to establish the decree that they had formulated. This decree, once signed and sealed, could not be altered, even by the King himself.
> Now observe this fact for your help and encouragement. The most autocratic Sovereign that has ruled over the Gentiles could not put to death Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego, and the other King, even though he wished to do so, could not save Daniel from the den of lions. In both cases deliverance came from God independently of man. It would appear that while from one standpoint one form of government may be better than another, from another standpoint they are all much the same.

Whether we are called upon to live under the tyranny of absolute monarchy, or the equal tyranny of extreme democracy, both alike are under the control of God, and until He permits no harm can reach us, we are equally safe under the King or President."

The conversation took a turn, as the result of this thought, in the direction of trust in the Lord, when the following suggestion was put forward which we pass on:--

When the Lord appeared to Solomon with the words, "Ask what I shall give thee", it will be remembered that Solomon chose wisdom and knowledge. It so pleased the Lord that Solomon should have asked this, and not for riches, wealth, honour, etc., that He said:--

> "Wisdom and knowledge is granted unto thee; and I will give thee riches, and wealth and honour such as none of the kings have had that have been before thee, neither shall there any after thee have the like."

At Solomon's death Israel came to Rehoboam, and said:--

> "Thy father (Solomon) made our yoke grievous; now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude of thy father."

This makes it appear that Solomon's riches grew out of the servitude and burden of the people. We read in I Kings x. 14 that :--

> "The weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was 666 talents of gold."

Ominous number! connected by prophecy with the mark of the beast! Had Solomon trusted God to fulfil His promise, instead of exacting such as tribute from the people, he might have received 777 talents and have saved his kingdom.

The testimony is simple, but we feel that we should all be the better if the two lessons drawn from Daniel and Solomon were taken to heart:--

> "Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him" (Isa. ii. 12).

Studies in the Epistles of the Mystery.

#54. The Dispensation of the Mystery (Eph. iii. 9).
pp. 8 - 10

The apostle had claimed that to him, less than the least of all saints as he was, grace had been given to preach as good tidings the unsearchable riches of the Christ (iii. 8). As we have seen, the word "unsearchable" suggests that no track had been made, "untraceable" perhaps conveying the meaning as well as any word. These untraceable riches form the subject of verse 9, and we suggest that instead of commencing the verse with "and", the kai should be translated "even". A parallel passage for this usage and rendering is found in Rom. xvi. 25:--

> "Now to Him that is of power to stablish you according to my gospel, EVEN the preaching of Jesus Christ according to the revelation of the mystery, kept quiet in age times, but now made manifest . . . . ."

"My gospel" as used by Paul is nothing less than the preaching of Christ according to the inner teaching of Rom. v., which doctrine does not find an exposition in Scripture until then, for Paul and his chronicler Luke are the only ones who mention Adam in the N.T.; no other writer seems cognizant of the revelation of the mystery which is connected with Christ as the last Adam. This is not the mystery however of Eph. iii. 9, the reference to Rom. xvi. being only given as a parallel.

> "Even to enlighten all as to what is the dispensation of that mystery which has been hidden away from the ages by that God Who created all things" (Eph. iii. 9). (The R.V. reads "dispensation" for the A.V. "fellowship").

We believe this to be the third title given in the epistle for this present dispensation, the first being found in i. 10:--

> "With regard to a dispensation of the fullness of the seasons, to reunite all things under one Head, in the Christ."

The second is in iii. 2:--

> "The dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to youward."

The third is in iii. 9:--

> "The dispensation of the mystery."

It will be seen upon examination that the dispensation of i. 10 refers to the mystery, for verse 9 reads:--

> "Having made known unto us the mystery . . . . . with regard to a dispensation."

The Gentiles, previous to the revelation of this mystery and the introduction of this dispensation, had lived in alienation from God and His covenant. Eph. ii. 12 uses the same word, "You were in that season without Christ, aliens, strangers, hopeless, Godless". "That season" is contrasted with "This season" implied in ii. 13 and defined in i. 10. Some there are who hold that i. 10 refers to the yet future glorious day spoken of in I Cor. xv. (24-28) when the Son of God shall lay at the Father's feet a perfected universe "That God may be all in all". This cannot be however, for two important reasons:--

1. In Eph. i. 10 the dispensation there spoken of is a mystery, but the consummation ("God all in all") was not a mystery, having been revealed earlier in the epistle to the Corinthians.
2. That the future and final goal indicated in I Cor. xv. cannot with truth be called a "dispensation".

A dispensation is a stewardship. It implies that the Lord or Owner is dealing immediately with his possessions. All mediation ends however when the Son brings to the Father the crowning work of the ages. Priesthood and kingship, rule and authority are terms consistent with varying stewardships, but they are all fulfilled and resigned before God can be all in all. Therefore that blessed period cannot be a dispensation of the grace of God to the Gentiles. It is the dispensation pre-eminently marked by the reconciliation of things on earth and things in heaven.

The Head of the church is Head also of principality and power. The sphere of the church is in the superheavenlies. Now, although the world believes it not, and though many a believer confesses "We see not yet all things put under His feet", yet now "things in heaven and things in earth" are ranged under the one Headship of the ascended Christ. It was to enlighten all as to this that the apostle preached the untraceable riches of the Christ. The mystery of Rom. xvi. had been kept quiet in age-times, but the mystery here had been hidden by God from the ages. The apostle stresses this fact in Col. i. 25, 26:--

> "According to that dispensation of God which was given me for you, to complete the word of God—the mystery which had been hidden from the ages and from the generations, but now is made manifest to His saints."

Let us seek to realize our calling and its privileges. Though the world knows neither our Lord and Head nor ourselves His body, let us remember that this present dispensation is the first complete foreshadowing of the end, when throughout the range of creation heaven and earth are to be reunited under the Headship of Christ.

#55. Our Spiritual Congregation (Eph. iii. 10).
pp. 26 - 29

An erroneous interpretation of Heb. xii. 1 encompasses the believer with a cloud of angelic and spiritual "witnesses", using the word "witness" in the sense of "spectator". This is not the meaning of the Greek word "martur", which means "one who bears witness", and so in a secondary sense "a martyr". The idea read into Heb. xii. 1 is not however foreign to Scripture. Matt. xviii. 10 says:--

> "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of My Father which is in heaven."

Heb. i. 14 says of the angels:--

> "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?"

In the parable of Luke xv. angels are represented as taking a particular interest in the repentance pf a sinner:--

> "I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth" (verse 10).

Peter, when writing about the revelations given to the prophets concerning the sufferings for Christ and the glories that should follow, adds, "which things the angels desire to look into" (I Pet. i. 12). Angelic ministry follows the unfolding of the Divine purpose in Israel very closely, and is not absent from the Church, formed during the Acts. The Church of the Mystery after Acts xxviii. however is not associated with angels.

The worship of angels is forbidden in Col. ii. 18. The mystery of godliness was "seen of angels" (I Tim. iii. 16), and Timothy is charged by Paul before "the elect angels" (I Tim. v. 21). Apart from the reference in Col. ii. 18, the very word "angel" is absent from the Prison Epistles. Angels are messengers. The Church of the One Body is raised to such a degree that it is superfluous to teach that it is above angels, the revelation of Eph. i. and ii. is that Christ, and with Him His Church, is raised "Far above Principality and Power, Might and Dominion", the very aristocracy of heaven. By reason of the reconciliation of things in heaven and things in earth, the Lord, when He ascended, became at the same time Head of both the Church and of Principality and Power (Col. i. 18; ii. 10).

Some Principalities and Powers are antagonistic to the Church of the One Body:--

> "For we wrestle . . . . . against . . . . . principalities and powers . . . . . spiritual wickedness in heavenly places" (Eph. vi. 12).
> "And having spoiled principalities and powers He made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it" (Col. ii. 15).

These last passages, we believe, sound a great deep. Away back before man was created on the earth, there was a great falling away on the part of the angels and the higher orders of the heavenly host. Allusions to this defection are scattered through the Scriptures. The great controversy appears to have centred around the person and office of Christ. Pride was the snare and condemnation of the Devil. The rebellious Spirit seems to be challenged when the Lord again brings the first-begotten into the world, saying, "And let all the angels of God worship Him" (Heb. i. 6). Man himself was made "for a little lower than the angels". The sin and the redemption of man is neither at the beginning nor the end of the purpose of the ages. Man, as it were, stands between two great opposing forces. The god of this age, the Devil, who for a little season seems to work his awful will, and the God of heaven and earth, the God of all the ages, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Who will, yet shew who is "the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings, and the Lord of lords" (I Tim. vi. 15). It is with this knowledge that we read something of the meaning and purpose of Eph. iii. 10:--

> "To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the Church the manifold wisdom of God."

Observe the connection which this verse has with the preceding verses:--

> "The dispensation of the grace of God given me to youward, the Mystery, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, according to that gospel whereof I was made a minister, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, EVEN to illuminate all as to the dispensation of the Mystery WITH THE OBJECT THAT (hina) the principalities and powers may learn through the Church the manifold wisdom of God" (verses 2-10).

The precious truth of the Mystery is misunderstood and those who hold it are misunderstood with it. They are sometimes charged with not taking part enough in active service. Let every member of the One Body remember that God has defined the sphere of his ministry and his warfare in Eph. iii. and vi. "We wrestle NOT with flesh and blood." We may not engage in this or join in with that propaganda—we have nevertheless a conflict, though unseen by the eye of the flesh. We may not preach from pulpits or platforms, yet each one of us has an ever-waiting and expectant congregation (not composed of men, but made up of heaven's brightest and highest spirits), they are being taught by God through the Church (taught through not by, the Church being the great object lesson ever before their eyes). Taught of what? Of grace, of mercy, of love—yes, but pre-eminently, the manifold WISDOM of God.

The heavenly host that has watched the unfolding plan of the ages can appreciate, with that great unfolding before it as a panorama, the diversified wisdom of God. His enemy is the very incarnation of wisdom, for he is "That old serpent, the Devil", and the proverbial utterance associates wisdom with serpents: "Be wise as serpents". "Yet God taketh the wise in his own craftiness."

The heavenly watchers who looked down upon this earth of ours in the year that Paul entered Rome were not feasting their eyes upon palace and temple of either Jerusalem, Athens or Rome. They were intent upon one spot, unknown to any of us to-day, the hired house of Paul the prisoner. When the elders of Israel rejected the testimony of the Apostle and were dismissed with the quotation of Isa. vi. 9, 10, heaven itself might well have paused to ask, What can be done? Satan had brought about a deadlock. He knew that Israel were the destined channel of blessing for this earth. He knew that before they could be blessings to others they must first of all, repent and be blessed themselves. Israel did not repent, and it seemed as though Satan had thrust a spoke into God's wheel. Then came the revelation of the Mystery, never before made known, not even in the Old Testament Scriptures, revealing a purpose settled and completed "Before the overthrow of the world". How the heavenly host must have praised the only WISE God as this final demonstration of His manifold wisdom nullified the machinations of the evil one.

God's purpose still goes on, even though Israel are scattered and blind, even though the promise to Abraham for all nations yet awaits fulfillment. The superheavenlies are to be peopled with saved ones from among the Gentiles, and, when this company is complete, the Lord will set into motion the purposes of His grace to Gentiles and Jew once again. At the end of his survey in Rom. ix.-xi. the Apostle surveys the depths saying:--

> "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, how unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out" (xi. 33).

The breadth and length and depth and height of the revelation given in Eph. iii. seems to baffle knowledge and be beyond words. Let us recognize our calling. Let us ever remember our unseen congregation, as God, through us, makes known His manifold wisdom.

#56. The Purpose of the Ages (Eph. iii. 11).
pp. 43 - 46

The authorized version of Eph. iii. 11 is so very grand that truth alone can justify a departure from it. "According to the eternal purpose." The R.V. retains the A.V. reading, but puts in the margin Gr. Purpose of the ages. The Greek is the Word of God, let us be clear on that. Incomparable as the A.V. may be as a work in the English language, and still holding its place in spite of the Revision of recent years, it is not inspired, but is the work of men who to the best of their ability translated the Scriptures.

Then again it must remembered that words change in meaning and value. Most Bible helps give a list of obsolete words, words whose meaning has changed since the A.V. was written. The language was in a state of flux when the A.V. was written, and it was once correct to translate aionios by the word eternal, for that word originally meant age-long. It comes from the Latin aeternus, which is a shorter form of the older word aeviternus, which coming from aevum turns out to be nothing more nor less than the Latin form of the Greek word aion, of which the English equivalent is aeon. It is, however, not possible to use the word eternal to-day without its modern meaning of everlastingness, and as this meaning is foreign to the word, and in some cases most contradictory, we must in the interest of truth drop it, and adopt something better. That word is ready to hand, presented to us by the A.V. itself in the very epistle under review—"That in the ages to come" (ii. 7). To render this passage "That in the eternities to come" would be impossible. There is, moreover, a departure from the inspired grammar of Eph. iii. 11. "Eternal" is an adjective, but no adjective is found in the original of this passage. The wording is kata prothesin ton aionon. Aionon is a noun and must be rendered "of the ages". Instead therefore of a mystifying and indefinite statement like "according to the eternal purpose", we find that the revelation of the mystery, the unsearchable riches of Christ, by which through the church the principalities and powers are learning of the manifold wisdom of God, is all according to plan.

> "According to a purpose of the ages which He made in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Heb. i. 2, speaking of the Son, says, "By whom He made the ages".

The same word "made" occurs in Eph. iii. 11, "The purpose of the ages which He made (not purposed) in Christ Jesus our Lord". By Christ the ages were made, and in Christ the purpose of those ages was made too. The dispensation of the mystery is the capstone of the ages so far as the great preparatory period is concerned. We know but little of what the future ages shall bring of blessing, of glory, of knowledge, but we know that the present dispensation of the mystery "fills up the Word of God".

When God created Adam and when Adam fell, the purpose of the ages had already been made, and our part in it already settled. If the glorious inheritance became forfeit, love would provide a Kinsman-Redeemer who should redeem the forfeited inheritance. When God set aside the Gentiles and chose Israel, the purpose of the ages still stood, some Gentiles were already foreknown as members of the One Body "chosen in Him before the overthrow of the world". When the long-promised Seed came, and was despised, rejected and crucified, no erasure was made in the book of the Divine purpose.

If we trace our steps and view the varying developments from another angle, namely, that of Satanic opposition, it is a comfort to realize that, do what he may, no act of Satan can thwart the purpose of God. How strongly this is stressed in Eph. i.:--

> "According as He hath CHOSEN us in Him" (verse 4).
> "According to the good pleasure of His WILL" (verse 5).
> "According to His GOOD PLEASURE which He hath purposed in Himself" (verse 9).
> "According to the PURPOSE of Him who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will" (verse 11).

Such is the nature of the purpose of the ages. The ages contain as sub-divisions times, seasons, days, dispensations. They span the period of Gen. i. 1 "In the beginning God . . . . .", to I Cor. xv., "That God may be all in all". They include an age-long salvation, inheritance, life and punishment, all of which are so many factors in the outworking of the purpose. To intrude the modern meaning of everlastingness is to spoil the testimony that the ages roll on to their destined end, and shall one day cease. The dispensation of the mystery is no fabrication of the Apostle; it is an integral though hidden part of the great purpose of the ages. It is the one section of that purpose that reaches to the highest heavens, sees Christ as the One Head of all things which are in heaven and earth, and manifests in miniature what the new creation will be when the glorious purpose of the ages has reached its fulfillment. Brethren, we have in this revelation a sacred deposit. Should all our Asia forsake us, let us still look up and say:--

> "Nevertheless I am not ashamed, for I know Whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that He is able to keep that which has been committed till that day."

The fact of a purpose running through the ages comforts the heart, if it does not unravel all the mysteries of providence. Ecclesiastes finds the thread in this great purpose that reaches out beyond death and the grave. The fact of a purpose enables the believer to wait patiently for God and God's own time. Just as in "Pippa Passes" we read, "God's in His heaven, all's right with the world", so we, while realizing all the sin and misery around and within, we too know that God's in His heaven, and is working out His purpose of the ages, and individually makes all things to work together for good to them that love God, who are called according to His purpose.

#57. "My tribulations . . . . . Your glory (Eph. iii. 12, 13). pp. 71 - 73

As the words of A.V. iii. 13 stand they are ungrammatical.

> "My tribulations for you, which is your glory."

The relative "which" is in the feminine gender, and singular number, "tribulations" being plural. Valpy and Macknight call attention to this, but say:--

> "The relative being placed between the two nouns 'tribulations' and 'glory', the one in the plural and the other in the singular number, it may, according to the idiom both of the Hebrew and Greek languages, be made to agree with either. Here it agrees with doxa (glory) which is in the singular number."

It appears therefore that the translation that alters "is" to "are" gives us the sense and the truth, although being compelled by the different idiom of either language to depart from literality. There are some who would place verse 12 and part of 13 in parenthesis, reading:--

> "The purpose of the ages which He made in Christ Jesus our Lord . . . . . which is your glory."

We feel however that the meaning is that given in the A.V. and that the sufferings of the apostle contributed or tended in some way to the glory of the church of Christ. Col. i. 24-27 is parallel with Eph. iii. 1-13, and there we read in direct association with the fact that Paul had been made a minister according to the dispensation of God given to him for the Gentiles, namely the mystery:--

> "Who now rejoice in my sufferings FOR YOU, and fill up that which is lacking of the tribulations of Christ in my flesh for His body's sake, which is the Church . . . . . Christ in you the hope of GLORY."

The apostle suffered much and deeply not only because he believed on the Lord Jesus, but because to him had been given the ministry of the gospel to the GENTILES. It comes in Eph. iii. 1, "I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles". For the mystery of the gospel he was "an ambassador in a chain" (Eph. vi. 20). Writing later to Timothy, Paul concerning the gospel:--

> "Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the GENTILES, for the which cause I also suffer these things" (II Tim. i. 11, 12).
> ". . . . . my gospel, wherein I suffer trouble as an evil doer, even unto bonds . . . . . therefore I endure all things for the elect's sakes, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with aionian GLORY" (II Tim. ii. 8-10).

The strong expression of Col. i. 24:--

> "I fill up that which is lacking of the tribulations of Christ . . . . . for His . . . . . church."

finds an echo in II Cor. i. 5, 6:--

> "For as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ. And whether we be afflicted, it is for your consolation and salvation."

The faithful witness of the apostle Paul, humanly speaking, was for our glory. Had man had his way, the glorious testimony of the prison epistles would have been blotted out together with that which is most vital in the other epistles. At Jerusalem before the apostles and elders he gave place by subjection no not for an hour "that the truth of the gospel might continue right through" to us Gentiles (Gal. ii. 4, 5). When the apostle was brought to a saving knowledge of Christ, Ananias was told by the Lord:--

> "He is a chosen vessel unto Me, to bear My name before the Gentiles, and Kings and children of Israel: For I will shew him how great things he must suffer for My name's sake" (Acts ix. 15, 16).

Paul knew when he started upon his ministry that suffering awaited him. He accepted the "good deposit" and through good report and evil report he maintained his witness. What shall we think of ourselves, we who are not worthy to loose the latchet of his shoes, when we bemoan the little, the petty inconveniences and losses that we may undergo for the same blessed truth? Some class us with the Higher Critics, because they say we cut up the Bible! Some say we put Paul above Christ. Some say—well, what do they say? We know Whom we have believed, and it is enough.

The Emphatic Diaglott translates verse 13 "Therefore, I ask that I may not faint in these my afflictions on your behalf". Literally the wording runs "Therefore I ask not to faint" and leaves the meaning somewhat open. The saints even at Ephesus may not have been so mindful of the absent apostle as to "faint" because of "his" afflictions, but we can well understand the apostle praying for himself that he may not faint under them, just as he asked for prayer that he may have boldness in making known the mystery of the gospel. What was the secret of the apostle's strength? How could he stand so firm, though so forsaken and alone? The secret of his strength is ours too:--

> "In Whom we have boldness and access with confidence through HIS FAITHFULNESS" (for this meaning see reply to W.H.G.T. in Volume XII, pp. 91-94).

The man who has boldness, access, confidence before God, and knows that the One he trusts is FAITHFULNESS itself, need fear the face of no man. Brethren, the time is short. Signs thicken about us that the last days draw near. The perilous times into which we enter call for such as Paul the apostle. "Quit you like men. Be strong."

#58. The Prayer and its connections (Eph. iii. 14-21).
pp. 88 - 90

"For this cause I"—with these words chapter iii. opens. They are followed by the name "Paul" and the fact that he is a "prisoner". The apostle however desires to make it plain to the Ephesians that he is a prisoner in a sacred cause, a prisoner as an essential part of his ministry, he is the prisoner OF Jesus Christ FOR you Gentiles.

He is now started upon a great explanation. What he intended to say when he commenced with the words "For this cause I" is not revealed in the first thirteen verses of this chapter. After he has shown that his imprisonment was indeed "for you Gentiles" by enlarging upon the unique revelation which he had received, namely the mystery, he rounds off the parenthesis as he had begun by referring to his sufferings "FOR you" as being "your glory".

The chapter therefore stands thus:--

iii. 1.	|	"For this cause I"	(Paul's imprisonment "FOR YOU"; His unique ministry; Paul's sufferings "FOR YOU").
iii. 14.	|	"For this cause I"	(Then follows the prayer which had been in his heart when he broke off into the illuminating digression of vv. 2-13).

It will be seen therefore that to get the right connection of the prayer, we must see it in association with, and arising out of, the truth revealed in chapter ii. The Gentiles, who previously had been aliens and foreigners, are now made nigh, created a new man, and fitly framed together as a building, and grow into a holy temple in the Lord, in Whom, said the apostle, "Ye also are builded together for an habitation of God in spirit". The Vatican MSs reads "Christ" for "God" here. The key-word is "habitation", which in the original is katoiketerion. The key-word in the prayer of 14-21 is katoikeo in the sentence "That Christ may DWELL in your hearts by faith".

The main thought of the prayer is now evident. The apostle desires that those whose collective dispensational position can be described in the terms of a holy temple shall have some individual and experimental acquaintance with this truth. Many times teaching stops too short. We are far too satisfied with dogma and not so easily moved to prayer. Every doctrine of Scripture could be followed by the words "For this cause I bow my knees". Having seen the true connection of this prayer, we must now seek to view it as a whole before looking at its parts in detail.

Eph. iii. 14-21.

A	14, 15.	a	Prayer to the Father.
		b	According to riches.
B	The Prayer. 16-19.	C1	16, 17.	In order that.		Strength.
				Reason.		Christ may dwell.
						Rooted in love.
		C2	18.	In order that.		Mighty enough.
				Reason.		Comprehend.
						Love of Christ.
		C3	19.	In order that.		Filled.
				Reason.		Fulness of God.
A	20, 21.	a	Praise to the Father.
		b	According to power.

The prayer proper occupies verses 16-19, and the little word hina "in order that" divides it into three sections. Each section prepares for and leads up to the next, which ends on the high note of "all the fulness of God".

The essential difference between the two prayers of this epistle, i. 15-23 and iii. 14-21, is found in the attitude which each takes with regard to Christ. In the first prayer we look away to the right hand of God and behold Christ there; in the second prayer we look within and are prepared to find Christ there. The first prayer strikes the note "in Christ"; the second "Christ in me". This order is inspired and vital. To look within before I am established as to what Christ is for me, and what I am in Him, is disastrous. Only when I know the truth of death, burial, resurrection and ascension "with Christ" can I contemplate the possibility that Christ may dwell by faith in my heart. In the first prayer the request is made that we might know what is the exceeding greatness of His power to usward who believe, according to the working of His mighty power which He wrought in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead. In the second prayer that power is recognized. "Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us." That power is "The power of His resurrection". Nothing short of this can avail. Any other power mocks the death and corruption of our nature.

We must leave the prayer for further study in our next article, but we need not necessarily wait before we too "bow our knees unto the Father".

A Word of Explanation.—An esteemed reader has drawn our attention to the wording of the closing paragraphs of the article in #55, page 29, suggesting that a superficial reading "cuts out the Jew entirely from the mystery and the one body".

The constitution of the one body is "of the two", "the both in one body" as Eph. ii. teaches, and therefore includes the Jew who believes the truth. At the same time Scripture speaks of the dispensation of the grace of God to the Gentiles. The predominance of the Gentile in the one body leads to the use of the word Gentile as a covering title, although the Jew finds a place by grace, the predominance of Israel in kingdom purposes leads us to speak of that phase of truth as "Jewish" without ruling out the evident inclusion of saved Gentiles.

We trust no one will be misled by the paragraph in question, and we shall always be glad to hear from readers in order that the truth may be faithfully and unambiguously stated.

#59. The Pater and the Patria (Eph. iii. 14, 15).

pp. 108 - 109

The prayer is definitely made to "The Father (of our Lord Jesus Christ)". Some MSS omit the reference to Christ. To enter here into the argument as to whether prayer should ever be addressed to Christ will lead us away from the real and helpful reason why the apostle so definitely prays to "The Father". In the verse following the apostle continues, "Of Whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named".

The English word "family" is derived from the Latin famulus = "servant". The Greek word however is derived from the word pater = "father" and is patria, a richer word. "The whole family" is in the original pasa patria = "every family". Some are rather nervous of this rendering, owing perhaps to the generalizing that is so common. It is correct, however, and that alone is sufficient. We find a scriptural reason in the use of the word in Acts iii. 25:--

> "Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with your fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

There are "families" therefore "of the earth" that are to be blessed and named with the name of the Father. These families, blessed under the terms of God's covenant with Abraham, are not the families "in heaven". Other callings and promises deal with that sphere, and pre-eminent among them is the church of the One Body, "blessed with every blessing that is spiritual in the superheavenlies". That the church of the One Body is to be reckoned as a "family" in heaven is suggested by the correspondence of the opening and closing terms of the sevenfold unity of the Spirit:--

> "One Body . . . . . one God and Father" (Eph. iv. 4-6).

The word patria occurs in Luke ii. 4, where it has to do with the house and lineage of Joseph. Apart from this personal reference, Acts iii. 25 and Eph. iii. 15 are the only other occurrences of the word. The one in a context, where Israel is prominent speaks of the families of the earth; the other, where Israel is set aside, speaks of the families in heaven, so beautifully fit together the different sections of infallible truth. Yet there are still some who look upon "Right division" as a species of "Higher Criticism", because it cuts up the Bible! To get the truth the Scripture must be cut, but "rightly cut" (orthotomeo).

The prayer, further, is based upon the reconciliation, for the Father to Whom the prayer is made is Father of every family in heaven and earth. The prayer therefore is essentially related to the dispensation of the mystery, in which things in heaven and on earth are gathered together under one Head. Prayer often indicates the dispensational position of the one who prays. The prayer that is a model for kingdom saints does not necessarily express the needs of the member of the One Body. The titles of the Father and of Christ are not the same under different dispensations. The prayers of Ephesians, Philippians and Colossians sound great depths and scale great heights, and the lives and experiences of many believers would be enriched if these prayers were to become their own heart-felt utterances.

#60. The Temple of the Lord (Eph. iii. 16, 17).
pp. 119 - 121

It will be remembered that the prayer is threefold:--

1. That He may give . . . . . to be strengthened.
2. That you may be mighty enough.
3. That you may be filled.

> "That He may give you, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with power through His spirit in the inner man."

Something of great value is evidently intended in this prayer, by the fact that the grant is to be "according to the riches of His glory". Redemption accompanied by forgiveness of sins is said to be "according to the riches of His GRACE". This grant is according to the riches of His GLORY. "Riches of glory" are associated with the Lord's inheritance (i. 18); with the mystery (Col. i. 27); and "riches in glory" with the every-day supply of all our needs (Phil. iv. 19). What a sweep this seems to be! From the heights of future glory down to the every-day needs of the believer! Within this comprehensive scope comes the prayer of the apostle. The prayer is for strength, "strengthened with power".

The word "to be strengthened" comes in I Cor. xvi. 13, and apart from that reference is used elsewhere of but two persons.

> JOHN THE BAPTIST.—"And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts, etc." (Luke i. 80).

THE LORD JESUS.—"And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon Him" (Luke ii. 40).

We can now understand perhaps a little better the reason for the "riches of glory", for this is no mean or every-day petition. It is asking for an experience similar to that of John the Baptist and the Lord Himself! Power (dunamis) was necessary to equip the apostle for his ministry, "the energy of His power" (iii. 7). The same power is at work in connection with the abundant answer to prayer of verse 20—"the power that is energizing in us". The same power is necessitated here.

By observing these references we can understand what distinctive power is intended by the apostle. It is none other than the "power of His resurrection". In the first great prayer the petition is that we may KNOW "What is the exceeding greatness of His power to usward who believe, according to the energy of the strength of His might, which He wrought (energized) in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead, and seated Him . . . . . far above all" (Eph. i. 18-21).

In the second prayer the plea is that we may EXPERIENCE this same mighty resurrection power. Two further clauses must be observed before we learn the necessity for this great power:-- "Strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man" (Eph. iii. 16).

The strengthening is "through His Spirit". We often hear great emphasis laid upon the work of the Spirit, often with a reference to Pentecost or I Cor. xii. Here is a work of the Spirit dispensationally right but sadly neglected. The Spirit Who seals is the Spirit Who strengthens. In both cases His work is the application of the resurrection of Christ. The strengthening is "with a view to the inner man". Ephesians speaks of an "old man", a "new man", and an "inner man". The inner man is connected with the "mind" in Rom. viii. 22, and contrasted with the "members" of the body. In II Cor. iv. 16 the "outward man" is spoken of as "perishing", while the inner man is "renewed" day by day.

This spiritual inward strengthening completes the preparation. The preparation of the heart is for the reception of the highest and holiest Guest:--

"That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith" (Eph. iii. 17).

We have already seen that this is a direct outcome of the glorious conclusion of Eph. ii. 22:--

"A habitation of God in Spirit."

The parallel thought in Colossians is

"Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly" (iii. 16).

This is important. Christ may dwell in the heart by faith, but Christ personally is still at the right hand of God, there to remain until the time comes for Him to return to this earth. Christ dwells in the heart by faith. Colossians suggests that Christ cannot be separated from His Word. "Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly." The Word of Christ represents His authority, His grace, His teaching.

If the apostle could say to the church at Corinth during the Acts: "What, know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?" he could say to the church at Ephesus, "Know ye not that your inner man is the temple of the Lord and the shrine of His Word?"

Brethren, do we sufficiently realize our calling? Do we seek enough to turn doctrine (Eph. ii.) into experience (Eph. iii.)? Has this model prayer been ours recently? or frequently? Let us, with the apostle, bow our knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

#61. Mighty Comprehension (Eph. iii. 17, 18).
pp. 137 – 139

It would be pardonable for the believer to feel that the prayer which leads up to the petition "that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith" can reach out no further. Yet this is not so. Wonderful as the thought is that the Church is the temple of the Lord and that each individual member may experience this blessedness, this blessing is not to be desired for its own sake. The second petition of the prayer leads on from this, and from the inner shrine of the temple reaches out to all saints and to fathomless depths.

The words "in love having been rooted and having been founded" form a connecting link much in the same way as do the words of Eph. i. 18, "The eyes of your heart having been enlightened". The first prayer (Eph. i.) does not ask that the saints' eyes may be enlightened, but makes the petition upon the assumption that they have been enlightened. So in the second prayer (Eph. iii.), "Having been rooted and founded in love" is not a subject for prayer but a basis for further advance. The double figure "rooted and founded", which refers to a tree "rooted" and a building "founded", is employed again in Col. ii. 7. There the words are "having been rooted and having been built up in Him". May we once again emphasize the value of comparing Ephesians with Colossians? Where the idea is that of "founding", the context is that of "dwelling IN US"; where the active and progressive word is "built up", the context is that of "walking IN HIM".

The prayer in Eph. iii. leads on to "being filled unto all the fulness of God" (verse 19). The exhortation of Col. ii. leads on to being "filled to the full in Him" (verse 10). Resurrection power, in other words life in all its fulness, must enter the inner man before the heart can become the dwelling place of Christ, but love must be the root-hold and the rock foundation of that one who would go further and know something of the nature of his glorious Guest.

In the first case love alone will enable us to comprehend with "all saints", for all saints in themselves are not altogether lovely. Love as well as life moves on resurrection ground, and it is as those "accepted in the Beloved" that all saints are seen.

Hagios, which is the word translated "saints", occurs fifteen times in Ephesians, nine occurrences being translated "saints" and four passages using the expression "all saints". Love to all saints is the basis of the prayer of Eph. i. Comprehension with all saints is a requisite in the prayer of Eph. iii., and indicates one of the outgoings of that love. There is an extraordinary forcefulness in the opening words of this second section:--

> "With the object that you may be mighty enough to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length and depth and height, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge" (Eph. iii. 18, 19).

Strength for the indwelling Christ, might for the understanding of His love, such terms are not usual, and emphasize the profound nature of the subject the more. The word which the A.V. translates "may be able", and which we render "may be mighty enough", is exischuo, and occurs nowhere else in the N.T. A lesser and more usual word is ischuo. The substantive ischus is used in Eph. i. 19—"according to energy of the strength of His might", and in vi. 10—"finally, strengthen yourselves in the Lord and in the power of His might". Now while the word ischuo has a variety of rendering in the A.V. such as "avail", "be able", etc., it seems impossible to ignore the evident connection of the two prayers of Eph. i. & iii., and not see the allusion to "the strength of His might" in the opening of verse 18. The R.V. recognizes the need for a fuller translation and gives "may be strong". Once again we have resurrection power indicated, here for understanding something of the love of Christ, in chapter vi. for the conflict with spiritual foes.

The meaning of the word "comprehend" is better understood when we see how the apostle uses it in I Cor. ix. 24, and Phil. iii. 12, 13—"So run, that ye may obtain"; "If indeed I may apprehend". In both of these passages a race with a prize is the context. In Acts iv. 13 the word is rightly translated "perceived", in the sense of "laying hold" of a fact. Peter's admission in Acts x. 34, "I perceive that God is not a respecter of persons", suggests the idea that this "perception" was something forced upon him rather than a process of reasoning. So in Eph. iii. 18. The might is necessary if we are to "lay hold" together with all saints what is the breadth, etc.

From the inner shrine of the temple, where Christ dwells in the heart by faith, we go forth in the strength of the risen One to survey the whole glorious fabric. The figure of the building is maintained in the terms breadth, length, depth, height.

#62. The Love that Passeth Knowledge (Eph. iii. 18, 19).
pp. 147 – 149

A study of the text is needful before we attempt an explanation. As the passage stands in the A.V. we have two subjects before us.

1. To comprehend.—The breadth, length, depth, height.
2. To know.—The love of Christ which passeth knowledge.

The Emphatic Diaglott renders verse 19, "To know even that which surpasses knowledge". Perhaps "even" is not a strictly literal rendering of the Greek te, yet it seems to catch the thought. Booomfield suggests that the sense of the passage is, "And (in short) to know the immense love of Christ . . . . . though, indeed to completely know it surpasses the powers of all finite beings". The sense is well expressed by using "even" as above. We translate the verses therefore:--

> "In order that you may mighty enough to grasp together with all saints, what (is) the breadth and length and depth and height, to know even that which surpasses knowledge – the love of Christ" (Eph. iii. 18, 19).

As one meditates upon this passage, the necessity for such a term as "mighty enough" becomes more evident. "The heaven for height, and the earth for depth" is the teaching of Prov. xxv. 3. Breadth and depth are connected with the earth and the sea in Job xxxviii. In the triumphant conclusion of Rom. viii. the apostle includes "height and depth" among those things which are unable to separate us from the love of God. The subject is confessedly too vast for human knowledge, but what little we do see in the Word of that great love only makes us long to know more.

> THE BREADTH.—"All saints." "Far off made nigh." "Gentiles."
> THE LENGTH.—"Before the overthrow of the world." "The ages to come."
> "The generations of the age of the ages."
> THE DEPTH.—"The lowest parts of the earth." "Children of wrath."
> THE HEIGHT.—"Far above all principality and power." "Far above all heavens."

The above is limited to the testimony of Ephesians, but as we extend our view and see this mighty love at work in other dispensations we shall with the apostle exclaim, "Oh the depth!" (Rom. xi. 33).

In the prayer of Eph. i. resurrection power is spoken of as the exceeding greatness of His power. In this prayer the love of Christ exceeds knowledge. This does not mean that we are not to seek to know, any more than the fact that the peace of God passes understanding prevents its enjoyment. In the new life, the "life that is life indeed" (I Tim. vi. 19) where love will be recognized as the greatest of all gifts (I Cor. xiii.), when we shall know even as we are known, this theme, the love of Christ, may well exercise our ransomed powers. Will there ever come a time when we shall have fathomed its deepest depths, or scaled its highest heights? We think not. Like God Himself this mighty love must ever be beyond our full knowledge. The words of Eph. ii. 7 suggest possibilities that submerge the mind with their immensity:--

> "That in the ages to come He may shew the EXCEEDING riches of His grace in His kindness toward us in Christ Jesus."

For redemption, and that by His blood, including the forgiveness of sins, "riches of grace" have been shewn. What will it be then when exceeding riches of grace are brought into operation? While this love of Christ is so vast as to exceed knowledge, the apostle does not hesitate to apply that love in the practical section of the epistle.

> "Walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us" (v. 2).
> "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ loved the Church" (v. 25).

While we may not be able to endorse the teaching of some, we would nevertheless avoid the error of others who certainly do assume that they know the breadth and length and depth and height of the love of Christ. We stand upon the shore of an ocean that stretches away beyond the horizon. Instead of devouring one another because we cannot agree as to its cubic measurement, let us rather trust ourselves upon puny denominational and theological computations will be gladly thrown aside as we learn to appreciate a little more what is the breadth and length and depth and height of that love that passeth knowledge.

"To know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge"
(Eph. iii. 19).

How shall we sing the love that sought?
It s Breadth and Length, its Depth and Height:
Its fulness passes all our thought
As midday sun surpasses night.

Its breadth takes all in its embrace,
The middle wall no longer stands:
To Gentiles now of every race
God's grace is preached in many lands.

What shall for us its length define?
No measure can to this extend:
The love that died to make us Thine
Has no beginning and no end.

What terms its soundless depth can tell?
True bottomless abyss, wherein,
Deeper than lowest depths of hell,
Lies buried, all Thy peoples' sin.

Its height no angel wing can soar,
Far, far above all power and might;
Yet such His grace, for us in store:
To share the Holiest in the light.

(The Foregoing hymn, written by one of our readers who attends the Bible Studies in London, is one of a number which form a collection used at such meetings.)

#63. The Pleroma and the Age Purpose (Eph. iii. 19).
pp. 165 – 170

We have seen that this wonderful prayer is composed of three sections, the third section being now before us.

> "With the object that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God" (Eph. iii. 19).

These words constitute not only the goal of the church and the climax of this prayer, they epitomize the very purpose of the ages, and the reason for all the complex scheme of redemption. "With all the fulness" is not a good rendering of the original. The R.V. reads "Unto all the fulness". Eis literally means "into" in the sense of "direction of motion", and *un*to often more truthfully expresses the meaning than *in*to. In John xi. 38 "Cometh to the grave" means "unto". To translate "Cometh into the grave" would be false; so in John xx. 1, as is proved by verse 11. The expression, "Bind them into bundles" (Matt. xiii. 30) is an instance of the English use of into that carries the idea of the object or the goal of the movement. Let us translate this passage therefore as follows:--

> "That ye may be filled with a view to all the fulness of God."

What do we understand by "the fulness of God"? Commentaries offer a great variety of interpretations, which, however varied in detail, seem to agree in the main idea that the "fulness of God" indicates His perfections, His gifts, His attributes. If the fulness of God indicates the glorious perfections of Deity, are we to understand that the apostle prays that the church may be filled with Divine omnipotence, omniscience, etc.? This does not seem scriptural.

In i. 23 the church which is His body is spoken of As "The fulness of Him that filleth all in all". This passage is surely parallel. The church is to Christ what Christ is to all things. Again in Col. ii. 9, 10:--

> "For in Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and you are filled to the full in Him Who is the head of all principality and power."

Here once again we have Divine fulness residing in the Person of Christ, the church being closely associated with it, and with Christ in His capacity as Head over principality and power. This is certainly dealing with the same truth as Eph. i. 19-23 and iii. 19. Again, in Col. i. 18, 19:--

> "He is the Head of the body, the church . . . . . for it was well pleasing that in Him all the fulness should dwell."

We will return to this verse again; meanwhile, what are we to understand by this word "fulness". The several passages which we have already consulted seem to use the word in a peculiar sense, as though it had particular reference to the purpose of the ages and the great goal of God. We lay aside the comments of men, and turn once more to the fountain of all truth, the Word. We look up to Him who used this word "fulness" with specific intent, and ask for that spirit of wisdom and revelation which He will give to those that ask Him. We turn to the first occasion where the word is used in the N.T. and the solution is provided. Over and over again we find that simply to turn to the Word afresh is in itself an inspiration. The passage is Matt. ix. 16:--

> "No man putteth a piece of new cloth into an old garment, for that which should fill it up taketh from the garment, and a worse rent is made."

The Emphatic Diaglott renders the verse:--

> "No one puts a piece of undressed cloth on an old garment; because the PATCH itself would tear the garment; and a worse rent be made."

The word here translated "patch" is the word pleroma. We believe all Scripture to be inspired, and we refuse to believe that the Holy Spirit, knowing the use that would be made of the word pleroma in the epistles, would use such a word in a sense foreign to its meaning and misleading to the seeker after truth.

We often learn the meaning of a word by observing the word which is used in contrast. For example, we know that the word "evil" in Isa. xlv. 7 means "calamity" or "inflicted evil" because the contrasting term is "peace". Had God intended the word to convey the meaning of moral evil, we believe He would have contrasted it with the word "good". The contrast to pleroma in Matt. ix. 16 is the word schisma, our English word schism. It occurs in John ix. 16; x. 19; I Cor. i. 10; xi. 18; xii. 25, always with the sense of "division". The verb schizo comes in Matt. xxvii. 51, where it speaks of the veil of the temple being "rent in two". In John xix. 24 it is used by the soldiers who said concerning Christ's garment, "Let us not rend it". It is obvious therefore that to understand the scriptural meaning of pleroma we must understand the scriptural teaching concerning schisma.

Has there come into God's creation a "rent", a "division", a "schism"? To ask the question is to perceive the intention of the word "fulness". Readers of The Berean Expositor are already acquainted with the rendering of Eph. i. 4, "Before the overthrow of the world". That indicates a rent. Gen. i. 2, "The earth became tohu and bohu", likewise speaks of a rent. Into the fair creation of Gen. i. 1 came sin and all its accompanying misery. Sin divides:--

> "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God" (Isa. lix. 2).

The very necessity for a Mediator speaks of division. The Lord Jesus Christ Himself is the great fulness of God. He is the One that shall "fill all in all". When that goal is reached the "rent" caused by Satan's rebellion and man's sin shall be "filled in", and God once more shall be all in all.

Returning to Col. i. 15-20 we see Christ presented as the image of the invisible God, the Firstborn of every creature. What is the meaning of the term, "The Firstborn of every creature"? and what is its connection with the succeeding verse, "For in Him were all things created, etc." Our understanding of this entire passage is influenced by the meaning of the word fulness. The first step towards the construction of the pleroma was the creation of Gen. i. 2 - ii. 25, with man in the image of God. To all that constituted that creation which proceeded from the Lord as the Word, the Firstborn, the Son (Heb. i.; John i.) Christ stands as Firstborn. The fulness is closely associated with the reconciliation as Col. i. 15-20 will show, and these two terms are mutually helpful in understanding their meaning.

Many of the points demanding consideration must be left for the further Series on Redemption which is in hand; we must however in this article deal a little further with the meaning of the word fulness. In the LXX the word is used in the passages "the earth", "the world", or "the sea and the fulness thereof", and always translates the Hebrew word melo. This Hebrew word makes its first appearance in Gen. xlviii. 19, "His seed shall become a multitude of nations", where the margin gives more correctly "fulness". This expresses much the same idea that is contained in the first occurrence of the word in the N.T., namely, something filling a gap, making complete, suggesting a previous rent or failure. In Isa. vi. 3 the A.V. reads, "The whole earth is full of His glory", but the margin reads, "his glory is the fulness of the whole earth". Here once again the thought impresses itself. The glory of the Lord has departed from this earth; the curse, sin and death are here. When these are put away and the glory of the Lord returns, earth will then be "complete"; it will have at last reached its goal.

In Rom. xi. 12 the "fulness" of Israel is set in contrast with their "fall" and their "diminishing", and during the time of their blindness the "fulness of the Gentiles" is brought about (25). In I Cor. x. 26 and 28, "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof" is the argument used by the apostle for (1) exercising the liberty which we have in Christ, "asking no question for conscience sake", or (2) respecting the conscience of another and so curtailing ones own liberty, "eat not". The idea is expressed in verse 31, "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God". As in Isa. vi., the glory of the Lord is associated with the fulness of the earth.

The use of the word in Gal. iv. 4—"the fulness of time", shews that it does not mean the end of time, for nearly 2,000 years have passed since then. It was rather the complement, the generation which should bring in the glorious readjustment by the birth, death and resurrection of the One who was then born. So John i. 14-16 says:--

> "We beheld His glory . . . . . full of grace and truth . . . . . and of His fulness have all we received, even the grace of the gospel for the grace of type and shadow, for the law was given through Moses, but true grace (the pleroma) came by Jesus Christ."

That pleroma "declared" the Father, for "no man hath seen God at any time". Col. i. 19 connects this "fulness" with the invisibility of God Himself, and the need for Christ as the "image":--

"Who is the image of the invisible God . . . . . for it was well pleasing that in Him should all the fulness dwell" (Col. i. 15-19).

Col. ii. 9, 10 associates the believer with it:--

"For in Him dwelleth all the fulness (pleroma) of the Godhead bodily, and ye are complete (pleroo) in Him."

God's fulness and our fulness meet together in Christ, Ephesians uses the word four times:--

"The dispensation of the fulness of the seasons" (i. 10).
"The fulness of Him that filleth all in all" (i. 23).
"That ye might be filled with a view to all the fulness of God" (iii. 19).
"The measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (iv. 13).

These four passages present a complete theme:--

A | i. 10. Dispensation. The mystery.
B | i. 23. First Prayer. The Church's goal.
B | iii. 19. Second Prayer. The Church's goal.
A | iv. 13. Dispensation. The Saints adjustment to the new truth.

Eph. i. 23 bears most directly upon the clause we are considering. The church of the one body is to Christ what Christ is to God, namely, "the fulness". The glory of God has left the earth and awaits the outcome of redemption for its return. Let the reader think of the many passages which speak of the desire and purpose of God to "dwell" among His people. Gen. iii. shewed the Lord God walking and talking with man, but this blessed fellowship was soon shattered. At the expulsion of Adam and Eve from the garden the Lord caused the cherubim to tabernacle, and later when Israel were chosen, the cherubim became the dwelling place of the Lord on earth. Israel failed, however, to reach their high calling, and the glory departed. When the Word was made flesh He tabernacled among us. He has since ascended up far above all heavens that He might fill all things (Eph. iv. 10), and when the time comes to which all scripture points, "the tabernacle of God" will be with men and "He will dwell with them".

The prayer therefore of Eph. iii. leads on to this glorious goal, and does so in three steps:--

(1) Internal strength granted so that Christ may dwell in the heart by faith.

This is the first step. This internal indwelling in the individual foreshadowing the "fullness" when reconciliation shall be complete and the great rent healed.

(2) Comprehension with all saints of the dimensions of this vast edifice, its breadth, length, depth and height, which in other words is expressed by "the love of Christ", which however passes knowledge.

This expansion from the tiny compass of the believer's heart to that glorious temple that shall include "all the saints" leads on to the third and last step.

> (3) That ye might be filled, completed, set in your place with a view to that great rounding out of the purpose of the ages, which is expressed in I Cor. xv. 24-28, "Then the end . . . . . that God may be all in all".

Without the last phase of God's purpose, viz. the dispensation of the mystery with its church of the one body, Christ would be incomplete in His office as Redeemer and Head. "The church which is His body" is the complement of that one who in turn completes all things. It is a necessity, if heaven as well as earth shall be "filled out" and the rent healed.

Here then is a prayer the magnitude of whose petition transcends all thought. Without slavish repetition or bondage shall we not approach the Father with this threefold petition more frequently? We shall, as we get to know the blessedness of our calling and its privileges.

#64. The Great Doxology (Eph. iii. 20, 21).
pp. 186 – 189

With the sublime conclusion of the prayer of Eph. iii. doctrine reaches its utmost limit. The fulness of God as expressed in the love of Christ fills all breadth, length, depth and height. Nothing more can be said. All that lies beyond that blessed time toward which all scripture points is not a matter of present revelation, and therefore cannot be a part of Christian doctrine. There is but one note possible, the note of praise, and it is fitting that the section which commenced with the benediction, "Blessed be God Who hath blessed us", should conclude, "Now unto Him . . . . . be glory". The doxology is expanded to describe more fully (1) "Him" to Whom the praise is given, (2) The medium through which the glory will be given, and (3) The duration of this praise.

"Now unto Him Who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think."—This is the character of the One to Whom such a prayer as that of Eph. iii. is made. Great as is the request, the Father to Whom the request is made is greater. Further, the suggestion is that even when we breathe these inspired petitions, we shall not apprehend nor appreciate one half of the magnitude of our request. For our encouragement however we learn that our God does not limit His answers to our understanding. He is able to exceed all our asking and all our understanding, and one of the reasons, perhaps the great reason, is explained in the next clause:--

"According to the power that worketh in us."—In the opening of the prayer the limitless source of supply is revealed—"according to the riches of His glory". In the doxology the power to grant these supplies is revealed:--

"Now unto Him Who is of power . . . . . according to the power that worketh in us."

What is this power that both works in us, and also moves the mighty arm of God? Eph. i. 19-23 presupposes that this fact will have been grasped before Eph. iii. is reached. There the apostle prays that we may know:--

> "What is the exceeding greatness of His power to usward who believe, according to the inworking of His mighty power, which He inworked in Christ when He raised Him from the dead…..…far above all…..…...Head over all things to the Church…….which is His fulness."

The power that worketh in us is the resurrection power, the power that placed Christ at the right hand of God, the power that put all things else under His feet, the power that made us members of His body, and His very fulness. That is the power that answers prayer. This power "in-worketh in us". One may say, "I do not feel it"; "Should I not have a fuller demonstration of it if I really am energized thus?" In chapter ii. we read of the unsaved that they walk according to the age of this world: that is, they are just ordinary everyday people of the world, whatever "rudiments of the world" maybe they follow. They walk in the lusts, they fulfil the wills of the flesh and the mind, they are certainly not greatly conscious of the one fact we have omitted from our quotation, they are not conscious that when they are pleasing themselves they are nevertheless walking:--

> "According to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now INWORKETH in the children of disobedience" (Eph. ii. 2).

In the same way we now seek to walk worthy of our calling, and fulfil the will of God, being guided by His written Word, and as we do, we must be INWORKED by the power of His resurrection, for no other power is possible. To this same power the apostle looked for the ability to fulfil his high office:--

> "According to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the INWORKING of His power" (Eph. iii. 7).

The doxology has been interrupted while this revelation of the power has been made, and is now resumed by the repetition of the words "Unto Him". There is a threefold ascription of praise in Eph. i. 3-14. The Will of the Father, the Work of the Son, and the Witness of the Spirit finish with the words "to the praise of His glory" or "the glory of His grace". The first prayer is offered to the Father of glory.

"Unto Him be glory by the church and by Christ Jesus."—Glory shall one day be seen as the rightful possession of One only, and all who shall in that day be glorified and presented "in glory" shall confess that it is in all its parts the plan and the perfecting of God alone. The company of saints gathered on earth and called "The church" will not be broken up and dissolved in the life to come, at least not for a period which can be spoken of as "the generations of the age of the ages". A little previously the apostle had written that through "the church" the heavenly beings were learning the manifold wisdom of God (iii. 10), and in chapter ii. 7 he reveals that the church was raised to its high place in the heavenlies:--

> "In order that in the ages to come He might shew the exceeding riches of His grace in His kindness toward us in Christ Jesus."

What we may do now in our small measure, "whether we eat or drink or whatsoever we do", we shall do then in a fuller degree. All heavenly and high activities are summed up and embraced by these words, "To Him be glory by the church". This is indeed "fulness". It will be so for the earth as we have seen by the marginal reading of Isa. vi. 3, "His glory is the fulness of the whole earth". It will be so, too, for those whose seat is in the highest heavens. When heaven and earth are united in the love of Christ, and the great dwelling place of God is again complete, Psa. xxix. 9 will be true, "every whit of it uttereth glory". This glory is to be ascribed and rendered by the church.

"For all the generations of the age of the ages."—One age is intended by the expression "the age of the ages", viz., that one which shall be the climax and crown of them all. When we say, "A Hebrew of the Hebrews", "A Pharisee of the Pharisees", the same figure is used.

In Gen. ii. 4 we have "the generations of the heaven and the earth", the history of which occupies ii. 5 - iv. 26. Within this short compass come Sin, Death, the Curse, the two Seeds (Cain and Abel), and finally Seth, the other Seed appointed to take the place of Abel. If we would understand the expression in Eph. ii. 21 we must ponder Gen. ii.-vi. How different will those generations be! Paradise restored, no more death, no more curse, no more sorrow or pain, and instead of "coming short of the glory of God", then, by virtue of the redemption and power of the risen Christ, the church shall throughout the ages to come, and to all the generations of the climax and crowning age of all, be unto the glory of God.

Amen.—Surely every reader can heartily and joyously, if also humbly, say, Amen! to this glorious prayer and this magnificent doxology. What in effect will the outcome of such an Amen! be? Let Eph. iv.-vi. answer, "Walk worthy". May the grace that saved us enable us to this end. Amen.

Redemption.

#7. Redemption, and the Covenant.
pp. 3 - 5

Lest any reader should feel that the teaching of the previous article on this theme was based upon mere deduction and inference, we turn from Eph. i., which certainly assumes the knowledge of the more elementary parts of Scripture, to look at those earlier records where details of God's dealings with His people are more numerous and the typical teaching more obvious.

> "Unto thy seed will I give this land" (Gen. xii. 7).

This was an unconditional promise to Abraham.

> "Thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not their's, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them" (Gen. xv. 13).

This foretells the interval of bondage.

> "They shall come hither again" (Gen. xv. 16).

By this we see that the covenant of Gen. xii. 7 will be fulfilled by the way of redemption.

> "The iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full" (Gen. xv. 16).

This reveals the reason for the interval of bondage.

The book of Exodus is largely occupied with the period of bondage and redemption from it. Let us therefore see whether our teaching based upon Eph. i. stands the test. We read:--

> "Israel sighed by reason of the bondage, and they cried, and their cry came up to God by reason of the bondage" (Exod. ii. 23).

Let us now observe the effect of this cry upon the Lord.

1. "And God heard their groaning."
2. "And God remembered His covenant with Abraham, etc."
3. "And God looked upon the children of Israel."
4. "And God had respect unto them" (Exod. ii. 23-25).

Turning to chapter vi. we shall find the remembrance of the covenant stated more emphatically:--

> "I have also established My covenant with them to give them the land of Canaan.
> I have also heard the groaning of the children of Israel.
> I have remembered My covenant.

I will bring you out.
I will rid you out.
I will redeem you.
I will take you to Myself.
I will be to you a God.
I will bring you in unto the land concerning the which I did swear to give it to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob.
I will give it you for an heritage" (Exod. vi. 1-8).

In the midst of chapter xii., which speaks of the passover and Israel's redemption, the Lord gives commandment concerning the keeping of the feast of unleavened bread:--

> "When ye be come to the land which the Lord will give you, according as He hath promised" (Exod. xii. 25).

Again in Deut. vii. the Lord most plainly says that He redeemed Israel because of the covenant He had made:--

> "Because the Lord loved you, and because He would keep the oath which He had sworn unto your fathers, hath the Lord brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen" (Deut. vii. 8).

When Israel's idolatry caused the Lord to threaten to blot them out, Moses found the argument concerning the covenant sufficient:--

> "And Moses besought the Lord his God and said, Lord, why doth Thy wrath wax hot against Thy people, which Thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt with great power, and with a mighty hand? . . . . . repent of this evil against Thy people. REMEMBER ABRAHAM, Isaac, and Israel, Thy servants, to whom Thou swarest by Thine own self, and saidst unto them, I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed and they shall inherit it for ever, AND THE LORD REPENTED" (Exod. xxxii. 9-14).

We will not add to these examples, as the reader can find many confirmations of the close connection which exists between redemption and the covenant. Redemption not only redeems from but to, and each one who is redeemed is redeemed in order that he may enter into that inheritance promised by unconditional covenant, before or since the foundation of the world as the case may be, according to whether he is a member of a chosen nation or church.

#8. Bondage.

pp. 35 - 37

In our survey of the scope of redemption we found that in the great types of redemption in Scripture one of two conditions was generally assumed: (1) Forfeiture of inheritance, or (2) Bondage. We now seek the light of Scripture upon this second condition, Bondage.

That redemption is from bondage the following passages will show:--

> "And deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage" (Heb. ii. 15).
> "The creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God" (Rom. viii. 21).

This deliverance is by redemption, "the redemption of the body", which is also called the "adoption", and closely associated with being "heirs of God" (see Rom. viii. 17-23). In Rom. vi. 6 the words "serve sin" carry with them the idea of bondage, for "serve" is douleuo, which in John viii. 33 is rendered "in bondage". So then we have the dual bondage of "sin and death", and this bondage is referred to under the term "dominion":--

> "Death hath no more dominion over Him" (Rom. vi. 9).
> "Sin shall not have dominion over you" (Rom. vi. 14).

To return to the great type of Israel in Egypt: there over and over again we hear of "the house of bondage" (Exod. xiii. 3, 14; xx. 2, etc.). And many times they are commanded to remember that they were "bondmen" (Deut. xv. 15; xvi. 12, etc.). From this state they were delivered by redemption:--

> "Because the Lord loved you, because He would keep the oath which He had sworn unto your fathers, hath the Lord brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen, from the hand of Pharaoh King of Egypt" (Deut. vii. 8).

Israel's lives were made "bitter with hard bondage" (Exod. i. 14). Israel's sigh and cry was "by reason of their bondage . . . . . and God heard their groaning and God remembered His covenant with Abraham . . . . ." (Exod. ii. 23, 24). The deliverance from this bondage is placed in correspondence with redemption.

> "I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians
> I will rid you out of their bondage,
> I will redeem you with stretched out arm and with great judgments" (Exod. vi. 6).

The close connection between the forfeited inheritance and bondage is seen in the next verses.

> "I will bring you in unto the land, concerning which I did sware to give it to Abraham, to Isaac and to Jacob: and I will give it you for an heritage" (vi. 8).

The law indicates the cause of the bondage of sin and death under which the whole world lies:--

> "If a thief be found . . . . . he should make full restitution: if he have nothing, then he shall be sold for his theft" (Exod. xxii. 2, 3).

The law provides for the case of an Israelite who by reason of poverty sells himself to a rich stranger; of this one the law says, "After that he is sold he may be redeemed again" (Lev. xxv. 48). What shadows of gospel substance the law contains! The parable of Matt. xviii. 23-35 is based upon the law, and in that parable the pardon of debt with its deliverance from bonds is typical of the forgiveness of trespasses.

The carnal nature of man seems to result from his bondage. "I am carnal", said the apostle, "having been sold under sin" (Rom. vii. 14). Whether the apostle here refers to his own sin, or by the words "sold under the sin" looks back to that one act whereby sin entered into the world and death by sin, we will not stay here to discuss. For our present purpose man is viewed as having been sold under sin, and no effort of his own can bring about his deliverance. If Israel were bondmen in Egypt and under the law, the Gentiles were in bondage too, as Gal. iv. 1-9 shews. All the sons of Adam, whether Jew or Gentile, are found under the bondage of sin and death, from which redemption, and that by the Kinsman-Redeemer, can alone deliver them.

#9. The Amorites, Dispossessed and Succeeded.
pp. 68 - 70

We noted in article #8 four items in the unconditional promises made by God to Abraham, the fourth item being the explanation given by the Lord as to the reason why Israel should wait 400 years before entering into the land of promise. The reason is that "the iniquity of the Amorites was not yet full".

Israel's bondage and redemption had something to do with the Amorites' iniquity, strange as the thought may appear. When the iniquity of the Amorites had reached its height, then the children of Israel were delivered out of Egypt, and upon entering the land of their inheritance were commissioned with the awful task of exterminating the Canaanites of which the Amorite was one. Amos, recalling the love of God to Israel manifested in their redemption from Egypt, says:--

> "Yet destroyed I the Amorite before them, whose height was like the height of the cedars, and he was strong as the oaks . . . . . Also I brought you up from the land of Egypt, and led you forty years through the wilderness to possess the land of the Amorite" (Amos ii. 9, 10).

This idea of dispossessing the Amorite and entering into his land in his place is evidently a feature to be noted, for Moses in Deut. ii. gives three illustrations of the same principle. Deut. ii. 1-5 speaks of the inheritance of Esau. The command is "meddle not with them". Deut. ii. 8-12 speaks of the inheritance of Moab. Again the command is "distress not the Moabites". Deut. ii. 18-21 speaks of the inheritance of Ammon. And once again Israel is commanded, "distress them not, nor meddle with them". Explanations follow in each case, which are parallel.

> "The Emims dwelt therein in times past, a people great, and many, and tall, as the Anakims, which also were accounted giants, as the Anakims: but the Moabites call them Emims" (Deut. ii. 10, 11).

This is Moab's inheritance.

> "The Horims also dwelt in Seir beforetime: but the children of Esau succeeded them (margin Heb. 'inherited them'), when they had destroyed them from before them, and dwelt in their stead, as Israel did unto the land of his possession which the Lord gave unto them" (Deut. ii. 12).

So that Esau, he too, entered into the inheritance that originally belonged to another. The attention of the reader is also drawn to the parallel case of Israel. So with Ammon:--

> "Giants . . . . . the Lord destroyed them before them; and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead" (Deut. ii. 20, 21).

A further case, still parallel, is cited of the Caphtorims who destroyed the Avims and dwelt in their stead (Deut. ii. 23). All this is introductory to the case of Israel and the Amorites:--

> "Behold, I have given into thine hand Sihon the Amorite, king of Heshbon, and his land. Begin! possess! and contend with him in battle" (Deut. ii. 24).

Surely this carefully repeated fact has a meaning and a lesson. It illuminates not only the bondage of Israel, but the whole course of human history. The Horims, the Avims, the Anakims, all giants, monsters, more than human, these are in their turn types of unseen principalities and powers in the superheavenlies, fallen angels and demons in the terrestrial heavens or "the air" (cf. Eph. ii. 2 and I Thess. iv. 17 and Rev. xvi. 17). With the case of the Amorites before us we can see more clearly the lesson of Eph. i. 3-14. The inheritance, secured by redemption in the heavenlies, to be occupied by the church of the One Body is at present held by those who are yet to be dispossessed. The Lord's dealings with Israel set forth His dealings with man, and with the church.

From hints scattered through Scripture, about which we do not care to dogmatize, we gather that Satan had, long before Adam, some close connection with this earth, and that one reason for his antagonism to man is that he sees in him one destined to dispossess him. For the purpose of redemption Christ did not take the nature of angels, principalities or powers, but the nature and likeness of men. Man too is made in the image of God, and though we may not be able to present a fully elaborated scheme before the reader, we feel that Scripture says sufficient to shew that the great conflict of the ages is not between man and God, but between Satan and God. Satan disputes each step in the purpose, the creation and the dominion of man, the choice of Jerusalem, the choice of Israel, the super-heavenly blessing of the Church, right through till the end when he is cast out unto the earth and knows his time is short. Satan, the angels that sinned, the principalities and powers that were made a show of openly, these are parallel with and typified by the Anakims, the Amorites, who were to be destroyed utterly, man, woman and child, root and branch. The command of Deut. vii. 1-3 is repeated with verbal alterations over and over again. The nations cast out from the land of promise were to be utterly destroyed, no covenant was to be made with them, no marriages contracted with them, their name was to be destroyed "from under heaven".

Because the iniquity of the Amorites had not reached its limit Israel had to go down into bondage and be redeemed by the blood of the lamb. The fall of man, his bondage and redemption is likewise closely connected with Satan and the fallen angels, and unless redemption be considered in connection with this purpose of the ages, it will never yield its full teaching nor take its right place in the vast economy of grace.

#10. The Ransom.
pp. 94, 95

One of the phases of the doctrine of redemption is expressed by the word "ransom", but whether the English conception of ransom be the meaning of the original remains to be seen. In the N.T. ransom is the rendering of lutron and antilutron, and in the O.T. of kopher and padah. Lutron and antilutron are derivatives of luo = "to loose", as one would a shoe (Mark i. 7), or more fully, as one would a person in bonds (Luke xiii. 16). Lutron is the means of loosing, whether that means be the payment of a price, the exhibition of power, is not directly specified in the word. The O.T. occurrences of the word ransom may be placed under one of two headings. They are either the translation of the Hebrew kopher, usually rendered atonement, or the Hebrew padah, usually rendered redemption. Let us give the O.T. passages first:--

> "When thou takest the sum of the children of Israel after their number, then shall they give every man a ransom (Heb. kopher, LXX Gk. lutron) for his soul unto the Lord . . . . . to make an atonement (kaphar) for your souls" (Exod. xxx. 12-15).

Other references are Job xxxiii. 24, xxxvi. 18; Psa. xlix. 7; Prov. xxi. 18, and Isa. xliii. 3. In every case the word ransom could be replaced by the word atonement. In Hos. xiii. 14; Isa. xxxv. 10; Exod. xxi. 30, the word ransom is a translation of the word padah = "to redeem".

It will be seen that the idea of a ransom must be regulated by the Scriptural doctrine of atonement and redemption; we should not seek to colour the doctrine of atonement and redemption by the conception we have of the English word ransom.

The two N.T. passages are as follows:--

> "Even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many" (Matt. xx. 28; Mark x. 45).
> "Who gave Himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time" (I Tim. ii. 6).

There are several features in these two passages that are far reaching in their bearing upon doctrine:--

1. THE PERSON.--Matthew records the title "The Son of Man"; Paul writing by the same inspiration speaks of "The One Mediator between God and men, the Man Christ Jesus".

2. THE OFFERING.--In both passages it is the Lord who "gives". Matthew records the Lord as saying, "The Son of Man came to give His life". Paul says, "Who gave Himself". "Life" in Matt. xx. 28 is psuche, usually rendered "soul".

3. THE RANSOM.--Matthew uses the word lutron. Paul uses the word antilutron. Matthew follows lutron by the word anti (translated "for"), Paul follows antilutron by the word huper (translated "for").

4. THE RANSOMED.--The ransom of Matt. xx. is anti pollon, "for many", the ransom of I Tim. ii. is huper panton, "for all". Each of these items demands careful study. To get down to the bed rock upon which they rest will necessitate a painstaking search into the Word of truth.

Studies in the Book of the Revelation.

#49. Babylon the Great (xvii., xviii.).

pp. 20 - 23

On two occasions during the outpouring of woe and judgment Babylon has come into notice. First after the announcement of the aionian gospel by an angel, "There followed another angel, saying Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city", and the reason of Babylon's fall follows:--"Because she made all nations drunk of the wine of her fornication". At the close of the seventh vial there comes another reference to Babylon. "And great Babylon came into remembrance before God." This time instead of speaking of the wine which Babylon made the nations to drink, a parallel judgment is indicated, "To give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of His wrath".

So important a place does the fall of Babylon occupy in the Revelation, that chapters xvii. and xviii. are devoted to it, and the opening verses of xix. contain Hallelujahs over the destruction of the city. The overthrow of Babylon is introduced by a vision of a woman. Then follows the explanation of the symbol. These two phases occupy chapter xvii. One of the seven angels that had the seven vials addressed John, saying:--

> "Come hither, I will shew unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters: with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication" (xvii. 2).

The apostle was thereupon carried away "in the spirit into the wilderness", an expression very similar to that of i. 10, "I was in spirit in the day of the Lord". The vision that he saw next described:--

> "I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-coloured beast, full of the names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns" (xvii. 3).

There are further descriptions of the beast. The description of the woman follows:--

> "And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand, full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication" (xvii. 4).

The symbolic significance of this vision is next indicated. In the A.V. the whole wording is printed in capitals, as though all formed a part of the title upon the woman's forehead. The R.V. margin, however, gives it as though the word "mystery" is an explanation, but not a part of the title. We read the verse then as follows:--

> "And upon here forehead was a name written, a mystery, 'BABYLON THE GREAT', the mother of the harlots and of the abominations of the earth" (xvii. 5).

This passage is threefold:--

1. There is here a “mystery”.
2. There is the name itself, “Babylon the Great”.
3. There is the meaning of the mystery of the name, “The mother, etc.”

In chapter i. 20 we have a guide to the interpretation of the mysteries suggested:--

> “The mystery of the seven stars in My right Hand . . . . .
> The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches.”

The name therefore “Babylon the Great” was a secret symbol of something deeper. If however we are in ignorance or confusion as to the basis of this symbol, we shall not be ready to follow the inspired interpretation, and for the sake of clearness we must set before the reader the scriptural history and prophecy concerning Babylon before we go further into the intricate details of chapter xvii.

Babylon, as the seat of government from which commenced “the times of the Gentiles”, is that great city which existed in the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, but Babylon, the mother of harlots, is that city founded by Nimrod the rebel. Idolatry when traced to its source dips finally underground, and is found originating in the secret rites and teachings of ancient Babel, and idolatry with its associated obscenities is the dark and persecuting background of the whole book of the Revelation. The ancient mystery cults were all derived from Babel.

Bunsen says that the religious system of Egypt itself, ancient as it is, was derived from Asia and “the primitive empire in Babel”. It is not our purpose to attempt to set forth the ramifications of the Babylonian system, the reader will find it most fully set forth in Hislop’s “Two Babylons”. There is practically no religious system on earth to-day that does not use the symbols, names and ritual of this leavening set of lies. What Jerusalem is yet to be in the hands of our God for blessing, Babylon has been and yet will be, in the hands of Satan, for a curse.

There are many expositors who believe and teach that the Babylon of the Revelation is the Roman Catholic Church. This we must set aside as not fulfilling the Scriptures. Isaiah wrote prophetically of Babylon. Did he speak of the Roman Apostacy or of the city of Babylon? Let him speak for himself:-- > shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah” (Isa. xiii. 19).

The whole of Isa. xiii. should be read, and its many parallels with Revelation noted. Its time period is spoken of as “the day of the Lord” (verse 9). Its signs are the darkening of the sun, moon ad stars (10). Its object is the punishing of the wicked and the proud (11). Its accompaniments are the shaking of the heavens and the removing of the earth (13). These four points of resemblance are enough to connect the Babylon of Isaiah’s burden with that of John in the Revelation.

When we read on into Isa. xiv. and hear the proverb taken up against the “King of Babylon”, we again realize that prophecy is pointing onward to the great apostate head of World Rule who is to seek universal worship for himself, saying "I will be like the Most High" (Isa. xiv. 4-23 and Rev. xiii.). Jeremiah prophecies concerning Babylon, and he too is careful to locate Babylon geographically:--

> "The word that the Lord spake against Babylon and against the land of the CHALDEANS" (Jer. l. 1).

One incident that marks the overthrow of Babylon is the return of both Israel and Judah:--

> "In those days and in that time, saith the Lord, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together . . . . . let us join ourselves unto the Lord in a perpetual covenant" (Jer. l. 4, 5).

This fixes the time of fulfillment as being yet future. The nation concerning whom Jeremiah prophecies is called "the hindermost (or the last) of the nations" (Jer. l. 12), which is the position of Babylon at the time of the Lord's return. The reader is urged to read Jer. l. and li. for himself and note the many points of contact with Revelation. To stimulate the reader to make the comparison we transcribe the following list of parallels from Dr. E. W. Bullinger's "The Apocalypse". A similar list may be found in the prophetic studies of B. W. Newton:--

Isa. xxiv. 8, 10.		Rev. xviii. 23.

When John saw the vision of the woman sitting upon the beast he said:--

> "And I saw the woman drunk with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus; and I wondered when I saw her with a great wonder" (Rev. xvii. 6).

The question that arises sooner or later in this connection is "Will Babylon be rebuilt?" Zechariah, the prophet of Israel's restoration, foretells the revival of Babylon. In Zech. v. I-11 we have a woman, and wickedness taken back in an Ephah "to build it an house in the LAND OF SHINAR". This prophecy necessitates the revival of Babylon. Babylon has never been destroyed as Scripture says it will be—"suddenly" (Jer. li. 8). When the stone cut out without hands struck the Colossus on the feet, the whole image, the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver and the gold were broken to pieces together, and the stone became a great mountain and filled the whole earth.

Gentile dominion and Satanic counterfeit will both be headed up again in Babylon, and there will be judge. Mesopotamia cannot be kept out of the world's politics any more than Jerusalem could be kept out of the last great war. The sands of time are running out. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh, and whether on the Mount of Olives, in the air, or in glory, may we be ready to meet Him.

#50. The Kingdom of Satan on Earth (xvii.).
pp. 57 - 60

Upon the expression of wonder with which John greeted the vision of the woman and the scarlet coloured beast the angel said to him:--

> "Wherefore didst thou wonder? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns" (xvii. 7).

This is encouraging, for the mystery is great. At first sight the explanation seems more difficult to grasp than the vision itself. The order in which the interpretation is given is (i) the beast, (ii) the woman. So far as the beast itself is concerned, its supernatural character is first put forward in verse 8. Then the meaning of the seven heads and the ten horns follow (9-14). The waters upon which the woman sits are interpreted in verse 15, and then finally the woman is explained in verse 18. This covers all in the vision that needs explanation.

> "The beast that thou sawest was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition" (xvii. 8).

These few words sketch the past, present and future of the beast.

1. He was.—He had therefore lived in the past.

2. He is not.—That is to say, when the time comes into which John had been taken by the spirit, the beast will have been slain. Rev. xiii. adds information here. There the beast rises up out of the sea, having ten horns and seven heads. One of the beast's heads had been slain as it were to death, and yet was healed, and all the world wondered after the beast.

3. He shall be present.—He is about to ascend out of the abyss, and to go into perdition. The A.V. reads "and yet is", but all the best MSS read kai parestai = "shall be present" for kaiper estin = "and yet is".

There is in this statement an indication that the beast will counterfeit the parousia of the Lord. In II Thess ii. 8, 9 we read:--

> "Then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of His mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of His parousia, even him whose parousia is after the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders."

One of the Divine Titles in this book is the unfolded name Jehovah—"Him which is, and which was, and which is to come". The counterfeit of this name is seen in the description of the beast—"He was, and is not, and shall be present". There is also a very evident imitation of the glorious words of Rev. i. 18, "I am He that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive unto the ages of the ages".

The ascension of the beast from the abyss after it could be said of him "he is not" indicates that we are here dealing with something superhuman. In some form or other this is life from the dead. Just how far Satan has the power of giving back life we do not pretend to know, and how much is real and how much is deception we cannot say. The statements of Scripture plainly intimate the miraculous, and II Thess. ii., already quoted, uses the same words "power, signs, wonders" as are used in Heb. ii. 4, with the added qualification "lying". In Rev. xvii. 8 we read:--

> "And they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the overthrow of the world."

In Rev. xiii., after describing the superhuman phase of this beast, verse 8 says:--

> "And all that dwell on the earth shall worship him, whose names have not been written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the overthrow of the world."

Before the angel proceeds to give further detail, he adds the words, "Here is the mind that hath wisdom" (xvii. 9). This is a close correspondence with the closing verse of chapter xiii., "Here is wisdom, let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast". There is evidently some close association between the number of the beast, 666, or his mark, and the threefold description "He who was, and is not, and shall be present". It seems very probable that his mark, which all his followers will have to wear, will be some device that will set forth this great Satanic counterfeit of the resurrection. Practically all of the peculiar and sacred prerogatives of the Saviour have been appropriated by false leaders and systems, but it remains for the superhuman beast at the end to travesty His Name, "the One who was, and is, and is to come", His resurrection and His parousia.

We must not omit another most important reference. In Rev. xii. we have the great sign of the woman and the birth of the man-child, and there we have a description of Satan—"a great red dragon having SEVEN HEADS and TEN HORNS". There is war in heaven and Satan is cast out into the earth. Satan DESCENDS (xii. 12 katabaino), and the beast ASCENDS (xiii. 1 anabaino). Both words are used of Christ. The wild beast that ascends from the sea is described in exactly the same terms as was the great red dragon, "having TEN HORNS and SEVEN HEADS". One important difference is made, which we must remember as we proceed, and that is, the dragon has "on his heads seven crowns", whereas the beast has "on his horns ten crowns and on his heads names of blasphemy".

The prophet Daniel saw this same monster in vision, and describes it in Dan. vii. Four beasts came up from the sea, the first like a lion, the second like a bear, the third like a leopard having four heads, and a fourth beast not likened to anything, and this beast had ten horns. Here again we have the seven heads and ten horns. The lion = one head; the bear = one head; the leopard = four heads; and the fourth beast = one head. Total, seven heads. Returning to Rev. xiii. 2 we find Dan. vii. is immediately before us:--

> "And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion."

In Dan. vii. 14 we see the Ancient of Days sitting and the Son of man brought near Him, and > "There was given Him dominion, and glory, and a Kingdom, that all peoples, nations, and languages should serve Him."

In Rev. xiii. 2-7 we read of this beast:--

> "And the dragon gave him his power, and his throne, and great authority . . . . . and power was given him over all kindreds and tongues and nations."

One thing seems clear amidst all the complicated imagery and wording, namely, that the last kingdom which shall be upon earth before the coming of Christ shall be "diverse from all Kingdoms" (Dan. vii.), for it shall be the kingdom of Satan on earth, the beast being possessed of all Satan's authority and power, so that when men "wonder after the beast" they "worship the dragon", just as there is yet to be a kingdom on the earth which is also to be diverse from all kingdoms, namely, the kingdom of God, the kingdom of the Lion-Lamb, and when the world wonders after that kingdom of blessedness and shall see Him Who really died and rose again, they shall in their turn worship Him that sitteth upon the throne and also the Lamb. The beast that supports Babylon is Satanic in its fullest degree.

To this fearful end the Gentile world is moving. To this awful blasphemy apostate Israel too will incline, and make their covenant with hell and with death. Antichrist will be to the Jew what the beast will be to the Gentile, an outward manifestation of Satan's final usurpation of the throne of God just before the end. What a blessed thing to be saved out of all this wickedness and horror. Yet science, and politics and religion will have so completely blinded the eyes of men that they will believe that the rising of the seven-headed monster from the abyss will be the millennial dawn, whereas it will be the setting down of the blackness of darkness for ever.

#51. The Seven Heads and the Ten Kings (xvii.).
pp. 91 - 94

A further description of the seven heads and the ten horns is given by the angel in Rev. xvii. to that which is given in xii. and xiii. We must remember that the explanation which starts in verse 9 reads straight on and should be translated thus:--

> "The seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth, and they are seven kings."

We may not be quite clear why there is this double interpretation here, but it is clear enough for us to understand that the seven heads represent seven kings. Possibly the introduction of the symbol of mountains is connected with the fact that the woman represents a city. The transition would be then:--

The Woman.	The Seven-headed Beast.
The woman is a city.	The heads are mountains.
The city reigns.	The mountains are kings.

The seven kings are further described:--

> "Five are fallen" (the word indicates a violent death).
> "The one is" (that is at the time of the vision).
> "The other is not yet come."

The order therefore is:---

2. \
3. } Kings already fallen.
4. /
5. /
6. The sixth king reigning at this point of the vision.
7. The seventh king not yet come.

When the seventh king ascends the throne "He must continue a short space". We are not here told how the seventh king comes to his end, but in chapter xiii. we find that one of the heads of the beast was wounded to death and the deadly wound was healed.

> "The beast that was and is not, even He is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition" (xvii. 11).

In verse 8 we read:--

> "The beast that thou sawest was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the abyss, and go into perdition."

The ascending out of the abyss is parallel with the statement that he is the eighth and of the seven. The eighth therefore is the superhuman stage after the deadly wound had been healed. This eighth king does not add another head to the beast, for "he is of the seven". Not merely "of the seventh" although that is true, the resuscitated king is "of the seven" and contains within himself the previous seven heads, so that this eighth king is spoken of not as a king merely, but as "the beast". He is first mentioned in xi. 7, where speaking of the two witnesses it says:--

> "And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the abyss shall make war against them."

These witnesses occupy a period of 3-1/2 years before their death (verse 3). The holy city is trodden under foot of the Gentiles for the same period (verse 2). In chapter xiii. the beast receives power to continue 3-1/2 years. This period seems to be the extent of the reign of the beast, for the seventh angel sounds soon after the death of the two witnesses.

The satanic kingdom has seven crowned heads (xii. 3), but the final manifestation in the beast that ascends out of the abyss has ten crowned horns (xiii. 1). We are not definitely told that the seven heads were not crowned, and seeing that they represented reigning kings, we must understand the ten crowns to be additional. This is in line with the angel's explanation:--

> "And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but they receive authority as kings one hour with the beast" (xvii. 12).

In Dan. vii. 24 the description is "And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise". The ten kings arise out of the fourth kingdom which was diverse from the others. They are not human, they are Satan's princes and are spiritual. This observation is most important. One feels their presence even in Dan. ii. The descriptions of the earlier kingdoms of Gentile dominion read smoothly enough, but when the toes of the image are described the language becomes involved:--

> "And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly brittle. And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, THEY shall mingle themselves with the seed of MEN; but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay. And in the days of THOSE KINGS shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, etc." (Dan. ii. 42-44).

Who are meant by "they"? If they are ordinary human beings, why speak of them mingling themselves with the seed of "men"? "Those kings" are evidently "they" and "they" are the toes. The toes are "ten" in number, and although this final phase of the Colossus was not a subject for Nebuchadnezzar, Daniel says enough to let us understand that Gentile dominion will finally merge itself into a confederacy of ten kings who shall be superhuman, and that although they will attempt to mingle with the seed of men they shall not do so properly. It was left for Daniel himself to see the vision of this monstrous kingdom and the ten kings that arose out of it. Some readers may be a little skeptical as to the possibility of these more than human kings, and therefore we might notice Dan. x. A glorious heavenly being appears to Daniel. The description of his glory is so like that of Christ in Rev. i., that some have felt that it must be the same. The effect upon Daniel was overpowering. This mighty messenger reveals to Daniel the fact that "the Prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood him one and twenty days" and it necessitated the help of Michael the archangel before he could get through to Daniel! Not only is there this mighty Prince of Persia, but says the messenger, "the Prince of Grecia shall come". These princes cannot be merely human, for no human being could withstand for one and twenty days such a glorious person as appeared to Daniel. Ten such kings form part of the beast at the time of the end. They had no kingdom until the beast ascends out of the abyss, then they reign together with him. How closely Satan travesties truth.

When the true King reigns, there will be associated with Him those who also received a deadly wound and had been healed:--

> "I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus . . . . . and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years" (Rev. xx. 4).

Of these ten kings it is written, Rev. xvii. 13, "These have one purpose". Gnome comes again twice in verse 17:--

> "For God inclined their hearts to carry out His purpose, even to carry out one purpose and to give their kingdom to the beast till the words of God shall be fulfilled."

What a comforting thought in this awful nightmare that even Satan's Princes are beneath the control of God! Seeking in this final desperate throw to accomplish the purpose of their fallen master, they nevertheless can do nothing against the truth.

> "These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them; for He is Lord of lords and King of kings: and they that are with Him are called, and chosen, and faithful" (xvii. 14).

This war is described more fully in chapter xix. Before that takes place however another part of the Divine purpose must be fulfilled. Babylon, the great city, rules over peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues (xvii. 15), and the kings of the earth (not the ten kings) are in league with her. When the moment arrives the ten kings and the beast throw over the attitude of support hitherto given to Babylon and make her desolate. Thus Babylon, that wicked city, with its long history of infamy finds in the final phase of its anti-christian activity its own executioner. This overthrow is described in detail in chapter xviii., which we must consider in another paper.

#52. The End of Babylon (xviii.).
pp. 121 - 124

The whole of the xviiith chapter is devoted to the record of the destruction of Babylon. The fall of Babylon has been spoken of in earlier chapters, but the actual narrative is reserved until the last because it is the great tragic climax of the history of man on earth. When Babylon falls, the end has come, and the long-prayed-for kingdom of righteousness dawns.

> "Babylon is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of demons, and a hold of every unclean spirit, and a hold of every unclean and hateful bird" (Rev. xviii. 2).

There is a fulfillment here of the prophecy of Isa. xiii. 21, 22:--

> "Wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there. And the wild beasts of the islands shall cry in their desolate houses, and dragons in their pleasant palaces."

Jeremiah says of Babylon:--

> "It is a land of graven images, and they are mad upon the idols, therefore the wild beasts . . . . . the owls shall dwell therein" (l. 38, 39).
> "And Babylon shall become heaps, a dwelling place for dragons, an astonishment, and an hissing, without an inhabitant" (li. 37).

Isaiah and Jeremiah both speak of dragons; Revelation speaks of demons and unclean spirits. In Rev. ix. 14 we learn that at the river Euphrates were bound four angels, and upon their being loosed a demon army of two hundred thousand thousand was let loose also. Babylon is to be the prison house (phulake) of every unclean spirit and the habitation of demons. The time for judgment does not come immediately at the destruction of Babylon, and here at this spot will be gathered and held all the unclean spirits and demons that have worked such mischief and ruin among men, while the thousand-year reign of Christ shall run its course. Behind the idols of the Gentiles were the demons, so taught the apostle Paul:--

> "The things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to demons, and not to God" (I Cor. x. 20).

The fall of Babylon and its fate just described is because of its effect upon all the nations of the earth. There appears to be need for a revision of the text of Rev. xviii. 3. Instead of reading as the A.V. "For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication", we read "Because all nations have fallen by reason of the wine of the fury of her fornication". Compare:--

> "The nations have drunken her wine; therefore the nations are mad. Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed" (Jer. li. 7, 8).

As Babylon has caused the ruin of all the nations of the earth, so Babylon shall fall as a consequence. As Babylonianism has robbed the nations of their wits and their morals as strong wine will, so let her cup be filled double. Let her become the prison-house of these demon and unclean spirit agencies of destruction. That there is this element of retribution intended Rev. xviii. 6, 7 will shew:--

> "Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works. In the cup which she hath filled fill to her double. How much she hath glorified herself and indulged, so much torment and sorrow give her."

A call goes forth at this point to the people of God:--

> "Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues" (verse 4).

"My people."—When Nebuchadnezzar became the head of gold, Israel became Lo Ammi, "Not My people". At the return from Babylon they came in favour again, but this position was again lost in A.D.70 at the destruction of the temple. When that great Babylonian dominion falls, the moment will have arrived for Israel once more to become "My people". These "people" who are called upon to "come out" are bidden in Jeremiah to "remember the Lord afar off, and let Jerusalem come into your mind" (Jer. li. 50). At the fall of Babylon Israel repent:--

> "In those days, and at that time, saith the Lord, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping: they shall go, and seek the Lord their God. They shall ask the way to Zion, with their faces thitherward" (Jer. l. 4, 5).

The fall of Babylon is to be sudden:--

> "Therefore shall her plagues come in one day" (Rev. xviii. 8).
> "In one hour is thy judgment come" (Rev. xviii. 10).
> "These two things shall come to thee in a moment in one day . . . . . desolation shall come upon thee suddenly" (Isa. xlvii. 9, 11).

Babylon is to be utterly burned by fire (Rev. xviii. 8). Jer. li. 25 says that Babylon shall become "a burnt mountain". The destruction of Babylon will cause universal woe:--

> "The Kings of the earth . . . . . shall bewail her . . . . . and the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her" (Rev. xviii. 9, 11).
> "At the noise of the taking of Babylon the earth is moved, and the cry is heard among the nations" (Jer. l. 46).

These features when taken together prove that this fall of Babylon is future, and therefore that Babylon must revive and once more take a prominent place in the earth. For the sake of clearness let us summarize these points:--

1. The return and repentance of Israel and Judah together.
2. The terrific suddenness of the blow.
3. The destruction by fire.
4. The world-wide consternation at her fall.

These features have never yet been fulfilled. Babylon slowly dwindled away. Arabs do pitch their tents there. There was a church there in apostolic times (I Pet. v. 13), and before the war a Turkish governor found enough people there to pay taxes to the Sultan's government. An indication of the character of Babylon is found in the list of things which made up the merchandise whereby the merchants of the earth grew rich:--

> "Gold, and silver, and precious stones, and pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and citron wood, and all manner of vessels of ivory, and all manner of vessels of most costly wood, and of copper, and iron, and marble, and cinnamon, and spice, and incense, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and wheat, and cattle, and sheep, and horses, and carriages, and bodies, and souls of men" (Rev. xviii. 12, 13).

It will be observed that while gold and silver are included, iron as a raw material is not wanted. Vessels of iron already made are included. The timber too is costly and beautiful (not the timber of commerce); spices, incense and unguents speak of luxury and ritual, and lastly the merchandise includes the "bodies and souls of men". The papyri use the word "body" as a synonym for a "slave"; here the slavery is so deep that it includes both body and soul. The traffic in these articles with Babylon was so great that the merchants of the earth grew rich in their trade—"the abundance of her luxury" (verse 3). Babylon is not a commercial city. She imports luxuries, but does not export in exchange. It will be observed that shipmasters and mariners are included. Herodotus is referred to by Rawlinson as saying that the Euphrates was navigable 500 miles from its mouth. Not only do the kings of the earth, the merchants and ship owners raise a cry at the fall of Babylon, but the call goes forth:--

> "Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye saints, and ye apostles, and ye prophets, seeing that God hath avenged you on her" (Rev. xviii. 20).

This rejoicing is recorded in the opening verses of chapter xix. Then comes the great symbol of utter destruction with the wonderful accompaniment of the prophetic dirge:--

> "A mighty angel took up a stone like a millstone and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found NO MORE AT ALL" (Rev. xviii. 21).
> "Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise from the evil that I will bring upon her" (Jer. li. 64).

Music and mirth, craftsmanship and domestic work, the lamp and light of hearth and home, the voice of bride and bridegroom shall be known in Babylon NO MORE AT ALL. We do not know how words could be used to express more thoroughly and irrevocably the destruction that falls upon Babylon the great. Finally:--

> "by her sorceries were all nations deceived, and in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all the slain upon the earth" (Rev. xviii. 23, 24).

Such is the twofold indictment, deceiver and destroyer. With the judgment of Babylon is introduced the first of a blessed series of "no more's", which expand and include the sea, sorrow, sin, death, and the curse.

#53. Babylon. Is it literal? and its fall future? (xviii.).
pp. 132 - 135

Before entering into the teaching of chapter xix., some readers may appreciate a summary of the teaching of Scripture and an examination of the question, Is the fall of Babylon future? Let us seek Scriptural answers to the following questions.

Is the Babylon of prophecy to be understood literally?

There are two main prophecies, Isa. xiii., xiv. and Jer. l., li. Let us observe the way in which Babylon is there described. Isa. xiii. 19 speaks of Babylon as "The beauty of the Chaldees' excellency", and it is situated where it is a likely thing for Arabs to pitch their tents (20). Jer. l. opens with the words, "The word that the Lord spake against Babylon and against the land of the Chaldeans". The connection between Babylon and the land of the Chaldeans is seen again in verse 8, 10, 25, 35, 45; li. 4, 24, 35, 54. Not only so, but the symbol of Babylon's fall is connected with the river Euphrates (Jer. li. 63). We don not think words could be plainer.

Supposing we agree that the Babylon of Isaiah and Jeremiah is literal, how does that prove that the Babylon of Rev. xvii., xviii. is literal too?

Let us "search and see".

Jer. li. 13. "O thou that dwellest upon many waters . . . . . thine end is come, and the measure of thy covetousness."	Rev. xvii. 1. "Come hither, I will shew unto thee the judgment of the great whore, that sitteth upon many waters."
Jer. li. 7. "Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord's hand, that made all the earth drunken. The nations have drunken of her wine: therefore the nations are mad."	Rev. xvii. 4 and 2. "Having a golden cup in her hand, full of abominations." "The inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication."
Isa. xlvii. 5, 7. "O daughter of the Chaldeans . . . . . the lady of kingdoms." "Thou sadist , I shall be a lady for ever . . . . . Therefore hear now this, thou that art given to pleasures, that dwellest carelessly, that sayest in thine heart, I am, and none else beside me; I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children; but these two things shall come to thee in a moment in one day, the loss of children, and widowhood."	Rev. xvii. 18, xviii. 7, 8. "The woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth." "How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her; for she hath said in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine."
Jer. li. 25. "I will make thee a burnt mountain."	Rev. xviii. 8. "She shall be utterly burned with fire."
Jer. li. 45. "My people, go ye out of the midst of her."	Rev. xviii. 4. "Come out of her, My people."
Jer. l. 15. "As she hath done, do unto her."	Rev. xviii. 6. "Reward her even as she rewarded you."
Jer. li. 63, 64. "And it shall be, when thou hast made an end of reading this book, that thou shalt bind a stone to it, and cast it into the midst of Euphrates; and thou shalt say, Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise from the evil that I will bring upon her."	Rev. xviii. 21. "And a mighty angel took up a stone like to a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all."

We believe the parallels are too evident to need further remark.

May not the fall of Babylon have taken place already?

We will answer this question by noting

(a) Marks of time.

"THEN shall his yoke depart from off them" (Israel) (Isa. xiv. 25).

> "Her time (i.e. Babylon's time) is near to come . . . . . FOR the Lord will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and set them in their own land . . . . . and they shall rule over their oppressors" (Isa. xiii. 22, xiv. 1-4).
>
> "In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping; they shall go, and seek the Lord their God . . . . . join ourselves to the Lord by a perpetual covenant that shall not be forgotten" (Jer. l. 4, 5).
> "In those days and in that time, saith the Lord, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none" (Jer. l. 18-20).

The fall of Babylon synchronizes with the restoration of Israel and Judah. It must therefore be future. Further, the Scriptures already considered declare that this blow shall fall in the Day of the Lord.

> "Howl ye, for the day of the Lord is at hand: it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty . . . . . and Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah" (Isa. xiii. 6-19).

(b) Other signs.

The fall of Babylon is placed in a setting of world-wide judgment.

> "I will punish the WORLD for their evil" (Isa. xiii. 11).

The fall of Babylon is accompanied by signs in the heavens.

> "The stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth and the moon shall not cause her light to shine . . . . . therefore will I shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place, in the wrath of the Lord of Hosts, and in the day of His fierce anger" (Isa. xiii. 10 and 13).

This is dated for us in Matt. xxiv. as being "immediately after the tribulation of those days", and is closely connected with the Lord's parousia.

The fall of Babylon is to be sudden.

> "Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed: howl for her" (Jer. li. 8).
> "Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come" (Rev. xviii. 10).

The gradual decline of Babylon in no sense corresponds with this emphasis upon its sudden end. In the days of Alexander the Great, Babylon was a city strong enough to have attempted resistance against him. It did not do so, but welcomed the conqueror, who commanded the rebuilding of its temples. Babylon therefore was not suddenly destroyed when the Medes took the kingdom. In the time of Tiberius Strabo speaks of Babylon as being "to a great degree deserted". Peter wrote his epistle from Babylon, where a church had been formed. In A.D.460 a writer says that Babylon was only inhabited by some Jews, and from Babylon soon after this was produced the Babylonian Talmud. In A.D.917 Ibn. Hankal speaks of Babylon as "a small village". In A.D.1100 a fortified town is mentioned, named Hillah (from Arabic to rest, to take up abode). In A.D.1811 Hillah was visited by Rich who found a population of between six and seven thousand Arabs and Jews. The land which supports even this number of people cannot be called "desolate, so that no man shall dwell therein" (Jer. l. 3). If Hillah has been built out of the stones that composed the greater buildings of Babylon, then the words of Jer. li. 26 have never yet been fulfilled: "They shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations, but thou shalt be desolate for ever".

No useful purpose will be served by lengthening these evidences. We believe that the testimony of Scripture is clear and unambiguous: that Babylon, in the land of the Chaldeans, on the Euphrates, will be revived to accord with the description of Isa. xiii., Jer. l. & li. and Rev. xvii. & xviii.: that in the day of the Lord, and accompanied by signs in the heavenly bodies, Babylon will be suddenly destroyed and become like Sodom and Gomorrah. Throughout the thousand-year reign of Christ, Babylon will remain a witness to all the world, a prison house of every unclean spirit, a place shunned and abhorred by all men. In direct contrast with this will be the glory of restored Israel and the city of Jerusalem.

We look upon Rome and Romanism as one of many corrupt streams that flow from Babylon, but do not believe that this most corrupt daughter can be called the mother of all abominations of the earth. The issues are vaster and deeper than can be contained within the history of the professing church, and we believe that the united testimony of Scripture demands a future rebuilt Babylon followed by utter destruction at the coming of the Lord.

#54. The Marriage of the Lamb (xix.).

pp. 155 - 158

"Alas! Alas!" cried the merchants of earth, "Hallelujah", cried heaven, when great Babylon fell. The heavenly cry is made by

A | Much people in heaven.
B | Four and twenty elders.
B | Four living ones.
A | A great multitude.

The cry of "much people in heaven" is followed by the reference to the "great whore, which did corrupt the earth". The cry of the "great multitude" is followed by the reference to the wife of the Lamb. Babylon and Israel, the false and the true, start together in Gen. xi., xii. For a time the false is in the ascendancy, but at the end judgment is swift and without remedy and the true rises out of the dust.

The first ascription of praise in the Revelation arises from the redeemed company who have been made a kingdom of priests. We have a parallel in Isaiah. First, in Isa. liii. they look upon Him Whom they pierced and mourn for Him, then Isa. liv. opens with the word "Sing". This time it is not as a kingdom of priests, but as a restored wife that the nation is addressed:

> "Thou shalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more. For thy Maker is thy husband . . . . . for the Lord hath called thee as a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth, when thou wast refused, saith thy God" (Isa. liv. 4-6).

The day of Israel's return to the Lord is likened to the day when they came up out of Egypt, which likeness is often referred to when speaking of the end. So Hos. ii. 15-20 says:--

> "She shall sing there, as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt. And it shall be at that day, saith the Lord, that thou shalt call Me 'My husband' . . . . . and I will betroth thee unto Me for the age, yea I will betroth thee unto Me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving kindness and in mercies. I will even betroth thee unto Me in faithfulness."

This wife who had been repudiated (Hos. ii. 2) is said to be "betrothed" upon her return, so Isa. lxii. 5 uses the figure:--

> "As a young man marrieth a virgin . . . . . and as a bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee."

This is followed in Isa. lxiii. with the prophecy of the coming of the Lord in vengeance, "their blood shall be sprinkled upon My garments", being parallel with the passage in Rev. xix., "He was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood"; the "garments like him that treadeth the wine fat" being parallel with "He treadeth the winepress of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God" (Rev. xix. 15).

The close association which is made by Isa. lxii. and lxiii. between the marriage of Israel and the treading of the winepress of the wrath of God enables us to see with the same sequence in Rev. xix. that we have there the fulfillment of these earlier prophecies of restoration. For a thousand years the marriage, here celebrated, shall last. Whether it be true to say that it is then done away, and that the Holy City which descends out of heaven called "The Bride" is something quite different, we will consider in its place. Of the Lamb's wife it is said that she had "made herself ready"; in chapter xxi. the word appears again in the expression, "prepared as a bride adorned for her husband".

Some see a distinction here between the standing of the Church and of Israel, as the Church can by no means be said to make itself "ready". It is very likely that the question of grace and works has nothing to do with the passage, and that it simply refers to the adornment of the bride which was so customary in Bible lands. In the verse following, however, there is a reference to "works":--

> "And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and shining; for fine linen is the righteous award of the saints" (Rev. xix. 8).

There appears to be a need for careful distinction in connection with those who make up the marriage celebration of that day. The Wife cannot be "All Israel" because Israel has also to supply "the friend of the bridegroom", "the virgins her companions", those "bidden to the marriage of the King's Son", and those set forth under the figure of "the wise and foolish virgins". This being so, it appears that a portion of Israel are chosen as the wife. The "righteous award" seems to indicate some recognition of faithfulness, and this is quite in harmony with the whole of the book. To each of the seven churches a reward is promised to "him that overcometh". Those who come out of the great tribulation are said to have "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb". Some are said to have done His commandments, or to have washed their robes, that they may have the right to the tree of life and to enter into the city. In this very chapter there are two companies, the Lamb's wife, and the guests:--

> "Write, blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb" (verse 9).

As may be expected the word "Blessed" comes seven times in the Revelation, and the words just quoted from chapter xix. come centrally in the list.

A | i. 3. Blessed.—Reader, hearer and keeper of the words of this prophecy.
B | xiv. 13. Blessed.—The Dead which die in the Lord.
C | xvi. 15. Blessed.—He that watcheth and keepeth his garments.
D | xix. 9. Blessed.—They which are called to marriage supper.
C | xx. 6. Blessed.—He that hath part in the first resurrection.
A | xxii. 7. Blessed.—He that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy.
B | xxii. 14. Blessed.—They that do His commandments. Right to tree of life.

Apart from the passages which speak of hearing or keeping the sayings of this prophecy, the other passages under B and C speak of the overcomer. This helps us to see that those who respond to the call to the marriage supper are overcomers too. The case of the man who had not the wedding garment will come to mind, and by reflection from xix. 8 we see that this also indicates the "righteous award" of the saints. In the case of the ten virgins, it was the "ready" ones that entered into the marriage.

In concluding this section the angel said, "These are the true words of God". We take it that these words cover chapters xvii., xviii. and xix. 1-9. There follows a series of visions commencing with the formula "and I saw", which concludes in xxi. 5 where again we read, "These words are true and faithful". One of the seven angels again comes forward and "shews" John the bride, the Lamb's wife, and also he "shewed" the river and the tree of life. Again come the words, "These sayings are faithful and true". These passages punctuate the grand conclusion of the book. Babylon judged, the marriage of the Lamb, the riding forth of the Word of God, the first resurrection, the great white throne, the new heavens and earth, the abolition of the curse, sorrow and death, the detailed description of the New Jerusalem, and at last, Paradise restored. What a galaxy, what a constellation, thrice confirmed to us by the words, "These are the true and faithful words of God"!

Dark as the outlook may be now, and thicker the darkness yet to come, faith pierces the gloom and sees ahead the judgment of all that oppresses and enslaves, and the blessing and peace that must surely come when the Lord takes to Himself His great power and reigns. We feel constrained to echo the seer's closing prayer, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus".

#55. Kings of kings, Lords of lords. And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse (xix.).

pp. 181 - 186

What event is it that demands an opened heaven? What event is it that must come at the climax of revelation? Surely nothing less than the coming of the Lord in great power and glory! Babylon has by this time fallen. Satan's last outpost has gone down with terrific judgments. The universal dominion of the Beast gives way to the reign of the King of kings. The harlot gives place to the bride, the Lamb's wife. The wicked city passes away and the New Jerusalem is established.

Here at this moment is fulfilled the great bulk of Old Testament prophecy. Practically with one voice the prophets cried to Israel, "Behold! Thy King cometh". Psa. lxxii. was penned in the light of that glorious day when David's greater Son should reign in righteousness and peace. To "see the King in His beauty" summarized the expectancy of every believing heart. At last the Seer reaches that precious, that tremendous moment, when heaven opens, and the heavenly rider comes forth. As He rides forth the seventh trumpet rings out throughout the heavens, and great voices are heard crying out the glad news:--

> "THE KINGDOMS OF THIS WORLD ARE BECOME THE KINGDOMS OF OUR LORD, AND OF HIS CHRIST. And He shall reign for the ages of the ages. Amen…….We give thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast; because Thou hast taken to Thee Thy great power, and hast reigned" (Rev. xi. 15-17).

The same voices go on further to say that this coming in glory to reign is associated with the anger of the nations, the time of the judgment of the dead, the time for the reward of the Lord's servants, and the time for the destruction of those who destroy the earth (Rev. xi. 18, 19). These words are an epitome of Rev. xvii.-xx. In Rev. xi. 19 the apostle said:--

> "And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in His temple the ark of His covenant."

This "opening" precedes the opening of heaven in chapter xix. God's covenant is about to be fulfilled, and Christ, Who is now at the right hand of the throne of God in the heavens, is "manifest in glory". As though to assure the fainting heart that these things are sure of fulfillment, the rider of the white horse is called Faithful and True, and three times does the narrative pause to declare the truthfulness of these sayings.

Rev. xvii. 1 - xix. 9.—The harlot judged. The wife of the Lamb ready.

The angel's assurance.—"These are the true sayings of God."

Rev. xix. 11 - xxi. 5.—"And I saw":--

1. The Apocalypse (xix. 11-16).
2. The Supper (xix. 17, 18).
3. The Beast (xix. 19-21).
4. Satan bound (xx. 1-3).
5. Millennial Reign (xx. 4-6).
6. Great White Throne (xx. 11-15).
7. New heaven and earth (xxi. 1).
8. Holy City (xxi. 2-5).

The assurance from the throne.--"These words are true and faithful."

Rev. xxi. 9 - xxii. 7.—"And he shewed me":--

1. The Bride (xxi. 9).
2. The Holy Jerusalem (xxi. 10-27).
3. The river of water of life (xxii. 1-5).

The angel's assurance.—"These sayings are faithful and true."

The first of the series of events prefaced with the words, "And I saw", is the glorious apocalypse of Christ so long anticipated throughout this book:--

> "And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse: and He that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness He doth judge and make war" (Rev. xix. 11).

Judgment and War.—These two themes are stated as the object of this appearance. "In righteousness doth he judge and make war." For war the Lord occupies a white horse. For judgment a white throne. In both offices He is Faithful and True. The title, Faithful, turns the mind back to Isaiah.

> "There shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots . . . . . He shall not judge after the sight of His eyes . . . . . but with righteousness shall He judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and He shall smite the OPPRESSOR (ariz, instead of erez, 'the earth') with the rod of His mouth, and with the breath of His lips shall He slay the LAWLESS ONE. And righteousness shall be the girdle of His loins, and faithfulness the girdle of His reins. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb . . . . ." (Isa. xi. 1-9).

Psa. xlv. is also clearly indicated in Rev. xix. There in that Psalm is united together the triumphant rider and the King's daughter. Space will not permit the citation, but the whole Psalm should be read through. The reference in Rev. xix. 13 to the vesture dipped in blood shows that here in this glorious apocalypse we have the fulfillment of Isa. lxiii. 1-6.

> "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? this that is glorious in His apparel, traveling in the greatness of His strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save. Wherefore art Thou red in Thine apparel, and Thy garments like Him that treadeth the winefat? I have trodden the winepress alone; and of > the people there was none with Me: for I will tread them in Mine anger, and trample them in My fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon My garments, and I will stain all My raiment. For the day of vengeance is in Mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come."

We learned from Rev. i. 10 that the prophetic setting of the book was "The day of the Lord". Here the character of that day is given, viz., "the day of vengeance", and its object and issue is "the year of my redeemed". The word "vengeance" occurs six times in Isaiah, and this sixfold vengeance with its contexts is illuminative of Rev. xix., xx.:--

> "For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of the recompences for the controversy of Zion" (Isa. xxxiv. 8).

The context speaks of the Lord's judgment upon the nations, the passing away of the heavens, the turning of the land into "confusion" and "emptiness"—the same condition (tohu and bohu) as that of Gen. i. 2. In Isa. xxxv. we have the blessing that flows out to Israel when the wilderness shall "blossom as the rose", and there we have the next reference to vengeance:--

> "Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompence; He will come and save you" (Isa. xxxv. 4).

This chapter concludes one great portion of Isaiah's prophecy, and the glory and the triumphant issue of the revelation of Christ can be felt as one reads the chapter through. The next reference to vengeance has definitely to do with Babylon:--

> "Come down, and sit in the dust, O virgin, daughter of Babylon, sit on the ground: there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans . . . . . I will take vengeance . . . . . thou shalt no more be called, The lady of Kingdoms" (Isa. xlvii. 1-5).

Babylon's fall immediately precedes the coming of the Lord in the Revelation, and here in Isaiah it is especially prominent. Just before the glorious command sounds forth, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee" (Isa. lx. 1), we find another parallel with Rev. xix. ;--

> "For He put on righteousness as a breastplate, and an helmet of salvation upon His head; and He put on the garments of vengeance" (Isa. lix. 17).

In Isa. xli. 2, 3 we read:--

> "To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn; to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes."

Then comes the last reference, that of Isa. lxiii. with which we commenced. The object of the Lord's coming is further specified in Rev. xix. 15:--

> "And out of His mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it He should smite the nations: and He shall rule them with a rod of iron; and He treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God."

The quotation here from the second Psalm throws a vivid light upon the scene. Psalm ii. 1, 2 shows the condition of the world immediately before the second advent:--

> "The Kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord, and against HIS CHRIST."

This brings down the judgment. God's rightful King ascends the throne and to Him it is given "To rule with a rod of iron".

> "And He hath on His vesture and on His thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS" (Rev. xix. 16).

Three names are said to belong to the Lord in this vision:--

1. He had a name written that no man knew but He Himself.
2. His name is called, The Word of God.
3. He hath a name written, King of kings, and Lord of lords.

The first name, known only to the Lord Himself, is associated with the wearing of the many crowns. In Rev. ii. 17 the overcomer will receive a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it. In Phil. ii. 9, 10 the exaltation of Christ is accompanied by the giving of the name which is above every name. It appears idle for us to pretend to a knowledge where Scripture declares that the subject is known only to the Lord. It is possible however that the meaning of the passage is not so much that no one knew in the sense of being acquainted with the fact, but that no one perceived or fathomed the meaning of the name which the Lord received. It is suggestive that in Phil. ii. and in Rev. xix. the statement concerning the granting of a name which is not made known is immediately followed by a name that is well known. In Phil. ii. it is the name "Jesus" that is associated with the name above every name. In Rev. xix. it is the "Word of God" and "King of kings and Lord of lords" that seem to expand and explain that which otherwise could not be known.

The Word of God.—In this title is compressed the revelation of Christ's place in the purpose of the ages. Manifestation seems to have much in common with it. Speech reveals the unseen thought, and for the great purpose of the ages Christ became the IMAGE of the INVISIBLE GOD. The theme is too great for a mere note like this. The reader is referred to the new series on Redemption where we hope this phase of truth will be opened up. For the present we would say that the coming together here of the two names, The Word, and King of kings is to indicate to us that the One Who came forth as the great Firstborn of all creation in order to accomplish the reconciliation, expressed in the term "Fulness" (for which see page 165 of the present Volume), is here seen bringing to pass that phase which is summed up in the words king and kingdom. The glorious Millennial kingdom, followed by the even more glorious reign of the closing age (I Cor. xv. 24, 25), is one of the many factors in bringing about the end "that God may be all in all".

The reference to the winepress shows that Rev. xiv. 8-20 is another compressed anticipation of this glorious apocalypse. The King cometh. The saints shall reign. In His days there shall be an abundance of peace. He must reign till He hath put all enemies under his feet. Surely whatever our dispensational standing, whatever the hope of our calling, we can with heart and voice take up the Advent song and say:--

"Hosannah to the Son of David:
Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord:
Hosannah in the highest" (Matt. xxi. 9).

Right Division.
pp. 84 - 86

That which we believe to be truth is described by some as "fantastic dispensational error", and we are told that it arises out of a misunderstanding as to the true meaning of II Tim. ii. 15, which, instead of meaning "rightly divide", really means "handle honestly, intelligently, and reverently, allowing it to speak for itself". We will examine the question of the true translation of II Tim. ii. 15 presently, but before doing so we feel so attracted by the idea that to let the Word of God speak for itself is to handle it honestly, intelligently, and reverently, that we at once put the matter to the test. Let us take a few passages.

> "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. x. 5, 6).
> "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. xv. 24).

If we let these Scriptures "speak for themselves", we shall understand them to teach that the Lord Jesus limited His ministry to Israel during the "Gospels", and we shall handling the word "honestly, intelligently and reverently". Those who oppose us describe such an interpretation as a "fantastic dispensational error", and their idea of letting the Word speak for itself is astounding. Instead of accepting the necessary conclusion of these words, they persist in teaching that Christ came to found the Church, which is composed of both Jew and Gentile, and virtually reverse His own repeated statements. We have no fear respecting the verdict of any unbiased judge as to which interpretation is "fantastic" and which "honest".

Let us try another case. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the EARTH." We believe that. We believe that the Sermon on the Mount does not speak to or about the Church which is raised and seated with Christ in the heavenlies at the right hand of God. Our opponents read with the eye the word "earth", but their teaching compels them to substitute "heaven", even though they may not boldly say so. Which is "honest"? Which is "reverent"? Or again: in Eph. iii. the apostle speaks of a mystery which had been hidden since the ages but has now been made known. We believe that is a fact, and that the dispensation of the mystery (iii. 9, R.V.) differs accordingly from all others. But no, say our critics, a mystery does not mean a mystery, hidden does not mean hidden. Such ideas lead to fantastic error! The Gospel of Matthew contains the same teaching as Ephesians, it is all one and the same. That is their idea of handling the word honestly and letting it speak for itself.

Now let us come to the words "rightly divide". They are the A.V. rendering of the Greek word orthotomeo, which is made up of orthos = right and temno = to cut. Temno does not occur in the N.T., but in the LXX it comes about seven times. In Lev. xxv. 3, 4 and Isa. v. 6 the Hebrew word of which temno is the Greek rendering is translated "to prune". Pruning is done with a knife, a pruning hook, a saw, or with secateurs, but in each and every case the branch pruned must be CUT. In II Kings vi. 4 the English is "cut down". This is speaking of "felling a beam with an axe". In

Dan. ii. 34 and 45 it is the word that corresponds to the rendering “cut out” in the passage which deals with the vision of the stone which was cut out without hands.

Orthotomeo occurs in the LXX version of Prov. iii. 6:--“In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall rightly divide thy paths”. What sense would there be in the rendering “He shall handle thy paths aright?”

In modern surgical usage Anatomy means to cut up, Tracheotomy means to make an opening in the windpipe, and so on. It appears to us that if we allow the Word to speak for itself it will tell us to “rightly divide” or “cut” the Word of truth. That will be handling it honestly and will enable us to perceive the marvelous unfolding of the purpose of the ages in the various dispensations indicated in Scripture.

#1. "I am satisfied with the words of Christ."

pp. 1 - 3

Two Christian brethren were standing, with open Bibles, discussing some theme (apparently of great interest), and as the subject of their discussion may possibly interest you, let us draw a little nearer so that we may get the benefit of their remarks. We will call them for the sake of clearness A and B.

A.--I am satisfied with the words of Christ.

B.--Brother, believe me, we are one in that blessed fact, for He is the truth, His words are spirit and life, He came to reveal the Father, and the heart of every believer still says, "Show us the Father and it sufficeth us". We are both satisfied with the words of Christ.

A.--You interrupted me, I was going to say, I am satisfied with the words of Christ and do not need the opinions of Paul or any other man.

B.--By the "words of Christ", then, I understand you to mean the four Gospels, and by the opinions of Paul, I take it that you mean the epistles written by that servant of God. Let me just ask you a question? Am I right in assuming that the words of Christ with which you are satisfied are those of the four Gospels?

A.--Certainly.

B.--I see. You have not therefore any words of Christ written by Himself?

A.--Of course not!

B.--What words of Christ you have therefore were written by other men, and not by Himself?

A.--They were written by Matthew, Mark, Luke and John.

B.--Pardon me if I appear too persistent, but supposing I were to take your line and say, "I do not want the opinions of Matthew, Mark, Luke or John, I want the actual words of Christ Himself", what would you say?

A.--I should say that in these four Gospels we have the words of Christ, written by these men as they were guided and inspired by the Spirit of truth. Look at this passage in John xiv. 26:--

> "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, Whom the Father will send in My Name, He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you."

Here you see my warrant for believing that, although the record may have been made by Matthew or Luke, yet the record is inspired, and in these Gospels I have the words of Christ which are enough for me.

B.--I am glad that we both agree on this next point, namely, the full inspiration of the four Gospels, but do you not see that if Matthew could be inspired to write the Gospel that bears his name, Peter, John, James, Jude and Paul could equally have been inspired to record the words of Christ spoken since His resurrection?

Your reference to John xiv. 26 was most apt and it reminds me of another statement in chapter xvi. Let us turn to verses 12-14:--

> "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now.
> Howbeit when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth; for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak; and He will shew you things to come.
> He shall glorify Me; for He shall receive of Mine, and shall shew it unto you."

Now notice one or two important features of this passage.

1. There is a contrast here with your passage of John xiv. In John xiv. the subject of inspiration is a question of bringing to remembrance things which Christ had said. In John xvi. the same Spirit shews them things which He hears, which suggests that there will be further revelations than the four Gospels.
2. This is still more clearly taught by the words, "I have many things to say unto you, but you cannot bear them now".
3. If we are to have "All truth" we must have this later witness, which supplements and goes beyond the teaching of the four Gospels.

These words of Christ make some further revelation, such as contained in the epistles, a necessity. Do you not see that by limiting yourself to the four Gospels you have not all the words of Christ that you might have, and therefore cannot truly be satisfied?

A.--This passage in John xvi. does certainly seem to speak of a revelation subsequent and equally inspired to the four Gospels, and I must look into the matter afresh, lest a mistaken zeal for the supremacy of Christ should rob me of that truth which after all He Himself says "Shall glorify Me".

At this point the two friends parted, promising to resume the consideration of the subject at some future time.

If you, dear reader, should be interested to follow the subject further, you will find it in our February number.

#2. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God."
pp. 17 - 19

> No.1 of this series dealt with the statement, "I am satisfied with the words of Christ", and proved, from John xvi. 12-14, that the Lord Himself indicated a fuller revelation after His resurrection, which is found in the epistles. The point therefore of No.1 is that it is not a scriptural attitude to consider the Gospels as sufficient in themselves for the seeker after "all truth".

A.--I have been thinking very much about John xvi. 12-14 and your remarks upon it, but I still feel that the words actually spoken by Christ Himself must come to the true believer with greater force than those spoken by fallible men like ourselves, even though inspired for the time.

B.--I honour the desire, dear brother, to glorify the Lord Jesus Christ, but I think a little attention to one feature of His ministry will help you to see the subject of the inspiration of both the Gospels and the Epistles in a clearer light. If Christ spoke His own words, and taught His own doctrine, then we should possibly feel that His words were of greater weight and authority than those of Peter and of Paul in the Episltes.

A.--But did He not speak as one having authority, and not as the Scribes? What do you mean by speaking His own words?

B.--Do not let us misunderstand one another, let us rather "open the book".

A.--I suppose you are going to turn to the Epistles?

B.--No, we will turn once again to the Gospel according to John. First let us notice John xiv. 24:--

> " . . . . . My sayings; and the Word which ye hear is NOT MINE, but the Father's which sent Me."

Here is a distinct statement which should be enough for any who are "satisfied with the words of Christ". Look again, this time at xiii. 49, 50:--

> "For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father Which sent Me, He gave Me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak . . . . . whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto Me, so I speak."

This is added testimony to the same effect. One more verse will suffice us here, viz., John vii. 16:--

> "Jesus answered them and said, My doctrine is not Mine, but His that sent Me."

It is clear from these words of our Lord that what He taught and spoke was what He had Himself been taught (viii. 28) and commanded to speak.

A.--Do I understand by this that you deny the Deity of Christ?

B.--By no means. That the Word "was God" this same Gospel declares, and that I believe with all my heart. But the Lord humbled Himself and took upon Him the form of a servant. As the "sent one" He did not speak His own message, but the words of Him that sent Him.

A.--Well, accepting this, I do not see your intention. If every utterance of the Lord's was actually the Word of God, that seems all the more reason why I should abide by them.

B.--Abide by them by all means, but do not forget that the point is that the authority for Christ's teaching is the Father that sent Him. Now let us look at the Epistles. Turn to I Thess. ii. 13:--

> "For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the Word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the Word of God."

You see by this statement that Paul, Silas and Timothy, acting in their capacity as "sent ones", claimed the self-same authority for their words as did Christ Himself. In I Pet. i. 25 we read:--

> "The word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you."

In II Pet. i. 20, 21 Peter speaks of the inspiration of Scripture, and in II Pet. iii. 16 he links Paul's epistles with "the other Scriptures". In I Pet. i. 11 Peter, speaking of the Old Testament prophets, says that they spake by "The Spirit of Christ". Paul in Rom. xv., after having spoken, in verse 8, of the Lord's earthly ministry, goes on to say of himself, "That I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles" (verse 16). In II Tim. i. 8 Paul says to Timothy, "Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me His prisoner". Does it not therefore appear to you that these facts emerge clearly from these quotations?

(1). The words of Christ and His Apostles are not to be considered as their own, but as the words of Him that sent them.
(2). The testimony of the epistles is still considered to be the testimony of Christ, this time as the risen One, and speaking through those who had been chosen and "sent" by Him.
(3). In each case the authority for the message is that of the "sender"; in the Gospels Christ is the Sent One, in the Epistles the Apostles are the sent ones [the very word apostle (from apostello) means a sent one] and Christ still speaks to us, even though in Person He is now at the Right Hand of God.

A.--This is certainly a most important aspect of the subject and one that has never struck me before. It would appear from what you have pointed out that whether it be the words of Christ recorded in the Gospels, or the words of those sent by Him recorded in the Epistles, we are to see that both go back to God Himself, the "Sender", for their authority. This, coupled with the words of John xv. 26, "When the Comforter is come, whom I WILL SEND unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of Truth", and John xvi. 13, 14, "He shall glorify Me: for He shall receive of Mine, and shall shew it unto you", certainly makes me feel a need to reconsider my attitude to the Epistles.

B.--Dear brother, if you just regard both Gospels and Epistles as being of equal authority and of equal inspiration, you will have the key to much blessing and light. Remember II Tim. iii. 16.

A.--What is that?

B.--Well, you search and see for yourself, and ponder it well till we meet next time.

#3. "The Right division of the Word of Truth."
pp. 33 - 35

In No.1 of this series it was found that the words of Christ in John xvi. 12-14 necessitated a further and fuller revelation.

In No.2 we found that such a revelation is given in the epistles, and that no distinction as to degrees of inspiration can be made between the Gospels and the Epistles, for the Apostles like Christ Himself, spake the Word of God. "A" who had hitherto been satisfied with the four Gospels alone begins to get into difficulties when he considers the teaching of the epistles.

A.--I am afraid I am not clear as to the real results of our conversation on the equal authority and inspiration of both the Gospels and Epistles.

B.--What is your particular trouble?

A.--Well, seeing that I had agreed that the Epistles were of equal authority with the Gospels, I felt that I must obey them all, and practice them all, but this I find to be impossible.

B.--Why?

A.--They do speak alike. For instance, just one or two features at random--there are so many I am bewildered. The Sermon on the Mount says, "The meek shall inherit the earth", yet Eph. i. 3 tells me that I am blessed in "heavenly places". Mark xvi. 17 says that "these signs shall follow" the preaching of the gospel, yet I find Paul saddened because Epaphroditus was sick; why did he not heal him as he did others? Then this made me say, Why have we not all the miraculous gifts which the Church at Corinth had?

Then I find during the period of the Acts of the Apostles that there were two baptisms, one in water, and one in spirit, whereas in Eph. iv. 5 I find that "there is one baptism". Which one is it? and why only one? Then I used to believe that the church was the Bride, Peter speaks of the redeemed as being as holy nation and a royal priesthood, while Paul in Ephesians and Colossians says the church is the Body.

Then again I used to believe that we ought to keep the Sabbath day, yet I find in Col. ii. 18, "Let no man judge you with regard to the Sabbath day", and in Gal. iv. 10, 11, "Ye observe days, I am afraid for you". Matt. xix. 16-20 (the very words of Christ Himself mark you) teaches that eternal life may be had by keeping the ten commandments, yet Gal. iii. 21 teaches that life cannot come by the law, but only by faith.

B.--What is the solution, do you think? Shall we conclude that the four Gospels are truth and the Epistles untrue?

A.--No, for we have seen that John xvi. 12-14 looks forward to the Epistles (see No.1), and that the Epistles are inspired equally with the Gospels (see No.2).

B.--The solution then must be found in some other feature. Let us look once more at John xvi. 12-14. It is evident that in the Epistles we must expect something deeper and more advanced than we find in the Gospels, for the Lord said, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now". It is also evident that whatever the difference may be, it will not take away, but rather add to, the glory of Christ, for concerning that added revelation the Lord said of the Spirit, "He shall glorify Me".

A.--But what puzzles me is, how can both Gospels and Epistles be true when they say such opposite things?

B.--The answer is fairly simple. It is a matter of recognizing different dispensations.

A.--What do you mean by dispensations?

B.--Let us find our answer in John's Gospel again. This time turn to chapter i. 17, 18:--

> "For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. No man hath seen God at any time. The only begotten Son, Who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him."

In these verses two dispensations are referred to, the one of law, the other of grace. The one revealing God as Law-giver and King, the other as Father. You yourself have already recognized the difference between these two dispensations, for being a Christian you do not feel called upon to put into practice all that Moses taught under the law, even though you believe the law to be as fully inspired as the Gospels and Epistles. The same principle obtains between the various parts of the New Testament.

It is a fruitful cause of much error and confusion to fail to see that the dispensational dealings of God with Israel during the time of the Lord's earthly ministry differ from His dealings with both Israel and the Gentiles since Christ ascended into heaven.

A.--Do you mean to say that Christ came to Israel, and did not come to set up His Church?

B.--We must not leave our real subject for details, but I will just say that in Matt. xv. 24 the words of Christ Himself will answer you:--

> "I am NOT sent BUT unto the lost sheep of the house of ISRAEL."

Let us settle one thing at a time. There are evidently different dispensational dealings revealed in the Scriptures, and when once these differences are duly observed difficulties vanish and truth becomes clear. I leave you with another verse taken from II Timothy. This time it is II Tim. ii. 15:--

> "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, RIGHTLY DIVIDING THE WORD OF TRUTH."

#4. Some examples of "Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth."
pp. 49 - 52

No.1 of this series shows that John xvi. 12-14 indicates the epistles, and
No.2 proves that both gospels and epistles are equally inspired.
No.3 finds "A" bewildered by the many apparent differences which he has discovered by reading the gospels and the epistles. The solution is found in "rightly dividing" the Word of truth.

A.--I should be glad if you would give me a little indication of the results of "rightly dividing the Word of truth", for I rather fear it simply means cutting the Bible to pieces with no advantage when it is done.

B.--Let me draw your attention to some instances of a wrong division before looking at the other side.

The translators of the A.V. attempted to divide the subject matter, and gave notes at the heading of the chapters. Over Isa. xxix. they say, "God's heavy judgment upon Jerusalem", but over chapter xxx. they say "God's mercies towards His Church". Or again, over Isa. lix. they write, "The sins of the Jews", but over lx., "The glory of the Church". When it is a case of judgment the literal meaning is retained, but when it is a case of blessing "the Church" is intruded. We will not waste time tabulating error however; let us seek the "Word of truth".

We have already seen that all Scripture is inspired, but that all Scripture does not speak (1) to the same people, (2) at the same time, and (3) with the same message. All Scripture is FOR us, but all Scripture is not ABOUT us. To discover that part of Scripture which is FOR us, ABOUT us, and TO us we must "rightly divide the Word of truth". The people addressed in the Bible are divided into three companies, "The Jews, the Gentiles, and the Church of God" (I Cor. x. 32). Whenever you open your Bible therefore, seek at once to discover which of these three classes is addressed.

A.--How can I do this? It seems that I should have to conduct a very careful enquiry involving much time and ability. Cannot I take the Bible at its face value to mean just what it says?

B.--If only you would, your difficulties would vanish. I would say to you, "Read the envelope before you read the letter".

A.--Explain your meaning.

B.--Well, look at the envelope of Isaiah's prophecy (chapter i., verse 1) and tell me whether it is addressed to Jew, Gentile or Church.

A.--(Turns to the passage). It says that it is concerning "Judah and Jerusalem".

B.--Well, that answers the question for you there easily enough. Accept it as "meaning just what it says". Now look at the "envelope" of James' epistle.

A.--(Turning to the epistle). It is addressed to "The Twelve Tribes which are scattered abroad".

B.--Again you have your answer, and you will find that somewhere in every book of the Bible, there will be these identifying marks, enabling you to "rightly divide" the word off as belonging either to Jew, Gentile or Church of God.

A.--Is there any other important way in which the Word should be "rightly divided".

B.--Yes. Time periods enter in very largely. For example, Matt. x. 5, 6 says:--

> "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

If this passage is not to be divided at all, as some would affirm, there never should have been a single Gentile saved, or even evangelized. Further, if we do not rightly divide the Word, we shall have Christ contradicting Himself, saying in chapter x. "GO NOT", and in xxviii. "GO YE".

Again, we must keep distinct the various callings that are indicated in the Word. The Kingdom must not be confounded with the Church. The Kingdom is yet to come, for the prayer is "Thy Kingdom come", and it relates to the earth as under the power and pattern of heaven, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven". The Church is an elect company called out from the world during the present time. Christ is never called the "King" of the Church. Then again, the various "gospels" need carefully dividing.

A.--Surely you do not mean me to understand that there is more than one gospel?

B.--No, I do not, not in the sense that you mean. There is but one gospel and one way of salvation, nevertheless, there are "gospels" in the Scriptures that are not all alike. For example, "The gospel of the Kingdom" is defined for us in Mark i. 15:--

> "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand, repent and believe the gospel."

The twelve apostles went out and preached this gospel (Matt. x.), yet Peter reveals that he did not know at the time that the Lord Jesus was to die and rise again (xvi. 21-23). Surely the "gospel of the grace of God" could not be preached without Christ's death and resurrection being either expressed or acknowledged! In Rev. xiv. 6 we have the "everlasting gospel". Read its terms for yourself. There is no reference to redemption or to Christ, just "Fear God the Creator". This again is no gospel for the present time.

Then again we read in some Scriptures of a "mystery", which had been hidden by God, and revealed at a definite period. (See Eph. iii. and Col. i.). We must be careful not to read into earlier Scriptures therefore the truth revealed in later ones. This applies to the epistles of Paul as a whole. While all his epistles are necessary for the Church, we shall find upon examination that his ministry needs rightly dividing, and that not only is it as a whole distinct and independent, but that within itself it divides into two distinct sections.

But I think you have had enough for the time being. Just open your Bible and make a few tests. Consider (1) the envelope, (2) whether Jew, Gentile or Church, (3) whether Past, Present or Future, and (4) whether the dispensation be Law, Grace, Kingdom, Church or Millennial.

#5. The Distinctive Ministry of the Apostle Paul.

pp. 65 - 68

No.1 of this series shows that John xvi. 12-14 indicates the epistles, and
No.2 proves that both gospels and epistles are equally inspired.
No.3 finds "A" bewildered by the many apparent differences which he has discovered by reading the gospels and the epistles. The solution is found in "rightly dividing" the Word of truth.
No.4 gives some examples of right division, showing that Scripture is addressed to Jew, Gentile or Church. Among other examples the epistles of Paul are instanced as needing to be rightly divided.

A.--I should like to know a little more fully what you meant by saying that while Paul's epistles as a whole are distinct from the rest of Scripture, yet they themselves need rightly dividing.

B.--I am glad this important matter has arrested your attention and will do all I can to make the position clear.

We must look at the subject first to see that Paul's ministry is something quite distinct from that of any other apostle, and then, having that ministry before us, realize that it is divided into two clear sections. This is not merely interesting--it is vital to the full understanding of God's purpose and our place therein.

First of all, Paul was not one of the twelve.

A.--How do you prove that?

B.--In Matt. x. 2-4 the names of the twelve are given, and Paul is not among the number.

A.--No, but I have been given to understand that when Judas fell and left the number, Paul was Divinely chosen to take his place, the appointment of Matthias (Acts i.) being a hasty attempt on the part of the apostles and done erroneously.

B.--There are a good many of the actions of the apostles which certain teachers to-day call "apostolic mistakes", but which are not so called in the Scriptures. Look at the state of affairs at the time of the appointing of Matthias.

1. The risen Christ had spent a large portion of 40 days instructing the Apostles (Acts i. 3).
2. Not only did the Lord open the Scriptures, but He also opened the Apostles' understanding (Luke xxiv. 45). This settles for ever the question of whether the Apostles "understood" His meaning.
3. The Lord declared that the things written in the books of Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms concerning Himself must be fulfilled.
4. Peter whose understanding had been opened, and who had been taught the prophetic meaning of the Messianic Psalms, stood up after 40 days' instruction and said, "Men and brethren, THIS SCRIPTURE MUST NEEDS BE FULFILLED, which the Holy > Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas which was guide to them that took Jesus . . . . . it is written in the book of the Psalms . . . . . his bishopprick let another take" (Acts i. 16, 20). Peter had evidently been taught by the risen Christ the meaning of the Psalms that spoke of His betrayal, and acting upon that teaching he said that it was necessary that another should take the forfeited place of Judas.

A.--Would not the apostle Paul have filled that place?

B.--No, there was one qualification which Paul did not possess.

A.--What was that?

B.--He had never been associated with Christ and the eleven from the beginning.

A.--But was that essential?

B.--Listen to Peter:--

> "Wherefore of these men which have companied with us ALL THE TIME that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, BEGINNING from the baptism of John, unto that same day that He was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of His resurrection" (Acts i. 21, 22).

This limited the number of possible candidates to two, and as the Lord had done many times during Israel's history, He did it again; He used the lot to convey His choice.

> "And the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven" (verse 26).

Then came Pentecost.

Paul in I Cor. xv. 5-8 gives the names of several witnesses to the resurrection of Christ, viz., Cephas, the twelve, five hundred brethren, James, all the apostles, and last of all Paul himself. This enumeration places Paul outside the twelve.

A.--Do you mean then that there is another order of apostleship outside that of the twelve?

B.--Look at Eph. iv. 8-11:--

> "When He ascended up on high, He led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men . . . . . And He gave some apostles."

The "twelve" were appointed while Christ was on earth, but here is an order of apostles appointed "When He ASCENDED".

A.--What is there distinctive about Paul's apostleship then

B.--Let the apostle himself tell us:--

"I speak to you Gentiles, inasmuch as I am THE APOSTLE OF THE GENTILES, I magnify mine office" (Rom. xi. 13).

"He that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was mighty in me towards the Gentiles" (Gal. ii. 8).

"I am ordained a preacher and an apostle, (I speak the truth in Christ and lie not); a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and verity" (I Tim. ii. 7).

"I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles" (II Tim. i. 11).

Paul was the apostle to the Gentiles. And therefore, while all Scripture is profitable, yet, before we concern ourselves too much with the sin of Israel, or the great tribulation and other equally important themes, it is incumbent upon us to give due place to the message of the risen Christ, which He has sent to us through Paul the apostle to the Gentiles.

"Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision."

"I (Paul) . . . . . a minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles" (Rom. xv. 16).

Remember it is not Paul and Paul's ideas that we want. It is still Christ Who speaks, the difference being that in the Gospels He speaks on earth, while in the Epistles He speaks from heaven. The human instruments of the earthly ministry were Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. The human instruments of the heavenly ministry are Peter, Paul, James, John, Jude, and of these Paul is the apostle to the Gentiles.

A.--I can certainly appreciate better your strong emphasis upon the claims of Paul, and now I see that in his epistles it is not Paul's opinion I have but still the words of Christ, I feel that I have possibly neglected a most important part of Holy Scripture.

B.--We will not go further just now. Give the epistles of Paul a careful reading, and when we meet again you will be the better able to enter into the question of Paul's two-fold ministry.

#6. The Appointment of Matthias.

pp. 81 - 84

No.1 of this series shows that John xvi. 12-14 indicates the epistles, and
No.2 proves that both gospels and epistles are equally inspired.
No.3 finds "A" bewildered by the many apparent differences which he has discovered by reading the gospels and the epistles. The solution is found in "rightly dividing" the Word of truth.
No.4 gives some examples of right division, showing that Scripture is addressed to Jew, Gentile or Church. Among other examples the epistles of Paul are instanced as needing to be rightly divided.
No.5 deals with the distinctive ministry of the apostle Paul, and shows that he was not one of "the twelve", but set apart as the apostle to the Gentiles.

A.--When you were speaking of the ministry of the apostle Paul, on the last occasion, I wanted to ask some further questions as to the appointment of Matthias.

B.--I shall be glad if I can help in any way, what is your difficulty?

A.--Well, there are quite a number of great and good men, leaders in their several spheres, who believe that Peter made a mistake in Acts i. as to the appointing of Matthias, and that he should have waited for the call and commission of Paul. In this you differ, and you will pardon me so saying, you have no such authority as those to whom I refer.

B.--As to the personal side it stands as follows. Certain great and good men, leaders in different sects of Christendom (and therefore practically charging each other with error on sectarian points) charge other, equally great and good men, leaders in a divinely constituted unity, with intruding reasonings of the flesh into the purposes of God. You will see therefore that we may omit all reference to the character of those for or against, and turn afresh to the Word to "search and see". In Acts i. 15, 16, we read:--

> "And in those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples and said . . . . . men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus."

A.--How are we sure that Peter was using this Psalm aright?

B.--There are two reasons.

1. In John xiii., at the last supper just before Judas betrayed the Lord, Christ said:--

> "I speak not of you all: I know whom I have chosen: but that the Scripture may be fulfilled. He that eateth bread with Me hath lifted up his heel against Me. Now I tell you before it come, that, when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am. Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth Me; and he that receiveth Me receiveth Him that sent Me" (verses 18-20).

This clearly proves that Psalm xli. speaks of Judas, and moreover this passage very solemnly declares that the disciples were forewarned, and were shown the awful responsibility of receiving "whomsoever" the Lord saw fit to send. This solemn utterance was only separated from Acts i. by a few weeks.

2. The second reason is found in Luke xxiv. 44:--

> "These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and IN THE PSALMS concerning Me."

A.--These are, certainly, weighty arguments in favour of your interpretation.

B.--I have not finished yet. After making this statement concerning Himself, Luke xxiv. 45-48 continues:--

> "Then opened He their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures. And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning with Jerusalem. And ye are witnesses of these things."

You will see that not only did these men have an opened Bible during that wonderful forty days (Acts i. 3), but they had an opened understanding also. When Peter said, "This Scripture must needs have been fulfilled", he was echoing the words of Luke xxiv. 26 and 46, where "must needs" is translated "ought", and "behoved".

A.--I begin to realize what a great responsibility rests upon those men, who, so many centuries after the event, with so much tradition between themselves and the beginning, have so lightly presumed to be the critics of Peter, James and John.

B.--So you may. Yet there is more. These same correctors of the apostles tell us that Peter limited God to the two men Joseph and Matthias. Now let us see whether this is so. Peter's words are:--

> "Wherefore of these men which have companied with us ALL the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of His resurrection" (Acts i. 21, 22).

A.--What was Peter's authority for making this stipulation?

B.--The Lord's own words in John xv. 26, 27:--

> "But when the Comforter is come, Whom I will send unto you from the Father . . . . . He shall bear witness of Me, and ye also shall bear witness of Me, because YE HAVE BEEN WITH ME FROM THE BEGINNING."

This is confirmed by Luke's statement in Luke i. 2.

A.--This stipulation would rule out the apostle Paul then!

B.--Yes, and it testifies against all those who seek to place Paul among the twelve, for his knowledge of Christ did not commence until after the resurrection. Let us briefly indicate one or two further points in favour of Peter's action.

Scripture declares of Matthias, "He was numbered with the eleven" (Acts i. 26). Our "great and good" friends declare he was not. Paul says, in I Cor. xv. 5, "He was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve". So Paul himself believed that Matthias was one of the "twelve". Our friends must therefore set about correcting Paul also. Then, further, when Matthias had been appointed, nothing further is recorded until the descent of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost. Do these great and good leaders dare to teach that the Spirit of God also needed a little of their correction! for exactly the same words "with the eleven" occur after as before Pentecost.

These inspired men suffered persecution and even death for their testimony, yet never once is there the slightest indication that they had made a mistake. Shall Peter be allowed to strike Ananias and Sapphira dead for "lying to Holy Ghost", and shall Peter himself perpetuate a fraud, remain unrepentant and indifferent to his colossal blunder, and not come forward at the appointment of Saul of Tarsus to make amends? One passage of Scripture sums up the attitude of mind of all those who by reason of their undispensational views are continually finding fault with the apostles and their ministry:--

> "Full well ye reject commandment of God, that ye may keep your own traditions . . . . . making the Word of God of none effect through your tradition" (Mark vii. 9-13).

#7. The two-fold ministry of Paul, and its bearing upon the revealed purpose of God for the Gentiles.

pp. 97 - 99

No.1 of this series shows that John xvi. 12-14 indicates the epistles, and
No.2 proves that both gospels and epistles are equally inspired.

No.3 finds "A" bewildered by the many apparent differences which he has discovered by reading the gospels and the epistles. The solution is found in "rightly dividing" the Word of truth.

No.4 gives some examples of right division, showing that Scripture is addressed to Jew, Gentile or Church. Among other examples the epistles of Paul are instanced as needing to be rightly divided.

No.5 & 6 deal with the distinctive ministry of the apostle Paul, and shows that he was not one of "the twelve", but set apart as the apostle to the Gentiles.

A.--Will you help me to understand what you mean by the "Two-fold ministry of Paul?"

B.--Yes, most willingly, for the due appreciation of Paul's later ministry is an entrance into great blessing. You are already acquainted with the conversion and commission of Paul as given in Acts ix., and so we will pass on to the critical moment in his ministry as given in Acts xx. 17-38. Paul addresses the elders of the Church at Ephesus in a stranger way:--

> "Ye know, from the first day that I come into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons, serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations, which befell me by the lying in wait of the Jews, and how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you" (xx. 18-20).
> "Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God" (xx. 26, 27).

A.--It sounds very much like a farewell sermon.

B.--That is exactly what it is, for the apostle says:--

> "And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the Kingdom of God, shall see my face no more" (xx. 25).

A.--What had happened to make the apostle so confident about this?

B.--Listen:--

> "And now, behold, I go bound in the Spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there, save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me. But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God" (xx. 22-24).

A.--Does Paul mean that the bonds and afflictions were an essential part of the ministry he desired to finish?

B.--Yes. The passage before us points in that direction, and other passages confirm it. Turn to Acts xxvi. where the apostle makes his statement before Agrippa. After speaking of the appearance of the Lord to him on the road to Damascus Paul says that the Lord answered him:--

> "I am Jesus Whom thou persecutest. But rise, and stand upon thy feet, for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness BOTH of these things which thou hast seen, AND of those things in the which I WILL APPEAR UNTO THEE, delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, UNTO WHOM NOW I SEND THEE" (xxvi. 15-17).

Here is a two-fold ministry. The one, a testimony of the things which he had seen (see xxii. 14, 15), the other, a testimony of those things which the Lord promised He would at some future date reveal to the apostle.

A.--I see this plainly enough, but I fail to see what difference it can make to us.

B.--Well, turn to Acts xxviii. 17-31. There the chief of the Jews came to Paul's lodging and for a whole day the apostle testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, but they would not accept the testimony. "One word" said the apostle is fulfilled in you, that word being Isa. vi. 10, when blindness settled down upon the people of Israel.

All through the Acts Israel are still a people before God. Miracles are everywhere the accompaniment and confirmation of the apostle's witness, but at this point Israel pass off the scene. Miracles cease. "The salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles" (xxviii. 28). A new dispensation begins, and Paul the prisoner becomes the vessel through whom hitherto unrevealed blessings to the Gentiles are for the first time made known.

A.--How do you prove that?

B.--There are a set of epistles known by some as "The Prison Epistles", because in them the apostle alludes to his bonds or imprisonment.

A.--What are the names of these epistles?

B.--They are Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians and II Timothy. There the references to the prison are vitally connected with the apostle's new ministry, as can be seen by turning to Ephesians:--

> "For this cause I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles, if ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given to you-ward, how that by revelation He made known unto me the mystery . . . . . unto me who am less than the least of all saints is this grace given that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, and to make all men see what is the dispensation (R.V.) of the mystery, which since the ages hath been hid in God" (Eph. iii. 1-9).

Here is a prisoner, "For you Gentiles". Here is a dispensation, "The grace of God which is given me to you-ward". Here is a mystery, revealed for the first time. For the "mystery of the gospel" the apostle was an ambassador in bonds (Eph. vi. 19, 20). This new dispensation of the mystery was for the Church which is His Body (Col. i. 24-26). This second ministry of the apostle fulfilled his ardent desires expressed in Acts xx. 24:--

"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith" (II Tim. iv. 7).

#8. The Apostle's Doctrine.
pp. 113 - 115

No.1 of this series shows that John xvi. 12-14 indicates the epistles, and
No.2 proves that both gospels and epistles are equally inspired.
No.3 finds "A" bewildered by the many apparent differences which he has discovered by reading the gospels and the epistles. The solution is found in "rightly dividing" the Word of truth.
No.4 gives some examples of right division, showing that Scripture is addressed to Jew, Gentile or Church. Among other examples the epistles of Paul are instanced as needing to be rightly divided.
No.5 & 6 deal with the distinctive ministry of the apostle Paul, and shows that he was not one of "the twelve", but set apart as the apostle to the Gentiles.
No.7 shews the two-fold ministry of Paul, and its bearing upon the revealed purpose of God for the Gentiles.

A.--I have been warned by some to avoid both you and your teaching because you do not, as did the early church, "continue stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine" (Acts ii. 42).

B.--This is certainly a serious charge, but it strikes me as being somewhat biased, for these very same teachers who are now so zealous for the "apostles' doctrine" did not spare these same apostles over the appointment of Matthias.

A.--That is so, but possibly this is the exception that proves the rule.

B.--Let us "search and see". After 40 days' instruction from the risen Christ, with special emphasis upon the teaching of Moses, the Prophets and the Psalms concerning the Lord Himself, and moreover with the inspired statement that these same apostles UNDERSTOOD these same Scriptures (Luke xxiv. 45), the "apostles' doctrine" is expressed in the question which was the outcome of such teaching and such understanding:--

> "When they therefore were come together, they asked Him, saying, Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts i. 6).

This restoration of the kingdom to Israel we accept as an integral part of the "apostles' doctrine", those who have the temerity to warn you as to our attitude, have also the audacity to teach that this question, in spite of its context, is the result of Jewish prejudice, and that the apostles should, instead, have been found asking about the church!

A.--But may it not be that after the descent of the Spirit at Pentecost the scales would fall from their eyes?

B.--Yes, it may, but the question for us is, Did they alter their doctrine, and announce teaching concerning the church?

A.--Yes, I believe they did, for it is universally accepted that the church began at Pentecost.

B.--I will not quarrel with your word "universally", but would rather direct you to the attitude of Paul when opposed by sheer numbers (II Tim. i. 12-15). As to the change of doctrine which takes place in Acts ii., that I believe is a tradition foisted upon an undiscerning people. Let us "search and see".

In Acts ii. Peter declares that "Pentecost" is the fulfillment of that which was spoken by the prophet Joel, and he has no reason, by any supposed change of doctrine, to hesitate in quoting the words:--

> "I will shew wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke: the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and notable day of the Lord come" (Acts ii. 19, 20).

A.--Perhaps Peter felt that he ought not to break off in the middle of a quotation.

B.--Not so. The same Spirit who had just endued Peter anointed also the Lord, and at the opening of His ministry He did stop half-way through a quotation because of dispensational reasons. See Isa. lxi. 1-4, and note Luke iv. 18-20. Peter expected the restoration of the kingdom, and Joel was rightly interpreted. The kingdom is connected with the great and notable day of the Lord, but the church is not. Here again is another item of the apostles' doctrine which I believe, but which your friends do not.

Yet further, Peter declares the resurrection of Christ to be with the object that He should sit upon the throne of His father David (Acts ii. 30-33), whereas tradition would once more substitute the church.

A.--This one feature however is not all that the apostles taught.

B.--No, but it is the foundation of all that follows. For example, Is it "church truth" to teach baptism for the remission of sins? Yet this is a part of the apostles' doctrine. Your friends, who are so zealous for the truth, do they possess the Holy Spirit as did these believers in Acts ii.? Do they, further, sell their possessions and have all things common? Would they, if it were still possible, continue stedfastly not only in the apostles' doctrine, but also in the temple (Acts ii. 46)? even though the epistle to the Hebrews has since been given?

Tell me wherein do these friends of yours agree with the doctrine of the apostles? Is it too harsh to say that they hold a creed of what they imagine the apostles taught, or what they think they ought to have taught. Dear friend, "prove all things", "search and see", say in the language of the Psalmist

"I have stuck unto Thy testimonies."
"The fear of man bringeth a snare."

#9. Pentecost and the Gentiles.
pp. 129 - 131

No.1 of this series shows that John xvi. 12-14 indicates the epistles, and
No.2 proves that both gospels and epistles are equally inspired.
No.3 finds "A" bewildered by the many apparent differences which he has discovered by reading the gospels and the epistles. The solution is found in "rightly dividing" the Word of truth.
No.4 gives some examples of right division, showing that Scripture is addressed to Jew, Gentile or Church. Among other examples the epistles of Paul are instanced as needing to be rightly divided.
No.5 & 6 deal with the distinctive ministry of the apostle Paul, and shows that he was not one of "the twelve", but set apart as the apostle to the Gentiles.
No.7 shews the two-fold ministry of Paul, and its bearing upon the revealed purpose of God for the Gentiles.
No.8 proves that the restoration of the kingdom to Israel was an integral part of the "apostles' doctrine".

A.--I believe that it might be true to say that, whilst outwardly the church of the one body did not begin at Pentecost, potentially it did.

B.--To give a concrete illustration, you would say that the fact that there were no Gentiles in the assembly on the day of Pentecost was more by accident than of purpose.

A.--I can hardly say that, for there were multitudes of Gentiles addressed by the apostles on the day of Pentecost.

B.--Is that so? I was under the impression that none but Israelites were spoken to.

A.--You have many times told me to "search and see", so I suggest you take a dose of your own prescription.

B.--Most readily. I have nothing to lose but error, and nothing to gain but truth by so doing. Where do you propose we start.

A.--At Acts ii. 5-11, for there we read:--

> "And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven . . . . . and they were all amazed and marvelled, saying . . . . . how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born? Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, etc."

Surely Parthians, dwellers in Egypt, strangers of Rome, indicate Gentiles!

B.--Not so fast. In verse 5, which you read, we have stated that there were dwelling in Jerusalem JEWS, devout men, from every nation under heaven. Therefore the long geographical list that follows gives the country of origin of these Jews, who had come up to Jerusalem to keep the feast of Pentecost according to the law. "Strangers of Rome", is literally "sojourning Romans", and they were all either "Jews or proselytes". Further, do you notice how the apostle Peter addresses these so-called "Gentiles" of yours?

> "Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem" (verse 14).
> "Ye men of Israel . . . . . ye have taken and by wicked hands have crucified and slain" (verses 22 and 23).
> "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David" (verse 29).
> "Let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, Whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ" (verse 36).

These were the dispersion, Israelites who had been born in foreign lands, many of them Roman citizens as was Saul of Tarsus, some of them proselytes, but none of them Gentiles.

A.--Well supposing that is so, does it follow that the saints gathered at Pentecost would not have had the greatest joy in receiving a believing Gentile into their company?

B.--Such is the tradition, but Acts x. will give us the truth.

> "There was a certain man in Caesarea called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band, a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway" (verses 1 and 2).

Look at the man's credentials. He was devout, he feared God, his household did the same, he gave alms, he prayed to God continually. Now tell me, would that man have been received by the assembly on the day of Pentecost?

A.--Most assuredly he would.

B.--Well, how do you account for Peter's attitude toward him?

> "He said unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing (note the place of the law of Moses) for a man that is a Jew (Peter's own definition of himself) to keep company or come unto one of another nation (yet in the church there is neither Jew nor Gentile), but God hath shewed me that I should not call any man common or unclean" (Acts x. 28).

By his own confession Peter would not have hesitated to have classed Cornelius the devout, with the swine and the creeping things which he saw in the net. IS THAT THE UNITY OF THE SPIRIT!!

A.--What do you intend me to understand them, that Peter had been wrong all along?

B.--By no means. Peter was right all along. He had no idea such as that "the church began at Pentecost", and he therefore prosecuted the commission given to him to urge his own people Israel to repentance. The thought of such an association with a Gentile as is implied in the idea of the church was totally foreign to the "apostles' doctrine and fellowship". It is your friends who have departed from the apostles' doctrine, and have made Scripture void by their traditions.

A.--Why then should Peter have made the change in Acts x.?

B.--Because in Acts ix. the apostle Paul had been called and appointed as the messenger of the risen Christ to the Gentiles, thereby introducing a change of dispensation. This was followed by the warning vision to Peter and by the confession:--

> "Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life" (Acts xi. 18), a pointless remark if the church began at Pentecost.

The Seed of God.
pp. 52 - 55

That one of the phases of the great conflict of the ages is intimately connected with the attempt on the part of Satan to contaminate the seed of the woman, has been shown by abler expositors than ourselves. The subject forms too important a link in the chain, however, for us to pass it by without individual study. We do not know who was Cain's wife, and rather than bar the way for fuller understanding by hazarding guesses that range from his "own sister" to the "pre-Adamites", we prefer to leave it as the Scriptures do. That Abel was the seed of the woman Eve makes clear on the birth of Seth:--

> "For God, said she, hath appointed me, another seed instead of Abel, whom Cain slew" (Gen. v. 25).

Of Noah it is written, "Noah was a just man, and perfect in his generations", or uncontaminated by the generations through which he had come. Whether we interpret the "sons of God" of this chapter (Gen. vi.) of angels, or of the descendants of Seth (and both views have their supporters), the issue is clear, that it was an attempt on the part of the evil one to corrupt the seed of the woman.

There are two words used of Noah in Gen. vi. 9, both translated "generations". The original of the first is the one that is used to subdivide the book of Genesis, "The book of the generation of Adam" (Gen. v. 1). The second means "his contemporaries". The word "perfect" carries with it the thought of being without blemish, and the idea includes the vital fact that with the exception of Noah "All flesh had corrupted His way upon the earth". The seed of the woman was carried through the waters of the flood in the person of Noah.

The prohibitions of the law of Moses, as also the command of Abraham concerning intermarriage with the Canaanites, shows the real concern that God had in keeping the line pure that led down through Shem to Christ. Passing over for the time the O.T., let us pause for a moment at Malachi. How many of us could say what is the great concern of Mal. ii.? It is largely taken up with the faithlessness of the Priests in regard to marriage. They said, "Have we not all one Father? hath not one God created us?" and thereby revealed their lack of discrimination, for God created Cain, but he was of that wicked one nevertheless. God created the Jews who listened to Christ, but they were of their father the Devil nevertheless. The prophet answers the priests with the words:--

> "Why do we deal treacherously, every man against his brother, by profaning the covenant of our fathers?" (Mal. ii. 10).

The words "to deal treacherously" refer to faithlessness to the marriage bond. (See ii. 15, also Jer. iii. 20; Exod. xxi. 8). The faithlessness of JUDAH imperiled the SEED, for of that tribe Messiah was to come:--

> "Judah hath dealt faithlessly, and an abomination is committed in Israel and in Jerusalem, for Judah hath profaned the holiness of the Lord which He loved, and hath married the daughter of a strange god" (Mal. ii. 11).

The man that did this, whether he be master or scholar, should be treated as a Canaanite:--

> "The Lord will cut off the man that doeth this . . . . . out of the tabernacles of Jacob" (ii. 12).

Their offerings were not acceptable:--

> "The Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet she is thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant" (ii. 14).

Verse 15 is variously translated and interpreted. The A.V. reads:--

> "And did not He make one? Yet had He the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That He might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth."

The margin reads for "residue", excellency, and for "a godly seed", a seed of God. The R.V. scarcely differs from the A.V. in the text, but in the margin the following is found, "And not one hath done so who had a residue of the spirit. Or what? is there one that seeketh a godly seed?" This seems to give a truer rendering. To act treacherously in this way was not possible while one retained a residue of the spirit. So profane had the priesthood become that the prophet asks, "Is there one that seeketh a seed of God?" The words seem to echo those of Gen. vi. 3, "My spirit shall not always rule (or abide) in man, for that he also is flesh".

Marriage ceases with this life. In the resurrection there is neither marrying nor giving in marriage. Man lost the true purpose of God, and ceased to seek a godly seed. However, blessed be God, in the fulness of time Christ was born, "not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God". Of Him the angel could say "That holy thing that shall be born of thee". Christ was pre-eminently the Seed of the woman, and the conception of Scriptural redemption limits that redemption to His own kin—in other words, to those others who are also the seed of the woman. The world to-day is peopled by those who are the seed of God and the seed of the wicked one. Both are sinful and under the dominion of sin and death. The works of the Devil however are to be destroyed (I John iii.). Satan himself is to be destroyed (Heb. ii.). The children of the wicked one are to be gathered in the time of harvest—like bundles of weeds to be burned. If their names are not in the book of life, they must be cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death. The principle that seems to underlie the teaching of the Scriptures on this subject is expressed in the following two statements:--

> Rom. xi. 26. "So ALL ISRAEL shall be saved."
> Rom. ix. 6-8. "They are not ALL ISRAEL, which are of Israel, neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children: but in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That > is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are counted for the seed."

It is easy to say, "All Israel shall be saved" and intend by that expression every physical descendant of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. This would be wider than truth however. Some physical descendants of Abraham are Ishmaelites. The same is true concerning the parallel term "All in Adam". Physical descent would indicate Cain and the Canaanites, what God means by All in Adam must be ruled by His own definition in Rom. ix. 6-8, and by the fact which Scripture reveals of the two seeds. When the seed of the wicked one is gathered out of the Kingdom (not to be saved, not to be garnered, not to be changed, but to be burned up as things that offend):--

> "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the Kingdom of THEIR FATHER. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear" (Matt. xiii. 43).

The Two Seeds.
pp. 13 - 16

In a previous paper (Volume XII, page 172) under the heading of NO MORE CANAANITE we received the teaching of Scripture concerning this people, but apart from a slight comparison with the heavenly destiny of the church of the mystery, we refrained from drawing deductions. We desire now to take our study a little further, and will commence with a statement made by the Lord as recorded in Matt. xiii. 38, 39:--

> "The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil."

Believing as we do that "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God", we do not admit the idea of degrees of inspiration, but we believe that those whose understanding of inspiration allows of degrees will agree that the words spoken by Christ were true in the fullest sense. In this kingdom parable wheat and tares (the Eastern dewan, a black, bitter and poisonous grain) growing together represent two classes. The tares are called "sons of the wicked one". Be it noticed that the seed sown is not said to be "doctrines" but "sons". Whilst remembering that this parable is limited to the kingdom of the heavens, we feel that the statements here raise a legitimate question, viz., Are there two seeds in the world? The answer to this question must of necessity have a bearing upon the purpose of the ages and the goal of God and must not be the result of hasty conclusions.

The first mention of two seeds is found in Gen. iii. 15. Speaking to the Serpent God said:--

> "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed, it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel."

Some reader may object to this reference by reason of its Messianic character. We must therefore show that it strictly belongs to our subject. Opening Gough's The N.T. Quotations at Gen. iii. we are struck by the fact that no direct quotation is made of verse 15. When Christ was born in Bethlehem, Isa. vii. 14 is quoted at length, but no reference is made to Gen. iii. This may be partly explained by the fact that redemptive purposes were unfolded in the N.T. in an ever-growing scope. First the redemption of Israel by their Saviour King, then the inclusion of the Gentiles by the Son of Abraham, and not until later the wider scope under Christ as the Last Adam, and finally under Him as First-born of all creation. This partly explains the lack of quotation, but there is another reason and an important one. Rom. xvi. 20 makes a reference to Gen. iii. 15, and there the application is not to Christ, but to His people:--

> "The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly."

There is no doubt that Paul knew that the "Serpent" of Gen. iii. was "Satan", and further, that the "Seed" that was to bruise the Serpent's head included the believer. Apart from inspiration (which to us is final) Paul, as a believer, was not the man to take a prophecy which referred exclusively to Christ, and apply it to His people. We believe that our other studies on the Kinsman Redeemer will come to our aid here. Redemption includes the destruction of the enemy, and Christ took upon Himself flesh and blood, becoming in due time THE seed of the woman, that as Kinsman-Redeemer He might redeem the seed of the woman that had become involved in sin and death. Let us suspend judgment while we gather further evidence. Gen. iv. 1 says:--

> "And Adam knew his wife; and she conceived and bare Cain, and said, I have gotten a man from the Lord."

The story of Cain and Abel is the record of the two seeds, true of the two brothers as individuals and yet more true of the destiny of the two seeds which at this moment of time began to divide the earth. But some say, surely Gen. iv. 1 is written in order that we may see that Cain was a true child of Adam and Eve! It would appear so, yet we must allow equal weight to the inspired words of I John iii. 12 which say that "Cain was OF THAT WICKED ONE". That this is a case in point the earlier part of the chapter proves. Christ was manifested for a dual purpose:--

1. To take away our sins (iii. 5).
2. To destroy the works of the devil (iii. 8).

There is another manifestation, and that is the manifestation of the two seeds.

> "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil" (I John iii. 10).

By all the rules of true interpretation, these parallel statements must stand or fall together. The child of God is "begotten of God" (verse 9), and God's "seed" remains in him. Parity of reasoning then demands that the child of the devil is begotten of the devil, and his seed also remains. The origin of sin is most definitely attributed to Satan:--

> "He who is a doer of sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning" (I John iii. 8).

Is the expression "begotten of the devil" too strong? John the Baptist could say to the Pharisees and Sadducees who came to his baptism, "O generation of Vipers"! The word "generation" is cognate with "born" and "begotten". In John viii. 37 the Lord said to the Jews, "I know that ye are Abraham's seed", and we might say, therefore they could not be the seed of the Serpent, but the Lord stated that the fact that they sought to kill Him evidence two things:-

1. The Lord's Word had no place in them (verse 37).
2. They were doing what they had seen with their FATHER (verse 38).

But, protested these Jews, "Abraham is our father"! (verse 39). The Lord replied:--

> "Ye are of your FATHER THE DEVIL, and the lusts of your father you are willing to do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and stood not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own; for he is a liar and the father of it" (verse 44).

A further reference to the two seeds and their attitude towards the Word of God is contained in verse 47:--

> "He that is of God (ek tou Theou) heareth the words of God; ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not ek tou Theou."

Once more we must ask the reader to allow us to pursue the theme still further before any conclusion is reached. What we have seen makes it clear that there are two seeds in the earth. One "of God", the other "of the Devil" and just as physical descent from Abraham did not prevent some Jews being nevertheless "of their father, the Devil", so Cain's physical descent from Adam and Eve did not alter the fact that he was "of that wicked one".

DEAR FELLOW-MEMBERS,

In bringing to completion this XIVth Volume of The Berean Expositor we are made conscious of the good hand of God upon, and also of the sacredness of the trust committed to, us. While desirous of adhering closely to our role as an expositor, faithfulness has sometimes compelled us to engage in contention for the faith. We need the prayers of all who have this ministry at heart that we may ever be found FAITHFUL and FREE.

While holding unreservedly to the full inspiration of all Scripture, our peculiar privilege and responsibility is to make known the riches of the glory of the mystery among the Gentiles. To this stewardship we desire to be kept faithful.

We are happy to be able to say concerning The Berean Expositor exactly the same as we said ten years ago, viz., that it is:--

"The organ of NO SOCIETY,
The property of NO SECT,
The exponent of NO CREED."

To this freedom may we be preserved.

We take this opportunity of wishing our readers all "joy and peace in believing", commending to their prayers and fellowship this simple testimony.

Yours by grace,

CHARLES H. WELCH

We have received an interesting letter from J.H.E. (Bournemouth), in connection with the article on page 119 of Volume XIII. In connection with Solomon's revenue of 666 talents of gold, J.H.E. points out that both the Greek word for "wealth" in Acts xix. 25 (euporia), and for "scattered" in I Pet. i. 1 (diasporas), give the total 666. For the benefit of our readers, and to apply our own maxim "Search and see", we tested the numerical values which are as follows:--

The suggestion is that there will be a connection between the "dispersion" (Israel) and the beast at the end, and possibly a great co-operative movement where nobody, except those who have the mark of the beast, will be allowed to either buy or sell. The atmosphere and setting of Acts xix. 25 is, with Alexander the Jew, a fair picture of what will happen in the days to come. We thank our brother for his helpful note on this subject.

Reviews of "The Apostle of the Reconciliation".
p. 95

"The Christian" (27th March, 1924).

"This work is one which places the ministry of St. Paul in a somewhat unaccustomed light. While, in general, the Apostle of the Gentiles is looked upon as an ambassador for Christ, sent forth under the dispensation of the Spirit poured out at Pentecost, there has arisen in recent years, among some teachers, a tendency to regard the Apostle as having been called to labour for God in another relation. According to this point of view, a new dispensation was begun at the time indicated at the conclusion of the Acts, when the Jews rejected the Gospel, and the Apostle turned to the Gentiles (Acts 28:28). The position is variously expressed, and it is generally held to show that the climax of divine revelation must be found in the Prison Epistles of St. Paul.

The author of the work before us might not be disposed to follow in detail the description just given; but as a teacher he must be assigned a place in the class to which we refer. 'To make known the ministry of the Apostle to the Gentiles, to point out its grace and its glory, to combat the antagonism of those who raise the misleading cry, 'Back to Pentecost', to lead on to the heights and depths of the Epistles of the Mystery'— is a summary statement of the goal, the raison d'etre of Mr. Welch's volume.

The 'Dispensation of the Mystery' is found in the Epistles to the Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and II Timothy. Those who have explained this clause in the light of Eph. 3 cannot but regard as precarious much of the instruction given in the volume, which tends to antiquate the ministry of inspired revelation in so far as it preceded the Prison Epistles.

The volume before us hardly takes us to the heart of the subject; rather it lays the foundation of another work, which is promised in the Preface. With great diligence, however, we are taken through the Acts and the Romans, and shown that Reconciliation dominates those writings. The analytical tables, 'structures', and other forms of treating the text, are profoundly impressive; even where the student has to withhold assent to the suggested conclusions, he is compelled to admire the laborious research undertaken by one who throughout lays stress on the inspiration and integrity of Holy Scripture. Even those who may find ground for criticism will also gladly recognize the keenness with which Mr. Welch indicates facts and features which are easily overlooked in larger works of exposition."

“The Times” Literary Supplement (3rd April, 1924).

“A painstaking study of the Acts of the Apostles and the earlier Epistles of St. Paul. The author emphasizes what he calls ‘the fundamental truth of the plenary inspiration of all Scripture’, and on that basis uses the books with which he is concerned to vindicate ‘the dispensational meaning of reconciliation’—that is, a reconciliation carried forward to a conclusion under a series of dispensations. On occasion the author follows the guidance of modern scholars, and though the book seems to be rather confused both in method and argument, he spares no trouble to enforce his exposition of the passages with which he deals, Greek words are transliterated into English.”

> "Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. Moreover it is required in stewards that a man be found faithful. But with me it is a very small matter that I am judged of you . . . . . He that judgeth me is the Lord" (I Cor. iv. 1-4).

Since the year 1907 the true position of the Acts of the Apostles has been brought to light not by Things to Come and The Berean Expositor only, but by the publications of others. There has, however, developed quite a distinct set of teaching in association with the presentation of dispensational truth which declares that the whole universe, including Satan and the fallen angels, are or will be reconciled. This teaching we reject as being unscriptural.

The fact that our ministry and stewardship is being confused by some with the unscriptural teaching indicated, necessitates that we make a clear statement of what we believe in this matter, and in the following pages we shall endeavour to make our position quite clear.

The relation of sin to God has not yet been dealt with at any length in our pages, the subject being too solemn for hasty treatment, nevertheless, without setting out scriptural evidence, we take the opportunity of testifying:--

> "Let no man deceive you; he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as He is righteous. He that committeth sin IS OF THE DEVIL; for the devil sinneth from the beginning" (I John iii. 7, 8).

Our attitude in regard to the doctrine of the Deity of Christ can be gathered from the series entitled "The Doctrine of Christ", which appeared in Volumes II and III. We confess with Thomas, "My Lord and my God", and whilst some may profess to believe that Scripture teaches that the Lord Jesus was "A God", we gladly acknowledge that we are:-- > "Looking for that blessed hope, and the appearing of our GREAT GOD AND SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST" (Titus ii. 13).

We believe there is one God (Deut. vi. 4) Who was manifested in the flesh (John i. 1, 14; I Tim. iii. 16), and not two Gods, the lesser of whom is the Lord Jesus Christ.

Upon the completion of this series we propose to issue in pamphlet form. To all who can with clear conscience bid us God-speed in our ministry, we unhesitatingly ask for prayerful and practical support in this fight of faith. Shall the enemy sow his tares with freer hand than the child of God sows his wheat?

It is possible that some doors for testimony may be closed against us. If you endorse our position, will you prayerfully consider whether a door of utterance can be opened in your neighbourhood? The Editor is not at liberty to respond to every invitation to speak at meetings, but by arranging well ahead a great deal can be accomplished.

The Deity of Christ.
pp. 177 - 191

In the following pages A and B discuss the subject of The Deity of Christ. The standpoint of B represents the standpoint of The Berean Expositor; the arguments of A are an attempt to present justly the views which The Berean Expositor here entirely repudiates.

The Subject Stated.

A.—The Scriptures teach that there is "one God", and one mediator, "the man" Christ Jesus. The "one God" is the Father, the man is "the Son", and therefore I cannot believe what is commonly called the Deity of Christ.

B.—Before we enter into any argument over this subject I trust we are both conscious of the solemnity of the question.

A.—Truth is one, and I do not believe we are right in speaking of one part as of more importance than another.

B.—Truth is one indeed, and every part fundamental, yet Scripture makes a distinction which I am bound to follow. John in his second epistle says:--

> "Every one that taketh a lead, and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God" (II John 9).

A Dividing Doctrine.

In some cases divergent views were to be tolerated and those holding them were to consider that both may hold them "unto the Lord", but John in speaking of this doctrine takes a different attitude, saying that such a one "hath not God", and further, "receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed". You will understand therefore that it is impossible for those responsible for The Berean Expositor to have fellowship with those who deny the Deity of Christ. This may sound narrow and bigoted, but it is the scriptural attitude, and we have no alternative.

A.—I cannot understand how you can believe the Son of God to be God without at the same time believing that there are two Gods.

B.—I am sure that by speaking of the Son of God in this way you are approaching the subject from the wrong end. May I suggest that we seek to understand this deep doctrine by studying the teaching of Scripture along the following lines:--

(1). GOD . . . . . Absolutely.
(2). GOD . . . . . Relatively.
(3). GOD . . . . . Manifest.
(4). GOD . . . . . Manifest in the flesh.

No Philosophy of God in Scripture.

As to "God absolutely" we know nothing. Throughout the whole range of Scripture there is not to be found one statement that speaks of God Himself alone without relation to His creatures. The attitude of Scripture is expressed in the words, "He that cometh to God must believe that He is". Philosophy would discuss the being of God; Genesis assumes His being, and proceeds to His works and ways.

A.—Do you not think this passage speaks of God absolutely?

> "Thus saith the high and lofty One, that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy" (Isa. lvii. 15).

B.—If you had continued your quotation you would see that this revelation of the Godhead is relative, for the passage immediately adds:--

> "I dwell in the high and holy place, WITH HIM ALSO that is of a contrite and humble spirit" (Isa. lvii. 15).

You will see that the reference to the nature of God is not given for its own sake, but in order to emphasize the condescension of Him who dwells with the humble and the contrite.

A.—John says, "God is Spirit".

B.—Yes, but only because he would emphasize that "They who worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth" (John iv. 24).

Perhaps if I read you a short extract from "The Spirit of Hebrew Poetry" by Isaac Taylor, it may make my meaning clear:--

> "If for a moment they (the Hebrew writers) utter what might have the aspect of an abstract proposition, they bring it into contact, at the nearest possible point, with the spiritual wants of men, or with their actual moral condition; as thus—'Great is the Lord, and of great power, and His understanding is infinite. He telleth the number of the stars: He calleth them all by their names', but this infinite and almighty Being is He that 'healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds'. It is the human spirit that is the central or cohesive principle of Hebrew Theology. The Theistic affirmations that are scattered throughout the books of the Old Testament are not susceptible of a synthetic adjustment by any rule of logical distribution . . . . . the several elements of this Theism are complementary one of another only in relation to the needs, and to the discipline of the human mind; not so in relation to its modes of speculative thought, or to its own reasons. If we were to bring together the entire compass of the figurative Theology of Scripture (and this must be the Theology of the Old Testament) it would be easy to arrange the whole in periphery around the human spirit, as related to its manifold experiences; but a hopeless task it would be to attempt to arrange the same passages as if in a circle around the hypothetic attributes of the Absolute Being. The human reason falters at every step in attempting so to interpret the Divine Nature."

Put into language more readily acceptable, these pregnant words tell us that we are not to look for a philosophy of God in the Scriptures, but that the whole revelation of the Godhead is limited to that which is circumscribed by the purpose of the ages.

A.—I think I perceive your meaning, but can you give some more concrete example?

Jehovah, The Age Title.

B.—The title Jehovah will provide a good example. In Gen. xxi. 33 we read (A.V.):--

> "And Abraham planted a grove in Beer-Sheba, and called there on the name of the Lord, the everlasting God."

The meaning is just the reverse of this. The words, "The Lord, the everlasting God" are in the original, Jehovah El olam, "Jehovah, God of the age". In Exod. iii. 14 we have the title "I Am", which is expanded as follows:--

> "The Lord God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob . . . . . This is My name for the age, and this is My memorial unto all generations."

In Rev. i. 4 we have a New Testament, unfolding of the title Jehovah, which supplements the "I am" of Exod. iii. 14:--

> "Him which is (I am), and which was, and which is to come."

This expanded title occurs in varied orders according to the requirements of the context, but in Rev. xi. 17 we read (R.V. and critical texts):--

> "O Lord God Almighty, which ART and WAST";

the future is omitted, the reason being:--

> "because Thou hast taken to Thee Thy great power, and reignest" (not hast reigned or will reign).

It is the glory of this great title that it does not last for ever, but that the Lord fulfils it. The eternity of the invisible God is nowhere in view. We shall have taken a step towards clearer understanding when we realize that the revelation of God is relative, and must always be considered as touching the purpose of the ages.

God--relatively.

A.—As there seems nothing revealed concerning God, except as related to the purpose of the ages, are we to expect a fuller revelation in the life to come?

B.—In John xvii. 3 we read:--

> "And this is aionian life, with the object that they may know Thee, the only true God, and Him Whom Thou didst send, Jesus Christ."

During the "age to come", when aionian life will be enjoyed, those thus privileged will get to know God, in order to equip them for their share in bringing about the happy condition when:--

> "The knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the seas" (Isa. xi. 9).

We know God now only through Christ and in no other way. The relationship which Christ bears to the ages may be seen by comparing the following Scriptures:--

"Christ is all and in all"	\	During the ages.
(Ta panta kai en pasi Christos , Col. iii. 11).	/
"That God may be all in all"	\	When the ages finish.
(Hina e ho Theos panta en pasin, I Cor. xv. 28).	/

You will see that when we deal with the scriptures that speak of God relatively, we are compelled to consider those scriptures which are ranged under our third heading:--

God--manifest.

It is in connection with this aspect of the subject that most of our difficulties occur. Let us examine the teaching of four passages of Scripture, viz., John i. 1; Col. i. 15, 16; Heb. i. 1-3; and Phil. ii. 6-11. Let us commence with John i. 1:--

> "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God."

A.—There are some important alterations necessary in this translation before we have the truth. First there is no word for "the" in the phrase "in the beginning".

B.—That is true, and but confirms our suggestion that the Bible is not occupied with the beginning, which must of necessity be beyond the grasp of human understanding. It refers to that period when Creation was contemplated.

> IN that beginning WAS the Word.
> SINCE that beginning the Devil sinneth, and was a murderer.

A.—There is a far more important alteration necessary. Instead of reading "the Word was God", we must read "the Word was A God", for the article is omitted. If we give full value to the article we shall read "the Word was with THE God, and the Word was A God", THE God referring to the one true God, and A God to God in a subordinate and lower sense.

B.—You therefore believe in two Gods, a greater and a lesser.

A.—No, I do not accept the idea of a number of persons in the Godhead.

B.—Then He who is A God is really no god at all?

A.—I hardly know how to answer you, but I have the warrant of great Bible Students for my translation.

B.—Do you ever use a Concordance?

A.—Why, man, am I not continually urging the "Concordant method"? And is not this new translation vouched for by those who advocate the Concordant method?

The Concordant Method.

B.—I am afraid I am not greatly moved for all the "urging" and "advocating" of the Concordant method. What I ask you is, Have you tested this matter out for yourself?

A.—Well, I must confess that I have not.

B.—Let us do so, and we will start with John i. Here is a Greek Concordance; find the word Theos, and tell me whether it occurs in John i. without the article.

A.—

> "The Word was A God" (verse 1).
> "There was a man sent from A God" (verse 6).
> "Power to become children of A God" (verse 12).
> "Which were born of A God" (verse 13).
> "No one hath seen A God at any time" (verse 18).

B.—Thank you, that will suffice. Is it necessary to emphasize how utterly false and untenable your interpretation becomes when tested? Did God in a subordinate sense send John the Baptist? Is the Father God in a subordinate sense? Then look at verse 18. The invisible God must be THE God.

A.—Yes, I agree.

B.—Yet, with the first verse hardly dry, the inspired penman (according to your teaching) makes the most atrocious blunder. Do you not agree that he forgot to write the article here in verse 18?

A.—I can hardly do that, for I believe that all Scriptures is inspired.

B.—Then I see no alternative for you but to agree that the Concordance disproves the theory of your teachers?

A.—I am afraid it is so, yet how is it that men who evidently have a knowledge of the original can have missed so obvious a refutation?

B.—My dear friend, believe me, it is not the office of the writer to sit in judgment upon the motives of others. We are simply dealing with facts. Their teaching when weighed in the balances is found wanting. We therefore, as simple followers of Christ, unhesitatingly reject it; we do no more, but we can do no less.

A Parallel Usage.

A.—I should like to know what I am to believe regarding this Greek article; I understood that its presence or absence is of great importance.

B.—You are quite right; it is the false deductions that you have to guard against.

A.—Could you give me something of a parallel with John i. 1?

B.—We find one in this very chapter, viz., verse 14, "the Word was made flesh". It is manifestly absurd to translate, "the Word was made A Flesh", yet the case is parallel. "The Word was Theos", "the Word became sarx."

There is something more than the question of the article in John i. 1; there is also the order of the words. In the original the sentence reads, "And God was the Word". This alteration of the order draws attention to the statement concerning the Deity of the Logos. As our subject is "God—manifest", we must not leave John i. without a further glance at verse 18:--

> "No one has ever seen God; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him."

This passage really comes under the fourth heading, "God—manifest in the flesh", and we may have to return to it. Here however it is closely connected with the verse which teaches that God is manifested in the Word, and so claims our attention. There is a reading favoured by Lm., Tr., WH., Rm., endorsed by the Numeric Version, Rotherham, and above all by the Syriac Version, which gives "God only begotten" instead of "The only begotten Son". I would not build a doctrine upon this reading, but it cannot be ignored.

The prologue of John's Gospel occupies verses 1-18. The whole passage is an introversion, verse 1 balancing verse 18. The three clauses of verse one find an echo in verse 18, thus:-- a	|	In the beginning the Word.	\

b	|	The Word was with God.	}	God manifest.
c	|	The Word was God.	/
c	|	Son (or God) only begotten.	\
b	|	In the bosom of the Father.	}	God manifest a	|	He hath declared Him.	/	in the flesh.

Before the birth of Christ at Bethlehem He is called the Word, and revealed God. After His birth at Bethlehem He is called the Son, and revealed the Father. We must take this further when we come to the question of the Sonship of Christ.

Let us pass to our next passage, viz., Col. i. 15, 16.

The Image of the Invisible God.

The word translated image is eikon from eiko = to resemble. Matt. xxii. 20 uses it of the image of Caesar stamped on a coin. The word implies much more than a resemblance as may be seen in Heb. x. 1:--

> "For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things."

Image, being opposed to shadow, implies the idea of substance and reality. In Col. i. 15 the reference to the image of God is followed by a statement concerning Creation. In Col. iii. 10 the reference to the image is followed by a statement concerning the new creation, a parallel with John i. 1 and 18:--

> "And having put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him."

Firstborn of every creature.

A.—How do you understand the title "firstborn of every creature"? If Christ be the first of all creatures, He, however so great, could not be God.

B.—The word "firstborn" is prototokos. It is used in Luke ii. 7 of the birth of Christ as Mary's firstborn. The word however contains in it more than birth. It emphasizes the dignity and honour that went with primo-geniture, and some translate the passage "Prince and Lord of all created things".

This idea of dignity and pre-eminence is found in the context of Col. i. 15, "He is before all things" (verse 17). The title "The firstborn of every creature" is balanced by the words, "Who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead, that in all things He might have the pre-eminence" (verse 18). Speaking of the resurrection, Psa. ii. 7 says, "Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee". This is parallel with the title "the firstborn from the dead". Do you understand this passage to teach that on the resurrection morning Christ began for the first time His existence?

A.—Certainly not, the question is absurd. He took up the life which He had previously laid down for our sakes.

B.—Well then, by parity of reasoning, when He first appeared as the firstborn of every creature, it does not mean that He then began His existence, but that He Who was God manifested Himself in the Person of the Son, Who became the Chief, Lord and Heir of the creation the followed. You will find this idea of pre-eminence in Rev. i. 5:--

> "The first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth."

Passages from the LXX where prototokos is used with the meaning "superior", "greater", "most loved" or "exalted" are II Sam. xix. 43; Exod. iv. 22; Psa. lxxxiv. 27; Jer. xxxi. 9. The nation of Israel is called the firstborn, but it would be difficult to prove that it meant anything more than dignity and inheritance. It is illuminating, so far as the usage of the word is concerned, to know that the Rabbins spoke of God as "The firstborn of the world", and Paul's usage, "the firstborn of every creature", is parallel. In Col. i. 16 the apostle shows what he intended by the title by commencing the verse with the word "for". Christ is the firstborn of every creature for He is the Creator. To say that Christ was the firstborn of His own creation is absurd.

As to the invisible God	Christ is the IMAGE.
As to the old creation	Christ is the FIRSTBORN.
As to the new creation	Christ is the FIRSTBORN FROM THE DEAD.

and in both creations He is pre-eminent.

God has Spoken in Son.

Let us now turn to Heb. i. 1-3, our third passage. You will find here an opportunity for observing the presence and the absence of the Greek article.

God in times past spake to the Fathers	by the prophets.
God in these last days has spoken to us	in Son.

A.—"In Son"! that does not seem good sense.

B.—It is hardly good English perhaps, but a profound truth in here. "The prophets" were messengers used by God, but when Christ walked the earth He was not merely another and greater messenger. It was God now speaking "in Son", God manifest in the flesh. To the prophet the word "came"; Christ however was the Word Himself.

A.—May we not translate the words "in a Son"?

B.—No, I think not, because the idiom is found in the Hebrew and would be known to the readers of the epistle. Will you turn to Exod. vi. 3.

A.—(Reads).—"And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God Almighty."

B.—The Hebrew reads B'EL SHADDAI, literally "in God Almighty". To these patriarchs God appeared "in God Almighty", to their N.T. descendants He appeared "in Son". The one invisible God remains the same, whether for His purposes He is known as the Almighty God, or The Son. This will be more easily understood when we have considered the meaning of the words, "the form of God", as used in Phil. ii. 6. Let us notice what is said of the Son in Heb. i.:--

> "Who being the brightness of His glory, and the express image of His person, and upholding all things by the word of His power" (Heb. i. 3).

The R.V. reads:--

> "Who being the effulgence of His glory, and the very image of His substance."

When we come to Phil. ii. 6 we shall have to enquire into the words "Who being". Let it suffice for the moment to draw attention to the fact that in Phil. ii. 6 we are dealing with the very being of the Lord, while in Heb. i. 3 we are dealing with the characteristics of the "Son", the Word "made flesh"—two distinct phases the confusing of which is the cause of much understanding.

The Brightness of the Glory.

The "brightness" (or "effulgence") translates a word (apaugasma) which occurs nowhere else in the N.T. We may get clearer light if we turn to the typical people Israel. When the ark was taken from Israel, the wife of Phinehas named her son Ichabod–"Where is the glory?" saying:--

> "The glory is departed from Israel, because the ark of God was taken" (I Sam. iv. 21, 22).

The Psalmist's comment is:--

> "He delivered His strength into captivity, and His glory into the enemy's hand" (Psa. lxxviii. 61).

A.—This shows that Israel's conception of God was very limited, and even though you proceed to show that Christ was the Jehovah of the O.T. that will not lift Him beyond "A God".

B.—Hezekiah may correct your mistake:--

> "O Lord God of Israel, which dwellest between the Cherubim--,"

A.—As I said, Israel localized the Deity.

B.—You did not allow Hezekiah to finish:--

> "O Lord God of Israel, which dwellest between the Cherubim, Thou art THE GOD, even thou alone of all the kingdoms of the earth, Thou hast made the heavens and the earth" (II Kings xix. 15).

The glory of the Lord is "above the heavens" (Psa. viii. 1); yet Hezekiah's prayer teaches that for the purposes of grace that infinite and incomprehensible glory could be attached to the ark of the covenant, even as in the fulness of time it should be manifest in the flesh. Ezekiel says:--

> "And the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man upon it . . . . . This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord" (Ezek. i. 26-28).

Thus it is that Eph. i. 17 says that "the God of our Lord Jesus Christ" is "the Father of the glory".

The Image and the Substance.

A further title is "the express image of His substance". "Express image" is the rendering of charakter, from charatto "to engrave". Charagma is translated "graven" in Acts xvii. 29:--

> "We ought not to suppose a gold or silver, or a stone sculpture of man's art and device to be like the Deity."

One of the dictionary meanings of "substance" is "that which underlies all outward manifestations". God is invisible. Christ is the image of the invisible God. God's "substance" is manifested in Him Who is the express image of the unseen underlying substance. Faith is the "substance" of things hoped for (Heb. xi. 1). Works, walk, witness give expression to the unseen faith (Heb. xi.). No laws, fasts, feasts or sacrifices, no series of typical men could ever be the express image; Christ's alone occupies that place.

As I trust you will treat all that is put before you in a true "Berean" spirit, the following comparison of passages may be of service.

A Threefold Testimony.

John i.	Colossians i.	Hebrews i.
The Word.	The Image.	The express Image.
No one ever saw God.	The invisible God.	The Substance.
All things made by Him.	By Him all things created.	By Him the ages made.
		Heaven and earth also.
	He is before all things.	Angels worship Him.
His fulness.	All fulness.
	By Him all things consist.	All things upheld.
The Word was God.	Firstborn.	Thy throne, O God.
The only begotten Son.		Firstborn.

He Who made all things, upholds all things, by Whom all things consist, is no lesser Deity; He is God and no other.

The Form of God.

A.—I should be glad if you would now turn to Phil. ii. 6-11. If you are unprejudiced and closely observe what the passage actually says, if you will but "try the things that differ", you will notice that the passage does not say that every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is GOD, but Lord, to the glory of God-THE FATHER. The one Who is God is The Father, Christ is but the Lord. This is a confirmation of my interpretation of "A God", "God in a subordinate sense".

B.—Before we deal with this closing verse we must look at the earlier verses and also consider the context. The reason for this marvellous passage is in the words of Phil. ii. 4, 5:--

> "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."

The context therefore prepares us to see that Christ laid aside something that was really His own for the sake of others. Now let us examine the actual wording of the passage:--

> "Who being in the form of God" (Phil. ii. 6).

The word "being" is the Greek huparchon, and is given in the R.V. margin as "being originally". It refers to the time previous to the birth in Bethlehem.

A.—I believe the words "being originally" are correct, and that whatever it was that is referred to was laid aside when Christ became man.

B.—We will test that. Turn to Luke xxiii. 50-53 where we read:--

> "Behold, there was a man named Joseph, a counsellor . . . . ., this man went unto Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus."

B.—The Greek reads Ioseph bouleutes huparchon. Do I understand you to believe that Joseph of Arimathaea ceased to be a "counsellor" as soon as he begged the body of Jesus?

A.—No, I see no necessity.

B.—Turn again to Acts ii. 30, 31 and read:--

A.—

> "Therefore being a prophet . . . . . spake of the resurrection."

B.—The Greek reads prophetes oun huparchon. Do you believe that David ceased to be a prophet when he spoke of the resurrection of Christ?

A.—No, I do not; what is your purpose in these examples?

B.—My purpose is to show by these parallels that there is no warrant for assuming that Christ "ceased to be in the form of God" when "He emptied Himself and took upon Him the form of a servant".

A.—I cannot agree with you, for the Lord Jesus was certainly not in the form of God when he walked the earth. The Samaritan woman when she saw Him said, "How is it that thou, being a Jew", and that is evidently the "form" that all saw.

B.—We can go no further until we have studied the expression "form of God", for you evidently look upon the word as being synonymous with "figure" or "shape". The word form is a translation of the Greek word morphe, and is simply the same word twisted round as it passed through the Latin. It occurs only three times in the N.T., Mk. xvi. 12,

Phil. ii. 6, 7. In the LXX we find it translated in Isa. xliv. 13 as "figure" and in Job iv. 16 as "form". Job makes a distinction between "form" and "image", saying "I could not discern the form, an image was before mine eyes". When Christ said concerning the Father, "Ye have not . . . . . nor seen His shape" (John v. 37) the word is eidos, not morphe. Morphe is used by the LXX to translate the Chaldee "splendour" in the Book of Daniel.

The True Meaning of "Form".

In Daniel we have the record of the humbling of Nebuchadnezzar. There we read that he was driven into the fields and ate grass like an ox. When the time came for his restoration we read:--

> "And for the glory of my kingdom, mine honour and brightness (morphe) returned unto me" (Dan. iv. 36).

There is no idea that Nebuchadnezzar meant that his shape changed, for the Chaldee word used does not allow the thought. Even the word shape bore something more than external figure, as may be seen in Shakespeare's King Lear. Like Nebuchadnezzar, King Lear had left his throne, but as a result of his daughter's wickedness he says:--

> "Thou shalt find that I'll resume the shape which thou dost think I have cast off for ever."

Hooker and Bacon.

The A.V was made in the year A.D.1611. In A.D.1594 Hooker wrote his Ecclesiastical Policy, and in A.D.1620 Bacon wrote his Novum Organon . These writers come on either side of the date of the A.V. They are both writers who used language with precision. Hooker says:--

> "Form in other creatures is a thing proportional unto soul in living creatures."

The modern meaning "figure" or "shape" cannot possibly fit this definition except in the world of crystals where shape is inherent and essential. Bacon says:--

> "The form of a nature is such that, given the form, the nature infallibly follows. Therefore it is always present when the nature is present, and universally implies it, and is constantly inherent in it. Again the form is such, that if it be taken away, the nature infallibly vanishes."

Bacon could not have meant external shape by form here.

A.—It looks as though Hooker, Bacon, Shakespeare and the A.V. used the word form in a much deeper sense than we do at present, and more akin to the usage of the LXX in Dan. iv.

B.—Let me take an illustration from the works of God. Water is composed of two gases in chemical combination: Hydrogen and Oxygen. The chemical formula for water is H2O. The word formula is but the diminutive of forma, the Latin for morphe. Bacon's words are exact when spoken of formula. Wherever we have H2O we must have water, it "infallibly follows", and as soon as that formula is altered, water "infallibly vanishes".

Now, water exists in three different states, each having distinct and in some cases opposite characteristics. Water may be solid, liquid or gas—ice, water or steam. Yet with all the tremendous differences which are observable under these three states, the formula remains unchanged. Ice is H2O; to become water the external "fashion" changes, but the "form" remains. Steam, a mighty power, is invisible, yet its "form" is precisely the same as that of ice and water.

Form and Fashion.

In the immediate context of Phil. ii. the apostle uses a word which means outward shape or figure when he says, "and being found in fashion as a man". Here the word used is schema. The constant morphe of water is H2O; its schema (fashion) may be either solid, liquid or gas.

A.—I remember reading the following in The Berean Expositor in connection with Phil. ii. 6, 7:--

> "Here the 'form' of God is seen exchanged for the 'form' of a servant."

How do you reconcile this statement with what you have just brought forward?

B.—I do not reconcile these statements. The passage you quote was written in 1913, eleven years ago. We make no claim to infallibility, but pray for the spirit of wisdom and revelation, and when this is granted it often couples un-learning together with learning. There are many items in past volumes that would need altering if re-issued. Every statement we make is presented to those who will "search and see", proving all things and holding fast that which is good.

The Lord could exchange the glory of Heaven for the humility of earth, without touching the form of God.

A.—I understand that if Christ were God, such an expression as "thought it not robbery to be equal with God" would be superfluous. No one thinks of robbing himself of his own essential nature. Paul did not say Messiah was "equal with God", but "He reckoned equality with God not a thing to be grasped after". THE God was self-sufficient. Messiah reckoned self-sufficiency not a thing to be clutched at. Here Messiah stood where Satan fell.

Answers to Correspondents.
pp. 30, 31

No. 31.—H.B.(London) asks whether we can give any help in answering the question, "Will their be recognition among the saints in the Kingdom of Christ?"

In the first place we must admit that there is no one passage of Scripture that in so many words definitely says that believers will recognize one another when they stand together in the presence of the Lord. There are, however, passages which we believe indirectly teach that we shall recognize each other. For example, take the record of The Tranfiguration in Matt. xvii. We are not told that any special revelation was given to Peter at that time, indeed Mark's version (ix. 6) says that Peter "wist not what to say", yet Peter immediately recognized Moses and Elijah, even though he had never seen them in the flesh.

Again, Luke xiii. 29 assumes that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob will be recognized by Israel in that day. When David heard of his death of his little son, he appeared to entertain the hope of a personal re-union, saying:--

> "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me" (II Sam. xii. 23).

When we read in Ezek. xlviii. of the apportionment of the land to the tribes of Israel, it seems essential to understand that these tribes shall recognize their own identity and that of their fellows. The memory also of past sins and failures, indicated in Ezek. xvi. 61-63 and xliv. 9-14, demands a conscious recognition of identity, and this appears to be impossible without the recognition at the same time of one another. Could the apostle speak of the day when those who have fallen asleep in Christ shall be raised again and united with those living at the time of the Lord's return as a ground of "comfort" to those mourning the loss of their loved ones, if in the resurrection all were to be total strangers to each other? Can we not draw comfort from the words of I Cor. xiii. 12:--

> "Then shall I know even as also I am known."

Can it be that we shall have such full knowledge as is here indicated, and yet lack the one feature which means so much to us. When the apostle said that he desired to present every man perfect in Christ Jesus (Col. i. 28), and spoke of some who should be his crown of rejoicing in the presence of the Lord (I Thess. ii. 19); and when he said that he prayed that Onesiphorus should find mercy in that day (II Tim. i. 16), do not all such statements and desires seem to demand personal recognition? The fact also that God is our Father, and we His children, and therefore members of one family, seems to necessitate that all who shall share in the bliss of that new life shall consciously enjoy it in fullest fellowship with their brethren. This would be an impossibility without memory and recognition.

We believe that I Thess. iv. 17 contains a very precious provision, arranged by the Lord to meet this very case. We read that at the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of His sleeping saints, that there is first of all time allowed for re-union and recognition, so that when the moment comes for the living and the raised to meet the Lord Himself, the claims of natural affection shall not detract from the glory of His presence. The words that suggest this are "Together with them . . . . . to meet the Lord".

We trust you will be able to take comfort from these words.

pp. 62, 63

A reader who has been attempting a harmony of the four Gospels has written asking for help, as very early in the attempt difficulties have arisen.

There seems to be a fascination for some minds in the attempt at constructing a harmony. Prof. Harles, in the year 1795, gave a list of extant harmonies amounting to one hundred and seventy-two, and that number by no means indicates the complete total. Tatian is the most ancient harmonist whose work The Diatessaron is known to-day. The canons of Eusebius, while ranged under the heading "Harmony", are something more than that. He arranged the teaching of the four Gospels under the following ten canons:--

1. The ancient chapter divisions of Ammonius.
2. Those passages related by Matthew, Mark and Luke.
3. Those passages related by Matthew, Luke and John.
4. Those passages related by Matthew, Mark and John.
5. Those passages related by Matthew and Luke.
6. Those passages related by Matthew and Mark.
7. Those passages related by Matthew and John.
8. Those passages related by Luke and Mark.
9. Those passages related by Luke and John.
10. Those passages peculiar to (a) Matthew, (b) Mark, (c) Luke, (d) John.

Strictly speaking Eusebius did not attempt to construct a harmony, he did something far more profitable, he drew attention to the things that differ.

We have gone to this length before answering our correspondent because we have no use for a harmony of the four Gospels. From the nature of the case, and from John's own testimony (John xx. 30, 31; xxi. 25), it is evident that we do not possess one hundredth part of the words and deeds of the Lord Jesus, and it is manifest therefore that in the composition of the four Gospels each writer was moved to select such words and deeds, and place them in such sequence and relation with each other with much or little detail and circumstance as the special purpose with which he wrote his narrative demanded.

When we further understand that all these four writers were inspired as much in the selection of their material as in their diction, it seems to be (to say the least) an unnecessary task to attempt to join together what God has kept asunder. The peculiar message of Luke's Gospel, so essential for the ministry of Paul to the Gentiles (for details see The Apostle of the Reconciliation, just published, page 51) would be completely lost in a so-called "Harmony". There is, further, a most important reason why the four Gospels should be kept distinct, which will be more fully explained in the new series of "REDEMPTION".

As a contribution to Christian evidences, these Harmonies are not very convincing, and where doubt exists as to the inspiration of Scripture, the attempt to reconcile the statements of the four writers will not prove very conclusive. There is so much real study awaiting the earnest student along the lines of right DIVISION (II Tim. ii. 15), that we have felt justified in writing in this way, believing that the first great essential for all true progress in understanding the Scriptures is readily to believe that they are one complete harmony in themselves already, and that we are better occupied in obeying the injunction, "Try the things that differ".

We have set out the canons of Eusebius as a suggestion for any reader who feels attracted to this special aspect of research, and believe that any attempt along these lines would be far more fruitful in its results than the construction of the most elaborate harmony.

The Epistles to Timothy. #1.
pp. 79, 80

C.J.P.(Holland) writes to ask the date of Paul's first epistle to Timothy and the one to Titus, and also their connection with the Acts and the epistle to the Ephesians.

The space at our disposal being limited, we shall be obliged to divide our answer into sections, and in this present answer seek a true understanding of the period to which I Timothy belongs. Lest some reader may question the usefulness of the enquiry, we would remind such that the dispensational place of these epistles is an important feature in their interpretation, and their bearing upon the members of the one body to-day.

When were I Timothy and Titus written?

We must first of all take notice of that view held by many commentators of repute that places I Timothy somewhere after Acts xx. 1, where we find Paul leaving Ephesus for Macedonia. This is supposed to be the journey alluded to in I Tim. i. 3:--

"As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia."

1. Was Timothy at Ephesus at the time of Acts xx. 1? No, for Acts xix. 22 shows that he had left that city for Macedonia.

2. May not Timothy have returned in time? No, for I Cor. iv. 17 and xvi. 10 show that the apostle had instructed him to go on from Macedonia to Corinth.

3. Did Timothy meet the apostle at all? Yes, II Cor. ii. 12 read with II Cor. i. 1 shows that Timothy had rejoined the apostle in Macedonia.

4. How does this bear upon the date of I Timothy? It makes it impossible for Paul to have written to Timothy after Acts xx. 1, or to have besought Timothy to remain at Ephesus—for he was not there—or that he himself entertained the hope of shortly seeing Timothy again in Ephesus. At the time of writing I Timothy Paul could say:--

"These things I write unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly" (I Tim. iii. 14).

5. What reason have we for saying that Paul could not entertain the hope of shortly seeing Timothy at Ephesus?

Acts xx. 1.	Paul leaves Ephesus for Macedonia.
Acts xx. 2.	Paul leaves Macedonia for Greece.
Acts xx. 3.	Paul after three months proposes to leave for Syria, but because of the lying in wait of the Jews, he altered his plan, purposing to return through Macedonia.
Acts xx. 4.	Among those who accompanied him into Asia was Timothy.
Acts xx. 5.	Timothy and the others wait for Paul at Troas.
Acts xx. 6.	Luke and Paul left Philippi for Troas, arriving there in five days, and abiding seven.
Acts xx. 13.	The party sail to Assos, but Paul goes on foot.
Acts xx. 14.	Meeting the boat there, they came to Mitylene.
Acts xx. 15, 16.	Thence to Miletus, where Paul met the elders of the church at Ephesus, as he determined to sail by Ephesus in order, if possible, to be at Jerusalem by Pentecost.
Acts. xx. 28-35.	Paul warns the Ephesian elders of the rise of false teacher telling them that the Holy Ghost had made them overseers of the church. Timothy was with Paul at the time. Is it conceivable, if Timothy had already been appointed to the oversight of that very church, that Paul would have so pointedly passed him over unmentioned?
Acts xx. 38.	The Ephesian elders sorrow most of all for the fact that they should see the apostle's face no more.
Acts xxi.	Paul reaches Jerusalem, and becomes a prisoner.
Acts xxii.-xxviii.	Paul is no longer a freeman, and consequently could not at any time after Acts xx. 1 have arranged to meet Timothy at Ephesus.

In connection with the reply we gave to a correspondent in this Country in regard to Harmonies of the Gospels (see page 62), we have been encouraged by receiving the following from India:--

> "The Berean Expositor is a very great help to all Bible Students. I cannot but be a subscriber to it.
>
> Just at the time of the receipt of the April Number, I was busily engaged in translating Tatian's Diatessaron into Mulayalam, I had already finished as far as page 81 (Hamlyn Hills Translation): 'Answers to Correspondents' on the same subject I believe was a message to me, and therefore I made a stop to my labour. Now I find rest. I am freed from my anxieties and difficulties. An attempt to harmonize the Gospels made me to doubt in the verbal inspiration of the Scripture."

Fundamentals of Dispensational Truth.

#49. Israel's Passage through the Red Sea (Exod. xiv.).

pp. 1 - 4

> "Sing ye to the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously: the horse and his rider hath He thrown into the sea" (Exod. xv. 1).

The various references to Israel's passage through the Red Sea show that it is an experience which was necessary for Israel, as a parallel may be found in the experience of the believer, and in the future restoration of Israel. An appreciation of its place and meaning will give encouragement to the downcast, stimulus to the one who is seeking the crown or the prize, and en explanation of some of the baffling providences which make up the purpose of the ages.

As we shall see in our next paper on the Revelation, the Beast, the False Prophet, and Satan must be removed before the millennial kingdom can be set up: so Israel must see Pharaoh and his host dead on the sea shore before the kingdom can be inherited. This is emphasized in the prophecy of Israel's restoration recorded in Isa. li. 9, 10:--

> "Awake, awake, put on Thy strength, O arm of the Lord, awake as in the ancient days, in the generations of old. Art Thou not it that hath cut Rahab and wounded the dragon? Art Thou not it which hath dried up the sea, the waters of the great deep; that hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over?"

There is another interesting reference in Isa. xi. Here again the theme is that of Israel's restoration.

> "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set His hand a second time to recover the remnant of His people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt . . . . . and the Lord shall utterly destroy the gulf of Egyptian sea: and shall shake His hand against the river (Euphrates) in the full force of His spirit, and shall smite it in the seven streams for a remnant of His people, who shall be left, out of Assyria: LIKE AS IT WAS TO ISRAEL IN THE DAY THAT HE CAME OUT OF THE LAND OF EGYPT" (Isa. xi. 11-16).

When the ransomed Israelites stood upon the sea shore and realized the deliverance that had been accomplished, together with the tragic overthrow of their enemies, they took up a song of triumphant thanksgiving. After speaking of the way the Lord had "triumphed gloriously" they continued:--

> "The Lord is my strength and song, and He is become my salvation" (Exod. xv. 2).

This is exactly what follows the parallel of Exod. xiv. already quoted above. After speaking of the turning away of the Lord's anger, Israel will continue:--

> "The Lord Jehovah is my strength and song: He also is become my salvation" (Isa. xii. 2).

The parallels are very plain and need no comment. There shall not only be a new covenant made with Israel which shall be infinitely greater than the covenant which the Lord made with them in the day that He:-- > "took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt" (Jer. xxxi. 32).

but there shall be a repetition of the Red Sea experience also. In the book of the Revelation, Pharaoh is set aside and his place is taken by the Beast. The magicians that withstood Moses find their antitype in the False Prophet. The plagues are repeated on a grander scale in the vials of wrath, and the song of Moses blends with the song of the Lamb.

> "I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire; and them that had gotten the victory over the Beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God. And they sing THE SONG OF MOSES AND THE LAMB" (Rev. xv. 2, 3).

These extracts will show the place that the crossing of the Red Sea holds in prophecy.

When reading Psa. lxxvii. we find that the Psalmist, being cast down and troubled, found strength and comfort in remembering that even such an obstacle as the Red Sea must give place before the word of God:--

> "I have considered the days of old, the years of ancient times . . . . . Will the Lord cast off for ever? . . . . . Hath God forgotten to be gracious? . . . . . Then I said, This is my infirmity, but I will remember the years of the right hand of the Most High" (Psalm lxxvii. 5-10).

What is it that the Psalmist recalls for his encouragement? He remembers that moment when Israel, hemmed in by the wilderness and threatened by the pursuing Egyptians, saw the Red Sea open before them:--

> "The waters saw Thee, O God, the waters saw Thee: they were afraid . . . . . Thy way is in the sea . . . . . Thou leadest Thy people like a flock . . . . ." (Psa. lxxvii. 16-20).

We understand from Heb. xi. 29 that not only did the Lord open the Red Sea, but that Israel passed through "by faith". The two phases of the one act are expressed in the words of Exod. xiv. 13, 15:--

> "Fear ye not, STAND STILL, and see the salvation of the Lord."

This is the Godward aspect.

> "Wherefore criest thou unto me? speak unto the children of Israel, that they GO FORWARD."

This is the other side of the truth. We find many parallels to this. Eph. ii. 9 declares that we are not saved "out of works", and Eph. ii. 10 as strongly declares that we have been saved "unto good works", while Phil. ii. 12 says, "Work out your own salvation", while Phil. ii. 13 follows by saying, "it is God that worketh in you".

The reference already made to Rev. xv. will confirm the thought that the passage of the Red Sea was the first great act of overcoming faith on the part of Israel. Heb. xi. says, "By faith he (Moses) kept the Passover" (Heb. xi. 28). "By faith they (Israel) passed through the Red Sea as by dry land" (Heb. xi. 29).

There is a significant addition in the verse concerning the Egyptians. Israel did not merely venture to cross the bed of the sea. The Egyptians did so also. The outward act was the same, but there the semblance ceased, for Israel's act was by faith, the record of Heb. xi. 29 being:--

> "Which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned."

In some way, not fully understood by us, this passage through the Red Sea united the people together with Moses as one:--

> "All our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea" (I Cor. x. 1, 2).

Coming back to Exod. xiv. we observe that the salvation of the Lord, which Israel were to see that day, included not only their own deliverance, but the destruction of their enemy. Salvation in one sense is an accomplished fact; we are redeemed by the blood of Christ. Salvation in another sense is future; we are sealed unto the day of redemption. This future aspect of salvation involves the destruction of the power of death, and him who held the power, i.e., the devil. The Beast, the False Prophet, and the Dragon must be overcome before the saved possess the kingdom.

The Red Sea experience lies ahead of every dispensational division of God's purpose, whether of church or kingdom.

> "Thanks be to God, that giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (I Cor. xv. 57).

#50. Marah before Elim (Exod. xv. 23-27).
pp. 35 - 37

Stamped upon the whole course of the purpose of the ages is the lesson taught in our title, Marah before Elim. It is found in the expressions "No cross, no crown", and "Suffering before glory". Man was created a living soul, and was of the earth earthy. In the resurrection man shall possess a spiritual body, and bear the image of the heavenly. The earthly period of man's life is set in the school of experience and of the knowledge of good and evil. Israel, as we have seen, went down into the bondage of Egypt before they entered into possession of the promised land. In all cases, whether of creation, Israel, church or individual, the remedy for all the ill is found in Christ.

As we read the song of Moses and the response of Miriam in Exod. xv., we feel the glow of triumph and the sense of victory. It is something in the nature of an anti-climax that meets us in verse 22:--

> "And Miriam answered them, Sing ye to the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath He thrown into the sea . . . . . and they went three days into the wilderness, and found no water."

We are conscious that such would be a severe test. Three days' journey in the vicinity of the Red Sea without water would be well-nigh intolerable, and by the end of the third day the sense of triumph that had burst forth into song became dimmed with the feelings of mistrust:--

> "And when they came to Marah, they could not drink of the waters of Marah, for they were bitter: therefore the name of it was called Marah. And the people murmured against Moses, saying, What shall we drink?" (verses 23 and 24).

Here is the first murmuring of the people after leaving Egypt, a murmuring that was to grow and produce the fearful fruits of unbelief:--

> "The waters covered their enemies: there was not one of them left.
> Then believed they His words: they sang His praise.
> They soon forgat His works: they waited not for His counsel" (Psa. cvi. 11-13).

Here in this Psalm the transition is as sudden as it is in Exod. xv. The scene of Israel's failure at Marah is said to be the result of forgetfulness. As remembrance of the bondage of Egypt and their deliverance from their enemies receded, so the sensual remembrance of the land of bondage revived. This people, who so quickly "forgat" the Lord, could say:--

> "We remember the fish, which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlick" (Numb. xi. 5).

This "remembrance" is fatal to the overcomer. Those whose remembrance is thus expressed perished in the wilderness. Lot's wife could not leave the doomed city without "looking back". Her treasures were there. Paul, when pressing on with the prize in view, said:--

> "Forgetting the things which are behind . . . . . I pursue" (Phil. iii. 13, 14).

Egypt with its fish and its onions and its garlick stands for the world and its seductions. Let us, who have been redeemed from the present evil age, seek to cultivate a sanctified forgetfulness, lest the things that have been left behind become a snare.

Forgetfulness led to impatience:--

> "They waited not for His counsel" (Psa. cvi. 13).

Surely if we keep in mind the way in which the Lord has saved us, doubt cannot arise. Unbelief grows only when we forget God. Remembering the Passover, the Red Sea, and the destruction of the enemy Israel would have "waited" instead of "murmured". The argument is expressed for us in the words of Rom. viii. 32:--

> "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?"

We shall most assuredly come to the waters of Marah before we cross the waters of Jordan and stand triumphant in the land of promise, and when we do, what shall we say? shall we murmur? Yes, we shall if we forget the works of the Lord. If, however, we remember His mercy, we shall, in the midst of the sore trial (for bitter water at the end of a three days' wilderness journey is a sore trial) realized that He is still faithful, and that a lesson for our higher good is to be learned. The Lord would have His children to understand that there is but one sweetener for the bitterness of the wilderness journey, and that is the cross of Christ:--

> "And the Lord shewed Him a tree, which when he had cast into the waters, the waters were made sweet: Then He made for them a statute and an ordinance, and there He proved them" (Exod. xv. 25).

"There He proved them."—Deut. viii. 2, 3 reveals the fact that the whole of the forty years in the wilderness with its many trials and calls for patience and trust, its privations and its sufferings, were all a part of the Lord's leading ("Thy God led thee"), and were "to prove" the people in order to make them know that man does not live by bread alone. The lesson is the same for all who tread the pilgrim way. It is there in Hebrews for every partaker of the heavenly calling. It is there in Philippians for all who would, with the apostle, count all things loss, and press on for the prize. Before Abraham received the promise with an oath he was "proved", as we see in Gen. xxii. and Heb. vi.

The sweetening of the bitter waters by the tree is found to be a symbol of the healing of the nation.

> "If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, and wilt do that which is right in His sight, and wilt give ear to His commandments, and keep all His statutes, I will put none of these diseases upon thee which I have brought upon the Egyptians; for I am the Lord that healeth thee" (Exod. xv. 26).

Here is revealed the second of the Jehovah titles:--

The first is JEHOVAH-JIREH (Gen. xxii. 14).
The second is JEHOVAH-ROPHEKA (Exod. xv. 26).

The great dispensational miracle of Acts iii. looks to the same end.

> "Neither is there the healing (salvation) in any other" (Acts iv. 12).

None of the Lord's dealings are arbitrary, all is for His glorious purpose. As soon as the lesson of Marah had been given, and the people "proved" as soon as they realized that the waters of the wilderness must be ever bitter apart from the Lord their Healer, then the burning sand is exchanged for the delightful shade of Elim's palm trees and the wells of Elim take the place of the bitterness of Marah. Here is completeness. Twelve wells, one for each tribe. Here they can anticipate the day when they shall > "draw water out of the wells of salvation" (Isa. xii. 3).

So then, fellow-pilgrims, remember that He who leads to Marah can also lead to Elim, and if it be that Marah shall be our experience, its bitterness shall become sweet if it but reveal, in Christ, the "Lord that healeth". The Lord who knows the bitterness of Marah knows that > "no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but rather grievous, NEVERTHELESS AFTERWARD" (Heb. xii. 11).

If we could but remember those words "nevertheless afterward", our Marahs would speedily give place to Elims, and the initial lesson of the wilderness would be ours. May we have grace at every Marah to look for the tree, which when cast into the waters makes them sweet.

#51. Manna. The Gift of God (Exod. xvi.).
pp. 68 - 71

The necessities of this life are frequently summed up under the phrase "bread and water", to which we must add "raiment" (I Tim. vi. 8). It will be found that in the pilgrimage of Israel, type of the earthly walk of all the Lord's redeemed people, these three items come before us with some degree of prominence.

"Water" figures at Marah in Exod. xv., and again at Rephidim in chapter xvii. The question of the provision of "bread" for the pilgrimage occupies the whole of the intervening chapter xvi. The murmurers remember the flesh pots of Egypt and that they then did eat "bread to the full" (xvi. 3), but the bread of Egypt must give place to the "bread of heaven" for all those who walk the pilgrim's way. It will be remembered that the hasty departure of Israel out of Egypt led to the institution of a new kind of bread:-- and this apparent accident was overruled to emphasize the lesson that the heavenly pilgrimage cannot be sustained with the bread of Egypt, and so the new food provided by God is called "bread from heaven" (Exod. xvi. 4). Psa. lxxviii. 25 calls this bread "angel's food". Manna, the name given to this bread from heaven, first meets us in Exod. xvi. 15:--

> "And when the children of Israel first saw it, they said one to another, 'It is manna', for they wist not what it was."

It is usual to explain the meaning of the word "manna" by saying that it is the Hebrew word uttered by Israel as a question, "What is this?" The Hebrew reads:--

> "When the children of Israel saw it, they said one to another man-hu for they did not know mah-hu."

The A.V. gives an alternative meaning in the margin, reading:--

> "Or what is this? or it is a portion."

The Hebrew word man signifies a portion or a gift. Helen Spurrell's translation reads, "It is the gift, for they knew not its name". Aaron Pick in his Bible Students' Concordance reads MANNA MON, a gift. The marginal note in Newberry's Bible is man-hu, i.e., in Chaldee what is it? In Hebrew it is an appointed portion. Parkhurst quotes from Bates in Grit. Heb. to the effect that :--

> "The children of Israel said man-hu this (is) a particular species, a peculiar thing, for they knew not what it was."

This comes under manah, "to distribute", and so includes the word "kind" of Gen. i. 11, 12, etc., the idea referred to above of "species" and also a distributed portion or gift. Urquhart's comment is :--

> "It is the name which has enshrined the surprise and joy of deliverance from death . . . . . when it was picked up and tasted, the words of Moses flashed upon them and the heart of Israel was swayed as the heart of one man . . . . . 'It is a gift.' It was a happy title, and the scripture thankfully records it."

We believe the meaning of the word manna in Exod. xvi. is "It is a gift", but seeing that the commonly accepted rendering is fairly strongly held, we felt it necessary to show the authority we have for departing from the traditional meaning. We notice that this bread from heaven was a special provision for the wilderness:--

> "Until they came unto the borders of the land of Canaan" (Exod. xvi. 35).
> "And the manna ceased on the morrow after they had eaten the old corn of the land; neither had the children of Israel manna any more" (Josh. v. 12).

During the days of our pilgrimage here the Lord provides for our spiritual needs to suit the circumstances, but we are ever to remember that when this life ceases, and we enter into the life to come, the blessings and mercies of the days of our pilgrimage will appear small when compared with the exceeding riches of grace and glory that shall then be enjoyed. There is a sad addition to the story of Exod. xvi. in Numb. xi. 6:--

> "But now our soul is dried away; there is nothing at all, beside this manna, before our eyes."

"This manna!" the gift of God, the bread from heaven, angel's food! To complete the sad evidence against these people we read in Numb. xxi. 5:--

> "Our soul loatheth this light bread."

The word "light" means "exceedingly light", and the word "loathe" means "to be weary", as Rebekah said:--

> "I am weary of my life because of the children of Heth" (Gen. xxvii. 46).

It is a sad thing when the heart grows weary of the Lord's heavenly provision for His people, yet the same liability to turn in heart away from Christ to the things that have been left behind is not the malady merely of a past generation. It is with us still. The man who could say he counted all things loss did so because of "the excellency of the knowledge of Christ", and he could add:--

> "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto the things which are before, I press . . . . ." (Phil. iii. 8-14).

Those, on the contrary, who said "there is nothing at all besides this manna" and who eventually sank so low as to "loathe" and call "contemptible" the bread from heaven, had prepared the way for this rebellious spirit by an unholy remembrance. Unlike Paul, who forgot those things that were behind, these said:--

> "We remember the fish . . . . . the cucumbers, and the melons and the leeks and the onions and the garlick" (Numb. xi. 5).

They remembered the savouries, the tasty morsels, and were not satisfied with the simple fare for the heavenly pilgrimage: Is there no lesson here for ourselves? They forgot the bitterness of hard bondage which had caused the cry to reach heaven (Exod. ii. 23). This people said on another occasion:--

> "Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt" (Numb. xiv. 4).

but the inspired comment, given by Nehemiah, is:--

> "In their rebellion they appointed them a captain to return to THEIR BONDAGE" (Neh. ix. 17).

If at any time the old nature seeks to turn the face of the pilgrim back to the world he has left behind, it will call to remembrance the pleasures (the leek, the onion, the garlick), but will not remind of the awful bondage and bitterness. We are not left to the evident analogy of the type to show that the manna set forth the Lord Jesus, for with unmistakable directness He Himself has taught the lesson:--

> "Our father did eat manna in the desert, as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat."
> "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead. This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die."
>
> "I am the bread of life."
> "This is that bread which came down from heaven; not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead; he that eateth of this bread shall live for the age" (John vi. 31, 48-50, 58).

Step by step we shall find Israel's history unfolding the all-sufficiency of the Son of God for all things. His one sacrifice as the great Passover was all sufficient for our deliverance. Identification with Him breaks the threefold dominion of sin, death and law. His cross makes every Marah sweet, and He, the great gift of God, supplies all our needs unto the very border of the promised land. The experiences of the Exodus are to be repeated in the near future. The sore judgments of the Revelation echo the plagues of Egypt. In an earlier article we saw that the crossing of the Red Sea was in its turn a type of the future, and now we shall find that the miraculous supply of bread from heaven will be repeated:--

> "And to the woman was given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished" (Rev. xii. 14).

In our articles on The Sermon on the Mount we drew attention to a clause in the prayer taught therein, viz., "Give us this day our daily bread". "Daily" in Greek is epiousios, from epi = upon, and ousios = coming. The true rendering of the prayer therefore is, "Give us this day the bread which cometh down upon us", i.e., the manna. We read of "the hidden manna" in Rev. ii. 17. Some of the manna which fell in the wilderness was placed in the ark.

> "That they may see the bread wherewith I have fed you in the wilderness, when I brought you forth from the land of Egypt" (Exod. xvi. 32).

The overcomer in Pergamos was strengthened by the fact that the God Who could sustain His children for forty years in the wilderness could once again give all needed supplies both spiritual and physical, and even though the edict should go forth that none should be allowed to buy or sell who had not the mark of the beast, even then the Lord would provide while witness was necessary.

Stored up in the Ark of the Covenant were three precious witnesses of the fullness of Christ; (1) the unbroken tables of the law, speaking of His perfect obedience, (2) the rod that budded, speaking of His undying priesthood, and (3) the golden pot that had the manna, speaking of His faithful provision throughout the whole of life's pilgrimage:--

> "Jesus said, 'I am the bread of life: he that cometh to Me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on Me shall never thirst'."
> "Lord, evermore give us this bread" (John vi. 34, 35).

#52. That Rock was Christ (Exod. xvii. 1-7).
pp. 106 - 108

Leaving the Wilderness of Sin, and passing Dophkah, and Alush (Numb. xxxiii. 12-14), the people, now miraculously fed by manna, come to Rephidim.

> "And there was no water for the people to drink" (Exod. xvii. 1).

Surely we shall here find a story of faith and patience, of lessons learned, of experience that led to hope, and hope that made not ashamed! Alas, no! Israel who had seen the waters of the Red Sea form a wall on either side of them at the command of God, who had experienced the sweetening of the waters of Marah, who had been led to the twelve wells at Elim, who had received a daily promise of manna, failed at the first test.

Have not we also failed in similar circumstances? Have there not been occasions in the past when we have passed through some trial in which after serious misgivings and unbelief the hand of the Lord has been revealed, and have we not at some later period been brought face to face with a situation almost identical, and have we not as surely failed to rise to the test of faith as did Israel of old? The repeated trials of our pilgrimage are so many indications of failure. Abraham was never tested twice in the matter of the offering of Isaac, for he responded to the test, but after his sojourn in Egypt we find him returning to the spot between Bethel and Hai:--

> Unto the place of the altar which he had made there at the first" (Gen. xii. 8 - xiii. 4).

Under the pressure of famine he had failed. The second time however he overcame, for immediately after his return to Bethel and Hai the conflict arose which resulted in Lot choosing Sodom, and Abraham receiving confirmation of the promise of the land and the seed (Gen. xiii. 5-18).

At Rephidim Israel failed to remember the wondrous works of God:--

> "Wherefore the people did chide with Moses, and said, Give us water that we may drink" (Exod. xvii. 2).

So great was their murmuring and so threatening their attitude that they not only tempted God, but were at the point of stoning their leader. The Lord commanded Moses to:-- > "Go on before the people, and take with thee of the elders of Israel; and the rod, wherewith thou smotest the river, take in thy hand and go. Behold, I will stand before thee there upon the rock of Horeb; and thou shalt smite the rock, and there shall come water out of it, that the people may drink. And Moses did so in the sight of the elders of Israel" (Exod. xvii. 5, 6).

The word "smite" occurs in Exod. iii. 20 of the smiting of Egypt, and in xii. 12 of the smiting of the firstborn. In Zech. xiii. 7 it is used prophetically of the offering of Christ, "smite the shepherd"; and again in Isa. liii. 4, "smitten of God". We learn from I Cor. x. 3, 4 that the smitten rock was typical of the Lord:--

> "And did all eat the same spiritual meat, and did all drink the same spiritual drink, for they drank of that spiritual rock that followed, and THAT ROCK WAS CHRIST."

Some interpret this passage to mean that the water which flowed that day from the smitten rock actually followed the wanderings of the Israelites from that onward. Deut. ix. 21 speaks of a brook that descended out of the mount, while Psa. lxxviii. 15, 16 says:--

> "He clave the rocks in the wilderness, and gave them drink as out of great depths. He brought streams also out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers."

Wall in his Critical Notes suggests that this river thus formed descended from Horeb to the sea, and that for the remaining 39 years of Israel's wanderings they kept near to its channel until in the last year of their pilgrimage they came to Ezion-gaber (Numb. xxxiii. 36), a part of the Red Sea on the Arabian side. It was not until after this that we once more read of Israel's need of water. Others, seeing that there is no word for "them" in the original of I Cor. x. 4, read the passage as though it means:--

> "They drank of the spiritual rock which followed the sending of the spiritual bread from heaven."

Yet others, seeing the word "spiritual" before the word "rock", teach that we are not to understand this statement of the literal water, but of Christ, Who accompanied the children of Israel on all the journeyings, providing for all their needs all the time. Our own belief embraces the first and the third interpretation.

1. There was literally a river formed by the cleaving of the rocks, which made a provision for the whole period of Israel's pilgrimage.
2. This literal provision in turn is typical of that spiritual rock, Christ, Who has promised never to leave nor forsake His people.

The names given to this place, Massah and Meribah, perpetuate Israel's tempting of God and their striving with Moses. The "tempting" of the Lord is contained in the challenge > "Is the Lord among us or not" (Exod. xvii. 7).

Do we not trace the same spirit at work as led the Lord Jesus to say:--

> "Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe?" (John iv. 48).

In the case in point (John iv. 48) the nobleman did believe the bare word of the Lord, without signs and wonders, but with the generality it was not so. The fame of the Lord had gone throughout the length and breadth of the land; the leper had been cleansed, the demon-possessed had been delivered, the dead had been raised (Matt. iv.-xi.). Yet after all these evidences the Scribes and Pharisees said:--

> "Master, we would SEE A SIGN from Thee!" (Matt. xii. 38).

Israel too in the wilderness had signs in abundance, yet with the pillar of cloud before their eyes, and the table spread in the wilderness, they rose up and said.

> "Is the Lord among us or not?" (Exod. xvii. 7).

What a blessed contrast is seen in the case of the prophet Habakkuk. To him the word had come:--

> "The vision is yet for an appointed time . . . . . wait for it . . . . . the just shall live by his faith" (Hab. ii. 3, 4).

We see how this man "lived by his faith" by the closing verses of chapter iii.:--

> "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail; and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls, yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation" (Hab. iii. 17, 18).

Here is a contrast with Israel in the wilderness. The one tempted the Lord in the presence of want, the other trusted Him. For ourselves we would seek the higher lesson. Not merely to trust the Lord because we know that in spite of appearances He will supply, but to trust Him, as Job did, saying "though He slay me, yet will I trust Him". To trust Him as the three Hebrew youths did when they told Nebuchadnezzar that even if the Lord did not deliver them from the burning fiery furnace, yet would they trust and obey. To accustom oneself to look for signs may be an evidence of unbelief. To the church the word comes:--

> "We walk by faith, not by sight" (II Cor. v. 7).

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

#37. The faith that inherits (vi. 11, 12).
pp. 25 - 27

It is one thing to minister to the saints, it is another to continue. This is the feature that is prominent in the passage before us.

> "In that ye have ministered unto the saints, and are ministering" (Heb. vi. 10).

Ministry to the saints involves much more than mere gifts or a pleasant round of visiting, it comes under the heading of enduring a great fight of afflictions:--

> "But call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions; partly, whilst ye were made a gazingstock both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly whilst ye became companions of them that were so used" (Heb. x. 32, 33).

Here we see that this ministry unto the saints involves suffering and calls for endurance. The passage continues to show that such ministry leads to confidence which hath great recompence of reward:--

> "For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise" (Heb. x. 36).

This is parallel with Heb. vi. 11, 12. They had ministered to the saints, and they were continuing so to do. They had shown (endeiknumi) love unto the name of the Lord. Now the apostle says:--

> "But we earnestly desire for each one of you to show (endeiknumi) the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end" (Heb. vi. 11).

They had shown, may they continue to show, for this was closely associated with the great recompence of reward. We catch an echo of chapter iii. 6 and 14 here:--

> "Whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end" (Heb. iii. 6).
> "We are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end" (Heb. iii. 14).

These are called "partakers of the heavenly calling" in verse 1 of chapter iii., and the failure to enter into the land of promise, which occupies the remainder of chapters iii. and iv., is again before us in Heb. vi. 11, 12:--

> "That ye be not slothful, but imitators of those who through faith and patience inherit the promises."

The mention of the word slothful bids us compare this passage with Heb. v. 11 where the same word is translated "dull". This has already appeared in the structure given in Volume XIII, page 30. The context is concerning Christ and His people "being made perfect". The figures used are those of "babes" and "full grown or perfect". The "dull" had made no progress, they had remained babes. The lessons connected with their perfecting and with Christ as the Priest after the order of Melchisedec could not be told them in their condition. These things are carried over to Heb. vi. 12. The dull or slothful would fail "after the same example of unbelief" (Heb. iv. 11), for the "inheriting" of promises must not be confounded with those gifts in grace that are ours through Christ alone.

Heb. xi. 33 speaks of those whose faith "wrought righteousness" (which cannot refer to justification without works); who "obtained promises". Heb. vi. 15 tells us that this "obtaining" is the result of "patient endurance":--

> "And so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise."

The Hebrews, though saved, were in danger of giving up and going back. The apostle seeing this, and knowing the history of his people as he did, was allowed the privilege of writing to his kinsmen this word of exhortation (xiii. 22). Throughout the epistle the thought of slipping away, turning back, failing to enter, losing confidence, denying the Lord, bartering the birthright as did Esau, is uppermost. The going on to perfection is enforced and illustrated by the example of Caleb and Joshua, the elders who obtained a good report, and by the example of the Lord Himself. Work, love, hope, faith, patience; if the word "labour" be retained in verse 10, we have a similar series to that set out in I Thess. i. 3, and expounded in that epistle. "Faith" and "patience" are the two words used by the apostle in direct connection with inheriting the promises. In Heb. x. 38, 39 we have "living by faith" placed in contrast with "drawing back", and the faith that inherits the promises is the faith that "believes unto the acquiring of the soul" (Heb. x. 39). This rendering we must justify when dealing with chapter x. The faith that inherits the promises is further expressed in Heb. xi. as > "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

This enabled Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham and the rest to overcome and to obtain promises. The whole teaching concerning faith is summed up for us in chapter xii. 2:--

> "Looking away to Jesus the author and perfecter of faith, Who for the joy that was set before Him endured . . . . . and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

The sequel expresses the need for continuance:--

> "lest ye be wearied and faint . . . . . ye have not yet resisted unto blood" (Heb. xii. 3, 4).

The apostle urged his readers to become "imitators" of those who by faith and patience inherit the promises. He says in xiii. 7:--

> "Remember them that have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word God; whose faith be imitating, considering the end of their conversation, Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and unto the ages."

Midst all the change and decay, the fall and the failure of things seen, the Lord remains the same. Your faith and hope are within the veil. Your anchorage is there. While that remains you must endure.

We usually translate hupomone by patience, but this is not the word in Heb. vi. 2, which is makrothumia. Patience is distinguished from makrothumia in II Tim. iii. 10, te pistei te makrothumia, te hupomone: "faith, longsuffering, patience". Again in Col. i. 11, "unto all patience and longsuffering". Longsuffering is ascribed both to God (Rom. ii. 4, ix. 22, I Pet. iii. 20, II Pet. iii. 15) and to Christ (I Tim. i. 16). The believer reflects the longsuffering that God shows to a world of wickedness by quietly waiting with uncomplaining spirit for God's good time. The spirit that chafes, that murmurs, that complains, is in danger of forfeiting the reward. One of the marks of the perfect is that he bridles his tongue. Murmuring lost the land of promise to those who were redeemed out of Egypt. The epistle of the hope and the prize urges all those who would be perfect to "Do all things without murmurings and disputings". (Phil. ii. 14).

#38. What are the Two Immutable things? (vi. 17-19).
pp. 52 - 55

Two related themes occupy the closing verses of Heb. vi., viz., Oath and the Hope.

> "When for example God made promise to Abraham, because He could swear by no greater, He swore by Himself" (Heb. vi. 13).
> "For men verily swear by the greater; and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of His counsel, interposed with an oath: that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation" (Heb. vi. 16-18).

On several occasions God made covenant and promise to Abraham, but upon one occasion only did He interpose with an oath. The occasion was not that first initial act of justifying faith recorded in Gen. xv., but the crowning act of faith given in Gen. xxii. The apostle had said "God is not unrighteous to forget", and the way in which the Lord responded to Abraham's implicit trust is surely on element in that strong consolation which our hope in God gives us. The angel of the Lord did not merely say to Abraham, "Now I know that thou fearest God, seeing that thou hast not withheld thy son from Me", but "seeing that thou hast not withheld thy son, THINE ONLY SON, from me". God did not "forget". He gives prominence to the sacrifice that Abraham made, and in His delight at this great act of faith goes beyond strict necessity and "swears by Himself, saying Blessing I will bless thee".

God was willing "more abundantly". It was, as we have said, beyond strict necessity. It is sufficient for God to speak. A simple promise made by God is enough to command our fullest faith. Yet, so does He condescend, that in this recognition of Abraham's trust, the Lord goes beyond this, and "swears by Himself". The intention was to manifest the unchangeability of His counsel. In the expression, "two immutable things", the word "things" is:--

> "Pragma, an 'act or deed' such as we make and deliver, when we convey anything from one to another" (Owen).

Are we to understand by these two immutable things

1. The Promise of God originally given,
2. The oath superadded afterwards?

We do not think such an answer fully meets the case. If we read on to the end of the chapter we find that the Melchisedec priesthood of Christ is resumed. This priesthood is connected with "hope" (Heb. vi. 18-20). In chapter vii. Abraham is seen together with Melchisedec where the greatness of Melchisedec is established, and then by an easy transition the superiority of the Melchisedec priesthood to that of Levi is shown. This is followed by a reference to a "better hope" and the fact that unlike the Levitical priesthood Christ was made a priest with an oath.

> "For those priests were made without an oath; but this with an oath by Him that said unto Him, The Lord SWARE and will not repent (cf. the immutable counsel and the oath, vi. 17). Thou art a priest for the age after the order of Melchisedec" (Heb. vii. 21).

This close connection of the two oaths, the one with Abraham, the other with Christ, together with the double reference to hope and to Melchisedec, is too plainly the part of a design to be ignored. There is yet further testimony. The words of vi. 17, "Confirmed it by an oath", are given in the margin as "interposed Himself by an oath". The word in the original is mesiteuo, "to mediate". Mesites occurs in Heb. viii. 6; ix. 15; xii. 24, and is consistently rendered "mediator". I Tim. ii. 5 tells us that there is but "one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus". We understand therefore the passage to convey this thought. When God first gave Abraham the promise that he should be the father of many nations, there was not made known to him at the time the fact that the promise was secured in Christ. Nevertheless, even at the beginning, Abraham's faith went out to God Who quickeneth the dead, and the deadness both of Abraham and Sarah is set forth as a picture of resurrection. So then in Rom. iv. 16 the promise is of faith:--

> "that it might be by grace, to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed."

Heb. vi. shows that not only the birth of Isaac, but the offering of Isaac are both closely connected with resurrection:--

> "Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead, from whence he did also in a parable receive him back" (Heb. xi. 19).

It was, we believe, on Mount Moriah that Abraham, in this fellowship with the great gift of God, rejoiced to see the day of Christ, calling the name of that place Jehovah-Jireh. Then it was that the oath was uttered, then it was that the purpose of God was seen secured in Christ as the priest after the order of Melchisedec. The association of Melchisedec with Abraham we leave until we consider chapter vii., but it is important to remember that Abraham had met Melchisedec and had received a profound impression sometime before the great call of Gen. xxii. came. After the Lord had "mediated with an oath" Abraham returned "and dwelt at Beer-sheba" (Gen. xxii. 19), Beer-sheba meaning, "the well of the OATH" (Gen. xxi. 31, margin). One more reference to an oath in Hebrews completes the testimony.

> "So I sware in My wrath, if they shall enter into my rest" (Heb. iii. 18; iv. 3).

Here the two references deal with failure to enter into the promised land, or promised rest. Again the subject is not salvation, but the things that accompany salvation. The three "oaths' of Hebrews therefore are linked together:--

1. Those who did not overcome, like Israel in the wilderness (Heb. iii. 11; iv. 3).
2. Those who do overcome, like Abraham (Heb. vi. 17, 18).
3. The Priest of the overcomer (Heb. vii. 21).

These two oaths are the two immutable things of Heb. vi. and refer to the oaths made to Abraham and the Lord. Abraham's hope rested upon a covenant that was made sure by the shedding of blood. The oath leads on to the hope:-- > "That . . . . . we might have strong consolation who have fled along to grasp the hope set before us, which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and stedfast, and which enetereth into that within the veil" (Heb. vi. 18, 19).

The reader will miss the familiar "fled for refuge" of the A.V. We have repeatedly urged that "Hebrews" does not deal with salvation from sin, but the things that accompany salvation, the going on unto perfection. Katapheugo, translated "flee for refuge" here, is used by the LXX in several places for fleeing to the city of refuge, and this probably influenced the translators of both the A.V. and R.V. The word however is used in other ways, and does not necessarily indicate fleeing for refuge, unless the context so demands. For instance, the LXX version of Lev. xxvi. 25 renders "gather together", katapheugo, and the Hebrew word so translated is asaph, its normal meaning. Jer. l. 5 and Zech. ii. 11 use the word to translate the Hebrew lavah, "to join". In Isa. liv. 15 uses katapheugo to translate naphal, "to fall". In Isa. lv. 5 the word translates the Hebrew rutz, "to run". This Hebrew word is found in Psa. xix. 5 (6) where it is used of "running a race" and in Esther iii. 13, 15; viii. 10, 14 for the "posts" that ran with letters, and Job speaks of his days being "swifter than a post" (ix. 25). This meaning of the word katapheugo, viz., "to run", is in entire harmony with both the context of Heb. vi. and the more remote context of Heb. xii.

The reason why we see a connection in Heb. xii. is found in the recurrence of another word which we must consider. The hope is said to be "set before" us. This word is prokeimai and occurs in Heb. xii. 1, 2:--

> "Let us run with patience the race set before us" (prokeimai).
> "Who for the joy that was set before Him" (prokeimai).

Here the subject is unmistakable. It is a race with a reward at the end. It sums up the whole series of overcomers detailed in Heb. xi. It speaks of those who do not draw back but who go on unto perfection, who believe unto the acquiring of the soul. The apostle, further, urges the believer "to lay hold upon" this hope that is set before him. This word krateo appears in Heb. iv. 14, "let us hold fast our confession".

So far then we have seen that those who, like Abraham, are pressing on toward the goal set before them, in going on unto perfection are comforted and supported by the fact that they have a High Priest Who knows their temptations, Who has passed that way before them, and Who is ever ready to succour them that are tested, even as Abraham was. Other figures are used and fuller details are given which we must reserve for another paper. Let us however not forget that in our own case also we have strong consolation and encouragement drawn, not from Christ as Priest after the order of Melchisedec perhaps, but from the sublime statement of Phil. ii. 6-16 where many parallels may be found with the teaching of Hebrews.

> "Being confident of this very thing, that He Who hath begun in you a good work, will perfect it in the day of Jesus Christ" (Phil. i. 6).

#39. The Anchor and the Forerunner (vi. 19, 20).
pp. 90 - 94

In our previous article we saw that the hope was not to be looked upon as a "refuge", but rather as something to run for and obtain. This hope is now likened to an anchor:--

> "Which we have as an anchor of the soul" (Heb. vi. 19).

The use of the figure is most suggestive. It is part of the equipment of a ship that is not ordinarily used until the voyage is ended. If the anchor is called unto use, the suggestion is that ordinary seamanship is of no avail. If we read the context of the only other occurrence of the word anchor in the N.T. we shall appreciate its place in Heb. vi. the better:--

> "But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven to and fro in the Sea of Adria, about midnight the sailors surmised that they were drawing near to some country; and they sounded, and found twenty fathoms: and after a little space, they sounded again, and found fifteen fathoms. And fearing lest haply we should be cast ashore on the rocky ground, they let go four anchors from the stern, and wished for the day" (Acts xxvii. 27-29).

The Hebrews were in the throes of a great "fight of afflictions". The storm of opposition was rising, and they were in danger of "making shipwreck concerning the faith". This latter expression is found in I Tim. i. 19. There we find the alternative is "holding fast a good conscience", which is parallel with the thought of Heb. vi. This was the anchor that held the worthies of Heb. xi. These are set forth as examples of those who "believe unto the gaining of the soul".

Why is the hope called an anchor of the soul? Why not spirit? Scripture distinguishes between soul and spirit (Heb. iv. 12; I Thess. v. 23; I Cor. xv. 44, 45). The meaning that attaches to the soul in Heb. vi. we may find by reading Matt. xvi. 24-27:--

> "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Me. For whosoever would save his soul shall lose it, and whosoever is willing to lose his soul for My sake shall find it . . . . . For the Son of man shall come . . . . . then shall He render unto every man according to his deeds."

Here it will be observed that the Lord bids His disciples to "lose their soul", not to "save it"! What is involved in the losing of one's soul? self-denial, the taking up of one's cross, and the following of the Lord. When we have a scriptural conception of the word "soul" we shall realize that to lose one's soul means to forfeit many of the pleasures and good things of this life for the truth's sake. Abraham lost his soul. He left Ur of the Chaldees, and kith and kin, to become a dweller in tents, looking forward to the future when in resurrection he should "find" or "gain" his soul, and under happier and holier conditions enjoy to the full those things which he had foregone in this present evil age. Moses lost his soul, that he might gain it. Before him lay a dazzling prospect. He was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians. He evidently had the offer of adoption into the royal family; yet he chose to suffer affliction with the people of God, esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward.

The epistle of Peter makes use of the "salvation of the soul" in a similar manner. In I Pet. i. 3-11 this expression is approached in the following manner:--

1. An inheritance is in view (verse 4), which is further spoken of as
2. Salvation ready to be revealed at the last time (5).
3. In view of this the believer rejoiced even though for a little while put to grief through manifold temptations (6).
4. These trials were in the nature of a test, faith being submitted to a fiery trial, that it may be found unto praise, glory and honour at the revelation of Jesus Christ (7).
5. This is spoken of as 'receiving the end of your faith, even the SALVATION OF YOUR SOULS" (9).
6. The whole passage being summed up in verse 11, "the sufferings for Christ, and the glories that follow".

To such "hope" was an anchor of the soul, called in verse 3 a "living hope".

Taking Matt. xvi. and I Peter together we learn that the believer must "lose his soul" during this life, and look forward to the "saving of his soul" in the life to come. The context of both passages is reward for faithful service at the coming of the Lord. As we have said so many times, Hebrews does not deal with salvation, but the things that accompany it. To take joyfully the spoiling of their goods, as the Hebrew believers had, necessitated some such anchor for the soul. In Heb. x. 34 we read:--

> "For ye . . . . . took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing that you yourselves have in heaven a better and an enduring substance", the words in italics being equivalent to the hope as an anchor of the soul. The anchor for the soul is that better and enduring substance that far outweighs the "light affliction which is but for a moment". Unlike the vain promises of the world, this hope, this anchor, is "sure and stedfast". "Sure" is asphales. In Acts it is used of the Roman officials in connection with Paul:--

> "He could not know the certainty for the tumult" (xxi. 34).
> "He would have known the certainty whereof he was accused" (xxii. 30).
> "Of whom I have no certain thing to write" (xxv. 26).

Asphaleia occurs in the phrase "peace and safety" of I Thess. v. 3. Asphalizo occurs in Matt. xxvii. 64, 65, 66, "to make sure". "Stedfast" is translated "firm" in Heb. iii. 6, "If we hold fast the confidence and hope firm unto the end". The two words appear to be used to express the properties of the anchor, in itself and in its usage. In itself it is "sure"; in its usage it is "reliable". "Hope maketh not ashamed."

If the inspired statement ended here, the hope of the tired and afflicted believer would be of little avail. For of what use is the strongest anchor if it can find no solid anchorage? Therefore the apostle continues

> "and which entereth into that within the veil" (Heb. vi. 19).

At a meeting for children once we were speaking of "hope" and had this verse before us. The children were asked to express their opinion as to what word of four letters was the most important in the verse. Some said "hope"; some, "soul"; others, "sure"; yet others, "veil". Our own choice was the somewhat strange word "that":--

> "Which entereth into THAT within the veil."

When we read chapter ix. we shall have occasion to consider the typical teaching of the tabernacle at some length; here we only need to remember the ark and the mercy seat which were hidden from view by the second veil. There in the ark were the unbroken tables of the law, the rod of Aaron that budded, and the golden pot of manna. These spoke of:--

> RIGHTEOUSNESS.—The unbroken tables of stone.
> UNCHANGING PRIESTHOOD.—The rod that budded.
> WILDERNESS PROVISION.—The manna.

Resting upon the ark was the mercy seat which spoke of sins forgiven, of atonement, of reconciliation. "There I will meet with thee and commune with thee", the Lord had said to Moses, and says to us. Here is the sure anchor ground of the tempest-tossed believer. If hope enters into THAT nothing can ever happen in this life that will prove too severe a test. The anchor and the anchorage are sure and stedfast. The "strong consolation" which is ministered to those who run for the hope set before them gathers strength as the fulness of God's supply is opened up. The hope they have is an anchor for the soul. This hope is both sure in itself and stedfast in its use. Moreover it enters into that within the veil, the bed-rock of redeeming love.

Yet one more item is added to make the consolation complete. We have already seen that the "oath" sworn to Abraham is echoed by the "oath" sworn to Christ as Priest after the order of Melchisedec. The apostle therefore appropriately concludes by saying:--

> "Whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an high priest for the age after the order of Melchisedec" (Heb. vi. 20).

As a forerunner Christ is seen in John xiv. 2, "I go to prepare a place for you". Dr. Macknight says:--

> "Here the allusion is to one sent from a ship to fix its anchor in the place to which it is to be drawn."

The references to Christ as High Priest in this epistle have much to do with the encouragement of the overcomer:--

> "Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed through the heavens (where the forerunner is for us entered), Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession" (iv. 14).

It must also be remembered that the mention of the Melchisedec priesthood of Christ at the close of chapter vi. is really a resumption of the theme started in chapter v. If we keep in mind the way it is introduced in chapter v., and the nature of the parenthesis of chapter vi., we may get further light upon the connection of this priesthood with the believer's hope. In chapter v., after speaking of Christ as priest after the order of Melchisedec, the apostle immediately proceeds to speak of the sufferings of Christ, whereby He was "perfected". The apostle however realized that those to whom he wrote were not sufficiently mature to appreciate the subject:--

> "Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing" (v. 11).

The dullness of hearing is evidently carried over into vi. 12 where it reappears as "slothful":--

> "That ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises."

The exhortation of the parenthesis is "go on unto perfection". We shall find in our next study that Melchisedec is essentially connected with the overcomer, and therefore is appropriately mentioned at the close of chapter vi.

There is one meaning of the word "forerunner" that is not mentioned by commentators, but which we feel must be included in our survey. Prodromos occurs twice in the LXX, but in neither case does it refer to a "forerunner" in the sense usually attaching to the word. The two passages are:-- > "Now the time was the time of the FIRST RIPE grapes" (Numb. xiii. 20, 21).

> "As the HASTY fruit before the summer" (Isa. xxviii. 4).

In both cases the meaning is the first ripe fruit. The reference in Numb. xiii. 20 is to that occasion when the spies entered into the promised land, the results of which form the background of Heb. iii. and iv., where Caleb and Joshua stand forward as overcomers. Christ as the "forerunner" is Christ the "firstfruits". Here He is seen as the pledge and earnest of the overcomer. As the "forerunner" of "first ripe" He is seen in Heb. xii. 2:--

> "Who for the joy set before Him (cf. the hope set before us) endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

If then we consider the hope itself, we find it a sure and stedfast anchor; or the anchor ground, we find it to be "that within the veil"; or the encouragement of example, we find it in Christ, the forerunner and first ripe fruit of the harvest of the many sons He is leading "to glory".

Notes on Ministry.

#1. The Charge.
The First Epistle to Timothy.
pp. 9, 10

In various places the Lord has raised up His children to bear witness to the truth that has made them free, and as a result little gatherings have drawn together. These gatherings are exceedingly simple in character and constitution, and those who have been instrumental in forming them are desirous of avoiding any approach to denominationalism, and that they should be kept close to the teaching of the Scriptures which unfold the unity of the Spirit.

The conditions under which we gather together to-day are such as are indicated in the second epistle to Timothy, where RUIN rather than RULE is evident. Providing we remember this, and do not fall into the error of applying the rules of a properly organized church to a gathering in these perilous times, much guidance can be received by observing the instructions given to Timothy in Paul's first epistle.

It has been the custom from times immemorial to give a newly appointed minister a "charge". The editor of the "Berean Expositor" makes no pretensions to oversight, and therefore cannot give any such charge to those brethren for whom this series has been written. As an expositor of the Word, however, he can draw attention to the inspired charge given by Paul to Timothy, and to those features which are of lasting application.

Turning then to I Timothy, we find upon reading it through that the whole epistle revolves around the words paraggello and paraggelia, which should be rendered in all cases by the word "charge". The occurrences are seven in number and are distributed by design, which emphasizes the seven perfect features of all responsible ministry for all time. The seven passages are arranged as follows:--

"Charge" in I Timothy.

A | i. 3. Doctrine; dispensation: endless genealogies.
B | i. 5. The end—pure heart.
C | i. 18. Contest.
D | iv. 11. The life now, and to come.
C | v. 7. Conduct.
B | vi. 13. Keep spotless.
A | vi. 17. Practice; deposit; profane babblings.

The charge commences with doctrine; it concludes with practice, a connection of which we cannot too frequently remind ourselves and others. As a pivot comes the closing days of the dispensation when false doctrine shall abound. As a beacon and a compass through this time of stress is placed the end of the charge, which is expressed both in i. 5 and vi. 13, and on either side of the central reference we have the martial characteristics of the good soldier, and the more homely witness in the assembly. Let the inspired sub-division of this epistle be our guide as we seek to learn the mind of the Lord for His children who have been called by Him to preach the gospel and teach His people in view of His "appearing and kingdom".

#2. The Doctrine.
The First Epistle to Timothy.
pp. 44 - 47

"NO OTHER DOCTRINE."—These words are foremost in the charge received by Timothy from the apostle. They are foremost for every minister of Christ to-day.

> "Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine; continue stedfast therein. For in so doing thou shalt save both thyself and thy hearers" (iv. 16).
> "Till I come give attendance . . . . . doctrine" (iv. 13).

Eight times over does the apostle use the word doctrine in this epistle, and three times more he uses the word as a compound.

> "As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine" (i. 3).

The word here is heterodidaskaleo, and is translated in vi. 3, "teach otherwise". It will be observed that the stress is not so much upon "false" doctrine, but "other" doctrine, something different from that taught by the apostle. The apostle had besought Timothy to remain at Ephesus, and it was to the elders of Ephesus that the apostle had given the solemn warning concerning those who should enter in among them as grievous wolves not sparing the flock, and that out from among themselves men should arise speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them (Acts xx. 28-31). These teachers of other doctrine (heterodidaskaleo) appear to be a section of the Jews who are called in i. 7, "Teachers of the law" (nomodidaskalos). Writing in a very similar strain to Titus the apostle refers to the teachers of errors as teachers of > "Jewish fables, and commandments of men that turn from the truth" (Titus i. 4).

Over and over again, in these three "pastoral epistles", the apostle reverts to this antagonistic system of teaching:--

> "Fables and endless genealogies which minister questions" (i. 4).

In contrast with:--

> "Doctrine which is according to godliness" (vi. 3).

"Doting about questions and strifes of words" (vi. 4).
"Good doctrine" (iv. 6).

is set over against

"Profane and old wives' fables" (iv. 7).

Turning to II Tim. ii. 14-16 we have on either side of the command concerning the right division of truth:--

"Charging them before the Lord that they strive not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers, ... But shun profane and vain babblings," and in verse 23:--

"But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes."

It may be objected at this point that this series of articles is supposed to be written with a view to helping those who seek to minister the word now, and who as such are not likely to have much opposition from "teachers of the law" and Jewish fables. Are we not somewhat wasting time? To this we must reply: first, that seeing all Scripture is profitable, there must be some great and satisfactory reason for this iteration, and secondly, the purpose is made clear in chapter iv. 1:--

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and DOCTRINES OF DEMONS."

The early opponents of Paul's doctrine foreshadow those that shall arise at the close of the dispensation. The character of this early opposition and the instruction given to Timothy with regard to it will be of great service to any servant of God in these "latter times" who shall meet with their present-day representatives. It is very probable that those who opposed the apostle's teaching in these early churches belonged to, or were influenced by, the teaching of a sect of Jews known as "Essenes", and by the teaching which later became known as "Gnosticism". Blackader summarizes the tenets of the Essenes, as gathered from Philo, Josephus and Pliny, as follows:--

"The Essenes held the names of their angels sacred (Col. ii. 18; I Tim. i. 4); they abstained from blood, and considered the slaying of beasts as sinful (Col. ii. 22); they considered wine a poison, and partook of no other food than bread, salt, water, and hyssop (Eph. v. 18; Col. ii. 22; I Tim. iv. 3-8; and v. 23). Many of them ate only once in three days, and some only once a week, and this only in the night because they esteemed it a work fit only for darkness to relieve the wants of the body. Most of them abstained from marriage and thought it an obstacle to the search after wisdom (I Tim. ii. 2, 11, 12; iv. 3; v. 14). The places in which they pursued their meditations were called monasteria (I Tim. ii. 8). All ornamental dress they detested (I Tim. ii. 9). They believed the soul would live for ever, but they seem to have denied the resurrection of the body (I Cor. xv. 12, II Tim. ii. 17). They spent most of their time in philosophical contemplation, pretended to be derived from their ancestors (I Tim. i. 4; iv. 13; vi. 20, etc.)."

These people were highly respected for their apparent holiness. The monastic life, the extreme neglect of the body passes current among many for real spirituality. Paul's admonition to Timothy to take a little wine for his stomach's sake, and to refuse nothing that God has given, would be looked upon as pandering to the flesh. What would have been said of the word, "richly to enjoy", we cannot imagine. Here is the source of apostacy that shall arise as the apostle warned the Ephesians, "out of your own selves". The source from without is dealt with in other parts of the epistle, which combine together in the dark picture of the latter times. We must deal with these features in their turn. For the moment we seek guidance for the tried and troubled servants of God. What is to be his attitude towards this subtle error? Surely the Scriptures are plain! "Avoid". "Shun", "Refuse". "Withdraw thyself", "Purge himself". What has been given to the ministry of truth as a sheet anchor in the day of stress? Two passages in I Tim. vi. seem to provide the necessary answer:--

> "If any man teach otherwise (same word as in I Tim. i. 3), and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness, he is blinded with pride, and understands nothing" (vv. 3 & 4).
> "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and the antitheses of falsely-named 'knowledge', which some professing have erred concerning the faith" (verses 20 and 21).

We here approach the positive side of Paul's instructions to Timothy. Up to this point we have dealt with that which is negative in character—"Avoid", "Shun", etc., and a description of the teaching that was "other" or heterodox. We must now consider the other side of the question, and as it is so important to us, and demands careful attention, we will do this in our next article. Meanwhile let the servant of God give heed to this "Charge". To indulge in conflicts, "gallings one of another", and disputations, is to depart from the position given us by the Word. Many a meeting which has split up into useless fragments might have been giving an undivided witness to-day had the one in charge given heed to the warning of the apostle to his son in the faith:--

> "Charge some that they teach no other doctrine" (i. 3).

It will be observed by reading verses 10 and 11 that this "doctrine" covers the "gospel". "No other doctrine" includes "no other gospel" (Gal. i., ii.). It is not for us to judge another man's servant. The Lord may have sent some to preach the gospel of the Kingdom or the gospel of the Circumcision—we do not know. What we do know is that so far as we are concerned the edifying of the body of Christ cannot be accomplished by "other doctrine", and the "Word of truth, the gospel of your salvation" is none other than that preached by the apostle Paul.

#3. The Doctrine.
The Place of Stewardship.
pp. 65 - 67

In this article we turn from the negative to the positive. Passing by the "other doctrine", the "fables and the endless genealogies which minister questions", we observe the sequel—"rather than a godly edifying which is in faith" (I Tim. i. 4).

As the passage stand "godly edifying in faith" is placed as the goal of the true ministry of Christ instead of the erroneous teaching so rigorously set aside. A reference, however, to the Greek text reveals that a yet fuller and deeper meaning was in the apostle's charge to Timothy. Instead of reading oikodomian, "edifying", the best Greek texts read oikonomian, "dispensation" or "stewardship". "Godly" is a rather wide rendering of Theou which should be translated "of God". The passage therefore reads:--

> "Rather than that dispensation of God which is in faith."

This is a most important passage for the servant of Christ. To catch the meaning of the apostle better it will be necessary to be in the same position as Timothy, who understood to what the "endless genealogies" referred. Quoting from Lewin's Life and Epistles of St. Paul, Volume II, we find:-- > "The Gnostics or men of knowledge (gnosis) were so called from their claiming to be the sole depositories of the knowledge of the true God. The apostle tells Timothy 'avoid profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of knowledge (gnoseos) falsely so called', and again 'they profess that they know God, but in works they deny Him'. The system of the Gnostics was compounded of many heterogeneous ingredients. Platonic philosophy, Cabbalistic fables of the Jews, Oriental philosophy and Christianity.

> In the course of time God, called Bythos or Depth, by acting upon His own mind, which was called Sige or Silence, produced two other beings of different sexes, denominated AEons or Emanations, and from these two by successive descents sprang a series of other AEons. It may readily be imagined that when human intellect attempted by its own efforts to trace the celestial pedigree, there arose infinite disputations as to the number of the AEons and the order of their procession."

Lewin sets out the fourteen pairs of AEons which we omit here, also a great deal of information regarding the Gnostic teaching concerning the coming of Christ in the flesh. The feature of great importance to us is that here is a rival claim to the PURPOSE OF THE AGES (aeons) and to the dispensational dealings of God with man. Instead of giving heed to their speculations concerning the ages, their character and purpose, give heed to that dispensation which is in faith.

Gnosticism may not be professed to-day under that name, but all speculation that departs from the written Word as to these things is the same in nature and effect. Every servant of Christ must be prepared to find that as soon as he attempts to unfold the "dispensation of God", there will at the same time arise those who by superadding their own speculations to the revealed teaching of Scripture give ground for disputation, draw aside disciples after themselves and cause the way of truth to be evil spoken of. The words, “the dispensation of God which is in faith”, have a meaning of even more personal value than what we have advanced. The passage can be equally rendered:--

> “Fables and endless genealogies, which furnish ground for disputations, rather than for the exercising of the stewardship of God in faith.”

To each and every servant of Christ comes the imperative need to know one’s stewardship. Why, says the apostle in effect, do you allow yourselves to be side-tracked by the vain speculations of men? You know your stewardship—fulfil it! Why did the apostle withhold certain phases of doctrine from the Corinthians? Because they were carnal and walked as men. When the Corinthians objected, what was his answer?

> “Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and STEWARDS (ones having a dispensation) of the mysteries of God. Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found FAITHFUL. But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man’s day” (I Cor. iv. 1-3).

A person acting for himself may please himself as to the disposal of his goods and the remission of debts, but a steward has no such right with the property of another. A steward must not say to his Lord’s debtors, “Take thy bill and sit down quickly, and write fifty”. Our doctrine must ever be preached “with longsuffering”, but without alteration:--

> “Whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear” (Ezek. ii. 5).

To realize that our stewardship is a sacred trust places us beyond the criticism or the approval of man.

> “He that judgeth me is the Lord” (I Cor. iv. 4).
> “Study to show thyself approved unto God” (II Tim. ii. 15).

As soon as one commences to fulfil the stewardship entrusted, so soon will advisers arrive on every hand. “You ought to do this, that, or the other”, will be a continual sound in one’s ears. It is a blessed thing under such circumstances to know one’s stewardship and to recognize that > “One is your Master, even Christ” (Matt. xxiii. 8).

The Berean Expositor is a stewardship. It is not run merely because those responsible felt that it would be “nice” to publish a Christian magazine. Sometimes it is anything but “nice”. A definite deposit of truth demanding a channel for exposition called The Berean Expositor into existence, and the realization of this must be taken into account by those whose suggestions regarding the little witness have been consistently refused. Each one called of the Lord to witness for Him has a stewardship and is accountable to Him alone:-

> “Who art thou that judgest another man’s servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth” (Rom. xiv. 4).

There is yet further teaching for us before we pass on to the other features of the “charge”, and this we must consider in the next article of this series.

#4. The Doctrine.
"That Good Deposit."
pp. 109 - 111

We have seen that (1) "other doctrine" is to be discountenanced; and (2) an appreciation of the purpose of God and our stewardship must be continually before us. We have one other phase of this subject to consider before we have a complete presentation of the truth. If the apostle in his opening words charges Timothy to give no heed to fables and endless genealogies which minister questions, but rather to exercise the stewardship of God in faith, at the close of the epistle he says:--

> "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings . . . . ." (I Tim. vi. 20).

It is very evident that "stewardship" is echoed in the words, "committed to thy trust".

What had been committed to Timothy's trust that he must hold against all seduction and opposition? By turning to the original we find that a rather peculiar word, paratheke, is used, translated "that which is committed to thy trust". The marginal note of the R.V. is "the deposit". The word occurs again in II Tim. i. 14, where we read in the A.V. "That good thing that was committed unto thee", where again the R.V. margin reads, "the good deposit". In II Tim. i. 12 the apostle uses the word of himself:--

> "I suffer these things; nevertheless I am not ashamed; for I know Whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep MY DEPOSIT against that day."

The passage does not mean what Paul had deposited with the Lord, as a well known hymn so stresses, but rather what had been deposited by the Lord with Paul. To this the apostle refers in the preceding verse:--

> "Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles."

What was this "deposit", this "entrusted thing", that Timothy was to keep, and that the apostle knew his Lord would guard? Surely we have the explanation in verses 13 and 14 of the same chapter, viz.:--

> "Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard from me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus. That good deposit keep."

That which Timothy was to hold fast, that which he was so solemnly called upon to keep or to guard, is one and the same thing. In the first place it had been entrusted to the apostle Paul, "my deposit" (II Tim. i. 12). This was in turn committed to Timothy to hold fast and to keep. In his turn he was to "commit" or "deposit as a trust" the self-same teaching to faithful men who shall be able to teach others (II Tim. ii. 2). The good deposit is defined as "a form of sound words". An old hymn has it:--

"A form of words, howe'er so sound,
Can never save the soul.
The Holy Ghost must give the wound,
And make the wounded whole."

Such however is not a good comment upon the passage before us. Hupotuposis occurs in two places only, one referring to the form of sound words (II Tim. i. 13), the apostle's teaching; the other to the pattern to believers (I Tim. i. 16), the apostle's experiences.

> "Brethren", said the apostle, "be imitators together of ME, and mark those who walk according to MY example" (Phil. iii. 17).

Hupotuposis means the preliminary draft before the finished plan. When, for example, an engine is designed, the engineer does not set out as to the number of cogs is all-sufficient for the hupotuposis. When the rough sketch is complete, other hands may finish the details up to the last line, but in essence they never exceed by one hair's-breadth the original design. Paul received the dispensation of the mystery as a sacred trust, a good deposit, direct from the ascended Christ. The knowledge of this sacred trust enabled the apostle to hold on his way against all opposition, against the heart-breaking spectacle of all in Asia forsaking him, and of those whom he was at last to give his life's blood leaving him to stand alone.

> " 'Nevertheless', said he, 'I know whom I have believed'." (II Tim. i. 12).
> " 'Notwithstanding', said he, 'the Lord stood by me, and strengthened me, that BY ME the teaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear'." (II Tim. iv. 17).

We cannot avoid the singular insistence of Paul upon himself as the appointed channel of this precious truth, and it is this complete and unique testimony that is ours, in our turn and according to our measure, to hold fast, to make known, to teach and to adorn. The Gnostics claimed to be the ones with whom knowledge had been deposited. The apostle sets over against this assumption of knowledge falsely so-called the facts of his stewardship, and urges Timothy to give heed to, to guard, to teach that only.

Here is the impregnable position of the steward of God to-day. He has but one service to render, one stewardship to fulfil. The pattern of his walk, the form of his doctrine, is already settled. He follows Paul as Paul followed Christ. Because he holds fast the pattern of sound words as defined by Paul, traditionalism will call him a Paulite. Let him say with the apostle, "None of these things move me". Through good report or evil report, through honour and dishonour, with open pulpits or barred and bolted doors, let him yield in subjection to those who would mutilate the sacred truth entrusted NOT FOR AN HOUR. In the light of these things let us read over again the opening words of the "Charge".

> "Charge some that they teach no other doctrine . . . . . than the dispensation of God in faith" (I Tim. i. 3, 4).

The Ministry of Consolation.

#12. "Let the redeemed of the Lord say so." (Psa. cvii. 2).
pp. 10 - 13

Standing at the head of the fifth book of the Psalms, this Psalm voices the theme of that book which embraces Psalms cvii.-cl. Those who are called upon to "say so" are those who are called the redeemed of the Lord, and who have been redeemed from the hand of the enemy. The reference to the gathering of this redeemed people from the lands of the east and west, north and south, clearly looks to that day when Israel's dispersion shall be over and the ransomed of the Lord shall have returned to their rest and their inheritance.

There is much in the Psalm, however, that applies to the redeemed of all dispensations, and it is with the desire that the redeemed of the Lord may be encouraged to "say so" that we draw attention to the experiences detailed in the body of the Psalm. The necessity for redemption is brought before us in four tableaux, each leading on to the extreme condition of the lost, and the gracious intervention when all hope in self had failed.

Let us see the four pictures together, and observe their parallels and contrasts.

Psa. cvii. 4-32.

FIRST PICUTRE.—Wanderers in wilderness (verses 4 and 5).
SECOND PICTURE.—Rebels against the word (verses 10-12).
THIRD PICTURE.—Fools because of transgression (verses 17 and 18).
FOURTH PICTURE.—Those that go down to the sea in ships (verses 23-27).

The first picture sums up mankind in the one word "lost". The "solitary" way of verse 4 means a trackless, pathless desert. The Hebrew word occurs in the A.V. as the proper noun Jeshimon in six passages (see Numb. xxi. 20, etc.). There, no "city to dwell in" is to be found. It is a picture of unrest and anxiety. Added to the bewilderment of the trackless desert and the comfortless character of its uninhabitable dreariness is "hunger and thirst". Their condition is summed up in the words, "their soul fainted in them". Thirst is often used in a figurative sense in association with a felt need for the presence of God:--

> "O God, Thou art my God; early will I seek Thee: my soul thirsteth for Thee, my flesh longeth for Thee in a dry and thirsty land, where no water is" (Psa. lxiii. 1). A Psalm of David when he was in the wilderness of Judah.
>
> "I stretch forth my hands unto Thee: my soul thirsteth after Thee, as a thirsty land" (Psa. cxliii. 6).
> "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God. My soul thirsteth after God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God?" (Psa. xlii. 1, 2).

When in this extremity they cried unto the Lord. In each case, whether lost, rebels, fools, or mariners, the one expression occurs—"in their trouble". Over and over again does this word come to indicate the circumstances both of the redeemed and of the sinful. It is too large a subject to be dealt with just here. God, however, has revealed Himself as > "A very present help in trouble" (Psa. xlvi. 1).

and He is seen in the Psalm before us responding alike to lost and to fool, to rebel and mariner:--

> "Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble,
> And He delivered them out of their distresses.
> And He led them forth by a right way,
> That they might go to a city of habitation" (verses 6 and 7).

It will be observed that in the first two cases "they cried" (verses 6, 13), but in the second two instances "they cry" (verses 19, 28). The Scriptures are written that we may take heart and profit by them. They are not merely records of the past; they are also promptings for the present:--

> "Hear my cry . . . . . FOR THOU HAST BEEN a shelter for me" (Psa. lxi. 1-3).

Unless we really use the Scriptures in this way, are they not to a large extent a dead letter, a tale that is told, and ourselves merely sentimental antiquarians? Now comes the refrain, that which the redeemed of the Lord are called upon to "say" (verse 2):--

> "Oh that men would praise the Lord for His goodness,
> And for His wonderful works to the children of men!
> For He satisfieth the longing soul,
> And filleth the hungry soul with goodness" (Psa. cvii. 8, 9).

The "point" of each section of the Psalm is not discovered by searching the story, but by noticing the subject of thanksgiving. Who are the wanderers in the wilderness? Do they typify the sinner lost in his sin? We may incline to that view, but we shall be wrong. God, Who trieth the reins and knows what is in man, answers the real and actual need, and this shows us that the first picture of the series is not so much that of the sinner, but of the saint, the satisfaction of the longing soul being the substance of the Lord's answer.

When we look at the last tableau we shall see that the same is true of that case also. Instead of pilgrims seeking a city and fainting in the pathless wilderness we have sailors doing business in great waters. These are neither rebels nor fools, but set forth in type the traveler on the heavenly journey. The terrific storm that breaks over them melts their soul in trouble, they are at their wit's end. That is a place that does not appear in the Gazetteers of this world, yet every traveler across the sea of life must round this Cape "Wit's end" if he would enter the true Pacific:--

> "Then they cry unto the lord in their trouble,
> And He bringeth them out of their distresses,
> He makes the storm a calm,
> So that the waves thereof are still.
> Then they are glad because they are quiet;
> So He bringeth them unto their desired haven" (Psa. cvii. 28-30).

The central pair of pictures deal more definitely with types of sin. We have the "rebel" and the "fool". The rebellion is against "the words of God". The folly is by reason of transgression and iniquity. In the one case it leads to bondage:--

> "Being bound in affliction and iron" (verse 10);

in the other it leads to death:--

> "They draw near to the gates of death" (verse 18).

Here we have in picture form a faint presentation of the inner teaching of Rom. v.-viii., which deals with the dominion of sin and death:--

> "He brake their bands in sunder" (Psa. cvii. 14).
> "He sent His word, and healed them" (Psa. cvii. 20).

Strictly, this sentence reads in the present tense:--

> "He sendeth His word and healeth them", in harmony with the change of tense from "they cried" to "they cry".

The structure of this series must follow the internal indication of doctrine and is set out as follows:--

Psa. cvii.

A | 4-7. Type.—WILDERNESS.
Meaning.—The soul seeking fellowship.
Extremity.—Their soul fainteth. Then they cried.
Answer.—Soul satisfied.

B | 10-12. Type.—REBEL.
Meaning.—Bondage and dominion of sin.
Extremity.—None to help. Then they cried.
Answer.—Bands broken in sunder.

B | 17-20. Type.—FOOLS.
Meaning.—effect of transgression.—"death."
Extremity.—Draw near to death. Then they cry.
Answer.—Healed and delivered.

A | 23-30. Type.—MARINERS.
Meaning.—The believer seeking home.
Extremity.—Wit's end. Then they cry.
Answer.—Their desired haven.

In both sets A and B the alteration of "cried" and "cry" occur. Whether we be passively "lost" or actively "rebels", whether we be actively "fools" or passively at out "wit's end", let us cry, and then when deliverance has come:--

"Let the redeemed of the Lord say so."

#13. "I will be with him in trouble" (Psa. xci. 15).
pp. 33, 34

Though the four divisions of Psa. cvii. differ widely in outward form, they are one in essence. Whether it be the wanderer in the trackless wilderness, the rebel in his bonds, the fool at the gate of death, or the mariner at wits end, the scripture places all these experiences under one term. All cry unto God "in their trouble". The Hebrew word for trouble in Psa. cvii. is tsar. Not only does the word come in verses 6, 13, 19 and 28 where it is plainly seen in the A.V., but it comes also in verse 2 where it is translated "enemy". Spurrell's translation reads:--

> "The redeemed of Jehovah shall utter it, > Whom He hath redeemed out of the power of misery."

So long as there lies before us the pilgrim path, so long must we be prepared for "trouble". It will minister to our comfort and our strength to learn somewhat of the teaching of scripture concerning this constant associate of our pilgrimage. We do not want to be numbered among those who carry a threefold burden, the burden that has passed, the burden that is present, and the burden that may never come. To counteract this tendency we take heed to the Lord's words

> "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

At the same time to act as the ostrich and hide our eyes from the obvious will add to, rather than take away from, the trouble of our pathway.

In that wondrous Psalm xci., written in the first place to assure the younger generation of Israel that no harm should overtake them during all the 40 years wandering in the wilderness with their fathers, while they are promised:--

> Protection under the shadow of the Almighty,
> Deliverance from the snare and the pestilence,
> Immunity from terror and death either by day or night,
> Angels to take charge of their very steps,
> Answers to their prayers; yet in the selfsame Psalm it is assumed that trouble will be experienced, trouble beneath the shadow of the Almighty, trouble even with angels as guardians.

> "He shall call upon Me,
> and I will answer him:
> I will be with him in trouble;
> I will deliver him, and honour him.
> With long life will I satisfy him,
> And shew him my salvation" (Psa. xci. 15, 16).

Once only in this Psalm is the pronoun "I" emphatic. In verses 14-16 "I will" occurs six times, viz.:--

I will deliver; I will set on high; I will answer; I will deliver; I will satisfy.

In five occurrences (those given above) the pronoun is not emphasized. The Lord has seen fit to lift one item of blessing out from all the rest; one that we might have been inclined to pass by as we contemplated the grander issues of deliverance and exaltation.

"I will be with him in TROUBLE" (verse 15).

If we are assured that throughout the days of our pilgrimage trouble will ever keep step with us, let us remember the blessed fellowship emphasized here:--

"I will be with him in trouble" (Psa. xci. 15).
"When thou passeth through the waters
I will be with thee;
And through the rivers
They shall not overflow thee" (Isa. xliii. 2).

Let this be for our consolation, that where trouble meets us, there most emphatically we may hope to find the personal presence of the Lord.

#14. "Be not far from me, for trouble is near" (Psa. xxii. 11). "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble" (Psa. xlvi. 1).

pp. 77, 78

There are some portions of the A.V. that are so beautiful, so apt, so endeared by long association and fierce trial that no amount of scholarship or learning will supplant them. The verse quoted from Psa. xlvi. is surely one of them. Rotherham's version reads:--

"God for us is a refuge and strength, a help in distresses soon found."

This supplies us with one or two facts which we may learn for our profit without suggesting that such a rendering will ever take the place of that of the A.V. The words "very present" are literally "much found". The Hebrew word occurs in Psa. xxxvii. 36:--

'Yet he passed away, and lo, he was not; yea I sought him, but he could not be found."

In I Chron. xxix. 17 we read:--

"Thy people, which are present here, to offer willingly" (margin, 'or found').

Among the many suggestive renderings of this word we note two, viz.:--

"The men of Israel . . . . . smote . . . . . all that came to hand" (Judges xx. 48).
"The hill is not enough for us" (Josh. xvii. 16).

Not only is God a very present help in trouble, He is "enough", and (thankful are we to record it) He will ever "come to hand". The historic setting of this Psalm is the period of Sennacherib's siege of Jerusalem, and is probably one of the songs of Hezekiah. Isaiah speaking of the invasion uses the figure of an overflowing river:--

> "The Lord bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria, and all his glory; and he shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks" (Isa. viii. 7).

It is in answer to this that the Psalmist says:--

> "Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea! Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof" (Psa. xlvi. 2, 3).

The same ground of assurance that is found in Isa. viii. is found in the Psalm.

> "Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought: speak the word, and it shall not stand; for GOD IS WITH US" (Heb. Immanu EL) (Isa. viii. 10).

So in Psalm xlvi. 7 and 11:--

> "The Lord of hosts is WITH US" (Immanu).

When the news of the great earthquake that shattered Yokohoma and other towns of Japan reached England, it was naturally spoken of during the meal time, and after the meal was finished, the little girl whose Bible lessons have already been spoken of in the pages asked whether earthquakes ever visited England. She seemed somewhat scared by all that had been said in her presence. Instead of quieting her fears by saying, "Now don't be alarmed, earthquakes do not come to England", we said, "Lovey" (her name at home) "bring the Bible and find Psa. xlvi. and read verses 1-3". Then as her childish treble voiced the words of strong consolation:--

> "Therefore we will not fear, though the earth be removed . . . . . though the mountains shake . . . . ."

We found it possible to say to her:--

> "Even supposing an earthquake did come and God should be pleased to allow this house of ours to be destroyed and we in it. What then?" "Therefore we will not fear."

We should face facts, and we can dare to do so with the word in hand and heart. The secret of our strength is found in the word" "The Lord of hosts is with us". "Immanuel, God with us."

> "He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee, so that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, I will not fear what man shall do unto me" (Heb. xiii. 5, 6).

Studies in the Epistles of the Mystery.

#65. Balance (Eph. iv. 1).
pp. 6 – 8

With this paper we commence the second great section of the Epistle to the Ephesians, and enter into the sphere of practice.

There is scarcely anything more important, and in need of more emphasis and repetition, than that doctrine must ever be accompanied by practice, that walk must correspond with calling, that fruit must manifest the hidden root. This correspondence of doctrine and practice is most happily displayed in the epistle. It naturally divides into its two main sections—the first three chapters containing the great revelation, the second three chapters the resulting exhortation. Take a few instances by way of illustration. To see the whole would necessitate a most detailed structure of the epistle.

Doctrine (i.-iii.).	Practice (iv.-vi.).
The power of His might and the principalities and powers (i. 19-23).	The power of His might and the principalities and powers (vi. 10-17).
This shows our doctrinal position and sphere of spiritual blessings.	This shows the corresponding conflict and spiritual foes.
The old walk—"this world" (ii. 2).	The old walk—"vanity of mind"; "uncleanness"; "darkness"; "as fools".
The new walk—"new creation" (ii. 10).	The new walk—"lowliness of mind"; "in love"; "as light"; "circumspectly".
The new creation—The new man (ii. 10-15).	The old man—put off. The new man—put on (iv. 22-32).
The temple—"fitly framed together" (ii. 19-22).	The body—"fitly joined together" (iv. 7-16).
	Its present manifestation.

These examples will suffice for the moment. It will be seen what a stimulus we receive to unity when we see that the exhortation to be "fitly joined together" as members of the one body is but a temporal and corporal expression of the higher and fuller unity of the temple so marvelously "fitly framed together".

Or again, it is not enough that we should learn the doctrine of the new creation and the new man; it must have some result. The old man with his "former conversation" (iv. 22) and "with his deeds" (Col. iii. 9) must be put off, otherwise the glorious doctrine remains without life. The exalted position of the believer in the ascended Lord—"far above all"—brings him into conflict with "principalities and powers" that are associated with evil. The mighty power that raised Christ from the dead is the power in which alone he can hope to overcome these spiritual foes. All this, and more, is expressed in the one word of Eph. iv. 1, "Walk worthy". The word "worthy" (axios):--

> "refers to a pair of scales in which, when the weights on each side are equal, they bring or draw down (axiousi) the beam to a level or horizontal position" (PARKHURST).

What a wonderful thought this is. Let us just think of the balances. On the one scale all the blessings, the riches, the glories of our calling as revealed in Eph. i.-iii.; on the other scale the walk that shall balance these blessings, these riches, these glories, the walk that shall bring the beam of the balance to the horizontal, the walk that is "worthy of the calling". There is a sense of comparison in the word. In Rom. viii. 18 the apostle says that:-- > "the suffering of the present time are unworthy of comparison (oukaxia) with the glory about to be revealed in us."

The first occurrence of the word axios in the LXX is suggestive of the idea of something "equivalent". Abraham, when negotiating the purchase of the cave of Machpelah said:--

> "for as much money as it is worth shall he give it me" (Gen. xxiii. 9).

The Hebrew is given in the margin "full money", the Greek version being argurion axion. This was weighed in the balances to the last shekel of the 400 as we see in verse 16. This same sense is felt in Job xi. 6:--

> "God exacteth of thee less than thine iniquity deserveth."

Here again the LXX uses axios. The idea of comparison is seen in Prov. iii. 15, "not to be compared with her". Such is the word that the apostle uses at the opening of his exhortation, "Walk worthy". Walk so that there may be a comparison evidenced between doctrine and practice.

The word axios is an adverb, and standing alone would be translated "worthily", but the word does not stand alone in any of its occurrences in the N.T.; it is always followed by such an expression as "of the Lord", "of the calling", "of the gospel". "Worthy of the Lord" must be taken as an adverbial phrase. "As becometh saints" (Rom. xvi. 2) is literally "worthy of saints". "After a godly sort" (III John 6) is literally "worthy of God". The word axios comes three times in the prison epistles, and in each case it is associated either with the calling, the gospel, or the Lord. We are not allowed to think merely of the walk, not merely of walking worthily, not simply to be studying our walk as such, but ever to think of the walk as it is related to something higher and nobler than ourselves.

In Eph. iv. 1	we have "walk worthy of the calling".
In Phil. i. 27	we have "manner of life worthy of the gospel".
In Col. i. 10	we have "walk worthy of the Lord".

How it must influence us if we but remember that in the one scale of the balance is our calling, the gospel, yea, even the Lord Himself. What a walk that must be therefore that shall be "worthy".

It will be seen that the word "walk" occurs in the epistle seven times, and therefore bears the hall-mark of Divine emphasis:--

A | ii. 2. Walk according to (kata) world.
B | ii. 10. Good works,
iv. 1. Worthy of calling.
A | iv. 17. Walk as (kathos) Gentiles.
B | v. 2. In love.
v. 8. As light.
v. 15. Circumspectly.

The negative is grouped under A, the positive under B. We need both. We need to be warned of that walk which is according to the age of this world, and of that walk which partakes of the characteristics of those conditions we have left behind. We are exhorted to remember that we were once Gentiles in the flesh, and in the world (ii. 11, 12), and to see to it that our walk shall not be in accord with either of these.

Let us once again be permitted to bring before the mind's eye the balances, as we repeat the exhortation, "Walk worthy".

#66. The Walk and the Calling.
pp. 21 – 24

> "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called" (Eph. iv. 1).

It will be noticed that when referring to himself as the "prisoner" in iii. 1, the apostle calls himself "The prisoner of Christ Jesus" (R.V.), but that in chapter iv. he styles himself "the prisoner of the Lord". These titles are not used at random. "Christ Jesus" speaks of the ascended and risen Saviour in Whom we find our acceptance, our ground of blessing, our hope of glory. "Lord" speaks of our relationship with Him in the practical sphere.

> "Ye call Me Master and Lord, and ye say well; for I am. If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet . . . . . the servant is not greater than his Lord" (John xiii. 13-16).

In the A.V. of this epistle the title "Lord", standing alone, occurs sixteen times. Of this number only one occurrence is found in the three doctrinal chapters (ii. 21, "An holy temple in the Lord"). The remaining fifteen occurrences are all found in the three practical chapters.

> The prisoner of the Lord, beseeches the saints to walk worthy (iv. 1).
> The unity of the Spirit gathers around the one Lord as its centre (iv. 5).
> Paul testifies in the Lord that the saints do not henceforth walk as the Gentiles (iv. 17).
> As light in the Lord, the believer should walk as child of light (v. 8).
> Proving what is acceptable unto the Lord (v. 10).

and so through the whole series.

"In Christ" expresses our doctrinal position.
"In the Lord" indicates our practical relationship.

I may address a fellow believer as a dear brother "in Christ" far more freely than I can call him a brother "in the Lord". This distinction must be remembered when applying the teaching of I Cor. vii. 39:--

"She is at liberty to be married to whom she will; only IN THE LORD."

This limitation means much more than that marriage should not be contemplated as between a saved and an unsaved person. Many an unhappy and profitless marriage has been contracted by two children of God. The trouble has arisen from the fact that though they have both been one "in Christ", they have not been one "in the Lord". They did not seek the same thing, they did not believe or practice the same thing. Their callings may have differed, and division and bitterness have often been the result. The apostle was a prisoner not only of Christ Jesus, but of the Lord. As such he could exhort those who recognized the same Lord to walk worthy of their calling, and later, exhort them to consider his own walk as a pattern.

The theme of chapter iv. may be discovered by noticing the way in which the apostle returns to his subject. First he speaks of the walk positively, as worthy of the calling, with all humility of mind. Then, after a long digression concerning the unity of the Spirit, he returns to the walk, this time speaking negatively—not as Gentiles, in the vanity of their mind. This again is followed by teaching concerning the new man. It will be more apparent if set out thus:--

Eph. iv. 1-32.

A | 1, 2. The walk, positively. Humility of mind.
B | 3-16. The One Body.
A | 17-19. The walk, negatively. Vanity of mind.
B | 20-32. The New Man.

This division of the subject brings to light an important truth. By omitting the parenthesis of iii. 2-13 we realize that the Church of the One Body is the temple of the Lord. This prayer is in direct contact with the apostle's "I therefore" of iv. 1, and links the One Body on to the Temple, indicating that the body aspect is the outward (and perhaps only temporal) manifestation of the real and lasting temple character.

Now, we see further by the analysis of chapter iv. that the One Body is also a reflection of the New Man. This is confirmed by a reference back to chapter ii. 15, "For to create in Himself of twain one new man". No doctrine of Scripture is isolated. All is part of the great purpose of the ages. While we must ever seek rightly to divide the Word of truth, we must remember that within the dispensational section to which we belong our faith is one, our hope is one, our Lord is one.

The walk of the believer appears to be presented as having a threefold relationship in the opening exhortation.

	/	Worthy of calling.
TO WALK.	{	With all lowliness, etc.
	\	Endeavouring to keep the unity, etc.

Let us consider this order. Is it possible to reverse it without involving ourselves in trouble and disappointment? Let us see. Suppose we attempt to keep the unity of the Spirit without the necessary humility, forbearance and longsuffering! The result will be a repetition of sectarian harshness, the puffing up of some few stronger minds and the crushing of the weak. How shall the graces of humility, meekness, forbearance and longsuffering be encouraged? We are driven to the inspired order; these qualities will thrive and grow as we seek to walk worthy of our calling. As we realized the marvelous grace that has been manifested to ourselves, so we shall in our turn be the better able to manifest that grace to others. We assume that all our readers know that the word "vocation" of Eph. iv. 1 is simply the word "calling". The calling of believers during the Acts differed in many essentials from that of the prison ministry of Paul. In one sense, at least, it would be the same, and we may take to ourselves the words of I Cor. i. 26-29:--

> "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are; THAT NO FLESH GLORY IN HIS PRESENCE."

These words may well throw us back to Eph. ii. 11, 12, where we are urged to remember:--

> "That ye were Gentiles, without Christ, aliens, strangers, having no hope, and without God in the word."

To remember this will certainly make humility of mind, forbearance, and longsuffering, far more possible than if it is forgotten. While a wholesome "remembrance" has a gracious effect upon our walk, there is, from another aspect, are equally important forgetfulness:--

> "Brethren I count not myself to have apprehended: but his one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, according to a mark, I press toward the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus . . . . . let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing" (Phil. iii. 13-16).

So whether we look back to the pit from which we have been delivered, or look onward to the glories that stretch out ahead, whether we "remember" in the one sense or "forget" in the other, our walk must be the meeker, and the lowlier for it. Then think of the humbling effect of such a passage as this:--

> "Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would count you worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleasure of His goodness, and the work of faith with power, that the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you" (II Thess. i. 11, 12).

Finally, what an effect upon our walk and our attitude to others such a passage as II Tim. i. 9 should have:--

> "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus, before the age times."

Let us then remember our calling, and seeing its grace and its glory, seek to walk worthy of it "that the name of the Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified".

#67. The Walk and its Characteristics (Eph. iv. 2).
pp. 38 – 40

A frame of mind—a spiritual graciousness—is necessary before it is possible to attempt to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of the peace.

> "With all lowliness, and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love" (Eph. iv. 2).

The word "lowliness" is better rendered "humility of mind", which brings out more clearly the contrast of verse 17, "vanity of mind". This word is so translated in Acts xx. 19, where the apostle says:--

> "Serving the Lord with all humility of mind."

We can imagine that some, nay many, if they had received the calling and commission of the apostle Paul, would have displayed arrogance of mind, haughtiness, a temper that would not brook denial or misrepresentation. If we would understand the causes that combined together to make the change from Saul the Pharisee, "breathing out threatenings and slaughter", to the humble, despised, faithful bond-servant of Christ, we must follow his steps as recorded in the Acts and the Epistles, and realize that only a close fellowship with the Son of God makes such a change either possible or permanent. Unity without humility is hopelessly impossible.

> "From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? . . . . . Wherefore He saith, God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble" (James iv. 1-6).

So it is that the apostle, in Phil. ii., links together "lowliness of mind" and "one mind":-- > "Fulfil ye my joy, that ye be likeminded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves" (Phil. ii. 2, 3).

What an example of this spirit follows; nothing less than the humility of the Son of God, Who made Himself of no reputation. Humility of mind, meekness, longsuffering and forbearance should ever be the characteristics of God's elect:--

> "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering, forbearing one another" (Col. iii. 12, 13).

Just in passing we call the reader's attention to the parallel with Eph. iv. expressed in the two passages of Col. iii. 10 and 12:--

"Put on the new man."	"Put on . . . . . humility."

(See previous article for fuller detail).

We must not leave this theme without a word of warning. There is a true humility, but there is also a false. The one draws from Christ, the other draws away from Christ. The passage that gives the warning is Col. ii. 18-23, and we give Farrar's rendering in order to stimulate thought and provoke attention:--

> "Let no one then snatch your prize from you be delighting in abjectness, and service of angels, treading the emptiness of his own visions in all the futile inflation of his mere carnal understanding, and not keeping hold of Him who is 'the Head' from Whom, supplied and compacted by its junctures and ligaments, the whole body grows the growth of God. If ye died with Christ from mundane rudiments, why, as though living in the world, are ye ordinance-ridden with such rules as 'Do not handle', 'Do not taste', 'Do not even touch', referring to things all of which are perishable in the mere consumption, according to the commandment and teachings of men? All these kinds of rules have a credit for wisdom in volunteered supererogation and abasement—hard usage of the body—but have no sort of value as a remedy as regards the indulgence of the flesh."

Humility of mind is in the original tapeinophrosune. Tapeinos, lowly, is wonderfully illustrated in Matt. xi. 29, especially if we realize the point of the words "At that time" of verse 25. Other references worth noticing are Rom. xii. 16 and Phil. ii. 8. Humility of mind is closely associated with meekness. Because of the "meekness and gentleness of Christ", Paul, the one in authority, can find it in his heart to condescend to "beseech" (II Cor. x. 1). See also I Cor. iv. 21. Meekness is no product of the flesh. When the flesh attempts to bring forth humility and meekness it produces such creatures as "Uriah Heep" who was very humble, who writhed and twisted in his excessive humility, but who was nevertheless a monster of hypocrisy.

> "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance" (Gal. v. 22, 23).

Against such, continues the Scripture, there is no law. The "touch not, taste not, handle not" of Col. ii. is a sure sign of the false humility. This spirit of meekness ever looks back to our state by nature and our liability to fall.

> "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted" (Gal. vi. 1).

Meekness must go hand in hand with authority and teaching.

> "In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth" (II Tim. ii. 25).

Moses, whose petition raised him infinitely above his fellows, with whom God spoke face to face, to whom in all the thunders of Sinai the law was given, Moses is recorded as being "very meek, above all the men which were on the face of the earth" (Numb. xii. 3). If Moses was meek, if Paul was meek, yea, if the Lord of Life and Glory was "meek and lowly of heart", who are we to dare to walk abroad with high look, or to act towards our fellows in a vain show? Without opening the Book, could our readers name the first thing said of love in I Cor. xiii.?

> "Love suffereth long, and is kind" (verse 4).

Humility of mind and meekness are accompanied by this first expression of love, viz., longsuffering. Like meekness it is the fruit of the Spirit (Gal. v. 22). It is placed as the goal of the believer's walk in the parallel passage of Col. i. 10, 11:--

> "unto all patience and longsuffering with joyfulness."

When Paul would set his own doctrine and practice before Timothy as an antidote to the selfishness that shall characterize the perilous times of the last days, he says to him:--

> "But thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, longsuffering, love, patience" (II Tim. iii. 10).

We gather from various allusions in the epistles that Timothy was of a retiring, shrinking nature. The rudiments of this world would teach such to develop self-assertion, to see to it that others were kept well informed of their authority. What says the wisdom of God?

> "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all LONGSUFFERING and DOCTRINE" (II Tim. iv. 2).

Is this the reason why so many are repelled? Is this the reason why some do not come to a knowledge of the truth? We must make no mistake; the Word is to be fearlessly preached; doctrine must be maintained, but the truth needs to be spoken in love, the doctrine with longsuffering, the instruction and the restoration with meekness.

Lastly comes, "Forbearing one another". Not until our walk is manifested by these gracious qualities may we proceed to that noble endeavour of keeping the unity of the Spirit.

Let us, brethren, seek to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things (Titus ii. 10).

#68. The Unity and the Bond (Eph. iv. 3).
pp. 49 – 52

With the necessary preparation set out in the preceding articles, we may hope to put into effect the exhortation of Eph. iv. 3:--

> "Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of the peace."

In #66 of this series we showed by a simple outline that the walk alternates with the One Body and with the New Man. Let us now give closer attention to the section devoted to the One Body, placing on either side the references to the walk.

Eph. iv. 1-17.

A | 1-. The prisoner of the Lord. Beseeches.
B | a | -1. Walk worthy. Positive.
b | 2. Humility of mind.
C1 | c1 | 3-6. Unity of Spirit. Keep. Sevenfold.
d1 | 7. Measure. Gift of Christ.
e1 | 8-12. Gifts of Ministry: for perfecting.
C2 | c2 | 13-. Unity of Faith. Arrive. Sevenfold.
d2 | -13, 14. Measure. Fulness of Christ.
e2 | 15. Truth in love: for growth.
C3 | c3 | 16-. Unity of Body. Fitly joined. Sevenfold.
d3 | -16-. Measure. Every part.
e3 | -16. Edify self in love.
A | 17-. I testify in the Lord.
B | a | -17-. Walk not. Negative.
b | -17. Vanity of mind.

It will be seen by the structure that the unity which the apostle now approaches is threefold. There is first the unity of the Spirit with its bond of peace. Then there is the unity of the Faith, and finally the unity of the One Body. The parallel passage to Eph. iv. 16 in Colossians is Col. ii. 19, and there the "bond" of Eph. iv. 3 comes out again as the "bands" or the "ligaments" of the body.

The apostle exhorts us to "endeavour to keep". In Gal. ii. 10, referring to the suggestion of the leaders at Jerusalem that Paul should "remember the poor", Paul says, "the same which I also was forward to do". We find several allusions to the gatherings for the poor saints at Jerusalem, and when these offerings were ready, the apostle undertook the journey in person to bring this evidence of fellowship and reconciliation to Jerusalem. "Forward" is the word endeavour. Writing his last letter to Timothy, he gives him among other things this charge:--

> "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth" (II Tim. ii. 15).

"Study" is the word endeavour. In the same epistle Paul urges Timothy to come to him in his captivity:--

> "Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me: for Demas hath forsaken me . . . . . Trophimus have I left at Miletus sick. Do thy diligence to come before winter" (II Tim. iv. 9-21).

"Do diligence" is the word endeavour.

> "Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fail after the same example of unbelief" (Heb. iv. 11).

"Let us labour" is the word endeavour.

It will be seen that the word used by the apostle indicates active, watchful diligence. This sacred trust is our concern. We jealously watch for any intrusion, any root of bitterness, any faction or element of strife. We cannot put the responsibility off on to another. Each one must share in the watch, each must honestly and truly endeavour to keep this treasure.

There are many words translated "keep" in the Scripture.

Bosko	=	To keep as a Shepherd.
Phulasso	=	To guard as a Soldier.
Echo	=	To hold as the servant did the Pound.
Poieo	=	To keep as the Passover.

Neither of these words is used by the apostle in Eph. iv. 3. The word used here is tereo, which means to keep as one would a treasure; diatereo (Luke ii. 51) is used of Mary who treasured up in her heart the things spoken of her infant Son. It is used once more in the prison epistles of Paul himself:--

"I have kept the faith."

Here then is the sacred trust. We are to keep the unity of the Spirit as Paul kept the faith. Through good report or evil report, through honour or dishonour, nothing must turn away our attention; we must be ever diligent in our duty, ever studying to keep our treasure intact, ever labouring to preserve this truth complete. Nevertheless, with all this personal sense of responsibility must be the equally important sense of the Lord's greater care. The same apostle who so nobly kept the faith was persuaded that the Lord was able to keep that which had been entrusted until that day. The unity of the Spirit may be viewed as part of that good deposit which is so wonderfully spoken of in I Tim. vi. 20 and II Tim. i. 12 & 14.

What therefore are we to keep?—"The unity of the Spirit." This however is an incomplete statement. We are to keep the unity of the Spirit with the bond of the peace, that is the full statement. Those who are joined to the Lord are said to be one spirit with Him (I Cor. vi. 17). Some commentators speak of this unity as being the work of the Holy Spirit; others look upon it as indicating the unanimity of spirit that should actuate all the members of one body. There is no conflict between these two views. Unanimity of spirit is only possible in that unity of the Spirit of God. Outside must ever be strife and self-seeking. This unity of spirit is well illustrated and expressed in such passages as Rom. xv. 5, 6, and Phil. i. 27; ii. 1, 2.

This unity can only be kept by the bond of the peace. What is this bond? What is this peace? It is that peace made by Christ Who made the two conflicting parties one, Who destroyed the enmity between them, Who broke down the middle wall of partition, Who by creating of the twain in Himself one new man made the bond of peace which effectually binds together the unity of the Spirit.

The things that were set aside were the things belonging to believers as Jews or Gentiles. None of these things are carried over. There is no reformation attempted. The unity of the Spirit is part of a new creation. In exceeding our diligence over this, we shall see at once the attempt of this one to import some doctrine, or of that one to bring in some practice that belongs to the time before the middle wall was broken down. Nip all such attempts in the bud. Let them not get a foothold. Be willing to be called narrow, proud, anything, however untrue and unmerited, but endeavour to keep that sacred unity as you would defend your life.

We write thus because of the laxity of many, because of the confusion which exists in the mind of many as to the difference between humility of mind and resolution, of meekness and strength. We cannot be charitable with the goods of another. Stewardship, though exercised with all lowliness, meekness, longsuffering and forbearance, must nevertheless be above all things exercised faithfully. The Lord keep us faithful as the apostasy sets in.

#69. The Sevenfold Unity of the Spirit (Eph. iv. 4-6).
pp. 72 – 77

In Eph. iv. 4-6 we have brought before us the sevenfold unity of the spirit, which we are urged to keep.

One LORD.
One HOPE. | One FAITH.
One SPIRIT. | One BAPTISM.
One BODY. | One GOD and FATHER.

Some of the elements of this unity are found in chapter ii.:--

> "For through Him (the one Lord) we the both (the one body) have access by one Spirit unto the Father (the one God and Father)" (verse 18).

The Gentiles, being originally "without hope", hold but the one hope of their calling. They have no other. They had also been saved by grace through faith, and that not of themselves, it was the gift of God. This accounts for every item except the one baptism. That is found as we shall see more clearly presently in the threefold union with the risen Lord expressed in the word "quickened together, raised together, seated together".

It is important to see that the central feature of this unity is the One Lord. Without the risen and ascended Christ there is no church which can be called the One Body. Not until Christ is seen as Head can the church be seen as body. This is clearly stated in Eph. i. 21-23. Apart from the risen Son of God the one God would never be known as the one God and Father. Apart from the risen and ascended Lord the one baptism of the one spirit is impossible. The unity of the faith embraces the Son of God as we shall see, and the one hope is nothing less than Christ Himself. Like the central shaft of the seven branched lampstand of the Tabernacle, all are united together in Him, all receive their fullness from Him. Severed from Him they are worthless. What hope have we outside of Christ? In whom can we have faith apart from Christ?

Let us now, having seen the essential position of Christ in this unity, look at the seven items in detail.

ONE BODY.—It is true that the figure of the body is used in I Cor. xii., but the context reveals that it is used in illustration of the distribution, diversity yet unity of spiritual gifts. The church of the One Body is a new creation, connected with the ascended Christ as its Head, in a sphere of glory that transcends all others, "far above all", and is directly related to the revelation of the mystery where it is given its peculiarly distinctive character, "a joint body" (Eph. iii. 6), a standing unknown before the mystery was made known. Such in brief is the first item in this sevenfold unity. Such we have to guard.

Some will deny that the one body is peculiar to the dispensation of the Mystery. Some will teach that the body of I Cor. xii. is "all one and the same". Some even go so far as to teach that the one body comprises every saved one from Adam onwards. All such attempts to destroy the testimony of the Lord's prisoner must be resisted. We must not, however, miss the emphasis on the one body. We can have no connection with "bodies"; such cannot be recognized for one minute. All other unities, bodies, leagues, societies, are outside this sacred circle.

ONE SPIRIT.—The body, without the spirit, is dead, being alone, says James. What is the animating spirit of the one body? Referring to the mortal body, the apostle says:--

> "But if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies because of His Spirit that dwelleth in you" (Rom. viii. 11).

The analogy holds good. The spirit of the risen Christ likewise is the one spirit of the one body. In Eph. i. and ii. two mighty energies are opposed. One is that of the spirit that now energizes the children of disobedience, the other, though not called by the name "spirit", is the Spirit of Him Who wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead. Another facet of this truth is revealed in Eph. ii. 18. It is the Spirit of sonship:--

> "For through Him we both have access by One Spirit unto the Father."

This is the Spirit in Whom we the both cry, according once more to Rom. viii., "Abba" (Hebrew), "Father" (Greek). The one Body and the one Spirit anticipate the one God and Father of all. It has been suggested that the apostle's meaning here is that the Gentiles share in the work and witness of "one and the self-same Spirit" of I Cor. xii. When the apostle desired to express that truth he uses the phrase to hen kai auto pneuma, whereas in Eph. iv. to auto, "the self-same", is omitted. Had the apostle intended to emphasize "the self-same", what a weight the sevenfold expression would have! The fact that we have the sevenfold "one" instead is sufficient to decide the apostle's intention.

ONE HOPE.—This item is extended:--

> "Even as ye are called in one hope of your calling."

This is the one hope of the mystery. If the theme of the mystery pervades Eph. i., then it is possible that the word rendered "his" in i. 18 should be rendered "its", referring to the mystery:--

> "The eyes of your heart having been enlightened: that ye may know what is the hope of its calling", i.e. the hope of the calling of the mystery.

"That blessed hope" is the "appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ", expressed in other words in Col. iii. 4:--

> "When Christ Who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory."

The one hope of our calling is that we shall be manifested with Him in glory. The hope of the one body antedates the second advent. By the time the Lord descends from heaven with a shout, and the saints of the Thessalonian company rise to meet Him in the air, the one hope of our calling will have been realized. We have a prior hope (Eph. i. 12). The signs of the times thicken around us. The movements of the nations and of the nation of Israel are trumpet-tongued. The night is far spent, the day is at hand. If the hope of the parousia is near, so much nearer must be the one hope of our calling.

There have been some who have foolishly asserted that we deny the coming of the Lord. We trust that no reader will give credence to such a statement. What we believe is that the coming of the Lord to the air or to the Mount of Olives is not the hope of the one body, which is a very different matter.

ONE LORD.—As we have seen, the person and office of Christ as the one Lord is vital to the unity of the spirit. The title Lord supposes resurrection.

> "For to this end Christ both died, and lived again, that He might be Lord of the dead and of the living" (Rom. xiv. 9).

The great confession of things in heaven, things on earth, and things under the earth is that "Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father". Here again the dominion over both dead and living is manifest.

We do not embark here upon the fact that whoever bears the title "Lord" is the Jehovah of the O.T., as too many and weighty matters arise out of this to be discussed here. We hope to deal with this question in another series. We must not, however, omit one passage, namely, I Cor. viii. 5, 6:--

> "For though there be that are called gods, either celestial or terrestrial (as there be gods many, and lords many), yet to us there is but one God, the Father, of Whom are all things, and we for Him; and one Lord, Jesus Christ, by Whom are all things, and we by Him."

To understand this passage we must make a digression. When Paul went to Athens and preached the gospel, some said:--

> "He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange (or foreign) DEMONS" (Acts xvii. 18).

Now what was there in the gospel as preached by Paul that could have led to such an idea? The Scripture says that the Athenians thought this:--

> "Because he preached unto them Jesus, AND THE RESURRECTION" (Acts xvii. 18).

What connection can there be between "Jesus and the resurrection" and "foreign demons"? We must understand that among the Gentiles demons were supposed to be the spirits of men who had died. These demons acted as mediators between men and the far-off celestial gods. They were the "gods terrestrial" and the "lords many" of I Cor. viii. In the O.T. these terrestrial gods, demons, or mediators are called "Baalim"; which Paul literally translates "lords". When Paul spoke of "Jesus" Who had died and yet Who lived again, when he spoke of Him as the Lord, and as the Mediator, he was using expressions that implied, to the heathen mind, a foreign demon. "To us", said the apostle, "there is but one Lord, one Mediator". The words are used with precision:--

> "One God, the Father, OUT OF WHOM (as the originating cause) are the all things (ta panta, not 'all things' in general, but that particular universe directly brought into being for the purpose of the ages), and we for Him; and one Lord (the Mediator), THROUGH WHOM (the mediating cause) are the all things, and we through Him."

There is no question raised here of the Deity of Christ, the whole question is one of mediation. This is the great feature in the unity of the Spirit. At either extreme is the one body and the one God and Father. Access is through the one Lord. As the Lord, too, He rules and has supreme dominion, and all profession of the unity of the Spirit that does not recognize the necessity to obey the one Lord is likely to be an empty profession.

ONE FAITH.—As this item is picked out for separate treatment in the next section of chapter iv., and space is limited, we pass on to:--

ONE BAPTISM.—The structure of the unity places the one baptism over against the one Spirit. The entire absence of types and shadows from the epistles of the mystery lends weight to the thought that this is not the baptism in water, but that of the Spirit. The fact that there is "one baptism" is both conclusive and exclusive. John the Baptist baptized in water. This could be called one baptism. During the Acts baptism in water was accompanied by baptism of the Spirit. This cannot be called one baptism, for there were two. If we can speak of two baptisms as one, then how shall we treat the other members of this unity. Are there then two Lords, two Gods, two bodies?

The underlying meaning of the type of baptism is that of union. This union may be set forth by the immersion of a believer in water, it may be set forth by the baptism of the Spirit, bringing with its supernatural gifts, as in I Cor. xii., or it may not be set forth manifestly and typically at all. The last statement suits the case of the present dispensation. The members of the one Body observe neither days, fasts, feasts nor ordinances. These are shadows. The Body is of Christ (Col. ii.). The one baptism united us to the risen Christ, and we have no command to set forth this union in symbol or type; neither have we any warrant to look for "signs" in connection with our baptism by the Spirit. The interested reader is referred to the article entitled "Baptized Believers" on page 158 of Volume XI.

ONE GOD AND FATHER.—The purpose of the ages is to bring many sons to glory. Sin has necessitated redemption, and it has been necessary for all the children of God to have been "born again". The cycle is suggested by the unity of the Spirit. The goal is one God and Father. This member is expanded, like the one dealing with hope:--

"One God and Father of all, Who is over all, and through all, and in all" (Eph. iv. 6).

Are we to gather from this that the last item of the unity of the Spirit teaches the universal fatherhood of God? The "all" is governed by the context. If the word "you" is retained in the clause "in you all", the idea of the passage is made apparent. The Father is over all, through all, and in all TO US. Just as Christ is head over all things TO THE CHURCH, though not yet Head over all things manifestly and universally, so the Father is to us.

What a calling is ours. Christ raised and ascended far above all, as Head over all things now to us, and the one God and Father, over all, through all, in all to us, as well. What peace this brings; what triumph, what confidence! Well may we be exhorted to give diligence to keep such a treasure. Let us keep this perfect sevenfold unity of the Spirit in the bond of that peace made by the blood of Christ, until that day comes when stewardship ceases, and the joy of the Lord remains.

#70. The Measure of the Gift of Christ (Eph. iv. 7-11).
pp. 86 – 89

The unity of the Spirit is followed by the diversity of its members. In the unity the emphasis is upon the fact that there is one body, one Spirit, and one Lord of all; but in the next section, which comes under the heading "The measure" (see structure, page 49), the theme is the variety of the gifts of the Lord, and the individual responsibility of each member to use the gift as unto the Lord.

We feel a necessity here to correct a wrong impression which our remarks may give. The gift of Christ which is here the "measure" must not be confounded with the "gifts" possessed by the early church. If we omit the parenthesis of verses 8-10, we shall find that the gifts are specially qualified men, and not "gifts" to individuals:--

> "But unto every one of us is given grace, according to the measure of the gift of Christ . . . . . and He gave some, apostles (not apostolic gifts); and some, prophets (not the gift of prophecy); and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers" (Eph. iv. 7, 11).

This fourfold ministry must be looked upon as the gift of the ascended Christ to the church of the one body, and viewed in a different light from the gifts distributed by the Holy Spirit among the saints during the period of the Acts. Gifts of persons rather than gifts to persons seems to express the difference. There is, however, one thing common to all the gifts, whether of the earlier or later dispensations. In Eph. iv. 7 it is indicated by the word "measure"; in Rom. xii. 6 the same principle is found in the word "differing", in I Cor. xii. 11 it is indicated by the word "severally"; in Matt. xxv. 15 it is seen in the expression "several ability". Let us see these verses together:--

> "But unto every one of us is given grace, according to the measure of the gift of Christ" (Eph. iv. 7).
>
> "Having then gifts different according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophecy according to the proportion of faith" (Rom. xii. 6).
>
> "But all these worketh that one and self-same Spirit, dividing to every severally as He will" (I Cor. xii. 11).
> "And unto one He gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to everyone according to his several ability" (Matt. xxv. 15).

There is great comfort here in the midst of this atmosphere of responsibility. While the Lord expected the man who had five talents to produce another five talents, He was just as pleased with the man who had produced two talents with his two. And had the servant who had but one talent produced another one, he too would have received the "well done", and have entered into the joy of his Lord. It is evident that the principle of "percentage" is recognized by the Lord. The apostle is under the great responsibility of rightly using the apostolic gift, but we who have no such gift need not feel concerned because our experiences and the results of our labours do not appear comparable with those of the apostle. If we are as faithful as the great apostle in any small degree, the "well done" is equally assured. Therefore let us not merely think of the gift, but also of the "measure of the gift", and according to that measure seek to fulfil the purpose and good pleasure of the Lord.

How often we find those without the necessary qualification occupied in evangelistic work when their "measure" is that of teaching, organizing, interceding or what not. And again, let us give a deaf ear to that bane of the Christian worker, the busybody who is always telling us what we "ought to do". The Lord knows whether He wants us to be preaching to the unsaved, teaching the saints, ministering to the sick, serving with our hands, using the pen, or praying for others. Let us each one be "fully persuaded in his own mind", and then seeing our ministry "fulfil it" (Col. iv. 7; II Tim. iv. 5).

Before detailing the ministry which was given by Christ to the church of the one body, the apostle makes a reference to Psa. lxviii. 18. We have not here in Eph. iv. 8 a strictly literal quotation either of the Hebrew or the Greek of the LXX. The sense of the passage is preserved, and this manner of reference makes us feel that the apostle wished to take a thought from the Psalm rather than intend us to understand that he taught that this Psalm was strictly prophetic of the ascension of Christ and the gift of apostles, prophets, etc. The "ascension on high" of Psa. lxviii. 18 has reference to the "the hill of God . . . . . an high hill as the hill of Bashan" (verse 15); the ascension of Eph. iv., as we shall see, is beyond computation in vastness. The apostle decides for us just what part of this quotation he intended to be prominent, for in verse 9 he lifts it out for further consideration:--

> "Now that word 'HE WENT UP' what saith it, but that He first came down to the earth below?" (Conybeare and Howson).

What does it imply? If the Scripture declares that Christ ascended, He must have previously descended first to the lower parts of the earth. Many old expositors interpret this descent of the Lord as a descent into hell. Others understand it to refer to the grave. Bloomfield, Conybeare & Howson and many others see in the expression, "the lower parts of the earth", "the lower parts, namely, the earth". Dr. Bullinger, in Figures of Speech, places the expression under the "Genitive of Apposition", "the lower parts, that is to say, the earth":--

> "He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that He might fill all things" (Eph. iv. 10).

Have we appreciated as we should the fact of the ascension and its bearing upon the church of the dispensation of the mystery? "Christ risen" is not sufficient. Israel's King must be Christ risen, for Psa. ii. 7 declares the decree:--

> "The Lord hath said unto Me, Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee."

In Heb. iv. 14 the apostle tells us that Christ "passed through the heavens"; in vii. 26 he says of Him, "made higher than the heavens". These passages, together with that of Eph. iv. 10, give us some idea of the magnitude of that ascension.

The apostle has a purpose in this statement as we may well believe. What is it? Christ ascended up far above all heavens "that He might fill (pleroo, cf. pleroma) all things" (ta panta, the all things). We cannot avoid the reference back to Eph. i. 20-23:--

> "Seated at His own right hand far above all . . . . . and gave Him (as) a Head over all things to the church, which is His body, the fullness (pleroma) of Him that filleth (pleroo) the all things (ta panta) with all."

This reference back does something else for us. It explains the meaning of Eph. iv. 7 "the gift of Christ". We did not discuss the question earlier as to whether this phrase means "a gift that Christ gives", or that Christ Himself was to be considered as the gift. Eph. i. 22 decides this for us:--

> "The gift of Christ" (Tes doreas tou Christou).
> "And gave Him to be Head" (Kai auton edoke kephalen).

We may now read Eph. iv. 7-10 again:--

> "But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ, i.e., God's gift of Christ as Head of His Church, and that church the fullness of Him that filleth all in all. Seeing that the members are the fullness of Christ, as Christ is the fullness of the all things, we are again reminded that in His ascension, and in the capacity of the One who fills all things, the gifts of ministry to the one body were given."

What a different aspect this gives to ministry, to that one of "taking up the profession"! What an unspeakable privilege to receive the very lowest call in this glorious order! Even the humble pastor and teacher of this church is seen to be vitally connected with the great purpose of the ages. His ministry is a part of the great pleroma, the all things, that which Christ is making to accomplish the great goal of the ages, and to undo the works of the Devil. We can understand the apostle's allusion in iii. 7-11 the better by seeing this:--

> "Whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of His power. Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, ... according to the purpose of the ages . . . . ."

If every servant of God realized his stewardship like this, what a difference there would be!

The gifts of the ascended Christ to His church may now be noted.

Here for the time we must leave the matter, concluding the present article with the words of the apostle:--

> "I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, Who enabled me, for that He counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry, who was before a blasphemer . . . . . Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all longsuffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on Him unto life everlasting" (I Tim. i. 12-16).

#71. Gifts Unto Men (Eph. iv. 8-11).
pp. 101 – 105

We resume our study at the point where the gifts of the ascended Christ are enumerated.

> "And He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers" (iv. 11).

Who are these apostles? We may first of all reply negatively: they cannot be "the twelve", for the twelve were appointed by the Lord whilst he was on earth. Their names are given in Matt. x., and the one who fell, Judas, is replaced by Matthias who was "numbered with the eleven".

It goes without saying that Paul was one of this new order of apostles, and the chief. We need not labour this point. Who are the others, for it says "apostles"? We shall find that even during the Acts period and before the revelation of the mystery there are others besides the twelve and Paul who bear the title "apostle".

> "When the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard it" (Acts xiv. 14).

If Barnabas was not an apostle of the One Body, he was an apostle to the Gentiles in a way the "twelve" were not.

> "These things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to myself and Apollos . . . . . For I think that God hath set forth US the apostles last" (I Cor. iv. 6-9).

Here we find Apollos included in the list of apostles.

> "Salute Andronicus and Junia, my kinsmen, and my fellow-prisoners, who are of note among the apostles" (Rom. xvi. 7).

We admit that the meaning of this passage may merely be that other apostles knew these fellow-prisoners of Paul very well. Andronicus and Junia may have been apostles; there we leave the matter and pass on.

> "We might have been burdensome, as the apostles of Christ" (I Thess. ii. 6).

The "We" must refer to the names at the head of the epistle, viz., "Paul, and Silas, and Timothy". The references in II Cor. viii. 23, and Phil. ii. 25, "apostles of the churches" and "your apostle" we do not press, feeling that in these cases the idea is simply that such were legates of the several churches and not apostles in the sense we are considering. We can however set down the following names of apostles other than "the twelve": Paul, Silas, Timothy, Barnabas, Apollos; if we include Andronicus and Junia, we have at least seven apostles of a new order. If this be so during the dispensation of the Acts of the apostles, it is even more probable that for such a new sphere of service as the dispensation of the mystery, other apostles, called in harmony with the glorious revelation of the pleroma, sent directly from the ascended Head for the benefit of the members, will be given.

When dealing with "spiritual gifts" the apostle in I Cor. xii. includes apostles, prophets and teachers among the number, and a superficial reading of I Cor. xii. 28 may lead to the conclusion that the teaching is just the same as that of Eph. iv. Let us therefore examine I Cor. xii. a little carefully. First of all the apostle makes a clean cut between the spirit that animates and inspires the worshipper of idols and the spirit that was given to the church of God (verses 2 and 3). Then, turning to the gifts that come from the Lord, he reveals a threefold relation to the three persons of the Godhead:--

1. Diversities of GIFTS, but the same SPIRIT (verse 4).
2. Diversities of ADMINISTRATION, but the same LORD (verse 5).
3. Diversities of OPERATIONS, but the same GOD (verse 6).

As we read on in this chapter we find that verses 7-13 expand the first item, namely, the gifts of the spirit. Verses 18-31 deal with the operations of God:--

> "God hath set the members every one of them in the body" (verse 18).
> "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, etc." (verse 28).

We have in this chapter, therefore, the gifts of the Spirit, and the operations of God, expanded and illustrated. Where, however, do we read of the "administrations of the Lord"? They are not found in I Cor. xii. We find them in Eph. iv. We notice further that there is a definite order, twice repeated, and actually enumerated so that we shall make no mistake:--

> "And God hath set some in the church,
> First—APOSTLES,
> Secondly—PROPHETS,
> Thirdly—TEACHERS" (I Cor. xii. 28).

When we turn to Ephesians we read:--

> "And He (Christ, the 'one Lord' of the unity of the spirit, and the dispenser of the 'administrations' of I Cor. xii. 5) gave:-- > Some, APOSTLES;
> Some, PROPHETS;
> Some, EVANGELISTS;
> Some, PASTORS and TEACHERS" (Eph. iv. 11).

Here the order is not quite the same as that of I Cor. xii. For reasons that may not be fully apparent to us, it pleased God to omit the "evangelist", while it pleased the Lord to include this gift. The "pastor", moreover, is included with the "teacher" in the administration of the lord. This fourfold gift is explained in Eph. iv. to be

> "For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ" (verse 12).

Now the word “ministry” in Eph. iv. 12 and the word “administration” in I Cor. xii. 5 are both in the original the word diakonia, from which we get the word “deacon”, and the word “minister” well translates it. Paul tells us that he was made a “minister” both of the gospel of the mystery (Eph. iii. 6, 7) and of the church of the mystery (Col. i. 23, 25). When the time came for that tried servant of God to be “offered”, he wrote to Timothy these words:--

> “But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an EVANGELIST, the MINISTRY that is thine fulfil. For I am mow ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand” (II Tim. iv. 5, 6).

Here for the second and last time in the prison epistles we read of the evangelist, and here also we find it connected with ministry (diakonia). Not only so, but this ministry was to succeed that of the apostle, as the words “For I am now ready to be offered” shew.

We may now see the reason for the arrangements of this fourfold gift, that came at the end of the preceding article, which we must repeat here:--

A	APOSTLES.	\
		}	Inspired and as Foundation.
B	PROPHETS.	/
A	EVANGELISTS.	\
B	PASTORS and TEACHERS.	}	Uninspired and Subsequent.
		/

The first two were given for a time only, they were foundational in character:--

> “And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophet” (Eph. ii. 20).

For salvation no other foundation can be laid than the Lord Himself, but when referring to the building up of the saints in the capacity of a temple and habitation of God, the special “administration” of those apostles and prophets given by the ascended Lord is declared to be the foundation.

The apostle ruled with inspired wisdom; he spoke with inspired authority. So did the prophet. The evangelist and the teacher succeed this inspired ministry upon a lower plane. They are not personally inspired. The evangelist, as Timothy, who succeeded the apostle in the preaching of the gospel, founding and supervising the growing churches, had an inspired example before him—that of Paul himself. This statement can be verified by many passages from the epistles. The teacher did not speak by inspiration, but he spoke according to an inspired book. It will be seen that the evangelist carries on the work of the apostle, while the teacher carries on the work of the prophet.

Modern usage has inverted the order somewhat of these gifts of men. The “evangelist” with his little Mission Hall is often put under the authority of a “pastor” with his Church. This is the outcome of a cramped view of the nature of the gift of an evangelist. The evangelist was more of a pioneer, whereas the teacher was more settled.

One of the qualifications for a bishop is "apt to teach". Much the same thought is expressed in II Tim. ii. 2 where Timothy, the "evangelist", is enjoined:--

> "The things which thou hast heard of me, through many witnesses, these things entrust to faithful men, who shall be competent to teach others also."

The opening words of the Epistle to the Philippians reveal that the ministry of bishops and deacons was then recognized:--

> "To all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons" (Phil. i. 1).

The gift of teacher is joined with that of pastor, or shepherd as the word is. Much light may be received upon the Scriptural conception of a true teacher by weighing well the parallel title, "shepherd".

THE SHEPHERD, OR PASTOR, MAKES FOR UNITY.
"Scattered . . . . as sheep that have no shepherd" (II Chron. xviii. 16).
"Smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered" (Zech. xiii. 7).
"There shall be one fold, and one shepherd" (John x. 16)

THE SHEPHERD, OR PASTOR, DISCRIMINATES.
"As a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats" (Matt. xxv. 32)

THE SHEPHERD, OR PASTOR, FEEDS THE FLOCK.
"Should not the shepherds feed the flocks?" (Ezek. xxxiv. 2).
"The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want" (Psa. xxiii. 1).
"He shall feed his flock like a shepherd" (Isa. xl. 11).

THE SHEPHERD, OR PASTOR, DEFENDS THE FLOCK.
"The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep" (John x. 11).

Ezek. xxxiv. 1-10 contains a terrible indictment:--

> "Prophesy against the shepherd of Israel . . . . . Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! . . . . . the diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost: but with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them . . . . . I will require My flock at their hand."

The pastor and teacher should not feed themselves at the expense of the church, they have a responsibility to the sick, the lame, the scattered, the lost. Meekness, longsuffering and patience are to be the characteristics of their rule, not "force and cruelty". Did time and space permit, we could go through the features of the apostle's ministry in the same way, and indeed through the four great gifts to men. This happy and salutary task may be undertaken by the reader for himself, so that in any sphere of service that we may be called to fulfil we may, by having the Scriptural pattern before us, be enabled to fulfil that ministry as unto the Lord.

In conclusion, let us remember that these gifts of the ascended Christ are but faint reflections of Himself. He is the apostle, the great Sent One; He is the prophet, the Word of God; He is the evangelist, the preacher of the good tidings of God; He is the pastor,

Who feeds, leads, and delivers His sheep; and He is the teacher, "If so be that ye have been taught by Him" (Eph. iv. 21). Every teacher, preacher and servant of the Lord therefore may resolve his whole ministry into the one grand thought:--

> "Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God" (II Cor. v. 20).

The Reconciliation of all Things.
#1. pp. 115 - 128

In the following pages A and B discuss the subject of The Reconciliation of all Things. The standpoint of B represents the standpoint of The Berean Expositor; the arguments of A are an attempt to present justly the views which The Berean Expositor here entirely repudiates. The deep questions of Sin and the Deity of Christ are scarcely touched, but fuller consideration will be given to them in a subsequent series.

Are the words "all" and "universal" synonymous?

A.—Do you believe in the reconciliation of all things?

B.—Yes, most certainly I do.

A.—I am glad to hear it, for I have been given to understand that you denied that doctrine.

B.—Perhaps I had better explain my position as I do not want to give you a false impression. A little while ago a friend said to me, "Then you do not believe in the restitution of all things?" to which I replied, "I do believe in the restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets (Acts iii. 21), but I am afraid you have in mind the restitution of all things as taught by Pastor or Mr. So and So, and that of course is another question".

A.—It comes to this then, that really and truly you do not believe that "God will be all in ALL".

B.—Most certainly I do, but I do not necessarily believe the word "all" embraces just exactly the same number you may do.

A.—Yet I cannot understand how it is possible for "all" of "all things" to mean "some" or "some things" without resorting to some form of self-deception.

Scriptural usage of "all".

B.—I believe you will understand if once you see the passages in their contexts. Let us look at a few just by way of illustration. Would you say that such an expression as "every nation under heaven" was universal in its scope or that it meant only some nations?

A.—I should say most decidedly that if scripture means what it says, "every nation under heaven" must be nothing short of world wide.

B.—Well, the words are used in Acts ii. 5 to speak of the nations from which the Jews had come to Jerusalem, and as the very passage goes on to enumerate those nations we can easily test the meaning. With the exception of Rome every other country mentioned in verse 9-11 can be included in a circle of 400 miles radius. This is an exceedingly small portion of the earth's surface.

A.—Perhaps I must agree that in this case the expression cannot be taken universally, but I still maintain that where we read in the epistle to the Colossians that the Lord reconciled all things the context leaves us without doubt as to its universality.

The context of Col. i. 20.

B.—I am prepared to leave Acts ii. if you so wish and consider the bearing of the context upon Col. i. 20.

A.—And abide by it?

B.—And abide by it, most certainly.

A.—The context of Col. i. 20 speaks of Christ as the Creator of all things that are in heaven and earth, visible and invisible, that He is before all things, and that by Him all things consist. There is simply nothing more to say if you are willing to let the apostle explain his own terms.

B.—Have you not presented but one side of the evidence? Does not the context extend as much beyond verse 20, as before it?

A.—Yes, of course, but what difference will that make?

B.—Only this, that in immediate connection with the words that you take in a universal sense comes an expression which you will be compelled to limit. In verse 23 the same apostle says that this gospel "was preached to every creature which is under heaven". We have no certain knowledge that Paul reached Spain, but, supposing we allow the possibility that he preached in Spain and also in Britain, the wildest stretch of imagination cannot bring these words to mean more than a small percentage of its literal meaning. Am I not justified in allowing the complete context to explain Paul's meaning?

A.—You certainly have more for your view than I had believed.

B.—When Paul wrote to the Corinthians "all things are lawful for me" (I Cor. x. 23), do I understand that you believe that Paul meant he could break the whole moral law, thieve, murder and slander with impunity?

A.—Most certainly not; any one can see that he means that he was free from the obligations imposed upon his conscience by Pharisaism and the law of Moses.

B.—I see, the term “all things” can only be understood by the general teaching of Scripture, and not that the general teaching of scripture must be bent and made to conform to our conception of the meaning of the term. I suppose you would agree that the same canon of interpretation holds good in such passages as I Cor. xiii. 7, where we read that love “believeth all things”?

A.—Yes, for love rejoiceth not in iniquity but rejoiceth in the truth. I am afraid however that you are evading the question. I believe that “all Israel” means “all Israel”, that “all men” means “all men”, that--

Who are “All Israel”?

B.—There I have to differ with you. I do not believe “all Israel” means “all Israel” in the sense of including every single individual who claims descent from Abraham or Jacob.

A.—You astound me. If I did not have evidence in your own writings that you profess to believe that the scriptures are the Word of God, I should hold no further discussion with you.

B.—Thank you! In spite of your inability to understand me you feel that I must have some scriptural basis for my position. Let me explain a little. The words “all Israel” come in Rom. xi. 26, where we read, “and so all Israel shall be saved”; and I will admit that without any further light it would be excusable in one to believe that the expression intended every single descendant of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. But Rom. xi. is part of a section of the epistle to the Romans which commences with chapter ix. Had we the opportunity we could set out the complete structure of the three chapters and you would see how wonderfully the theme of this dispensational section is balanced. However, enough for our purpose can be discovered by reading a few verses in Rom. ix. Paul had enumerated the advantages of being a Jew, a subject begun but not pursued in Rom. iii. 1, 2. He said:--

> “Who are Israelites, to whom pertaineth the adoption”, etc. (ix. 4).

To prevent a false inference he immediately adds:--

> “They are NOT all Israel, which are of Israel. Neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children; but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called . . . . . the children of the promise are reckoned for the seed” (ix. 6-8).

A.—You mean therefore that when Rom xi. 26 says “all Israel” we must interpret the word “all” in the light of these statements?

B.—Yes, just exactly as you did with the examples already considered from I Cor.

A.—But what principle underlies this?

B.—It is given in the verses that follow (Rom. ix. 10-12). There the same principle that set aside Ishmael sets aside Esau.

A.—Do you mean that there is respect of persons with God? was Ishmael rejected because of his wild ways, or Esau because of his easy-going nature?

B.—It would be so much better for us both if you would allow the scripture to finish its argument, and not to jump to conclusions so hastily. God Himself says that the choice took place

(1). Before the children were born and
(2). Before they could have done either good or evil; that the choice was (3). Not of works, but that
(4). The purpose of God according to election might stand.

The whole subject revolves itself into a recognition of the fact of a "purpose of election" and a "promise".

Elective purposes govern "All Israel" and "All in Adam".

A.—Well, supposing with regard to this phase of the purpose I admit the limitation you suggest, how does that alter such plain statements like:--

"As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (I Cor. xv. 22).
"The saviour of all men" (I Tim. iv. 10), and many others?

B.—Your question introduces a most important feature in the interpretation of the age purpose set forth in scripture, and, if you are willing, we will consider it at our next meeting together.

A Scriptural Principle of Interpretation.

A.—We are to consider a principle of interpretation, I believe, and one which is in some way connected with the meaning you suggested of the words "all Israel"?

B.—Yes, the principle of interpretation which I believe to be the true one is quite distinct from that which says "if God be a God of love, then He must do this or that; that if He does not save every individual then Satan will triumph", etc., etc.

A.—But that is just what I do believe, what fault do you find with such reasoning?

B.—Chiefly that it is "reasoning".

A.—You surely do not believe that faith is unreasonable?

B.—No, but I believe that revelation is not always explanation. Within the range of things proper to human knowledge generalization and deduction are both legitimate and essential to progress, but when we say that God must do this or that or He denies His attributes, we are out of our depth. The scripture does not present us with a philosophic conception of God. It opens with what God did:--

> "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth" (Gen. i. 1).

Philosophy would require us to search back and find out God first. Scripture takes the position that > "He that cometh to God must believe that He is" (Heb. xi. 6).

The revelation of the Deity throughout scripture is always relative. The moment we take one step beyond the circle of human things and the age purpose we flounder and fail. The method chosen by God for the purpose of revelation, the method which His wisdom saw to be the fittest for His purpose, viz., the constant use of type, figure and biography, is the method I am bound to follow in interpreting the record of the age purpose.

Interpretation by Type.

A.—But surely this method is limited to the O.T.?

B.—It is in the O.T. that the foundation is laid. The N.T. builds upon it and accepts it, and so must we. God has revealed the general principles of the great purposes of the ages in the history of His people Israel. We cannot interpret "all Israel" in one way and "all men" in another, without forsaking a divine principle. What Abraham is to Israel Adam is to man, and you will remember that descent from Abraham was not sufficient to constitute one a child of promise, but that the true seed were called "in Isaac". Therefore we must be prepared to find that descent from Adam likewise is not sufficient to establish one as a child or promise, but one must have been chosen "in Christ", which limitation is indicated in the line that comes down from Adam to Seth, not from Adam to Cain. Israel are the age-people, and shadow forth the age purpose.

Israel the typical Nation.

A.—What is your warrant for calling Israel the age-people?

B.—Isa. xliv. 7 (A.V.) reads "the ancient people". The original is am-olam. Happily we are quite agreed that the interpretation of the Hebrew olam and the Greek aion should be "age", and not "ever", "eternal" and the like. You will see that this age-people are called the Lord's "witnesses" in the next verse. The theme of the chapter and Israel's witness is that of idolatry, but we have not gone far enough to consider the bearing of idolatry upon the purpose of the ages yet.

A.—I call to mind other passages which link Israel on to age purpose, such as, the "everlasting covenant", Canaan as an "everlasting possession", "eternal redemption", "eternal inheritance", and other similar statements where olam or aion are used.

Israel and the Age Purpose.

B.—Take for example the millennial kingdom which is the goal of Israel as the age-people. The blessings which are there limited to "all My holy mountain" foreshadow the wider blessings of a new creation. Then again the Divine name Jehovah is specially connected with Israel and the ages:--

> "Jehovah, the God of your father . . . . . this is My Name FOR THE AGE, and this is My memorial unto all generations" (Exod. iii. 15).

The am-olam, the age-people, find in Jehovah the El-olam, the God of the age (Gen. xxi. 33). Largely because of their typical character, the story of that one nation occupies the bulk of the Scriptures. The book that opens with the record of creation closes with the story of one man and his twelve sons (Genesis). The record of creation occupies 34 verses, the story of the tabernacle twelve chapters.

Example of the typical Principle.

A.—I should like you to give some definite example of the way in which the history of this people interprets the purpose of the ages.

B.—We will read together the following Scripture, viz., Gen. xv. 5-16; Gal. iii. 15-18; and Eph. i. 3-14.

(The reader is requested to read these passages).

A.—(After reading Gen. xv. and Gal. iii.). These two passages do not refer to the same thing. In one the bondage of Egypt is in question, and in the other the giving of the law at Sinai.

B.—True, but you will readily observe the close parallel between them if you notice three feature.

Genesis xv.	Galatians iii.
1. AN UNCONDITIONAL COVENANT: "So shall thy seed be" (5). This involves an inheritance: "To give thee this land to inherit it" (7). 2. A STRANGE INTERVAL OF BONDAGE: "Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them 400 years" (13). 3. THE INHERITANCE ASSURED: "Afterward they shall come out with great substance . . . . . in the fourth generation they shall come hither again" (14-16).	1. AN UNALTERABLE COVENANT: "No man disannuleth, or addeth hereto" (15). This involves an inheritance: "To Abraham and his seed were the promises made" (16). 2. A STRANGE INTERVAL OF BONDAGE: "And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was 430 years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect" (17). 3. THE INHERITANCE ASSURED: "For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise" (18).

The following words of Rom. iv. 6 are a fitting commentary on these passages—"sure to all the seed". The bondage of Egypt is parallel with the bondage of the law. The redemption by the Passover is parallel with the redemption from the curse of the law. The blessed fact is established in both cases that the interval of bondage could not alter the original purpose of God. Israel though bondmen did enter the land of promise, and Israel though under the law shall yet inherit the promise "by grace" (Rom. iv. 6).

A.—Am I to understand that you see a further parallel with Eph. i. 3-14?

B.—Yes, let us examine Eph. i. Do you agree as to its threefold division?

A.—Yes, I see in verses 6, 12 and 14 the recurring words, "to the praise of His glory", which I take to indicate the structural division.

B.—Having the divisions marked for us, do you observe the parallel between them and those of Gen. xv. and Gal. iii.?

Eph. i. 1-14 parallel with Israel's experiences.

A.—Let me see. The first section was either an unconditional or an unalterable covenant.

B.—That coincides with the great revelation of the will of the Father, choosing some in Christ to a position of glory before the foundation, or rather, the overthrow of the world.

A.—The second division is that of bondage. I suppose you will say that such is the condition of man now?

B.—Yes, and so for the first time in Ephesians we read of redemption. Here the great Kinsman-Redeemer is seen delivering his brethren from the bondage of sin and death, and redeeming the forfeited inheritance.

A.—Where do we read of an inheritance in the first section?

B.—It is involved in the word "adoption" which we must consider separately, and it is further implied by the balance of the two occurrences of the word "predestinate":--

> "Having predestinated us unto adoption" (5).
> "In Whom we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated" (11).

A.—Why do you say the "Kinsman-Redeemer" here?

B.—That too is so important that we will leave it for the moment until we have finished this parallel.

A.—The third section must be one that assures the inheritance, if it is to balance.

B.—That is exactly what we find:--

> "Sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, The earnest of our inheritance" (13, 14).

and that inheritance not only ours because of the unalterable and unconditional will of the Father, but ours by the great work of redemption, for it is:--

> "until the redemption of the purchased possession" (14).

We have therefore in Eph. i. 3-14:--

(1). The unalterable and unconditional will of the FATHER.
(2). The strange interval of bondage from which we can only be delivered by the redemptive work of the SON. This redemptive work involves the heading up of all things in heaven and earth, and is not complete until the whole of the promised seed are restored and in possession of their inheritance.
(3). This assurance is the witness of the SPIRIT. The Spirit is essentially "the Holy Spirit of promise". The inheritance is ours by will and by purchase.

Sin and Redemption. Their place.

A.—Am I to understand by this parallel then that redemption is God's provision to deliver from the bondage and forfeiture in which the seed of promise had become involved, and not that sin and redemption form an essential part of His purpose?

B.—That is so. The original will is unconditional and unalterable. We are justified in taking the words of Gal. iii. as a blessed argument. If the coming in of the law with its bondage and curse 430 years after the covenant with Abraham could not alter by one jot that original covenant, neither shall the present reign of sin and death in anywise prevent one child of promise reaching the goal.

A.—Where does faith come in then?

B.—We shall find that Israel's history provides a perfect parallel which we shall see in good time.

The Strange Interval.

A.—There is one other question that has been in my mind all the time, and that is, why should that strange interval of bondage have been necessary?

B.—There you put your finger upon the great problem that lies behind the purpose of the ages.

A.—Does your vaunted theory of interpretation provide a parallel? I feel that if it fails here the abused "philosophic method" must be mine.

B.—We will make that our subject when next we meet.

A.—Keeping also in mind the themes, "adoption", and Kinsman-Redeemer that you passed over just now.

B.—I see that you are keen, and I appreciate your eagerness. Never fear; the Word will meet all our needs.

Who is the Antitypical Amorite?

B.—We have a series of problems before us. We must seek a right understanding of the term "adoption", we must discover God's intention in "redemption", and we have several other items of the age-purpose that must be dealt with before we can be satisfied as to the principle of interpretation I suggest, or of its results.

A.—You will not forget the most important question of all, at least to me, and one which I suspect you realize will upset your particular theories. I speak of the strange interval of bondage which we found in Gen. xv., Gal. iii. and Eph. i. The question is: What is the reason for this interval, and what answer can you give from the history of the typical people Israel?

B.—Shall we turn to Gen. xv. once again?

A.—There you are! you cannot give a straight answer, but just involve the issue in a cloud of difficult passages.

The typical Principle tested.

B.—If by a "straight answer" you mean some cut and dried theory of my own, then I gladly confess that I cannot give you one. Without the wonderful teaching and perfect parallel of the scripture type I suppose I should be obliged to accept one of the many systems of theology that attempt to account for the problems of the age-purpose, choosing according to my temperament and upbringing one of the explanations offered, from Higher Calvinism with its decrees of election and reprobation on the one hand, to Universalism on the other. May I once again suggest that we turn to Gen. xv.?

A.—We have already seen what that passage teaches, but I am anxious to test your theory, so I suppose I must comply. (Turns to Gen. xv.).

B.—That's good. Now we rest once more on solid truth. Will you read verse 16?

A.—

> "But in the fourth generation they shall come hither again: FOR THE INIQUITY OF THE AMORITE IS NOT YET FULL."

I see it! What a revelation! What a relief from that awful doctrine that I felt obliged to accept, which, in order to explain this interval of death and sin, makes God Himself responsible. Yet as I say this I remember the claim that > "Of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things" (Rom. xi. 36).

Israel's Bondage and the Amorite.

B.—Let us go one step at a time. Before us is a definite statement. Israel's bondage was not primarily connected with Israel's sin, but with God's forbearance and longsuffering with a sinful race that had started its course before an Israelite had been born. You will find the same principle in operation just before Israel are redeemed out of Egypt. Before one of the plagues fell God warned Pharaoh that if he did not let Israel go, it would result in the loss of his firstborn. Yet plague after plague fell in the longsuffering of God before that dreadful night overtook Egypt. After that you will remember Pharaoh and his host made one more desperate attempt against the Lord with the result that the Lord said:--

> "The Egyptians whom ye have seen to-day, ye shall see them again no more for the age" (Exod. xiv. 13).

and when the waters returned and covered the Egyptians we read:--

> "There remained not so much as one of them" (Exod. xiv. 28).

This utter destruction coming upon the second revolt finds its parallel in Rev. xx., where, when Satan gathers the nations that are in the four quarters of the earth against the beloved city after the millennium, we read:--

> "Fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them" (verse 9).

Returning to the Amorites, you will remember that with them as with the remainder of the Canaanites nothing less than utter extermination was ordained of God. You will find one further parallel in connection with the flood. Do you remember the name of the man who lived longer than any son of Adam either before or since?

A.—Yes, Methuselah. His age is proverbial.

B.—Remember then, that his age indicates the longsuffering of God, for his name means "At his death it shall be" or words to that effect, and in the year that Methuselah died the flood came, and that was utter extermination of man, woman, child, and beast, except those who entered the ark with Noah.

The Type applied.

A.—I quite see that the phase of the truth, but I do not yet see what connection it had with Israel, or what it foreshadows in the age-purpose.

B.—Shall we turn to Deut. ii.? or will you remark on my failure to give a "straight answer"?

A.—No, pardon my rudeness, there is after all no proof for the child of God like "Thus saith the Lord", and no safety unless we "search and see".

B.—Capital! I seek no triumph in debate, but do rejoice in the spirit manifested in those words.

A.—I have Deut. ii. What verse shall I read?

B.—It will be necessary to read the first twenty-five verses. Let us read them silently, and then discover the argument. (They read. The reader is earnestly asked to do the same). What is the subject before us in this passage?

A.—It seems to deal with the manner in which several nations took possession of their inheritance, which was already held by others.

B.—As you perceive the theme you will appreciate this summary.

> ESAU.—His inheritance possessed by the Horims. These were "destroyed" by Esau, who "succeeded" them, "and dwelt in their stead" (verse 12).
> MOAB.—His inheritance possessed by the Emims. They are described as "giants" and "as the Anakims" (verses 9-11).
> AMMON.—His inheritance possessed by the Zamzummims. These also were "giants" and "as the Anakims". They were "destroyed" and Ammon dwelt in their stead" (verses 19-22).

The principle is expressed in verse 12, which you might read again.

A.—

> "The Horims also dwelt in Seir beforetime, but the children of Esau succeeded them (or as the margin reads inherited them) when they had destroyed them before them, and dwelt in their stead; AS ISRAEL DID UNTO THE LAND OF HIS POSSESSED which the Lord gave unto them."

B.—There you see the reason for this series. Israel find the Amorite in possession and, before they can enter into their inheritance, they have to destroy the Amorites. These were the "giants" with walled cities, that terrified the spies who went to spy out the land. This destruction you will find repeated most emphatically by Amos in chapter ii. 9:--

> "Yet destroyed I the Amorite before them, whose height was like the height of the cedars, and he was strong as the oaks; Yet I destroyed his fruit from above, and his roots from beneath."

The Amorites and "All in Adam".

A.—There certainly seems in the type a marked contrast between Israel and the Amorites, and two questions seem to demand an answer:--

> (1).—Were not these Amorites men, just as much as the Israelites?
> (2).—Who are the antitypical Amorites who must be dispossessed in the fuller sense of the term?

B.—I will answer question (2) first, as question (1) demands more time. If I mention the words "heavenly places" can you not supply an answer?

A.—"Heavenly places"! these words come in Ephesians, where we read, "Blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places" (i. 3).

B.—And in chapter vi.?

The Amorite, Principalities and Heavenly Places.

A.—Yes, I have it:--

> "Spiritual wickednesses in heavenly places" (verses 12).

Certainly the parallel holds good there. Where the special blessings of the church are, there the spiritual Amorite is to be found. This term "Canaanite" or "Amorite" includes, I see > "Principalities and powers, rulers of the darkness of this world" (verse 12).

I had not thought that the Amorites could typify angelic beings, but I am anxious to know the answer to the other question as to the Amorites.

B.—It is too important to consider now; we will give our attention to it at our next meeting together.

The Two Seeds, The Master Key.

A.—We are now to consider the Amorites, and particularly wherein they differ from Israel. The difference can only be one of nationality, for they are descendants of Adam equally with Israel, and Scripture further declares that "all things are of God".

B.—Let us take up our study at that point. You quote "all things are of God". Now I believe the expression "all things" is limited, as "all Israel" is limited, to the 'seed" and the "promise"; but a few passages of Scripture will help us. Let us turn to John viii. In verse 33 it is recorded that certain Jews claimed descent from Abraham, and this is admitted by the Lord in verse 37: "I know that ye are Abraham's seed".

Here we can place the Amorite; he too could say "We be Adam's seed", and we should have to reply, "I know that ye are Adam's seed".

> "I speak that which I have seen with My Father: And ye do that which ye have seen with your father" (verse 38).

Here a distinction is drawn. You might of course say that "My Father" indicates God, and "your father" indicates Abraham, but this would be untrue. The Lord's meaning is made clear in verse 44:--

> "Ye are OF YOUR FATHER THE DEVIL."

"Of God" and "not of God".

The Greek words are ek tou patros. In verse 47 we read that the Lord says:--

> "He that is OF GOD heareth God's words: ye therefore hear them not, because ye are NOT OF GOD."

The Greek words are ek tou Theou. Here we have a perfect parallel. We have it positively stated that these men were of their father the devil, and negatively that they were not of God. Turn to Matt. xiii. and read the parable of the tares in verses 24-30. I suppose you know that our English tares are not intended here?

A.—Yes, I understand that the reference is to a false wheat, the Eastern dewan, which I take to mean false doctrine.

B.—You are right as to the dewan, but not as to the typical meaning. Let us turn to the explanation of the parable.

> "The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom, but the tares are the CHILDREN OF THE WICKED ONE" (Matt. xiii. 38).

Here you have wheat typifying the sons of the kingdom, and dewan the sons of the wicked one:--

> "The enemy that sowed them is the devil . . . . . They shall gather out of His kingdom all things that offend (the word offence refers to traps set to catch the unwary, the first trap being set in the garden of Eden itself by this enemy), and them that do lawlessness, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire" (Matt. xiii. 39-42).

Will you note at this point that the words of the parable, "bind them in bundles to burn them", are interpreted as a literal furnace of fire? It is difficult to see how this fire can in any sense eventuate in reconciliation, but that is not our immediate concern. There is an expression here which I translated "them that do lawlessness" (verse 41).

#2. (contd.). The Two Seeds, The Master Key.
pp. 129 - 144

Lawlessness and Satan's mystery.

A.—Yes, I noticed it at the time. Has that some special significance?

B.—In Matt. vii. 23 the Lord says:--

> "Then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from Me ye that work lawlessness."

and Matt. xiii. 41 speaks of "them that do lawlessness".

In Matt. xxiii. 28 those to whom the Lord's "woe unto you" is addressed are said to be "full of hypocrisy and lawlessness", and these are further addressed in verse 32 and 33:--

> "Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers, ye serpents, ye progeny of vipers. How can ye escape the judgment of Gehenna?"

Compare this with the "tares". Matt. xxiv. 12 says:--

> "Because lawlessness shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold."

Here are all the occurrences of "lawlessness" in Matthew, and they appear to refer to some one definite thing, and not to the sins and shortcomings of men in general. We must reserve judgment on this until we examine "the mystery of lawlessness" itself. Meanwhile we will turn to I John iii. In the fourth verse we read, "for sin is the transgression of the law", literally "the sin is the lawlessness".

Sin is essentially that Satanic system headed up in the mystery of iniquity, and so I John iii. 8 says:--

> "The one doing lawlessness is of the devil: for the devil sinneth from the beginning" (cp. John viii. 44).

Here we have ek tou diabolou, "of the devil". In I John iii. 9, 10 we read:--

> "Whosoever hath been begotten of God (ek tou Theou) does not do sin; for His seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin because he hath been begotten of God (ek tou Theou). In this are the CHILDREN OF GOD manifest and the CHILDREN OF THE DEVIL."

In verse 12 we are taken back to the beginning of things:--

> "Not as Cain, who was of that wicked one (ek tou ponerou) and slew his brother."

Am I not therefore Scriptural when I limit the scope of the term "all things are of God", and when I refuse to confuse this term with that which is "of the devil"?

A.—This is all very strange and awful, but how does this bear upon the character of the Amorites?

B.—The last reference (I John iii. 12) takes us back to Gen. iv. 1. At the birth of Cain Eve exclaimed, "I have gotten a man, even Jehovah" (Hebrew, Ish eth Jehovah). Eve believed that this first son born was the promised seed who should bruise the serpent's head. Scripture reveals the awful fact that instead of being the promised seed Cain was the first of the seed of the serpent; he was "of that wicked one".

A.—How can this be? and how can a man be Jehovah?

B.—As to the second question. Jehovah is a title of Christ, and Eve's hope was fulfilled in the birth of Christ:--

> "For unto you is born this day . . . . . a Saviour which is Christ the Lord (Jehovah)" (Luke ii. 11).

Reading on in Gen. iv. we find Cain's descendants given as far as Tubal-Cain. Cain built a city and its name Enoch means "dedicated". To whom it was dedicated seems evident, for the action is repeated after the flood by Nimrod who carried on the secret of lawlessness.

The Two Seeds.

Cain's line ends in proud boasting (verse 24). Seth, the seed appointed in the place of Abel, has a son, and he is called Enos, meaning "frail". The truth named man frail. This was an opportunity to be used by the wicked one to further his own plan, and so we read:-

> "Then one commenced to be called IN THE NAME JEHOVAH" (Gen. iv. 26).

The same emphasis on "the name" recurs at the building of Babel:--

> "Let us make us a name" (Gen. xi. 4).

The name is Jehovah, and the great antichristian mystery is here seen appropriating that blessed name for its own awful ends. We shall get a fuller answer to your question as to how a man can bear the name of Jehovah when we study the subject of redemption. Your other question, "How can this be?" is more difficult to answer. For one thing Scripture itself is very guarded and uses somewhat veiled terms. The again it is difficult to speak openly upon these themes, but we can keep in mind the blessed answer which the angel Gabriel gave to Mary, when he said:--

> "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God" (Luke i. 35).

Now inasmuch as some are called the children of God and others the children of the devil, we must allow the possibility implied in this verse. Let us go on to Gen. vi. Here we read:--

> "The sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair, and they took them wives of all which they chose" (verse 2).

The results was that "there were giants in the earth" (verse 4).

The sons of God are contrasted with the daughters of Adam, and this title is used of angels (Job i. 6). That there has been some close connection with the depravity of Sodom the words "in like manner" and "strange flesh" indicate (verse 7). These angels left their own habitation (oiketerion). This word is used in II Cor. v. 2 of the resurrection, and suggests that the angels left their spiritual body. These are the "spirits in prison" who fell in the "days of Noah" (I Pet. iii. 19, 20; II Pet. ii. 5). Their progeny are called Nephilim and Rephaim. Noah alone carried the seed uncontaminated, and of him it is written:--

> "Noah was a just man and uncontaminated as to his pedigree" (Gen. vi. 9).

This shows how far the evil one had succeeded in sowing the field with his tares. There could be but one result; the destruction of all living except those saved in the Ark.

The pedigree of the Amorites.

The next incident brings us down to the Amorites. The Amorites were descendants of Canaan, and you will remember that some unexplained sin of unclean character brings down upon Canaan the curse.

To the serpent God said . . .	"Thou art cursed above all cattle."
To Cain the Lord said . . .	"Thou art cursed more than the earth."
To Canaan Noah said . . .	"Cursed be Canaan."

Contrary to common belief no curse was pronounced upon either Adam or Eve. The first man to be cursed is Cain. The second is Canaan. The words of Gen. vi. 4, "and also after that", refer to Canaan and his descendants. The same evil interference that had caused the flood now peopled the land of Canaan, and when Abraham, the true heir, entered into the promised land, we are told "the Canaanite was then in the land" (Gen. xii. 6). Just as the corrupted race had to be destroyed by the flood, so the smaller and local corruption of the Canaanites had to be exterminated by the sword of Israel. The slaying of Sihon king of the Amorites and Og king of Bashan is followed by the refrain in Psa. cxxxvi. 19, 20:--

> "For His mercy endureth for ever."

Satan's plan to corrupt the true seed.

I leave you to continue to trace this evil attempt to corrupt the seed of God. You will see more meaning perhaps in the two instances of Pharaoh and Abimelech (Gen. xii. & xxi.) and Abraham's strict prohibition to his servant that he should not take for his son Isaac one of the daughters of the Canaanites.

The case of the giant Goliath is another full type, foreshadowing the Babylonian dynasty which forms the theme of Daniel's prophecies. If through the weakness of the flesh the Canaanites were not utterly destroyed, Scripture is clear as to the issue. The command had been:--

> "But of the cities of these people, which the Lord thy God doth give thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save nothing" (Deut. xx. 16-18).

When at length Israel enter into their inheritance it is written:-- > "In that day there shall be NO MORE the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of Hosts" (Zech. xiv. 21).

A.—I am to understand then that while, by the interference of Satan, there has come through Adam the seed of the wicked one, so through Adam has come the true seed of God, called the seed of the woman, who shall ultimately crush the serpent's head. I do not quite see the object of this terrible thing, but I realize it is there.

B.—Its purpose will be more clear to you when we study the question of the two mysteries in Scripture. Meanwhile let me say that I am at liberty to take the words "all men" in their fullest sense, providing I do not join together what God has kept asunder, and speak of those concerning whom He says they are "of the devil" as being "of God". If we keep in mind the Lord's words, "An enemy hath done this", and realize what it is that the enemy has done, we shall perceive that the recognition of the two seeds in Scripture is practically a master key to the purpose.

Adoption and Redemption.

A.—There are two subjects that I think need attention before we go further, viz., adoption and redemption.

B.—Let us consider adoption first. In Rom. ix. 3-5 we find it included in the list of Israel's privileges. If we notice the arrangement of the items it may help us. You will observe that Israel's privileges are bounded by "the flesh":--

A Brethren, kinsmen according to the flesh.
B Who are Israelites.
C Adoption.
D Glory.
E Covenants.
E Law.
D Service.
C Promises.
B Whose are the Fathers.
A Christ, as concerning the flesh.

Here you will see that adoption finds its complement in the promises. This we will keep in mind. For the moment we must turn to Gal. iii. and iv. In Gal. iii. 15 we have the word "covenant", which is the rendering of the Greek word diatheke. In most passages "covenant" is the true translation of the word, for it generally refers either to the old or new covenant. In Gal. iii. 15 however there are these qualifications:--

1. "I speak after the manner of men."
2. "Though it be but a man's covenant."

Here the word diatheke should be translated "testament", in the sense of a man's "last will and testament". Let us call it for the time being "A man's will".

The Galatian Will.

A.—Pardon my interruption, but I think you are mistaken, for the passage goes on to say:--

> "Yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto."

This is not true of a man's will, for he is at liberty to alter, annul or add to his will as many times as he chooses.

B.—You are making the mistake of interpreting the past by the light of the present. The law governing the making of a will here in England is very different from that which obtain in Galatia in the first century. I am indebted to the researches of Sir W. Ramsay for light upon this subject, and in his Historical Commentary on Galatians he shows that then a man had to think seriously before he made his will and appointed his heir, for when once it had been "confirmed" and the heir adopted the man was powerless to alter it. Sir W. Ramsay cites a case where the "adopted" son had greater claims than the testator's own children. Behind all this of course was the policy of the state, and the guarding of the worship of the gods, but it supplied the apostle with a wonderful illustration both of the unalterable character of the will of God, and the fact that the word "adoption" is practically the same as appointing an "heir". Gal. iv. takes up the theme of the will of the father, using the illustration of a child who though heir is, during his minority, under tutors and governors:--

> "Until the time appointed of the father" (verse 2).

The argument then proceeds

> "Even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world: but when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption."

Adoption and Inheritance.

If you study the references to adoption in Rom. viii. you will find that they too speak of deliverance from bondage, and the entry into a position of predestined glory. There are many important features which I have omitted: you will find a fuller treatment of them in Sir W. Ramsay's work on Galatians, or in articles in The Berean Expositor.

A.—I noticed in Gal. iv., Rom. viii. and Eph. i. that the word "adoption" appears in the same context as the word "redemption"; why is this?

B.—Perhaps we shall be in a better position to answer that question after we have looked into the scriptural meaning of the term. Now, how would you arrive at the meaning of redemption?

A.—We can best understand redemption by realizing the nature of sin, and the character of God.

The Chameleon method.

B.—Had we a complete understanding of "sin" and "God" I would grant that your method would be a good one, but, when one man's temperament causes him to magnify the love of God above all other attributes, and another man's temperament leads him to place undue emphasis upon God's righteousness, the meaning of redemption will be coloured continually by such differences in point of view; the same also is true as to the meaning of sin. Is it a crime, a weakness, a lapse, a failure, a forfeiture? According as you answer, so will you understand redemption. This I call the "Chameleon method of interpretation"; it is the fruitful cause of all the "isms" that split up the church of God into conflicting camps.

A.—What alternative can you offer to this "Chameleon" method as you call it? Will not your method be as equally coloured by your own temperament?

B.—No. My method being based upon the revealed typical teaching of Scripture is so far impersonal. It can only become tinged by my own personality when I attempt the construction of a creed. The material is already to our hand.

A.—Do you propose traversing Leviticus or examining the various offerings and sacrifices of Israel's ritual?

The Book of Ruth and Redemption.

B.—No, not at the moment, but these offerings supply a wealth of detail as soon as the main principles have been established. For the moment we shall find all we require in the Book of Ruth.

A.—Surely that pastoral story, beautiful as it may be, cannot supply instruction of such a fixed and basic character as you appear to imagine.

B.—That I will not debate at present. Before we meet again I suggest that you read the Book of Ruth right through so that our time may be employed in the use of this important portion of the Divine system of interpretation.

(Before going further the reader is asked to read the Book of Ruth right through).

A.—I have complied with your suggestion and have read the Book of Ruth, so will you now proceed?

B.—It is impossible to separate redemption from the redeemer and when we grasp the scriptural essentials that go to make up a scriptural redeemer we shall be well on the way of attaining to the idea of scriptural redemption. Assuming that you are acquainted with the story of the Book of Ruth, let me draw your attention to the closing portion of the second chapter. When Ruth returned from her gleaning and told Naomi of the attitude of Boaz, we have the first reference to the redeemer. Naomi said of Boaz:--

> "The man is near of kin to us, one of our next kinsmen" (ii. 20).

The Kinsman-Redeemer.

A.—Where is there any mention of a redeemer in that statement?

B.—Look at the note in the margin.

A.—(Reads), "One that hath right to redeem".

B.—Keep that in mind while we proceed. In chapter iii. we are told that Ruth, acting on Naomi's instructions, lies at the feet of Boaz on the threshing floor, and at midnight upon being discovered Ruth said:--

> "I am Ruth thine handmaid, spread therefore thy wing over thine handmaid, FOR THOU HAST RIGHT TO REDEEM" (iii. 9, Margin).

Boaz now revealed a fact that made a pause in the accomplishment of Naomi's purpose:--

> "It is true that I am thy near kinsman: howbeit there is a kinsman nearer than I . . . . . if he will perform unto thee the part of a kinsman, well . . . . . but if not . . . . . then will I do the part of a kinsman to thee" (iii. 12, 13).

It is evident that the pity, the love, the riches, the willingness of Boaz could not avail apart from the essential element of kinship. This little hitch brings into prominence the law of God on the subject of redemption. So let us continue on into chapter iv. Boaz calls the nearer kinsman to him as he passes the gate of the city and puts the case of Naomi before him saying:--

> "If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it; but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me, that I may know: for there is none to redeem it beside thee: and I am after thee. And he said, I will redeem it" (iv. 4).

When however Boaz gave this kinsman to understand that the redemption of Naomi's inheritance involved the marrying of Ruth because of the death of her husband, the kinsman withdrew, and left the way clear for Boaz.

Redemption and the forfeited inheritance.

A.—Why was it necessary for the redeemer of the inheritance to marry Ruth?

B.—This is vital to the scriptural conception of redemption, and you will find a full explanation in the law given in Deut. xxv. 5-10, which you might read.

A.—(Reads):--

> "If brethren dwell together, and one of them die, and have no child, the wife of the dead shall not marry without unto a stranger: Her husband's next kinsman (margin) shall take her to him for wife, and perform the duty of an husband's next kinsman unto her. And it shall be, that the first-born which she beareth shall succeed IN THE NAME OF HIS BROTHER WHICH IS DEAD, that his name be not put out in Israel."

B.—Boaz undertakes this as you will see:--

> "Ye are witnesses this day, that I have bought all that was Elimelech's, and all that was Chilion's and Mahlon"s, of the hand of Naomi. Moreover, Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of Mahlon, have I purchased to be my wife, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance, that the name of the dead be not cut off from among his brethren, and from the gate of his place" (Ruth iv. 9, 10).

Two important facts in the scriptural conception redemption are prominent here:--

(1). The kinsman-redeemer.
(2). The effect of that redemption—the type sets forth the entry into the lost inheritance in resurrection life.

We will look a little more closely at the doctrine involved in the kinsman-redeemer.

The Deity and Humanity of the Scriptural Redeemer.

A.—Since our last meeting together I have been looking up the word "redeemer" in the O.T. and am particularly impressed with the Divine titles that are connected with it in Isaiah.

B.—Perhaps it will be helpful to see how the word is used in Isaiah.

A.—I find such titles as "The Holy One of Israel", "Creator", "King of Israel", "Lord of Hosts", "The Lord thy God", "The Mighty One of Jacob", "The God of the whole earth".

B.—If you will remember that the word goel means not simply redeemer, but the kinsman who has the right to redeem, these titles become doubly important. If Jehovah, the Creator, the God of the whole earth, is to be also the goel or kinsman-redeemer of the sons of Adam, then God must become man. Now it is exactly what we should expect of the Scriptures, that the prophet who gives the Divine titles such prominence and thereby creates the problem will also supply the information that provides the answer. Isaiah brings the two sides together in the blessed name Immanuel.

> "Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call His name Immanuel (GOD WITH US)" (Isa. vii. 14).

Matt. i. 20-23 leaves us in no doubt that this is prophetic in its fullness of the Lord Jesus Christ. Again Isaiah says:--

> "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given . . . . . His name shall be called . . . . . the Mighty God" (ix. 6).

This Divine kinsman is seen in John i. 1 and 14:--

> "The Word was GOD." "The Word became FLESH."

Gal. iv. 4, 5 emphasizes this kinship also:--

> "When the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law to redeem."

Heb. ii. 14, 15 speaks most definitely of this kinship:--

> "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same, that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, and deliver them who, through fear of death, were all their lifetime subject to bondage."

A.—There is certainly strong scripture evidence that this kinship so stressed in Ruth is a vital part of redemption. I noticed also that the next verse reads:--

> "For verily He took not on Him the nature of angels" (Heb. ii. 16).

What does this imply?

B.—There are three different interpretations of the passage, and therefore I would not unduly press this verse into service:--

1. The Lord did not assume angelic nature, but limited His kinsmanship to mankind.
2. The angels are not laid upon to rule in the kingdom that is coming (see parallel in verse 5).
3. The fear of death did not lay hold upon angels, but men, therefore Christ did not become an angel, but a man.

Has Satan a Kinsman-Redeemer.

A.—In any case it seems to strike a blow at the doctrine I have fondly entertained, that Christ's redemptive work embraced not only men, but angels and even Satan himself.

B.—I feel, with scripture as my guide, that my attitude with regard to these things must be expressed like this. Before we can think of discussing the question of the possibility of the redemption of Satan or angels, can you point me to their KINSMAN? Until you can the matter is for me ruled out.

There is another element in the scriptural conception of the kinsman-redeemer that we have not considered, but which finds an expression here in Heb. ii. 14, 15 in the two words:--

> "That He might destroy . . . . . and deliver."

The kinsman was both redeemer and avenger. You will read in Numb. xxxv. 19 and other places of the "revenger of blood". The double office is suggested in the words of Isa. lxiii. 4:--

> "The day of vengeance is in my heart, and the year of my redeemed is come."

The same is found in I John iii. 5-8:--

> "He was manifested to take away our sins . . . . . For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil."

Here the works of the devil are to be destroyed; in Heb. ii. 14 the devil himself is said to be destroyed.

A.—But at the reconciliation of all things Col. i. suggests that "principalities and powers" come under the power of redemption.

Redeemer OR Avenger.

B.—Without arguing over your comment in detail I would remind you that Col. i. presents one side of the picture. Col. ii. presents the other; and when they are brought together, the kinsman-redeemer and avenger, the two-fold office fulfils the double statement. The avenger is seen in Col. ii. 15:--

> "And having spoiled principalities and powers, He made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it."

So that you must understand that at the very same time and by that very same cross some principalities and powers were reconciled and some spoiled. Now the O.T. type absolutely forbids the idea that the kinsman could ever be an avenger upon those who were redeemed by him, neither could he redeem those who were the objects of his vengeance.

The City of Refuge.

A.—I am just wondering whether you have forgotten a very important "type" which may make you alter your opinion as to this idea.

B.—What is that? I want the truth at all costs.

A.—I refer to the cities of refuge, which were appointed to provide a means of escaping the avenger of blood. As you are so keen on the typical method, your omission of this important feature looks suspicious.

B.—Numb. xxxv. speaks of these cities, and clearly distinguishes between two classes, A man slayer "which killeth any person at unawares" (verses 11, 15), and "without enmity" (22), or "seeing him not" neither seeking the slain man's harm (23), he it is who could find safety in one of these cities, but > "the murderer shall surely be put to death" (16-21).

Murder precluded from City of Refuge.

Now Satan is a "murderer from the beginning", his work is intentional, there is nothing "unawares" about it. He is called "the enemy". Further, Numb. xxxv. 31 says:--

> "Ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is guilty of death: but he shall be surely put to death."

There is no suggestion in the type that calls for any modification, you will see, it but confirms my original statement.

A.—Thank you, it was just a straw, but I realize that while you hold to your interpretation by type you are beyond argument.

Kinship and Redemption.

B.—Coming back then to the question of kinship and redemption, the words:--

"As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

must be interpreted with the type in view. Without repeating what we have seen as to Cain, the Amorites, the giants, and the two seeds, we realize that Christ is not kinsman to such. They may be connected physically with Adam, just as many were connected physically with Abraham; yet the words "in Adam" stand for something more than this, and I Cor. xv. 22 pledges the redemption and new life of the children of the promise. Further, Isa. xxvi. 14 speaks of some who though dead shall not live:--

"They are dead, they shall NOT LIVE: they are the Rephaim (elsewhere called "giants") THEY SHALL NOT RISE."

These therefore could not have been "in Adam", for if they had been they would have the hope of resurrection before them. In contrast we read in verse 19:--

"THY DEAD shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise."

Jehovah's dead are in His keeping and they have been ransomed from the power of the grave, death hath no more dominion over them. It is otherwise with the seed of the serpent:--

"The earth shall cast out the Rephaim" (Isa. xxvi. 19).
"In that day the Lord . . . . . shall slay the dragon that is in the sea" (Isa. xxvii. 1).

Coming back to the subject of redemption, we learn:--

(1). Redemption can only be effected by the next of kin.
(2). Who at the same time is the avenger on the enemy.
(3). The two main types for which redemption was provided are:--
  (a) A forfeited inheritance (Ruth).
  (b) Bondage (Lev. xxv. 47-52).
(4). That resurrection life is the outcome (Hos. xii. 14, Psa. xlix. 7-9, Job xix. 25-27).
(5). That in this new life the redeemed are reinstated, the adoption is realized, the inheritance secured, the bondage removed, and the way made clear for the outworking of the original purpose of God.

A.—I suppose you would say that the fact that we have been redeemed will be sufficient to prevent us from falling again?

B.—No, I do not. Eternity would never be free of the dreadful possibility of failure if that were so. Once more to our type. Boaz not only redeemed the forfeited inheritance, HE MARRIED THE WOMAN. Our security for ever is that we are not only redeemed by His precious blood, but made one with Himself; that is our stay.

The Will of God, and the Mystery of His Will.

A.—I must admit that your presentation of redemption is very convincing and seems to fit in with many passages of Scripture, but when we were looking at Eph. i. 1-14 I think you said that redemption was not included in the will of the Father. Would you mind making your meaning clear?

B.—My meaning was that in the will of God, speaking of it "after the manner of men", He appointed His heirs, and their place in His purpose. The question of their possible fall and need for redemption does not figure therein, but is indicated by a special term in the section which is connected with "the work of the Son".

A.—My own conception of the subject is that God's Fatherly love could never have been manifested or experienced had not sin given it the necessary background of hatred and distance, and that sin was as much the purpose of God as any other part of His creation.

The Father's love, apart from sin.

B.—I know there are some who do not hesitate to say that God would never have known the sweet response of love apart from sin, but such is not the truth. In John xvii. 23 the Lord Jesus says of the Father:--

> "Thou hast loved them, as Thou hast loved Me."

Unless you are prepared therefore to say that the Lord Jesus Christ Himself is the chief of sinners, you must confess that those who teach that it was necessary for God to plunge men into sin and wickedness in order to show how much He loved them, are perilously near to becoming blasphemous. Imagine a father exposing his sons and his daughters to lives of shame and vice, so that when they had sounded the depths of degradation and sin he could show his fatherly love in their reconciliation! The idea is monstrous, and only gains in its terrible character as it is suggested of God the Father.

A.—I am afraid I had not looked at the subject in that light, and certainly feel it does not square with John xvii. 23. Yet God loved the world of sinners, and Christ died for such.

B.—That is blessedly true. It is one thing to believe that God's love is such that neither sin nor death can alter it or make it fail of its purpose; it is quite another thing to teach that He plunged us all into sin in order to impart to His creatures the delicious sense of His Fatherly affection.

A.—Yet redemption cannot be something outside the will of God.

B.—That is true, and you will find that Eph. i. employs a special term when dealing with it. Let us turn once again to Eph. i. and notice the passages which speak of God's will.

A.—(Reads Eph. i. 5):--

> "Having predestinated us unto adoption by Jesus Christ to Himself, according to the good pleasure of His will."

B.—That passage read in the light of Gal. iv. 1-5 shows us the will of the Father appointing His heirs. This will is unalterable and the predestination is not to sin but to adoption and holiness. Read the next occurrences.

The Mystery of His Will.

A.—

> "Having made known unto us the mystery of His will" (Eph. i. 9).
> "In Whom we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of Him Who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will" (Eph. i. 11).

B.—The original will of God therefore shall be accomplished, but you will observe that when the subject is the intervening period of bondage and redemption another word is added.

A.—Yes, it is then "the mystery of His will".

B.—That is an important fact to keep in mind, and if you realize the place that "mystery" occupies in the purpose of the ages you will not easily be misled by the teaching we discussed a moment or two ago.

A.—Does your "typical" method of interpretation offer any help in this case?

B.—Yes, it does. If you refer to the Greek version of the O.T. commonly referred to as the LXX, you will find that the word "mystery" occurs only in the book of Daniel. This version called the Septuagint was in the hands of Israel many years before Christ, and N.T. phraseology is largely that of the Septuagint. Now is there any significance in the place where we find the word "mystery" in the O.T.?

A.—Daniel was the prophet who spoke most concerning the period dominated by Babylon.

(To be continued).

#3. (contd.). The Will of God and the Mystery of His Will.
pp. 145 - 159

Mystery and the Interval of Bondage.

B.—That is the point. Not until Israel's king is captive and Nebuchadnezzar constituted king of kings do we read the word "mystery". It was the will of God that Israel's king and kingdom should be established, and that shall yet be accomplished. It is the mystery of His will that allows the interval between Israel's failure and Israel's glory to be occupied by the Gentile powers, from Nebuchadnezzar onwards.

Where do we first meet the word mystery in the N.T.?

A.—In Matt. xiii. where we read of "the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven".

B.—Do you see any parallel with Daniel?

A.—Why yes. In Matt. xi. and xii. the Lord has been rejected. He stands among Israel "greater than the temple", "greater than Jonah", and "greater than Solomon" (Matt. xii. 6, 41, 42).

B.—And yet in His threefold office of Priest, Prophet and King, Israel refused Him. Then come the mysteries of the kingdom giving the revelation of the way in which God will deal with this apparent failure. Come now to Ephesians. There we have not only the mystery of His will, but "the dispensation of the mystery" (iii. 9, R.V.). Can you not see that this also is exactly parallel?

A.—Yes, for Acts xxviii. quotes the very same passage, viz., Isa. vi. 10, that the Lord quoted in Matt. xiii., and Ephesians reveals the dispensation of the mystery that intervenes during the period of Israel's blindness.

The place of Sin and Redemption in the Divine Purpose.

B.—You can now appreciate the distinction I suggest that exists between the original will made without regard to sin and death, and the mystery of His will which meets that dark period of bondage by the gift of the Kinsman-Redeemer. Those who put sin, death, and redemption into the original will of the Father are driven to the terrible conclusion you quoted just now.

A.—All this is very interesting, but how does it bear upon the reconciliation of all things?

Two distinct Mysteries.

B.—Running through the ages, Scripture indicates two distinct mysteries. They are true parallel lines that never meet. The one is called

THE MYSTERY OF GODLINESS, and the other
THE MYSTERY OF INIQUITY.

The one is "of God", and the other is "of the wicked one". The one is manifested in Christ, the other in Antichrist. They have many features in common which will help you to see that the one is an awful counterfeit of the other. It is the work of "the enemy" who sowed "tares" in the field. The mystery of iniquity is expressed in the claim:--

> "I WILL ascend into heaven,
> I WILL exalt my throne above the stars of God,
> I WILL sit also upon the mount of the congregation . . . . .
> I WILL ascend above the heights of the clouds,
> I WILL be like the Most High" (Isa. xiv. 13, 14).

The mystery of godliness finds its expression in the words of Phil. ii. 5-9:--

> " . . . . . Christ Jesus, Who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God, but made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant . . . . . Wherefore God also hath highly exalted Him, and given Him the name which is above every name."

You can hear the echo of the mystery of iniquity in the garden of Eden, "Ye shall be as God", and again at its consummation:--

> "The son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that He as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God" (II Thess. ii. 3, 4).

The Devil sinneth from the beginning.

Away back before the age-times there was one who answered to the following description:--

(1). Full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty.
(2). Had been in Eden the garden of God.
(3). Covered with precious stones.
(4). Was the anointed cherub.
(5). Was upon the holy mountain of God.
(6). Walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire.
(7). Perfect at His creation.

These words are taken from Ezek. xxviii., and I think you will agree that they are not applicable to any human being.

A.—That is so. I noticed he was created perfect, but that he fell.

B.—Yes, and as a result he was cast out from the mountain of God, and the judgment pronounced was:--

"I will destroy thee, O covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire" (Ezek. xxviii. 16).

A.—What has this to do with the mystery?

B.—Here we have a spirit being who bears the name both of "christ" (for he is called the "anointed") and "cherub". The derivation of the word cherub is controversial: our own conclusion (which however we will not press) is "like the greatness", and this seems echoed in the words "I will be like the Most High". Michael's name seems to challenge this, for it means "Who is like God?" You will observe in Gen. iii. that the cherubim balance the serpent in the structure. But this is a long subject and beyond our present scope. You will find it dealt with in The Berean Expositor.

The Goal of the two Mysteries.

All I now say is that originating with the anointed cherub, who was cast out as profane, is the mystery of iniquity, the goal of which is the usurpation of the throne of God. The origin of the mystery of godliness is found in the true Christ, the true Anointed, Who when the work of redemption is accomplished presents to the Father the perfect result, that God may be all in all.

These two mysteries come to a crisis in the Book of the Revelation. There "the mystery of God is finished" (Rev. x. 7). With the ending of the mystery comes the ending of the present period of bondage and alienation. The purpose of God shall have been accomplished, the utmost opposition of the enemy thwarted.

A.—It struck me just now that it was strange that there should have been one called "the christ" or "anointed" other than the Lord.

B.—You will find that it is entirely in line with a principle that runs throughout the record of the ages. The first in order of time is not the first in order of purpose. Always the type sets forth that evil is allowed its opportunity first, but that the true purpose is found in the second. Let us make a list:--

The first christ.—Ezek. xxviii.	The true Christ.—The Lord Jesus.
The first son.—Cain.	Abel.—The true seed.
The first son.—Ishmael.	Isaac.—The true seed.
The first son.—Esau.	Jacob.—The true seed.
The first man.—Of the earth.	The second man.—The Lord from heaven.
The first king of Israel.—Saul.	David.—The true king.

The same may also be said of the angels. Though angels, principalities and powers belong to a family created before man, nevertheless man is destined to take a place "far above principality and power", "the saints shall judge angels", and though made "for a little lower than the angels" man the second family is the true heir of glory. It will not be possible to pursue our theme much further, although there still remains a great deal untouched.

A.—Before we bring this study together to a close, I should like a word or two upon the question of the second death, for I believe that Scripture teaches that those who are subject to the second death are to be delivered from it at last and numbered among the redeemed.

B.—We will proceed to consider this question, and then shall have to conclude with a resume of the chief features that have come before us.

The Second Death.

Universal reconciliation necessitates a resurrection from the second death. The proof text is here examined.

A.—I want to consider the teaching of the Word concerning the second death before we leave the subject of universal reconciliation.

B.—May I ask why you consider this subject so important?

A.—Well, to be frank with you, were it not for the faith I have that those who are held by the second death shall one day be delivered from its power and be numbered with the redeemed, I confess that your arguments would prove too strong for me.

B.—Will you state clearly what you believe as to this, so that we may not beat the air in our argument?

I Cor. xv. 26 and the Second Death.

A.—I believe that at the consummation of the ages, beyond the great white throne, those who have been cast into the lake of fire shall come forth the redeemed of the Lord, that the second death will, at the consummation, usher into life in Christ.

The word distinctly affirms that "the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death" (I Cor. xv. 26). Actuated by the exigencies of a theory, some have attempted to limit this statement to the first death, but the attempt is futile. A comparison of I Cor. xv. 26 with the statement in Rev. xx. 14 and xxi. 8 will show that the lake of fire is to be abolished at the consummation. It is the last enemy.

Is the Second Death in I Cor. xv.?

B.—I observe that you do not pretend to discover this deliverance from the lake of fire in the book of the Revelation.

A.—No, I will admit that apart from I Cor. xv. 26 Scripture is silent on the subject.

B.—So then, your whole doctrine stand or falls with your interpretation of I Cor. xv. 26. Now I believe that death as spoken of in I Cor. xv. always refers to the death brought in by Adam, and never to the second death. My beliefs, however, like your own, must stand the test of Scripture, or they must be renounced as false. Let us therefore seek afresh the scope of the word death as used in I Cor. xv. Will you share in this search, and "prove all things"?

The Words Dead, Die and Death examined.

A.—I find that nekros, the word "dead", occurs thirteen times. The verses are: 12, 13, 15, 16, 20, 21, 29, 32, 35, 42, 52. They speak of "the resurrection of the dead", and I admit that Adamic death is intended in each case.

B.—Perhaps you will find confirmation of your theory in apothnesko, "to die".

A.—This word occurs five times. The verses are: 3, 22, 31, 32, 36. The usage is limited to the death of Christ and the first death of men. And again I confess that the second death is not in view.

B.—Your last hope then is in the word thanatos.

A.—This word meaning "death" occurs five times. The verses are 21, 26, 54, 55, 56.

B.—Perhaps you had better give these passages in full and will you also take note of anything in the original that distinguishes one passage from another?

"For since by man came death" (Gk. ho thanatos) (21).
"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death" (Gk. ho thanatos) (26).
"Death is swallowed up in victory" (Gk. ho thanatos) (54).
"O death, where is thy sting?" (Gk. thanete) (55).
"The sting of death is sin" (Gk. tou thanatou) (56).

No Distinction in the Original.

B.—With the exception of verse 55, each verse uses the word with the article. The expression "O death", being in the vocative, dispenses with the article. There is therefore one unbroken reference to some one thing called ho thanatos, "death". How do you prove that verse 26 deals with the second death?

A.—I must confess that the more closely we examine this chapter, the less I find to support my theory, yet I have been led to believe that those who saw only Adamic death in I Cor. xv. were blinded by prejudice.

The Scope of the Subject examined.

B.—What is the scope of I Cor. xv.?

A.—The scope of any passage is determined by its literary structure.

B.—Shall we then seek the inspired structure of this chapter? I think we can omit verses 1-11 from our present discussion; they deal with the evidences and evangel of resurrection.

Verse 12	starts with the question,	"HOW?"
Verse 35	returns to the question,	"HOW?"
Verse 34	is an exhortation,	"AWAKE."
Verse 58	is also an exhortation,	"BE STEADFAST."

The intervening verses, 13-33 and 36-57, which constitute the bulk of the chapter, both deal with

ADAM and CHRIST.

The structure may be set out as follows:--

A | xv. 12. The fact of resurrection. "HOW?"
B | 13-33. Adam and Christ.
Death destroyed.
"When?" "Then."
C | 34. Exhortation. "AWAKE."
A | 35. The manner of resurrection. "HOW?"
B | 36-57. Adam and Christ.
Death swallowed up.
"When?" "Then."
C | 58. Exhortation. "BE STEADFAST."

The predominance of Adam.

You will see that the major sections are headed by the names Adam and Christ, and these sections contain the references to the destruction or swallowing up of death. The scope of the passage is defined for us, and it is not possible to introduce the second death without committing violence to the passage.

Paul amplifies the statement concerning the destruction of the last enemy by the words, "Death is swallowed up in victory". That "swallowing up" takes place at resurrection, and is the destruction of the last enemy—death.

A.—I agree with you as to the strong argument you have for the place of Adam in this chapter, but do not follow your meaning when you speak of Paul amplifying.

B.—Paul follows a customary method. First he states his theme briefly, then follows with fuller details. There are at least four such amplification:--

1. Every man in his own order.
2. Adam and Christ.
3. The destruction of death.
4. The answer to the question "when?".

Let us put this statement to the test.

1. Every man in his own order.

The amplification occupies verses 37-44. The words "celestial bodies" and "terrestrial bodies" and the differing glory of the sun, moon and stars, all bear upon the fact that in the resurrection every man will be in his own rank or order.

2. Adam and Christ.

In this amplification, which occupies verses 45-49, the relation of Adam to Christ and the resurrection is brought out in the following passages:--

"The first man Adam . . . . . a living soul."
"The last Adam . . . . . a life-giving spirit."
"The first man . . . . . of the earth."
"The second man . . . . . the Lord from heaven."
"The image of the earthy."
"The image of the heavenly."

The next item is that of the destruction of the last enemy. Do you not feel that, with this evident amplification of the subject, those who introduce into this passage the second death are the ones who are obliged to do so by the exigencies of their own unscriptural theories?

Destruction of Death at the Resurrection.

A.—I must confess that the evidence seems all against any other death in I Cor. xv. than that connected with Adam. Please proceed, as I want to see what the amplification is of the destruction of the last enemy.

B.—(Reads I Cor. xv. 51-57):--

"Behold, I shew you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed.
In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.
For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal put on immortality.
So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory.
O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?
The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law.
But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

This is Paul's inspired commentary upon the destruction of the last enemy. Can this passage by any possibility refer to the second death?

A.—I cannot tell you.

B.—"We shall not all sleep." What place is there in that for the second death? It is ruled out. "At the last trump"; "We shall be changed"; "This mortal must put on immortality". Not one of these statements can be made fit the second death. Further, the amplification of the time period is included in the verses just read.

A.—I begin to feel that there is not much of my position left, but there is one argument you have not met, viz., that the destruction of the last enemy takes place "at the consummation of the ages".

B.—I look in both the English, and the Greek Original, but I do not see such a passage.

A.—I am sure it is there, for I have quoted it many times when proving the resurrection from the second death. (Looks for the passage, but fails to find it).

B.—I think I can explain. "The consummation of the ages" is what your friends read into the words, "then cometh the end".

The meaning of "The End".

There is no word for "cometh" in the original of verse 24. It simply reads 'Then the end". Some understand the words to mean "Then the end rank", but we can find no justification for such a rendering. Cremer, in his note on to telos, says that this word does not primarily denote the end, termination, with reference to time, but the goal reached, the completion or conclusion at which anything arrives, either as issue or ending; or as a result, acme, consummation, e.g., polemon telos, "victory" (literally "the end of war". end not measuring time but object); telos andros, "the full age of man" (not the end of man-death), also of the "ripening of seed". In Luke i. 33 and Mark iii. 26 the idea of termination seems uppermost. The idea of issue, end, conclusion, is seen in Matt. xxvi. 58, "To see the end"; James v. 11, "Ye have seen the end of the Lord"; I Pet. iv. 17, "What shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel?"

The idea of a goal reached is seen in Rom. vi. 21, "The end of those things is death"; Phil. iii. 19, "Whose end is destruction". So also II Cor. xi. 15; Heb. vi. 8. When the apostle wrote the words of I Cor. xv. 24, "Then the end", what goal had he in view? What is the object of resurrection? Does it not take man back into the place intended for him in the Divine purpose, for which sin and death had for a while rendered him unfit? The goal, this end in view, is contained in the words of I Cor. xv. 28, "That God may be all in all". Although "the end" is mentioned immediately after the resurrection of those that are Christ's at His parousia, it is not attained without a reign of righteousness and a rule of iron. The uninterrupted statement of the end is as follows:--

> "Then the end, when He shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father . . . . . with the object that God may be all in all."

This is “the end”. The “consummation of the ages” is an invention, a false peg upon which to hang a false theory. Just notice how the destruction of death is one of a series of steps toward the goal.

I Corinthians xv. 24-28.

A | 24-. The end.
B | a | -24-. WHEN He delivers up the kingdom.
b | -24. WHEN He abolishes all rule.
c | 25-. FOR He must reign.
d | -25. Till all enemies under foot.
d | 26-. The last enemy; death abolished.
c | -26. FOR He hath put all things under his feet.
b | 27. WHEN. The one exception.
a | 28-. WHEN. The Son Himself subjected.
A | -28. That God may be all in all.

A.—My position I feel is untenable, and I am informed that there is no other passage of Scripture, except I Cor. xv. 26, that teaches a resurrection from the second death, so I fear my theories have proved false. I should like to finish the matter though, and see what is said by way of amplifying the time period.

“When . . . . . Then”.

B.—You will notice en each section the words “when” and “then”.

The end is attained “when He shall deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father”, and this is not done until all enemies are abolished, and all the redeemed are placed in their proper rank under Christ. The abolishing of death is timed for us in I Cor. xv. 54 by the words, ‘When . . . . . then”. Isa. xxv. 8 contains the verse quoted in I Cor. xv. 54. It is in a context of Millennial administration:--

> “Then the moon shall be confounded, the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously” (Isa. xxiv. 23).
> “And in this mountain shall the Lord of Hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. And He will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of His people shall He take away from off all the earth; for the Lord hath spoken it” (Isa. xxv. 6-8). (See also Isa. xxvi. 1 and xxvii. 1).

A further note of time is given in I Cor. xv. 52, “At the last trump”. In Rev. xi., at the sounding of the seventh trumpet, “the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ”. Immediately there follows reference to the “great power” and the “reign” and the “time of the dead”, and the “destruction of them that destroy the earth”. These Scriptures therefore place the period in view as being before the second death.

Death was virtually destroyed when Christ rose from the dead:--

> "Who abolished (katargeo) death" (II Tim. i. 10).

Death will be actually destroyed when the last of the dead stand before the great white throne. Death will be manifestly destroyed when it is cast into the lake of fire.

A.—I have been led to make a comparison between the lake of fire and the flood.

A true and a false analogy.

B.—The comparison is justifiable, I believe. What makes you hesitate now in accepting it?

A.—I had believed the following comment to be true. In Noah's day He cleansed away abounding sin by means of water. And was not water a purifier well suited to the task? And if in preparation for the last eon He once more wishes to dispose of evil, what more effective agent can be found than fire? It is the most searching purifier known.

B.—These observations are rather involved. First you say that the water of the flood cleansed away abounding sin, then you say that the fire was an effective agent to dispose of evil; then you say that fire is a purifier, so I suppose your thought is that just as the flood purified in part, the fire will purify completely.

A.—Yes, that expresses my idea.

B.—Well, your idea will not stand the test. Turn to Gen. vi. and vii.:--

> "Behold, I will destroy them" (vi. 13).
> "Behold, I do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh" (vi. 17).
> "Every living substance was destroyed" (vii. 23).
> "I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake" (viii. 21).

Destruction and curse are what is written of the flood, not purifying.

A.—Perhaps the passage I think of is in the N.T.

B.—Let us find it by all means. The Gospels speak of the flood coming and taking all away:--

> "The flood came and destroyed them all" (Luke xvii. 27; see also Matt. xxiv. 38, 39).

There is no writer left now other than Peter:--

> "And spared not the old world, but saved Noah the eighth person . . . . . bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly" (II Pet. ii. 5).

The Flood did not purify its Victims.

A.—It appears that I have been misled in believing the flood had a purifying effect.

B.—Yes, and your other idea of the purifying effect of the second death vanishes with it.

A.—Perhaps the meaning was that the flood did not purify its victims, but the earth on which they lived.

B.—In that case the analogy does not serve your purpose. I would readily agree that the burning up of the elements was a purifying of the earth, but what you have been trying to prove is that it purified or preserved its victims. I believe with you that the flood foreshadows the lake of fire, and the inspired words are "destroy" and "curse", not "purify" and "vivify". Our chief purpose at the moment is the question, Does Scripture warrant a resurrection from the lake of fire? I believe you must agree that it does not.

A.—I am afraid I must. I am reluctant to give up the idea, for it is the last position left.

Who enter the Second Death?

B.—We have not time to go into details as to other phases of the subject, but I should like to ask you who they are which die the second death.

A.—I believe that everyone that appears before the awful light of the great white throne dies the second death.

B.—Will you read the literal translation of Rev. xx. 15?

A.—(Reads), "And if anyone was not found written in the book of life, he was cast into the lake of fire."

B.—Do you not see how intensely individual the words "if any one" are?

A.—Now that you point it out, I confess they do appear so.

The Book and the Books.

B.—The judgment here is twofold; one out of the books, the other out of the book; the books being a judgment of works, the book being a question of life and death. You have made two assumptions. First you have supposed that all who stand before the great white throne die the second death, and secondly, having plunged this vast multitude into the lake of fire, you have then entertained the unscriptural idea of a resurrection from it.

The book is called the book of life. According to your theory this would be a misnomer. If such eventually live, the book would be called by some more fitting title.

A.—Is it possible then that only very few will be cast into the second death?

Who will be cast into the Second Death?

B.—The question of the number of those who are thus judged hardly comes within the sphere of our enquiry, but I should not like you to draw a false conclusion from my remarks. While the words "if any one" are very individual, and set aside your idea that all who stand before the great white throne must necessarily be cast into the lake of fire, nevertheless Scripture gives a very comprehensive list of those who merit this awful doom:--

> "The fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolators, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death" (Rev. xxi. 8).

The Nature of the Second Death.

Returning to the nature of the second death, perhaps you would say what death is, apart from resurrection.

A.—Sleep.

B.—No; death can only be called sleep with resurrection in view. If there be no resurrection, Paul says that they which have fallen asleep in Christ have perished (I Cor. xv. 18). Throughout Scripture, fire is spoken of as a destroyer, and often the agricultural figure of a fire for burning up weeds is used. Your theory would suggest that the husbandman gathers the thistles and the weeds together to burn them, in the hope that by some weird alchemy such weeds shall be transmuted into vines, figs, olives or wheat. He may be misled by your doctrines, but he knows too much to believe such an application in practical things.

Summary.

Let us summarize our findings before parting:--

All Things.

When once we have seen that Scripture deals with two conflicting lines of purpose, we can then see that the words "all things" embrace all within the limits of the original purpose. Perhaps II Cor. v. 17, 18 expresses the relation of "all things" to God and the new creation as clearly as any passage:--

> "If any one be in Christ, there is a new creation; the old things have passed away; new things have come in; but the all things are of God, Who has reconciled us."

Scripture categorically declares that some things are "not of God" (I John iii. 8-12), and among them those things which are "of the Devil". Anyone therefore who teaches that the "all things" that are of God include the Devil and all his works is not only unscriptural , but anti-christian and must be rejected.

A Scriptural Principle of Interpretation.

There is no formal system of Divinity to be found in Scripture. The great principles of faith are taught in the recorded lives of men, and in the dealings of God with Israel. Israel's history furnishes a digest of the greater purpose of the ages. The words "all in Adam" are to be understood by the parallel words "all Israel", and inasmuch as they are not all Israel which are of Israel, so they are not all in Adam which are of Adam. In both cases there is in operation the law that sets aside "Ishmael" and reckons only such as are "in Isaac" as children of the promise and the true "seed".

The Present Interval of Bondage.

A comparison of Gen. xv. 5-16, Gal. iii. 15-18 and Eph. i. 3-14 reveals that underlying the purpose of the ages is a threefold development, viz.:--

(1). An unconditional promise . . .	The will of the FATHER.
(2). An interval of bondage . . .	The work of the SON.
(3). The promise fulfilled . . .	The witness of the SPIRIT.

The will of God shall be accomplished, but not without conflict. There is an enemy at work. And just as Israel's bondage in Egypt was connected with the iniquity of the Amorite, so the bondage of the true seed is connected with Satan and the mystery of iniquity. Israel enter into the inheritance held by the Amorites and exterminate them. The true seed will enter into their particular inheritance, and the seed of the wicked one, the names of whom not being in the book of life, will be destroyed.

The Two Seeds.

From the birth of Cain onward to the Giants of Noah's day, the Canaanite of Joshua's time, and the "tares" sown by the enemy, there has existed side by side with the true seed "the children of the wicked one". Not until these "tares" are bound in bundles and burned can the "righteous shine forth in the kingdom of their Father". The seed of the wicked one being "of the Devil" cannot be "of God" and are not included in the "all things" that make up the new creation.

#4. (concluded.). Summary.
pp. 173 - 175

The Kinsman-Redeemer.

Scripture reveals three outstanding features which are fundamental to a true conception of redemption:--

The redeemer must be next of kin.
The redemption touches (a) A forfeited inheritance, (b) Bondage.
The redeemer is also the avenger.

Heb. ii. 14, 15 reveals Christ as the great Kinsman-Redeemer ("flesh and blood, He likewise . . . . ."), exercising the twofold office of redeemer ("deliver . . . . . bondage"), and avenger ("destroy . . . . . the Devil"). The provision of the cities of refuge was not for a "murderer". Satan was a murderer from the beginning.

The Deity of the Redeemer is abundantly testified in the Old Testament. His humanity is necessitated by the demand of kinship, and both aspects of His person are found in "Immanuel", the child born who was nevertheless "the mighty God".

The Mystery of His Will.

God did not plan sin, but He provided against it. His original purpose is spoken of as His will; the provision against sin and death is spoken of as the "mystery of His will". It was the will of God that Israel should be "head and not tail", but upon their temporary failure the mystery of His will was put into operation, placing Nebuchadnezzar upon the throne, and giving dominion to the Gentiles until such time as "all Israel shall be saved".

We most emphatically repudiate the horrible teaching that God definitely planned sin, and that the Devil was deliberately designed to be "a devil", but we glory in the fact that in His matchless wisdom God has taken the wise in their own craftiness and overruled evil for good.

The Two Mysteries.

Two mysteries run through the ages, viz., the mystery of godliness, and the mystery of iniquity. Both have relation to claims of Deity. The satanic mystery finds its goal in the man of sin, the son of perdition, who sits in the temple of God, showing himself as God. The mystery of godliness finds its goal in the exaltation of the Son of man, the Son of God, with every knee bowing and every tongue confessing that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father. The one mystery ends in destruction and is called "the LIE", the other ends in glory and is called "the TRUTH". Scripture declares that "no lie is of the truth", and the workers of iniquity, who have even cast out demons in Christ's name, are repudiated by Him.

The Second Death.

It is an absolute necessity to the doctrine of Universal Reconciliation that there shall be a deliverance from the second death. We look in vain for the slightest hint of such a deliverance in the only book that specifically deals with it by name (the Revelation), but we are told that such doctrine is not within its scope. There is however, we are assured, one passage of Scripture which does definitely teach deliverance from the second death, and that is I Cor. xv. 26, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death". An examination of the chapter reveals that the only death that is in view is that brought in by Adam. This death is destroyed at the resurrection, as the amplification shows that "death is swallowed up in victory". The new heavens and the new earth follow immediately upon the casting of death into the lake of fire (Rev. xxi). This same sequence is found in II Pet. iii. where the new heavens, the new earth, and the day of God follow the burning up of the earth and its works, and the passing away of the heavens. The end, that God may be all in all, i.e., "the day of God", follows hard upon the destruction of the last enemy (I Cor. xv. 24-28). That last enemy is the death which came upon all men through one man's sin.

There is no room in any of these passages for the resurrection from the lake of fire. If there be no deliverance from the second death, there can be no such thing as universal reconciliation. Not one whose name is found written in the book of life enters the second death. Satan's seed, those who worship the beast and receive his mark, these we are distinctly told have not their names written in the book of life. Here is the final division of the two seeds. The "tares" are burned in the fire; the "wheat" are gathered into the barn. The very order is important. The tares are destroyed first. Those who teach a resurrection from the lake of fire at long last must either deny this order, teach that the burning of the tares changes them into wheat, or believe that the manifestation of the sons of God is indefinitely postponed.

Conclusion.

Universal reconciliation is an attractive doctrine. Its attractiveness is its bait and its snare. The "comfort" some receive from it is no more proof of its truth than is the "comfort" received from the traditional idea that our loved ones who have died are now consciously in glory. Doubtless "Christian Science" made the Bible a "new book" to many, but it is nevertheless a doctrine of demons. We have but one test for truth; it must stand four square with "all Scripture".

In the pages of this series we have sought to indicate what we believe is the truth of God. We have no personal quarrel with individuals, and apart from answering any legitimate questions that may arise out of this treatise we shall take no further notice of either the erroneous doctrine or any who propagate it. Because this particular error compromised our own stewardship we felt obliged to deal with it and show our own position. We trust nevertheless that the truth may be seen all the clearer for the moment of conflict.

To all to whom this witness makes its appeal as truth we earnestly commend this pamphlet, trusting that many will be able to use it in the fight of faith.

> "I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, and that NO LIE IS OF THE TRUTH" (I John ii. 21).

Redemption. New Series.

#1. Redemption, and its Place in the Purpose of the Ages.
pp. 17 - 19

It will be remembered that we pursued the theme of Redemption in the Scriptures up to a certain point, and then called a halt in order to give the necessary time for a wider survey of the purpose of the ages. This we felt to be necessary, as many parts of the great purpose of redemption can only be correctly understood in the light of the greater purpose of the ages.

Upon stepping back, so to speak, and obtaining a wider view, we realized that our investigations must take us back long before the fall of man in order to find the seat and cause of the trouble out of which we can be delivered only by redemption. In order to assist the reader, and to set the matter before the eye in something like order, we shall summarize our findings in this article, and then proceed in subsequent numbers to consider them more carefully and in detail.

1. THE GREAT CONFLICT.—Away behind the creation and fall of man is another creation and fall. This is indicated in the opening verses of Gen. i. The condition introduced in Gen. i. 2 as "tohu and bohu", "without form and void", is one of judgment upon sin. This of course awaits fuller investigation and proof, which it will receive in subsequent studies.

2. THE ADVERSARY.—In meeting the perplexity of the disciples at the apparent failure of their testimony to the near advent of the kingdom the Lord said, "an enemy hath done this". These words may be applied to the wider issue; and creation's groan and curse, Adam's sin and death, and all the misery and suffering that has filled this evil age, are all traceable back to the prince of this world, the god of this age, known as Satan, the Adversary. It will be among our earliest considerations to acquaint ourselves with the teaching of Scripture as to Satan and his activities.

3. THE CHERUBIM.—These symbolic creatures must be given their place likewise in our studies, and a link will be found between them and Satan, Adam, Israel and the coming restoration.

4. SOME QUESTIONS.—Certain features of Scripture cause questions to shape themselves. For example: it can be shown that the ultimate object of the purpose of the ages is the glory of God. We are conscious that should a mortal take as his object his own glory he would but cover himself with shame. The question comes then, How is it that the glory of God is so emphasized? Can it be that the great Adversary has, at least in intention, sullied that glory, and that one of the objects of the age purpose is to reinstate it in all its undimmed splendour?

Again. There are certain things associated with the revealed will of God which have to do with a kingdom, a throne, a crown. Has the throne of God been touched in this great fall? and is it the work of Christ to give that throne its rightful place again? The "end" or the "goal" is declared to be "that God may be all in all". It is evident that a negation of this blessed consummation is implied in such words as pride, disobedience, sin, sorrow, death. When was this blissful state first broken, and by whom? These are some of the questions we have to consider.

5. THE TWO SEEDS.—We believe that a due recognition of the two seeds in Scripture will solve the apparent contradiction which some find in such passages as those which speak of the "ransom for all", and those which speak of destruction and of not being found in the book of life.

6. THE ACTIONS OF CHRIST.—Many a word and act of Christ will be found to be of far greater import than can be appreciated while we do not perceive the mighty sweep of the age purpose. We have already realized what light dispensational truth throws upon the words and acts of Christ. May we not expect to see greater fulness and intention when we see them in the light of the aionian purpose? We are confident that we shall.

7. GOD.—One of the most stupendous results of this wider view will be connected with God Himself. Such passages as I Tim. vi. 15, 16 will mean a great deal more to us when we appreciates what the effect of the great fall and its consequent darkness and confusion has had upon the manifestation of God, and conversely what effect, glorious beyond words, the restoring of all things to their original perfection will have upon the interrelationship of God and His creatures, when all mediation fulfils its office and departs leaving "God all in all".

These seven features will not be compressed into seven articles, neither can we bind ourselves in any slavish manner to pursue them in a fixed order. They are given as an indication of the general drift of our studies together, but we hold ourselves free to follow the light of truth into ways and paths unknown to ourselves at the time of commencement.

#2. Tohu and Bohu.
pp. 59 - 62

Scripture opens with the words:--

> "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Gen. i. 1).

The Hebrew sentence contains seven words and twenty-eight letters. To the student of Scripture acquainted both with the Scripture symbolism of numbers and also with Bible Numerics this simple fact will speak with no uncertainty. Seven stands for spiritual perfection. Strange as it may at first appear, the whole of Scripture appears to be divided into three parts, the first part being compressed into one verse (Gen. i. 1), the second part spreading out over the remainder of Genesis and the rest of the Bible up to Rev. xx., and the third portion being the first five verses of Rev. xxi. where the new heaven and new earth appear. This threefold division is found in II Pet. iii. 5-10. Rotherham translates verses 5 and 6 thus:--

> "For this they willfully forget, that there were heavens from of old, and an earth on account of water and by means of water compacted by God's word, by which means the world that then was, with water being flooded, perished."

This passage takes us back to Gen. i. 2. We again quote Rotherham's version:--

> "Now the earth had become waste and wild, and darkness was on the face of the roaring deep, but the Spirit of God was brooding on the face of the waters."

The words which Rotherham translates "waste and wild" the A.V. renders "without form and void". The Hebrew words are tohu va bohu. These two words, at the threshold of the ages, imply the need for redemption and explain in some measure its character. While the words tohu and bohu occur separately in several places, they occur together in but two other passages. Before turning to these two passages however we will obtain positive testimony to the relation of Gen. i. 2 with verse 1. In other words, we will allow Scripture to determine for us whether Gen. i. 1, 2 teaches that by a long process of evolution cosmos emerged out of chaos, or that after the primal creation came an overthrow out of which by Divine creative power the present order was made.

Isa. xlv. 18 records the words of God Himself on the subject. Who should know better as to the question of creation than "The Lord that created the heavens"? or "God Himself that formed the earth and made it"? or "He that hath established it"? This is what He declares: "He created it NOT TOHU". That statement settles the meaning of Gen. i. 2. It became so. We shall have occasion to return to this passage for other facts presently, but we first of all seek the illumination that comes from the two occurrences of tohu and bohu together. The first occurrence is Isa. xxxiv. 11. Let us observe the context. The nations are addressed in the opening verse, and are told that > "The indignation of the Lord is upon all nations, and His fury upon all their armies: He hath devoted them to destruction. He hath delivered them to the slaughter" (verse 2).

The prophetic vision moves on to the day of the Lord, when > "All the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall roll together as a scroll; and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig tree" (verse 4).

The LXX translates "And all the powers of the heavens shall melt". Matt. xxiv. 29 refers to the same period, as does also Rev. vi. 13, 14. Isa. xxxiv. 8 definitely fixes the time:--

> "For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion."

Then after speaking of such evidences of destruction and desolation as streams turned into pitch, and the dust into brimstone, the land burned with unquenchable fire, lying waste, and possessed by cormorant and the bittern, the owl and the raven, the passage continues:--

> "And He shall stretch upon it the line of confusion (tohu), and the plummet of emptiness (bohu)" (verse 11).

It is evident from the context that the terms tohu and bohu will describe the end of this present system even as they did the ending of the earlier creation. The third occurrence of the words tohu and bohu together is found in Jer. iv. While Isa. xxxiv. speaks of God's controversy with the nations, Jer. iv. treats of God's dealing with Israel. Evil is pronounced against Israel.

> "I will bring evil from the north, and a great destruction. The lion is come up from his thicket, and the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way; he is gone forth from his place to make thy land desolate; and the cities shall be laid waste, without inhabitant" (iv. 6, 7).

Jeremiah's prophecy of coming desolation plunges him into intense grief:--

> "I cannot hold my peace, because thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war. Destruction upon destruction is cried, for the whole land is spoiled" (iv. 19, 20).

Then comes the reference back to Gen. i. 2 to express the character of this great overthrow:--

> "I BEHELD—
>
> The earth, and lo! it was without form, and void (tohu va bohu), and the heavens, and they had no light.
>
>
> The mountains, and lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly.
>
> I BEHELD—
>
> And lo, there was no man, and all the birds of the heavens were fled.
>
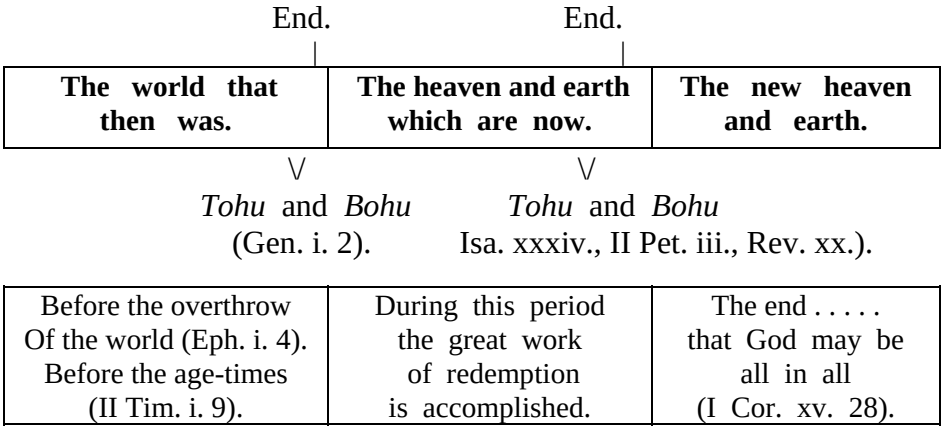
> And lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down at the presence of the Lord, and by His fierce anger" (Jer. iv. 23-26).

It is clear from the usage of tohu and bohu in these two passages, that Gen. i. 2 indicates severe judgment and desolation. The coal we this day burn, the metals we this day refine, the fossils we this day discover, look back beyond Gen. i. 2 for the time of their creation. Scripture teaches that the ages were made by Christ, that the present heaven and earth were made by Christ, and in Gen. i. 2 to ii. 3 we see the erection of this great platform upon which the purpose of the ages should be wrought out, and redemption's gracious work fully accomplished. Summarizing therefore we find:--



#3. Satan.

pp. 81 - 83

Our study together in the preceding paper of this series led us to see that the condition of things indicated by Gen. i. 2 was that of judgment falling upon sin. Now it is evident that the sin which drew down this deluge, more terrific than that of Noah's day, was not the sin of Adam nor his sons, for man had not then been created. The third chapter of Genesis, however, introduces into the garden planted by the Lord the serpent. This serpent is already sinful, for he questions the commandment of God, suggests that God is acting unfairly to His creatures, and in place of God's fair truth puts his own lies. There is no doubt as to the identity of this serpent. Rev. xii. 9 speaks of the dragon as "That old serpent, called the Devil (in Greek N.T.), and Satan (in Hebrew O.T.)". So also in Rev. xx. 2.

It is not our intention to stay long at Gen. iii., for we believe that we shall understand that chapter better when we learn from other parts of Scripture something more concerning the great tempter. We wish, however, to note one or two features to carry with us for comparison and illumination.

1. The chapter opens with "the serpent" and closes with "the cherubim". Both are supernatural beings. Both are animal forms related to higher spiritual powers.

2. The serpent is associated with loss of the tree of life, whereas the cherubim are connected with its safe custody. This is an item that speaks of redemption.

3. The sentence pronounced upon the serpent is immediately followed by the promise of the coming seed, which, as we have seen, includes both Christ and His people (see Volume VII, page 132).

4. The bait in the temptation is expressed in the words of verses 4, 5:--

> "Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as GOD (Heb. Elohim, as in Gen. i.) knowing good and evil" (see verses 22).

We have therefore to remember the serpent and his association with the cherubim, the serpent and his association with the seed, and the serpent and his temptation, "ye shall be as God".

There are in various parts of Scripture definite statements as to Satan, and these we must collate and examine, but there is one figurative passage which seems to demand attention first, and that is found in Ezek. xxviii. There is no philosophy of God in Scripture. Figurative expressions abound and these are understandable. To attempt to define and understand God in the language of logic and philosophy is to attempt the impossible. Philosophy ministers to the pride of man, and produces a god that comes within the limits of human definitions. The Scriptures nowhere present a philosophy of God. He is, and His relationships are set forth in type and symbol for our faith.* So with regard to Satan. As the god of this age, the prince of this world, the prince of the power of the air, he moves in spheres and exercises powers that go beyond human understanding and reasoning. Therefore the figure and the symbol are used so that we may learn what is possible in our present condition.

In Ezek. xxviii. two personages are addressed, the prince of Tyre, and the king of Tyre. It is the king of Tyre that, we believe, sets forth the position and fall of Satan, but so closely parallel are the character and fortunes of this great king with those of literal kings and nations of the earth, that we must approach the higher by way of the lower and observe the points of repetition and resemblance. Chapters xxv. to xxxii. are taken up with prophecies against various peoples. Summarizing we have the chief points as follow:--

[NOTE: * - For a fuller outworking of this thought, see "The Spirit of Hebrew Poetry" by Isaac Taylor.]

xxv. 1.7.	Ammon.	Reason.—They said "Aha, against the Lord's sanctuary when it was profaned", etc.
xxv. 8-11.	Moab and Seir.	Reason.—They said "The house of Judah is like unto the heathen".
xxv. 12-14.	Edom.	Reason.—They took vengeance upon Judah.
xxv. 15-17.	Philistines.	Reason.—They dealt by revenge for the enmity of age-past times.

Following these somewhat brief denunciations comes the fuller one against Tyre, occupying chapters xxvi. and xxvii. Tyre had said against Jerusalem:--

> "Aha, she is broken that was the gates of the people: she is turned unto me. I shall be replenished, now she is laid waste" (xxvi. 2).

The doom of Tyre is given in the dreadful words of xxvi. 19-21:--

> "For thus saith my Lord, Jehovah,
> When I make thee a desolate city,
> Like cities which cannot be welt in—
> When I bring up over thee the roaring deep
> And the mighty waters cover thee (cf. Gen. i. 2)
> Then will I bring thee down with them that go down into the pit,
> Unto the people of age-past times,
> And cause thee to dwell in the earth below,
> Among the desolations from age-past times
> With them that go down into the pit,
> That thou mayest not be dwelt in—
> Nor yet arise in the land of the living.
> A terror will I make thee
> And thou shall not be:
> And though thou be sought for > Thou shalt not be found any more
> To times age-abiding
> Is the oracle of my lord, Jehovah."

Following this pronouncement comes the dirge or lamentation over Tyre. This occupies the whole of chapter xxviii. We draw attention to the following features which are to be kept in view as we examine the passage dealing with Satan under the figure of the king of Tyre:--

> TYRE'S BOAST—"I am the perfection of beauty" (verses 3, 4, 11).
> TYRE'S TRAFFIC—Tarshish, Javan, Tubal, Meshach and many other countries "were thy merchants (verses 12-25).
> TYRE'S DOOM—"Thou shalt be a terror, and shalt not be unto times age-abiding" (verse 36).

Chapter xxviii. is occupied first with the pride and downfall of the prince of Tyre, and then with the pride and downfall of his master, Satan. We must take up this chapter therefore in our next article, hoping that the reader will keep in mind the ground we have already covered and the items noted.

Studies in the Book of the Revelation.

#56. Judgment on High Ones, etc. (xix. 17 - xx. 3).
pp. 27 - 30

> "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord will punish the host of the high ones on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth" (Isa. xxiv. 21).

For the purpose of redemption the Lord Jesus Christ became a man of "sorrows"; "He was crucified through weakness." He knew what it was to be despised, to suffer hunger, to thirst, to be the butt of His enemies, "as a lamb before his shearers is dumb". That phase, praise God, is over. The humiliation, the weakness, the cross, with their fruit of grace and peace, are finished. He has ascended to the right hand of God, there to wait until iniquity reaches its full measure.

> "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou at my right hand, until I make Thine enemies Thy footstool. The Lord at Thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of His wrath. He shall judge among the nations, He shall fill the places with the dead bodies; He shall shatter the head over a land far extended" (Psa. cx.).

When the Lord comes again the second time it will be for a dual purpose. This dual purpose is expressed in Isa. lxiii. 4:--

(1) The day of vengeance is in My heart.
(2) The year of My redeemed is come.

The coming of the Lord will bring about the restitution of all things that have been spoken by the prophets, and will also bring about the destruction of every opposing force, that the purpose of the ages may be brought to a glorious conclusion. In the passage before us we have these two elements together. He comes not to redeem, but to claim the fruit of redemption and to punish the high ones that are on high. No gospel is preached to the gathered armies of the beast, the Rider on the white horse rides forth to judge and to make war. Under the sixth seal this second coming is spoken of as:--

> "The wrath of the Lamb, for the great day of His wrath is come" (Rev. vi. 16, 17).

Under the sixth vial this awful period is said to be:--

> "The battle of that great day of God Almighty" (Rev. xvi. 14).

The angel who stands in the sun calls upon the fowls of heaven to participate in:--

> The great supper of God" (Rev. xix. 17).

We are not told in Rev. xix. how the beast and false prophet gather this huge army together, nor where the gathering ground will be. This has been explained in earlier chapters. We learn from chapter xvi. 13, 14 that there go forth from the mouth of the dragon, the beast and the false prophet three unclean spirits of demons, who have the power to substantiate their message with "signs following", for they work miracles. These unclean emissaries go forth unto the kings of the whole habitable world to gather them together in a place called Armageddon. We are not told in chapter xix. how the Lord will come, and what the effect of His appearing will have upon this host. This we learn in chapter vi. 12-14:--

> "Lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. And the heavens departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places."

These are the accompaniments of the second coming, as the Lord said in Matt. xxiv. 29-31; only in that prophecy the other feature, namely, "the year of the redeemed", is uppermost. The effects of these appalling sights upon the kings of the earth and their armies are only faintly realized as we hear them, in the words of prophecy, calling on the mountains and rocks to hide them from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. In Rev. xix. 20 we read:--

> "And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him . . . . . These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone."

Here is fulfilled Psa. cx. 6 which says, "He shall shatter the head over a land far extended", for the beast exercised dominion over the kings of the whole habitable world. The summoning of the fowls of heaven to eat the flesh of kings, and captains, of mighty men, of horse and rider, of free and bond, small and great, fulfils two other statements in the same Psalm, viz.:--

> "He shall fill the places with the dead bodies" (verse 6), and "He shall strike through kings in the day of His wrath" (verse 5).

The scriptural descriptions of the beast show that he is the master stroke of Satan, and that he rules in Satan's name and in Satan's interest (see Rev. xii.). The dragon does not figure in the record before us; it is the beast and the false prophet who are cast into the lake of fire. Immediately following the judgment of the beast we read of the binding of Satan. An angel is seen descending from the heavens having the key of the abyss and also a great chain.

> "And he laid hold of the dragon, that ancient serpent, which is the Devil (Greek), and Satan (Hebrew), and bound him for a thousand years" (Rev. xx. 2).

The thousand year reign of Christ will not be the final and perfect kingdom; it will be preparatory, and in some ways a period of judgment and restraint. The beast and the false prophet will never again work their deceptive ways among men. Satan will be bound for the whole period. Outside temptation will be removed, but because of the nature of the Millennial* kingdom Satan is not cast into the lake of fire until after this kingdom has finished, as he is to be given a little season as a final test both for himself and for the nations of the earth. Of this we shall learn more in its place.

In this article we have seen the short sharp work of judgment that falls before the kingdom can be set up. We are mindful that our salvation is by grace, and that vengeance belongs to the Lord. It is however a comfort to know that these awful leaders of such high handed rebellion are not to go on for ever. The day of the Lord is said to come as a "destruction from the Almighty", and it is said that "He shall destroy the sinners out of it". Then the Lord shall cause to cease the arrogance of the proud and the loftiness of tyrants (Isa. xiii. 6-13). It is evident that all things that offend shall be gathered out before the righteous can shine in the kingdom of their Father.

[NOTE: * - A millennium simply means "a thousand", cf. millimeter, millipede, etc. There is no special sanctity about the word.]

#57. The Millennium; its Character (xx. 4-6).
pp. 56 - 59

The word millennium simply means "a thousand", and the millennial reign of Christ is that reign which lasts a thousand years. The millennial reign is bounded at its two extremes by a series of events which indicate the peculiar character of that kingdom.

At the beginning.	At the close.
1. Satan bound for 1000 years.	1. Satan loosed when 1000 years finish.
2. Nations deceived no more until 1000 years finish.	2. Nations deceived after 1000 years finish.
3. Thrones and judgment given to saints.	3. The camp of the saints encompassed.
4. The first resurrection. Priests of God and of Christ.	4. The resurrection of the rest of the dead.

When we read the writings of men on prophecy we are liable to be carried away by their descriptions of this kingdom, and to ascribe much of the blessedness and glory that belong to a later period to this one of the 1000 years. Coming to the Revelation itself with all the high hopes implanted by conferences and prophetic literature, the reader is apt to feel somewhat disappointed. Here in Rev. xx. is no glowing description of that kingdom, no details of its blessedness or its beauty. Satan is bound certainly, but the very verse that tells us so goes straight on to say

> "After that he must be loosed a little season" (Rev. xx. 4).

The millennium ends exactly as every other dispensation has ended, i.e., in failure. This one fact enables us to see that instead of understanding this kingdom to be the beginning of the Lord's work of power and glory, it is to be understood rather as the last of His dealings with men. The millennial kingdom finds its basis in the words of Exod. xix. 3-6:--

> "Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob, and tell the children of Israel: Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought > you unto Myself. Now therefore if ye will obey My voice indeed, and keep My covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto Me above all people: for all the earth is Mine. And ye shall be unto Me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation."

The special features of this basic passage are:--

1. Israel separated from all the nations.
2. Israel a peculiar treasure.
3. Israel a "royal priesthood".
4. The conditions are obedience and keeping the covenant.
5. The words "for all the earth is Mine" suggest that this special favour is shown to Israel with a view to the blessing of the nations.

Israel utterly failed to fulfil the conditions, and instead of being a blessing in the earth, they became a curse.

The prophet Malachi speaks of a remnant of faithful ones who feared the Lord in days of apostasy, and of such the Lord said:--

> "They shall be Mine . . . . . in that day when I make up My peculiar treasure . . . . . then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth Him not" (Mal. iii. 17, 18).

If we look back to chapter ii. of this prophet we shall find that the great controversy is concerning the failure of the priests. The Lord says that, as a result of their failure, their very blessings shall be cursed. Special emphasis is placed upon the fact that they had "corrupted the covenant" (ii. 8), and that they had not preserved their peculiar separateness unto the Lord (ii. 11, 12).

The apostle Peter forges another link between Israel and the millennium. To the dispersed of Israel that were looking for salvation ready to be revealed in the last time, who had been redeemed from the vain conversation received by tradition from their fathers, the apostle addresses the words:--

> "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices . . . . . Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people" (I Pet. ii. 5, 9).

The whole atmosphere of this epistle is that of suffering in view of glory. This is seen to be the same in Rev. xx. First, however, let us see Rev. i. 5, 6:--

> "Unto Him that loved us, and loosed us from our sins by His blood, and hath made us a kingdom of priests unto God and His Father."

Here we find that the royal priesthood is composed not of those who obeyed and kept the covenant, but of those who have been redeemed. In harmony with this is the song of the four living creatures and the twenty-four elders:--

> "Thou wast slain, and didst purchase a people for God by Thy blood out of every tribe and tongue and people and nation, and didst make them to our God a kingdom and priests, and they reign over the earth" (Rev. v. 9, 10).

Coming now to Rev. xx. 4 we learn further details concerning those who constitute the first resurrection and the royal priesthood:--

> "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them, and the souls of them that had been beheaded because of the testimony of Jesus, and because of the Word of God, and whosoever had not worshipped the Beast, nor yet his image, and did not receive his mark on their foreheads and on their hands, both lived again and reigned with Christ a thousand years."

These are essentially the overcomers of the Apocalypse. That such do not exclude others of like precious faith we may learn from Matt. xix. 27, 28:--

> "We have forsaken all, and followed Thee: what shall we have therefore? And Jesus said unto them, 'Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed Me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of His glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel'."

Or we may remember chapter vi. where we read of those who had been slain for the Word of God, to whom white robes were given, and the information that they were to rest a little season until their fellow-servants should be killed even as they had been (vi. 9-11). In Rev. xx. there is an evident reference to the great prophecy of Dan. vii., as we can see when we come to compare the passages together.

Daniel vii.	Revelation i. and xx.
"I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven" (13).	"Behold, He cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see Him" (i. 7).
"I beheld till the thrones were set . . . . . the judgment was set" (9).	"I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat on it" (xx. 11).
"The books were opened" (10).	"The books were opened" (xx. 12).
"And judgment was given to the saints of the Most High" (22).	"And judgment was given unto them" (xx. 4).
"And the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom. And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High" (22-27).	"And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. This is the first resurrection. They shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years" (xx. 4-6).

There are several other items of importance we must consider together before we can come to a true conclusion as to the character of the millennium; these we must reserve for another article. In this one we have seen:--

1. That the millennial kingdom ends in revolt and is therefore like all preceding dispensations.
2. It is the fulfillment of the promises originally made at Sinai unto all Israel.
3. It is administered by those who have "overcome".
4. Israel's position in this kingdom is that of a nation of priests for the nations outside.

#58. Millennial Failure and Foreshadowing (xx. 4-6).
pp. 97 - 101

When we think of the millennium, we usually think of that condition of peace that is intimated in the words:--

> "The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock" (Isa. lxv. 25).

It is a mistake however to assume that such is said to be the condition of things all over the earth at that time. Both Isa. lxv. and Isa. xi. add these important words:--

> "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountain."

"In all My holy mountain" is not the same in extent as all the earth, and this passage is one of many that indicate the peculiar position of Israel in the millennium. Another passage of similar import is Isa. lx. 1, 2:--

> "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon THEE. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the EARTH, and gross darkness the PEOPLES, but the Lord shall arise upon THEE, and His glory shall be seen upon THEE."

There is the greatest difference indicated between the nation of Israel and the nations during this kingdom.

> "The sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee . . . . . The nation and the kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish: yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted" (Isa. lx. 10-12).
>
> "Strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your plowmen and your vine dressers. But ye shall called the PRIESTS OF THE LORD; men shall call you the MINISTERS OF OUR GOD" (Isa. lxi. 5, 6).

Israel are here seen in their position as the royal priesthood, and the surrounding nations as their servants. It was one of the great duties of the priests to teach:--

> "For the priest's lips should keep knowledge; and they should seek the law at his mouth" (Mal. ii. 7; see also Lev. x. 11), and therefore when the millennial kingdom is set up we find that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be set up as the head of the mountains, and to this centre all the nations shall "stream" and shall say:--

> "Let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths; for out of ZION shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from JERUSALEM" (Isa. ii. 3).

The R.V. margin of Psa. lxxii. 10 reads:--

"The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall render tribute."

Turning to Isa. xxv. we may notice some further limitations that may at first surprise us. A feast is to be made unto all peoples, but it is to be held "in this mountain" (verse 6). The veil that is cast over all the peoples and which is spread over all nations is to be done away, but once again it is "in this mountain" (verse 7). In the same context we have these two opposite thoughts:--

"He will swallow up death in victory" (verse 8).
"Moab shall be trodden down, or threshed, even as straw is threshed under the wheels of the threshing cart" (verse 10).

This threshing of Moab is connected with the mountain of the Lord, for it reads:--

"For in this mountain shall the hand of the Lord rest, and Moab shall be threshed, etc."

When the desert blossoms as the rose, when the eyes of the blind see, and the ears of the deaf hear, when the ransomed of the Lord return to Zion, Isa. xxxv., the same chapter says:--

"Behold, your God will come with vengeance" (verse 4).

We must therefore be prepared to find in the millennial kingdom the execution of judgment. Not only so, but Scripture reveals that there will be sin in that kingdom, and death as a consequence; in other words, the king who shall reign will "Rule them with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel" (Psa. ii. 9).

That this is characteristic of millennial rule is seen by comparing Rev. ii. 27, xii. 5 and xix. 15:--

"To him that overcometh . . . . . will I give power over the nations and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessel of a potter shall they be broken to shivers; even as I received of My Father" (Rev. ii. 27).

Psa. cx. which speaks also of that day reveals the Lord ruling in the midst of enemies, judging among the nations, and filling the places with dead bodies! Strange symbols of peace!! The Oxford Gesenius renders verse 3:--

"Thy people will be (all) voluntariness in the day of Thy host."

In marked contrast with Israel will be the feigned and constrained obedience of the nations. The marginal reading of Psa. xviii. 44 is:--

"The sons of the stranger shall yield feigned obedience unto Me."

So again in Psa. lxvi. 3 and lxxxi. 15. The character of this kingdom is moreover manifested by turning to the R.V. margin of Dan. ix. 24--"To restrain transgression". This idea of restraint is seen in the fact that during this period Satan will be bound, but not destroyed. Psa. xxi. 1-13; xlviii. 4-7; lxvi. 7; lxviii. 21; lxxii. 9-14; and xcvii. 1-7 seem to speak of that kingdom and the presence therein of evil-doers. Psa. ci. 8 reads, "I will early destroy all the wicked of the land". The word "early" is rendered by Rotherham "morning by morning" and indicates summary judgment upon offenders. Psa. cxlix. calls upon Israel to rejoice, and the children of Zion to be joyful in their king. The Psalm is evidently millennial:--

> "Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hand. To execute vengeance upon the nations, and punishments upon the people. To bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron. To execute upon them the judgment written, this honour have all His saints. Hallelujah" (Psa. cxlix. 6-9).

Here once again we see the "iron rod" in action. It is evident from Zech. xiv. 16-19 that throughout the millennium, and not merely at the commencement, judgment will fall upon disobedience. The two last verses of Isaiah bring before us a dual picture—"all flesh" shall come to worship before the Lord, and they shall also look upon the carcasses of transgressors (presumably in the valley called Gahanna), and they shall be an abhorring unto "all flesh". Death, if it occur, in the millennium will be the direct result of personal sin. This seems to be the meaning of Isa. lxv. 20. The A.V. reads thus:--

> "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days, for the child shall die an hundred years old, but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed."

Rotherham translates the passage:--

> "But a youth a hundred years old may die, yea, a sinner a hundred years old shall be accursed," the suggestion being that for one to die in that kingdom, even at the age of a hundred years, would be to die young, and that such a death would be the direct outcome of sin.

The millennial kingdom is not the glorious reign of Christ that ushers in the consummation. The millennium is rather man's most favoured opportunity and most signal failure. The conditions are even more favourable than those of Eden in some respects. For here no outside tempter can enter, Satan being bound for the whole period, yet revolt spreads rapidly as soon as Satan is let loose.

The millennial kingdom is Israel's sphere of blessedness wherein all the promises related to them as a peculiar people to the Lord shall be fulfilled. The millennium foreshadows the perfect kingdom. What will take place over the breadth of the earth after the millennium takes place during the thousand years in Israel's land only. One nation, Israel, shall be "born at a stroke" (Isa. lxvi. 8). One people, Israel, "shall be righteous" (Isa. lx. 21), and the days of their mourning shall be ended. But the ends of the earth will slowly learn the lesson. A brighter and a better day succeeds the thousand-year reign of Christ and His people. The royal priesthood will have accomplished its purpose. Through this chosen "seed" shall all the families of the earth have been blessed; many will join themselves to the Lord, and come under the promise:-- for the Lord's house shall be called a house of prayer for all peoples. The law at Sinai and the nation of Israel afterwards were under the delegated authority of angels, but the "world to come" has not been submitted to angels, but to the saints, particularly those of "the seed of Abraham" (Heb. ii.), which embraces all those of like precious faith. This kingdom is the last manifestation of the failure of delegated rule.

> "The sons of the stranger that join themselves to the Lord . . . . . even them will I bring to My holy mountain" (Isa. lvi. 6, 7).

The kingdom of the Son is marked by the subjection of all rule and authority. He shews Who is that blessed and only Potentate, and at the close of that rule and that rule alone we reach perfection and the goal of the ages. All down the age has been heard the murmuring challenge of the sovereignty vested only in Christ. Israel failed to hold that sceptre; the Gentiles failed too. Adam in Eden, and man in the millennial kingdom, equally fail. Every age and dispensation converges upon one thought, every knee shall bow at last to one Lord, every tongue will confess but one Name, Rev. v. shall be repeated upon a grander scale:--

> "Who is worthy? . . . . . no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth . . . . . was found worthy . . . . ." (verses 2-4).
>
> "And they sung a new song, saying 'THOU art worthy'." (verse 9).

#10. Can two Dispensations run together?

pp. 4 - 6

A.--In talking over the question of membership of the one body with other believers, one of them suggested the possibility of two dispensations running together at the same time. This I said was absurd, but thought I would see you about it.

B.--What makes you think it absurd?

A.--Well, you might as well say that April and May can run together as to say that two dispensations can run at the same time.

B.--I wonder whether your difficulty arises out of the meaning of the word "dispensation". Do you take the word to indicate a period of time?

A.--Yes, just the same as an age.

B.--That is where you are mistaken. Even an age indicates something more than a period of time, although the time sense is strong, but a dispensation is much further removed from a time sense than an age. Turn to Luke xvi. and let us consider the first occurrence of the word in the N.T.

A.--(Reading the first few verses). I see something here about a rich man and a steward, and the necessity to render an account of his stewardship, but I have not come across the word "dispensation" yet.

B.--The word translated "stewardship" is exactly the same as that rendered "dispensation" in I Cor. ix. 17; Eph. i. 10; iii. 2, 9 (R.V.); Col. i. 25, and can be rendered in all cases by the word "administration". The Greek word is oikonomia, and appears in English as economy, which in its primary sense refers to administration either in politics or in domestic affairs.

Turn now to Gal. ii. 7, 9. There you have Peter and Paul. The leaders at Jerusalem recognized that Paul had been entrusted with the gospel of the uncircumcision, and that Peter had been entrusted with the gospel of the circumcision, and that one was right in going to the heathen and the other equally right in limiting himself to the circumcision. So that it appears in this case that two stewardships connected with two sets of good news, addressed to two divisions of the human race, were in operation at one and the same time.

A.--If that is the meaning of the word dispensation, then I must admit the possibility.

B.--When God gave the law of Sinai to Israel, that nation were under the dispensation of law. The nations of the earth were under the dispensation of conscience and creation; that is another illustration of the same principle. See Rom. i. 18 - ii. 29; Acts xvii. 25-28; xiv. 17.

A.--If I admit the possibility of two dispensations running together, I shall have to reconsider another item about which I have expressed myself rather strongly.

B.--What is that, if I may ask?

A.--It is a question of the membership of the church of the one body, but I think I will leave that for another time.

B.--By all means, only let your love for truth outweigh any feeling you may have in the matter. Better to confess error a thousand times than through foolish pride entertain untruth to one's own spiritual hurt.

A.--Thanks for your help. The greatest difficulty we seem to have is the necessity to unlearn.

#11. Membership of the One Body.
pp. 19 - 21

A.--I believe you teach that the Church of the One Body did not come into being until after Acts xxviii.?

B.--To be exact, I believe that the Church of the One Body did not come into being until after the all-day conference recorded in Acts xxviii. 23-28, and during the two whole years of Paul's detention at Rome, when the three "In prison epistles" were written.

A.--Does that mean that membership of the One Body depends upon Paul's imprisonment? or upon the acceptance of some particular truth? If that is what you teach I certainly cannot bring myself to believe it.

B.--If you turn to the opening chapter of Ephesians you will find that every single member of the One Body is an elected person, having been "chosen in Christ before the foundation (or preferably 'overthrow') of the world". So that in the first instance, membership of the One Body depends neither upon Paul's imprisonment nor upon the acceptance of the truth, but solely upon the purpose and will of God. Further, I think you must make a distinction between salvation and position.

A.--Just what do you mean by that?

B.--The basis of the salvation for the Church of the One Body was laid before Acts xxviii., and is found in the epistle to the Romans, particularly in chapters v.-viii., but although all believers both pre- and post-Acts are saved with the same salvation, it does not follow that they are all destined for the same position. During Paul's earlier ministry the position of the Gentile believer could be expressed by the words, "Blessed with faithful Abraham". After Acts xxviii. the name of Abraham never occurs in Paul's writings. The believer after that, as a member of the One Body, while still saved with the same salvation as Abraham (Rom. iv., Gal. iii.), is chosen to a different destiny which can only be expressed by the words, "With Christ in the heavenly places, far above all principality, etc."

Then, further, we have no warrant to teach that every believer at the present day is necessarily a member of the Church of the One Body. The great bulk of Christians are ignorant of the revelation of the mystery. They do not believe the truth for which the apostle suffered, they do not entertain its hope, they do not endure anything for its doctrine. In all dispensations it has been true, "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God".

A.--Yet this seems to make acceptance of the truth the basis of membership.

B.--Scripture says, "It pleased God through the foolishness of the preaching to save them that believe", and at the same time says, "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed". You might just as well bring your objections against these Scriptures as against the teaching concerning the One Body. Every member of the One Body will hear and believe the truth, yet every member of the One Body is, nevertheless, as much "ordained" to that membership as were those who were "ordained to eternal life".

A.--You mean, then, that seeing it is within the bounds of possibility that two dispensations may run together at the same time, it also is a possibility that all Christians are not necessarily members of one elect company and that there are "Kingdom" believers to-day as well as "Church" believers, and that the Church of the One Body may be termed "An election within an election".

B.--Yes, and further, instead of adopting the attitude that Christians who do not see with us in these things must necessarily be wrong, we believe that our responsibility ends with the presentation of the truth, and that according to whether the one who hears has been chosen to membership of the One Body or not, so will his response be.

A.--That explanation accounts for the very obvious difference that I found between your attitude toward differing believers and their attitude toward you. The spirit of condemnation and bitterness would certainly not be so manifest if all Christians saw the truth from that standpoint. I do not pretend to accept your teaching yet, but I do most certainly appreciate the spirit that it produces.

B.--Think the subject over, and let us talk it over again.

#12. Heavenly Places.
pp. 41 - 44

A.--I believe you teach that the sphere of blessing peculiar to the church of the one body, viz., "heavenly places", is something distinct.

B.--That is so. I believe we can truthfully say that it is "far above all".

A.--Well. I have been told by those who know, that precisely the same Greek word that is used in Eph. i. 3, is used in Matthew, John, I Corinthians and Hebrews, and therefore that you have been carried away by zeal that is not according to knowledge in teaching that the heavenly places of Ephesians indicate a position distinct from, and superior to, that of the church as revealed in the Gospels or Hebrews.

B.--We will not be too much concerned about the opinions of those "who know", for Gal. ii. reveals that such at times have to be set aside. We are however concerned about the truth, and therefore we will "search and see".

A.--The word is, I believe, epouranios.

B.--Yes, it is a compound word made up of epi, meaning over, above, or upon, and ouranos, meaning heaven.

A.--It is used in Matt. xviii. 35 in the phrase, "My heavenly Father" (though some texts read ouranos) and in John iii. 12 of "heavenly things". In I Cor. xv. 40, 48 and 49 it is used five times, where Paul speaks of "celestial bodies" and their glory, and of some who are "heavenly" and who shall "bear the image of the heavenly".

Heb. iii. 1	speaks of those who are "partakers of the heavenly calling".
Heb. vi. 4	speaks of those who had "tasted the heavenly gift".
Heb. viii. 5	speaks of the "shadows of heavenly things".
Heb. ix. 23	speaks of the "cleansing of heavenly things".
Heb. xi. 16	speaks of a "heavenly country", and
Heb. xii. 22	speaks of the "heavenly Jerusalem".

B.--It does my heart good to see this earnest search, and to listen to this presentation of the occurrences of the word. The concordance can be one of your greatest servants, but you must not think that a mere accumulation of texts of itself constitutes an argument. I should like to hear what you learn from these passages that makes the teaching advanced concerning the one body to be untenable.

A.--Well, you have very definitely taught two things, viz.:--

(1). The church of Ephesians is blessed in a sphere called the super-heavenlies, and is distinct from all other companies of the redeemed: and
(2). That those addressed in the epistle to the Hebrews are to be distinguished from the church of Ephesians, and that their hope does not place them so high as does the hope of the one body.

Now seeing that the Hebrews were partakers of a heavenly calling, and looked for a heavenly Jerusalem, it seems as though your distinction falls to the ground.

B.--Let us see. My contention is that the heavenly places of Ephesians are unique; yours is that they are one and the same with those of Hebrews. Tell me, did those Hebrews, who had tasted of the heavenly gift and who were in danger of falling away, ascend up to heaven in order to taste it?

A.--Certainly not, they tasted the gift which had been sent down from heaven.

B.--Will the heavenly Jerusalem remain where it is now, in heaven?

A.--Well, now you mention it, I suppose not.

B.--We will have no suppositions, please read Rev. xxi. 10.

A.--"He . . . . . showed me the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God."

B.--These two passages must therefore decide the "heavenly calling" of chapter iii., and do not prove that such calling is the same as that of Ephesians.

A.--Why do you say then that the same word when used in Ephesians means "up in heaven", whereas when it is used in Hebrews you are careful to draw attention to the fact that it refers to things that come down "out of heaven"?

B.--The reason is this. First the construction of the phrase "in heavenly places" is peculiar to Ephesians. While epouranios occurs elsewhere, en tois epouranios occurs nowhere else in the New Testament.

The "heavenly" calling, gift, country, etc., of Hebrews gives us the character of the calling, gift, etc., but does not give its locality. Ephesians tells us that the character of its blessings are "spiritual", not "heavenly", and the sphere of its enjoyment is not "heavenly", but "IN heavenly places". These heavenly places are definitely declared to be

(1). At the right hand of God.
(2). Far above all principalities and powers, etc. (i. 20, 21), and (3). To be occupied by principalities and powers who are either learning from, or antagonizing, the church (iii. 10, vi. 12).

These spiritual wickedness are certainly not "heavenly" in character, although for the time they occupy "heavenly places".

I think you will see that you must not only collect scripture references, but you must seek their meaning. Use the concordance by all means, but use it with understanding. None of the passage you have quoted make the slightest difference to the teaching of Ephesians, for not one passage outside the five occurrences in Ephesians uses the word in the sense of locality, and as that was our contention you have spent your effort in beating the air.

A.--Will you explain Heb. ix. 23, 24? Why is first ouranoi, then epourania, then ouranos used?*

B.--"Things in the heavens", Ta . . . . . en tois ouranois, is but another way of expressing "heavenly things", ta epourania. Heaven, ouranos, must be viewed as comprehending the whole. It is used of the over-arching expanse above the earth, even the atmosphere in which the "birds of heaven" fly, and the "heaven of heavens" which is the dwelling place of God. The same may be said of epouranios. In the one epistle to the Ephesians it denotes that position which is "far above all principality" (i. 21), and the abode of two classes of principalities, the good and the bad (iii. 10, vi. 12). This word too, you will see, has a wide scope. Think of these expressions as you do the word church. There are many different called-out companies that are composed under the generic word church.

Or again, think of the word kingdom. There are many kingdoms. You will think of other examples. Ouranos embraces the whole from the atmosphere in which birds can fly to the position where Archangels and Principalities cannot enter. Within this all-inclusive sphere are the epourania, and they too comprise spheres and positions that range from the highest pinnacle of exaltation to the gifts of the Spirit abused by men on earth. Did we but know all that there is to know about all these things, we should doubtless realize the more the fitness of the expressions in Heb. ix. 23, 24. As it is, however, the interchange of words does not alter in the slightest the teaching already given concerning the glorious calling of the church of the one body.

[NOTE: * - Will C.J.P. (Scheveningen, Holland), take this as an answer to one of his questions? Questions from other correspondents will be put into the mouth of "A" when they are suitable to this series. An * with initials will be used on such occasions.]

#13. The day of the Lord, and the day of God.

pp. 84, 85

A.--I believe you make a distinction between “the day of the Lord” and “the day of God”?

B.--Yes, I believe such a distinction is found in the Word of truth which I am called upon to divide aright.

A.--But don’t you think you can carry the idea to excess, for surely, after all, the “Lord is God”, and you are probably straining the meaning of the Scriptures, as I fear you do in many other of your fine distinctions.

B.--Well, one thing at a time. What particular passage have you in mind?

A.--II Peter iii. 10-12.

B.--Perhaps you will read it.

A.--

> “But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up . . . . . the day of God wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved and the elements shall melt with fervent heat.”

Now surely you do not maintain that there will be two separate occasions when the heavens shall be dissolved in fire and the elements shall melt with a fervent heat?

B.--No, I have never taught such a thing. I certainly believe these two references deal with one and the same event.

A.--Well then, out of your own mouth you condemn yourself, for if these two passages refer to the same event, the day of the Lord and the day of God are the same, and your so called “rightly dividing” would be better called “hair splitting”.

B.--I am afraid you are developing a little “fervent heat”. Had we better not be sure that we have understood the double reference first? Here is the Revised Version; perhaps if you had consulted that your “fervent heat” might have been spared. Please read the passage again.

A.--(Reads from the R.V.).

> “But the day of the Lord will come as a thief, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise and the elements shall be destroyed with fervent heat, and the earth and the works that are therein shall be burned up . . . . . the day of God, by reason of which the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat.”

What difference is there? I see none, “melt” is the same as “dissolve”, and only makes the two references the more alike.

B.--Well, I would much rather you discovered the difference for yourself. Many problems that unsettle the children of God are the result of inability to “read and see” for themselves. Look again. I will help you so far as to ask a question. Does it say in the A.V. that this great fire takes place “in” the day of the Lord and “in” the day of God.

A.--(Reading from A.V.).

> “In the which” (referring to the day of the Lord). “Wherein” (referring to the day of God).

B.--Now read the same passages again in the R.V.

> “In the which” (referring to the day of the Lord). “By reason of which” (referring to the day of God).

A.--I see it. How sorry I am that I have spoken so rudely!

B.--Let that pass. You see the difference now? The fire that dissolves the elements and the heavens takes place IN the day of the Lord as to time, and takes place BY REASON OF the character and necessity of the day of God for which the day of the Lord is a preparation. The book of the Revelation is occupied largely with the day of the Lord, and in chapter xx. we have the lake of fire which destroys all things that offend, and ushers in the new heavens and new earth of chapter xxi.

Just as an additional note, there is one further item wherein the record concerning the day of the Lord indicates a difference from that of the day of God. You will observe in the R.V. margin of II Pet. iii. 10 that the best manuscripts read “discovered” instead of “burned up”. The actual burning takes place after the close of the millennium.

"The Selfsame Day." (Exod. xii. 41).

Readers may remember that in our article "Fundamentals of Dispensational Truth" (Volume XIII, page 150) reference was made to a friend's contribution to the unraveling of the problem connected with the two time periods, 430 years and 400 years.

We have received one or two helpful notes on this subject, and as we believe they will help us all in our quest of truth we reproduce them here. We hope to publish replies later as time permits.

Letter from W.H.G.T. (U.S.A.).

"I have read with interest the article on Exod. xii. 40-42 on p.150 of the B.E., but I should like you to give us a further consideration of the following points:--

1. How do you reconcile the statement that 430 years cover the time from Abram's departure from Ur with the statement in Gen. xv. 13, that his seed would be a stranger in a land that is not theirs 400 years? Does not this seem to imply that the entire 400 years were to be spent in Egypt?
2. How is this period to be reconciled with the phrase 'the fourth generation'?
3. Even in Exod. xii. 40, the sojourning is spoken of as that of 'the children of Israel', which again seems to indicate the nation.
4. I wonder whether you have ever considered the question of the particular Pharaohs of the Oppression and Exodus in the light of your contentions. I observe that authorities differ in regard to this, some saying that the Pharaohs were of the 19th and others that they were of the 18th Dynasty.

I should much like to have the whole question considered, both by you and by the friend to whom you refer on p.151."

Another reader (F.S., Devon) contributes the following intensely interesting note. We would just say by way of introduction that Mr. J. B. Dimbleby, whose works are referred to, was a leading member of the British Chronological and Astronomical Association, and the Author of several books dealing with Biblical Chronology as governed by astronomy.

The 430 years.

"Referring to your article on page 150 and the self-same day of the 430 years, the late Mr. Dimbleby locates this in a manner showing that all was according to God's plan and purpose.

Abraham having left his native land at God's command (Gen. xi. 31; cf. Acts vii. 2) entered into Canaan as recorded in Gen. xii. 4, 5 in	A.M. 2083.5
"Now the SOJOURNING of the children of Israel (who dwelt [A different Hebrew word from sojourning] in Egypt) was	430.0
And it came to pass at the end of the 430 years, even the self-same day, it came to pass, that all the hosts of the Lord went out from the land of Egypt" (Exod. xii. 40; cf. Gal. iii. 17; Exod. iv. 4).	---------- 2513.5 ======

The 430 years are bisected (215+215 years) at 2298, when Jacob went down to Egypt, and when Joseph made himself known unto his brethren.

Thus 215 years in Canaan, and 215 years in Egypt.
Abram left Ur of the Chaldees in A.M. 2082.
The Exodus was in the year 2513.

In these years, the 7th months are alike in their dates of the Sabbath days. Therefore the 15th day of the 7th month of 2082 would be the selfsame day of the week as the 15th day of the 7th month of 2513. This day was a Tuesday (See Numb. xxxiii. 3).

> "And they departed from Rameses in the first month, on the fifteenth day of the first month, on the morrow after the Passover."

It must be remembered in all calculations that the 1st sacred month = the 7th civil month.
Mr. Dimbleby's tables should be consulted."

The 400 years.

The SEED to be a stranger for 400 years.

God said to Abram (Gen. xv. 13):--

A | "Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs.
B | And shall serve them.
B | And they shall afflict them
A | Four hundred years."

The prominent word here is SEED, and as Isaac was not born until 2108 A.M., the 400 years could not possibly commence before that period.

It may be read in more ways than one. Probably the best is as above reading A with A, and B with B. The period is thought by some to date from	A.M. 2112-3
To when Ishmael persecuted Isaac, ending with the Exodus in	2513

We give a further note by F. S. (Devon) upon a kindred subject to that of the 430 and the 400 years.

The inheritance for 450 years.

The Exodus was in	A.M. 2513.5
From thence stretched a period of	450
To the date of the everlasting covenant with David	2963.5

This period of 450 years is referred to in Acts xiii. 19, 20, which the R.V. renders as follows:--

> "And when he (God) had destroyed 7 nations in the land of Canaan:--
> (a) He gave them their land for an INHERITANCE
> (b) For about 450 years, and after these things
> (c) He gave them judges
> (d) Until Samuel the prophet, and afterwards they ask for a King and God GAVE unto them Saul."

God gave them the land for 450 years as an inheritance. He leased it to them so to speak by covenant (Exod. vi. 4-8), while they were in the wilderness, when also He gave them judges, and at the expiration of 450 years. He made another covenant with David in 2963, and promised that the Kingdom which had recently been set up should made sure to him for ever, and his throne established for ever (II Sam. vii. 16; xxiii. 5; I Chron. xvii. 8-15, 27).

For the complete fulfillment compare Luke i. 32.

(a) That took place in the wilderness (Josh. xxiv. 12).
(b) Cf. Heb. xi. 8. Acts vii. 5.
(c) The things related previously, the order is that of giving.
(d) Cf. Exod. xviii. 25, 26, and I Sam. vii. 15.

Thus the 450 years refer to the covenant concerning the inheritance of the land (R.V.) and not the duration of the judges. If however the old version is preferred an explanation will be found in Mr. Dimbleby's "All Past Time", pp. 92 and 93.

Jephthah's 300 years (Judges xi. 25, 26).

This is a most important period, and its composition is a necessity. It appears there were Judges in the North East, and the South West (similarly as later there were Kings of Judah and Kings of Israel) for a limited period. These are described in detail in "All Past Time", and the 300 years form a part of the 480th year referred to in I Kings vi. 1

The 4th year of Solomon was	A.M. 2993.5
and the Exodus was in	2513.5

Sin, and its relation to God.
pp. 161 – 173

Foreword.

A.—Scriptural views of the doctrine of sin influence our understanding of the doctrine of redemption and the purpose of God, and I have been led to accept some very revolutionary teaching concerning the place that sin has in the purpose of God, and as a result of a very profound study of the peculiar character of the Hebrew language, to view the sacrifice of Christ also in a most unorthodox light.

A far-reaching Doctrine.

B.—I most heartily endorse your statement concerning the value and far-reaching effects of a scriptural view of sin, and would like to add that an unscriptural view of the same subject leads to most pernicious ideas concerning the offering of Christ and the purpose of God. No one who is at all acquainted with the history of The Berean Expositor could accuse those responsible for it of being hide-bound by orthodoxy, but you must, on the other hand, avoid that Athenian spirit of ever running after "something new".

A.—Instead of the sanctimonious language that I once felt called upon to use when speaking of the cross of Christ I now enjoy the glorious liberty of being able to say concerning that sacrifice, that it is

THE SIN OF SINS,

And, moreover, that in redemption God settles

SIN BY SIN;

also that the greatest of wrongs, namely, the offering of Christ at Calvary, will right the universe.

B.—Surely you cannot mean what you say!

A.—I sympathize with you in your revulsion of feeling, for I had the same shrinking myself until I understood that this must be accepted if we really bow before the inspired Word. It really arises out of the fact that the Hebrew word for "sin" and "sin offering" are one and the same.

In the inspired language of Scripture there is no other term for sacrifice for sin than the word "sin" itself, and this is not accidental, but points the path of truth, proving that the offering of a sacrifice involves the nature of a sin or mistake.

B.—Do you mean that the sacrifice of Christ can be looked upon as a sin?

A.—Yes, astounding as the idea may appear, it can be seen to be a sin if we accept without reserve the inspired language of Scripture. Christ did not want to drink the cup set before Him, yet this was God's will. The shame and indignity heaped upon Him during His ministry were not deserved. I acknowledged that men were awfully wrong in their treatment of Him. What then shall we say of God Who forsook Him in His deepest need, Who sent fire into His bones, and more than this, delighted to crush Him (Isa. liii. 10)? There was only one greater wrong in all the universe than that He should be a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, and that was that His sorest affliction should come from the very heart of His God and Father.

B.—You really mean what you say? that we may place in the same category those whose wicked hands crucified the Son of God, and God Who gave Him up for us all? Men, you say, were "awfully wrong", but there was one "greater wrong", namely, the action of God Himself!

The Cross and Sin.

A.—Yes, I do mean that. When we learn the lesson of the Hebrew word for "sin" and "sin-offering", we can adopt such languages as "God settles sin by sin". The offering of Calvary is "the sin of sins", and the principle of redemption may be expressed in the words, "the greatest wrongs will right the universe".

B.—I cannot find words to express my utter abhorrence and repudiation of what you have brought forward, and based too upon a most unscholarly abuse of the Hebrew language. The very concordance . . . . .

A.—I rather guessed you would be advising me to "search and see", and I can assure you that I have not accepted this statement without verifying it by the concordance.

B.—My own published studies of the Scriptures testify to the profound regard I have for the value of the concordance, but the best of gifts may be abused, and become a shibboleth. With the hope that God may give you repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, and that you may be enabled to throw off this snare of the devil, I will go into this matter with you.

A.—I am sure that is very gracious of you, particularly as that which you consider to be the snare of the devil has come to me with all the power of light and liberty!

B.—Your position is that the Hebrew word for "sin" and "sin-offering" being the same necessitates the belief that in the sacrifice of Christ we have "the sin of sins", and "the greatest of wrongs!" We will, with your consent, use the concordance, and I would suggest a few examples before turning to the Hebrew word for "sin". Will you read Deut. xv. 6?

A Concordant Test.

A.—(Reads).—"Thou shalt lend unto many nations, but thou shalt not borrow."

B.—If I were to attempt to prove to you that "lend" and "borrow" were exactly the same, what would you think of me?

A.—I should think that you were well on the way of financial failure.

B.—It would be interesting to know what the Hebrew word for "lend" is.

A.—(Turning to concordance).—The Hebrew word is abat.

B.—I wonder what the Hebrew word for "borrow" is.

A.—(Again turning to concordance).—It is abat, as well!

B.—What! The same word for both "lend" and "borrow"? You have not hesitated to call the offering of Christ the "sin of sins" upon the evidence of the concordance, yet you refuse to consider that if I borrow $1 of you it is exactly the same as if I lent you $1 instead.

A.—But this is farcical!

B.—I know it is, but can I not persuade you if I very solemnly remark that "in the inspired language of Scripture there is no other term, and that this is not accidental, but points the path of truth?"

A.—I am afraid you could not.

B.—Let us have another example. Gen. i. 1 reads: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Will you tell me what the Hebrew word for "create" may be?

A.—It is bara.

B.—Is there any other Hebrew word translated "create"?

A.—No, every occurrence of the word "create" in the O.T. is a translation of this one word.

B.—Will you now read Josh. xvii. 18"

A.—(Reads).—"It is a wood and thou shalt cut it down."

B.—What is the Hebrew word for "cut it down".

A.—It is bara, the very same word that is translated to “create”.

B.—What then do you propose? that in every reference to creation we shall read “cut down”?

> “God cut down the heaven and the earth?”
> “God cut down man in His own image?”
> “I will destroy man whom I have cut down?”

A.—This is sheer nonsense!

B.—Well, perhaps we had better revise Josh. xvii. 18 and read, “It is a wood and thou shalt create it”.

A.—I am afraid you are trifling with me.

B.—To be candid with you, I am seeking to put into practice Prov. xxvi. 5, which you may consult at your leisure. Let us proceed. Lam. iii. 40 reads:--

> “Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord.”

What is the Hebrew word for “search”?

A.—It is chaphas.

B.—In II Chron. xxxv. 22 we read that the king “disguised himself”. This you will find is exactly the same word as that translated “search”. I take it that seeing that this is the language of inspiration, you will forthwith praise the Pharisee and the hypocrite, and call upon repentant sinners to “disguise” their ways, and turn again unto the Lord, resting assured that basing their action upon the language of inspiration, and being directed to the pathway of truth by the Hebrew words themselves, that God Himself will never pierce their disguise, or better still, has planned that it shall of itself be a sufficient covering for sin.

A.—I am afraid you are not only trifling with me, and paying a very small compliment to my intelligence, but you are saying things which if acted upon would make shipwreck of faith.

B.—Precisely, my friend! for that is what I believe has been done to your intelligence, and threatens your faith, by the teaching you have accepted concerning the Hebrew word for sin.

A.—Let us come to that. These contradictory statements have rather unsettled me.

The Test Applied.

B.—When Joseph said, “How can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?” (Gen. xxxix. 9), the Hebrew word used for sin is chata, and the fact that he calls this sin

"wickedness" leaves us with no doubt as to its meaning. When the priests, in II Chron. xxix. 24, killed the goats and "made reconciliation with their blood upon the altar", exactly the same word is used. Now you may be foolish enough to allow someone to say, "Therefore the offering partakes of the nature of sin", but you will not allow them to act upon this principle should they attempt to do so with the words "lend" and "borrow". In the light of the examples already considered, are we not compelled to say that these Hebrew words must represent two ideas instead of one?

LEND . . .	and . . .	BORROW.
CREATE . . .	and . . .	CUT DOWN.
SEARCH . . .	and . . .	DISGUISE.
SIN . . .	and . . .	MAKE RECONCILIATION.

In each case the truth is that instead of being identical the second word is exactly opposite.

A.—This is very puzzling; what is the explanation?

Distinguishing Things that Differ.

B.—You say this superficial fact is puzzling and ask for the explanation, and yet without evidently the ability or the knowledge of the Hebrew tongue to test these rash statements, you swallow these libels upon the God of all grace.

A.—I must confess that I know nothing of Hebrew; what I did was to verify the statement that "sin" and "sin offering" were the same in the Hebrew. I now perceive that the revolutionary doctrines I embraced may not rest upon such a solid basis as I had imagined.

B.—It is hardly a fitting time to attempt to initiate you into the composition of the Hebrew verb, but you will appreciate something of its peculiarity when you know that every Hebrew verb may have three forms: simple, intensive, and causative. They are know as kal, piel, hiphil--why, I cannot here explain. They all have an active voice, and may each have a corresponding passive and reflexive. Hence the scheme of the Hebrew verb is:--

	Active.	Passive.	Reflexive.
Simple . . .	Kal.	-	Niphal.
Intensive . . .	Piel.	Pual.	Hithpael.
Causative . . .	Hiphil.	Hophal.	-

In this scheme two forms are wanting. They are made up by employing one of the existing forms, but this need not trouble us just now.

I believe you possess Young's "Analytical Concordance", and if so you will find that Dr. Young draws particular attention to the need for distinguishing these various parts of the verb, saying:--

> "Only exact parallels to a Hiphil (for instance) are Hiphil meanings, to a Piel, Piel meanings, etc. The verb has generally DIFFERENT MEANINGS, according as it is a Hiphil, or one of the other verb forms."

To say that "lend" and "borrow", or "sin" and "sin offering", are the same is one of those half truths which poet says are "ever the blackest of lies". It is "The equivocation of the fiend, that lies like truth". The Hebrew word chattath, which is translated punishment, purification, sin, sin-offering, and sinner is a substantive which does not alter its form to correspond with the various forms of the verb. One part of the Hebrew chata means "sin", another part means "to offer for sin" (Lev. vi. 26). Consequently the substantive, though in spelling and appearance the same throughout, must be understood to represent both of these different verb forms.

What would you think of a teacher of English grammar who insisted that all words which were similar in spelling must necessarily be similar in grammatical meaning? While the case is not strictly parallel, it helps to show what an apparently superficial acquaintance some must have with the Hebrew language in this instance to have advanced such preposterous deductions, and incidentally what a number of gullible folks there are still who can be dazzled by an appearance of learning.

A.—I realize that my new-found light turns out to be darkness, and now I fell the superstructure reared upon this untenable idea must crumble to the ground.

B.—Let us freely face these doctrines, being assured that truth will prevail.

The Testimony of the Septuagint.

It may be a help to us in our endeavour to understand the change of meaning that the Piel voice of the Hebrew verb chata bears if we include the testimony of the Septuagint, the ancient Greek version of the O.T. which is frequently quoted in the N.T. both by the Lord and by the apostles.

In the majority of cases chata is translated by hamartano which is the word used in Rom. iii. 23. That the Septuagint translators recognized the second meaning is evident, for they have used words which have a very opposite meaning to sin, e.g.:--

Reference.	Septaugint.	Translation.	Hebrew.
II Chron. xxix. 24.	Exilaskomai.	To offer as a propitiation.	Chata.
Ezek. xliv. 27.	Hilasmos.	A propitiation.	Chattath.
Ezek. xliii. 23.	Exlasmos.	A propitiation.	Chata.
Numb. viii. 21.	Hagnizo.	Purify.	Chata.
Numb. xix. 19.	Aphagnizo.	Purify.	Chata.
Numb. viii. 7.	Hagnismos.	Purification.	Chattath.

Psa. li. 7.	Rhantizo.	Sprinkle.	Chata.

A Doctrine of Demons.

A.—I have been given to understand that sin has an essential, though transient part in God's purpose. The following reasons have been advanced:--

(1). God's love can be displayed only where sin has sown the seeds of hate.
(2). We, His creatures, would never have had imparted to us the delicious sense of God's Fatherly affection apart from sin.
(3). Sin will eventually change the universe from cold, independent creatures, into a loving family.
(4). Satan did exactly what God had planned he should do.
(5). It is only by acknowledging that He created Satan to sin that we can possibly clear Him of its stain.

B.—Will you allow me to place side by side an extract from the writings of one exponent of such beliefs and those of a spiritist?

Universalist.	Spiritist.
"Since sin must enter this scene and play its part, since it is essential to God's purpose, and absolutely under His control; since it will eventually change the universe from cold, independent creatures into a loving family . . . . . Satan did exactly what God had planned he should do. It is only by acknowledging that He created Satan to sin that we can possibly clear Him from its stain."	"A lie . . . . . holds a lawful place in creation; it is a necessity. Christ and the Devil are both alike."
"The only Scriptural, the only rational, the only true solution lies in the acceptance of God's grand dictum that all is out of Him, and through Him and for Him."	"For not a path on earth is trod that does not lead the soul to God."
"Eventually sin is justified or vindicated. Every sin is transmuted by the sin of sins into an act of essential to God's highest glory, and the creatures' greatest good."	"No matter how bad that path may be, whether it be the path of the liar or the murderer, it is the path of Divine ordination and Divine destiny."

In a future talk together I propose to discuss the teaching that emanated from the same source as that we are now examining, which stated that Christ as A God, but not THE God. The next stage in the teaching appears to be that when He offered Himself without spot to God, that sacrifice must be called "the sin of sins", and in the third place, instead of using the consistent condemnatory language of Scripture concerning sin, the utmost glories of Divine love and redeeming grace are to be traced, finally, to that sin which is said to be essential to the purpose of God, Satan is exonerated, and is shown to be a much maligned creature whose work is really a blessing in disguise. Can you find anywhere a more damning epitome of anti-Christian doctrine? It comes with all the appearance of veneration for the inspired Word. It looks "like a Lamb", but speaks "like a dragon".

You say that God created Satan as such. What Scripture do you advance in proof of this?

A.—We have the plain declaration that "all things are of God" (Rom. xi. 36).

B.—Your teachers then believe that God is the Author of sin.

A.—No, that is strange. I quite thought they did, but I find that they resent the accusation.

B.—You can see that this resentment is a quibble. If "all" includes sin, and if Satan DID EXACTLY what God planned he should do, you are on the horns of a dilemma, for:--

(1). Sin being in essence disobedience (I John iii. 4), it follows that if Satan "did exactly" what God planned, he "obeyed", and consequently Satan never sinned. But Scripture declares that Satan did sin from the beginning; that he was a liar, and a murderer, and a slanderer.

(2). If on the other hand you admit that Satan did sin, then seeing that you hold that God created Satan to sin, then God must be the sinner, the liar, the murderer, the slanderer, the tempter and exciter of disobedience, which is utterly abhorrent even to recite.

The law of Moses reflects the mind of God, and you may read in Exod. xxi. 28, 29 words which will give Scriptural direction in fixing responsibility:--

"If an ox gore a man or a woman, that they die; then the ox shall surely be stoned . . . . . but if the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman, the ox shall be stoned, and the owner also shall be put to death."

Concerning the creation of man Scripture says:--

"God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions" (Eccles. vii. 29).

and the case is parallel with that of Satan.

With your view concerning sin and its relation to God, can you believe that God could ever use such words as those of Gen. vi. 5-7:--

"And God saw that the wickedness was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. And it REPENTED the Lord that He had made man on the earth, and it GRIEVED Him at His heart. And the Lord said, I will destroy man whom I have created . . . . ."

A.—No, I am afraid I cannot.

B.—Would you not rather expect to read that as sin manifested itself in all its hideousness, so God would rejoice at the way in which that essential element to His full manifestation was progressing; that He would commend Satan for doing his work, nay His work, so well, that as this pestilence spread, so the coldness of His creatures would be set aside for the warmth of a united family, and His own distant creatorship be exchanged for that of a loving Father? But what is the fact? God "repented", God was "grieved", God said, "I will destroy". Sin ends in death. You are transferring the glories of redeeming love that operates in spite of sin, in order to glorify this hideous monster.

In connection with the subject of sin, you quoted, I believe, a strong statement concerning "all things being of God".

A.—The actual words are:--

"The only Scriptural, the only rational, the only true solution lies in the acceptance of God's grand dictum that all is out of Him, and through Him and for Him."

B.—This means that:--

	/	finds its cause	\
SIN	{	finds its channel	}	IN GOD.
	\	finds its goal	/

But Scripture says:--

(1). "He that committeth sin is OF THE DEVIL" (I John iii. 8).
(2). "Whosoever doeth not righteousness is NOT OF GOD" (I John iii. 10).
(3). "He that is OF GOD heareth God's words; ye therefore hear them not because ye are NOT OF GOD" (John viii. 47).

You quote, "the only scriptural solution", but you must see that it is anything but scriptural. Further, that it is "the only rational solution", whereas it is most illogical. The all things which are "of God" must of necessity exclude those things which are "not of God", or else sane speech and reasonable argument must cease. Now these things which are "not of God" include sin ("whosoever doeth not righteousness") and Satan, for the Devil is placed in antithesis to God in the passages quoted. Spiritist teaching that Christ and Satan are alike finds an advocate in your doctrine. Satan, you say, did exactly what God had planned he should do. Scripture declares that Christ did exactly what God said He should do. Yet to accomplish the plan of God Christ came to UNDO THE WORKS OF THE DEVIL, and you call your teaching scriptural and rational! When Christ came in the flesh He said, "Lo, I come to do Thy will", and through death He destroyed him that had the power of death, that is the Devil. Yet you say it is scriptural and rational to believe that Satan and sin are "of Him, and through Him, and for Him", who sent His Son to destroy the one and put away the other.

Further, I find that "Satan who was created to sin and did exactly what God had planned that he should do" is put into durance for a thousand years, and then, after another act of furthering the will of God, is cast into the lake of fire and brimstone to be tormented day and night unto the ages of ages. Can you call that treatment rational?

A.—No, I must confess that the more we study it together the more absurd and unscriptural it appears.

What is Sin?

B.—Without attempting at the moment a formal definition of sin, it would be a great step forward to know of any passages of Scripture where the words "Sin is . . . . ." occur. We have the following, the first of which we have had before us already:--

"SIN IS iniquity, or lawlessness" (I John iii. 4).
"All unrighteousness IS SIN" (I John v. 17).
Whatsoever is not of faith IS SIN" (Rom. xiv. 23).

Here are three statements, and in each case we find the negative. Sin is the great negation of law, of right, of faith. How then can it be of God?

What is the end of Sin?

The following Scriptures give us the end of sin:--

"The wages of sin is DEATH" (Rom. vi. 23).
"Sin when it is fully consummated (concordant version) bringeth forth DEATH" (James i. 15).
"By one man sin entered into the world and DEATH by sin" (Rom. v. 12).

Satan is called by a title which means "The Slanderer". A dictionary meaning of slander is:-- "A false report maliciously uttered, and tending to injure the reputation of another."

In Gen. iii. Satan's slander (or false report) maliciously uttered is:--

(1). Death is not the result of sin.
(2). Sin is a means of greater blessing.

A part of his statement is true. By sin man did learn good and evil, but he lost power to enjoy and use it, for he became involved in death. Satan could have added many more blessings had he chosen to do so, but they would all have proved as false by the simple fact that sin leads to and ends in DEATH. Had Satan wanted plausible argument ready-made to quiet any qualms in the conscience of Eve, he would have found them in the words:--

"Sin will eventually change the universe from cold, independent creatures, into a loving family circle, and God from a distant Creator into an affectionate Father."

What is this but to transfer the crown from the Saviour's brow and place it upon that of sin? Satan's initial lie is repeated by your teachers, namely, that death is not the end of sin. God says it is. That is scriptural and rational. You say and Satan says, No, sin will eventually be justified, vindicated, and found to be the essential element in bringing creation to its goal of glory.

A.—Does it not seem very uncharitable to place godly men and earnest Bible students upon the same level as demons?

B.—I have no word to say concerning the personal character of any teachers, as it is not my concern and may be of no consequence to anyone. Their teaching, made public, and crossing our own, is my concern. The Christ they degrade is my Lord, the slanderer they exonerate is my enemy, the scripture they misinterpret is my trust, and speak I must. Scripture warns us that the end of this dispensation will be characterized by:--

(1). A departure from the faith.
(2). The teaching of the doctrines of demons.
(3). Teachers turning the ears of their hearers from the truth unto myths.
(4). Ministers of Satan (whose personal character may be beyond reproach) appearing as ministers of righteousness.
(5). The lie taught, being so like the truth, would deceive the very elect were it not for Divine protection.
(6). The false teaching, being a systemized deception, playing at dice with the truth.

These things being so, it behooves us to make no compromise with those whose teaching on sin, Satan and sacrifice are so anti-Scriptural and anti-Christian. You know now the attitude which The Berean Expositor takes on this men, and give none offence, yet in this matter it is our considered policy to lose every subscriber and bring our testimony to a close rather than yield one iota of God's truth or parley with the enemy of truth.

While not intending to prolong the controversy, we may attempt to expand or elucidate any point which we feel will be for the benefit of the general reader. Should you be so minded you may be interested in a series of non-controversial studies in the Scriptures as to the nature of sin which we hope to prepare later for The Berean Expositor.

DEAR FELLOW-MEMBERS,

The deepening darkness called "Modernism" is surely fulfilling the prophetic word of II Tim. iii. and iv., The Berean Expositor must as surely fulfil II Tim. iv. 2:--

PREACH THE WORD.

We therefore ask the prayerful co-operation of all our readers in our twofold attempt to carry out this duty and privilege. Side by side with the written ministry of The Berean Expositor has always been the spoken ministry both in London, the Provinces and in Scotland. For the time, at least, it is possible for the Editor to respond to invitations to conduct Bible meetings, and it is our desire to buy up these opportunities. The written testimony is often accepted after the spoken word has cleared the way.

May we then ask that the prayerful fellowship extended to The Berean Expositor may be widened to embrace the equally important endeavour to preach the word in season, out of season, and that both doors of utterance and of opportunity may be granted, to His glory.

Yours in the bond of peace,

CHARLES H. WELCH
FREDK. P. BRININGER

The Body in Ephesians.

p. 106

A beloved reader raises the question as to why we have given but one reference to the doctrinal portion of Ephesians in the structure set out on page 52 of the present volume.

In case other readers should be perplexed and conclude that we have acted arbitrarily, we point out that the reference to the body in Eph. ii. 16 refers to the individual body of the Lord Himself and not to the church. Similarly we omitted the reference in v. 28, for there the reference is not to the church, but to the body of the individual believer.

To place the matter clearly before the reader we will set out the complete structure, including all references, but marking the passages that do not enter into the argument of Eph. iv. 16:--

The Body.

A	i. 23.	The church which is His body.	Ecclesiastical.
B	ii. 16.	Reconcile. Reference to the Lord's own body.
C	iv. 4.	The one body.	Ecclesiastical.
D	iv. 12.	Gifts for building up.	Past.
E	iv. 16-.	Fitly joined together.	Central.
D	iv. -16.	Member for growth.	Present.
C	v. 23.	Christ the Head.	Practical.
B	v. 28.	Love. Reference to believer's own body.
A	v. 30.	The church and members.	Practical.

p. 129

Most of our readers visit from time to time the libraries that are to be found in our towns, and we wonder whether they have ever felt a twinge of conscience as they observed the serried ranks of papers and magazines which are there for the reader. The special feature we have in mind is that so many of the "cults" and "isms" go out of their way to provide these reading rooms with every opportunity to become acquainted with their special teaching.

It is a matter that has often come to us that we too should be as diligent and as unselfish. May we ask you to share with others in your neighbourhood the cost of providing a free copy of The Berean Expositor at the Free Library in your locality? We believe that if one reader but mentioned it to others the response would be immediate. Take a spare copy to the Librarian and submit it for approval, assuring him that it will be supplied regularly, and ask the Lord to bless the effort. Others may find enough encouragement to be able to present a copy of The Apostle of the Reconciliation for the library also. Let us "redeem the time" for the night is far spent.

> "He that doth indeed go forth and weep, bearing seed enough to trail along, doth surely come in with shouting, bringing his sheaves" (Psa. cxxvi. 6) (ROTHERHAM).

Answers to Correspondents.
pp. 158, 159

G.J.P. (Holland) writes an encouraging letter in which a question is asked. To make it clear, we recast it and hope we have expressed the writer's meaning:--

> At the resurrection of Christ (Matt. xxvii.) many others were raised. Christ and these raised ones together formed the sheaf typified in Lev. xxiii. 10, 11. Together they may have ascended to heaven on the morrow after the Sabbath. Christ's first ascension was that indicated in John xx. 17.
> What is the relation of these raised ones to the church of the one body? Are they also seated with Christ in the superheavenlies?

While we believe John xx. 17 indicates that the Lord ascended to heaven as the great anti-typical wave sheaf, we do not find warrant for believing that any others ascended to heaven with Him. I Cor. xv. 23 says, "Christ the Firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at His coming", which teaches that the saints do not form part of that "Firstfruits" presented to God on the morrow after the Passover Sabbath.

Further, the church of the one body with its seat in the super-heavenlies is the subject of a distinct revelation, its calling and sphere being part of the mystery that had been hidden by God until Paul's imprisonment. This would disassociate the one body from the type in Leviticus, or from the saints of Matt. xxvii. Your difficulty arises out of the words "they may have ascended". As we have no Scriptural warrant for believing this ascension, we may set it aside, and when we do so your difficulty ceases.

The Priest and the Mystery.
p. 159

The question sometimes arises in the mind of the reader, What has the priesthood of Christ to do with the church of the mystery? A word may therefore be of service here. It is a fact that priesthood is not spoken of Christ in Ephesians or the other prison epistles, but we must beware of the inference that would set aside the priestly work of Christ, the reasons being as follows.

Ephesians speaks of Christ's sacrifice as an offering and a sweet-smelling savour; Ephesians speaks of making us nigh by the blood of Christ; Ephesians speaks of access with boldness. Let us not mistake the shadow for the substance. Whatever blessing there may be for the believer in the work of the high priest, that blessing shorn of all typical and temporary characteristics is as much the privileged possession of the church of the one body as is the efficacy and preciousness of the great sacrifice for sin.

The Deity of Christ.
pp. 1 - 10

Form and Fashion (continued).

B.—What do you understand by "equality with God"?

A.—I take it to mean the same essential nature, and that Christ did not aspire to the supreme Godhead, but was content with His subordinate position as indicated in John i. 1.

B.—Seeing that "form" like "formula" means essential nature, this new statement must indicate something else. The R.V. reads "on an equality with God". Isa Theo indicates not essential nature, but mode of existence. Now one mode of existence may be relinquished for another without touching the nature. The words of II Cor. viii. 9 are an illustration, "Though He was rich, yet He became poor". "Rich" and "poor" are modes of existence, but "He" who made the exchange remained the same.

A.—What does the statement mean then?

B.—Christ, though essentially God and therefore surrounded with the accompaniments of Deity, voluntarily laid all this glory aside and came to earth and was found in fashion as a man. "The form of God" has as its proper mode the being "on an equality with God". "The form of a servant" has as its proper mode "the fashion as a man".

The counting it not a prize that He was on an equality with God is further explained by the words, "He made Himself of no reputation", or more literally, "He emptied Himself". Of what did Christ empty Himself? The answer must be, He emptied Himself of that which He did not regard as a prize. He did not lay aside His essential nature, He did lay aside the glory that was His own proper right. Let us now look at the words:--

> "He made Himself of no reputation" (A.V.).
> "Emptied Himself" (R.V.).

The two words "Not . . . . . but" leave no room for doubt as to what was "emptied". The being on equality with God, the ministry of thousands of angels, the glory; this He voluntarily laid aside. The two statements:--

> Himself He emptied.
> Himself He humbled.

explain one another. Chrysostom in his commentary on Philippians says:--

> "What then should we say in answer to Arius, who said that the Son is of other substance (than the Father)? Tell me what is the meaning of this--He took the form of a servant? He became man says Arius. Therefore also subsisting in the form of God, He was God . . . . . The form of a servant—man by nature; therefore the form of God—God by nature.

Bishop Pearson draws attention to the inexactness of the A.V. In the A.V. we read:--

> "He made Himself of no reputation, AND took upon Himself the form of a servant, AND was made in the likeness of men" (Phil. ii. 7).

Here we have two copulative conjunctions "and", and three distinct propositions. The original is not so. The words together give one expression of the condescension of Christ:--

> "But emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men."

The humiliation thus commenced goes down to the death of the cross; then comes the glorious exaltation:--

> "Wherefore God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him the name which is above every name, that in the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. ii. 9-11).

We now reach the verse to which you drew attention. Your comment was, I believe, that every tongue is not going to confess that Jesus Christ is God, but Lord, to the glory of God, Who is not Christ, but the Father.

A.—Yes, that was my statement.

B.—In the first place we have seen that the Saviour laid aside His glory, but not His Godhead. That glory we see given back in the great exaltation. This exaltation answers John xvii. 5:--

> "And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own Self, with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was."

The structure of the passage may be helpful to us:--

A1 | EQUALITY. The accompaniments of Deity.
B1 | a1 | He emptied Himself.
b1 | Servant. To obey.
c1 | Likeness of men. Kinsman redeemer.
d1 | Found in fashion as man.
a1 | He humbled Himself.
b1 | Obedient. As servant.
c1 | Death. Kinsman redeemer.
A2 | EXALTATION. The accompaniments of Deity restored.
B2 | a2 | Name.
b2 | Every knee.
c2 | In heaven.
In earth.
Under earth.
b2 | Every tongue.
a2 | Lord.

Looking at the structure, what do you say is the name which is above every name given to Christ at His exaltation?

A.—I should say "The Lord", only that title is used of Christ before the day of His glory.

B.—I think upon examination you will see that the title is invested with a great fullness in this passage. Kurios, "Lord", is the constant translation of the Hebrew "Jehovah". He Who humbled Himself even unto death will be confessed in that day as Jehovah.

The Testimony of a Quotation.

The words of Phil. ii. 10, 11 are a direct quotation from Isa. xlv. I want you to repeat your comment upon this passage in Phil. ii. before I read the quotation from Isaiah so that we may place them together.

A.—I said that every tongue is not going to confess that Jesus Christ is GOD, but Lord, to the glory of God, Who is not Christ, but the FATHER.

B.—I will now read Isa. xlv. 18-22:--

> "For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens, GOD HIMSELF that formed the earth and made it . . . . . I am the Lord, AND THERE IS NONE ELSE . . . . . There is NO GOD ELSE BESIDE ME . . . . . Look unto Me, and be ye saved all the ends of the earth, FOR I AM GOD, and there is NONE ELSE."

Are you satisfied that "the Lord" here is GOD HIMSELF and none else?

A.—Most certainly, that is the plain language of the Scripture.

B.—You are sure "the Lord" here does not mean a lesser Deity, "God in a subordinate sense"?

A.—No, the passage will not allow the thought. This is the Creator of heaven and earth Who is speaking.

B.—I will continue the quotation from Isa. xlv.:--

> "I have sworn by Myself, the word is gone out of My mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, THAT UNTO ME every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear" (verse 23).

Will you dare repeat your comment upon Phil. ii. with this testimony before you?

A.—No, I dare not. I must come like Philip and kneel before Him Who is both Saviour and Creator, both God and man, and say, "My Lord and my God".

B.—Praise God for that confession. Difficulties you will still have, problems unsolved and beyond your understanding but your heart will be free, and the consciousness of loyalty to the Lord is beyond description.

A.—It would appear that "Jesus" of the N.T. is none other than the "Jehovah" of the O.T. Is this borne out by any other quotations?

B.—Yes. For example Isa. vi. There we have a vision of the Lord. Before His glory the Seraphim veil their faces while they cry:--

> "Holy, holy, holy is Jehovah of hosts, the whole earth is full of His glory."

There can be no doubt that this was a vision of God. Let us consider the testimony of two witnesses:--

> HEZEKIAH.—"O Lord of hosts, God of Israel, Thou that dwellest between the Cherubim, THOU ARE THE GOD, even THOU ALONE" (Isa. xxxvii. 16).
> JOHN (Quoting Isa. vi. 9, 10).—"These things said Isaiah, when he beheld His (Christ's) glory, and spake of Him" (John xii. 41).

Scripture declares that the Lord of Hosts is THE God, John declares that the Lord of Hosts is Christ. Your teachers, whose doctrine you have renounced, told you that John taught that Christ as A God, but not THE God!

A.—They did, and I believed them, denying the very Lord that bought me.

B.—Not only have we definite quotation, but the fact that "Jehovah" and "Jesus" are one and the same is assumed on every hand. Isa. xl. 3 says:--

> "The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God."

The Gospels declare that John the Baptist is "the voice", and that he was sent to prepare the way for Christ, Who is both Lord and God.

Jehovah not limited to Israel.

The Lord is the God of Israel. He that dwelt between the Cherubim was no God in a subordinate sense. He is confessed as the God of Israel, the God alone of all the kingdoms of earth, the maker of heaven and earth (Isa. xxxvii. 16). Solomon confessed that this same God was not limited to Israel or the temple, saying:--

> "But will God indeed dwell on the earth? behold the heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain Thee" (I Kings viii. 27).

I want you to see clearly that any reservation in the mind as to the full Deity of Christ blights the faith and is unscriptural. Take the title "Saviour" in Titus:--

> "According to the commandment of God our Saviour" (i. 3).
>
> "Adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour" (ii. 10).

"Looking for that blessed hope, and the appearing of the glory of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (ii. 13).
"The love of God our Saviour toward man" (iii. 4).
"Through Jesus Christ our Saviour" (iii. 6).

The title "Saviour" is used of "God" and "the Lord Jesus Christ" without distinction. Further, here we have definite statement, that Christ is "The Great God and our Saviour". Not only is Christ here called "The great God", but Psa. lxxviii. 35 says:--

"God was their rock, and the HIGH GOD their redeemer."

That redeemer was Christ. In verse 56 the same title comes again:--

"They tempted and provoked the MOST HIGH GOD."

They tempted Christ.

A.—How do you know that?

B.—I Cor. x. 9 says:--

"Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them tempted."

In I Cor. x. 4 we also find, "That rock was Christ", which looks to Psa. lxxviii. 35. There can be no good done by lengthening this study. You have your Bible, and you may add to the passages already brought forward.

The High God. \
The Most High God. \
THE God. \ Christ.—God manifest in the flesh.
Jehovah. / Creator. /
The Great God. /

Which will you believe, this glorious testimony of Scripture:--

JESUS CHRIST IS THE GREAT GOD or
He is a A God, God in a subordinate sense?

You will remember that we opened this discussion by saying that "the one God" is "the Father", and that "the man" is "the Son", and therefore could not be God Himself. I suggested that we were dealing with the question at the wrong end. The Father must be greater than His Son. He Who sends is greater than the one sent. This is all true, but reasoning that holds good with men may not hold good with one Who is both God and man. We have seen that He is God, even the Great God, Jehovah, God Himself. Therefore we must distinguish things that differ. When He took the form of a servant it was to obey. He took flesh and blood that He might obey. In Heb. x. 5-7 is a quotation from Psa. xl. 6-8. Will you compare the two passages and note any important difference?

The Willing Servant.

A.—Apart from minor differences that are the result of translation, there is one that does call for explanation. In Psa. xl. 6 the words "mine ears hast Thou opened" are replaced in Heb. x. 5 by the words, "A body hast Thou prepared me".

B.—In the margin of the Psalm you have a note to the effect that "opened" is really the word "digged". The typical principle of interpretation which we have discussed upon previous occasions comes to our aid here. In Exod. xxi. 1-6 we have the law pertaining to a Hebrew servant, which limited his servitude to six years, except under the following exceptional conditions:--

> "If the servant shall plainly say, I love my master, my wife, and my children; I will not go out free: then his master shall bring him unto the judges, he shall also bring him to the door, or unto the door post; and his master shall bore his ear through with an aul; and he shall serve him for the age."

The "digged ear" was the symbol of loving willing servitude, entered for the love of those who would otherwise have been left behind in bondage. The Lord of glory, the Creator of things seen and unseen, when He entered out of love His period of willing servitude, took the form of a servant, and entered the body "prepared" for Him, which body was the symbol of lowliness, and pierced for our sakes upon the cross.

Shall we abuse the very condescension of the Lord and make of it an argument against His very Deity?

A.—I never saw the shameful ingratitude of the doctrine I held that used the language of the Saviour's period of servitude to deny His Godhead.

B..—When people begin arguing that the "Son" must necessarily be less than the "Father" they are wasting time, for Scripture teaches the same thing. The Son and the Father speak of that relationship which commenced when the fullness of time came for Christ to be born of a woman. He can expressly to do the will of Him that sent Him, and took the "form" of a servant and the "fashion" as a man in order to accomplish that purpose. This voluntarily assumed subordination cannot be used as an argument when dealing with His essential Deity.

A.—Do you not believe that Christ was "The Son" from eternity?

B.—You are asking a question which the human mind cannot answer unaided, and upon which Scripture never speaks. As I have said, I am no philosopher, all I know is already written in the Word. What I find there is that Christ

> "Originally was in the form of God."
> "In the beginning He was the Word."

When the fullness of time came the Word became flesh, and then, the Scripture says, "we beheld His glory as the only begotten of the Father". Luke i. 31-35 makes a very complete statement. Let us read it:--

> "And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shall call His name JESUS. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest . . . . . Then Mary said unto the angel, How shall this thing be, seeing I know not a man? And the angel answered, and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee, therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called THE SON OF GOD."

The words "therefore also" put the matter beyond question. The great confession of Matt. xvi. 16:--

> "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God," and the words of I John iv. 2 are complimentary:--

> "Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God."

There is no reference to His Deity, but to His Mediatorship. The way in which many who attacks the doctrine of the Lord's Deity use the title "Son" is but the old abuse of the man of straw.

A.—What do you mean by this "man of straw"?

B.—It means that for the purposes of argument a person first collects together a series of statements which have no real place in the argument, but which appear valid to the ordinary hearer, and then having built up this "man of straw" he proceeds to display his ability in knocking it to pieces. To those who see that the Sonship of Christ is essentially a part of that great voluntary self-emptying, when the servant's form was taken at Bethlehem, the spectacle is a pitiable exhibition of either ignorance or prejudice.

A.—There does not seem much more to be said. I think however that you ought to face I Cor. viii. 5, 6 before concluding.

B.—By all means. What is the context of these verses?

A.—Idolatry.

B.—So then we have a statement concerning the Christian faith as opposed to idolatry. In contrast with the "gods many and the lords many" of paganism, we have the sublime teaching of Scripture:--

> "But to us (here we have the 'relative' argument brought in, to which we devoted some time at the opening of our discussion) there is but one God, the Father, out of Whom the all things, and we for Him; and one Lord, Jesus Christ, through Whom the all things, and we through Him."

The "lords" of paganism were mediators between men and the more remote "gods", and this statement becomes exactly parallel with that of I Tim. ii. 5:--

> "For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Jesus Christ."

The question of the Deity of Christ is not in view. It is the "Mediator" and the "Man" that is in question. None of these things, nor all that Scripture says concerning Christ as the Servant or the Son, the Sent One or the Sacrifice, the Shepherd or the Sufferer, can have the remotest influence upon the revealed facts of Scripture that this same Christ is also "The Great God", "The High God", "The Almighty God", "The Creator", and "Jehovah".

It is essential to our redemption and to the purpose of reconciliation that Christ shall be man. It is also the continual teaching of Scripture that He was God. Faith believes the complete statement. The mere multiplying of examples cannot make the doctrine more true nor more plain. I am not aware that any passage has been passed over that would cause any alteration of the doctrine I put before you. If you do find such a passage please write to me, and I will gladly consider it in The Berean Expositor.

Fundamentals of Dispensational Truth.

#53. Amalek, type of the flesh. Aaron and Hur, types of fellowship (Exod. xvii. & xviii.).

pp. 176 - 180

"THEN CAME AMALEK."—In the generations of Esau (Gen. xxxvi.) we find that Esau and his descendants are the Edomites; "Esau is Edom" (verses 1 and 8). In verse 12 we learn that Amalek was the grandson of Esau. Both Israel and Amalek therefore could trace their descent from Abraham, and herein lies the significance of the type. Amalek stand for the flesh. This typical feature is repeated. Going back no further than Abraham we find two sons—Ishmael who stands for the flesh, and Isaac for the spirit. The church of the Galatians provides a commentary upon the typical character of these two sons and their relation to the flesh and spirit.

Coming to Isaac we find that he also had two sons—Esau and Jacob, and once again the type is clear. The epistle to the Hebrews provides explanations of the meaning of the typical character of these two sons.

Two others must be included, viz., Moab and Ammon, both the children of Lot, and preeminently the children of shame. When we speak of Ishmael, Edom, Moab, Ammon and Amalek, we enumerate those foes of Israel who sought to bar the way and prevent their entry into the land of promise.

This is exactly what "the flesh" in a believer endeavours to do, Israel, when bondmen in Egypt, when confronted by the Red Sea, when in need of bread and water, were called upon neither to fight nor to fend for themselves. In all these experiences they typified the passive position of the believer under grace. The believer, however, has a warfare before him, a conflict that lasts until this life finishes, the conflict between flesh and spirit.

The word "fight", apart from the instance in Exod. i. 10 which voiced the fears of Pharaoh, is used in two settings only:--

(1). OF THE LORD.—"The Lord shall fight for you" (Exod. xiv. 14).
"The Lord fighteth for them" (Exod. xiv. 25).
(2). OF ISRAEL.—"Then came Amalek, and fought with Israel" (Exod. xvii. 8).
"Go out, and fight with Amalek" (Exod. xvii. 9).
"So Joshua . . . . . fought with Amalek" (Exod. xvii. 10).

The one conflict of the believer after redemption is with the flesh. What was the occasion of the fight? We believe it was twofold. The word "then" in the sentence, "then came Amalek", appears to be connected with:--

(1). The provision of water.

In a country like Arabia water is precious, and its possession eagerly sought. Parallel cases may be found in Gen. xxi. 25, where we find Abimelech's servants violently taking away the wells of water from Abraham. Deborah's song includes a reference to this perennial cause of conflict:--

> "Instead of the shouting of the archers among the wells, There they laud the righteous acts of Jehovah" (Judges v. 11, Companion Bible).

(2). The tempting of the Lord.

"Then" reads immediately after the question, "Is the Lord among us or not?" The flesh takes immediate advantage of the beginnings of unbelief, of murmuring and complaining.

Amalek was overcome by two means:--

(i.) The intercession of Moses.
(ii.) The warfare under Joshua.

Bishop Hall's comment here is:--

> "I do not hear Moses say to this Joshua, Amalek is come up against us, it matters not whether thou go up against him or not; or if thou go, whether alone or with company, or if accompanied, whether with many or few, strong or weak; or if strong, whether they fight or no: I will pray on the hill; but choose us out men, and go fight."

In the conflict with the flesh the weapons must be those of God's appointment, and neither prayer alone, nor conflict alone can prevail. As Moses' hands were raised, so Israel's fight succeeded. As Moses' hands sank, so Israel's fight failed.

Three noteworthy features close the narrative:--

(i.) The command to write the record in a book.
(ii.) The revelation of the name Jehovah-nissi.
(iii.) The reason given for Amalek's extermination.

> "And the Lord said unto Moses, Write this for a memorial in a book, and rehearse it in the ears of Joshua, for I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven" (Exod. xvii. 14).

Joshua was the instrument in the hand of the Lord to divide the land of promise for an inheritance to Israel. His greatest activities were spent in the subjugation of the Canaanites, and all those who opposed the possession of the land. This possession was not to be considered complete until Amalek had been destroyed, Moses reminds Israel:--

> "Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of the Land of Egypt: How he met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, when thou wast faint and weary, and he feared not God. Therefore it shall be, when the Lord thy God hath given thee rest from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it, that thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou shalt not forget it" (Deut. xxv. 17-19).

The name Jehovah-nissi is the third Jehovah title revealed in Scripture. The first is concerned with the offering of Isaac, the great type of Christ and His redemption, Jehovah-jireh, "the Lord will provide". A friend, whose judgment we hold in high esteem, says that Jehovah-jireh means "Jehovah appeared" (Gen. xxii. 14). The second is connected with the overthrow of the Egyptians (type of the world), Jehovah-ropheka, "the Lord that healeth thee" (Exod. xv. 26). The third title is connected with the destruction of Amalek (type of the flesh), Jehovah-nissi, "the Lord my banner" (Exod. xvii. 15). The third title is the first of three that suggests the believer's active appropriation:--

> "The Lord my banner" (Exod. xvii. 15).
> "The Lord my shepherd" (Psa. xxiii. 1).
> "The Lord our righteousness" (Jer. xxiii. 6).

The word "banner" (Hebrew nes) is the word used for the "pole" upon which the brazen serpent was lifted (Num. xxi. 8, 9). If we turn to the occasion we shall find that it is a repetition of Rephidim. The people speak against God and against Moses because of the lack of water. Jehovah-nissi is this time set forth in symbol, and this symbol Christ takes to Himself in John iii. 14:--

> "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even son must the Son of man be lifted up."

The "banner" under which we must fight our "Amalek" is the cross of Christ, the serpent on the pole, suggesting in type the deep doctrine of Rom. vi. 6 and Gal. v. 24. It is the cross of Christ, seen not as the means of our redemption, but of our victory over the flesh. This is the burden of Rom. vi., vii., viii. and Gal. v. In the margin of the A.V. of Exod. xvii. 16 we read:--

> "Heb. the hand upon the throne of the Lord."

The translation both of the A.V. and the R.V. shows that those responsible believed "the hand" to be the Lord's hand, and therefore translated the passage "the Lord hath sworn".

The Companion Bible note reads:--

> "Surely the hand (lifted up) upon the banner of Jah (is to swear):" &c.

The substitution of "banner" for "throne" is explained by Rotherham in his Emphasized Version as:-- > "Ginsburg thinks it should be as follows: These are readings suggested by context and verse, but not supported by the Ancient Versions" (G. Intro. pp. 162, 170).

Rotherham does not endorse this "suggestion", but translates:--

> "Because of a hand against the throne of Yah."

The hand that was laid upon the throne of the Lord was the hand of Amalek. With all their failures Israel were the Lord's anointed. When Balaam was brought to curse Israel, he had to say:--

> "He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob . . . . . the shout of a king is among them."
> "His king shall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted."
> "Edom shall be a possession."
> "And when he looked upon Amalek, he took up his parable and said, Amalek was the first of the nations, but his latter end is even to perish" (Numb. xxiii., xxiv.).

Here Agag is mentioned in connection with Israel's king and kingdom. This was a title similar to that of Pharaoh or Abimelech, and used by all the kings of Amalek.

(To be concluded).

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

#40. Heb. vii. 1-25.
The Superiority of the Priesthood of Melchisedec (vii. 1-10).
pp. 81 - 94

In our previous study together we reached that stage in the unfolding of truth that necessitated the fuller mention of the Melchisedec priesthood of Christ. To this the apostle now proceeds and by a series of statements sets forth the superiority of the priesthood of Christ to that of Aaron, bringing this established fact to bear once more upon the great theme of the epistle, "perfection" (vii. 11, 19). If we keep this before us, we shall be less likely to be overwhelmed with the mass of detail that meets us in this section. Omitting the parenthetical details, the proposition of Heb. vii. 1-3 reads:--

> "For this Melchisedec . . . . . abideth a priest continually."

The intervening details supply the necessary information to establish this proposition.

Melchisedec was first of all KING OF SALEM. Jerome maintains, in his epistle to Evagrius, that this Salem is a city near Shechem, mentioned in Gen. xxxiii. 18 and John iii. 23. Salem however is used to indicate Jerusalem in Psa. lxxvi. 2:--

> "In Salem is God's tabernacle, and His dwelling place in Sion."

There are some who think that after the Jebusites took possession of the place it was called Jebus-Salem, which became transformed to Jerusalem. We find in Josh. x. 1-4 that the king of Jerusalem was called Adonizedec, which has much the same signification as that of Melchisedec.

Not only was Melchisedec king, but he was "PRIEST OF THE MOST HIGH GOD". This title El Elyon, "The Most High God", is used for the first time in Scripture in connection with this incident (Gen. xiv. 18). The various titles of God are used in Scripture with precision and with special regard to the relationship intended in each particular passage. For instance, Gen. i. 1 - ii. 3 treat of creation, and the title used throughout the record is El, "God".

Immediately we commence "the generations", in verse 4, the title changes to "the Lord God". Coming to Abraham's time we have not only the title "The Most High God", but in Gen. xvii. 1:--

> "I am El Shaddai, walk before Me and be thou perfect", and again in Exod. vi. 3 we read:--

> "I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac and unto Jacob, by the name of El Shaddai, but by My name Jehovah was I not known to them."

The Priest upon His throne.

Melchisedec was both king and priest. These two offices were kept severely distinct under the economy of the law. We all know the awful thing that fell upon Uzziah when as king he sought the priesthood also. In Christ alone can these two wondrous offices meet. Zech. vi. 12, 13 says:--

> "Behold the man whose name is the BRANCH . . . . . he shall be a priest upon his throne."

The epistle of "suffering and the glory that follows" names those who thus overcome "a royal priesthood" (I Pet. ii. 9), and Revelation, that book of the overcomer, speaks of Christ as:--

> (1). Prince of the kings of the earth—KING.
> (2). One who looses from sin by His blood—PRIEST.

and as a result constitutes those thus blessed:--

> "Kings and priests unto God and His Father" (Rev. i. 5, 6).

Melchisedec is the priest of the victor and the Lord is seen in that capacity in Rev. i. This is shown by noticing what particular incident of Melchisedec's history the apostle next mentions.

The Priest of the overcomer.

> "Who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings" (Heb. vii. 1).

Gen. xiv. gives the names of these kings and describes the battle which they fought. Lot, type of the worldly believer, type of the one who would not "lose his soul" as Abraham did, become involved in the fate of Sodom and becomes prisoner.

It is suggestive that the one who escaped and came with tidings tells "Abram the Hebrew"—"Abram the pilgrim"—a title that suggests the very opposite of Lot's condition. He it was who overcame these kings, brought back the spoils and rescued Lot. It is here, at this moment of victory, that Melchisedec appears. The effect of this meeting is seen in Abraham's reply to the king of Sodom:--

> "I have lift up mine hand unto the Lord, the Most High God, the possessor of heaven and earth, that I will not take from a thread even to a shoelatchet, and that I will not take anything that is thine, lest thou shouldest say, I have made Abram rich" (Gen. xiv. 22, 23).

Heb. vii. does not mention this effect upon Abraham, but says:--

> "And blessed him, to whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all."

Both these items are expanded by the apostle in verses 4-10. We leave them for the moment to learn a little more concerning this great priesthood. The apostle now proceeds to interpret the meaning of the word Melchisedec:--

> "First being by interpretation king of righteousness, and after that also king of Salem, which is, king of peace" (verse 2).

Many of the names of Old Testament characters seem to be prophetic of their place in the Divine scheme. Abel, Noah, and Peleg are examples. Abraham is an example of a man's name being changed to fit changed circumstances. The apostle finds design in the order of the titles here:--

First, king of righteousness.
Then, king of peace.

This he repeats in another form in Heb. xii. 11, where he speaks of the peaceable fruits of righteousness, the righteousness evidently coming first.

> "Without father, without mother, without descent" (verse 3).

These words cannot be taken absolutely of Melchisedec, otherwise he could have had no existence at all, but relatively, in connection with his office as priest. Those who could not prove their genealogies in the time of the return from captivity were refused admittance into the priesthood (Ezra ii. 61-63). The words "without descent" strictly rendered should read "without genealogy". The words of the apostle by no means teach that Melchisedec absolutely had no "descent", but that such descent was not "recorded", which recording is the essence of the word genealogy, of Melchisedec it is further written that he had:--

> "Neither beginning of days nor end of life" (verse 3).

The priests of the Levitical order had both the beginning and the end of their term of office fixed by law. A priest's term of ministration was called his "days" (Luke i. 23), and the priests, the sons of Kohath, began their service at thirty years of age and ended it at fifty. Summing up these points of resemblance the apostle says, "but being like unto the Son of God, abides a priest perpetually". The construction of the whole sentence seems to be as follows:--

> "This Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the Most High God . . . . . abides a priest perpetually."

The remaining words are a parenthetic explanation given in order to show a series of comparisons with the Son of God. The greatness of Melchisedec himself, however, is the immediate concern of the apostle, in order that the infinite greatness of Christ may be the better understood. So he continues.

The testimony of the tenth.

> "Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils" (verse 4).

The word used for spoils (akrothinion) is composed of thin, "a heap of corn" and akros, "the top". The top of a heap of corn indicates "the best", and the suggestion is that Abraham gave a tithe of the best. Not that Abraham tithed the best of the spoil only, for Heb. vii. 2 says, "he gave him tithes of all", but that what he did give as a tithe was taken from the very best. Here therefore is one item which contributes to the impression of "greatness" which Scripture gives to Melchisedec. But this is not all. Not only is our attention directed to the tithe, and the fact that it was made up of the best of the spoils, but we are called upon to observe who it is that gave these titles.

> "Unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils."

Dr. Owen says that the conjunction "even" is emphatic and, though joined with "the tenth", yet in construction it must be understood with Abraham; not "unto whom Abraham gave even a tenth", but, "unto whom even Abraham gave a tenth".

Abraham is here called "the patriarch". The Hebrews held that there were three sort of patriarchs. The heads of the twelve tribes (that is the twelve sons of Jacob) and David also were called patriarchs (Acts vii. 8, 9; ii. 29). Of greater dignity than these were held Isaac and Jacob, but chiefest of all was Abraham, "the first father" of the race. If therefore one were greater than Abraham, how great he must be! This is the argument of the apostle.

The sons of Levi in their capacity as priests received tithes from the people according to the law, yet these men, says verse 8, were mortal, but Melchisedec, in type, "liveth". Levi was in the loins of his father Abraham when the tithe was given, and so, in practice, the whole priesthood of Israel acknowledged the superiority of the order of Melchisedec. Not only is Melchisedec's greatness manifested in what Abraham gave to him, but also in what he gave to Abraham:--

> "But he whose genealogy is not reckoned from them
> (1). received tithes from Abraham, and
> (2). blessed him that had the promises" (verse 6).

The greater Abraham is made to appear, the greater must Melchisedec be, for "without all contradiction the less is blessed of the better" (verse 7). Abraham is specially marked out as "the patriarch" and "he who received the promises". That this receiving of the promises was no small thing Heb. vi. 13-16 bears witness. Nevertheless it was Melchisedec who blessed Abraham.

We have now passed in review the fourth of a series of comparisons instituted with the object of showing the greatness of Christ. We have in:--

(1). Chapter i.—His superiority to ANGELS. He the Son. They the ministers.
(2). Chapter iii.—His superiority to MOSES. He the Son. Moses the servants.
(3). Chapter iv.—His superiority to JOSHUA. Jesus, the Son of God (verse 14).
Joshua, the son of Nun (verse 8).
(4). Chapter v.-vii.—His superiority to AARON.
The Levitical priesthood is filled by men who die.
The oath consecrates the Son as priest in the power of endless life.

The way is now clear for the apostle's teaching concerning "perfection", which has never been lost sight of, although to our lesser minds the amount of detail, and involved argument, may seem to indicate a departure from the original purpose. "If therefore perfection . . . . ." is the apostle's argument from all that has been under review in this article, and this we must now consider.

The changed order (vii. 11-18).

Having considered together verses 1-10 of chapter vii., and having seen the greatness of the Melchisedec priesthood, we are prepared for the transference of that greatness to Christ, and for its connection with the great theme of perfection. Before attempting any further detail it will be a safeguard for us to have the broad outline of that great section which is devoted to the priesthood and sacrifice of Christ.

Heb. vii. 1 - x. 18.

A | vii. 1-10. This man (4). A priest—Eis to dienekes.
B | vii. 11 - x. 4. PERFECTION.
c1 | vii. 11. No perfection by Levitical priesthood and carnal commandment.
d1 | vii. 12-18. But by Melchisedec priesthood.
c2 | vii. 19. No perfection by Law.
d2 | vii. 20-ix. 8. But by oath to the Son.
c3 | ix. 9, 10. No perfection by carnal ordinances.
d3 | ix. 11-28. But by perfect tabernacle and better sacrifice.
c4 | x. 1-4. No perfection by sacrifices of the law.
A | x. 5-18. "But this man" (12). As priest sat down—Eis to dienekes.

To some minds "structures" make no appeal. The subject before us is so solemn and so vital that we feel that much blessed truth will lose its force if not seen as a whole. Therefore we tarry to draw attention to the lesson of the above structure. It will be noticed that the opening and closing members are to do with the Melchisedec priesthood of Christ in several important particulars.

(1). "THIS MAN".—Chapter vii. 4 by using this expression draws attention to the greatness of Melchisedec above both Abraham and Levi.
(2). "BUT THIS MAN".—of chapter x. 12 takes up the theme with reference to the superiority of the sacrifice and priesthood of Christ.
(3). Both passages focus upon one peculiar expression, viz., eis to dienekes. This phrase occurs in Heb. vii. 3; x. 1, 12 & 14, and nowhere else in the N.T. It is translated twice "continually" and twice "for ever". "For a continuance" is a good rendering. In the case of the type, Melchisedec, the silence of Scripture as to his "beginning" of days or "end" of life sets him forth typically as a priest after the power of an endless life. In the case of Christ, the antitype, the contrast is between the priest who "standeth daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices which can never take away sins", and Christ, "Who, after He had offered one sacrifice (in contrast with the 'offering oftentimes') for sins" (in contrast with those sacrifices which could never take away sins) "sat down for a continuance" (instead of repeatedly going over the same ritual, "standing daily").

Things that make for perfection.

If we take note of these opening and closing sections therefore, it becomes evident that "perfection" cannot possibly be attained under the ministry of priests who themselves needed an offering for their own sins, who were made after the law of a commandment which respected their mortal condition, and whose service stood in meats and drinks and baptisms—"carnal ordinances"—that really indicated that the way into the Holiest of all had not been opened. Such ordinances and sacrifices failing to touch the conscience failed altogether, and were only "shadows" and "not the very image" of the good things to come.

To believers who were never brought up under the law, who never boasted in "the glory, and the covenant, and the giving of the law, and the service of God", the turning from the shadow of Aaron, his tabernacle, his priesthood and his sacrifice and the abiding priesthood, seems a simple act of reasonable faith. To the Hebrew, cradled in the thought that of all nations the nation of Israel alone had the oracles of God, such a turning would be a wrench, a rupture, a counting "gain" as "loss" and as so much "refuse" (Phil. iii. 8). Therefore God in His kindness and His condescension reasons with them step by step, until the last ground of boasting in the law is destroyed and Christ is seen as all in all.

We commence therefore our study with an argument:--

> "If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood (for under it the people received the law), what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec and not be called after the order of Aaron?" (Heb. vii. 11).

In David's time the service of God's house was raised to its greatest height. If David himself did not actually build the temple, the complete revelation was made to him of that house exceeding magnifical, with its golden vessels, its courses of priests, its wonderful psalms, yet it is David and no other who gives us Psalm cx. saying:--

> "The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at My right hand, until I make Thine enemies Thy footstool. The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec" (verses 1 and 4).

The apostle, therefore, asks a pointed question, what further need for another priest, of another order, if perfection were attainable under the Levitical priesthood? Of all the reasons that are most trenchant that which the apostle himself gives in parenthesis is the one, viz., "For under it the people received the law" (verse 11).

Perfection and Legalism.

It has been objected that the giving of the law from Mount Sinai preceded and did not follow the setting up of the Levitical priesthood. We do not think the expression "received the law" refers to the giving of the law at Sinai, and that it is hardly a good translation. In chapter iv. 2 we find that the people were "evangelized", here, in vii. 11, we see that with the institution of the Levitical priesthood the people were "legalized". They were shut up to carnal ordinances, mortal priests, and the blood of bulls and of goats, until Christ should come Who by His coming should take away the first, that He may establish the second (Heb. x. 9):--

> "For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law" (verse 12).

This was a sore point with the Jew. Stephen was stoned to death because they said that he taught that:--

> "Jesus of Nazareth shall . . . . . change the customs which Moses delivered us" (Acts vi. 14).

The same charge was brought against Paul:--

> "Men of Israel, help: This is the man that teacheth all men everywhere against the people, and the law, and this place" (the temple) (Acts xxi. 28).

Those who had become believers from among Israel still retained their regard for the law:--

> "Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all zealous for the law. And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying that they ought not to circumcise their children, neither walk after the customs" (Acts xxi. 20, 21).

It is evident that in dealing with the change of law and priesthood the apostle had a delicate task before him, and whereas the Gentile could easily grant the whole situation without scruple, the whole constitution of the Jew rebelled against the very idea. So it is that we have so much detail and the consideration of the subject from so many different points of view. In the section vii. 11-18 the argument revolves round the fact that the O.T. recognizes a change in the order of priesthood. In the law priesthood is exclusively connected with one tribe, LEVI. Christ however sprang out of JUDAH, but of this "Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood" (verse 14). "It is evident", said the apostle, "that our Lord sprang out of Judah". "It is more abundantly down right evident" that the priesthood and the law with it must be set aside, for the Scripture testifies:--

> "Thou art a priest for ever after the order of MELCHISEDEC" (verse 17).

The new priesthood differs from that of the Levitical order in one grand particular. The Levitical priest was made:--

> "After the law of a carnal commandment" (verse 16), but the Melchisedec order was made:--

> "After the power of an endless life" (verse 16).

One more item is added before this section concludes, and that is that not only does the change of priesthood necessitate the setting aside of the law, but the necessity to have such a change indicates the failure of that law so far as "perfection" is concerned:--

> "There is, moreover, a setting aside of preceding law, because it was inefficient and unprofitable" (verse 18).

In verse 16 the law was spoken of as "carnal". While viewed in itself the law is holy, just and good, that the law is "weak through the flesh", and though "ordained to life" will be found "unto death" (Rom. vii.). The sentiment of Heb. vii. 11 is repeated in viii. 17:--

vii. 11-18.	|	a |	Question.—"If perfection were by the Levitical order?"
		b |	What need for another priesthood?
		c |	The law abrogated, as weak and profitless.
viii. 7, 8.	|	a |	Question.—"If the first covenant were faultless?"
		b |	No need for seeking a second covenant.
		c |	Finding fault, He said, "I make a new covenant".

The theme of the first passage (vii. 11-18) is the better priesthood, the theme of the second (viii. 7, 8) is the better covenant.

All this was necessary to clear the way for a faith that would behold with single eye the Lord Jesus Christ a prophet, priest, king and sacrifice, and the "perfecter of faith".

Salvation unto the uttermost, or what the law could not do (vii. 19-25).

No perfection is possible under the Levitical priesthood, therefore the greater reason for thankfully believing Him Who is a priest after the order of Melchisedec. Such is the argument and conclusion of vii. 11-18. In verse 11 there is a parenthesis, viz., "for under it the people received the law"; this parenthesis is now brought forward and dealt with in the same way as was the Levitical priesthood:--

> "For the law perfected nothing (or no one), but the superinduction of a better hope (did), through which we draw night to God" (verse 19).

The three items of this verse characterize the whole section of vii. 19 - ix. 8:-- (1). The failure of the law.

(2). The better hope, wherewith is connected better promises and a better covenant.
(3). Access to God. Positively stated to be through Christ (vii. 25).
Denied throughout the typical dispensation (ix. 8).

Heb. vii. 19 - ix. 8.

A | vii. 19-21. | a | The law perfected no one.
b | The oath and the priesthood.
B | vii. 22. "By so much." Jesus the surety of a better covenant.
C | vii. 23-27. | c | Salvation to the uttermost.
d | He needeth not to offer for His own sins.
A | vii. 28. | a | The law ordains infirm men.
b | The oath ordains the Son ("consecrated" = Gk. "perfected").
NOTE:--viii. 1-5 is parenthetical reference to true tabernacle and ministry.
B | viii. 6-13. "By how much." Mediator of the better covenant.
NOTE:--ix. 1-6 is parenthetical reference to typical tabernacle and ministry.
C | ix. 7, 8. | d | The high priest offered for himself as well as the people.
c | The way into the holiest not made manifest.

The three items indicated in verse 19 are seen under the three letters "A", "B" & "C".

Access to God is a privilege beyond human computation, and this was not possible under the Levitical priesthood or the law, by reason of the weakness of the system arising out of the flesh. Throughout the dispensation of the law is the "fear of death" (which Heb. ii. i5 declared held the O.T. saints in bondage), and the crying need for a priest who stood in the power of an endless life, in other words the risen Son of God.

The superinduction of the better hope.

Let us now give attention to verse 19. If it says the law perfected nothing, it leads on to say that something else did. The second part of the verse is elliptical. Something is omitted which we must supply in order to get the sense. A closely parallel passage is that of Rom. viii. 3:-- is the sequel, but the word "did" has to be supplied.

"For what the law could not do . . . . . God (did) by sending His Son."

There are some who understand Heb. vii. 19 to mean this:--

"The law perfected nothing, but it was the bringing in of a better hope through which we draw nigh unto God."

This is true. The law contained type and shadow that ever pointed on to Christ. It did not reach the end itself, but it did bring in the better hope that attained unto it. This however, while being true, is not the teaching of the verse before us, so far as we understand it. The better hope is said to have been "superinduced", epeisagoge. In Gal. iii. 19 the law which was "superadded" was "for the sake of transgressions" and was to operate "till the Seed should come", when it would be abrogated as being "weak and unprofitable" failing as it did to touch the conscience.

When the fullness of time comes and the Son of God entered into His office, there was the "superinduction" of a better hope which set aside the types and shadows, and actually did give access to God. It is called the "superinduction of a better hope". This better hope does not look for an entrance into the land of promise, but looks for "a better country, an heavenly". It is connected with a "better covenant", in contrast with the old covenant that was made after the exodus and before the land of promise was reached. "Better promises" lie behind this hope, a "better resurrection" lies ahead, and "better sacrifices" lie beneath.

This better hope brings us nigh unto God. This is what the law could not do, and therefore this access to God must be intimately connected with "perfection". That this is literally so will be found in the case of Christ:--

> "We have such an high priest, Who is set at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens" (viii. 1).

As the perfecter of faith He is > "set down at the right hand of the throne of God" (xii. 2).

In the Spirit we, through Him, draw nigh now, but this only pledges actual access when the day arrives for the redemption of the purchased possession. The superiority of this better hope lies in the superiority of its mediator. That superiority has been shown in various ways. The particular thought before us in verses 20-22 lies in the fact that the Lord Jesus was made a priest by oath.

The oath that perfects.

The argument is found in the words:--

> "And inasmuch . . . . . by so much . . . . ." (verses 20-22).

The intervening passages give the fact of the oath, and the result, the better covenant. The hope and the covenant were "better" in the same proportion that the pre-eminence of the Melchisedec priesthood was above that of Aaron. That pre-eminence is discovered in the "oath".

The force of the oath and its bearing upon the subject is found in the added words "and will not repent". The priesthood of Christ was immutably secure. Not only was there this attribute of immutability connected with the priesthood of Christ arising out of the nature of the oath sworn by God, but further, it arises out of the fact that He ever liveth:--

> "And they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death: but this man, because He continues (as a priest) for the age, hath an intransferable priesthood (verses 23 and 24).

See the argument in the word "continue" or "abide" in verse 3 which speaks of the character of priesthood and not of life itself. "Unchangeable", aparabatos, means incapable of transmission. Melchisedec had neither father nor mother—and Christ as the Melchisedec priest has no need to secure a successor. His priesthood is never terminated by death.

> "By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better covenant" (verse 22).

The word "surety" is egguos, and is allied to eggizo, "to draw nigh" of verse 19. The old covenant failed to "bring us to God", the new covenant gloriously succeeds. The surety of that new covenant is not the blood of bulls or goats, but the blood of Christ. Of such a priest and such a surety the apostle says:--

> "Wherefore He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them" (verse 25).

We need to ponder these words, or else we may miss the sense:--

> "He is able to save". That is a blessed fact.
> "He is able also to save", suggests something in addition.
> "He is able also to save to the UTTERMOST", reveals what that addition is.

Salvation unto all perfection.

Once more we are not confined to "salvation", but the "so great salvation" which the Hebrews were in danger of letting slip (Heb. ii.). This is the "aionian salvation" connected with obedience and suffering that makes perfect (Heb. v.). To the uttermost is eis to panteles. Panteles is from pan, all, and telos, end, from which we obtain teleiosis, perfection. He is able not only to save so that condemnation is avoided, but He is able ALSO to save unto all perfection those that come unto God by Him. He accomplishes this "uttermost" salvation by "intercession". This word "intercession" is not limited to the sense of supplication, but to the extension of aid of any sort.

If this "salvation" be taken to indicate salvation in an evangelical sense, shall we not find a difficulty in making that salvation depend upon the Lord's pesent intercession? This "uttermost" salvation He is attending to in His office as high priest:--

> "Wherefore in all things it behooved Him to be made like unto His brethren, that He might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succour them that are tempted" (Heb. ii. 17, 18).

This is salvation eis to panteles; the Lord not only saves all that trust in Him, but He is able also to save to the end, through temptation and trial. It is this that makes the "better hope" an anchor for the soul. He Who is its sure anchorage has "suffered being tempted":--

> "For we have not an high priest which cannot touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin" (Heb. iv. 15).

#41. Heb. vii. 26 - ix. 20.
The principal thing.
A seated priest in a heavenly sanctuary
pp. 145 - 156

The ruling theme of this epistle is that of "perfection", and chapters v. - x. are occupied with the office of Christ as priest after the Order of Melchisedec, and with His one great offering. Both the priesthood, the sacrifice and the heavenly tabernacle are verbally connected with "perfection".

The priest of the perfect.

The reservation of the apostle manifested in v. 11 indicates that the doctrine associated with this priesthood is by no means elementary, but can only be appreciated by those of "full age", or as the word is, "the prefect" (v. 14).

This priesthood is also closely associated with another aspect of "perfection", namely, that of the "overcomer". This is indicated by the first appearance of Melchisedec in Scripture when he met Abraham, the overcomer, returning from the slaughter of the kings.

A comparison and a contrast.

Heb. v. opens with a description of the service of the high priest. He offered both gifts and sacrifices, and also had compassion on the ignorant. His limitations are indicated by the fact that > "He also is compassed with infirmity, and by reason hereof he ought, as for the people, so also for himself, to offer for sins" (v. 2, 3).

The apostle proceeds to develop in some detail a comparison and a contrast.

First in comparison.—Chapters v. 7-9 with its reference to Gethsemane reveals in Christ a high priest Who can have compassion because He Himself had suffered being tempted. The glorious superiority of Christ's Melchisedec priesthood occupies chapters vi. and vii., reaching its zenith in the record of that perfected priest Who is able to save unto all perfection all that come unto God by Him.

Then the contrast.—The apostle returns after this climax has been reached to point a contrast, taking up the statement made in v. 3, saying:--

> "For such an high priest became us, Who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens; WHO NEEDETH NOT daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's; for this He did once, when He offered up Himself" (vii. 26, 27).

This truth has already found expression in Heb. iv. 14, 15; there we find reference to Christ as priest Who has "passed through the heavens", Who is touched "by the feeling of our infirmities", Who was nevertheless separate from sinners, "yet without sin".

Sin and its relation to Christ.

Scripture is never ambiguous where the personal sinlessness of Christ is involved. If Heb. iv. 14, 15 shows the Lord identifying Himself with His people in their trials, it immediately adds "sin excepted". If II Cor. v. 21 shows the Lord in His sacrifice identified with sin, it immediately adds, "Who knew no sin". If Rom. viii. 3 shows the Lord identified with flesh and blood, the sinlessness of Christ is expressed in the words, "the likeness of sinful flesh". As this subject is one of the first importance, let us pause to examine the words of Heb. vii. 27 concerning the sinlessness of the Lord Jesus.

A fourfold testimony.

HOLY.—There are three Greek words which are translated in the A.V. by the word "holy", they are hagios, hosios and hieros. Hosios is the word used here. Its first occurrence is Acts ii. 27:--

> "Neither wilt Thou suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption."

Hosios is used in the LXX to translate the Hebrew word chasid, which is rendered not only by the word "holy", but also by the word "merciful". Hagios implies the thought of separation, but hosios suggests holiness that can stoop to have mercy upon those who are in themselves defiled, without contracting defilement thereby.

The Syriac version uses a word here that means "pure". This blessed character was our Saviour's from birth. It is not an acquired holiness, but inherent. We can appreciate the choice of this particular word in the message of the angel to Mary in Luke i. 35:--

> "The power of the Highest shall overshadow thee, therefore also that HOLY THING which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God."

Such was His nature. His acts were in perfect harmony with His inherent holiness.

HARMLESS (akakos).—This word occurs in but one other passage, viz., Rom. xvi. 18, where it translated "simple". In the LXX version of Psa. xxvi. akakos occurs in verses 1 and 11, where the A.V. reads "integrity". The intervening verses 2-10 are a practical expansion of the meaning of akakos. Reins and heart examined and tried (verse 2). No fellowship with vain persons and dissemblers, but rather hatred of all wicked works (4, 5). And so throughout the Psalm. All this and more is true of the Lord Jesus.

As concerning hosios ("holy") Scripture declares, "He knew no sin"; as concerning akakos ("harmless") Scripture declares, "He did no sin, neither was there guile found in His mouth". The blessed man of Psa. i. and the holy one of Psa. xv. & xvi. is Christ.

UNDEFILED (amiantos).—This word occurs in Heb. xiii. 4; James i. 27; I Pet. i. 4. The difference between akakos and amiantos is that in the former the truth conveyed is that the Lord did no evil, while in the latter the truth conveyed is that He could not be contaminated by evil in any one else. He touched a leper, but He needed no cleansing. A woman with an issue of blood touched Him, and while virtue went out of Him to her, no contamination passed from her to Him. In the midst of publicans and harlots, called by the Pharisees, "a gluttonous man and a winebibber, and friend of publicans and sinners", He ever remained "the lamb without blemish and without spot". Without natural blemish (the thought in akakos), without contracted spot (amiantos).

In all this the Lord Jesus transcended the type. The tabernacle needed an atonement by reason of the uncleanness of Israel (Lev. xvi. 16), but such cleansing was unnecessary to the Lord. The Levitical priesthood sinned and needed a sacrifice. The Lord knew no sin, did no sin, and needed no sacrifice. Earthly priesthood terminates at death. The Lord liveth and His priesthood is intransmissible. In all these respects the Lord was:--

SEPARATE FROM SINNERS.—This we may see from two points of view.

(1). As to His manhood.—Born of a woman, yet from birth "that holy thing", and while being made partaker of flesh and blood, nevertheless coming in the "likeness" only of sinful flesh.

(2). As to His manner of life.—He was truly man. He ate, He drank, He slept, worked, suffered, died. To the woman of Samaria He was "a Jew" (John iv. 9). To His fellow-townsmen He was "Joseph's son" (John vi. 42), yet throughout His life He was never "separate from sinners". Even though a disciple leaned upon the bosom of the Lord at supper, never once do we find a follower of the Saviour addressing Him as "Jesus". Shall His condescension, His sympathy, His fellowship warrant unholy familiarity? Believers, let us remember that He is our Lord, and let us render the honour due unto His name.

Thus we have four statements, arranged in two pairs, indicating for our comfort the high priest that "became us".

HOLY.	\	As to	UNDEFILED.	\	As to
HARMLESS.	/	nature.	SEPARATE FROM SINNERS.	/	practice.

Heaven itself.

It is evident that this priest could not be a minister of the earthly and typical tabernacle. His peculiar separateness proclaims Him to be the minister of the true tabernacle, "heaven itself". Therefore the apostle continues, "and made higher than the heavens".

There is as much stress placed upon the "heavenly" character of the Lord's priesthood as upon His sinlessness. It will be of service to note some of the statements of Scripture under this head:--

> "Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God" (Heb. iv. 14).
>
> "We have such an high priest, Who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens" (Heb. viii. 1).

The heavenly priesthood of Christ receives its fullest exposition in chapters viii. & ix., and reaches its climax in ix. 24:--

> "For Christ is not entered the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into HEAVEN ITSELF, now to appear in the presence of God for us."

The one offering once for all.

Before the apostle can proceed to the expansion of the subject of the heavenly ministry of the Lord, it is necessary that one matter shall be dealt with, which if left ambiguous might lead to deadly error. The earthly high priest not only offered up sacrifice for the sins of the people, but he was obliged also to offer a sacrifice:--

> "First for his own sins" (Heb. v. 3; vii. 27).

Here we perceive a strong contrast, for the heavenly priest was "holy, harmless, undefiled", and therefore needed no sacrifice for Himself. When He died, He died "the JUST for the unjust", consequently:--

> "He needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for His own sins, and then for the people's, for this He did once, when He offered up Himself" (Heb. vii. 27).

In seeking out the argument of this epistle the reader is called upon to exercise continual watchfulness. We found that the consideration of the heavenly ministry of the Lord was postponed, in order that the question of His one offering might be dealt with, and now we shall find that the consideration of two features of that offering mentioned in vii. 27 is deferred until the heavenly ministry has been more fully opened up.

The two features that await exposition are:--

1. The fact that the Lord offered one sacrifice once for all.
2. The fact that He offered, not bulls and goats, but that He offered up Himself.

One further item is necessary to complete the list of the distinctive features of the Lord's high priesthood, and that is

The law and the oath.

> "For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity, but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, Who is PERFECTED unto the age" (Heb. vii. 28).

There are two items here that demonstrate the superiority of the priesthood of the Son. They are:--

1. The oath compared with the law as to immutability. The oath is more solemn, and it immutability is indicated in Heb. vi. 17.
2. The oath and the law as to sequence. The oath was made "since the law", and what this implies is explained in Heb. vii. 11:--

> "If therefore PERFECTION were by the Levitical priesthood . . . . . what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec and not be called after the order of Aaron?" (vii. 11).

That question has now received its answer. Perfection could only come through the priest after the order of Melchisedec, whose priesthood is not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life. All truth, whether dispensational, doctrinal or experimental, focuses upon the person of the risen Christ. The whole fabric of Mosaic ritual vanishes into the shadows before the face of Him Whom could say, "I am the resurrection and the life".

With the "perfecting of the Son" by the oath we reach the conclusion of the lengthy comparison commenced in chapter v. Before entering into a detailed examination of the tabernacle and its sacrifices and seeing them as shadows of the true, a short chapter is devoted to bringing the teaching of chapters v. - vii. to a point: "Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum" (viii. 1).

The principal thing.

The teaching of this passage is something more than a summary. The word kephalaion (sum) may mean the summing up of a number as in Num. iv. 2, "Take the sum of the sons of Kohath", or it may be the principal part as in Num. v. 7, "He shall recompense the trespass with the principal thereof". The following translation seems to convey the sense of the passage.

> "The principal thing, however, among those things of which we are speaking is that we have such a high priest Who is seated on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man" (Heb. viii. 1, 2).

A seated priest in a heavenly sanctuary.

It will be well to prepare the reader for the necessity of a certain amount of close attention. The arguments of this central part of Hebrews are involved, and there are, as the apostle has said, some things "hard to be understood" concerning this heavenly priesthood. There is a wealth of detail and a formidable series of sub-divisions to exercise our patience, but at the beginning the apostle would have us look away from these and let our hearts dwell upon "the principal thing". We have a seated priest; that tells of a finished work; this seated priest is the minister of no earthly tabernacle, He has entered "heaven itself". The consideration of this finished work and this heavenly tabernacle occupies the bulk of chapters ix. and x.

Just as all the tabernacle and its services revolve around the ark and the mercy seat, so all that the apostle has said concerning the excellence of Christ is concentrated upon His once offered sacrifice. This is the theme that is immediately introduced in viii. 3:--

> "For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices; wherefore it is of necessity that this man should have somewhat to offer."

The "somewhat" suggests something different from the offerings of the law, and verse 4 puts forward the argument that the Lord could have no priesthood on earth, as the prescribed offerings were already ministered by an earthly and an exclusive priesthood. Their service however was typical of a higher and a greater.

> "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things" (viii. 5).

The Levitical economy was one of type and shadow:--

> "As Moses was admonished (or 'warned") of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; for see, saith He, that thou make all things according to the pattern shown thee in the mount" (viii. 5).

The fact that Moses was "warned" (see same word in Matt. ii. 22; and Heb. xi. 7), suggests the importance of this typical representation, whilst the parallel in I Chron. xxviii. 11-19, concerning the pattern of the temple, confirms it. The typical teaching of the tabernacle is enlarged upon in Heb. ix. For the moment we are occupied with the "principal thing", a seated priest in a heavenly sanctuary.

The Mediator of a better covenant.

The excellency of the ministry of this seated priest is further enforced by the superiority of the covenant which forms the sphere of His activities. The degree of this superiority is gauged "by how much" the new covenant is superior to the old. This forms a fruitful line of teaching in II Cor. iii. We have, with the re-introduction of the subject of the covenant, returned to the argument of Heb. vii. 18, but we have returned with fuller knowledge. There, in vii. 18, we learned that the commandment which appointed the Levitical priesthood was "disannulled" because of its "weakness" and "unprofitableness". Here, in viii. 6-13, we learn that the covenant with which the Levitical priesthood was associated was likewise set aside as being "not blameless", the Lord "finding fault" with it and introducing the new covenant as the better hope founded upon better promises, ministered by a better priest, and ratified by a better sacrifice.

A lengthy quotation from Jer. xxxi. occupies Heb. viii. 8-12, which testifies in no uncertain way to the nature and scope of the new covenant.

The new covenant.

There are still quite a number of God's children who have hazy ideas concerning the new covenant (or testament as it is translated in Matt. xxvi. 28), therefore it will be helpful if we set out its chief features from the passage before us, before passing on to chapter ix.

1. The new covenant is made with Israel and Judah.
2. It is not engraven upon stone as at Sinai, but written upon the heart.
3. The old covenant was connected with the exodus from Egypt, and its commemorative feast was the Passover, whilst the new covenant is connected with a greater and a spiritual deliverance, and its commemorative feast was instituted at the Passover by the Lord (Matt. xxvi. 26).
4. It is essentially connected with the national restoration of Israel (Jer. xxxi. 35-40).

The apostle sums up the matter for us in Heb. viii. 13:--

> "In that He saith, A new covenant, He hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away."

But Thou remainest.

In chapter i. the present creation is said to wax old and pass away, and in contrast with this is placed the Lord of Whom it says, "but Thou remainest". At the end of the epistle (chapter xiii.) the same truth emerges, viz., "Jesus Christ, the same, yesterday, to-day, and for the age". This is the blessed truth of chapters viii. and ix. Here in viii. 13 we have the waxing old and the passing away of the old covenant in contrast with the unchanging priesthood and heavenly sanctuary of the new covenant.

A greater and more perfect tabernacle.

In the structure of Heb. vii. 1 - x. 18 given on page 86 of this Volume, it will be observed that the member governed by the title, "The oath of the Son", extends from vii. 20 - ix. 8 where we reach another member entitled, "No perfection by carnal ordinances". Chapter ix. 1-8 therefore concludes the section commenced in vii. 20.

Heb. ix. 1-8.

A | 1, 2-. The first covenant.
B | -2-. The tabernacle prepared (kataskeuazo).
C | -2-5. The contents. In the first; in the second.
B | 6-. These things prepared (kataskeuazo).
C | -6, 7. The priests. In the first; in the second.
A | 8. The first tabernacle.

Two features of the first covenant are considered:--

(1). Ordinances of divine service.
(2). A worldly sanctuary.

A great controversy has arisen over the meaning of "the worldly sanctuary". The word "worldly" is a translation of kosmikon, which occurs in one other place in the N.T., viz., Titus ii. 12. It does not occur in the LXX. One of the causes of diversity in translation is that kosmikon is cognate with kosmion, which is translated "modest" in I Tim. ii. 9, and with kosmeo, which is translated "adorn" in the same verse. The underlying idea of both words is that of something orderly. Rotherham accordingly translates the passage in Heb. ix. 1:--

"Even the holy ritual well arranged."

Some, because of certain remarks made by Josephus and Philo, consider that the intention of the apostle was to show that the tabernacle typified the world. Those who desire a detailed examination of the various renderings should consult the note in Bloomfield's Greek Testament, ninth edition.

Not made with hands.

The simple explanation of the word kosmikon ("worldly") is discovered in the purpose of the apostle who sets the earthly type over against the heavenly reality, the true, the heavenly tabernacle, "which the Lord pitched and not man", and which was "not made with hands, that is to say not of this creation". The holy places made with hands are called "figures of the true". The true tabernacle being called "heaven itself" (Heb. ix. 24).

As the priest and the offering constitute "the principle thing", the apostle passes over without comment the various articles of furniture used in the tabernacle, their typical teaching not being contributory to the theme of the epistle. A more or less detailed examination of the typical teaching of the tabernacle will find its place in the more elementary series, "Fundamentals of Dispensational Truth". We just stay to observe here that the articles of furniture fall into two groups, viz., (i.) Those in the holy place, and (ii.) Those in the most holy place.

(i.) IN THE HOLY PLACE.
(1). The candlestick
(2). The table.
(3). The shewbread.

(ii.) IN THE MOST HOLY PLACE.
(1). The censer.
(2). The ark.
(3). The golden pot of manna.
(4). Aaron's rod that budded.
(5). The tables of the covenant.
(6). The cherubim of glory.
(7). The mercy seat.

"of which we cannot now speak particularly."

A lesson enforced.

It will be noticed that the golden altar of incense is omitted from the first list, and that a golden censer is added to the second list. If we interpret the golden censer as the golden altar, as some do, then we make the apostle to teach that the golden altar was in "the holiest of all", which it certainly was not. The LXX uses the word thumiaterion ("censer") in II Chron. xxvi. 19 and Ezek. viii. 11, where both passages read "censer" and can mean nothing else.

It seems to be the intention of the apostle to enforce the lesson of Hebrews by this somewhat unexpected alteration. Both the golden altar and the censer speak of intercession, and our hearts are directed upward to the right hand of God, where the great high priest ever liveth to make intercession, having passed into the heavenly holiest of all. We read in Lev. xvi. 12, 13, that the high priest took a censer full of burning coals of fire from off the altar and made a cloud of incense to cover the mercy seat, and this type of the interceding priest penetrating beyond the veil is the feature seized upon by the apostle and emphasized in this way.

The Holy Ghost this signifying.

At Heb. ix. 6 the apostle resumes his subject, saying, "Now when these things were thus ordained". We have drawn attention in the structure to the fact that the words "ordained" in verse 6 and "made" in verse 2 are the same in the original and should read in both cases "prepared". Immediately the apostle resumes his theme he brings forward the great question of the priestly service, and contrasts the typical with the true. Into the first tabernacle the priests had continual access, entering daily in the course of their office, but:--

> "Into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people" (Heb. ix. 7).

The particular period to which this passage refers is that section of Lev. xvi. which speaks of the Day of Atonement. There we read of the censer and its use (verse 13). There we read of the blood:--

> "Then shall he killed the goat of the sin offering that is for the people, and bring the blood within the vail" (verse 15).

There too we read:--

> "There shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation when he goeth in to make an atonement" (verse 17).

From these and similar passages the apostle draws a negative argument, then pursuing the theme through into Heb. x., he rounds off the examination with a positive argument. It will make the line of argument clearer for us if we place the two passages together.

The Negative.

> "The Holy Ghost this signifying that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing" (ix. 8)

The Positive.

> "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way" (x. 19, 20).

In these two passages lies practically the whole of the apostle's argument, and if we can keep this well in mind, the details instead of bewildering us will lend point and force to his glorious conclusion.

Notes on Ministry.

#5. The End of the Charge.

pp. 10 - 13

All lawlessness and wickedness are contrary to sound doctrine. With this negative statement I Tim. i. 10 finishes. Positively it is described as the doctrine that is according to godliness (vi. 3). Sound doctrine convinces the gainsayer (Titus i. 9), but sound doctrine demands accompanying practice.

> "But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine . . . . . In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works, in doctrine showing incorruptness, gravity, sincerity, sound speech which cannot be condemned; that our adversaries may be shamed, having no evil to bring against us" (Titus ii. 1-8).

The gainsayer will not be convinced by words only. Doctrine and practice must go hand in hand:--

> "Now the end of the charge is love" (I Tim. i. 5).

Just as in Romans and Galatians the apostle taught that love was the fulfilling of the law, so here he teaches that love is the end or the goal of grace. Telos, "end", does not mean "end" in the sense of time or termination, but "end" in the sense of goal or object. The "end" of my pen is the extreme tip of the nib, but the telos of my pen is the writing that I do. "The end (or goal) of the charge is love." Beyond all gifts, all knowledge, all power, transcending even the most abiding graces of faith and hope, is love. All right and all wrong may be reduced to the one element love.

> "A root of all evils is a love for money" (I Tim. vi. 10).

In the awful description of the perilous times given in II Tim. iii. love is prominent:-- > "Lovers of their own selves, lovers of money" (verse 2).

so the list opens.

> "Lovers of pleasures, more than lovers of God" (verse 4).

so the list closes. What was it that brought Demas down?

> "Demas has forsaken me, having loved this present age" (I Tim. iv. 8).

For whom is the crown of righteousness?

> "All those who have loved His appearing" (I Tim. iv. 8).

Now that love which is the end and goal of the charge to Timothy proceeds from a threefold source, viz., a pure heart, a good conscience, an unfeigned faith. The threefold stress is that of sincerity. In II Tim. i. 3-5 the apostle says:--

> "I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience . . . . . I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee."

The "pure heart", it will be observed, is closely associated with the avoidance of foolish and unlearned questions that gender strife (II Tim. ii. 22, 23). When Paul says he served God from his forefathers, what did he mean? and why should he have felt the necessity to say that he did so with a pure conscience? Practically every Commentary agrees on the point that the apostle worshipped God after the custom of his fathers, or according to the knowledge received from his forefathers, and appears very concerned lest the charge of the Jews against Paul that he had changed the customs and departed from the teaching of the old covenant should have any appearance of truth. In spite of the great weight of learning which is arrayed against us, we feel that we must follow the gleam and seek afresh the meaning of the apostle.

> "I thank God whom I serve from my forefathers" (apo progonon, II Tim. i. 3).

Apo is explained in Appendix 104 of The Companion Bible as being used of motion away from a place (e.g., Matt. iii. 16; viii. 1); origin or source whence anything comes, such as birth, and then says, "Apo may consequently be used of deliverance or passing away from any state or condition (e.g., Matt. i. 21; xiv. 2; Mark v. 34; Acts xiii. 8; xiv. 15; Heb. vi. 1). "From their sins" must mean "away from them"; "from the faith" (Acts xiii. 8) must mean "away from the faith". Paul's words in II Tim. i. 3 we understand to teach that he did worship God AWAY FROM his forefathers, but nevertheless with a pure conscience.

Much that Paul held most precious was diametrically opposed to the teaching of the law of Moses, and unless he had the conviction that follows revelation his conscience might sometimes have troubled him badly, and have taken the temper out of the sword of the Spirit that he wielded so valiantly in the good fight. In his defence before Felix (Acts xxiv.) he shows that already he had come some way along this journey, although at that time the dispensation of the mystery was not in operation. He was accused as a pestilent fellows, a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout all the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes, who also had gone about to profane the temple. Paul refutes the charges of sedition and profanity, but admits the new light by which he walked:-- > "But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers" (Acts xxiv. 14).

This charge on the apostle's part did not mean that he doubted the truth of Moses and the Prophets or such a fundamental as the resurrection of the dead, but that the new faith he held, though it may be deemed "heresy" by others, was God's truth to him:--

> "And herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God and toward men."

"But this I do admit."—These words are in strong contrast with the repudiation of the other verses. Paul admitted that he worshipped God away from his forefathers, and thereby merited the censure of his unregenerate kinsmen, but he protested at the same time that his conscience in the matter was clear. When we turn back to I Tim. i. we read immediately following the reference to the unfeigned faith and good conscience:--

> "From which some having missed the mark have turned aside to vain jangling; desiring to be teachers of the law, understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm" (verses 6 and 7).

The word rendered "swerve" in the A.V. and which we have rendered "miss the mark" occurs elsewhere only in vi. 21, a very evident parallel, and in II Tim. ii. 18 where the Gnostic denial of the resurrection is suggested. These opposers had missed the mark. Not understanding the apostle's standpoint, they turned aside to that which ceased to be argument and became simply confusion. The apostle did not need their instruction as to the true place of the law, as I Tim. i. 8-10 shows.

We continually meet the same thing. So far as orthodox Christianity is concerned we must be willing to be accused of departing from the worship of God as sanctioned by custom and tradition. We must be prepared to be called sectarians and heretics. We must be prepared to read long disquisitions intended for our edification, which as clearly miss the point as did the lectures given to Paul on the law. It must suffice us that "we know Whom we have believed", and the good deposit entrusted to Paul and passed on since is after all in the hands of the Lord. As stewards let us be faithful. Let us remember the glorious goal of the charge—love, and the threefold channel—a pure heart, a good conscience, an unfeigned faith, and steadily pursuing our ministry let us leave the rest with the Lord. Vain jangling belongs only to those who have "missed the point".

#6. The Contest.
pp. 61, 62

An atmosphere of conflict is palpable in the earlier verses of chapter i., and in the third reference to the charge the apostle speaks definitely of the good warfare:--

> "This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, according to the prophecies which went before on thee, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare: holding faith and a good conscience, which some having put away concerning the faith have made shipwreck: of whom is Hymenaeus and Alexander; whom I have delivered unto Satan that they may learn not to blaspheme" (I Tim. i. 18-20).

"This charge."—To what do these words refer, and to what part of the preceding verses shall we go back? Verses 17 and 18 are glorious doxology. Before that Paul speaks of his conversion and commission. It is here that the structure comes to our aid and sorts the subject matter out for us.

I Tim. i. 3-20.

A | a | i. 3, 4. The charge.
b | i. 5. Faith and good conscience.
c | i. 6-10. Some swerved.
B | i. 11. The blessed God.
C | i. 12-16. Paul, persecutor and pattern.
B | i. 17. The only wise God.
A | a | i. 18. The charge.
b | i. 19-. Faith and good conscience.
c | i. –19, 20. Some put away.

It will be seen that verse 18 is a resumption of the charge temporarily set aside at verse 10. The apostle, possibly to give encouragement to Timothy, tells him that he has no hesitation in committing this charge to him, for he had been pointed out beforehand by those that had the gift of prophecy as one who in due time should take a prominent place in the church. Added to this in iv. 14 the apostle says:--

> "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery."

Yet again in a closely parallel context the apostle says:--

> "Wherefore I put thee in remembrance, that thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee by the putting on of my hands" (II Tim. i. 6).

Timothy's ordination took place during the period when gifts were in general use in the church, and is therefore not to be taken as an example for the present time. He himself was warned to lay hands suddenly on no man, and in place of any special prophecy going before pointing out who should be given the work of the bishop or deacon, a list of necessary qualifications is provided in chapter iii. Those who do possess a gift may be exhorted to "stir it up", but we fear that in the present day it is mostly stir and no gift, while the scriptural qualifications of chapter iii. are either ignored or unknown.

The special calling and qualifications of Timothy were mentioned by the apostle to strengthen him in his difficult task. Here we have "The good warfare" (he kale strateia). In II Tim. ii. we have "The good soldier" (kalos strateotes). This warfare cannot be successfully waged without a clear conscience. To know one's stewardship is half the battle. To be able to say "nevertheless I am not ashamed", when ruin and failure seem to be the only visible result for a life's service, necessitates unflinching, unswerving faith.

"Holding faith and a good conscience."—Some had not held these as they should, and the result was shipwreck. It is not enough to have a knowledge of truth. It must be held in faith and a good conscience. These will steer the vessel clear of rock and reef. To meddle with a good conscience is like interfering with a mariner's compass. Let all who feel the call to service remember that it is a warfare, a fight, and that they will need to endure hardness if they would be good soldiers of Jesus Christ. Save us from the man who thinks he would like to do a bit of service as a pleasant occupation! There must be the burden of stewardship and the realization of the seriousness of the call before such can be approved unto God.

#7. "The life that is now, and to come" (I Tim. iv. 8).
pp. 107-109

The instructions given to Timothy, while personal to himself and dealing with matters that were then present, are nevertheless part of "all scripture". The errors and opposition of the early days foreshadow and emphasize error and opposition for all time, and especially so the apostasy at the close. Accordingly the next item in the charge is set in an atmosphere of apostasy and in the latter time.

The right understanding of the departure from the faith necessitates a careful study of the "mystery of godliness" with which chapter iii. closes. This we must do upon another occasion, our task for the moment being to observe the items in the "charge" that bear upon the question of ministry. The apostasy of this chapter (iv.) is not of necessity to be looked upon as something that will take place at the end of the dispensation, it is progressive. The words "in the latter times" were future to the apostle, but not future to us. They differ from the words of II Tim. iii. 1 in Paul's own day (I Tim. i. 6), and was destined to spread, as departure from the truth opened the way.

The agents in this apostasy are not merely human:--

> "Seducing SPIRITS and doctrine of DEMONS" (I Tim. iv. 1).

It will be remembered that the apostle stated the necessity of a "pure conscience" as a part of the "end of the charge", together with an unfeigned faith. "Unfeigned" is in the original anupokritos, "not hypocritical". Those who "missed" this "turned aside". All this is suggestive in the light of the developed apostasy. There the human agents of the doctrine of demons are hypocrites, and their consciences have been seared. How needful in view of these things to every seeker is that conscience void of offence, that faith that is without hypocrisy, that heart which is clean! Little do those who trifle with these things think that they are adding their quota to the steadily growing apostasy. Many times this propagation of lies is accompanied by external pretensions to a super-holiness. Such were the ascetic teaching of the early Gnostics, and their various modern representatives still teach the same:--

> "Forbidding marriage, and commanding to abstain from foods, which God has created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth. For every creature of God is good, and nothing is to be refused, being received with thanksgiving, for it is sanctified through the word of God and prayer" (I Tim. iv. 3-5).

It must be remembered that the Gnostic teaching viewed creation and the flesh as evil and to be avoided, and that the dualism of their doctrine spoke of the Creator of this present world as the evil one. Paul's words here are a definite contradiction to such monstrous teaching, and to Timothy the apostle says:--

> "If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine which thou hast closely followed" (I Tim. iv. 16).

One of the modern developments of the apostasy is spiritism, and no minister of "the truth" should omit to expose and to warn his hearers against "the lie". Likewise all modern movements that appear to rise superior to the Word of God as to marriage and food should be immediately brought to the touchstone of the faith. These things are spoken of as "profane and oldwomanish fables", and are to be avoided. Instead of being occupied with such things, the apostle says, "Train thyself with a view to godliness".

> "Pros, towards, with genitive indicates the motive, with the dative it suggests the act, with the accusative the literal or mental direction, as an end, marking the ultimate purpose" (Dr. E. W. Bullinger's Lexicon and Concordance).

Godliness was the end towards which Timothy should exercise himself. The precise meaning of eusebia, "godliness", we must reserve for a separate study. That it is closely connected with the very centre of the apostle's witness can be seen by its use in chapter iii. the term "The mystery of godliness".

The word "train" or "exercise" of the A.V. is gumnazo, which gives us the word gymnasium. This leads the apostle to institute a contrast between "bodily exercise" and the exercise with a view to godliness. The one profits, certainly, but only "for a little", the other is profitable for all things:--

> "Having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come" (verse 8).

This statement must be remembered and carried over to verse 10:--

> "We trust in the living God, Who is the Saviour of all men, especially of believers."

Set out together the two verses mutually explain one another:--

"The life that now is"	All men—both believers and unbelievers.
"The life to come"	Believers—in a special sense.

If this be noted we shall be spared the controversy that arises out of the universal aspect of the verse, which can only be upheld if the passage be lifted out of its context.

Having thus placed godliness" as the great goal of the true minister of Christ, and shown its absolute antithesis in the fast developing mystery of iniquity, the apostle concludes with the words:--

> "These things charge and teach. Let no man despise thy youth, but be a pattern of the believers, in word, in conduct, in love, in faith, in purity" (verses 11 and 12).

Let us heed these solemn exhortations. Timothy was “nourished up” in the word he taught. He was to train himself with a view to godliness. He was to be thankful for the mercies of God’s providence granted for the “life that now is”, but was to be far more concerned for that “special salvation” which included the “life to come”. Lastly he was to be a type, a pattern, an example to believers, so that the doctrine that he taught should be expressed and impressed with his own life, and be seen in string contrast with these ministers of darkness, whose teaching was hypocritical, and whose consciences were seared as with a hot iron.

The Ministry of Consolation.

#15. "Mary also sat at His Feet" (Luke x. 39).
pp. 62, 63

There are some temperaments that more readily sympathize with Martha than with Mary. There is also a false notion entertained by some concerning the part played by Mary. It is assumed that Mary left her sister to see to all the necessary work consequent upon the Lord's coming to their house, and under a guise of superior spiritually took the easier course. This is manifestly untrue. In the first place we have the Lord's own commendation:--

> "Mary hath chosen that good parts, which shall not be taken away from her" (Luke x. 42).

Secondly, the Scripture says that Martha was "cumbered about much serving" (verse 40). The word "cumber" means "to tear asunder" and so "distract". Then again it is not "with serving" but "with much serving". It is enjoined upon the saints "to be given to hospitality", but we are apt to overdo the material side at the expense of the spiritual unless we take heed. The Lord for whose entertainment Martha was distracted with much serving could take two loaves and a few fishes and feed 5,000 people; surely therefore there was no call for this distraction.

Thirdly, we do Mary a great injustice if we omit from our reckoning the little word "also". The scripture does not say that "Mary sat at the Master's feet" but > "Martha received Him . . . . . Mary's also sat at His feet."

The word "received" includes the thought of providing necessary hospitality. The word "also" suggests that Mary had not been negligent in her duties. What was necessary on her part had been performed, but nothing superfluous, nothing lavish, nothing to distract, to tear as it were asunder, was undertaken. The blessed opportunity must be seized, and so after having done all that was necessary, "Mary also sat". The Lord said to Martha:--

> "Thou art anxious and troubled concerning many things" (verse 41).

and according to the Vatican MSS, He continued:--

> "But of few things, or of one, is there need?"

Before concluding, we wonder whether our readers will suffer a personal word here? On some occasions when at Bible Meetings it has been necessary to provide tea, there are some who absent themselves from the actual meeting in order to prepare the meal or to clear away afterwards. It is possible that some do not "also" sit at the Master's feet. Let all seek to emulate Mary. Those who by temperament are the busy Marthas, let them remember that "much serving" is cumbering and is not needful. Let those who are too apt to do all the "sitting" remember that of Mary it is written, "Mary also sat", then all will share "that good part" which received the blessing of the Lord.

#16. A Cure for Insomnia (Psalms iii. & iv.). pp. 94, 95

Do you know what it is for the cares and perplexities of this life to intrude into the hours of rest, and drive sleep from tired eyes and aching head? Insomnia may not always take its rise from broken nerves or deranged stomach. There is sometimes a spiritual cause.

Psalms iii. and iv. deals with a period in David's life that was one of sore distress. Absalom, his son, had risen in rebellion against his own father, and David who in earlier years had been hunted by Saul is now obliged to flee from his own flesh and blood. A cause there for anxiety and lack of sleep! Psalm iii. speaks of the increase of those that trouble him, that many had risen up against him, many sought to break down his faith by saying:--

> "There is no help for him in God" (verse 2).

"Selah" seems to stand at the end of a line and say, "You hear that? well now look at this". What does the Selah introduce? Let us look at it again.

> "There is no help for him in God."
> SELAH.
> "But Thou, O Lord, art a shield for me . . . . . I cried . . . . . He heard" (verse 3).

Again another Selah. What follows this time?

> "I laid me down and slept. I awaked; for the Lord sustained me" (verse 5).

David slept, and slept safely, for he awaked conscious that the Lord had indeed been his shield.

In Psalm iv. we seem to advance in confidence. Then not only does David sleep, but he sleeps in peace and he falls asleep at once (verse 8). The adverb translated "both" is rendered "at once" in Isa. xlii. 14, and is so rendered here by many expositors. In spite of all the natural causes for anxiety and wakefulness David could say:--

> "No sooner do I lie down, than I fall asleep at once, and not into a sleep made hideous by awful thoughts and cares, but sleep in peace, for the Lord alone is the One that maketh me to dwell in safety, in Jerusalem or in the wilderness."

It would appear that David's friends were not much more helpful than his enemies. The enemies said:--

> "There is no help for him in God" (Psalm iii. 2).

while his friends said:--

> "Who will show us any good?" (Psalm iv. 6).

and once again David turns to the Lord:--

> "Lord, lift up the light of Thy countenance upon us" (Psalm iv. 6).

The secret of David's peaceful sleep is just the fact of the Lord's presence. The light of His countenance was more gladdening than the day of harvest (verse 7). To suffer hunger in a wilderness, to be a fugitive instead of a monarch did not seem "good", but as in the case of Joseph in his prison, "the Lord was with him". So with David. He had the light of God's countenance, all else mattered little:--

> "I will lay me down in peace, and sleep at once: for Thou, Lord, alone maketh me dwell in safety" (Psalm iv. 8).

#17. "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" (Psa. xi. 3).
pp. 109, 110

The Companion Bible points out that the foundations here refer not so much to buildings as to "the settled order of truth or institutions". In Isa. xix. 10 the word is translated "purposes".

It is not our intention here to discuss the evident prophetic character of the Psalms, but there are few who have received the illumination of Scripture who do not realize that the foundations are being destroyed at this present time. There is also no scriptural warrant to make us expect that these foundations will ever be restored before the Lord Himself comes.

"What can the righteous do?"

It is exceedingly difficult not to attempt to do something. One will feel stirred to great activity in witness, another will seek to form a league or a crusade. All these things may be perfectly right, yet on the other hand they may be wrong. The Psalmist seems to supply the first great answer to his question, "What can the righteous do?" in the very next verse. What does he say?:--

> "The Lord is in His holy temple, the Lord's throne is in the heavens" (verse 4).

It is evident that something is implied between verses 3 and 4. It is as though the Psalmist said, What can the righteous do? Well, before he "does" anything let him remember this. First his utmost "doing" is vain, except the Lord deign to own it. Secondly, the crumbling foundations here do not by any means indicate that the foundations of the Lord's throne are crumbling. Heaven is higher than earth. At the very time when this earth will be a seething cauldron, ruled by a man possessed by the devil, the throne of God will be surrounded by a sea as smooth as though made of glass. When therefore you feel that the time has come for you to "do" something in view of the breaking down of the very foundations of truth, of society, of order, just take your place in spirit for a moment there where the temple still stands unsullied and the throne unshaken.

In correspondence with the words, "What can the righteous do?" come the words of verse 5, "The Lord trieth the righteous". The breaking up of the foundations is the work of the wicked (verse 6), but the Lord is overruling the work of the evil one to purge and to try His people.

Think twice and thrice therefore before plunging into anything that may, after all, prove but a snare of the wicked one. Our testimony will not be less decisive because we have weighed our plans in the balance of the sanctuary:--

> "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do? The Lord is in His temple. The Lord's throne is in heaven."

#18. The factors of consolation.
p. 111

> "Now our Lord Jesus Christ Himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, console your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work" (II Thess. ii. 16, 17).

What is a ministry of consolation? Is it the repetition of pious platitudes? Is it sentimental? or does it rest upon the one foundation of all true ministry? and does it keep pace with all true doctrine and practice? Look at the verse quoted above. This consolation has its source in the Lord Jesus Christ and in God the Father. It flows not only from Divine omnipotence, but Divine love. This twofold source makes this consolation different from all other, it is "everlasting" or aionian. If its past reaches back through love to God, it looks forward to the future, for together with the aionian consolation is given "good hope through grace".

This is an important factor in the ministry of consolation. The present darkness is illuminated by the hope of glory, the trouble that envelopes and threatens to overwhelm us is but for a time, it cannot reach beyond this present life into the next. The exhortation of I Thess. iv. 18, "Wherefore console one another with these words", has the hope of resurrection in view. Those who sorrowed did not sorrow as those who had "no hope".

Because grace reigns we have good hope, and because we have such a hope we can even "boast in tribulations also", for that hope maketh not ashamed. If this ministry of consolation points us backward to the love of God in Christ, and forward to the good hope through grace, has it nothing to say for the immediate present? Indeed it has:-- > "Comfort (Console) your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work" (II Thess. ii. 17).

It stablishes. Floods of sorrow cannot shift the feet from the great foundation. The winds of adversity may blow, but that house is built upon the rock. Moreover, this consolation is practical. It leads to "every good word and work". The Godward side speaks of love and grace, the believer's side speaks of hope and work. We may therefore speak of this ministry of consolation under three heads:--

> THE PAST AND SOURCE.—The Lord, the Father, love and grace.
> THE PRESENT AND RESULT.—Consoled hearts, stablished words and work.
> THE FUTURE AND INCENTIVE.—The good hope.

We may see the same practical result of the doctrine of resurrection set out in I Cor. xv. 20, 58:

"But now is Christ risen from the dead . . . . . therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

#72. Eph. iv. 12-15.
Readjustment (Eph. iv. 12)
pp. 17 – 21

The fourfold gift to the church, which we have already considered, was given with a very special object:--

> For (pros) the perfecting of the saints:--
> 1. Unto (eis) a work of ministry.
> 2. Unto (eis) a building up of the body of Christ.

Before the work of ministry could be entered upon, or the body built up, something had to be done to meet the dispensational crisis of Acts xxviii. The state of affairs at that time is expressed in the word "perfecting". Had the church of the one body been the "perfect" state of which the church of I Cor. xiii. was the immature, then this development of doctrine and status could have been expressed by the word so often translated "to perfect" (teleioo). This however is not the case. The word used here for the "perfecting" of the saints indicates a rupture, a break, a dislocation, such as we might expect when such a drastic setting aside of the channel of blessing took place, as it did, in Acts xxviii.

Katartismos.—This word according to Cremer is used in classical Greek in medical works only. Katartizo occurs in Matt. iv. 21, "mending their nets", where the primary idea restore is seen. In I Cor. i. 10 it comes in a context of division:--

> "I beseech you . . . . . that there be no divisions among you, but that ye be perfectly joined together."

So also in Gal. vi. 1:--

> "Ye which are spiritual restore such an one."

To mend as one would a broken net, to be perfectly joined together as contrasted with division, to restore as one would a dislocated limb (the medical use of the word), this sense seems uppermost in Eph. iv.

The apostles and prophets of the earlier order were not necessarily fitted to mend the rupture that had been caused by Israel's rejection. A special set of apostles and prophets was given by the Lord, whose primary business it was to bridge the gulf, and to reset the saints into their new position. These laid the foundation (Eph. ii. 20). Their work was accompanied and also followed by the evangelist and the teacher, and all united together in the one great work of readjustment, for the very gospel took on new aspects, such as the "gospel of peace" and the "gospel of glory". At such times some old things pass away, some old things are brought over into the new setting, and some new things are revealed. It is only through the writings of the later ministry of Paul that we can learn these differences.

Take an example, well-known to most students of Scripture. In I Cor. ix. are two important items of church practice:--

1. The position of women in relation to men in the ministry.
2. The Lord's supper.

Apart from the teaching given by the specially equipped ministers whose work it was to readjust the saints, we should not know whether both the above were carried over into the new dispensation, whether both were left behind, whether the Lord's supper only was retained, or whether the relationship of the man and woman only was carried over. Who could possibly decide this but the Lord Himself? In Paul's first epistle to Timothy (ii. 8-15) the relation of the sexes in ministry is repeated and readjusted. Here we stand upon positive teaching. The second item, the Lord's supper, is not repeated, either in this chapter, this epistle, or in any epistle written by Paul for the instruction of the church and its ministry after Acts xxviii.

Let those who feel that they must continue this remembrance of the Lord's death do so as unto the Lord, we have no right to judge them, but let them also acknowledge that we too, who no longer partake of a typical feast which is vitally connected with the new covenant and so with the Israel's restoration and kingdom, and closely linked with the parousia phase of the Lord's coming, let them acknowledge that we too when we eat not, to the Lord "eat not" and are "fully persuaded in our own mind" (Rom. xiv. 3-6).

We have already seen, in the sevenfold unity of the Spirit, that the apostle has likewise decided for us whether we observe the baptism of John, of Peter and Paul during the Acts, of the Spirit in His manifest gifts, or of that silent, unseen, yet vital union with the risen Christ, which after all is the meaning underlying all the varied baptisms of other dispensations, and which alone gives the typical ordinance its value and power.

This ministry moreover was directed to "the saints' and was a work of "edifying the body of Christ" rather than world-wide evangelization. The gospel for the unsaved is still the gospel as revealed in Romans. The epistle to the Ephesians assumes that the reader has reached the inner teaching of Rom. v.-viii., "Dead to sins". The readjusting of the saints had a twofold goal:--

1. Unto a work of ministry.
2. Unto a building up of the body of Christ.

Work is valueless apart from dispensational truth. Labour expended upon the body of Christ with undispensational Scriptures does not build up but destroys. The scattered and divided state of the church to-day is largely the result of the attempt to combine dispensations that differ. The reader may be engaged in "a work of ministry", but it is worth while to stop and consider its relation to the various phases of God's purpose. Some of God's children are engaged in phases of kingdom truth. They sometimes condemn us because we see something different. We do not condemn them however, but readily admit that there are other circles of ministry still open to-day than that of the One Body. The failure is most manifest when one, who professedly belongs to the One Body and seeks to minister in that sphere, for reasons of "usefulness" and through the claims of others descends to an unwholesome blend of body, bride, and kingdom, which cannot but produce a hybrid following. What is true of the particular case of ministry is true in a wider sense, as the parallel of Col. i. 10 shows:--

> "That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful unto every good work."

Instead of looking upon dispensational truth as a phase of things that can be taken up as a kind of hobby or left as the case may be, we should look upon it as laying at the base and root of all our actions, doctrine and ministry.

The goal of this readjustment and ministry is the building up of the body of Christ. Do we appreciate the emphatic place that Scripture gives to that ministry which "builds up"? In Eph. iv. 16 we find it as the great goal of joint service:--

> "Unto the building up of itself in love."

And again in verse 29:--

> "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying (or building up)."

Look at I Cor. viii. 1:--

> "Knowledge puffeth up, but love edifieth."

This truth is expanded after the chapter of love (xiii.), and in its two forms comes seven times in chapter xiv. (verses 3-5, 12, 17 and 26):--

> "He that prophesieth speaketh unto man to edification . . . . . He that speaketh in an unknown tongue edifieth himself; but he that prophesieth edifieth the church."
>
> "Forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church . . . . . Let all things be done unto edifying."

By comparing Eph. iv. with Eph. ii. we may learn something of the sacred fellowship such ministry has with the Spirit of God:--

> "In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord: In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God in Spirit" (ii. 21, 22).

In the doctrinal section the temple "grows", and the sphere of that growth is "in Him" and "in Spirit". In the practical section the body is "built up" by the human instrument given and equipped by the ascended Lord. All ministry is therefore but fellowship in the great work of God Himself. It is His pleasure that upon the defection of His people Israel an elect company should be called and gathered together as a holy temple, a habitation of God. That indicates and limits the sphere and activity of the ministry appointed under those terms. We do not write these words in criticism of the ministry of others, called under other economies, but we do recognize in them our own all-sufficient authority for the work we seek to do and the ministry we seek to fulfil.

To any reader who may be conscious of any indirectness of aim, or who is easily turned aside by the criticism of others, or who is easily plunged into despair because of opposition or non-success, we would suggest a quiet prayerful weighing over of the dispensational grounds of his ministry and stewardship, feeling sure that conviction as to that will carry strength for all that follows. Paul knew Whom he had believed, he was certain of the nature of his call, and the fact that all forsook him, and many misjudged him, then became a light matter. Let us give a resume of these important features:--

1. PERFECTING.—The first thing to decide as before the Lord is the dispensation in which one is called to serve.
2. MINISTRY.—Then, and only then, can ministry be worthy of the name; all other labour is in vain.
3. EDIFYING.—Never lose sight of this great feature. While others may feel called upon to pull down, and to expose error, let us see to it that we steadily and surely, as in the troublous times of Nehemiah, "build up the body of Christ", thereby having blessed fellowship with the great Worker Who is silently building up a habitation of God in Spirit.

The Threefold Goal (Eph. iv. 13)

pp. 21 – 25

The first great unity in this chapter is that of the Spirit; the second is that of the faith. The first measure is that of the gift of Christ; the second is the stature of the fullness of Christ. We found that upon mentioning the unity of the Spirit, the apostle immediately proceeded to detail its sevenfold structure (Eph. iv. 3-6). May we expect to find the same help in connection with the unity of the faith? We believe we may:--

> "Until we all should arrive unto the unity of the faith, and the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (Eph. iv. 13).

The word kai, translated "and", is explained by Dr. Bullinger in his Analytical Texicon thus:--

"Kai (the conjunction of annexation, uniting things strictly co-ordinate), and; sometimes not merely annexing, but implying increase, addition, something more, also, or only emphasis, even."

If we take the meaning of kai to be "even" in this passage, it emphasizes the great centre of the faith toward which the new ministry directed the saints:--

"EVEN the knowledge of the Son of God" (Eph. iv. 13).

No creed was ever so simple. None ever so exhaustive and complete. We might have expected that the apostle often spoke of Christ as the Son of God, but this is not the case. The passage before us is the only occurrence of the title in the four prison epistles, nay, in any epistle of Paul written after Acts xxviii. It stands therefore the one unique utterance in the dispensation of the mystery. In his earlier epistles Paul uses the title three times, namely in Gal. ii. 20, which speaks of his identification with the death and the life of the Son of God; in II Cor. i. 19, where he declares that all the promises of God find their yea and their amen in Him; and in Rom. i. 1-4 He is seen as the sum and substance of the gospel of God, marked off as "the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection of the dead".

There are however other references besides these, for the passages wherein occur the words "His Son" must be included. If the unity of the faith is comprehended in the knowledge of the Son of God, then all that is revealed concerning that Son must go to constitute the oneness of the faith. It is not possible to enter into a careful study of each occurrence, but we can set the passages before the reader who will not fail to appreciate the contribution to a fuller knowledge.

*Gal. i. 16.	The Son revealed in Paul, that He might be preached among the Gentiles.
Gal. ii. 20.	The Son of God. His faith, His life, the life lived by Paul
Gal. iv. 4.	The Son sent in the fullness of time.
Gal. iv. 6.	The Spirit of the Son in the hearts of all God's sons.
I Thess. i. 10.	The believers wait for His Son from heaven.
I Cor. i. 9.	The fellowship of His Son.
I Co. xv. 28.	The final act of His Son.
II Cor. i. 19, 20.	All the promises of God. Yea and Amen in the Son.
Rom. i. 3.	The gospel of God concerning His Son.
Rom. i. 4.	Declared the Son of God with power, by resurrection.
Rom. i. 9.	The gospel of His Son.
Rom. v. 10.	Reconciliation by the death of His Son.
Rom. viii. 3.	Sent in the likeness of sinful flesh.
Rom. viii. 29.	Conformed to the image of His Son.
Rom. viii. 32.	God spared not His own Son.

The reasons for placing Galatians first are given in our Book,*
"THE APOSTLE OF THE RECONCILIATION".

Evangelical truth, church fellowship, individual experience, dispensational truth, Age purpose and promises, all find their goal, their assurance, their centre in the Son of God. These are the facets of truth illuminated by the apostle Paul. There is however a vast field in the Gospels and the Acts, where messianic prophecies, the kingship of Israel, aionian life, the raising of the dead, and other themes are found associated with the same title. It will be seen that the unity of the faith is a mighty comprehension. The four passages of Paul's writing which definitely use the title Son of God speak of:--

Life now being by faith of \
Promises being Yea and Amen in \ THE SON OF GOD.
Resurrection declaring with power /
Unity of the faith being the knowledge of / and these may well be taken as heads, dividing the revelation concerning Him into their various departments.

The knowledge of the Son of God is really "full knowledge" (epignosis). Delitzsch says (Hebraerbr. 493, Cremer), "We may speak of a false gnosis, but not of a false epignosis, for epignosis seems to suggest that the knowledge gained acts powerfully upon the person". In Col. iii. 10 it appears that this epignosis is not so much the gradual and mental attainment; it is associated with "renewal", and is according to the "image" of he Creator. In Col. ii. 2 the epignosis of the mystery of God is approached by close fellowship in love and in all the riches of the full assurance of understanding, and here the mystery of God is Christ, the Vatican MS reading being "the secret of God, Christ, in Whom are hid". The full knowledge of the will of God is necessary if we would walk worthy of the Lord, pleasing Him in all things (Col. i. 9, 10).

Finally, this full knowledge must be sought by prayer. Eph. i. 17 shows that it is the outcome of the gift of the spirit of wisdom and revelation. It is this full knowledge of the Son of God that constitutes the unity of the faith. While the faith rests upon historic fact, it will be realized that in this word we have something deeper than acquaintance with prophecy of fulfillment. The Chief Priests and Scribes, who so readily referred Herod to the prophet's utterance that the Messiah should be born in Bethlehem of Judaea, had gnosis, but they had not epignosis, for if they had they would have anticipated the wise men with their gifts and their homage. Old Simeon and Anna show the heart-knowledge which seems to be contained in epignosis. Looking at the passage once more we observe that it suggests a threefold goal:--

> "Until we all should arrive—
> Unto (eis) the unity of the faith, even the full knowledge of the Son of God.
> Unto (eis) a perfect man.
> Unto (eis) the measure of the stature of the fullness of the Christ" (Eph. iv. 13).

Consequent upon that epignosis of the Son of God is the perfect man. Man, here, is not the usual anthropos, but aner. Five times in chapter v. this word is translated "husband". This is a man, full grown, in his prime, fit and complete. The apostle knew that every believer will be presented "holy, and unblameable, and unreproveable" in the sight of God through the death of Christ, yet he longs for another "presentation", he longs to be able to "present" every man "perfect" in Christ (Col. i. 22, 28). What can be more perfect than the position of Col. i. 22? Nothing. The highest conception of the idea "perfect" is not that of the Greek telieios. This word, derived from telos, the end or goal, suggests the idea of having gone on to the end, having laid hold of that for which one has been laid hold upon, as Phil. iii. 12 puts it.

The teleios is often contrasted with the child, as in Heb. v. 12-14 & I Cor. xiii. 10, 11, where the knowledge is elementary, the sight weak, the discernment small, the food milk.

The church of the One Body is the pleroma, the fullness of Him that filleth all in all, and that, and nothing short of that, is its measure:--

> "Unto the measure of the stature of the pleroma of Christ."

The great purpose of the ages, expressed in the word "fullness" and the part that the One Body has in that great restoring work, is the measure of its growth. It is the answer to the prayer of Eph. iii. 19:--

> "To know that which surpasses knowledge—the love of Christ, so that you may be filled up to (that is the 'measure') all the fullness of God."

Such is the threefold object of the ministry of the apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers. The readjustment of the saints had "the fullness" in view. The work of ministry had the "perfect man" in mind. The building up of the body of Christ had the fullness before it, for the church is the fullness of Christ. This may be better grasped if set out thus:--

Apostles, etc., given:--
(1). For the readjustment.
(2). For ministry.
(3). For building up the body of Christ.

Till we all arrive:--
(1). Unto the unity of the faith.
(2). Unto a perfect man.
(3). Unto the stature of the pleroma.

How definite such a ministry is. Here is no beating the air, no uncertain sound. Happy are they who having thus clearly seen the Lord's will know no other service, hear no other call, see no other open door, but gladly and whole-heartedly pursue this holy if somewhat narrow way, realizing that to have the lowliest place in that great fabric, the pleroma, outweighs all that man can give or say.

The Satanic System (Eph. iv. 14, 15)
pp. 26 – 30

The Contrast to the Unity of Faith.

What a measure is set before us in attaining unto the unity of the faith! Nothing less than the fullness, the pleroma of Christ. Nothing but the "perfect man" can reach this standard.

In strong contrast to the "perfect" or the full grown adult is the "babe", as we have observed in Heb. v. and I Cor. xiii. So we find the apostle immediately turning to the negative:--

> "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive" (Eph. iv. 14).

Perhaps we should be more accurate if we translated nepios by "infant", for the Greek word is derived from ne = "not" and epo = "to speak", which thought is retained in the word infant, which is from the Latin infans, in = "not" and fans = "speaking". This meaning gives point to the Lord's words in Matt. xxi. 16 "out of the mouth of infants (nepios) and sucklings Thou hast perfected praise". So in I Cor. xiii. 11 the apostle says "When I was a child (nepios), I spake as a child".

The Corinthians were called infants (babes) by reason of their carnality and divisions. They had not grown in grace. As a result the apostle was obliged to withhold from them the deeper things of God, "the wisdom of God in a mystery", which however he said he did speak to those who were "perfect" full grown adults. The fitness of the word "infant" then will be seen in Eph. iv. There the great feature is the "Unity of the Spirit", those like the Corinthians were more associated with the "divisions of the flesh". Eph. iv. contemplates the believer as having reached "the perfect man", the extreme opposite of the "infant". Ephesians throughout is the revelation of a "mystery", and such must be withheld from "infants".

"Tossed and whirled about with every wind of doctrine."

The word "tossed" (kludonizomai) is used in the LXX of Isa. lvii. 20: "The wicked are like the troubled sea." Kludon is used by James, "He that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed" (James i. 6). Katakluzo is to overwhelm with water (II Pet. iii. 6), and kataklusmos is a flood (Matt. xxiv. 38), our English word cataclysm. "Carried about" is periphero. We find the word in Heb. xiii. 9, "Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines" (though here some MSS read paraphero); and again in Jude 12, "Clouds are they without water, carried about of winds" (though here again the truer reading is paraphero). Both instances however serve to illustrate the meaning of the word. These two words convey the acme of instability and perplexity. Such a condition is far removed from the serene atmosphere of the unity of the faith, and the perfect man. "Examine yourselves", said the apostle. Are we carried about by every wind of doctrine? Do we not know many who seem to have a new doctrine every time we meet them? Such are infants, for such the mystery remains a "mystery".

This "wind of doctrine" blows not by chance. Just as surely as the purpose of God moves towards the goal, the pleroma, so Satan is ever seeking his own travesty of truth. The winds of doctrine that bring such confusion are part of a tremendous system of wickedness. Men may throw the loaded dice, but the wiles are the wiles of the Devil. "The sleight of men" is kubeia, "to play at dice", and so "to cheat". "Cunning craftiness" is en panourgia:--

> "He perceived their craftiness, and said unto them, Why tempt ye Me?" (Luke xx. 23).

Here is the first occurrence of the word, and the context should be studied as a warning and a lesson. Notice how the craftiness is veiled:--

> "And they sent forth spies, which should feign themselves just men, that they might take hold of His words, that so they might deliver Him unto the power and authority of the Governor . . . . . Master, we know that Thou sayest and teachest rightly, neither acceptest Thou the person of any man, but teachest the way of God truly. Is it lawful for us to give tribute unto Caesar, or no?" (Luke xx. 20-22).

It was a deeply-laid plot. The way in which they had been caught on the horns of a dilemma in the matter of John the Baptist rankled, and at last the Chief Priests and Scribes thought to use His own weapon against the Lord Himself. They would make Him impale Himself upon the horns of a dilemma, for see, if He said "Yes", His reputation as a leader and deliverer, to say nothing of His claim to be the Messiah, would be shattered, for how could the Deliverer of Israel teach them to pay tribute to the Pagan? If He should say "No", they would immediately charge Him before the Roman Governor as a stirrer up of sedition. They evidently expected "No" for an answer, for they sent the spies "that so they might deliver Him unto the power and authority of the governor". They reckoned however without the Lord. He takes the wise in their own craftiness. What was His reply?

> "Shew Me a penny. Whose image and superscription hath it? Render therefore to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's. And they could not take hold of His words before the people, and they marveled at His answer, and held their peace" (Luke xx. 24-26).

We must be on our guard against those who feign themselves "just men", who profess to agree with the Word of truth, who flatter us that we are not partial or hold men's persons in respect. The parallels and the contrast to "craftiness" are given in II Cor. iv. 2:--

> "We have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the Word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God."

A | Hidden things renounced.
B | Walk in craftiness,
C | Handle Word of God deceitfully.
C | Truth manifested.
B | Commended to conscience.
A | In the sight of God.

The two sets are sufficiently obvious, and we commend them to our readers as a commentary upon our subject. II Cor. xi. 3 gives the basic example, origin and energizer of this craftiness:--

> "The serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty."

Behind the "sleight of men" is the "cunning craftiness" of the Devil:--

> "Whereby they lie in wait to deceive" (Eph. iv. 14).

Aquila translates Exod. xxi. 13 by methodeuse, but the word seems to mean more generally a systematic artifice. Methodeia comes again in Eph. vi. 11, "the wiles of the Devil". "Systematic deception", "snares of the cunning", "deliberate system of error", "the systematizing of the deception", "a subtle method of deceit" are some of the many translations offered. They impressed us with the thought that there is deliberate systematic method pursued in this craftiness. Speaking of Satan, II Cor. ii. 11 says, "We are not ignorant of his devices". He ever continues the same corruption of the Word of truth, the flattery, the temptation, as in the Garden of Eden, and the instance recorded in Luke xx., till cast into the lake of fire. Shakespeare well puts it:--

> "The equivocation of the fiend, that lies like truth."

So then we have the unity of the Spirit set over against the systems of deception, in other words, the mystery of godliness and the mystery of iniquity, the truth and the lie.

The apostle has been saying what we are not to be; he now concludes by stating the positive. One word suffices to give complete contrast to all the craft and deceit of the wicked one.

Aletheuontes.—The word means more than "speaking the truth", it means "being true". This has a fuller and deeper meaning than we may at first suppose, but as this is dealt with by the apostle in the same chapter we will follow his own order and wait until we reach the passage. We can see however the supreme place of truth in the witness for God. It may not be amiss to exhibit the usage of "truth" in Ephesians:--

Truth.

A | i. 13. Word of truth. Salvation.
B | a | iv. 21, 22. Put off.
b | iv. 24. Righteousness and holiness.
B | a | iv. 25. Put away.
b | v. 9. Righteousness and goodness.
A | vi. 14. Girdle of truth. Warfare.

The whole world is ranged under two heads, the Truth, and the Lie. Christ stands at the head of one, Satan at the other. Truth makes the weakest invincible. Truth will prevent the ship from being carried by the winds and waves. Truth will deliver from the sleight of men and reveal the systematic deceit of the wicked one.

We shall see presently the close connection between the "old man" and "the lie", and the "new man" and "the truth"; let us here, while the passage is before us, remember the close association that must ever be between "the perfect man" and "the truth".

#73. Eph. iv. 15, 16.
The Head, the All Things (Eph. iv. 15)
pp. 49 – 52

The admonition to "speak the truth in love" taken from the A.V. of Eph. iv. 15 is one that should ever be before the mind of the believer. It is not, however, the meaning of this particular verse. There is no word here for "speaking", it is rather "being the truth", i.e., so living that every act and motion and motive shall be in line with "truth". It is possible that the words "in love" complete the statement, "being the truth in love", but we believe the true rendering of the passage links the words "in love" with what follows, namely, growth.

We have been warned of the dangers that beset the believer who remains a "babe". To attain the unity of the faith necessitates the "perfect man" and the "stature or full age" of the fullness of Christ. This therefore demands growth. Over against the sleight of men, the cunning craftiness and the systematic deception of wickedness, the apostle places one simple word, aletheuontes. I wish our language permitted such a words as "truthing", it does not, but even "being true" seems weak in comparison with the fullness of the original. Over against the perfect man and the stature, the apostle places "growth". It can be easily seen if set out thus:--

A | Faith, knowledge, perfect man, stature of Christ.
B | Systematic deception.
B | Being true.
A | Growth in love into Christ.

The words "in love" we believe should be read with the words "we should be growing". It will be observed that the section of verses 15 and 16 is bounded by the words "in love":--

> "IN LOVE we should be growing unto Him, the all things, Who is the Head–Christ . . . . unto the building up of itself IN LOVE."

We have pointed out in other articles of this series that the "body" of Eph. iv. is the reflection in the practical section of the "temple" in the doctrinal (Eph. ii.).

> The temple is built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets.
> The body is built up as a result of the ministry of the apostles and prophets.
> The temple is fitly framed together.
> The body is fitly joined together.
> The temple has Christ as its chief corner stone.
> The body has Christ as its head.
> The temple grows unto an holy temple in the Lord.
> The body grows unto Christ.
> The temple – "In whom ye are builded."
> The body – "Out of whom . . . . . makes for growth."

Growing and building, figures of body and temple, are to be found together in such passages as "rooted and founded" (Eph. iii. 17), and "rooted and built up" (Col. ii. 7). It is important that we remember the fact that the Scripture speaks of the "growth" of the body. No amount of energy, of meetings, of advertising, can make for growth. Growth is the result of life, health, suitable environment and sound food. Growth can be retarded by the absence of light, air or water. The student of Scripture does not need an exposition of these three types, they are so obvious. Nevertheless, growth is stayed in many a child of God simply because he is not walking in the light.

The passage in the A.V. reads, "May grow up into Him in all things which is the Head, even Christ" (Eph. iv. 15). We find it difficult to accept the translation "in all things". First.—There is no word for "in". Secondly.—The words ta panta are either the nominative or the accusative plural. In other passages "in all" is en pasi (Eph. i. 23; Col. iii. 11), and even though the en should be omitted, the dative case pasi, would still remain unchanged. Further, we believe that the words ta panta express from another point of view that which constitutes the pleroma, and indicate that creation which was the work of God, not as revealed in Gen. i. 1, but as revealed in Eph. iii. 9:--

> "The dispensation of the mystery, which hath been hidden from the ages that God, Who (en to Theo to) the all things (ta panta) created."

Some MSS add "through Jesus Christ". These words are probably an interpolation, but they nevertheless express the meaning of the passage. As we have said before, the full discussion of ta panta cannot be undertaken as a part of an article, it must be given a separate study. Without therefore coming to any conclusion here as to the relation of ta panta to the purpose of the ages, we feel that so much was necessary in the reconsideration of this expression in Eph. iv. 15. We set aside the rendering "in all things".

Another phrase needs considering. What do we understand by "growing into Him"? Are we considered as separated from Him, and by slow degrees growing nearer and nearer to Him? This may be possible if we are speaking of the believer's experimental fellowship with the Lord, but how can a "body" grow into the "head", for that is the figure before us? Moreover, the very next verse says, "out of whom all the body . . . . . makes growth", so that growth is viewed as only possible while Head and members are united.

A somewhat parallel expression occurs in iii. 19, "That ye may be filled (eis) unto all the fullness of God", which means that the believer shall be filled for, or with a view to, that fullness. That he may be able to take his place in that fullness, that as a member of that body which is itself a "fullness" he may be filled up to the measure of Him that filleth (ta panta) with all. So in Eph. iv. The growth is "for" or "with a view to" Him in His capacity as the Head, which is but another way of indicating our "measure", "the stature of the fullness of Christ". The fullness is the measure of our stature. "The Head" and "the all things", is but another way of saying the same thing. Conybeare and Howson in a footnote say, "Auxanein eis auton is grow to the standard of His growth". Christ, the Head, is placed together with "the all things" that are "through Him" (I Cor. viii. 6); the Lord and His great age purpose are placed before us as our standard and our goal. Should it appear strange thus to link together Christ and ta panta, we should remember Col. iii. 11 which says, "ta panta kai en pasin Christos", "the all things and in all things (is) Christ". When the scriptural term is understood the sense of strangeness will vanish as we realize how truly the Lord Jesus Christ takes the all things of this mighty purpose into Himself.

To complete the thought of this verse we need to remember one further truth. Running together down the ages are two mysteries. The mystery of godliness, culminating in the exaltation of Jesus Christ as Lord, and the mystery of iniquity, culminating in the man of sin setting himself up as God. In Eph. iv. 4 is the mystery of iniquity, "the systematized deception". In Eph. iv. 15 is the mystery of godliness, with Christ as Head over all things to His church, as He will yet be in heaven and earth to the glory of God the Father.

What an incentive to "grow in grace"! may it not be lost upon us.

Things that make for Growth (Eph. iv. 16).
pp. 52 - 56

We now come to the central reference to the "body" in Ephesians. In Volume VIII we gave the structure of the seven references. We repeat it here for the sake of new readers:--

A | a | i. 23. The Body. Christ the Head.
b | iv. 4. The Unity. Christ the one Lord.
B | iv. 12. Gifts for the building.
C | iv. 16. Unity. "Fitly joined together."
B | iv. 16. Each member for the increase.
A | a | v. 23. The Body. Christ the Head and Saviour.
b | v. 30. The Unity. The church the members.

Central place is given to the unity of the body "fitly joined together". The subject is evidently of great importance, judging from its place in the epistle.

We have drawn attention before to the fact that the "body" in the practical section echoes the "temple" in the doctrinal section. A glance at the structure above will show that there is only one reference in the doctrinal portion to the body, the remaining six being found in chapters iv. and v. The body aspect of the church is essentially practical, and unity is its very life.

> "Out of Whom all the body being fitly framed and knit together through that which every joint supplieth, according to the working in measure of each several part, the growth of the body is making unto the building up of itself in love" (Eph. iv. 16).

When the purpose of God in His church is viewed from the Godward standpoint the "temple" is said to grow "in the Lord". Further, it does not say that the temple builds up itself in love, but that it is built up together in spirit. In chapter iv. the theme is practical. The unity of the spirit is there for us "to keep". The work of the spirit is through human channels, apostles, prophets, etc. The building up of the body of Christ, first wrought by these gifts of the ascended Lord, is followed, after the unity of the faith is reached, by the harmonious working of every member of the body building itself up in love. A parallel passage is Col. ii. 19:--

> "Out of Whom all the body, being supplied and knit together through the joints and ligaments, groweth with the growth of God."

The first point to notice is that all grows "out of" Christ, the Head. The next thing is that "growth" depends upon "supply", and "supply" upon "unity among the members". We might place the reference to the compactness of the body and its several members into parenthesis and read:--

> "Out of Whom, origin, (all the body being fitly framed and knit together) through that which every joint supplieth, channel, (according to the working in measure of every part) the growth of the body, is making unto the building up of itself in love, goal."

The two parenthetical clauses, as it were, are assumed as facts:--

> "Taking it for granted that there is no dislocation either of limb, nerve, organ or circulation", and "taking it for granted that each one part is working proportionately", then "the growth of the body will take place".

What a deal is "taken for granted"! Let us note these features carefully.

"ALL THE BODY . . . . . MAKES FOR GROWTH."—This is equivalent to saying, "According to the measure of each one part makes for growth." All the body is concerned with the growth of all the body. It is impossible for one member to merely feed itself and further its own growth without wrecking the health if not risking the reason and the life of the body.

"FITLY FRAMED AND KNIT TOGETHER."—The word translated "fitly framed together" in ii. 21 and "fitly joined together" in iv. 16 is sunarmologeo. This word is composed of "together", "adapt", and "collect" and Dr. Bullinger in his Lexicon well expresses this by saying that it "joins together parts fitted to each other".

A very slight acquaintance with anatomy or physiology will impress the mind with the perfect adaptation of the various parts of the body. There are no "square pegs in round holes" when the unity is the unity of the spirit; there are, alas! too many such when the unity is of the flesh. Unity is fullest when it is unobtrusive. We are not conscious of the many perfectly-fitted and lubricated joints of our bodies until rheumatism spoils their perfect fitness and brings the fact of joints to mind. The healthy man is not conscious of the organs of his body. This is the unity that we desire, but the man-made thing is a source of irritation and trouble all the time. "Leagues", "unions", "societies" are well in their place, but they do not and must not be looked upon in the same light as the unity of the spirit.

Not only is the body "fitly framed", but it is "knit together". Col. ii. 19 speaks not only of "joints" but "ligaments". What is the "bond" that shall unite the whole body together as one? Let Col. ii. 2 answer, "being knit together in love". This is the "bond of perfectness". The unity of the spirit is held together by "the bond of peace", the unity of the body by the "bond of perfectness—love". "In love" commences and closes this section of Eph. iv. (see verses 15, 16). A loveless unity is not of God. If we are members one of another we shall care for one another. When we think of what love is, we can understand what a bond it can be:--

> "Love--its longsuffering, its kindliness; its freedom from envy, vaunted self-assertion, inflated arrogance, vulgar indecorum; its superiority to self-seeking; its calm control of temper; its oblivion of wrong; its absence of joy at the wrongs of others; its sympathy with the truth; its gracious tolerance; its trustfulness; its hope; its endurance" (I Cor. xiii. Farrar).

Here is the character of the "perfect man" as I Cor. xiii. 10, 11 indicates. Is it my character and yours, fellow-member? Wherever we fail in this, we fail to maintain unity and check growth. Think how much harm is done among members of the one body through lack of "longsuffering". Meditate upon the other attributes of this greatest of gifts. Love forms the ligaments of the body, without which all is out of joint.

"EVERY JOINT SUPPLIETH."—Strictly speaking, the words read "through every joint of the supply". The joints supply nothing of themselves. The supply comes from the Lord, and through the members as a channel. This figure is well illustrated in Phil. i. 19 where the word occurs:--

> "And I know that this will result in my deliverance
> 1. through your prayer
> 2. and the supply of the spirit of Jesus Christ,
> 3. according to my earnest expectation and hope."

Here are fellow-members joined together in love, the one praying, the other expecting, and the Lord supplying. What a beautiful picture of "the joint of supply". Oh to be honoured as a means and a channel of blessing from our living Head to His beloved members.

"ACCORDING TO THE WORKING."—Joints and ligaments perfectly adapted, perfectly united, need something else than fitness, they need life. "The body without the spirit is dead, being alone." What constitutes the life-giving energy of this body? It is the power of God not as manifested in creation, but in resurrection. It is "to usward who believe" (Eph. i. 19, 20). More than that, it is the power of ascension, "And set Him . . . . . far above all" (Eph. i. 21). Still further, it is the power of victory, "And hath put all things under His feet" (Eph. i. 22). It is the power that will finally accomplish the purpose of the ages, "The fullness of Him that filleth all in all" (Eph. i. 23; i. 11). It is this power that equips for service:--

> "Whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me according to the energy of His power" (Eph. iii. 7). "Now unto Him Who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask of think, according to that power energizing us" (Eph. iii. 20).

This mighty power, "the power of His resurrection", is the life of the one body:--

> "According to the energy in measure of each one part" (Eph. iv. 16).

The distribution of energeia and energeo in Ephesians is suggestive:--

A | i. 11. The purpose. Energizing all things with a view to.
  B | i. 19. Exceeding power. "To usward."
    C | i. 20. Christ the Head. The energy.
      D | ii. 2. The energizing of the children of disobedience.
A | iii. 7-11. The purpose. Energizing the minister with a view to.
  B | i. 19. Exceeding power. "In us."
    C | i. 20. The members. The energy.

It will be seen that the energy that actuates every member of the one body is that same energy that pulsates through ta panta, "the all things", and which raised Christ, the Head, the Fullness, and with Him "the all things" also far above all. The reader may remember that in between the reference to the ascension of Christ and the gifts for men in Eph. iv. 8, and the details of their bestowal and ministry, comes that reference to the fact that the Lord ascended up far above all heavens that He might fill "the all things". The reader may now better realize the close relation that there is between the church of the one body, and that great purpose of the ages. Every time we are actuated by the flesh, or the world, we by so much militate against the purpose of God.

This constant association with the purpose of God and its resurrection power is but another way of saying verse 15, "Truthing, in love we all should grow". There is another energy at work, the lie, with Satan at its head. He rules in the lower regions of "the air", and not "far above all heavens". His associates are the "rulers of the darkness of this world", and the "children of disobedience" (Eph. ii. 2; vi. 12).

"THE MEASURE OF EVERY PART."—It is not sufficient to remember the gifts of apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers. Every member of the body has a part to play, and it is according to the measure of each one part that the body builds up itself in love.

Here then is a place and a power for each. Let us heartily and gratefully respond.

#74. Alienation, the mind and the new man (Eph. iv. 17-20)
pp. 99 – 106

In our previous studies we have seen that the opening of the practical section of this epistle (chapter iv.) sums up all true practice in the exhortation, "walk worthy of your calling". Practice is the fruit of doctrine and cannot be disassociated from it. It would be useless, for example, to exhort wives and husbands to comply with the practical exhortations of chapter v. if they did no heartily accept the doctrinal basis upon which those exhortations rest. Consequently while it is true that we are now studying the practical section of this epistle, there is no arbitrary exclusion of doctrine, and we shall find much doctrine interwoven with the practical teaching of this section.

The disposition of subject matter must be observed. The positive exhortation of Eph. iv. 1 is followed by a negative testimony as to how not to walk. Between these two phases of truth there is a glorious parenthesis dealing with the one body (verses 3-16), and following the negative testimony (and placed in correspondence) is the teaching concerning the new man.

Eph. iv. 1-32.

A | 1, 2. The walk. Positive. Humility of mind.
B | 3-16. The one body.
A | 17-19. The walk. Negative. Vanity of mind.
B | 20-32. The new man.

Aliens – from Israel and from the life of God.

The epistle to the Ephesians reveals a twofold Gentile alienation:--

"Aliens from the commonwealth of Israel" (Eph. ii. 12).
"Aliens from the life of God" (Eph. iv. 18).

The alienation of chapter ii. is expressed in the terms of distance, the alienation of chapter iv. is expressed in the terms of death. The blood of Christ cancels the former alienation by "making nigh"; the gift and operation of resurrection life reverses the other. In both cases however this twofold truth merges into one expression, the new man.

The relation of the walk and the mind.

Before we consider the teaching of the new man we must give attention to the negative aspect of the believer's walk. In verse 17 we read, "That ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk". The word "other" should be omitted. We are exhorted to walk not as the Gentiles walk. A very definite change is suggested by the words "not henceforth". The same negative comes in Eph. iv. 28, "Let him that stole steal no more". While the chief feature of the epistle to the Ephesians is the revelation of the mystery and its dispensational peculiarities, we must not forget that it finds its doctrinal basis in Romans. When dealing with Eph. ii. 1 and the words "dead to trespasses and sins", we were compelled to refer back to Rom. vi. So also we find the true import even of the words "not henceforth" in Rom. vi. 6:--

"Knowing this, that our old man was crucified with Him that the body of sin might be rendered inoperative, that HENCEFORTH we should NOT serve sin as slaves."

The service of Rom. vi. 6 and the walk of Eph. iv. 17 are both associated with the old man. In one case it is seen as "crucified", in the other it has to be "put off", but both meet in a new "life unto God". Rom. vi. lays great stress upon "the body of sin", "the mortal body" and the "members"; Eph. iv. emphasizes "the mind", and that both positively and negatively:--

"Walk worthy . . . . . with all humility of mind" (iv. 1, 2).
"Walk no longer . . . . . in the vanity of mind" (iv. 17).

There are two words here for "mind". In iv. 2 the word is a compound of phreen, and has particular reference to the heart and understanding. In iv. 17 mind is nous. The word nous has passed into the English language, and is placed in Roget's Thesaurus together with intelligence, comprehension, understanding and sagacity. The word is used by Paul more than any other writer of the New Testament, for it occurs 21 times in his epistles out of a total of 24. It is manifest therefore that an intelligent appreciation of the truth revealed through Paul demands an acquaintance with the usage of this word in his epistles. We find the nous connected with both the old and the new man.

The nous of the old man.—Rom. i. 28; vii. 23, 25; Eph. iv. 17; Col. ii. 18; I Tim. vi. 5; II Tim. iii. 8; Titus i. 15.
The nous of the new man.—Rom. xii. 2; I Cor. ii. 16; Eph. iv. 23; Phil. iv. 7.

The mind and alienation.

Rom. i. 18-32 speaks of the setting aside of the Gentiles consequent upon their idolatrous abandonment of the truth which had been made known to them. Three times in this momentous passage do we read that these Gentiles were "given up" by God (Rom. i. 24, 26 28). In verse 28, by a play upon the sound of the words used (figure of speech called paranomasia), the judicial nature of this "giving up" is made prominent. Conybeare expresses the figure by translating the verse thus:--

> "As they thought fit to cast out the acknowledgment of God, God gave them over to a cast out mind."

Alford renders the passage:--

> "Because they reprobated the knowledge of God, God gave them over to a reprobate mind."

The resulting state of morals, given in the verses that follow, is terrible to the last degree. It is summed up in Eph. iv. 19 by the words, "All uncleanness with greediness". Such was the condition of the Gentile world; such the outcome of a mind alienated from God and His truth.

In our appreciation of the vital distinction that exists between law and grace, we are apt to slur the equally decided difference that there is between the light of the law of God given to Israel and the darkness of reprobation that settled down upon the Gentiles. While the law could give neither life nor righteousness, we do read:--

> "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul . . . . . The commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes" (Psa. xix. 7, 8).

If we keep this fact before us we shall be able to understand the setting of the next reference to the nous:--

> "I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind . . . . . so then with the mind I myself serve the law of God" (Rom. vii. 23-25).

This illumination of the law, however, only intensified the bondage of sin and death, for while to will was present, to perform was impossible. So far as justification is concerned, the enlightened Jew stood upon the same platform as the darkened Gentile, but so far as the doctrine of the mind is concerned we perceive that it can be influenced by outside factors, even though the bondage of sin and death may remain. Passing to Col. ii. 18 we learn that there is a fleshly mind which "puffs up" and leads away from Christ. The three passages that remain speak of:--

> "Men, whose mind is corrupted and destitute of the truth" (I Tim. vi. 5).
>
> "Men who resist the truth, being corrupt in mind and reprobate (cf. Rom. i. 28) as concerning the faith" (II Tim. iii. 8).
>
> "All things indeed are pure to those who are pure, but to those who are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but both their mind and conscience are defiled . . . . . and unto every good work reprobate" (Titus i. 15, 16).

Such is the testimony of the apostle to the nous of the old man. His teaching concerning the mind of the new man is contained in four passages:-- > "Present your bodies a living sacrifice . . . . . be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that you may approve (dokimazein, cf. Rom. i. 28) what is the will of God" (Rom. xii. 1, 2).

Here is the great contrast with Rom. i. 18-32; there both mind and body are "given over" to evil, here they are "yielded" to God. This distinction between the natural and the spiritual is brought out markedly in I Cor. ii. 14-16. The natural man cannot understand the things of the Spirit of God, they appear to him foolishness. God reveals His truth "by His Spirit". The Spirit of God and His relation to God is likened to the intimate relation of "the spirit of man which is in him" (verses 10, 11). In other words, they who are taught by the Spirit can say, "We have the mind of Christ" (verse 16).

This connection of spirit and mind is found in Eph. iv. 23, "And be renewed in the spirit of your mind", which may be rendered, "The spirit, that is to say, your mind". The last reference speaks of peace. The mind of the flesh is enmity against God, but Phil. iv. 7 speaks of both heart and mind kept in perfect peace by Christ. If we ponder these passages we shall the better understand "the truth" which is taught in Eph. iv. 17 onwards.

Accessories and issues of alienation.

Vanity of mind (Eph. iv. 17).—The first item of alienation given is vanity of mind. The mind of the old man is like the old creation "subject to vanity" (Rom. viii. 20), and like Babel (Rom. i. 21). The essential connection between this vanity and the idolatrous perversion of Babel is seen not only in Rom. i. 21-23, but in Acts xix. 15, 16, where "vanities" and "the living God" are placed in opposition, and moreover these vanities are connected with the period of Gentile alienation when they were "suffered to walk in their own ways".

A darkened understanding (Eph. iv. 18).—The sequence "vanity . . . . . darkness" is observed in Rom. i. 21. "They became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened". We are reminded of the past, the change and the consequent walk, in Eph. v. 8:--

"For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord, walk as children of light."

The complete reversal of alienation and its darkness is found in Eph. i. 18:--

"The eyes of your heart (A.V. understanding) having been enlightened."

A comparison of Rom. i. 21 with Eph. iv. 17, 18 will show that "heart" and "understanding" are practically synonymous.

The ignorance that is in them because of the hardness of their hearts (Eph. iv. 18).—We may gather something concerning this ignorance by reading Paul's speech at Athens (Acts xvii. 30). There, dealing with the wise of the earth, he speaks of their ignorant worship, and of the unknown god. To turn from One in Whom we move, live and have our being, from One Who gave fruitful seasons and every reason for gratitude, to turn away from Him and to worship the works of their own hands was the practical expression of their "alienation from the life of God".

In verse 30 we meet the word "ignorance" and find that it characterizes the whole Gentile period, "And at the times of this ignorance God winked at". This ignorance and alienation are beyond human remedy. No philosopher or orator who ever stood upon Mar's Hill could dispel its gloom or illuminate its darkness. The darkness, alienation and ignorance of Eph. iv. 18 are the expansion of the words "vanity of mind" of the previous verse (iv. 17). The walk as the Gentiles which was forbidden is expanded in iv. 19:--

"Who being past feeling have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness."

In this record of the Gentile walk we find the word paredoken:--

"God gave them up to uncleanness" (Rom. i. 24).
"They gave themselves up to uncleanness" (Eph. iv. 19).

The Scripture adds "with greediness". Here we have the two sides of the solemn truth. The act of God was not without cause:--

"For this cause God gave them up" (Rom. i. 26).
"Even as they did not approve to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them up to a reprobate mind" (Rom. i. 28).

"The fool hath said in his heart, 'There is no God'." (Psa. xiv. 1); the immediate comment is, "They are corrupt; they have done abominable works".

Life and Truth.

The passages of Scripture brought together here impress us with the important position of the mind in connection with the activities of life. The word "life" (zoe) occurs but once in this epistle, namely, in Eph. iv. 18, "the life of God". It does not appear to be used in any form in any other part of the epistle, except in Eph. ii. 5 where it is a compound and translated "quickened together". In case any reader should think that we have overlooked Eph. vi. 3 we would point out that the word there is not zoe.

How are we to understand this alienation from the life of God? The parallel passage in Col. i. 21 connects this alienation with "wicked works". We cannot "live unto God" without the "life of God", and that life can only be ours as we are "made alive together with Christ".

The sphere of resurrection life is "the truth", even as sin and death are part of the province of "the lie". The Gentiles, we are told in Rom. i. 25, "changed the truth of God for the lie", and this led to their alienation. Here in Eph. iv. we are to read of putting away the lie and of putting on the truth:--

> "Ye however have not thus learned the Christ—if at least it is Him ye have heard, and by Him ye have been taught, even as truth is in Jesus" (Eph. iv. 20, 21).

The presence here of the name "Jesus" instead of the more usual "The Lord Jesus Christ" demands an explanation. While the personal name of the Lord is constantly used in the Gospels, its use without some added title in the Epistles is the exception rather than the rule. Writing to the Hebrews the apostle uses the name "Jesus" eight times (this includes Heb. iv. 8 which does not refer to our Lord but to Joshua). The references are Heb. ii. 9; iv. 14; vi. 20; vii. 22; x. 19; xii. 2, 24; xiii. 12.

In the church epistles the apostle uses the name eleven times in all, three of these references however deal either with unbelievers or the testing of spirits, leaving another series of eight with direct teaching for the church. The references are Rom. iii. 26; viii. 11; II Cor. iv. 5, 10, 11, 14; Eph. iv. 21; and Phil. ii. 10. If these facts stood alone we might feel that there was no spiritual significance in the number of the occurrences, but when we know that the numerical value (gematria) of the Greek letters of the word "Jesus" is 888 (a pointed contrast to the number of the name of the beast which is 666), and that the number 8 has the significance of resurrection (a fresh start, as for example Noah and those with him in the ark--see II Pet. ii. 5 and I Pet. iii. 20; "the eighth person" and "eight souls"), then the introduction of the name "Jesus" here in Eph. iv. assumes definite meaning.

Most if not all of the references given above are found in contexts of resurrection, and it is because the truth which the apostle is about to teach is vitally related to the Lord as the Head of the new creation, the last man and the second Adam, that he uses this name.

All is now ready for the expansion of "the truth in Jesus". The old man in its total alienation from God necessitates the new man and the new creation. This therefore is the subject that must occupy our attention in our next paper.

The Body in Ephesians.

p. 106

A beloved reader raises the question as to why we have given but one reference to the doctrinal portion of Ephesians in the structure set out on page 52 of the present volume.

In case other readers should be perplexed and conclude that we have acted arbitrarily, we point out that the reference to the body in Eph. ii. 16 refers to the individual body of the Lord Himself and not to the church. Similarly we omitted the reference in v. 28, for there the reference is not to the church, but to the body of the individual believer.

To place the matter clearly before the reader we will set out the complete structure, including all references, but marking the passages that do not enter into the argument of Eph. iv. 16:--

The Body.

A	i. 23.	The church which is His body.	Ecclesiastical.
B	ii. 16.	Reconcile. Reference to the Lord's own body.
C	iv. 4.	The one body.	Ecclesiastical.
D	iv. 12.	Gifts for building up.	Past.
E	iv. 16-.	Fitly joined together.	Central.
D	iv. -16.	Member for growth.	Present.
C	v. 23.	Christ the Head.	Practical.
B	v. 28.	Love. Reference to believer's own body.
A	v. 30.	The church and members.	Practical.

#75. The new man and the Truth (Eph. iv. 20-24)
pp. 136 – 142

In our last paper we were led, both by the contemplation of the utter alienation of the Gentiles from the life of God, and the significance of the name "Jesus", to expect the introduction of a new creation. Such is indeed the fact, and without it we should be left without the least hope of ever throwing off the dreadful dominion of the old man. Let us observe the disposition of the subject matter before we go into details.

The new man (Eph. iv. 20-24).

A | 20, 21. Truth in Jesus. Head of new creation.
B | 22. Put off the old man. Corrupt.
B | 23, 24-. Put on the new man. Renewed.
A | -24. Truth (righteousness and holiness of). Sphere of new creation.

"The truth in Jesus" is the truth of the new creation. The old man belongs to "the lie", the new man to "the truth". The old man is corrupt, the new man is renewed and holy. The words "put off" are to be referred to the word "taught", and the passage reads:--

> "And by Him ye have been taught (. . . . .) to put off . . . . . the old man."

We are in the practical section of the epistle, and so are not instructed as to how the old man was put off by Christ, but our attention is directed rather to the outworkings of that doctrine. We are to put off "as regards the former conversation" the old man, or as Colossians put it:--

> "Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds" (Col. iii. 9).

"With his deeds" is equivalent to "the former conversation", remembering that the A.V. word "conversation" is much more than merely speaking with another, but means the whole manner of life.

The foundation of this teaching is Rom. vi. 6:--

> "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be rendered inoperative, that henceforth we should not serve sin."

The lusts or desires that dominate the unregenerate mind have one characteristic, they are "deceitful". This is not to be limited to the coarser lusts of the flesh, the higher and finer activities of the mind are marked with the same Satanic brand, for Col. ii. 8 speaks of "philosophy" as being "vain and deceitful", and essentially so inasmuch as it is "not after Christ". The new man therefore arises out of the "truth in Jesus", and repudiates as the lie whatever is not "after Christ". Christ must be foundation and top stone of this erection, even as He is the Alpha, Omega and Amen of the purpose of the ages.

The new creation.

The glorious truth given to the apostle to make known with such fervour is no mere negation. It does not find its full expression in "putting off" merely, but is only fully expressed when "put off" is succeeded by "put on". But, just as the old man which has become corrupt implies the creation of Adam at the beginning, so the new man which is to be put on necessitates a new creation. There are two ways whereby this new creation could be attained. Either by an instantaneous act, without previous preparation, or by a process beginning here and now in this present life and reaching its consummation in that instantaneous change "in the twinkling of an eye" when this mortal shall put on immortality.*

This latter method appears to be the one that describes the work of God. Having said so much, it is necessary to draw attention to just exactly what phase of the new creative work belongs to this present life, and what belongs to the life to come. It will be found upon examination that the Lord begins the work here in connection with the mind, reserving until the day of redemption and resurrection His work in connection with the body. The body of the saintliest believer is just as mortal as it was before his conversion. Paul had to acknowledge that while the inward man was renewed day by day, the outward man was perishing. This perishing and mortal body is indeed allowed to feel the earnest of the risen life, and many times the earthen vessel is "cast down but not destroyed", thereby bearing about in the body the "dying of the Lord Jesus" that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in "our mortal flesh". That is a precious truth, but the flesh is "mortal flesh" just the same. Therefore, seeing these two phases of the new creation and their appointed times, we observe the order in Eph. iv. where the first step is indicated by the words, "And to be renewed in the spirit of your mind" (Eph. iv. 23). The new creation begins within. Its present sphere is the mind. The body is not changed until the resurrection. The due observance of this sequence is an important factor in the interpretation of the epistle to the Philippians.

"The mind of Christ" (Phil. ii.).
"The body of His glory" (Phil. iii.).

Ananeoo ("to be renewed") does not occur elsewhere in the N.T. Two words are employed to express the idea of newness--kainos and neos. Kainos looks backward, it excludes the old and the past. Neos looks forward, and suggests youth. The two words come together in Col. iii. 10:--

"And having put on the new man (neos) being renewed (anakainoo)."

In other words, we have put on the new, young, rejuvenate man, fresh, vigorous, prime, with all the glorious future stretching out in its limitless possibilities by the grace of God, and have been renewed with a life that standing beside the empty tomb looks back at a past, dead, buried, excluded, finished. Neos turns our faces toward Christ, the last Adam, kainos looks back to the first Adam. The one says "life has begun", the other "that life has finished". Thus we have the reverse and the obverse of this blessed truth.

[NOTE: * - This reference to I Cor. xv. must not be misconstrued. We do not believe that the hope of the one body awaits "the last trump", we use the passage here in a general way.]

The spirit of your mind, the subject of this renewal, looks to the doctrine of Rom. vi. There we learn that the seat of sin is in the members of our mortal body (Rom. vi. 6, 12, 13, 19). The mind being held in subjection to the flesh (Rom. vii. 14, 15, 18, 22), even though illuminated by the law of the Lord, finds itself utterly enthralled and under the dominion of sin which is in the members. Hence the battle of the unsaved yet enlightened Jew (Rom. vii. 23).

As we have already said, we have no warrant to believe that the bodies of believers undergo any process of renewal, but rather that these bodies of ours shall returned to dust, to be raised incorruptible, or changed in the case of the living at the time, when the Lord comes.

When the sinner passes from death unto life, from Adam to Christ, from the power of Satan to God, the dominion of sin is broken, the mind is set free, and it becomes possible for the first time to "yield ourselves servants to obey" either sin or God (Rom. vi. 16). Before this we had no option.

The new creation manifested.

The renewal of the mind is an inward operation. It is completed and rounded off by a corresponding outward response:--

> "And to put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and holiness of the truth" (Eph. iv. 24).

With this passage we should read the parallel in Col. iii. 10:--

> "And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created Him."

These passages taken together are mutually helpful. Let us notice a few special features.

(1). Creation.

Both emphasize the fact of creation:--

> "Created in righteousness and holiness" (Eph. iv. 24).
> "Created after the image of Him" (Col. iii. 10).

With these passages we should compare those of Eph. ii.:--

> "We are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus" (ii. 10).
> "For to create in Himself of the twain one new man" (ii. 15).

It is impossible to believe the gospel as preached by Paul and to tolerate any kind of mere reformation. The basic fact and the most decisive in Paul's witness is that all men, all doctrine, all works, are ranged under one of two heads, Adam or Christ. Quite one half of our problems, whether doctrinal or practical, are to be solved by the recognition of this one great fact. Redemption therefore must eventuate in (2). The new man.

The goal of the six days' creation was man. The great sun in the heavens is man's servant. To his physical necessities the day of twenty-four hours is exactly adjusted. The earth is proportioned with marvellous accuracy to man's strength. The list could be continued into detailed tabulation of all the sciences. Man created in the image of God, placed upon the earth to have dominion, explains every known phenomenon of nature.

As it is with the old creation, so it is with the new. Its centre is the new man created anew in the image of God. The ecclesiastical unity that results from the reversal of the dispensational alienation of Eph. ii. is called "the new man", and is created so (Eph. ii. 12-15). The practical unity with Christ, as the reverse of alienation from the life of God, is also called "the new man" (iv. 18-24).

A needed corrective.

The dispensation of the mystery is called "the dispensation of the grace of God". The gospel of that same period is called "the gospel of the grace of God". Salvation is by grace, and that salvation is at the other extreme to salvation by works. The transcendent character of grace is so overwhelming that we are apt to forget that if this salvation by grace is not out of works, it is nevertheless unto works. Another feature that is likely to lead to onesidedness is to emphasize the dispensational standpoint of the new man (Eph. ii. 15) to the exclusion of the practical teaching concerning the same (Eph. iv. 24). Let us not forget that the church which was chosen in Christ before the overthrow of the world, and blessed in the super-heavenlies, was chosen that it might be holy (Eph. i. 1-4).

Let us compare Eph. iv. 24 with Col. iii. 10. It is quite manifest that the "new man" of Col. iii. 10 is the same as that of Eph. iv. It is the "practical" view rather than the "dispensational" of Eph. ii. Yet so inseparable are these two concepts of the one truth, that Col. iii. 11 immediately continues, using terms that are comparable to the teaching of Eph. ii., rather than that of Eph. iv.:--

> "Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond and free; but Christ is all and in all."

The ecclesiastical unity is not absent from Eph. iv., however, for verse 25 says:--

> "Wherefore putting away the lie, speak every man truth with his neighbour, for we are MEMBERS one of another" (Eph. iv. 25).

The truth is that the church of the one body should be reflected in each individual member that makes up that unity. If Christ be the Head of the church, He must be the Head of each individual also. If that church be a new creation, so also must each individual member be. It that church be a new man, each member should put on the new man. If Christ dwells in the temple built by the Spirit (Eph. ii. 20-22), then "Because of this" (Eph. iii. 1 and 14) each individual member should desire to manifest that truth in miniature, and is taught to pray "that Christ may dwell in the heart by faith". Thus doctrine, dispensation and practice meet together in "the truth in Jesus".

(3). The Image.

Eph. iv. 24 says that the new man is "according to God". Col. ii. 10 says it is "according to His image". It is evident that Gen. i. 26, 27 is in view. The introduction of the lie into the garden of Eden rendered the purpose of the image in Adam abortive, but only temporarily, for in Christ, the last Adam, the goal is reached. It is the purpose of God that every one of the true seed shall be conformed to the image of His Son (Rom. viii. 29). The church of the one body, a new creation in that image, is a firstfruits, the greatest and richest earnest of the glorious future.

The goal of Col. iii. 11 that "Christ is all and in all", foreshadows the goal of the ages "that God may be all in all". Christ has been given as Head over all things now to the church, another anticipation of the day when all things shall be placed under His feet.

(4). Knowledge.

Eph. iv. 24 speaks of righteousness and holiness of truth. Col. iii. 10 speaks of renewal unto a full knowledge of God, the Creator. Is there a difference here? What connection is there between righteousness, holiness and knowledge of the Creator? Have we so soon forgotten the context of Eph. iv. 24? Have we not seen the utter UNrighteousness and UNcleanness of ignorance? Have we not seen the degradation that comes from vanity of mind, darkened understanding and ignorance? If there is to be a change, ignorance must give place to knowledge, darkness to light, uncleanness to holiness, wicked works to righteousness. In other words, the complete truth is expressed by the two passage; either Eph. iv. or Col. iii. taken separately implies and necessitates the other. Having touched upon this teaching concerning knowledge we shall realize the condition of things expressed in Rom. i. the more vividly:--

> "Because that when they KNEW God . . . . . they became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was DARKENED . . . . . they did not like to retain God in their KNOWLEDGE, they were given over to a reprobate mind" (Rom. i. 21-23).

We shall also understand the meaning of II Cor. iv. 3-6 the better:--

> "But if our gospel be veiled (see iii. 14, 15) by those things which are destroyed (see iii. 7, 11, 13, 14) it is veiled by which the god of this age hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the glory of the gospel of Christ, Who is the Image of God (see Col. iii. 10), should shine upon them . . . . . the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" (II Cor. iv. 3-6).

Here we see the gospel and knowledge used practically as synonymous. The outcome of this teaching is expressed in Eph. iv. 25:--

"Wherefore putting away the lie, speak you truth, each one with his neighbour, because we are members one of another" (Eph. iv. 25).

The reference here to Zech. viii. 16 shows that mere speaking will not satisfy the demands of love to our neighbour, for the passage continues thus: "execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates". "The lie" has brought in its train misery, oppression, death. "The truth" reverses all this and manifests itself in deed as well as in word.

The verses that follow expand and apply this exhortation to the whole range of earth's relationships. As this occupies the whole of chapter v. and part of chapter vi., we must perforce conclude this present paper here.

Let us seek a tender conscience regarding these things, keeping steadily before us the intimate and vital association that has been revealed to exist between the high calling of the one body and the walk that is worthy.

#76. Put on . . . . . Put off . . . . . Walk accurately (Eph. iv. 25 – v. 21)

pp. 161 – 172

The conflict of the ages is reflected in the epistle to the Ephesians. It is summed up in the antagonism that is seen between the truth and the lie.

The church of the mystery has been delivered from the authority of darkness and translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son. That is the repudiation of the lie. The church has been lifted up from earth and earthly things, quickened, raised and seated in the heavenlies. That is the repudiation of the lie. The members of that church, once energized by the prince of the power of the air, is now energized by the self-same power that raised Christ from the dead. That is the repudiation of the lie.

But what of ourselves? Do we remain passive after grace, as perforce we were compelled to be before? Have we no walk that is worthy? Have we no old man to put off? No new man to put on? We have, and doctrinal truth alone can no more save, sanctify and bless than that kind of faith exercised by demons whose hair stand on end in horror (pritto, see Job iv. 15).

The putting away of the lie.

"Wherefore putting away lying" should read "Wherefore putting away the lie". "To put away" (apotithemi) is used of putting aside clothing (Acts vii. 58), weight (Heb. xii. 1), and occurs in Rom. xiii. 12; Eph. iv. 22, 25; Col. iii. 8; James i. 21; and I Pet. ii. 1. Eph. iv. 25 is the only place where we read of putting away the lie. All other passages deal with some of the smaller sub-divisions into which the lie falls, such as "the works of darkness", "the old man and his manner of life" and such individual manifestations as "anger", "malice", "blasphemy", &c.

In Eph. iv. 25-32 this putting away of the lie is dealt with, and the Spirit of God condescends to details in order that we may be made sensible that in the words of our mouth, the works of our hands, the very tone of our voices, we may manifest the truth and repudiate the lie. Two expressions seems to stand out in this passage as index figures on a dial:--

THE LIE.—"Gives place to the devil" and "Grieves the Holy Spirit of God."
THE TRUTH.—"Even as God for Christ's sake hath acted graciously to you."

Let us see the passage as a whole.

Eph. iv. 25-32.

A | 25. | a | Putting away the lie.
b | Speak truth.
c | Reason.—"Members."
B | 26. Question concerning anger.
C | 27. Give not place to the devil.
D | 28. | d | Steal not.
e | Labour for that which is good.
WORKS. f | Working with hands.
g | To supply need.
D | 29. | d | No corrupt speech.
e | But that which is good.
WORDS. f | Out of your mouth.
g | To build up the need.
C | 30. Grieve not the Holy Spirit.
B | 31-. Answer as to anger.
A | -31, 32. | a | Put away all bitterness, &c.
b | Be kind.
c | Reason.—"God for Christ's sake."

The practical side of the truth.

If we have put away the lie, we shall speak truth with fellow-members. To speak truth may at first sight appear to mean only the bearing of a true witness, but a man who would scorn to tell a lie may fail to speak truth if "corrupt communications" proceed out of his mouth. His remedy is found in the "seasoning" which only the "grace" of God can give (Col. iv. 6).

Or again, the man who eschews corrupt speech may tarnish the fair name of truth by "bitterness". Even husbands who love their wives in some faint resemblance of the love of Christ are warned to beware of this evil thing (Col. iii. 19). Anger too must be carefully watched. We know that it is possible for anger to exist without sin, for such is the testimony of Mark iii. 5, and all the passages where orge is translated "wrath" when used of God. Nevertheless it is true wisdom to shun anger, to class it with bitterness and wrath and clamour and blasphemy and malice (Eph. iv. 31), for it requires a perfect and sinless being to be angry and sin not. If anger is ever entertained let us hasten to finish with it; let not the sun go down before the difference is settled. Plutarch tells us it was a maxim among the Pythagoreans, that whenever one had given way to anger, the difference was made up before sunset. Would that this same spirit were more common among the Lord's people.

Not only may truth be expressed in words, it must come out in deeds. Stealing is the lie in practice. This in all its shapes and forms must be put away. In its place let there be labour, working with the hands that which is good. This labour is with the object:--

> "That he may HAVE, TO GIVE" (Eph. iv. 28).

Labour merely that one may have may be selfishness, and industry of itself may not express "the truth", but labour that one may have something to give is an entire reversal of the lie, that steals from another, and is a manifestation of the truth.

The devil, and the Spirit of God.

Closely associated with the lie is the devil, and with the truth the Holy Spirit of God. It must be kept well in memory that to fail to put off the lie and to put on the new man may "give place to the devil", and when this takes place we may be sure that there is also another equally sad result, viz., the grieving of the Holy Spirit of God whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption.

Among the many ways whereby truth may be hindered and a place given to the devil is revealed in such a strange word as "clamour". That man who when he gives a command must "shout", who when he argues a point of truth must "raise his voice" does not give an outward expression of that lowliness and meekness which commends the truth.

"Evil speaking" is in the original "blasphemy", and is probably derived from blaptein ten phemen = "Blasting the reputation or credit" of any one. We may sincerely believe that to take a "text" from Shakespeare or the Poets is to belittle the Scriptures, but we sometimes wonder whether Tennyson's Knights of King Arthur, who vowed "to speak no slander, nor listen to it" do not put many a believer to shame. "Love thinketh no evil."

Be ye imitators of God.

The remedy for this and all kindred manifestations of the flesh is found in the next three verses:--

> "Be ye kind . . . . . Be ye imitators of God" (Eph. iv. 32, v. 1).

This after all is but a homely way of expressing the more doctrinal passage:--

> "Put on the new man which AFTER GOD is created" (Eph. iv. 24).

"The lie" finds its pattern in the devil:--

> "I speak that which I have seen with My Father: and ye do that which ye have seen with your father . . . . . Ye do the deeds of your father . . . . . If God were your Father, ye would love Me, ... Ye are of your father the devil . . . . . he is a liar and the father of it" (i.e. "the lie") (John viii. 38-44).

It will be seen therefore that to fail to "put away the lie" gives "place to the devil", while "putting on the new man" is doctrinally expressed by the words "after God" and is practically shown by becoming "imitators of God".

The word "follower" in v. 1 is mimetes. This word occurs seven times in the N.T. and is therefore marked with the seal of spiritual perfection. The word will be recognized as the source of our English word "mimic". This element of imitation is expressed in verse 32, where we are exhorted to kindness and forgiveness, "Even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you", and is carried forward into v. 2 in the words, "As Christ also hath loved us".

The love of Christ, the object of our imitation, is not an abstraction. The reader will call to mind many passages speaking of both the Father and the Son, where the words "loved and gave" come together. So here. Christ loved, and that love we are to imitate, Christ loved and gave, and that kind of love we are to imitate. Christ loved and gave Himself. This is the essence both of loving and of giving:-- > "Praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift . . . . . not as we expected, but first gave their own selves to the Lord, and to us . . . . ." (II Cor. viii. 4, 5).

The love we are to imitate, moreover, has further qualities. He gave Himself for us . . . . . to God. All our loving and giving must be of this character. It is not merely philanthropy or what is now called "charity", that might (though we doubt it) fulfil the first clause "for us". It is, on the other hand, not that cold and lofty disdain of all things human and kindly that may in self-deception be called an exclusive offering "to God". We are sure God has no pleasure in monasteries or nunneries, neither in the hypocrite's claim "It is Corban" (Mark vii. 11); the twofold offering "for us . . . . . to God" alone satisfies the case.

Lastly, this love manifests itself in the giving of an offering and a sacrifice. It will be seen that there is no contradiction of the Psalmist who said, "None of us can by any means redeemed his brother", for redemption is by blood (Eph. i. 7). Into that part of the Saviour's work no man enters, but Paul knew what it was to fill up what was behind of the afflictions of Christ in his flesh for the sake of the church, he knew what it was to be offered upon the sacrifice and service of faith (Col. i. 24 and Phil. ii. 17). Moreover, he uses the same words, "a sweet smelling savour", to describe the kindly gifts of the Philippians:--

> "The things that were sent from you, an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice, well pleasing to God" (Phil. iv. 18).

Christian giving should always have the atmosphere of the altar and the sanctuary. The children of God contribute to this and that, their gifts may be liberal, they may be helpful, they may encourage, but, do not let them miss the highest and the best. Let them be "even as God for Christ's sake", let them partake of the character of the offering of the sweet savour, then such offerings will be "well pleasing unto God".

The three-fold walk.

The apostle now brings the exhortation to walk worthy of the calling and to repudiate the old man, to bear upon things of every-day life. He exhorts us to:--

(1). "Walk in love as children of love" (Eph. v. 1, 2).
(2). "Walk as children of light" (Eph. v. 8).
(3). "Walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise" (Eph. v. 15).

Each walk is expressed both positively and negatively.

Walk in love.—The positive is expressed in the one great example, "as Christ also hath loved us". Negatively, the apostle has to run over the six-fold work of the flesh to ensure that the child of God shall not be left without warning.

Three-fold uncleanness in act.—Fornication, all uncleanness, unbridled lust.

Three-fold uncleanness in word.—Filthiness, foolish talking, jesting (suggestive talking).

Concerning the first three, the apostle says:--

> "Let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints" (Eph. v. 3).

Concerning the second three, he says:--

> "Things not consistent, but rather giving of thanks" (Eph. v. 4).

A further three-fold description bringing together those already named follows, and this time with a warning of great import:--

> "For this you know, for you have learned that no fornicator, or impure or lustful man, who is nothing better than an idolator, has any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God" (Eph. v. 5).

We do not feel called upon here to rake over this awful heap of corruption and bring to light that which we fain would hide, or which should "not once be named among us" (Eph. v. 3), "for it is a shame even to speak of these things" (Eph. v. 12), nevertheless this epistle is written to us and a very slight knowledge of modern life will teach us that these warnings are absolutely up to date. We have translated pleonexia, unbridled lust, rather than covetousness, and in this we are but following such as Conybeare and Howson, Jowett, and Trench. The latter shows the meaning of the word in the following passage:--

> "Take the sublime commentary on the word which Plato supplies, where he likens the desire of man to the sieve or pierced vessel of the Danaids, which they were ever filling, but might never fill: and it is not too much to say, that the whole longing of the creature, as it has itself abandoned God and by a just retribution is abandoned by Him, to stay its hunger with the swine's husks, instead of the children's bread, is contained in this word."

It is evident that the same comparison had occurred to Shakespeare:--

> "The cloyed will. That satiate, yet unsatisfied desire. That both filled and running". (Cymbeline i. 7).

To these words we would but add that the whole truth is expressed in the first and the tenth commandments:--

> "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me."
> "Thou shalt not covet, or desire."

To imitate God and to walk in love makes such things as detailed by the apostle impossible.

"Jesting" = eutrapeleia, refers to that loose talk which by skilful turning of words brings up to the mind far more than the actual wording may appear to intend and is to be shunned by all who put off "the lie".

The Inheritance.

The words of the apostle that should cause every child of God to stop and consider are that those that do such things:--

> "Have no inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God" (Eph. v. 5).

There is no question but that one phase at least of the inheritance is in the nature of a reward, and consequently may be forfeited. This is clearly expressed in Col. iii. 24 in a passage that exactly corresponds with Eph. v. 5:--

> "Knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance: for ye serve the Lord Christ."

Rom. viii. 17 seems to observe the distinction between "heirs of God" because children of God, and "joint heirs with Christ" if so be that these children walk as Christ walked, which must of necessity involve suffering and rejection.

The inheritance which is a matter of predestination and redemption (Eph. i. 11, 14) is one thing, the inheritance that is in the kingdom of Christ and of God is another, and it may be forfeited. Men may emphasize "grace", they may call such teaching "legal", they may seek to throw out the idea of reward from the epistles of the mystery, but the apostle concludes his words of warning by saying:--

> "Let no man deceive you with vain words" (Eph. v. 6).

The parallel in Colossians but endorses or enforces this:--

> "Beware lest any man spoil you through . . . . . vain deceit . . . . . Let no man beguile you of your reward" (Col. ii. 8-18).

Because of these things the wrath of God is coming on the children of disobedience, and the members of the church are not to be partakers with such. There must be an outward expression of the inward change. Once they too were darkness and walked in darkness, producing the unfruitful works of darkness. Now, however, they are light in the Lord and so the exhortation comes, "Walk as children of light". Love leads to sacrifice, and repudiates lust which is but the expression of selfishness. Light leads to fruitfulness and reproves the unfruitful works of darkness. Where the A.V. reads:-- the revised text read, "the fruit of the light".

> "For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth" (Eph. v. 9).

This reading contains a truth which is everywhere confirmed in the works of God around us. The student of Horticulture is early impressed with the essential place that light has in plant growth. The bulk of the food upon our tables daily are carbo-hydrates or starchy foods, such as bread and all cereals, potatoes, sugar, &c. Now this carbon is obtained by plants, not from the soil but from the air. Carbon assimilation, called also Photo-synthesis ("placing together by light"), is the work of the green chlorophyll in the leaves, and is entirely dependent upon the action of sunlight. If a patch of black be put upon a leaf in the morning and the leaf be examined under a microscope at night, it will be found that the exposed cells of the leaf are full of starch grains, whereas the cells beneath the black patch are empty.

It is scientific to the last degree to teach that on the first day of creation God should say, "Light be, and light was". It is the fuller truth to see in this statement of Genesis a type of the gospel:--

> "For God, Who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light . . . . . the light of the glorious gospel" (II Cor. iv. 4, 6).

Not only does light produce fruit, but darkness has its unfruitful works. We all have seen the varied coloured toadstool that, like the mushroom, do not depend upon the light. No one, however, has seen a green toadstool or mushroom. Such have no power of using sunlight, they are vegetable parasites living upon others, or saprophytes living upon the decaying tissue of dead plants. Such are nature's pictures of the unfruitful works of darkness. Darkness and death and unfruitfulness are all in the passage before us:--

> "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light" (Eph. v. 14).

The third walk is called "circumspect". Akribos is possibly derived from eis akron benai = "going up to the summit" of a hill, and generally carries with it the thought of accuracy and exactness, e.g.:-- > Akribeia = "Taught according to the perfect manner" (Acts xxii. 3).

> Akribestatos = "The straitest sect" (Acts xxvi. 5).
> Akribesteros = "The way of God more accurately" (Acts xviii. 26).

Josephus speaks of the Pharisees as:--

> "The sect . . . . . who are thought to excel others in their exactness about their national institutions" (Life 38).

There can be no doubt from the above usage of the word what the apostle intends to teach in Eph. v. 15. Grace does not mean laxity or lack of diligence. The same word that describes the zeal for accuracy of the formalist under the law, describes that consecrated zeal which moved Aquila and Priscilla in their endeavours to lead Apollos into the fuller light, and should characterize those of us who have received such a calling as is revealed in Ephesians. The pathway for the saint leads through dark and slippery places. Uncleanness and defilement lie all around, and while there is the blessed provision in Christ for uncleanness contracted in the pilgrim way, we are solemnly warned of the danger of voluntarily entering into any of these things from which redemption has set us free. We have been delivered from the authority of darkness and have been translated into the kingdom of His dear Son. We are therefore enjoined to walk accurately, remembering the pit from which we have been delivered.

This is the last of the seven occurrences of the word "walk" in Ephesians. The first in the practical section says "walk worthy"; the last says "walk accurately". The first says "with all lowliness"; the last "with wisdom". Once again the parallel epistle to the Colossians will provide confirmation. Ephesians says:--

> "Walk worthy . . . . . walk accurately as wise . . . . . be not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is . . . . . be filled with the Spirit."

Colossians says:--

> "That ye might be filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding: that ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful" (Col. i. 9, 10).

"Redeeming the time."—Exagorazo means "to buy out of the market" with the meaning of our English "forestall" implied. Forestall means to buy a thing before it is placed upon the stall in the market and so to exhibit a keen business sense. As stewards and as redeemed ones this keen business sense should be ours in the exercise of our calling and stewardship. "Time" here is not chronos—mere duration, but kairos, a fitting time, hence an opportunity. It has been said:--

> 'Opportunities are for eternity, but not to eternity.'

Alas that many only recognize opportunity by its back. Think of the opportunities for service, for study, for communion, for helping, that have been allowed to slip this day, this week. Have you always been prepared to speak that word in season? to give that helping hand? The past is beyond us, and we can but seek the forgiveness that is ours in Christ. The present is here, let us then:--

> "Forestall the opportunity, because the days are evil" (Eph. v. 16).

To do this we need wisdom, we need to:-- > "Understand what the will of the Lord is" (Eph. v. 17).

How can this understanding be attained? The answer comes in the next verse:--

> "And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit (when) speaking to one another" (Eph. v. 18, 19).

What is it to be filled with the Spirit?

This passage is important enough to warrant a pause and a careful examination. First we can see an intended contrast, a contrast introduced in verse 3 of this same chapter. The Gentiles who knew not God found their enjoyment and inspiration in the intoxication of wine, their speech was corrupt, filthy and unfit for saints. Their drinking songs, accompanied by instruments, resounded with the praise of Bacchus, Venus and the like. The saint is to be a contrast. Instead of wine he is to be filled with the Spirit, instead of unclean mirth and idolatrous songs he is to sing spiritual songs and make melody in his heart. Instead of praising the gods of darkness his melody and praise should be directed to the Lord. What are we to understand by the injunction, "Be filled with the Spirit".

To understand this statement it is necessary to understand the use of the Greek verb to fill. Pleroo, "to fill" takes three cases after it. As an active verb, followed by the Accusative, of the vessel or whatever is filled. As an active verb, followed by the Genitive, of what it is filled with. As a passive verb, followed by the Dative, of the filler, and as a passive verb, followed by the Genitive, of what the vessel is filled with.

In the passage before us the verb is passive, and "with Spirit", en pneumati, is dative. This means that the "Spirit" is the One that "fills", and not that the believer is filled with the Spirit. To make sure that the meaning is clear, let us put it this way. A cup may be filled with water, it may be filled with a pump. Now, the incongruity of the statement would prevent anyone from imagining that the pump was found afterwards in the cup, but as there are passages which speak of the filling or baptism of the Spirit, the unguarded reader does not discern the meaning so clearly. Now if the Spirit fills us with something that takes the place of "wine wherein is excess", we should seek to know what it is. Once again the parallel epistle Colossians supplies the needed information:--

> "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly. Teach and admonish one another in all wisdom, singing in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs with grace in your hearts to the Lord" (Col. iii. 16).

This parallel is so complete that we cannot avoid the inference that "to be filled with the Spirit" will be to be filled by the Spirit with the word of Christ. The Spirit everywhere takes of the things of Christ and applies them to the heart of the believer. That constitutes the inspiration of his renewed conversation, "speaking to yourselves", and will prevent any corrupt communication from proceeding out of his mouth, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, and a heart filled by the Spirit with the word of Christ will speak accordingly. The melody of hearts finds its Amen in:-- > "Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Eph. v. 20).

The lowliness and meekness that adorns this doctrine is expressed by:-- > "Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God" (Eph. v. 21).

"Fear", phobos, and "reverence", phobeomai (see Eph. v. 33) explain one another. Our reverence for Christ places us all in our true relationship one with another. This relationship is threefold and practically covers the whole of human society.

Our next paper must be devoted to the application of truth to the domestic and social side of life, a side as important if not more so than that of the ecclesiastical and public. Truth like charity begins at home. The Bishop must be able to manage his own house before he can think of ruling the house of God. The Spirit of God has sealed us. The Spirit of God may fill us. Let us walk accurately, for His Word is still a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our path.

Redemption. New Series.

#4. The Anointed Cherub.

pp. 113 - 128

Ezek. xxviii. is devoted to the sin and the judgment of the Prince of Tyre, the type (verses 1-10), and the sin and judgment of the King of Tyre, the antitype (verses 11-19). We learn from Josephus that the Prince of Tyre was Ithobalus II, which in Hebrew becomes Ethbaal. Ethbaal means Baal's Man! The name of this Prince is suggestive of his character, while it is equally suggestive to remember that an earlier Ethbaal was the father of "that woman Jezebel" (I Kings xvi. 31).

"Ye shall be as God."

The serpent's words to Eve in Gen. iii. find an echo in Ezek. xxviii. The mystery of iniquity presses on to its goal, which is expressed in the same words—"as Gods" (II Thess. ii. 4; Rev. xiii.). Ezekiel is commissioned to say unto the Prince of Tyre:--

> "Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a God, I sit in the seat of God, in the midst of the seas; yet thou art a man, and not God, though thou set thine heart as the heart of God . . . . . Wilt thou say before Him that slayeth thee, I am God?" (Ezek. xxviii. 2-9).

This Prince had prided himself in his wisdom:--

> "Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel; there is no secret that they can hide from thee" (Ezek. xxviii. 3).

By this wisdom the Prince had gotten riches, and by his traffic he had increased them. This led to pride, and pride of a blasphemous character. His end is to be slain:-- > "Thou shalt be a man, and no God, in the hand of Him that slayeth thee" (Ezek. xxviii. 9).

Not only should death be the end of his blasphemous claim, but his very glory should be brought to ignominy:--

> "They shall profane thy brightness" (Ezek. xxviii. 7).

The false and the true.

The word "brightness" as a feminine noun occurs nowhere else but in verse 17. It is one of a series of parallels which show that the Prince of Tyre, a man who aspired to Divine honours, is in his turn a type of the King of Tyre, who was more than man, who aspired to Divine honours. The verbal form of the word translated "brightness" is used of the glory of God's presence in several passages, a striking one being Psa. l. 2:-- "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined."

The reader will perceive that here we have a further parallel, for Zion, the perfection of beauty, is a similar expression to:-- "O Tyrus, thou hast said, I am of perfect beauty . . . . . thy builders have perfected thy beauty" (Ezek. xxvii. 3, 4).

also of the King of Tyre it is written:--

"Thou sealest up the sum, full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty" (Ezek. xxviii. 12).

Zion or Jerusalem is the geographical centre for the outworking of the mystery of godliness, while Babylon, Tyre, Pergamos and other cities have been, and will again be, the place of Satan's seat and the outworking of the mystery of iniquity.

Ezekiel gives a fuller description of the cherubim than any O.T. writer, and it is to him that we owe the description of the fallen cherub, which is given in chapter xxviii. under the title of the King of Tyre. Passing to the lamentation of verses 12-19, we pass from the history of one who was "a man (adam, Heb.) and no god" to one who was much more than man.

Three items make up the description of the King of Tyre, viz., (i.) His wisdom and beauty, (ii.) His title and office, (iii.) His iniquity and sin.

Ezek. xxviii. 12-17-.

A | 12, 13. Wisdom and beauty.
B | 14, 15-. The covering cherub.
C | -15. Iniquity.
C | 16-. Sin.
B | -16. The covering cherub.
A | 17-. Wisdom and beauty.

The finished pattern.

The opening description of this mighty being is truly wonderful:--

"Thou sealest up the sum, full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty" (Ezek. xxviii. 12).

"Thou art the finished pattern" is the rendering of The Companion Bible. The Hebrew word translated "sum" is the feminine form of the word meaning "measure" or "standard". In Ezek. xliii. 10 we have the same word as is used in xxviii. 12; there it is translated "pattern". The masculine form comes in Ezek. xlv. 11, "the bath shall be of one measure". The context suggests a standard. "A just ephah and a just bath. The ephah and the bath shall be of one measure." In Ezek. xviii. 25 and 29 the word is rendered "equal"; other passages give "to mete" (Isa. xl. 12), "to weigh" (Job xxviii. 25).

There can be no doubt but that we are here facing a revelation of tremendous import. This mighty being, now cast out as profane and doomed to become "ashes on the earth", was once the "standard". We anticipate a future article by pointing out that all the glories which were for a time vested in this anointed cherub are to be found in their perfectness and indefectibility in Christ. Christ is set before the church as "the perfect man", and the measure is "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ". The LXX in this place translates "sum" by homoiosis, which means "similitude" (cf. James iii. 9). This is the word which the LXX uses in Gen. i. 26, "Let us make man . . . . . after our likeness". When we read that Christ was "the image of the invisible God", or "the brightness of His glory, and the express image of His Person", we realize that Ezek. xxviii. 12 contains something of an echo of these statements.

Wisdom and beauty.

Following the statement already considered, the prophet continues:--

> "Full of wisdom and perfect in beauty" (Ezek. xxviii. 12).

There is evidently emphasis here, for although Ezekiel contains forty-eight chapters, the words "wise" and "wisdom" occur only in chapter xxvii. and xxviii. There must therefore be something peculiar in this attitude. Of the Prince of Tyre the prophet says:--

> "Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel . . . . . with thy wisdom . . . . . thou hast gotten thee riches . . . . . by the greatness of thy wisdom . . . . . hast thou multiplied thy riches . . . . . they shall unsheath their swords over the beauty of thy wisdom and profane thy brightness" (Ezek. xxviii. 3-7).

So runs the record of the Prince. Speaking of the King the prophet says:--

> "Full of wisdom and perfect in beauty . . . . . thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty, thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness" (Ezek. xxviii. 12-17).

This resplendent being, as to wisdom full, as to beauty perfect, was God's sealed standard at the time. The meaning of the words, "Thou sealest up the sum", may be illuminated by reference to the government standard of weights and measures. Encased in materials that maintain an even temperature, and buried deep in a cool cellar, safely resting under lock and key, lies the Imperial Yard Measure. This "seals up the sum", and to it as to a "finished pattern" all yard measures throughout the realm must conform.

Eden lost and restored.

We are now taken back to Eden the garden of God. The first mention of Eden in Scripture tells of the garden which the Lord planted "eastward in Eden". After that Genesis speaks of it as "the garden of Eden". After Gen. iv. no mention is made of Eden until we come to Isa. li. 3, which uses Eden as a contrast with the wilderness, and the garden of the Lord in contrast with the desert. Similarly Joel uses the garden of Eden also as a symbol:--

> "The land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness" (Joel ii. 3).

Ezek. xxxvi. 35 is closely parallel with Isa. li. 3. In Ezek. xxxi. and xxxii. much that is said of Pharaoh, King of Egypt, resembles the greatness, the pride and the fall of the Prince and the King of Tyre. The King of Egypt is likened to a cedar tree whose height was exalted above all the trees of the field:--

> "The cedars in the garden of God could not hide him . . . . . nor any tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty . . . . . all the trees of Eden that were in the garden of God envied him" (Ezek. xxxi. 8, 9).

These trees of Eden are further represented as being in "the nether parts of the earth":-

> "Yet shalt thou be brought down with the trees of Eden unto the nether parts of the earth" (Ezek. xxxi. 18).

This must strike the reader as a somewhat curious use of figures. If we think of Eden as described in Genesis, there is no individual that can fulfil the type set forth by these "trees". The LXX translates the garden of Eden by the word "paradise", which adds Rev. ii. 7 and, by analogy, Rev. xxii. to our list.

It will be seen that this paradise comes down from heaven as a part of the holy city. It appears that a paradise, a special garden of God, has a place in the first, the present and the future heavens and earth. The garden of Gen. ii. belongs to the present creation, but the Eden of Ezekiel belongs to the earlier creation. The somewhat strange references to the trees of Eden which had descended into the nether parts of the earth, and which are linked together with the proud yet punished King of Egypt, show this at least, that Eden has been the scene of rebellion and of judgment anterior to the sin of Adam. The pride and fall of the King of Tyre is connected with the garden of God.

The Serpent and the Cherubim.

> "Thou wast in Eden the garden of God" (Ezek. xxviii. 13).

Scripture speaks of two human beings only who were in Eden, the garden of God, namely, Adam and Eve. Apart from the Lord Himself but one other person entered that garden. Gen. iii. calls him the Serpent (Hebrew, the nachash, the "shining one"). A reference to Gen. iii. reveals a close connection between the Serpent and the Cherubim.

Gen. iii.

A | iii. 1. The Serpent. Supernatural and animal form.
B | iii. 2-24-. The temptation, sentence and expulsion.
A | iii. –24. The Cherubim. Supernatural and animal forms.

We have purposely left the central member without subdivision as our interest at the moment is in the Serpent and the Cherubim. There is no shadow of doubt as to the personality of the Serpent, for Rev. xx. 2 refers to him as:--

"That old Serpent, which is the Devil (N.T. Greek) and Satan" (O.T. Hebrew).

Satan a spirit, using the serpent as a medium, involved mankind in death. The cherubim, composite animal forms, yet belonging to the spirit world, pledge man's restoration and are associated with the flaming sword that keeps the way of the tree of life. When we see, as we hope to presently, that Satan, as we can now call this King of Tyre, was originally "the anointed cherub", the relation between the nachash and the cherubim in Gen. iii. will be more clearly seen. Before going further into the description of Satan before he sinned, it will help us to set out just what is said of him in this passage.

A survey of the subject.

We find statements revealing Satan's nature, attributes and actions, interspersed with statements revealing God's actions. The personal pronoun thou is emphatic:--

THOU sealest up the sum.
THOU hast been in Eden.
THOU wast created.
THOU art the anointed Cherub.
I have set thee so.
THOU wast upon the holy mountain.
THOU hast walked . . . . . stones of fire.
THOU was perfect in thy ways from the day that THOU wast created.
THOU hast sinned.
I will cast thee out.
I will destroy.
THINE heart was lifted up because of thy beauty.
THOU hast corrupted thy wisdom.
I will cast thee to the earth
I will lay thee before kings.
THOU hast defiled thy sanctuaries.
I will bring forth a fire.
I will bring thee to ashes.
THOU shalt be a terror.
Never shalt THOU be any more.

The three emphatic pronouns tell of Satan's original condition as created by God. He was the finished pattern, full of wisdom and perfect in beauty. His office was that of the anointed cherub that covereth, till iniquity was found in him. This iniquity is explained as a trafficking and a defiling. It rendered this glorious one profane. Its origin was pride. His heart was lifted up because of his beauty, and his wisdom he corrupted by reason of his brightness. Thirteen times do we read the word "thou" in reference to Satan. Seven times we have the pronoun "I" in reference to God. Once "I have" in reference to God's appointment of Satan as the anointed cherub. Six "I wills" in reference to God's pronouncement in reference to Satan's destruction. We can now return to some of the more detailed statements with less liability of missing the essential features:--

> "Every precious stone was thy covering:
> The sardius, topaz and the diamond,
> The beryl, the onyx and the jasper,
> The sapphire, the emerald and the carbuncle,
> And gold" (Ezek. xxviii. 13).

Spurrell's translation reads: "Thy covering veil was adorned with every precious stones."

Nine precious stones, in groups of threes, are the covering of this "shining one". It is impossible to avoid the implied connection with Aaron's breastplate, or with the foundations of the new Jerusalem. Further, precious stones figure in the descriptions of the appearances of the Lord Himself. Ezekiel speaks of beryl, amber, crystal and sapphire stone in describing the vision of chapter i., and John says in Rev. iv. 3-6:--

> "And He that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone, and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald . . . . . and before the throne was a sea of glass like unto crystal."

The nine precious stones detailed above are said to be for a "covering". The Hebrew word mesukah does not occur elsewhere. The masculine form, masak, however, occurs twenty-five times, and twenty-two of these occurrences are found in Exodus and Numbers variously translated "hanging" (Ex. xxvi. 36), "covering" (Ex. xxxv. 12), and "curtain" (Num. iii. 26).

In the tabernacle were three "coverings" or "hangings". There was the "hanging" of the gate of the court, the "hanging" of the door of the tabernacle, and the vail of the "covering" that divided off the Most Holy Place from the rest of the tabernacle. In each case, whether at gate, or door, or Holiest of All, there is the underlying thought of access or approach, and this illuminates Satan's office.

In addition to this "covering" of marvelous beauty, we find reference to tabrets or timbrels and pipes made of gold:--

> "In the day thou wast created were they prepared" (Ezek. xxviii. 13).

This reveals further that Satan not only held something like a priestly position before the Lord in the sense of access, but had also a close relation to the praises of heaven too, for when the Psalmist would call upon his people to praise the God of Jacob, he said:--

> "Take a psalm, and bring hither the timbrel (tabret)" (Psa. lxxxi. 2).

In Psa. cxlix. Israel joins in the new song, and sings praises with the timbrel and harp, and Psa. cl., that magnificent call upon all creation to praise the Lord, does not omit to say, "Praise Him with the timbrel". Something of the magnificence of heaven's hallelujah can be felt when the whole psalm is read through, and something of the splendour and exalted position once held by Satan can be inferred.

The full title and office for which all this has been preparatory is now to be revealed.

The Anointed Cherub.

> "Thou wast the anointed cherub that covereth" (Ezek. xxviii. 14).

The anointed.—The word used here gives us the word Messiah. The priest was anointed, so also was the king. Here before his fall we behold one of the Lord's anointed. In Christ, the Priest King after the order of Melchisedec, we see the glorious antitype. He is further called—

The anointed cherub.—The first time that we meet with the cherubim in Scripture they are in direct contrast with Satan as the nachash, the shining one, the Serpent (Gen. iii.). When the Lord chose Israel out from among the nations, that they in their history and in their worship set forth in type His great purpose with man, the cherubim were closely associated with the mercy seat, the covenant and the dwelling place of God on earth. when at length the wilderness was left behind and the promised land entered, the kingdom set up and established, then under Solomon as the prince of peace the temple was built, and there once again the cherubim were seen. This time their wings not only shadowed the mercy seat, but covered the entire width of the Most Holy Place.

Following upon the kingdom came the failure of Israel and their captivity, and Ezekiel is the prophet of the captivity. The great theme of this prophecy is the departing and the returning glory of the Lord, and vitally connected with this departing and returning glory are the cherubim. The prophet who alone reveals the fact that Satan was once the anointed cherub, is the one Old Testament writer to whom we turn for a description of those wonderful beings.

Chapter i. is occupied with the description of four living creatures, and in chapter x. is a description of the cherubim. In verse 20 Ezekiel says:--

> "This is the living creature that I saw under the God of Israel by the river of Chebar; and I knew that they were the cherubim."

With this assurance therefore we can turn back to the first chapter and seek to gather something from Ezekiel's description that shall help us to appreciate the high dignity and office of that one who was once called "The anointed cherub".

Like the Greatness.

There is considerable difference of opinion as to the meaning of the Hebrew word cherub. The word never occurs as a verb. The word rab indicates whatever is great. "It is the formal name of magnificence or majesty and dominion", says Marius de Calasio. The particle ki indicates likeness, and suggests the emblematic character of the Cherubim, and would mean "like the greatness", or "like the majesty". If this be the meaning of the name we can understand more fully how the cherubim are connected both with Satan's sin and with God's glory.

Lucifer, son of the morning.

Just as Satan is addressed under the title "King of Tyre" by Ezekiel, so he is spoken of as the "King of Babylon" by Isaiah, and just as the King of Tyre is called "The anointed cherub", so another superhuman title is used in Isa. xiv., "Lucifer (margin Day Star), son of morning". His downfall is clearly indicated in the following accusation:--

> "For thou hast said in thine heart.
> I WILL ascend into heaven,
> I WILL exalt my throne above the stars of God,
> I WILL sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north,
> I WILL ascend above the heights of the clouds,
> I WILL BE LIKE THE MOST HIGH" (Isa. xiv. 12-14).

The great leader of heaven's host in the "war in heaven" is Michael. Michael in Hebrew means "Who is like God?" and is as it were a challenge. A blasphemous echo of this is found in Rev. xiii. 4, when the world pays homage to Satan and the beast saying, "Who is like unto the beast?" In blessed contrast with the anointed cherub of Ezek. xxviii. is the Son of God Who, as Phil. ii. 6 & 7 reveals:--

> "Being originally in the form of God, thought it not a thing to be grasped to be on an equality with God, but emptied Himself, taking the form of a slave."

Much that is said of the Lord Jesus Christ will stand out with twofold vividness when we give full scope to the fact that He came to "undo the works of the Devil", and that every title He bears, every word He uttered, every manifestation of meekness or of power in death or in life had in view the undoing of the effect of Satan's sin and fall.

When Satan came to the man and woman in the garden, what was the bait of his temptation? The very self-same thing that had brought about his own wretched state—"Ye shall be as God!" When the same tempter came to Christ in the wilderness, once again he revealed his own heart and undoing. As we must devote a separate study to this phase of the subject we leave these hints for the time being.

Following the title, "the anointed cherub that covereth", we read that God said, "and I have set thee so". The Companion Bible and Rotherham read, "when I appointed thee, in the holy mount of God thou wast". In either case, this honour was not appropriated by Satan, but was of Divine appointment. The usage of the word translated "set" suggests the importance of this high appointment. The following are a few instances:--

"I do set my bow in the cloud" (Gen. ix. 13).
"A father of many nations have I made thee" (Gen. xvii. 5).
"And thou shalt hang up the vail" (Exod. xxvi. 33).
"And I will set My tabernacle among you " (Lev. xxvi. 11).

A feature in the judgment upon this fallen cherub is discovered by the use of the word in Ezek. xxviii.:--

"Though thou SET thine heart" (verse 2).
"Thou hast SET thine heart as the heart of God" (verse 6).
"And I have SET thee so" (verse 14).
"I will LAY thee before Kings" (verse 17).
"And I will BRING thee to ashes" (verse 18).

Stones of fire could have no effect upon the anointed cherub while he remained faithful to his trust (verse 14), but when he is cast out as profane, a fire will be brought forth from his own midst which shall reduce him to ashes. Like the Prince of Tyre, all his boasting will be of no avail "in the hand of Him that slayeth him" (verse 9).

The holy mount of God.

The nearness of this cherub to the Lord is seen in the words:--

"Thou wast upon the holy mountain of God; thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire" (Ezek. xxviii. 14).

The expression "The mountain of God" occurs seven times. So also does the expression "The mountain of the Lord". Exod. iii. 1; iv. 27; xviii. 5; xxiv. 13; I King xix. 8; and Psa. lxviii. 15 speak of Horeb or Sinai as the mountain of God. It will be observed that in the first and last mention in the books of Moses we have the presence of fire:--

"The bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed" (Exod. iii. 2).
"The sight of the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire" (Exod. xxiv. 17).
"Let not the priests and the people break through to come up unto the Lord, lest He break forth upon them" (Exod. xix. 24).
As smoke is driven away, so drive them away: as wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish at the presence of God. But let the righteous be glad . . . . . The earth shook, the heavens also dropped at the presence of God, even Sinai itself was moved at the presence of God . . . . . the mount of God is as the mount of Bashan . . . . . Thou hast ascended on high" (Psa. lxviii. 2, 3, 8, 15, 18).

It will be seen that the mountain of God is Sinai, and that it becomes a devouring fire to all who have not Divine protection and appointment. The mountain of the Lord however is not Sinai with its law, but Moriah and Calvary with its grace (Gen. xxii. 13, 14; Numb. x. 33; Psa. xxiv. 3; Isa. ii. 3; xxx. 29; Mic. iv. 2; Zech. viii. 3):--

> "A burnt offering instead of his son . . . . . in the mount of the Lord it shall be seen" (Gen. xxii. 13, 14).
>
> "And they departed from the mount of the Lord three days' journey; and the ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them" (Numb. x. 33).

Here Sinai, the mount of law and fire, becomes the mount of the Lord, because the ark and mercy seat and the redemption they stand for had been provided.

Psalm xxiv. can never be understood without reference to Psalms xxii. and xxiii., the cross, the crook and the crown. The ascension into the mount of the Lord is by reason of righteousness and resurrection. Isa. ii. 3 and Mic. iv. 2 speak of the day that is coming when the Lord reigns upon earth, and Zech. viii. 3 speaks of the blessed period of restoration yet to be. Isa. xxx. 29 brings the mountain of the Lord into a context of judgment on His enemies, and also of the binding up of the breach of His people. Here once again we read of "devouring fire":--

> "Tophet, ordained of old for the king, ... the breath of the Lord, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it" (Isa. xxx. 26-33).

We have considered this feature at some length in order to get scriptural light upon the position of the anointed cherub. When Moses came to the mountain of God, as recorded in Exod. iii.:--

> "The angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire . . . . . and God called unto him . . . . ." (Exod. iii. 2; cf. Acts vii. 35).

In the last reference by Moses we read:--

> "They saw the God of Israel . . . . . the Lord said . . . . . I will give thee tables of stone" (Exod. xxiv. 10-12).

Stephen, speaking of this same period, says of Moses:--

> "This is he that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel which spake to him in mount Sinai . . . . . who have received the law by the disposition of angels" (Acts vii. 38, 53).

Again in the opening reference to the mountain of the Lord we read:--

> "The angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven" (Gen. xxii. 11).

The angel of the Lord is mentioned in the next reference (I Kings xix. 7, 8); and yet once more, in Psa. lxviii., we have the passage in reference to the mountain of God of verse 15:--

> "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels; the Lord is among them as in Sinai, in the holy place" (verse 17).

It appears from these various passages that angelic ministry was constantly associated with the mountain of God. In some cases it is difficult to distinguish between the angels and God Who is represented by His messengers. We believe these things reflect light upon the office which was occupied by the anointed cherub before his fall, and show the nature of the "snare" of the devil (I Tim. iii. 6). Holding this high and lofty position he at length "thought it a thing to be grasped to be on an equality with God", saying, "I will be like the Most High". One has only to remember also how the cherubim are very closely connected with the throne of God to appreciate this the more.

Stones of fire.

One further item is given regarding the anointed cherub:--

> "Thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire" (Ezek. xxviii. 14).

The Companion Bible says these words refer to facts concerning which nothing further is known. This is true, but we believe we can improve our understanding a little by consulting Ezek. i. In describing the cherubim in that chapter, Ezekiel says he saw a brightness like the colour of amber, out of the midst of fire. And out of this midst came the cherubim, and their appearance was like burning coals of fire. Then when he describes the throne which was above their heads, he speaks of the likeness of the appearance of a man above upon it, and again he says that he saw the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about and within it (Ezek. i. 4, 5, 13, 26, 27).

John in Rev. i. speaks of the appearance of the Lord in glory:--

> "His eyes were as a flame of fire, and His feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace" (Rev. i. 14, 15).

Again in Dan. x. 6 we read a description of the heavenly messenger sent to Daniel:--

> "His body was like the beryl, and his face as the appearance of lightning, and his eyes as lamps of fire, and his arms and his feet like in colour to polished brass."

These passages are sufficient to show the excellent glory of that one of whom it could be said, "Thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire".

The sin of Satan.

> "Thou wast perfect in thy ways from the day that thou wast created" (Ezek. xxviii. 15).

The first occurrence of this expression is that of Gen. vi. 9, "Noah was a just man and perfect in his generation". The last time the Hebrew word is translated "perfect" is Ezek. xxviii. 15, the passage before us. Tamim occurs thirteen times in Ezekiel, and is translated "without blemish" in that prophecy eleven times.

Satan as created was "without blemish". Of creation Scripture says that God did not create it tohu and bohu, "without form and void", but that it became so (Gen. i. 1, 2; Isa. xiv. 18). Of man Scripture says:--

> "Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made upright; but they have sought out many inventions" (Eccles. vii. 29).

So of the anointed cherub; at his creation he was perfect, the iniquity found in him being the result of his own pride. Speaking of the Lord the Psalmist says, "there is no unrighteousness in Him" (Psa. xcii. 15). The word translated "unrighteousness" is the same word that is translated "iniquity" in Ezek. xxviii. 15. It is set over against the word "upright":--

> "To shew that the Lord is upright
> He is my Rock,
> And there is no unrighteousness in Him" (Psalm xcii. 15).

This shows the condition into which Satan fell. From his original uprightness he became unrighteous.

There are many words used for sin the Hebrew and the Greek, and several definitions are given. There is one element common to many—a negation. Light is positive, its negation is darkness. Righteousness is positive, sin is its negation:--

> "All UNrighteousness is sin" (I John v. 17).
> "Sin is lawlessNESS" (I John iii. 4).
> "Whatsoever is NOT of faith is sin" (Rom. xiv. 23).

Rom. iii. 23 shows that sin "comes short", and the Hebrew word chata means "to miss". The negation of perfectness could not have been discovered in Satan until he had turned aside from the path of obedience and aspired to forbidden things. This iniquity is seen from various angles in this chapter. It is closely connected with merchandise (16), and traffic (18). It rendered the anointed cherub profane (16), and by it he had defiled his sanctuaries (18). Its origin is given in verse 17:--

> "Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty, thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness."

There is evident allusion to this passage in the words:--

> "Not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil" (I Tim. iii. 6).

The Slanderer.

The question arises, in what way can Satan be said to have dealt in merchandise or traffic?

Rekullah (fem.), the Hebrew word, occurs four times in Ezekiel, but nowhere else in Scripture, viz., Ezek. xxvi. 12; xxviii. 5, 16, 18, where it is twice rendered "traffic" and twice "merchandise". Rakal ("merchants") is of more frequent occurrence, being used eighteen times, and always translated merchants. Rakil (masc.) occurs six times, and is translated "talebearer" thrice", "slanders" twice, and "carry tales" once.

This throws light upon the "traffic" which filled the anointed cherub with violence and defiled his sanctuaries. He became a slanderer, in other words, at this point he ceased to be the anointed cherub and became SATAN. He was not so created or appointed. The word diabolos, "devil" is the N.T. equivalent and means "slanderer" (see I Tim. iii. 11, also 6 and 7):--

> "Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers" (diabolos).

This evil is indicated in I Tim. v. 13-15, where the wandering from house to house, being idle, and tattlers, is associated with turning aside after Satan. This traffic in slander is associated in five out of the six references with the idea of "walking" or "going about":-

> "Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer" (Lev. xix. 16).
> "He that walketh being a talebearer" (Prov. xi. 13, margin).
> "He that goeth about as a taleberer" (Prov. xx. 19).
> "Grievous revolters, walking with slanders" (Jer. vi. 28).
> "Every neighbour will walk with slanderers" (Jer. ix. 4).

It will be seen that the reference given above in I Tim. v. 13-15 associates "wandering from house to house" with the same sin. It is making a traffic of talebearing. In this connection the note on page 47 of Volume XIV is of interest. The LXX translates Rekullah by emporia, and the numerical value of that word is 666. Satan's iniquity therefore was twofold. He was lifted up because of his beauty, and he slandered God. The same twofold iniquity is displayed in the temptation of Eden, "Ye shall be as God", "Yea, hath God said?" The anointed cherub "walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire". The four horsemen of Zech. i. 10, 11; vi. 7, who report to the angel of the Lord, also "walk to and fro through the earth". When the Lord said to Satan, "Whence comest thou?" (Job i. 7), Satan replied, "From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it". The same question and answer are found in ii. 2. In both cases they are followed by "talebearing" or "slandering" of Job. No longer able to walk up and down in the midst of stones of fire, Satan with restless activity patrols this earth "seeking whom he may devour".

#4. The Anointed Cherub. (Concluded).
pp. 130 - 133

Satan's doom.

> "I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of God, and I will destroy thee, O covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire . . . . . I will cast thee to the earth, I will lay thee before kings, that they may behold thee. Thou hast defiled thy sanctuaries by the multitude of thine iniquities, by the iniquity of thy traffic, therefore will I bring forth a fire from the midst of thee, it shall devour thee, and I will bring thee to ashes upon the earth in the sight of all them that behold thee. All they that know thee shall be astonished at thee, thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt thou be any more" (Ezek. xxviii. 16-19).

Let us record the steps in the punishment of this fallen cherub:--

1. / I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of God.
   \ I will destroy thee, O covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire.
2. / I will cast thee to the earth.
   \ I will lay thee before kings.
3. / I will bring forth a fire from the midst of thee and it shall devour thee.
   \ I will bring thee to ashes upon the earth.
4. / Thou shalt be a terror.
   \ Never shalt thou be any more.

The first movement deprives the anointed cherub of his glory and office. The second casts him to the earth as a spectacle to kings. The third sees him reduced to ashes by the fire brought from the midst of himself. The fourth speaks of the effect of his destruction upon others.

Deprivation and destruction.

The first item in Satan's punishment is that of being cast out as profane from the mountain of God. This is entirely in harmony with the principle given in I Cor. iii. 17:--

> "If any man defile (or destroy) the temple of God, him shall God destroy (or defile)."

The second feature is destruction, which in this connection is much the same as profaning. As the anointed cherub he was "destroyed from the midst of the stones of fire", by being cast out as profane. Between these two statements that deal with the reduction of the anointed cherub and the remaining statement concerning his doom come further statements concerning the causes of his fall. The remainder of the record of punishment is future:--

> "I will cast thee to the earth" (Ezek. xxviii. 17).
>
> "And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth" (Rev. xii. 9).
>
> "I will lay thee before kings, that they may behold thee" (Ezek. xxviii. 17).

We know that the same word that is translated "lay" is the word translated "set" in verse 14, "I have set thee so", and the poetic justice of the change will be seen.

> "I will bring forth a fire from the midst of thee" (Ezek. xxviii. 18).

The fire that belonged to his exalted station, the continual accompaniment of Divine glory, that fire, when once the Divine protection is withdrawn, becomes the very instrument of his destruction, for we are not left in uncertainty regarding its effect—"it shall devour thee", "eat thee" as the word may be rendered. "I will bring thee to ashes on the earth". With this we may read Mal. iv. 3:--

> "And ye shall tread down the wicked: for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet."

Also we may see a reverse movement in the case of Israel. The anointed cherub is brought from beauty to ashes, but in the day of Israel's restoration they shall be given beauty for ashes.

Perfection . . . . . Perdition.

> "Thou shalt be a terror" (Ezek. xxviii. 19).

The word terror is most solemn in its meaning. Ballahah = "a worn out or wasted thing". Job uses balah when he says:--

> "And he, as a rotten thing, consumeth, as a garment that is moth eaten" (Job xiii. 28).

The LXX renders the passage apoleia egenou, "a destruction hast thou become". The word is the alternative to "perfection" in Hebrews. "Let us go on unto perfection . . . . . not draw back unto perdition" (Heb. vi 1; x. 39). Matt. xxvi. 8 renders the word "waste" which is parallel with the Hebrew.

What an end to him who was the "perfection of beauty!" What an object lesson to the universe.

> "And never shalt thou be any more" (Ezek. xxviii. 19).

The LXX rendering of this is kai ouch huparxeis eti eis ton aiona = "and thou shalt not exist any more for the age", which is equivalent to the Hebrew ed olam. A parallel is found in Ezek. xxvi. 21:--

> "A terror will I make thee, and thou shalt not be: though thou be sought for, thou shalt not be found any more for the age."

Never, or unto the Age.

How are we to understand this usage of olam and aion? Does it imply that when the age is finished that Satan will exist again? A parallel usage is found in John iv. 14; viii. 51; x. 28 and xiii. 8. Translated literally the passages read:--

> "Shall in no wise thirst unto the age" (John iv. 14).
> "Shall not see death unto the age" (John viii. 51).
> "Shall in no wise perish unto the age" (John x. 28).
> "Thou shalt not wash my feet unto the age" (John xiii. 8).

Would it be setting forth the truth to say that immunity from thirst would cease when the age ceased? That the Lord's sheep should perish at the end of the age? That Peter's meaning was that the Lord should defer washing his feet until the age had finished? We know very well that such is not the case, and to translate ou me eis tin aiona with an age meaning is to miss the mark. Our English negative "never" is manifestly "n'ever" or "not ever" without the least thought of ages or eternity in it. If this fallen cherub is to live again after being brought to ashes and devoted to destruction, positive testimony must be brought from Scripture to prove it, such a doctrine cannot be deduced from the use of olam or aion.

Satan and redemption.

The katabole or overthrow of the world (Gen. i. 2) was a judgment upon sin, and that sin the sin of those who were not men. Scripture declares that the Devil sinneth from the beginning and abode not in the truth. That he fell and in his fall drew away other angels with him. His glorious position is forfeited, and we have seen that man headed by Christ is destined to take that place of rule whether in the heavenlies or on the earth. As soon as man was given dominion, Satan saw his rival and plotted his downfall. What other bait should he use than that which caused his own fall?:--

> "Yea, hath God said?"—the slander (traffic).
> "Ye shall be as God"—the impious pride that cause his fall.
> "Ye shall not surely die"—the vain hope that sustained him (see parallels in Ezek. xxviii. 9; Psa. lxxxii. 6, 7).

Just as the sin of Satan profaned his sanctuaries, so the sin of man introduced by Satan made them "ashamed". Just as the sin of Satan cause him to be cast out of the mountain of God, so the sin of man caused him to be cast out of the garden of God. Man however had been attacked, and for him redemption was provided in the great Kinsman. Redemption assumes a vaster import when seen as a whole, and as related to man's inheritance and Satan's attack upon the purpose of the ages. While the ages last, enmity will exist between the Seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent. The serpent's head shall be crushed, all the true seed of promise shall be restored, paradise shall be regained, with its river and tree of life, the former things shall pass away and God shall once again all in all.

#5. The Cherubim, their pledge.
pp. 181 – 191

In the last paper we devoted our attention to the record of the creation, fall and destruction of one called "the anointed cherub", who, when he was cast out as profane from the mountain of God, became the great enemy of truth, Satan. In the paper we drew attention to the fact that in Gen. iii. the serpent, Satan, the one that was once the anointed cherub, stands at the beginning of the story of the temptation, and that the cherubim stand at the close. It is our intention in this article to seek an understanding of the meaning and message of the cherubim, in order to appreciate better the goal toward which redemption moves.

The teaching connected with the cherubim must be gathered from the occasions where they are introduced, and the context of these occurrences. We have seen the holy associations that are revealed in Ezek. xxviii. and although they were profaned and the glory departed, we must remember these essential features as we take up the theme as it is associated with man and his redemption.

As we have already seen, the cherubim are mentioned in Scripture in immediate association with the temptation, sin and expulsion of Adam and Eve, and in structural correspondence with the serpent or shining one. The structure of Gen. iii. is most illuminating, showing the various features of the chapter in their right place and relationship.

The Serpent and the Cherubim (Gen. iii.).

D	8-13. God's enquiry of the man and the woman.	/
E	14. Serpent cursed.	/
E	15. Seed promised.	\
D	16-19. God's answer to the man and the woman.	\

B	22-24-. Tree of life.	/
A	-24. The cherubim (cf. "living creature", Ezek. i. 5; Rev. iv. 6). Pledge of man's restoration.	/

Let us examine this passage. We perceive that it is divided into two sections, the one dominated by the serpent, the other by Christ. The serpent, the fallen cherub, brings about the downfall of man; the cherubim placed at the door of the garden pledge his restoration. The central members place in vivid contrast the serpent under the curse and the triumphing Seed of the woman. The serpent, the Seed and the cherubim are the three great features. When we deal with the question of human sin and its connection with redemption, we shall have to pay greater attention to the intervening sections; at present we are limiting our study to that of the cherubim.

> "So He drove out the man, and He placed at the east of the garden of Eden cherubim, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life" (Gen. iii. 24).

The pledge of paradise restored.

The cherubim stand closely connected with man's loss.

"So He drove out the man."—"Drove out" (garash) is used for "putting away" and "divorcing" a wife in Scripture (Lev. xxi. 7-14). It is used of those who were driven out of the land forfeited and given as an inheritance to Israel (Exod. xxxiii. 2). Its use here is significant of man's forfeiture.

"And placed in a tabernacle."—The Hebrew word "placed" is shaken. Its most usual translation is "to dwell". With the prefix "m" (mishkan) it occurs 138 times, and of these it is translated 119 times of the tabernacle. The first occurrence of mishkan reveals it to be preeminently a holy dwelling place for God:--

> "And let them make Me a sanctuary; that I may dwell (shaken) among them. According to all that I shew thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle (mishkan)" (Exod. xxv. 8, 9).

At the expulsion of Adam and Eve from the garden it was rendered tenantless. Man could no longer walk in happy fellowship with his maker, God could no longer walk with man without mediation and:--

> "So He drove out the man, and caused to dwell as in a tabernacle at the east of the garden, the cherubim."

From this time onward, until the forfeited paradise shall be restored, the cherubim become the visible representatives of God among men, and by their composition, which we shall examine presently, they became the pledge of his restoration. When that restoration is complete, then shall the tabernacle of God be with men, and He will dwell with them, and then shall access once more be given to the tree of life (Rev. xxi. 3; and xxii. 1-5).

> "And a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life."

Psalm. civ. 4 tells us that the Lord's ministers are a "flaming fire", and nothing can endure the withering destruction of this flaming sword, Joel ii. 3; and Psa. xcvii. 3. Here together with the cherubim we have a flaming sword.

It does not seem possible to see, unmoved, the simple testimony of the concordance, namely, that the first reference to the sword in the O.T. is that of Gen. iii. 24, and the last that of Zech. xiii. 7:--

> "Awake, O sword, against my shepherd."

This flaming sword was placed at the east of the garden of Eden with the express purpose:--

> "To keep the way of the tree of life."

To Adam the Lord gave the commission when he was placed in the garden of Eden:--

> "To dress it and to KEEP it" (Gen. ii. 15).

The word means much more than to keep in order as a gardener does a garden, as may be seen from the usage of the word shamar:-- > "Except the Lord keep (shamar) the city, the watchman (shamar) waketh but in vain" (Psa. cxxvii. 1).

> "He put them in ward" (shamar) (Gen. xl. 3).
> "I will stand upon my watch" (shamar) (Hab. ii. 1).

Adam failed in his charge. He did not watch, guard and keep the garden. No second opportunity is given to man, the keeping of the way of the tree of life is committed to the cherubim and the flaming sword, and they fail not, for they speak not of Adam but of Christ.

The basis of paradise restored.

The next reference to the cherubim is found in Exod. xxv. 18; this time not in a tabernacle in the garden of Eden, but in a tabernacle in the wilderness. Much has transpired since Gen. iii. Satan so corrupted the way of God that nothing less than a deluge was necessary to destroy his handiwork, and after the flood the unclean usurpation of Messianic promises that is summed up in the system of Babel led to the setting aside of the nations (Rom. i. 18-32), and the choice of Abraham of one nation (Gen. xii.), whose peculiar prerogative was to be the tabernacle and the cherubim with all their associated privileges:--

> "And thou shalt make two cherubim of gold, of beaten work shalt thou make them, in the two ends of the mercy seat . . . . . and the cherubim shall stretch forth their wings on high, covering the mercy seat . . . . . thou shalt put the mercy seat above upon the ark, and in the ark thou shalt put the testimony that I shall give thee, and there will I meet with thee, and I will commune with thee" (Exod. xxv. 18-22).

The great feature of this second reference to the cherubim is the strongly expressed association with the mercy seat. The mercy seat in its turn demanded the ark, and not until the ark was beneath and the mercy seat above with covering cherub over all, could God commune with Moses as a man speaks with his friend. It speaks once more of paradise restored.

Heb. ix. 4 and 5 gives a detailed statement that must not be ignored:--

1. The ark of the covenant, which contained:--
2. The golden pot that had manna.—Wilderness promises.
3. Aaron's rod that budded.—Christ's undying priesthood.
4. The tables of the covenant.—The unbroken law.
5. The mercy seat.—The propitiatory.
6. Shadowed by the cherubim.—The pledge of restoration.

It is most important to observe that the cherubim were not placed separately upon the mercy seat, but as the A.V. margin shows, they were made "of the matter of the mercy seat".

The covering cherub of Ezek. xxviii., though perfect at his creation, stood upon the basis of creaturehood, which could not guarantee indefectibility. These cherubim and all that they stand for not only rest upon, but are part of, the mercy seat. Such shall never be cast out as profane from their sanctuaries, and the restoration they pledge is therefore secure.

The Mercy Seat.

The Hebrew word translated "mercy seat" is kapporeth, which is the feminine form of kopher, variously translated "ransom" and "satisfaction". It is very suggestive that the first occurrence of the word is associated with an ark other than that made by Moses, namely, that of Noah (Gen. vi. 14). There the word kopher is rendered "pitch". The pitch was essential if the floods of divine wrath were to be kept out of the ark, and therefore in its context "pitch", though black, is a precious figure of atonement. Similarly kophar, "thou shalt pitch it", is the word that is rendered over and over by "atonement". Other renderings are "be merciful", "reconcile".

There are some who have spoken of the idea of atonement as being an inadequate representation of the work of Christ, inasmuch as the underlying idea of the word is a "covering", the argument being that the typical sacrifices only "covered" sin, whereas the offering of Christ "put it away". Now the Hebrew kapporeth, mercy seat, is rendered by the LXX hilasterion, and the Hebrew word kaphar, "to make atonement", by exilaskomai and hilaskomai in a great many passages. Both the words hilasterion and hilaskomai are used in the epistle to the Hebrews, and hilasterion in Romans, of the great sacrifice of the Lord Jesus:--

> "Wherefore in all things it behoved Him to be made like unto His brethren, that He might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people" (Heb. ii. 17).
>
> "The cherubim of glory shadowing the mercy seat" (Heb. ix. 5).
> "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood" (Rom. iii. 25).

It is very clear from this Scriptural use of the word that the O.T. atonement is a very full and precious type of the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus. Upon this great work accomplished by the Saviour, and essentially connected with it, is the purpose of restoration, pledged by the golden cherubim. The way of the tree of life was guarded by the flaming sword in the garden of Eden; here in the tabernacle in the wilderness the way of the tree of life was guarded by "the veil", which Heb. x. 29 says was "His flesh".

The word cherubim occurs in Exodus and Numbers, and in this plural form it is found 14 times.

The kingdom of peace; the type.

The next place where the cherubim are found is in the temple built by Solomon, recorded in I & II Kings. There once more we find the word occurring 14 times. David himself was not allowed to build the house of God because he had been a man of blood, but Solomon, whose name means peace, was commissioned to do so. That kingdom, first subdued and governed by David and subsequently by Solomon, was a wondrous picture of the future reign of the great Prince of Peace. When the temple was completed, Solomon assembled all the elders of Israel and the leaders of the people that they might bring up the ark of the covenant:--

> "And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord unto His place, into the oracle of the house, to the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubim" (I Kings viii. 6).

Then follows the dedication, blessing and prayer. Practically central in that truly marvelous prayer comes the great thought of God "dwelling" with His people:--

> "But will God indeed dwell on the earth? behold the heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain Thee; how much less this house that I have builded?" (I Kings viii. 27).

The cherubim made for Solomon's temple were not of gold, neither did they form part of the mercy seat, but they were made of olive word overlaid with gold, and their outstretched wings touched either side of the holiest of all. Just as the cherubim were worked in embroidery upon the veil and hangings of the tabernacle, so were they carved upon the walls and doors of the temple. The great feature in the temple type appears to have been that of a "dwelling place". The only references outside the description given in I Kings vi.-viii. which occur in the history of the temple speak of this one thing:--

> "God . . . . . Which dwellest between the cherubim" (II Kings xix. 15; Isa. xxxvii. 16).
> "Thou that dwellest between the cherubim" (Psa. lxxx. 1).
> "He sitteth between the cherubim" (Psa. xcix. 1).

Yet after all, this is just what we found in the record of the tabernacle.

Jehovah Shammah.

Our next enquiry takes us beyond the kingdom into the period of captivity. Babylon, the seat of the Satanic opposition for the time, becomes dominant. The dwelling place of God is once more defiled and removed, and it is to Ezekiel in the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity that the heavens were opened and visions of God were given by the river Chebar. Before looking at the record of his visions in chapter i. we will settle the question as to the identity of these "living creatures" by turning to chapter x.:--

> "This is the living creature that I saw under the God of Israel by the river Chebar: and I knew that they were the cherubim" (Ezek. x. 20).

We can therefore return to the investigation of chapter i. with the consciousness that the mighty beings there described are the cherubim, the subjects of our study. The vision opens with a whirlwind coming out of the north, a great cloud and a fire unfolding itself, and a brightness about it in glory like to amber or molten metal. From the midst of the fire came the likeness of four living creatures. These creatures were composite, being like a man, yet having four faces, four wings, and feet like those of a calf:--

> "As for the likeness of their faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion on the right side, and they four had the face of an ox on the left side: they four also had the face of an eagle" (Ezek. i. 10).

As for their likeness, the prophet could only say that their appearance was like burning coals of fire, like the appearance of lamps, and that from the fire went forth lightning. Then follows a description of wheels, rings high and dreadful and full of eyes, and further we are told that the spirit of the living creatures was in the wheels. We do not pretend to understand the import of these terrific accompaniments. They impress us with wonder and with power superhuman. Yet after all these wondrous beings are but the supporters of the throne of God. Above their heads the expanse was stretched in colour like the terrible crystal:-- > "And above the expanse that was over their heads was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone, and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it . . . . . as the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord" (Ezek. i. 26-28).

The most important fact for us at the moment is the association of the cherubim with the "glory of the Lord". The prophet being taken up by the spirit, and hearing the noise of the wings and the wheels of the living creatures, also hears the words "Blessed be the glory of the Lord from His place" (Ezek. iii. 12). Ginsburg thinks be rum (arose) should be read here instead of baruk (blessed). "(When) the glory of the Lord arose from its place", i.e., when the vision was withdrawn (see Companion Bible). In chapter iii. 23 the fact is repeated:--

> "And, behold, the glory of the Lord stood there, as the glory which I saw by the river of Chebar."

This statement is repeated in viii. 4 with the alteration, "in the plain", for the words "by the river of Chebar". The prophecy of Ezekiel, involved as it appears, upon close examination is simple as to its main plan and theme. He shows us in association with the cherubim the departing and returning glory of the Lord from the city and temple of Jerusalem. Let us mark the progress both of the retiring and the returning glory of the Lord:--

> "And the glory of the God of Israel was gone up from the cherubim, whereupon he was, to the threshold of the house" (Ezek. ix. 3).
> "Then the glory of the Lord went up from the cherubim, and stood over the threshold of the house" (Ezek. x. 4).
>
> "Then the glory of the Lord departed from off the threshold of the house, and stood over the cherubim. And the cherubim lifted up their wings, and they mounted up from the earth in my sight; when they went out, the wheels were also beside them, and every one stood at the door of the east gate of the Lord's house; and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above" (Ezek. x. 18, 19).
> "And the glory of the Lord went up from the midst of the city, and stood upon the mountain which is at the east side of the city" (Ezek. xi. 23).

The glory of the Lord is here seen departing from the temple first of the threshold, then to the east gate, then to the mountain on the east side of the city. From this point onward for thirty chapters the prophet by signs (xii. 11), symbols (xiii. 10), riddles, parables (xvii. 2), proverbs (xviii. 1, 2), lamentations (xix. 1), which are repeated in subsequent chapters, together with denunciations against the nations, the great lamentation over the anointed cherub, and judgments against Egypt and other types of the evil one, unfolds the causes of the departing glory and the promises and means that must bring about the restoration.

From chapter xxxvi. the restoration of Israel begins to dawn. The valley of dry bones (Ezek. xxxvii.) will be remembered, and the two sticks joined together in that same chapter. Chapters xl.-xlii. are occupied with a description of a temple, and when that description is completed, then do we get the cherubim and the returning glory:--

> "Afterward he brought me to the gate, even the gate that looked toward the east (note the eagerness of the prophet). And, behold, the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east: and His voice was like a noise of many waters: and the earth shined with His glory. And it was according to the appearance of the vision which I saw when I came to destroy the city . . . . . and the glory of the Lord came into the house by way of the gate whose prospect is towards the east" (Ezek. xliii. 1-4).

Here we have the beginning of restoration. If we are right in our thought that the cherubim and the glory are intimately connected with the idea of a dwelling place, here is the occasion to test it. What are the words that shall be spoken to Ezekiel from this returning glory?

> "And He said unto me, Son of man, the place of My throne, and the place of the soles of My feet WHERE I WILL DWELL in the midst of the children of Israel for ever, and > My holy name shall the house of Israel no more defile." "I will DWELL in the midst of them" (Ezek. xliii. 7 and 9).

It should be noted that the word "dwell" in these verses is the translation of the Hebrew word shaken, "to dwell as in a tabernacle". The last reference to the glory is found in Ezek. xliv. 4:--

> "Then brought he me the way of the north gate before the house: and I looked, and, behold, the glory of the Lord filled the house of the Lord: and I fell upon my face."

After the inheritance of the tribes has been appointed and the city described, we arrive at the concluding verse of the prophecy:--

> "And the name of the city from that day shall be Jehovah Shammah, The Lord is there" (Ezek. xlviii. 35).

Here is the place where He will dwell, paradise shall have been restored (see Ezek. xlvii. 1-12 for the river and the trees), and the whole earth shall be filled with His glory.

Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men.

We read no more of the cherubim in the O.T. The only reference to them by name in the N.T. is that of Heb. ix. 5. Yet there are two sections of the N.T. where we may see the cherubim and the reality for which they stand. The most obvious occurrences are of course those in the book of the Revelation. It is somewhat misleading to the average reader to find that John saw round about the throne in heaven four beasts, particularly as there is mentioned more than 30 times "the beast" whose number is 666 and whose career is one of blasphemy.

Therion is correctly rendered "beast", but zoon should be translated "living creature". The moment we thus translate the word we have a link with Ezek. i. and x., where the "four living creatures" (Ezek. i. 5) there described are declared to be the cherubim (Ezek. x. 20). Turning to Rev. iv. we are immediately in a setting parallel with that of Ezek. i. We have a throne, and the One who sits thereon is like a jasper and a sardine stone. Around the throne is a rainbow like an emerald. Four and twenty thrones encircled the great throne occupied by four and twenty elders, clothed in white and crowned with golden crowns. Lightnings, thunderings, voices proceeded out of the throne, and seven lamps of fire burn before it, which are the seven spirits of God. A sea of glass like to crystal stretches out before the throne, and round about the throne were four living creatures full of eyes before and behind:--

> "The first living creature was like a lion, the second like a calf, the third had a face as a man, and the fourth was like a flying eagle" (Rev. iv. 7).

There is no possibility of mistaking their identity. When these four living ones gave glory and honour and thanks to Him that sat upon the throne, the four and twenty elders says:--

> "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power, for Thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created" (Rev. iv. 11).

The words "all things" are a translation of ta panta. Our belief is that this expression refers to some specific creation and purpose and is not universal. This however we do not attempt to prove here, as we wish all to have the opportunity of testing the subject for themselves. The first thing therefore with which the cherubim are associated in the Apocalypse is adoration and praise for the accomplishment of the purpose of the creation of the all things.

We next find them with harps and golden vases of incense leading the praises of heaven in the new song, which celebrates the worthiness of the Redeemer, the redemption of the kingdom of priests (see the original covenant made at Sinai, Exod. xix. 6). Ten thousand times ten thousand and thousands of thousands take up the strain, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain" (Rev. v. 12). This is echoed by "every creature" in heaven, earth, under the earth and in the sea, and finally confirmed with the united "Amen" of the four living creatures and the worship of the four and twenty elders. What an absolute contrast this whole-hearted worship and praise is, to that profanity that caused the downfall of the original covering cherub (Ezek. xxviii.)!

Without going into all the details, it will be perhaps more helpful if we see at a glance the way in which the four living creatures are introduced into the book of the Revelation.

A | Rev. iv. "Glory, honour and thanks to Him that sat on the throne."
"Thou hast created the all things for Thy pleasure."
B | Rev. v. Vials of incense. Thou art worthy.

C | Rev. vi. The seals opened.
Rev. vii. The sealing of the 144,000.
Rev. xiv. The new song of the 144,000.
B | Rev. xv. Vials of wrath. They are worthy.
The kingdom of the beasts.
A | Rev. xix. Alleluia. Worship Him that sat on the throne.

Babylon destroyed.

It will be perceived that the above has all the elements of correspondence, which we so often find underlying the arrangement of any particular theme, with the exception of one section. It opens and closes with the two great themes of the book. The triumph of the mystery of godliness, the overthrow of the mystery of iniquity. The vials of incense, relating to the one mystery, are balanced by the vials of wrath which relate to the other, while centrally we have the seals and the sealed ones.

A | iv. Worship. The purpose of the creation of the all things.
B | v. Vials of incense. Thou art worthy.
C | vi. The seals opened.
vii. The 144,000 sealed; the great multitude.
xiv. The 144,000; the new song.
B | xv. Vials of wrath. They are worthy.
A | xix. Worship. Babylon destroyed.

It only remains to draw attention to the fact that while the occurrences of the word zoon do not make a multiple of seven, there are seven separate occasions in the Revelation where the living creatures appear, neither more nor less, thus bringing the N.T. references into line with those of the tabernacle and the temple, whish are in sets of 14. There is no need for us to go over the well-known ground as to the complete answer which Revelation gives to the beginning of sorrows in Genesis. Happy are we in the knowledge that this consummation shall be.

Studies in the Book of the Revelation.

#59. Rev. xx. 5-15.

The First Resurrection and the Second Death (xx. 5, 6).
pp. 33 - 37

How are we to understand the words "the first resurrection"? If it means the first of all that shall take place, then the resurrection of the church of the One Body must take place later. The statement of verse 5 has a bearing, for there we read:--

> "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished."

According to the teaching of Rev. xx. the resurrection that follows the "first" is that which brings all "the rest" before the great white throne. This increases the difficulty, for not only is the hope of the One Body involved, but the resurrection of I Cor. xv. and I Thess. iv. also. In Rev. xx. 1 we have these words:--

> "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away."

Here we have the same word "first" used in xx. 5 and xxi. 1. Now we are already acquainted with the teaching of II Pet. iii. 4-13, where we find a distinct reference to a third heaven and earth:--

> (1). "The world that then was."
> (2). "The heavens and the earth which are now."
> (3). "A new heavens and a new earth."

It will be noticed also that Peter's argument goes back to "the beginning of the creation", and so to Gen. i. 1. It is evident therefore that the heaven and earth which passed away in Rev. xxi. 1 is really the second, namely, "the heavens and earth which are now", and the word "first" is in contrast with the word "new" and should be translated "the former". This same meaning is intended in Rev. xx. 5:--

> "This is the former resurrection (of the two under notice)."

The Second Death and the Overcomer.

These two resurrections have one thing in common, they are both connected with the second death. To the overcomer in Smyrna came the words:--

> "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life . . . . . he that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death" (Rev. ii. 10, 11).

This overcomer is numbered among those whose part is in the "first resurrection"; for them the second death holds no terror:--

> "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power" (Rev. xx. 6).

Looking back again to Rev. ii. we observe the title of the Lord when He speaks to the angel of the church in Smyrna:--

> "These things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive" (Rev. ii. 8).

Most, if not all, the titles of the speaker to the seven churches are found together in the description given in chapter i. This can be seen by comparing the opening words to each church in chapter ii. and iii. with the description given in chapter i. The title with which we are immediately concerned is evidently taken from Rev. i., 17, 18:--

> "Fear not, I am the first and the last: I am He that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for the ages of the ages, and have the keys of death and of Hades."

The Nature of Death.

These statements throw light upon the character of the second death. According to our understanding of the first death will be our understanding of the second. The traditional view is that while the body turns to dust, the soul, or the person himself, passes on in an unclothed state, either to the immediate presence of the Lord, to Paradise, or the Purgatory. For ourselves we believe that the dead are dead. The body has returned to the dust as it was, the spirit has returned to God who gave it, the man has ceased to be a living soul, and knows nothing until resurrection.

If we take the view that death is not the cessation of consciousness or of mental and spiritual activity, we shall probably believe that the same may be true of the second death, and invest that second death with all the traditional horrors of the orthodox "hell"; if we believe that death is the end of all conscious being, we shall believe that the second death likewise is the end of all conscious being too. It does not follow that the second death will be exactly similar to the first, but it cannot be totally dissimilar, for that would invalidate the idea contained in the word "second". For example, the Lord Jesus Christ is called "the second Man" (I Cor. xv. 47).

The relation of the First Death to the Second.

In some aspects He is much unlike the first man, as the context elaborates. The one is natural; the other is spiritual. The one is earthy; the other is heavenly. The one is simply man; the other, while being the second Man, is the Lord. There is however no violence done to the conception of a series. There is an advance from earthly to heavenly, from soul to spirit, but throughout all the change and progression the one word "man" remains constant, whether spoken of Adam or of Christ. So in Heb. viii. 7 there is the "first covenant" and the "second". They have marked differences, as far apart as law is from grace, but they remain "covenants" all the way through.

So with the "second death". However much more intense the destructive qualities of the lake of fire may be than the dissolution of body and spirit, commonly known as death, the character of death will remain constant right through. We find from I Cor. xv. 18 the character of the first death set forth by an extreme case:--

> "Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are PEERISHED."

What makes the death even of the redeemed so utter and hopeless? The denial of the resurrection. Without resurrection the death even of the saint would mean hopeless annihilation. Is there a resurrection from the second death? Not a glimmer of hope can be found at the end of Rev. xx. Nowhere throughout the pages of Scripture is such a statement to be found. Some there are who see such a hope in I Cor. xv. 26, but this we cannot agree. Our reasons have been set forth in fair detail in the new volume The Apostle of the Reconciliation, and have been given further consideration in another series both in The Berean Expositor and in pamphlet form. There will be opportunity and occasion to speak more fully of the second death when we reach the closing verses of Rev. xx. in the order of exposition. We are at present more concerned with the overcomer of the second death than with those who pass into it.

We are told that the second death hath no power on those who attain to the first resurrection. The word "power" is a translation of exousia, and means authority. We shall find the origin of this statement in Luke xii. 4, 5:--

> "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear. Fear Him, which after He hath killed hath authority to cast into Gehenna; yea, I say unto you, Fear Him."

The first death "kills the body", and its authority ceases at that point. God can go further. Matt. x. 28 records the Lord's utterance, and uses slightly different words to do so:--

> "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear Him Who is able to destroy both soul and body in Gehenna."

If the Lord spoke in Aramaic to the people, then both Luke and Matthew together provide a full translation. Luke's words "to cast into Gehenna", become in Matthew's record "to destroy both soul and body in Gehenna". Gehenna is limited in its scope, but is a foreshadowing of the lake of fire at the end.

The second death has this authority. It is so constituted by the Lord that it can destroy both soul and body. Apart from philosophy altogether, it is obvious that the destruction of soul and body is to all intents and purposes annihilation. Such will cease to be. Who they are and why they pass under this dread authority we leave until we reach the passage in Rev. xx. All those who attain the first resurrection are free from all fear of the second death. It is not so with those who wait until the second resurrection. Some of those do enter into the second death.

The reign of the Overcomers.

The reign of these favoured ones is the reign of priests. Both on earth and in the heavens "over the earth" (Rev. v. 10) there will be a royal priesthood. The nation of Israel on earth; the overcomers over the earth; and under their dual ministry the nations are taught the truth of God, and many will pass from darkness to light.

The apostle Paul, in Rom. xv. 16, speaks of his ministry to the Gentiles as a priestly work: "that the offering up of the Gentiles might be accepted." If Paul's ministry among the Gentiles, as set forth in the Acts, is any foreshadowing of the priestly ministry of the royal priesthood during the thousand years, the blessedness of that millennial rule cannot be described in words. We can only look forward with high hope and anticipation. But, like as it was in the case of Paul, so will it be again. While an unnumbered host are saved, apostasy and revolt follow hard upon the close of the period. Perfection comes under the personal administration of Christ. The millennial reign is the final preparation for the working out of the great commission.

Satan's Last Act (xx. 7-10).
pp. 37 - 42

When the thousand years have run their course, Satan is let loose out of his prison. Rev. xx. 3 has already told us that "he must be loosed a little season"; here we see the purpose. We must notice carefully what the Scriptures actually say here. We must not make a mistake and speak of the nations as a whole. The nations that yield to Satan's last deception and perish at the hand of God are specified:--

> "And when the thousand years expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea."

During the priestly rule of Israel and the overcomers many nations shall be joined to the Lord, as prophecy testifies. The nations who are deceived by Satan at the close of the millennium are found in the four corners of the earth as far away as can be from God's holy city and centre. Their name is given as Gog and Magog. This will not be the first time that Gog and Magog have threatened the land and people of Israel.

In Exek. xxxviii. and xxxix. we read of a gathering of nations under Gog of the land of Magog. Just who Gog and Magog may be is a very difficult problem to solve. It is usual to interpret them as general names of the northern nations of Europe and Asia. This may be true, but is not by any means all the truth or the most important aspect of it. We are not concerned as to whether these nations originally occupied the north, for after the millennium they will be upon the outskirts of the earth at all points of the compass. We are much concerned with their relation to Israel and the purpose of God.

The Seed of the Serpent.

Israel's first entry into the land of promise was accompanied by conflict with the Canaanites. These nations were of such a nature that nothing less than utter extinction was decreed against them. In Deut. iii. 1-13 we read of Og, king of Bashan. We read that only Og, king of Bashan, remained of the remnant of the giants, and his bedstead was nine cubits long and four cubits broad. The threescore cities mentioned in verse 4 have all been seen and counted in our own time. That the rendering "giants" is the true one, any reader of Dr. Porter's Giant Cities of Bashan will agree. In Numb. xxiv. 7 Balaam refers to Israel's ascendancy in the millennium:--

> "And his king shall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted."

The Samaritan Text here reads "Agog" instead of Agag, and this appears to have been the word before the translators of the LXX, for they give "Gog". These sidelights give a somewhat different character to the nations that spring into open revolt at the end of the thousand years. Is there not sufficient history recorded in the Word to show that certain nations are to be reckoned peculiarly the Devil's own? Was Og, king of Bashan, not "of his father the Devil"? Do we credit the Lord with the responsibility of the creation of the Rephaim, the Nephilim, the giants and monsters of antiquity? Did not God give an exhibition of His utter abhorrence of the result of the marriages of the sons of God with the daughters of men, by sending the flood? Does not the order for the utter extermination of the Amorites, the Amalekites and the Canaanites generally point to the same thing? Does not Goliath of Gath typify the same awful and Satanic enemy?

When Satan goes out to the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, he goes out to his own. They rise as one man and compass the camp of the saints about and the beloved city. Their destruction is immediate and without remedy:--

> "Fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them" (Rev. xx. 9).

In chapter xix., the armies led by the beast and the false prophet are slain by the Lord, and their flesh is afterwards devoured by the fowls of the heavens. Here the fire from God not only kills but devours, nothing is left for the birds of the air.

We do not believe Gog and Magog will stand before the great white throne. The fire which falls from heaven is for them the second death. Of such Psa. i. 5 speaks:--

> "The ungodly shall not stand (or rise) in the judgment."

Israel's oppressors remembered.

When Israel's day comes, and they sing their millennial song of triumph (Isa. xxvi. 1), they will look back upon the days when the seed of the serpent had dominion over them. Of such they say:-- > "They are dead, they shall not live; they are the Rephaim (giants), they shall not rise; therefore hast Thou visited and destroyed them, and made their memory to perish" (Isa. xxvi. 14).

So will it be with Gog and Magog at the end of the millennium. The conflict of the two seeds, "the seed of the woman" and "the seed of the serpent", runs throughout the Scriptures and the entire course of the ages. The seed of promise triumph in Christ their great kinsman redeemer. The seed of the serpent perish utterly and completely, so much so that they have no resurrection. Here in Rev. xx. 9 we see another section of them "visited and destroyed". It is God's intention to gather out of His kingdom all things that offend, and the new heavens and new earth can only be ushered in by the fire of Rev. xx. 14, 15.

Not only will Israel remember their oppressors in the day of their exaltation, they will also be very sensibly reminded of their past sins.

Israel's sins remembered.

This may be seen by reading the closing verses of Ezek. xvi. We cannot quote at length, but give the last verse:--

> "That thou mayest remember, and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more because of thy shame, when I am pacified toward thee for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord God" (Ezek. xvi. 63).

Another suggestive passage is Ezek. xliv. 9-14, where we find certain of the Levites who went into idolatry are not permitted to exercise their office in full, but are made servants at the gate, not being permitted to come near unto the Lord. This particular honour is reserved for the sons of Zadok. These are rewarded for their fidelity, they > "kept the charge of My sanctuary when the children of Israel went astray from me" (Ezek. xliv. 15).

It is evident from this distinction that the element of reward and loss obtain in the millennial kingdom. This is further exemplified in Ezek. xlviii., when compared the 144,000 sealed overcomers, but they do not lose their place in the earthly apportionment of the kingdom which is theirs by covenant, not by merit, for the tribe of Dan is mentioned in Ezek. xlviii. 1.

Reward and Loss in Millennium.

The question of reward or forfeiture in the Gospels and Epistles has much to do with position and glory in this kingdom. Those being found faithful in small things are rewarded by being made responsible for great ones. Those who hid their talent in the earth are deprived of glory in the Lord's presence.

Returning to Rev. xx., we take notice of one further item. We have seen Satan loosed, and the nations that were deceived suddenly devoured by fire. We now notice what is said of Satan himself:-- > "And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for the ages of the ages" (Rev. xx. 10).

The expression "for the ages of the ages", eis tous aionas ton aionon, occurs in the Book of the Revelation 13 times, and is distributed as follows:--

"For the ages of the ages."

A | i. 6. The kingdom of priests ascribe glory and dominion to Christ.
B | i. 18. Christ. Living for the ages of the ages.
C | Worshippers of God (fourfold).
a1 | iv. 9. The living creatures.
b1 | iv. 10. The twenty-four elders.
a1 | v. 13. Every creature.
b1 | vii. 12. All the angels.
A | x. 6. The mighty angel. The mystery of God finished.
B1 | xi. 15. He shall reign.
C | Worshippers of Satan (fourfold).
a2 | xiv. 11. Smoke of torment.
b2 | xv. 7. The seven angels.
a2 | xix. 3. Smoke of torment.
b2 | xx. 10. The Devil, Beast and False Prophet.
B2 | xxii. 5. They shall reign.

The passages which are specially connected with our present subject are the two groups of four, lettered C, C. In the first set we have all creation, including the four living creatures, the twenty-four elders, and all the angels joining in praise to God and to the Lamb. It is important to notice the universality of the scope of v. 13. What words can convey to us the sense of the universal better than these?

> "And every creature > which is in heaven > and on earth > and under the earth > and in the sea > and all that are in them."

Yet the worshippers of the beast, together with Satan, the beast and the false prophet themselves must be excepted, otherwise we introduce discord into Scripture. This should be remembered when we are tempted to make universal application of the "all's" and "every's" of Scripture. In the case of those who worship the beast, and of Babylon itself, we read:--

> "The smoke of their (or her) torment ascendeth up (or rose up) for the ages of the ages."

The ages of the ages is the great converging point of all time. There the smoke ceases to ascend, there every enemy is subjected, there the reign of the saints reaches its goal, there in fact the Son Himself shall vacate His mediatorial throne, and having accomplished the purpose of the ages He shall:-- > "Deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father . . . . . that God may be all in all" (I Cor. xv. 24-28).

In Ezek. xxviii. 11-19, which we understand to speak of Satan, we read that God says:--

> "Therefore will I bring forth a fire from the midst of thee, and it shall devour thee, and I will bring thee to ashes upon the earth in the sight of all them that behold thee" (Ezek. xxviii. 18).

Thus ends the awful conflict of the ages. The thought of this torment an destruction is a terrible one, yet He Who measures the guilt by the gift of His Son is righteous in His vengeance, for perfect love must also know perfect hatred, otherwise it would be for ever one-sided unreal.

The Great White Throne. The Books and the Book (xx. 11-15). pp. 42 - 48

At the opening of the sixth seal great convulsions took place, causing the sun to become black, the moon to be like blood, the stars to fall, the heaven to be parted asunder as a scroll rolling itself up, and every mountain and island to be moved out of their places. Thus was ushered in the day of wrath, foretold in Isa. xiii. 6-13; xxxiv. 1-5; Hag. ii. 6, 7, 21, 22; and Matt. xxiv. 35. We now have brought before us a more terrific movement. Not merely do the heavens part asunder and the mountains move, but John says:--

> "And I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat on it, from Whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them" (Rev. xx. 11).

"No place" seems to signify more than the mere idea of "room" or "position"; it seems to indicate that the heavens and the earth that Peter said "are now" have accomplished their purpose. This idea may be seen in such a passage as Heb. viii. 7:--

"For if the first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for a second."

Or again, Heb. xii. 7:--

"For he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears."

In neither of these passages does "place" bear the idea of physical or material locality, and the same applies to Rev. xx. 11.

Satan's rebellion and the present Creation.

The heavens and the earth that are now will have run their appointed course by the time that the great white throne has been set up. They began as a result of Satan's first rebellion, suggested though not stated in Gen. i. 2 when the first earth perished in the water. They will end when Satan's last rebellion has come to its inglorious close, and not with a flood of water but with a lake of fire:--

"By the word of God . . . . . the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished: but the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word laid up in store, kept for fire for the day of judgment and destruction of impious men . . . . . in which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with a fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up" (II Pet. iii. 5-10).

In spite therefore of the words of a great commentator on Rev. xx. 11, "To seek a literal sense in such a passage would be quite a superfluous undertaking", we believe that we have here as literal a cosmic movement as in Gen. i. 2, the Deluge, the terrors of Sinai, or the rending rocks and opened tombs at the crucifixion of the Saviour:--

"And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God" (Rev. xx. 12).

Unless one had actually heard it denied, it would hardly seem necessary to say that "the dead" who thus stand before this throne are raised and living again.

The rest of the Dead.

There are two items in this very chapter that necessitate the resurrection of all those that were not raised at the commencement of the millennium.

(1). The First Resurrection.—We observed earlier that the word "first" means "former", "the former of two", and implies a second or later resurrection to follow.

(2). The rest of the dead lived not again until . . . . .—"Lived not again until" necessarily means that when the limit set by the word "until" has been reached, those others called "the rest" shall "lived again".

This company called "the rest of the dead" are included in I Cor. xv. 22, 23:--

> "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive, but every man in his own order."

It is obvious that these died "in Adam" and consequently must be "made alive". The second death lies beyond the sphere of Adam and no promise of resurrection or life is made to any who come under its dread dominion.

The revised text reads "stand before the throne" instead of "before God" in Rev. xx. 12, and this reading is followed by J.N.D., Rotherham, Companion Bible, as well as the R.V. We know from other Scriptures that "He Who sits on that throne" is none other than Christ:--

> "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son: That all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father" (John v. 22, 23).
> "Because He hath appointed a day, in which He will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom He hath ordained" (Acts xvii. 31).

It is important to notice the character of this judgment. The word "sin" is not mentioned. This is covered by the death of Christ. Sin entered the world by one man, Adam. It involved all in its consequence—death. But the Scriptures as emphatically affirm that there is a perfect parallel between Adam and Christ, and that:--

> "As by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of One the free gift came upon all men unto a justification of life" (Rom. v. 18).

If any should object to our words "a perfect parallel" we will agree that the parallel is not perfect, that throughout Paul's argument in Rom. v. the grace of God in Christ is "not as it was by one that sinned", but that continually we must say when speaking of the grace of God "much more". For Christ not only died for "sin", but in the case of all those who received the abundance of grace, He shed His blood on account of "sins" also, and consequently "no condemnation" can be theirs. This is not the case with "the rest of the dead". The "sin" that was theirs in common with "all in Adam" has been put away, and the death that ensued has been revoked. There is for them a "justification of life". These however never knew the forgiveness of "sins" (is there a passage anywhere in the N.T. that speaks of the forgiveness of "sin"?) and they are here found standing before the throne to hear the judgment of God concerning their works.

The Books and the Book.

Our attention is most particularly drawn to the presence of two sets of books which are to be opened at this great judgment:--

> "And the BOOKS were opened: And ANOTHER BOOK was opened which is the book of LIFE. And the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works" (Rev. xx. 12).

Whoever undertakes to interpret this passage ignoring this most important distinction, thereby stamps himself as an untrustworthy expositor. Judgment is out of the books, not out of the book. The judgment of the great white throne is a judgment upon "works". Further there is no word "wrath" in the record of this solemn judgment. The vials of wrath poured out by the seven angels completed the wrath of God. This is the testimony of Scripture, and J.N.D. thus translates Rev. xv. 1, "For in them the fury of God is completed". Rotherham reads "ended", the R.V "finished". It is not for us to theorize, but it is for us to adhere faithfully to the word of truth. There are two words rendered "wrath" in Revelation, thumos and orge, and they both terminate with the conclusion of the seven vials. The last reference to thumos is Rev. xviii. 3 where Babylon is in view, and the last reference to orge is at Armageddon (Rev. xix. 15). We do not believe a single Israelite will stand before the great white throne, for Israel being an elect nation were saved by Christ, and the judgment of their works falls within the millennium. We must be guided by the Word however and remember that "They are not all Israel that are of Israel", for even in that elect race the holy seed had become corrupted, and some in our Lord's day who were lineal descendants of Abraham were nevertheless said to be "of the father the Devil" (John viii. 44). With that one reservation we can boldly say "And so all Israel shall be saved" (Rom. xi. 26). There will not stand before that throne one of any dispensation from Adam onwards who has walked by faith. "The rest of the dead" includes that great company of Adam's sons, who were not elected to any of the companies of faith, and who never attained either by award (Matt. xix. 16), fruit (Rom. vi. 22), or faith (John iii. 16), the life of the age that had then gone by, usually translated "everlasting life", and made parallel with the kingdom (Matt. xxv. 34 and 46).

Eternal life and the rest of the Dead.

Tyre and Sidon and Sodom (Matt. xi. 21-24) shall find it "more tolerable" than some who on the surface were nothing near so vile. We have it upon no less authority than that of the living God Himself that Sodom was "more righteous" than Israel:--

> "As I live, saith the Lord God, Sodom they sister hath not done, she nor her daughters, as thou hast done, thou and thy daughters . . . . . they are more righteous than thou . . . . . thou hast justified thy sisters" (Ezek. xvi. 48-52).

Just as the enormity of Israel's sin "justified" Sodom, so we read that Nineveh's repentance "condemns" Israel:--

> "The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it" (Matt. xii. 41).

It is not possible for any human judge to deal with a man upon the ground of what he would have done under altered circumstances—the whole world would cry out against such an administration. But He Who sits upon this great white throne is One Who "tries the reins and the heart". He knows what Sodom or Tyre would have done had the favours shown to Chorazin and Bethsaida been shown to them. He alone can judge the "secrets of men", and that "according to my gospel" says Paul (Rom. ii. 16). Paul's gospel touches Adam and sin, no other gospel goes so far back nor so deep. We know it is quite apart from all the lurid pictures of orthodoxy to think of a gospel in association with the great white throne, but we nevertheless believe that such is the case.

The Second Dead and utter Destruction.

After the judgment according to works has been given we read:--

> "And death and hades were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death, even the lake of fire" (Rev. xx. 14).

Death and gravedom, together with the present heavens and earth, have accomplished their end. Like all other things that are temporal or cause offence, they are destroyed before the kingdom of righteousness can be set up. By no conceivable interpretation can we understand that God's intention is to preserve or to change death and the grave by casting them into the lake of fire. Death, so far as it may be spoken of as a state, has been destroyed by the resurrection of all the rest of the dead. So far as it may be spoken of as an enemy it is here seen to be destroyed in the lake of fire.

The book of life is now put into operation, and this book alone is connected with the second death. No man will ever enter the second death as a result of judgment according to his works. It would be to ascribe most unbecoming trifling to the Lord Jesus to say that it would be more tolerable for one company who are cast into the second death than for another. The word "whosoever" in Rev. xx. 15 is apt to mislead the English reader. Kai ei tis can only be translated "and if anyone", and the words are so rendered by the R.V. We now leave the great multitude for the individual. A mistaken zeal often prompts the evangelist to declare:--

> "If any one stands before the great white throne he is necessarily doomed. Nothing but the lake of fire which burneth with fire and brimstones can be his lot. Flee from the wrath to come!"

These words contain serious mistakes. The second death is not the period spoken of in Scripture as "the wrath to come". The day of wrath has peculiar reference to Babylonianism, Antichirst, etc. (see Rom. i. and Revelation). "Wrath" does not occur in the inner part of Romans, viz., v. 12 - viii. 39. It is not true to say that to stand before the great white throne is just the same as being condemned to the lake of fire.

The name written in the Book of Life.

"If any one" denies that. None shall go into the lake of fire unless his name shall not be found in the book of life. This book of life was written "from the overthrow of the world". The translation that we believe to be the true one of Rev. xiii. 8 is:--

> "And all that dwell on the earth shall worship Him, everyone whose name had not been written from the overthrowing of the world in the book of life of the slain Lamb."

When Satan's rebellion brought about the "overthrow" of Gen. i. 2, and the purpose of the ages was put into movement, a second heavens and earth were made (which were to pass away when their purpose was accomplished), and a people were written in the book of life. Sin entering brought the first death, and sin brought punishment, but the ultimate destiny of this people of purpose had no reference either to Adam's one sin or their own many sins. The consequences, both of the one offence and of the many offences, were undertaken by Christ, and in accordance with the outworking of the purpose of the ages, different companies were called to a saving knowledge of the truth. At length the last company is reached. They too suffer for their works, or are rewarded as the case may be, and being found in the book of life, pass into the new heavens and the new earth for the final movement in the great age purpose. There are some however whose names, apparently, will not be found therein. Can we find anything in Scripture to help us understand this omission? Turning once more to Rev. xiii. 8, let us notice what it says of those whose names had not been written in the book of life:--

> "And all that dwell on the earth, every one whose name had not been written in the book of life of the slain Lamb, SHALL WORSHIP HIM, i.e., the dragon and the beast."

Terrific judgments are pronounced against such in Rev. xiv. 10, 11. A promise is made to the overcomer in Rev. iii. 5 that the Lord will in no wise (double negative) blot out his name from the book of life.

Rev. xx. 11-15.

Can a name be blotted out?
pp. 57, 58

These two passages raise certain questions concerning the book of life that must be faced:--

(1). Rev. xiii. 8 indicates that the worshippers of the beast are those who have not their names in that book. There will be a company therefore on earth who are not reckoned in the great transaction of Adam and Christ; in other words, we perceive some of the false seed who are of "their father the Devil".

(2). The promise not to blot out the name of the overcomer suggests that there may be some point in the life even of one of the true children of Adam where such an awful thing may take place.

We are reminded of the words of Moses in Exod. xxxii. 32, 33:--

> "And if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of that book which Thou hast written. And the Lord said unto Moses, 'Whosoever hath sinned against Me, him will I blot out of My book'."

We must however be careful to note that this does not say "the book of life", and may refer to other things. In Psa. lxix. 28 we read:--

> "Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous."

Rotherham in a footnote says, "Or list (or register) of the living", and it is by no means certain that the Psalmist has "the book of life of the Lamb" in mind. The expression is parallel with "the land of the living" (Psa. lii. 5 and Isa. liii. 8). It should be read with Psa. xxxvii. 29:--

> "The righteous shall inherit the earth, that they may settle down to futurity (Heb. ad) thereupon."

We can be certain as to this, that those who worship the beast as recorded in Rev. xiii. 8 have not their names in the Lamb's book of life. Whether anyone whose name is in that book can possibly commit such an act and so take the side of Satan, is more than we can say. Enough for our present purpose to understand that the second death is the end of those whose names are not in the book of life.

We do not read "the book of aionian life", neither do we read of "the book of glory", or "blessing", or "peace", or "victory", or "holiness". All these other aspects of the future will have been settled. One issue, and one issue only remains. Life or death. The second death is the only alternative. It cannot mean purgatory, it cannot be a place of reformation, it is not a place of torment. Where the lake of fire is used as a place of torment is before the great white throne (Rev. xx. 10), and the lake of fire is described as either a place of torment or second death, never both. The second death resembles the first in this, that apart from resurrection it means destruction (I Cor. xv. 18).

Binding the "tares" to burn them.

Before the righteous can shine forth in the kingdom of the Father, the "tares", "the children of the wicked one", the "false seed" must be destroyed. The figure used to describe the end of the children of the wicked one is taken from agriculture. Every man who cultivates the ground knows the necessity and the purpose of the annual bonfire. The weeds are raked together into a heap, and a fire is kindled in order that he may rid of them. If anyone should venture to suggest that he entertained a hope that by means of the fire some of the thistles should reform and become figs, the gardener would rightly put such a one down as mad. Now the figure taken from husbandry was taken by the Lord to illustrate, and if the gathering of the bundles of tares (the children of the Devil) to be burned is not to destroy them, then the Lord has misled us!:--

> "They shall gather out of His kingdom all things that offend . . . . . then shall the righteous shine . . . . ." (Matt. xiii. 42, 43).

We have no warrant for believing that either Satan, the Beast, the False Prophet, the Angels that fell with Satan, or his monstrous seed sown in the earth to corrupt the true seed of the woman, ever have had their names in the book of life. These, together with the death and the grave, are consumed in the second death.

The platform has now been prepared. All is ready for the last act which is ushered in by the coming of the new heavens and new earth. These John beholds immediately following the lake of fire. This exact sequence is preserved in II Pet. iii. where the day of the Lord eventuates in the burning up of the heavens and the earth, and which in turn is followed by the day of God. This fixes for us the lake of fire. It is the great dissolving and destroying agency at the end.

#60. All things new (xxi. and xxii.).
pp. 65 - 79

The Scriptures are divided into three great sections, viz.:--

(1). The heaven and the earth which were created. "In the beginning" (Gen. i. 1).
(2). The heavens and the earth which were created during the six days. "Which are now" (Gen. i. 3-ii. 3; II Pet. iii. 7).
(3). The new heaven and the new earth (II Pet. iii. 13; Rev. xxi. 1).

One constant factor throughout the second division is the presence of sin. During the ages which span this section the wondrous purposes of grace and redemption are worked out. The last act which pertains to this section is that of casting death and hades into the lake of fire. The millennium is the day of the Lord (II Pet. iii. 10), and this is followed by the day of God (II Pet. iii. 12). For this the believer "looks and hastens unto", "looking, according to His promise, for the new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (II Pet. iii. 13). The section therefore which now claims our attention, though brief, is of stupendous significance. It is nothing less than the goal of the ages, the fruit of redemption, and the triumph of truth.

The subject "the new heaven and new earth" occupies chapters xxi. 1 - xxii. 5. First we have a brief statement occupying xxi. 1-5, then secondly we have an expansion of one aspect of the subject which has particular connection with the theme of the Revelation. It is important to a right understanding that we have this arrangement of the subject clearly before us.

The new creation and its heirs.

A1	|	xxi. 1-5.	All things new.
A2	|	xxi. 6 - xxii. 5.	These things inherited.

The first part of the subject is general—"all things". The second part of the same subject is that which is peculiar to the overcomer—"he that overcometh shall inherit these things". Five verses are sufficient to tell of the new heavens and new earth, while twenty-seven verses are taken up with the description of the inheritance of the overcomer. Let us consider these separate groups.

"All things new" (xxi. 1-5).

A | a | 1. New heaven. New earth.
b | 1. Former heaven and earth pass away.
c | 1. No more sea.
B | 2. The Holy City.
B | 2. The Tabernacle.
A | c | 4. No more death.
b | 4. Former things pass away.
a | 5. All things new.

So complete is the change that takes place that the Scripture repeats, in order to emphasize, that "the former heaven and earth" and "the former things" pass away. In Isa. lxv. 17 we read:--

> "For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come upon the heart."

Just as the passing of the old heavens and earth is vitally connected with the "former things" in Rev. xxi., so in Isa. lxv. 16, for we read:--

> "The former troubles are forgotten . . . . . they are hid from mine eyes."

Further, there is no more sea in that new earth, which is balanced by the statement that there shall be no more death, sorrow, crying or pain. Now why should the sea be associated with death? In exactly the same way that the "former heaven and earth" are associated with the former "troubles".

Sin and its cosmic relations.

Seeing that we have reached in this chapter the great cosmic change, the goal towards which creation and redemption have pressed, it is not to be wondered at if sin is viewed, not from an individual point of view, nor even from a racial and federal point of view; it is seen rather as the primal sin that caused the overthrow of the world, made the present creation necessary, and which is behind all sin in general and "Mystery Babylon" in particular.

With the repeated emphasis upon the passing away of former things, and the complete cessation of death, it is simple to believe that all who were cast into the lake of fire suffer destruction, that they become "no more" even as the sea, death and sorrow, that they have passed away as completely as the former heaven and earth. To believe that a countless mass of unsaved humanity are still suffering torment contradicts these plain words, as does also the other teaching that the second death is in some measure a purgatory or place of temporary detention.

We look in vain in this chapter of Revelation for any further description of the new heaven and new earth. Immediately following the briefest of introductions John focuses upon one phase of this new world:--

> "And I, John, saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband" (xxi. 2).

Again a pause, and a further expansion:--

> The city is named . . . . . New Jerusalem.
> The city is located . . . . . Coming down from heaven.
> The city is likened . . . . . Prepared as a bride.

Here the description ceases. Presently the theme is resumed with a wealth of detail, but in the brief summary which prefaces this section the above suffices. John "saw" the city. He also "heard" a great voice out of heaven saying:--

> "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself shall be with them, and be their God" (xxi. 3).

The city--a tabernacle.

This is an evident explanation of the purpose of the new Jerusalem. It is to be in reality what the tabernacle was to Israel in type. It was further to be for "men", whereas the tabernacle was exclusive to Israel. At the close of the description (xii. 1-5) we read Eden, paradise restored. It will be seen therefore that there are to be a series of steps ever back to "as it was in the beginning".

> (1). THE MILLENNIUM.—Jerusalem on earth, a holy city.
> Special feature THE TEMPLE (Ezek. xl.-xlvii.)
> (2). THE NEW HEAVEN.—Jerusalem, heavenly city.
> Special feature THE TABERNACLE.
> (3). THE NEW EARTH.—Paradise, "The day of the age" (II Pet. iii.).
> Special feature THE TREE OF LIFE.

We have already suggested that the new Jerusalem is closely associated with the "overcomer", and a glance back to some of the promises in Rev. ii. and iii. will show that some of them are not fulfilled until after the millennium.

Reward extend beyond the millennium.

> "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God". (ii. 7).
> "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death". (ii. 11).
>
> "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life". (iii. 5).
>
> "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of My God, and he shall go no more out, and I will write upon him the name of My God, and the name of the city of My God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from My God" (iii. 12).

In these four passages, we have four items that are connected with our subject:--

(1). The paradise of God.
(2). The second death.
(3). The book of life.
(4). The city of God.

It will be found that Nos. 2 and 3 are indicated in xxi. 8 and 27 where the two statements "the second death" and "the book of life" are mentioned in connection with the new Jerusalem.

As we hope to deal with the typical teaching of the tabernacle in the series entitled Fundamentals of Dispensational Truth, we will not stay over details here. The very close resemblance between the tabernacle and the city becomes evident upon examination.

The materials for the tabernacle are given in Exod. xxv. 1-7 and they are gold, silver, brass, blue, purple, scarlet, precious stones, etc. The breastplate of the high priest contained twelve precious stones. These closely resemble the twelve precious stones with which the foundations of the wall were garnished. There is also an intended contrast with Babylon. In Rev. xvii. and xviii. we have the mystery of iniquity and there we read of purple and scarlet, gold and precious stones and pearls in the description of the harlot, and among the merchandise of that great city we find gold, silver, precious stones, pearls, fine linen, purple silk, scarlet. Again in the description of the king of Tyre (Ezek. xxviii. 12-19) who sets forth in symbol Satan, we have a description which includes "every precious stone", and nine precious stones are mentioned by name.

The great city, Babylon, falls to rise no more; the great city, new Jerusalem, manifests the triumphant conclusion of the conflict of the ages.

The sanctuary--a dwelling place.

We may observe here that one feature of the tabernacle which is given first place in Exod. xxv. is the one feature mentioned in Rev. xxi.

Exod. xxv. 8.—"Let them make Me a Sanctuary; that I may dwell among them."
Rev. xxi. 3.—"The Tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them."
(See also Ezek. xliii. 7; Zech. ii. 10, viii. 3).

Another important item is brought to mind by these parallels. The references to Zechariah and Ezekiel are millennial and to Israel, whereas the reference in Rev. xxi. is beyond the millennium and is to "men" and not to Israel alone. The new heaven and the new earth together with the heavenly Jerusalem will be anticipated in the millennium in Israel and the Jerusalem that will be built according to the prophecy of Ezek. x.-xlvii.

Isaiah mentions the new heavens and new earth in connection with Israel, the millennium and the Jerusalem of that day, and unless the typical and anticipatory character of Israel's history be remembered, a great difficulty will be experienced in placing these passages. They are Isa. lxv. 17 and lxvi. 22:--

> "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered nor come upon the heart. But be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create; for I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy . . . . . and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying" (Isa. lxv. 7).

Yet this cannot be the same as Rev. xxi., for the next verse speaks of a sinner dying an hundred years old and being accursed, whereas in the new earth of Rev. xxi. there is no more death, and in Rev. xxii. no more curse.

Israel's blessings are foreshadowings.

In Isa. lxvi. the new heavens and earth are connected with Israel, and the carcasses of men shall be seen in Gehenna, and be an abhorring unto all flesh.

There is one more item given in Rev. xxi. upon the nature of the new creation, which though briefly stated is infinitely precious:--

> "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death" (Rev. xxi. 4).

When God wipes away all tears, it indicates that death has been vanquished:--

> "He will swallow up death in victory, and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces" (Isa. xxv. 8).

There shall not enter into the new heavens or earth any who do not stand in new life in Christ.

We must now pass on to the more detailed description of the new Jerusalem, which commences at Rev. xxi. 9. The intervening verses (4-8) form a transition:--

> "And He said (the One that sitteth upon the throne), Behold, I make all things new.
> And He said, Write: for these words are true and faithful.
> And He said, it is done."

Some authorities read "they have been accomplished", but the sense of fulfillment remains unaltered. The word gegone, "it is done", is the word that was uttered as the last vial of wrath was poured out "and great Babylon came into remembrance before God". At this utterance "every island fled away, and (certain) mountains were not found; and there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven" (Rev. xvi. 17-21). Here we see the great contrast.

It is done.--Judgment.	It is done.--Blessing.
The great city, Babylon.	The great city, new Jerusalem.
Precious stones, pearls and gold.	Precious stones, pearls and gold.
No more harper, candle or rejoicing.	No more death, sorrow or curse.
The habitation of demons, foul spirits.	Nothing that defileth.
Islands flee, mountains not found.	Earth and heaven flee away.
The harlot.	The bride.
Kings of the earth corrupted.	Kings of the earth bring glory.
Nations made drunk.	Nations walk in light.

The reader may lengthen this list; we have given enough to show the evident contrast between the two cities and the two conflicting purposes that attach to them. The mystery of iniquity ends in destruction utter and complete, the mystery of godliness ends in glory beyond description.

The Alpha and the Omega.

Who is it that sits upon this throne? Who is it that says "Behold, I make all things new"? Who is it that says "It is done"?

> "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end" (Rev. xxi. 6).

This title has occurred in Revelation before, namely in Rev. i. 8. There it is shown to be parallel with the great name Jehovah, and the Almighty:--

> "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty."

It is also closely associated with death and resurrection:--

> "Fear not, I am the first and the last; I am He that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for the ages of the ages, Amen; and have the keys of hades and of death" (Rev. i. 17, 18).

Or again:--

> "Thus saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God" (Rev. iii. 14).

Both Alpha and Omega are vowels. A vowel is required to form a complete sound. Without Christ the promises of God can never be fulfilled, but with Him every jot and tittle shall be accomplished. He Who bowed His head upon the cross crying, "It is finished", shall one day sit upon the throne and say "It is done".

The overcomer's portion.

One blessed promise is given here:--

> "I will give unto him that thirsteth of the fountain of the water of life, freely" (Rev. xxi. 6).

At first sight this seems no more than that of:-- > "A pure river of water of life" (Rev. xxii. 1), or

> "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life, freely" (Rev. xxii. 17).

A moment's consideration however will reveal a difference. First we have "the fountain". Secondly we have "the river", and thirdly we have "the water" without reference to either river or fountain.

Now in Rev. vii. 17 we have a millennial anticipation by the overcomers of this same blessed promise:--

> "The Lamb . . . . . shall lead them unto the fountains of the water of life (R.V.), and God shall wipe away every tear from their eyes."

We read in Jer. ii. 13 that the Lord Himself is "the fountain of living waters", and the promise of Rev. xxi. 6 takes the overcomer to the very source of that pure river which flows out from the throne to water the paradise of God. It is an "overcomer's" portion, and not that of "whosoever will". This promise is immediately followed by the words "He that overcometh shall inherit these things" (tauta, these things, instead of panta, all things). There is no practical difference between "all things" and "these things" in this passage, for "these things" must refer to something stated in the context, which seems to be the all things that are made new.

The reward of the inheritance.

An inheritance, in the Scriptures, seems to have a two-fold significance. There is the inheritance that is associated with birth, and the inheritance that is associated with merit. Christ was appointed "heir of all things" (Heb. i. 2), but there seems an added feature in the statement, "He hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name" (Heb. i. 4). So with Abraham: "When he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed" (Heb. xi. 8). This inheritance doubtless was the land of Palestine, but it included more. Isaac and Jacob were heirs together with Abraham of the same promise, and dwelt in tents as sojourners in a strange country:--

> "For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God . . . . . They desire a better country, that is, an heavenly . . . . . He hath prepared for them a city" (Heb. xi. 9-16).

The inheritance spoken of therefore in Rev. xxi. looks to the new Jerusalem in particular for its fulfillment and enjoyment.

In severe and awful contrast with the overcomers are placed throughout the Revelation those who receive the mark of the beast or the number of his name. Their characteristics are given in verses 8 and 27. The last word in these two lists is connected with the lie.

The lie.

"All liars" (verse 8). "Whatsoever worketh abomination or a lie" (verse 27).

If we are to take the words "all liars" in an unrestricted sense, then the Editor must confess that his place is herein indicated; but we rejoice in the forgiveness of sins, and see in this statement something more specific. It is that system of which Satan is the father:--

"He is a liar, and the father of IT" (John viii. 44).

This lie usurped the place of the truth of God, when the Gentile world became submerged in idolatry (Rom. i. 23-25), and will finally obsess the worshippers of the man of sin and his "lying wonders" (II Thess. ii. 9-11). This basic lie is connected with specific murder (John viii. 44; I John iii. 12), and with abominations (Rom. i. 26; Rev. ii. 20, etc.). With this dreadful company are joined "the fearful", and "the unbelieving" (Rev. xxi. 8), which we understand also in the same restricted sense, otherwise the very apostles must come under this awful doom (see the same word used of them, Matt. viii. 26).

Abraham looked for a "city which had foundations" and a "heavenly country", and these are now to be described with a wealth of detail. One of the seven angels who had been instrumental in the destruction of Babylon comes forward and says to John:--

"Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife. And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God" (Rev. xxi. 10).

There is an evident parallel with Rev. xvii. here:--

"And there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither, I will show unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters . . . . . so he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness, and I saw a woman . . . . . the woman which thou sawest is that great city . . . . . ." (Rev. xvii. 1-18).

Once again we shall find that the millennial city foreshadows the heavenly Jerusalem:-

"In the visions of God brought He me unto the land of Israel, and set me upon a very high mountain, by which was as the frame of a city on the south" (Ezek. xl. 2).

The Bride and the Wife.

Many expositors see a difference between "the bride" and "the wife", and teach that Israel is the wife, whereas an elect remnant constitute the bride: the wife being earthly, and the marriage taking place at the beginning of the millennium, whereas the bride being heavenly, her marriage takes place after the millenniums. It appears to us that there are several features of this subject that make it difficult to believe that this distinction is intended here. For example Rev. xix. 7 makes it clear that the marriage is the marriage of the Lamb, and when it says "His wife hath made herself ready" cannot mean that she was already His wife before this marriage, but simply that this woman was the betrothed, and about to be married.

The word "wife" is gune, a word which is translated "woman" in the A.V. 129 times, 17 of the occurrences being found in the Revelation. Gune is translated "wife" 92 times, two of these occurrences being found in the Revelation. Like the word aner, which means both husband and man (see "the perfect man", Eph. iv. 13), so gune means any woman who is of marriageable age, as well as a wife.

> "I will show thee the bride, the wife of the Lamb" (Rev. xxi. 9).

Are we to believe that the marriage consummated in Rev. xix. is dissolved by either divorce or death at the end of the millennium? No one can believe that the Lamb of God will even in type and symbol break the law of God concerning marriage and practice polygamy. It was customary for a wedding ceremony to cover a period of seven days. "Fulfil her week" (Gen. xxix. 27) refers to this period. So also from Judges xiv. 17, 18 we gather the same thing. The marriage festivities of the Lamb last for a longer period, how long we do not know, but after the end of the millennium, when the new heaven and earth appear, the holy city descends from heaven prepared as a bride adorned for her husband and it is then the bride is called the Lamb's wife.

There are several references in the O.T. to Israel as a wife, a wife divorced and taken back again, which must not be ignored if we would have the truth. One such passage is Isa. liv. 5-8. The first verse of the chapter provides a suggestion as to the interpretation of verses 5-8:--

> "Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing."

This verse is quoted by Paul in Gal. iv. 27 as a proof text that this refers to "Jerusalem which is above". The heavenly Jerusalem, though seen in vision for the first time by John in Rev. xxi., has evidently been in existence throughout the ages, reserved in heaven until the present heaven and earth pass away. To this effect is Heb. xii. 22, 23:--

> "But ye are come unto Mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly, and to the church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven."

This passage comes in the second section of Heb. xii. The first half deals with sons, the second half with the firstborn and the birthright. These facts are all of help to the understanding of Rev. xxi. Another passage to be noted is Hos. ii. 16-23, where we read "Thou shalt call Me my husband . . . . . and I will betroth thee unto Me for ever", or yet again, Jer. iii. 14, "Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord, for I am married unto you".

The simple solution seems to be to keep distinct the titles of the Lord, as (1) The God of Israel and (2) The Lamb, God manifest in the flesh; the restoration of the nation of Israel being one thing, the inheritance of the new Jerusalem being another. "If children, then heirs, heirs of God", that is one position. "Joint-heirs with Christ, if so be we suffer with Him" (Rom. viii. 17), that is another, and is somewhat parallel to the case before us.

The glory of God.

Let us now read the description of this wondrous city:--

> "He showed me the holy Jerusalem . . . . . having the glory of God" (Rev. xxi. 10, 11).

The glory of God is a theme that requires separate treatment, and we must content ourselves here with pointing out a few outstanding features:--

(1). The glory of God is directly attacked by the Babylonian system that flooded the earth with idolatry (Rom. i. 23).
(2). Sin causes all to come short of the glory of God (Rom. iii. 23).
(3). Only by virtue of redemption may any therefore entertain the hope of the glory of God (Rom. v. 2).
(4). Immediately following the rebellion of Babel "the God of glory" called Abram out of Chaldea (Acts vii. 2).
(5). The glory of God is vitally connected with resurrection:--
  (a). Christ was raised from the dead "by the glory of the Father" (Rom. vi. 4).
  (b). At the tomb of Lazarus, the Lord said in connection with the raising of Lazarus "Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?" (John xi. 40).

We may at least see in the new Jerusalem these five elements. The Babylonian attack has perished for ever; sin has passed away with the former things; redemption is the foundation upon which this city rests, and resurrection life is its animating principle.

This glory is said to be, not "her light" but "her luminary" (phoster). There was no need in this city for the light of either sun or moon. The wall is "great and high", and there are twelve gates, with twelve angels, the names of the twelve tribes of Israel being inscribed on the gates. Verse 21 adds the information that each gate was a pearl.

Paul, not one of the twelve apostles.

The super-structure of the wall is of jasper (verse 18), but the wall rests upon twelve foundations, bearing the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. With the exception of Matthias no doubt is entertained concerning the names of the remaining eleven. We have given our reasons in The Berean Expositor for June, 1923, for believing that Matthias is the twelfth apostle; and in the expositions upon Ephesians the peculiar position of the apostle Paul is considered. It is our firm belief that the name of Paul is not to be found upon the foundations of the new Jerusalem, also that Paul is not one of the apostles of "the Lamb".

The measurements of the city are given and must be received, and nothing we can write will be of any service beyond stating that we must accept the explanation as a matter of fact. It is possible that the shape of this city is that of a pyramid, which would be in harmony with the archaeological evidences of early Babylonian buildings. Near to the ruins of Babylon is a huge mound which is called Birs-Nimrud, or the tower of Nimrod:--

> "It covers a square surface of 49,000 feet, and is nearly 300 feet high . . . . . Herodotus saw it while it still retained something of its ancient glories."

He describes it as being constructed of a series of eight towers, with a way running spirally around them. Nebuchadnezzar leaves a record to the effect that he restored this tower, using different coloured tiles for each stage of the building (see Volume V of The Berean Expositor, page 30). This seems to be Satan's anticipation and travesty of the glorious colours of the new Jerusalem.

It is somewhat difficult to decide whether the word "building" in verse 18 means the super-structure, as some translate it, or the buttresses, as others suggest. It is evidently something different from the foundations themselves, as one could scarcely adorn jasper with jasper. Those who have opportunity may find in the Museum at South Kensington the twelve stones mentioned in this description. We do not think any spiritual good can come by a lengthy description; most have some fair knowledge of their general appearance, and when we do see this vision of beauty we shall doubtless say "the half was not told me".

No temple, no sun, no moon.

During the millennium there will be the glorious temple described with such minuteness by Ezekiel (in chapters xl.-xlvii.), but the greater glory of the new Jerusalem is that it needs no temple:--

> "And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it" (Rev. xxi. 22).

While temples, altars, sacrifices and priests stand, full access is denied (see Heb. ix. 8, 9; x. 19-22 for the principle). During the millennium:--

> "the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold" (Isa. xxx. 26).

but of the city of Jerusalem itself we read:--

> "The sun shall be no more thy light by day, neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee, but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory" (Isa. lx. 19, 20).

This is but another anticipation of the heavenly city:-- "And the city hath no need of the sun, neither the moon, that they should shine on her; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof" (Rev. xxi. 23).

Future blessedness in the minds of many is somewhat nebulous. They imagine an immaterial state, with nothing much to do except to sing and to praise. The new earth at least presents a very different aspect. There are nations there and kings, "and the nations shall walk by means of her light', which is but following out the anticipation of the millennial city:--

"Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee . . . . . and Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising" (Isa. lx. 1-3).

"Therefore thy gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the wealth of the nations, and that their kings may be conducted through" (Isa. lx. 11).

The kings of the earth were ruined by Babylon, the nations were made drunk by the harlot, but the nations shall walk by the light of Jerusalem earthly and heavenly, and kings shall be blessed by her.

No defilement, no more sacrifice.

The concluding words regarding this city are those which repeat the solemn witness of verse 8:--

"And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life" (Rev. xxi. 27).

The city is likened to the tabernacle. The ritual of the tabernacle impresses us with the need for cleansing. The leper, being unclean, or any who had contracted defilement, was not allowed to come near until their defilement had been removed. The provision for the removal of sin and uncleanness is found in the blood of Christ. This had been rejected by those who were cast into the second death. There remaineth no more offering for sin. Christ dieth no more.

Throughout the record of chapter xxi. illumination is found in the story of Israel. This principle of interpretation which looks to the typical people of Israel to supply the correct grounds for interpreting the unfolding of the purpose of the ages we commend to our readers, who will find much more than we have brought forward here that will make the vision plain.

Paradise restored.

We now arrive at the last members of the great structure which comprises the purpose of the ages, and are brought not to Israel nor Jerusalem, but back to Eden and paradise. Rev. ii. 7 gives us warrant to use the word paradise of Rev. xxii. 1-5. Genesis speaks of the garden planted by the Lord with its rivers and its trees of fruit and its tree of life. The picture is revived in this closing section. Ezek. xlvii. Provides a millennial anticipation of this river of living water. Its healing power is brought before us by a physical and geographical fact:--

> "These waters issue out towards the east country (used of the Jordan, Josh. xxii. 11), and go down unto the desert (or plain), and go into the sea (that is the Dead Sea), which being brought forth into the sea, the waters shall be healed" (Ezek. xlvii. 8).

Is not this a blessed symbol? In verse 12 we read of the fruit trees with similar characteristics and virtues as those of Rev. xxii.

The leaves of the tree are for healing the nations, not for those who have the right of entry into that city. We are however not to suppose that sin or death is at work among the nations, for the Scripture immediately adds, "And there shall be no longer any curse", even as there shall be no longer any night, or death, or crying.

There in that renewed paradise shall be the throne of God and the Lamb, there His servants shall serve Him and see His face, bearing His name upon their foreheads. Basking in the light that the Lord God Himself shall give, they shall reign unto the ages of the ages. This is the farthest point to which the book takes us in the outworking of the great purpose of God. One by one the barriers are broken down. The last to go here is the temple with its priesthood. Paul places the top stone upon the edifice by revealing that when the reign of Christ has brought everything into line and order, the goal of the ages will then be reached and God shall be all in all.

The remaining verses of chapter xxii. form the epilogue or conclusion of the book. The conclusion has much in common with the introduction.

The one thing needful -- come!

We have the coming of Christ mentioned or suggested in the chapter at least four times:--

"Behold I come quickly" (7)
"Behold I come quickly" (12, 13).
"The morning Star" (16).
"Surely I come quickly" (20).

A blessing is pronounced upon those who keep the words of the prophecy of this book (7), while severe judgment is threatened to any who shall either add to or take away from these prophetic words (18, 19).

John sees the Lord, not only as the root and offspring of David, but as the bright and morning Star. From the dark night of sin and sorrow ascends to the Lord the bright harbinger of everlasting day, the one word COME, "He who testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly".

As we review the black night of tribulation that cast its gloom over this book, as we see the persecution of the saints, the mark of the beast, the worship of the dragon, our hearts unite with that of John in response to this word of promise. AMEN. EVEN SO, COME, LORD JESUS:--

"Oh what a bright and blessed world
This groaning earth of ours will be,
When from its throne the tempter hurled Shall leave it all, O Lord, to Thee."

"The grace of the Lord Jesus be with all the saints, Amen."

A note on the measurements of the new Jerusalem.
pp. 142, 143

Readers will remember that we brought this series of studies to a conclusion in the May number of The Berean Expositor. Since that date we have received a copy of "THE FAITH" for May-June 1925, which contains so helpful an explanation of the measurements of the new Jerusalem, that we feel we must pass on the gist of the article to our readers.

Our own attitude toward the subject may be gathered from page 76 of the present Volume:--

> "The measurement of the city are given, and must be received, and nothing we can write will be of any service beyond stating that we must accept the explanation as a matter of fact."

The reader doubtless gathered that we desired to bow to the teaching of Scripture, but that we had no clear understanding what the Scripture really intended to teach. The passage in question is Rev. xxi. 16, 17:--

> "And the city lieth foursquare, and its length is as great as its breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, 12,000 furlongs (stadia). The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal. And he measured the wall thereof, 144 cubits."

Dr. E. W. Bullinger in his "APOCALYPSE" says, "In this case the city will be 1,500 miles high", and referring to another computation which takes the 12,000 furlongs as being the measurement of the circumference, he says, "Is 375 miles high easier to believe than 1,500?" and we must confess that either measurement presents a great problem.

The suggestion made by the writer of the article in "THE FAITH" is that the 12,000 furlongs is the area of the square base. The square root of 12,000 is 109, which taking the stadium as being equal to 582 feet (see Twentieth Century Dictionary) gives about 12 miles for the length of one of the square sides. By comparing this dimension with that given in Ezek. xlviii. 35, "round about eighteen thousand measures", we get helpful confirmation. The measure here is a "reed", and measures "six great cubits".

The sacred cubit is given by some as 25 inches, which gives 46 miles for the circumference of the city. Divided by four this gives 11-1/2 miles for the one side, which is very near to the 12 miles suggested above, especially if an outer wall had to be reckoned in addition. The height of the wall 144 cubits, or 100 yards, is proportionate to a city twelve miles in height, but is not so obviously proportional to either 1,500 or 375 miles.

While we are prepared to believe that the new Jerusalem will be 1,500 miles in height, length and breadth if Scripture reveals such to be the case, we realize that it is not an act of faith nor is it to the glory of God to be merely credulous. A city twelve miles square is a reasonable proposition, and twelve miles in height would give it worldwide domination. We cannot see that any liberties have been taken with the text in arriving at this interpretation, and we therefore feel that our readers should have the benefit of it.

We tender our hearty thanks to the Editor of "THE FAITH" for this suggestive article.

Sin, and its relation to God.
pp. 172 – 175

Inspiration, and a disputed translation.

When the apostle Paul reached Rome, we are told in Acts xxviii. 22 that the elders of Israel said:--

> "We desire to hear of thee what thou THINKEST."

When Paul, however, had the opportunity of speaking to them he took higher ground, for he did not tell them so much what he thought, but rather what God had SAID (Acts xxviii. 23).

An appeal to a human authority, however high, is always open to challenge. It is after all something that someone has thought to be truth. On the other hand an appeal to what God has said places all matters beyond dispute.

An incontestible authority.

Gesenius is a great authority on Hebrew, but he is not beyond the reach and the right of criticism. The Septuagint version of the O.T. is a great and venerable authority, but it is not inspired. So with the A.V. and the R.V. There is, however, one fundamental doctrine that we do not discuss in this magazine, and that is the verbal inspiration of the Hebrew and Greek originals of the Old and New Testaments.

Whenever we enter into discussion in these pages it is taken for granted that this is common ground, and the fact that we do feel called upon at times to discuss a point with others must always be understood to imply that we believe that those writers who are criticized hold the truth of inspiration as dear as we do ourselves.

There is a question before us as to the right translation of certain forms of the Hebrew word chata and its bearing upon the vital doctrine of the sacrifice for sin. The A.V. translates the "intensive" form of chata = "sin", by "offer for sin", "make reconciliation", "purify", &c. The writer we criticize denies the accuracy of these translations, saying:--

> "They are contrary to the laws of the Hebrew language."
> "Instead of being the opposite of sin, as you suggest, it is sin more intensely sinful."

These are the writer's own words and italics. It is farthest from our intention to misrepresent or misunderstand his meaning. He tells us that as a result of considering the laws of the Hebrew language whereby the simple form of the verb is intensified when put into the Piel form, that, "Now we have solid ground".

To some, the "laws of the Hebrew language", like the man-made laws of any other language or science, may not appear to be such a solid basis that one can without qualm erect upon it the fabric that this writer would. We believe that we have a far more solid basis than these can ever be, viz., the very rock of inspired Scripture.

The Acid Test.

"WHAT THOU THINKEST" versus "IT IS WRITTEN".

The Piel form of the Hebrew verb chata – "sin" is translated in the A.V. as follows:--

"I bare the loss of it" (Gen. xxxi. 39).
"Took the blood . . . . . and purified the altar" (Lev. viii. 15).
"The ashes of the heifer . . . . . a purification for sin" (Num. xix. 9).
"Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean" (Psa. li. 7).

We maintain that the above renderings are correct. This is denied. After quoting from Gesenius and another authority on Hebrew, also supplementing by eleven examples from the A.V., the writer says:--

> "What other deduction can we come to than that the renderings of the intensive form sin—'offer for sin', 'make reconciliation', 'purge', 'cleanse', 'purify', 'bear the loss' (for these are the great variety offered in our versions) are themselves sins of translation? Sin is lawlessness. They are contrary to the laws of the Hebrew language.
> Now we have some solid ground. Since the Piel form gives new intensity to the simple verb, it not only partakes of the nature of sin, but does so in a greater degree than the simple word sin. Instead of being the opposite of sin, as you suggest, it is sin more intensely sinful . . . . . So the Piel of sin is not purify, but make sin."

We have read and re-read these words in order that we may not misrepresent their intention. Partaking of the nature of sin in a greater degree cannot mean merely apparently so. No, here we have unqualified denial and condemnation of the translations offered by the A.V. and the Septuagint.

Now for the test. Both critic and criticized subscribe whole-heartedly to the doctrine of the verbal inspiration of Scripture, and this being so we have the end of all argument in the epistle to the Hebrews. Whether Paul or Luke or Apollos wrote the epistle matters not, we both believe God inspired its every word.

The test passage.

Our test passage is Num. xix. The whole chapter is devoted to the provision of the ashes of the heifer and its purpose. "Hyssop", referred to so impressively in Psa. li. 7, is found in the prescription. The A.V. tells us that these ashes were to be kept to make a water of separation, further explained as "a purification for sin" (xix. 9). This is supposed to be a lawless translation. Coming to the application of this water we read:--

> "He that toucheth the dead body of any man shall be unclean seven days; he shall purify himself with it on the third day . . . . . Whosoever . . . . . purifieth not himself, defileth the tabernacle of the Lord . . . . . he shall be unclean" (Num. xix. 11-13).

The word "unclean" is not in dispute; the word "purify" is. Heb. ix. 13, 14 refers to this passage, and we give the translation as found in the Concordant Version.

The Oracle of God.

> "For if the blood of he-goats and of bulls and the ashes of a heifer, sprinkling the contaminated, is hallowing to the cleanness of the flesh, how much rather shall the blood of Christ, Who through the eonian spirit offers Himself flawless to God, be cleansing your conscience from dead works" (Heb. ix. 13, 14).

The notes at the side of the translation in the Concordant Version read:--

"13. This refers to the two great sin-offerings of Lev. 16 and Num. 19. The victim was burned, the ashes preserved, and water that flowed over them availed to purify. This ordinance fills an important place in Israel's future as well as its past" (Ezek. 36:25).

According to this comment, the ashes of the heifer did "avail to PURIFY", and according to Ezek. xxxvi. 25 avails to "cleanse". So far this but confirms the A.V. But the notes in this version, like all other human products, may be challenged. Not so the actual passage from Heb. ix. quoted above. The effect of the sprinkling of the unclean:--

> "Sanctities or hallows to the purifying of the flesh" (Heb. ix. 13).

The Septuagint of Num. xix. uses the verb hagnizo "to purify", to translate chata which is very parallel with Heb. ix. 13, 14.

Hagiazo = "to hollow" or "to sanctify", occurs in Hebrews six times, viz., ii. 11, ix. 13, x. 10, 14, 29, xiii. 12. Other derived words translated "holy", "holiness", &c., occur many more times. This is the word which God uses in Heb. ix. 13 to translate the Hebrew word chata in Num. xix. We maintain that "sanctify" is the opposite of "sin". Here we have something more solid than deductions from man-made laws of language; we have the impregnable rock of Holy Scripture.

The only question open to us now is concerning our attitude of heart towards the Word of God. The inspired writer of Hebrews sets his seal upon the A.V. rendering of chata. To say that the rendering "purify" is a sin of translation is to say that to "sanctify" is even more a sin. Until it can be proved that Heb. ix. 13, 14 is not dealing with Num. xix., or that hagiazo means an intensive form of sin, or that hagiazo is not God's own translation of the Hebrew Piel form of chata=sin, or that "to sanctify" is not the extreme "opposite" of "to sin" (which is our contention), the argument is closed. To debate the subject further would be but to magnify human "deductions" and "laws" against the Word of God, a debate we decline.

"To sanctify" gathers up the words "cleanse", "purify", "make reconciliation" which are found in the A.V. Old Testament. Here then we reach a simple issue:--

(1). The Piel form of chata = "sin" should be translated "purify", "cleanse", "make reconciliation", "sanctify". This is our position.
(2). "The Piel form of sin IS NOT PURIFY, BUT MAKE SIN." This is the teaching that we have criticized and which we repudiate, for it is an unqualified denial of Heb. ix. 13, 14.

For our position we have the solid ground of the Word of God as given in Heb. ix. 13. For the other position we have the quicksand of human deductions and laws. As this teaching must be held in spite of the express statement of Heb. ix. 13, we have nothing more to do than to repudiate it. We make no aspersions, we do not pretend to analyse the intentions of others, that is not our office.

The fact that we turned from the Greek word "sin" to the Hebrew apparently had the appearance of "policy". It was the outworking of a "principle" adopted by us for some time. This, however, we must explain at some future time.

 p. 191
A Correction. ( The Acid Test).

We regret that a mistake occurred in the article on page 173 of the November issue, which we desire to rectify: instead of reading:--

"The ashes of the heifer . . . . . a purification for sin" (Num. xix. 9).

read:--

"He shall purify himself" (Num. xix. 19).

Verses 17-21 should be read together in order to see the context.

This correction is necessary owing to the limitation of the references to the Piel form. All the references quoted from Num. xix. are various forms of the one Hebrew word chata, and must be read together.

The First Epistle to Timothy.

#2. (Continued from Volume XIV, page 80).
pp. 14, 15

There are one or two objections to the later date suggested for I Timothy which it will be wise to face.

1. Timothy's Youth.

"Let no man despise thy youth" (I Tim. iv. 12).

We do not know the age of Timothy when he first joined the apostle, but somewhere about 17 or 18 years of age is generally considered approximate. The date of Acts xvi. must be somewhere about A.D.50. If we therefore place I Timothy at A.D.64, Timothy would be about 32 years of age. Judging by modern standards we should not look upon Timothy as a youth, but judging according to the standard of Aulus Gellius, lib. x. c.28, where he cites Servius Tullius, Paul was well within bounds. The Roman's divisions of man's age were as follows:--

CHILDHOOD	1 year to 17 years.
YOUTH	17 years to 46 years.
OLD AGE	46 years to end of life.

Not only, therefore, was Timothy still a youth, but Paul could say of himself, "such an one as Paul the aged".

Further, when one considers the great responsibility of the high and difficult office to which Timothy had been called, involving the ordination of bishops and deacons, and the many duties that a growing church and a fast growing apostasy bring with them, a man of 32 years would, even to-day, be considered very young for the post. No serious objection to the later date of I Timothy can be found here.

2. Paul's statement in Acts xx. 25.

Paul said to the elders at Ephesus:--

> "I know that ye all . . . . . shall see my face no more."

It is objected, that if I Timothy had been written after this statement Paul could not have expressed the hope of revisiting Ephesus. We know upon other occasions the apostle had to revise his plans. He hoped to visit Spain, but we are not certain that he ever did so. II Cor. i. 15-24 shows his attitude in these things. He would rather be found changing his plans than running counter to the will of the Lord. We believe however that the apostle had no intention of revisiting Ephesus. He had devoted a long time to the church at Ephesus, and in writing to the saints at Colosse he speaks of those whose face in the flesh he had not then seen. It appears, from his letter to Philemon, that he hoped, upon his release from Rome, to pay a visit to Colosse, saying:--

> "But withal prepare me also a lodging for I trust through your prayers I shall be given to you" (verse 22).

If Paul could send for the elders of Ephesus to meet him at Miletus when he had a message of so great importance to give them, he could also send for Timothy to meet him at Colosse. Paul had also expressed a desire to revisit Philippi after his release, and writing to Titus he tells of his intention to winter at Nicopolis. These further items help us to understand that the apostle might well feel justified in omitting any further visit to Ephesus.

3. The Bishops and Deacons.

The fact that there were elders in the church when Paul met them at Miletus is no serious objection to the later date of I Timothy, for surely as the years passed and the church increased, fresh elders would be needed, and the rapid increase of false teachers would demand just that supervision that is indicated in the epistle.

(To be continued).

#3. pp. 30, 31

The reader has already remarked the way in which the epistles group themselves by reason of verbal peculiarities. Thus a comparison of Galatians with Romans would indicate that these two epistles belonged to the same dispensation. The parallel between Ephesians and Colossians is pronounced and needs no emphasis from our pen.

When we come to consider the verbal peculiarities of the epistles to Timothy and Titus, we find that these three epistles are thereby manifested to be one group. Now the fact that II Timothy was written in view of the apostle's own death places it beyond the close of the Acts, and the verbal links with I Tim. and Titus necessarily place those epistles beyond Acts xxviii. also. Let us look at some of the words that are peculiar to these epistles.

Anosios (I Tim. i. 9 and II Tim. iii. 2, and nowhere else in the N.T.).—The A.V. translates it "profane" and "unholy". The word links the strong warnings of I Tim. with the prophetic forecast of the great apostasy at the end of the dispensation.

Astocheo (I Tim. i. 6; vi. 21; II Tim. ii. 18, and nowhere else in the N.T.).—The A.V. translates "to turn aside", "to err". The first epistle connects this turning aside with "vain jangling" and "vain babblings", the second with the "vain babblings" of those who taught erroneous views concerning the resurrection. In I Tim. the swerving is connected with the "faith"; in II Tim. with the "truth", words which are brought together more than once in these epistles.

Diabolos (I Tim. iii. 11 and II Tim. iii. 3).—This word occurs many times throughout the N.T. with the usual meaning "Devil" but in the two passages instanced it is used of men with the meaning "slanderers". In perfect harmony with this peculiarity is Tit. ii. 3, where the one occurrence of the word is used of "the aged women" that they be not "false accusers".

Epophaneia (I Tim. vi. 14; II Tim. i. 10; iv. 8; Tit. ii. 13).—With the exception of II Thess. ii. 8 (which is not strictly parallel) this word is peculiar to these three epistles. It is used by the apostle to express the hope of the church subsequent to Acts xxviii., when the "hope of Israel" expressed in the word "parousia" was temporarily set aside with the closing of the dispensation.

Eusebeia, eusebeo, eusebos (I Tim. ii. 2; iii. 16; iv. 7, 8; vi. 3, 5, 6, 11; II Tim. iii. 5; Titus i. 1; I Tim. v. 4; II Tim. iii. 12; Titus ii. 12).—These words occur 13 times in these epistles. They are focused for us in that wonderful revelation of I Tim. iii. 16, "The mystery of godliness". The subject is too vast for a note in this review, but a consideration of the question of the true reading of this passage will be given separately.

Zetesis (I Tim. i. 4; vi. 4; II Tim. ii. 23; Titus iii. 9. No other occurrence in Paul's writings).—The word is rendered "questions". The contexts reveal the state of affairs that obtained, and which in some measure drew forth these epistles. Titus iii. 9 is a good summary:--

> "But avoid foolish questions and genealogies, and contentions and strivings about the law: for they are unprofitable and vain."

#3. (Concluded from page 31).
pp. 59, 60

Muthos (I Tim. i. 4; iv. 7; II Tim. iv. 4; Titus i. 14. The only other occurrence is II Pet. i. 16).—The word is translated "fables". The context in each case sets these "fables" over against "the truth", and that as specially taught by the apostle.

Pistos ho logos (I Tim. i. 15; iii. 1; iv. 9; II Tim. ii. 11; Titus iii. 8).—This expression is peculiar to these epistles. It is rendered "a faithful saying", and "a true saying", and links these three epistles together by its peculiar usage.

Sophron and its derivatives (I Tim. ii. 9, 15; iii. 2; II Tim. i. 7; Titus i. 8; ii. 2, 4, 5, 6, 12).—One of the words sophroneo is used by Paul elsewhere, once in Romans and once in II Cor.; the remaining ten occurrences are found only in these three pastoral epistles. The words are rendered "sober", "sobriety", "sound mind", "discreet", "sober minded", "soberly". Surely there must have existed some special reason, common to all three epistles, to call for this strong emphasis?

Hugies and hugiaino as applied to doctrine (I Tim. i. 10; vi. 3; II Tim. i. 13; iv. 3; Titus i. 9, 13; ii. 1, 2, 8).—The words are translated "sound", "wholesome". The necessity for sound doctrine and example which he calls a "pattern", or a "form".

Hupotuposis (I Tim. i. 16 and II Tim. i. 13).—We have with the last exception given a list of words that are found in the three epistles. Those which are peculiar to I Tim. and Titus will not be of service in fixing their date so much as those which link them together with Paul's last epistle, II Timothy.

If the reader will meditate upon the words given above and if he is open to any argument that may be derived from peculiarities of diction and vocabulary, he will scarcely be able to avoid the conclusion that the three pastoral epistles are closely connected in theme and time of writing, and must therefore be placed after the three prison epistles, viz., Ephesians, Philippians and Colossians.

In order to complete our examination of the verbal connections that exist between the two epistles to Timothy, we give the following supplementary list of words which occur only in these two epistles, but not in Titus:-- BEBELOS (I Tim. i. 9; iv. 7; vi. 20; II Tim. ii. 16; only other occurrence, Heb. xii. 16).—Profane.

EKTREPOMAI (I Tim. i. 6; v. 15; vi. 20; II Tim. iv. 4; only other occurrence, Heb. xii. 13).—To turn aside, turn away, avoid.
KENOPHONIA (I Tim. vi. 20; II Tim. ii. 16).—Vain babblings.
LAGOMACHEO (or IA) (I Tim. vi. 4; II Tim. ii. 14).—Striving, or strife about words.
PAGIS TOU DIABOLOU (I Tim. iii. 7; II Tim. ii. 26).—Snare of the devil.
PARAKATATHEKE (I Tim. vi. 20; II Tim. i. 14).—Committed.
PARAKOLOUTHEO (I Tim. iv. 6; II Tim. iii. 10).—To attain, to fully know.
TUPHOOMAI (I Tim. iii. 6; vi. 4; II Tim. iii. 4).—To be lifted up, proud, highminded.
XALIS, ELLEOS, EIRENE (I Tim. i. 2; II Tim. i. 2).—Grace, mercy, peace, in salutation. Omitted in best texts of Titus.

We cannot help giving expression to the belief we hold that there is a far more important and worthy lesson to be learned from this list of peculiar words than the mere proof of the period when these two epistles were written, but that is a theme which must be held over for a future study.

It is however important to keep in mind the evidences which these epistles contain concerning their oneness of dispensational setting, even though, when we note not only their parallels but their differences, we see how rapidly the corporate manifestation of the truth degenerated, and rule gave place to ruin, collective testimony to individual faithfulness.

Words in Season.

Dispensational problems are not to the fore in this series. We address ourselves rather to those elementary problems of doctrine and practice that present themselves to those who have started the pilgrim pathway. It will not be possible to avoid controversial topics entirely, otherwise hardly a single teaching of Scripture would be left to us. In order to avoid misunderstanding, let us say that "A" does not represent any particular individual, but we trust that should the case be applicable to any reader at any time, such applicability will be accepted as indicating a "word in season".

#1. Faith.
Faith says Amen to God.
pp. 97 - 99

A.—I do not wish you to think that I question the truth of Scripture or the power of God, but I am somewhat mystified by the many kinds of "faith" that are spoken of in theological writings. I read of "historic faith", and "saving faith" and other descriptions of faith, but I do not seem to have a clear and simple conception as to what faith really is.

B.—In the first place I think you will find that Scripture stresses the thought of what we are to believe, rather than discusses how we believe, although it does speak of that too.

Without attempting to justify or explain the following statement, I have come to the conclusion that the language of revelation and of doctrine is not primarily N.T Greek, but O.T Hebrew, and that it is dangerous to build up a theory upon the etymology of Greek words without continually checking it by the Hebrew equivalent. We may look into this matter upon some future occasion.

A.—I do not pretend to understand your meaning, do you propose answering my question from the O.T.?

B.—While it would be manifestly absurd to ignore the teaching of the N.T. upon such a subject as faith, yet the primary significance of the term may be discovered in the Hebrew word that is employed in the O.T. Will you tell me where the word "believe" first occurs in the O.T.?

A.—(Using a concordance).—I find the first occurrence to be Gen. xv. 6:--

> "And he believed in the Lord; and He counted it to him for righteousness."

B.—What is the Hebrew word there translated "believe"?

A.—It is aman.

B.—As you do not know a letter of Hebrew, will you say for the encouragement of others how you can so readily reply?

A.—Most gladly. I am using Young's Analytical Concordance, which not only gives the English word, but places it under its corresponding Hebrew or Greek word, enabling one to keep differing words distinct.

B.—Will you now turn to the word "faith" and tell me how it is used in the O.T. and what Hebrew words are used?

A.—The word occurs but twice, viz., Deut. xxxii. 20 and Hab. ii. 4:--

> "Children in whom is no faith" (Heb. emun).
> "The just shall live by his faith" (Heb. emunah).

I notice moreover that "faithful" is the rendering of emun, emunah, aman or emeth, and that with the exception of Psa. v. 9 every occurrence of "faith" and "believe" in the O.T. is a translation of aman or its cognates.

B.—The Hebrew word "amen" has passed over into the English language, and it is used to endorse a prayer, or to express one's complete agreement with whatever has been affirmed. The words of John iii. 33 may be taken as a practical comment on the Hebrew word for faith:--

> "He that received His testimony hath set his seal that God is true."

The simple conception of faith suggested by the words used in the O.T. may be expressed in some such way as this, "Faith says amen to anything that God has said". Whatever the doctrine or the practice that may be the subject at the time, faith bows the head and says, "That is true". Of course I do no pretend that such a statement either exhausts the subject or takes in every point of view, but this simple primary definition will bring comfort where philosophy may bring distraction.

A.—If your suggestion is that when Abraham believed in the Lord he just bowed his head with a humble "amen", I see this echoed in the words of Rom. iv. 20, 21:--

> "He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that, what He had promised, He was able also to perform."

It is certainly very simple and rids the subject of a great deal that does not properly belong to it.

I should appreciate a few words on the question of "how" we believe, at some future time.

#2. Faith.
Faith is the crediting of a Testimony.
pp. 133 - 135

A.—Your suggestion made to me some time ago that the O.T. conception of faith could be expressed in some such way as: "Saying Amen to all that God has said", is certainly simple, but to my mind does not seem impressive enough.

B.—I do not mean to teach that such a statement exhausts the meaning of faith, but I do believe that it lies very near the foundation.

A.—It seems to me that if man is dead to everything spiritual until the Lord gives him life and light, then faith must be something more miraculous and wonderful than your suggestion would lead us to suppose.

B.—Yet, after all, for a man spiritually dead and at enmity with God and His truth to turn and believe is something very marvelous. On the other hand the Scripture does not seem to turn our attention so much to the metaphysical side of the question of faith, but lays before us a more matter of fact and everyday presentation of it. Would you cease to breathe because you could not satisfactorily resolve the problem as to which comes first, life or breathing? Why disturb your mind with unprofitable speculations?

Let us see how faith is used in the Scripture. Think of the well known words of Isa. liii. 1, "Who hath believed our report?" You know what it is to believe, or give credit to, a testimony or a report, well this aspect of faith is one that is found in Scripture. This passage from Isa. liii. 1 is quoted by Paul in Rom. x. where one or two further thoughts on the nature of faith are to be found. Will you turn to Rom. x. and tell me what you discover?

A.—(Reads the passage silently).—The first thing that strikes me upon reading this chapter is this. Instead of saying, as I have rather thought, that faith is a matter of great height and depth, Paul quotes the words of Moses, saying:--

> "Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is, to bring Christ down from above), or, Who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead), but what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith which we preach" (Rom. x. 6-8).

B.—And moreover you will see that even though faith is said to be "in the heart", yet it is connected with the preaching of the word in such a way as to be to all outward appearance the believing of a report. You will see that while the believing of a testimony given by accredited messengers is stressed, the more secret and supernatural phase, which has evidently perplexed you, is passed over without reference. Perhaps you will read the passage.

A.—(Reads).—

> "How then shall they call on Him in Whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in Him of Whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent? . . . . . So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God" (Rom. x. 14-17).

B.—You observe that there is no "still small voice" that is to be heard, but the word of God, as preached by one sent, and that the inference is that without the word to hear, there will be no faith.

A.—I must admit, so far as this passage goes, that it is so, yet I feel a little disappointed over the discovery.

B.—Are you not a little Naaman the Syrian who would gladly have done some great or spectacular thing, but despised the simple process ordained by God for his cleansing. Turn to I John v. 9-11 and see how the apostle speaks of faith. You might, when you read, observe that "witness", "record" and "testify" are one and the same.

A.—(Reads).—

> "If the testimony of men we receive, the testimony of God is greater. For this is the testimony of God that He has testified concerning His Son. (He that believes on the Son of God has the testimony in himself; he that does not believe God has made Him a liar; because he has not believed in the testimony which God has testified concerning His Son). And this is the testimony, that God has given to us aionian life, and this life is in His Son."

B.—The continual iteration of testimony and testify undoubtedly is not such good English as the variation introduced by the A.V., but its insistence is striking and beyond dispute. Faith, here, is belief in a testimony, that testimony being given by God and concerning His Son. To believe that testimony is equivalent to believing "God" (verse 10), the One Who gives the testimony, and believing on the Son, the One concerning Whom God has testified (verses 9 and 10).

Moreover, the inspired apostle has no scruple in comparing the testimony given by God with that of man, simply urging that if we give credence to sinful men upon slight evidence, the demand upon us for giving equal credence to the testimony of God is "greater". And further unbelief makes God a liar, which is the practical reverse to saying Amen to all that God has said.

A.—I see very clearly that my view of faith would never have allowed the argument from men that is used in verse 9, and that the emphasis upon believing a testimony is very strong indeed. I confess that the subject is clearer and simpler and makes faith and belief the more to me than I could have credited. Perhaps we shall have an opportunity of looking at the subject from another angle.

#3. Faith.
"Historic" and "Saving" Faith.
pp. 156 - 158

A.—While I admit that there is much more in the Word as to faith being the belief of a testimony than I had thought, yet I am conscious that there is something not quite satisfactory to my mind. You will remember that James says:--

> "Thou believest that there is one God: thou doest well; the demons also believe, and tremble" (James ii. 19).

This is what I call "historic faith" as distinct from "saving faith". Yet "faith that believes a testimony" is historic faith, and I am therefore left rather perplexed.

B.—Your perplexity arises out of confusing things that differ. For the moment let us step outside the scope of Scripture and use some everyday illustration. We both believe the testimony of historians as to the date of the Norman Conquest—"1066 William the Conqueror". Do you call such belief "historic faith"?

A.—Yes, I should, and moreover it is a good illustration that "historic faith" differs from "saving faith", for no one can be the better for believing "1066 William the Conqueror".

B.—Let us try again. Demons believe that there is one God, some men do the same, but that belief saves neither demons nor men. Why is this?

A.—I cannot quite see.

B.—Well, I think the most obvious reason is that nowhere in Scripture does salvation depend upon believing that there is one God. It is not the "faith" but the object of faith that makes the difference. If I believe that "Jesus died and rose again", that is "historic faith", and you will remember that throughout the "Acts" and in many of the epistles evidences and witnesses are brought forward to prove that death and resurrection to be an historic fact. Now how is it that if I really believe that "Jesus died and rose again" such faith bring salvation, whereas believing another historic fact of Scripture, viz., "there is one God", does no such thing?

A.—Is there not more than mere history in the death and resurrection of Christ?

B.—There you touch upon the difference, though possibly you do not mean just what I see. When I believe the historic fact that "Jesus died and rose again", it is impossible to believe that and to deny that when He died He died for our sins, or that when He rose He rose because of our justifying. So far as the "faith" is concerned there is no difference, but so far as the subject of faith is concerned there is.

No gospel of salvation attaches to "1066 William the Conqueror", therefore though my faith in the accuracy of that date leaves nothing to be desired, it produces nothing. Salvation from sin and death was the very purpose of the death and resurrection of the Son of God, and it is quite impossible for anyone to believe the historic fact of the death and resurrection and deny the purpose and the results of that death and resurrection. This it is that makes "historic faith" "saving faith", and not anything attaching to faith itself.

A.—Do we not read that the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit, for they are foolishness unto him? Does not this statement overturn yours?

B.—Whether it is within the power of natural man to overcome the bias and enmity of his unregenerate heart is one thing, and whether the faith exercised in believing the testimony of God which is said to be "greater than the testimony of man" is different in its nature from believing any accredited testimony is another.

A.—I think I begin to see where we have differed. You do not deny the inability of the natural man to believe God, you agree that apart from grace he never will, but what you do deny is that when by grace a man does believe the testimony of God, it is only what any reasonable creature should have done long before.

B.—When Scripture affirms that the natural man cannot receive the things of God, it does not mean that the natural man cannot understand, read, hear, ponder or think, but that seeing that his understanding is darkened, his heart hardened, his intelligence subjected to *vanit*y, he can no more believe the testimony of God than he can perform the right acts that even his own conscience indicates. The very simplicity of faith is the severest condemnation of sin and natural man.

We must pursue the subject further, however, so that we may obtain an all-round view of this important subject.

a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth"

DEAR FELLOW-MEMBERS,

The contemplation of sixteen years' testimony brings mingled feelings, and we are increasingly conscious of two facts, viz., (i.) We have this treasure, (ii.) In earthen vessel.

It is good for us to remember both facts together at all times. A perusal of the subject matter of The Berean Expositor covering these sixteen years must convince the most prejudiced that "we have a treasure". The selfsame perusal will reveal to the most generous of critics the presence of an "earthen vessel". The elimination of error will not remove the evidence of the earthen vessel, for the context of II Cor. iv. 7 deals with the mortality as the honoured medium of resurrection life:--

"That the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of ourselves."

Through good report and evil report this witness has been sustained without elaborate organization. To all lovers of the Word of truth, "rightly divided", we earnestly commend this testimony.

Yours in the Unity of the Spirit,

Answers to Correspondents.
pp. 107 - 109

A.L. (Australia) writes:--

(A).—"In one issue of The Berean Expositor you speak of 'an (1) election within an (2) election', and in The Companion Bible, App. 196(4) it says:--

> 'Christ's death upon the cross linked up again the connection with God. (1) For all who are the chosen subjects of His grace (Eph. i. 4), and (2) For all who will believe and consequently become subjects of His grace (Rom. x. 11-13).'

I presume both statements marked (1) refer to the mystery dispensation, while both marked (2) refer to the mystery form of the kingdom; if the latter statement is not correct, please enlighten us as to where the mysteries of the kingdom are fulfilled, and what is the position of organized Christianity as existing to-day, if it is not the mystery form of the kingdom."

The phrase, "an election within an election", is explained more fully than anywhere else in Dispensational Truth, page 271, particularly in its chapter sub-title, "Is membership of the one body co-extensive with salvation?" (see also pages 24-26 of our Pamphlet, "Tested Truth"). Our conclusion then and our present belief is that membership of the one body is not co-extensive with salvation. We believe that salvation is wider than either kingdom, bride or body, each of these being a peculiar calling within the larger one.

We cannot see how the words quoted can be compared with the note of The Companion Bible, for that confessedly deals with two classes, one elect, the other not elect, whereas we deal with two classes, one elect, and a narrowed circle within it. Class No.1 of The Companion Bible contains both (1) and (2) of our own. We do not believe the "whosoever will" period is yet in force, but that only those who are elect are at present being saved. Our question has not to do with those who come under the wider circle, but to consider whether at the present moment every saved man is ipso facto a member of the body. We do not believe that he is.

Organised Christianity is a term that means more or less according to the user. Disorganized Christianity is not ideal, nor is it necessarily spiritual. We believe, however, that you use the term to mean Christendom. If so, that is much like the world, a field in which tares and wheat both grow together until the harvest. The mysteries of the kingdom cover the entire field from the rejection of Christ until His second coming and so in some measure include both the good and the bad that fill the interval.

We are not quite happy about the expression "the mystery form of the kingdom", for these phrases may be fixing in the mind unscriptural conclusions. The Lord speaks of the "mysteries of the kingdom", and so should we. Personally, we have given up trying to place the outside church, feeling that our time is better employed in dealing with positive and present truth. We must avoid Peter's attitude, "Lord, what shall this man do?" (John xxi. 21). We agree with you that there is no Scriptural warrant to look for a collective corporate testimony to the truth of the mystery, but that it remains largely a matter of individual faith and love, with or without fellowship.

(B).—"Referring to Phil. iii. 11 exanastasis ek ton nekron, will this apply to the one body? If it only applies to the apostle Paul and those like him, where does the unity of the body come in?"

The difficulty lies in confusing "hope" with "prize". All the redeemed whatever their calling, will receive "life", but all will not "reign in life". We might repeat your question and say:--

> "If some only will receive the award of the inheritance where does the unity of the body come in?" (Col. iii. 24).

Ephesians is an exposition of "the hope of the calling"; Philippians is for those who seek to go on unto perfection, and expounds "the prize of the high calling". Even the human body itself is a unity of inequalities. Some members are far more precious or useful than others, yet all are needed to make the complete whole. Moreover we are not sure that the title the "body" is to be carried forward into the day of glory, it expresses the present relationship both of one to another and all to the Lord, but we believe when all is complete and in glory it will then be the "fullness", but that is another feature.

You raise another question also as to whether Paul himself believed that he was a member of the body, and whether he did not have a difficulty in adjusting his mind to the new teaching. His noble attitude to all past advantages when compared with "the excellency of the knowledge of Christ" (Phil. iii. 8) leaves no room for doubt, and the intense personal conviction that what he had received was a revelation could not live side by side with doubts and fears on the very same question.

You also ask why whether your expression "nothing the flesh could lay hold on" is justified when differentiating between the kingdom and the body. It is not. Before ever the church was called into being the Lord Himself said "the flesh profiteth nothing". Christendom, not the kingdom or the church, is the fleshly misinterpretation of spiritual things. There is nothing for the flesh to lay hold on in baptism or the Lord's supper as Scripturally taught. The church founded at Pentecost, at Antioch, or at Ephesus, are alike in one sense, they are not fleshly.

Your question as to what gospel may be preached to-day is answered, more fully than is possible here, in our pamphlet entitled, "Roman Stones for the Ephesian Temple".

Do not hesitate to send further enquiries. You but voice the difficulties of others, and the answers meet a general need. If at any time we do not know the answer to any question we shall not mind admitting the fact.

pp. 126, 127

B.F.C.A. (Cambridge) writes:--

> "Paul, in Col. i. 5 writes 'the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the gospel'. This is parallel to I Pet. i. 4, 5, 'An inheritance . . . . . reserved in heaven for you'. The word in Col. i. 5 is not epouraniois. It looks very much as if Paul here takes the old hope and definitely brings it over the Acts xxviii. boundary into the mystery dispensation."

Two features in the passage quoted from Col. i. 5 cause the difficulty expressed by our correspondent, the one, the use of ouranos and not epouraniois, the other, the words "ye heard before", which in another part of the letter our correspondent links with Col. i. 23. Our first concern must be to ascertain the way in which Paul uses ouranos = "heaven" in the prison epistles:--

"All things . . . . . in heaven . . . . . in earth" (Eph. i. 10).
"Every family in heaven and earth" (Eph. iii. 15).
"Far above all heavens" (Eph. iv. 10).
"Your Master also is in heaven" (Eph. vi. 9; Col. iv. 1).
"Our citizenship is in heaven" (Phil. iii. 20).
"The hope laid up in heaven" (Col. i. 5).
"All things . . . . . in heaven" (Col. i. 16-20).
"Every creature under heaven" (Col. i. 23).

By comparing the passages together that use the words "in heaven . . . . . in earth" we may settle the question as to whether ouranos = "heaven" includes epouraniois = "super heavens". Eph. iii. 10 definitely says that the principalities and powers are "in the super-heavens", while Col. i. 16 simply says that they are "in heaven". Like the term "the kingdom of God", the word "heaven" is all-embracive, and therefore we are under no necessity to think that Col. i. 5 refers to anything other than that previously set forth with such exactness in Ephesians. To introduce the hope entertained before Acts xxviii. is to introduce "the hope of Israel" (see Acts xxviii. 20). There is no possibility of holding more than "one hope", for that is stated without reserve in Eph. iv. 4. Moreover, the hope of Ephesians needed "the spirit of wisdom and revelation" for its unfolding (Eph. i. 17, 18), which is hardly necessary if it be something already known and revealed.

The second feature, "ye heard before", may now be considered. How had they heard before? "in the word of the truth of the gospel". This is so parallel to Eph. i. 13 that the reference is clearly to the same thing. There, in Eph. i. 12, 13, "the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation" is essentially associated with the peculiar word translated "first trusted", and which is literally "fore hoped", marking off this hope from that of the Acts period. "As I wrote before" (Eph. iii. 3) evidently refers no further back than to that crowning revelation of the mystery of Christ revealed in Eph. i. 20-23. "As ye heard before", need not refer back further than to that special ministry given "for the perfecting of the saints" that followed the making known of the mystery, of whom Epaphras appears to be one (Col. i. 7). Taking all things together the truth revealed in Ephesians concerning the unique calling and hope of the church of the mystery remains unaltered by the use of the wider term, or the reference back, of Col. i. 5.

> "Secondly, Paul explains (in Col. i. 27) 'the hope of the glory' as being CHRIST. He was of course the hope of all dispensations."

We hardly feel that this is sufficiently close to what Paul actually says in Col. i. 27 to leave it without comparing. What he says is:--

> "To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles, which is Christ among you, the hope of the glory."

It is not simply "Christ", but "Christ among you", the "you" of course being Gentiles. As the A.V. translates en followed by a plural "among" in one part of the verse, we are at liberty to repeat the translation in the corresponding part of the verse:--

A | The riches of the glory of this mystery.
B | Among the Gentiles.
B | Christ among you.
A | The hope of the glory.

The fact that now, independently of Israel or promises made unto the fathers, Christ was preached "among the Gentiles" was sure proof both of the riches of the glory of the mystery, and the hope of that glory. There is no word in this verse that can in any way bring over any part of the hope of Israel, or fuse the two revelations together.

We have not dealt with other features of your letter, as they only arise if what we have set forth should be proved unscriptural. We count it both a privilege and a responsibility to consider all possible objections to the position we have sought to maintain for the last seventeen years. So far we have but added proof and confirmation to the one great fact in the interpretation of the N.T., namely, that Acts xxviii. is the dispensational boundary, and that the prison epistles contain a unique revelation never before made known, and exactly suited to the present time, and known as "the dispensation of the mystery" (Eph. iii. 9, R.V.).

Fundamentals of Dispensational Truth.

#53. Saul and Agag. Mordecai and Haman. (I Sam. xiv. & Esther).

pp. 1 - 4

We have seen that because Amalek's hand was laid upon the throne of the Lord war was declared from generation to generation. Let us pursue this vital subject further. It will be remembered that after Saul had been king for some time, we read:--

> "So Saul took possession of the kingdom over Israel, and made war round about against all his enemies, against Moab, and against the sons of Ammon, and against Edom . . . . . and smote the Amalekites" (I Sam. xiv. 47, 48).

Following this general deliverance of Israel from their hereditary foes comes the more explicit command to:-- > "Smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not" (I Sam. xv. 3).

The story is well-known to us. Saul smote the Amalekites, but he took Agag the king of the Amalekites alive. Saul and the people also refused to destroy the best of the sheep and the oxen, and "all that was good".

The flesh, the old man, typified by Amalek, is too often spared to-day. In the sight of God there is "no good thing" in the flesh, but it is rare to find that believer who is so taught of God that he has reached the height of Phil. iii. and, making no comparison between the flesh cultured and the flesh manifestly depraved, repudiates it entirely and rejoices to stand beneath the Banner of the cross. Many who condemn Saul would be found sharing this "good" thing of the flesh. Too often we add to our sin by hypocrisy. Saul said:--

> "The people took of the spoil, sheep and oxen, the chief of the things which should have been utterly destroyed, TO SACRIFICE UNTO THE LORD thy God in Gilgal" (I Sam. xv. 21).

"In Gilgal"! The place where the reproach of Egypt was rolled away (Josh. v. 9), where the rite of circumcision which sets forth the repudiation of the flesh (Col. ii. 11) was solemnly carried out by all Israel before they set foot in the land of promise, there above all places would Saul offer the sacrifice of the flesh and dishonour the Lord. This was to go in the way of Cain. The very next thing that Samuel is instructed to do after this is to anoint David king (I Sam. xvi.). That the throne of the kings of Israel could be spoken of as "the throne of the Lord" I Chron. xxix. 23 makes clear:--

> "Then Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king instead of David his father."

The purpose of God foreshadowed in the earthly kingdom of Israel will be brought to a glorious conclusion by the Lord Jesus Christ. When He takes to Himself His great power and reigns, He will not rest until all enemies are abolished. There will be no sparing of Amalek then. Those readers who have grasped the significance of the two seeds (see Volume XIII, page 52 and the pamphlet "The Reconciliation of All Things") will perceive it in operation here, for Amalek though descended from Abraham was not counted as the seed, for that line came through Isaac and Jacob, whereas Amalek descended from Esau.

Mordecai and Haman.

One other occasion is given in Scripture to show the character of Amalek and to foreshadow the end. The book of Esther records that Haman was advanced by the king above all the princes that were with him, and that all the king's servants bowed down before him. It further says that "Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence" (Esther iii. 2). Why was this?

> "Haman was the son of Hammedatha the AGAGITE" (Esther iii. 1).

Haman was the descendant of one of the Amalekite kings, and Josephus (Ant. Xi. 6, 5) calls him an Amalekite. What was this man's attitude towards Israel?

> "Haman sought to destroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus" (Esther iii. 6).

As a result of Esther's noble intervention, Haman the Agagite is first compelled to do honour to Mordecai, and then to suffer the fate upon his own gallows that he had planned for the Jew. We cannot say that Haman was a descendant of that Agag who was spared by Saul, but typically we can see that in the sparing of one Amalekite in the early days of Israel's kingdom, Saul jeopardized the whole nation under the reign of Ahasuerus. So must it be with the flesh.

> "He that soweth to his flesh shall of his flesh reap corruption" (Gal. vi. 8).
> "Because the minding of the flesh is enmity against God" (Rom. viii. 7).

It certainly is extremely suggestive to read the genealogy of Mordecai in Esther ii. 5:--

> "Now in Shushan the palace there was a certain Jew, whose name was Mordecai, the son of Jair, the son of Shimei, the son of Kish, a Benjaminite."

Saul, who so signally failed concerning Agag, is of the same line as Mordecai who so signally succeeded. Both were of the line of Kish, a Benjaminite. Saul loses his kingdom, and David is sought out and anointed immediately after the failure of Saul concerning Agag. Mordecai, however, dispossess the Amalekite, and succeeds to his office:--

> "For Mordecai the Jew was next unto king Ahasuerus, and great among the Jews, and accepted of the multitude of his brethren, seeking the wealth of his people, and speaking peace to all his seed" (Esther x. 3).

This foreshadows the purpose of the Lord and the happy results that will follow the casting down of all opposition and the introduction of that perfect day when God will be all in all. The throne of God and the purposes connected therewith have been assailed. Satan is the arch rebel, and the principalities and powers directly under him are the Amalekties of the church of the one body. Just as Amalek barred the way towards the land of promise, so in the heavenly places are the opposing principalities and powers. There our conflict lies.

This conflict of the age is figured throughout Scripture under various titles. The Canaanites were to be utterly destroyed by the conquering Israelites. Each one may see in these ancient foes the sketch of his own. Each dispensation, too, has somewhat parallel marks. Blessed be God, Satan is to be overcome, and the words of Zech. xiv. 21 are to be understood in their fullest and highest sense:--

> "In that day there shall be no more Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts."

#54. A parenthesis and its lesson (Exod. xviii.).
pp. 26 - 29

The Companion Bible puts chapter xviii. into a parenthesis saying that the actual event occurred later, and quoting Deut. i. 7-14 says that Jethro's counsel was given and taken when Israel was ready to depart from Sinai. If this be true, then we must seek the lesson intended by the introduction of Jethro's coming and advice immediately following the conflict with Amalek. By nature we are apt to be extremists. Written in the fly-leaf of our Bible we have the following extract from the writings of Adolph Saphir:--

> "Men undertake to be spiritual, and they become ascetic; or endeavouring to hold a liberal view of the comforts and pleasures of society, they are soon buried in the world, and slaves to its fashions: or holding a scrupulous watch to keep out every particular sin, they become legal and fall out of liberty; or charmed with the noble and heavenly liberty, they run to negligible and irresponsible living; so the earnest become violent, the fervent fanatical and censorious, the gentle waver, the firm turn bigots, the liberal grow lax, the benevolent ostentatious."

The flesh profiteth nothing. It can find no place in the service of God. We should repudiate it and all its works. Let us, however, not fall into the error of confounding the flesh with the physical, or of believing that God's service entirely suspends all creature co-operation. We find in Exod. xvii. and xviii., much as they differ, that they have one item in common, viz., the overtaxed servant Moses, and the provision for his support and relief.

A seat and a stay.

Israel's victory hinged upon the uplifted hands of Moses:--

> "And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed; and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed" (Exod. xvii. 11).

We read, however, that "Moses' hands were heavy". The hands of Moses, under God, were hands of power. The rod he held aloft commanded the very forces of nature, yet what miracle was wrought to sustain the weary servant of God upon whose continued intercession so much depended? Some one gave him a seat!:--

> "And they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon" (Exod. xvii. 12).

What Divine provision was there made to keep Moses' hands upheld?:--

> "And Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun" (Exod. xvii. 12).

While these three together may represent the perfect intercession of prophet (Moses), priest (Aaron), and king (Hur), for Hur was of Judah (I Chron. ii.), the lesson for us is rather the humbler one of the place of fellowship in the service of God. It is this truth that reappears in chapter xviii.:--

> "And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses sat to judge the people: and the people stood by Moses from morning until evening" ("even until evening" some MSS read) (verse 13).

It was bad for both Moses and the people; it was bad for the ministry of the truth, and it was an unnecessary martyrdom. Jethro saw this, and said:--

> "Why sittest thou thyself alone . . . . . Thou wilt surely wear away, both thou, and this people that is with thee; for this thing is too heavy for thee; thou art not able to perform it thyself alone" (verses 14 and 18). (The LXX reads, "thou wilt wear away with intolerable weariness").

Now it may be that the time will come when we shall have to face the same conditions as closed round the last years of Paul, and if so, grace will be given to yield, no, not for an hour, that strength will be given to finish the course and fight the good fight. We are not, however, called upon to invite persecution or to invent a martyr's conditions, otherwise the service we have in heart and hand will suffer, for "thou art not able to perform it", and those to whom we minister will suffer too, "both thou and this people with thee". Moses, great leader as he was, was a meek man: the counsel of Jethro commended itself to him:--

> "Be thou for the people to Godward . . . . . teach them . . . . . shew them the way and the work" (Exod. xviii. 19, 20).

The lesser duties that could be undertaken by other men should be undertaken, or the work would otherwise suffer, and so Jethro counseled that Moses should provide able men who feared God, men of truth, hating covetousness, and that these should be placed over thousands, fifties and tens, thus simplifying the labour and preventing trifles from interfering with the main work.

The warfare and the warfare of God's people necessitates fellowship. It would have been a display of the flesh had Moses refused the stone as a seat or the loving support of Aaron and Hur. It would have been the work of the flesh had Moses chosen rather to wreck the ministry he had received for the apparently high quality of independence. There were circumstances wherein Paul was justified in saying, "it were better for me to die" than to receive fellowship (I Cor. ix. 15), but to take this as a general rule would be harmful and foolish. The church at Philippi were ever in close touch with the apostle and his needs:--

> "In as much as both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the gospel, ye all are partakers of my grace" (Phil. i. 7).

This he called their "fellowship in the gospel from the first day" (i. 5). We see how practical this fellowship was by turning to Phil. iv. 15:--

> "Now ye Philippians know also, that in the beginning of the gospel (as i. 5) . . . . . no church communicated koinoo (in i. 5 it is koinonia) with me as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only."

The burden and the blessing.

We are joyfully to expect our duties to increase, and be ready to respond to the growing need. Moses did not for one moment regret the multiplying of Israel which added to his burden; he rejoiced in it, but he accepted Jethro's counsel to meet the situation:--

> "And I spake unto you at that time, saying, I am not able to bear you myself alone. The Lord your God hath multiplied you, and, behold, ye are this day as the stars of heaven for multitude (The Lord God of your fathers make you a thousand times so many more as ye are, and bless you, as He hath promised you!) How can I myself bear your cumbrance, and your burden, and your strife?" (Deut. i. 9-12).

There came a moment in the early church when the apostles had to decide whether they were justified in leaving the ministry of the word of God and prayer, or whether, following the lines of Exod. xviii., the time had not come to look out men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom they could appoint over the business that was intruding into the time and strength of the apostles (Acts vi. 1-4).

It is not the will of God that either His servants or their ministry should suffer through false sense of independence, neither is it His will that there should be any leaning upon the arm of the flesh or warring with its weapons. It is most certainly for our guidance and warning that the lesson of Exod. xvii. should be restated in Exod. xviii.

It may be that some will be called upon to spend and be spent in the service of the truth, but there is no merit in "wearing out with intolerable weariness" through missing the wise counsel of Jethro, or the simple sense of that unnamed child of Israel who provided a seat for the great mediator—Moses.

#56. The Covenant of Sinai (Exod. xx. - xxiv.)

pp. 97 - 107

NOTE.—This article should have preceded No.55 in June issue.

We have traced the Lord's dealings with Israel from their call in Abraham, and their deliverance from Egypt, to their arrival at the wilderness of Sinai (Exod. xix. 1). Sinai marks a crisis in the history of this people, and is of fundamental importance in their typical story. Israel are to show once and for all the utter inability of the flesh to enter into blessing by a covenant of works. This necessitates the new covenant with its better promises and its better sacrifices, which is the theme of the epistle to the Hebrews. "The law made nothing perfect."

In Exod. xix. 3, 8, and 20 we have three ascents of Sinai by Moses, culminating in the giving of the law. Three more ascents are recorded in Exod. xxiv. 9 - xxxii. 14, xxxii. 31-33 and xxxiv. 4-28, culminating in the building of the tabernacle, the ark receiving the tables of stone written the second time, and so bearing witness to Israel's failure and their need of Christ. There is therefore a distinct connection between the old and the new covenants as Jer. xxxi. 31-34 reveals.

The Old and the New Covenants.

> "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah" (Jer. xxxi. 31).

Let us observe how definite the Scripture is with regard to the covenanting parties. "The Lord" on the one hand, and "The house of Israel and the house of Judah" on the other. It is a covenant properly drawn up, and not one who is not of the house of Israel or Judah, or who cannot show full Scriptural warrant for being reckoned with such, can have part or lot in it. Rom. xi. reveals the method whereby some believing Gentiles came within the bounds of the new covenant. They are spoken of as wild olive branches grafted into the true olive, and, with the branches that remained unbroken, "partaking of the root and fatness of the olive tree" (Rom. xi. 17). Such is the widest extension of the bounds of this covenant. The moment Israel as a nation passed off the scene, that moment the new covenant and all pertaining to it was withdrawn, to be reserved until the day when:--

> "All Israel shall be saved . . . . . For this is MY COVENANT UNTO THEM" (Rom. xi. 26, 27).

We now proceed with the statement of Jer. xxxi.:--

> "Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt" (verse 32).

Here we see the close connection between the old covenant made at Sinai, and the new covenant to be made in the future. The reference to the Exodus from Egypt is important. Every year this deliverance was remembered by the observance of the feast of the passover. Israel remembered that old covenant in the very year that our Lord was crucified. It was at the passover that Christ instituted the memorial of another and greater exodus, by another and greater passover lamb, and established another and better covenant:--

> "They made ready the passover . . . . . and He took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, DRINK YE ALL of it; for this is My blood of the NEW COVENANT, which is shed for many for the remission of sins" (Matt. xxvi. 19-30).

The Lord's supper is a memorial feast exactly similar to the passover, but differing in this, that the Passover was a typical memorial connected with the old covenant, whereas the Lord's supper is connected with the new covenant. For Gentile believers to partake of this new covenant memorial while unassociated with Israel appears to us to be an unwarranted intrusion. Jer. xxxi. continues regarding the first covenant:--

> "Which My covenant they break, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord" (verse 32).

The LXX reads "I regarded them not" instead of "I was an husband unto them". This reading is followed by the N.T. quotation in Heb. viii. 9, which proves that this is the true interpretation. The Hebrew ba'al has two meanings (1) to be lord, master, or husband; (2) to disdain, reject, or disregard. The A.V. of Jer. xxxi. chose the wrong meaning. The inspired writer of "Hebrews" gives the true meaning. Israel broke the old covenant, and they were disdained, disregarded, all hope being henceforth centred in the Messiah:--

> "But this shall be the covenant that I shall make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put My law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts: and will be their God, and they shall be My people" (Jer. xxxi. 33)

It is impossible to read these words without remembering Paul's argument in II Cor. iii. and iv.:--

> "Written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stones, but in the fleshly tables of the heart . . . . . God . . . . . has made us able ministers of the NEW COVENANT" (II Cor. iii. 3-6).

The Corinthians were already instructed regarding their connection with the new covenant, as I Cor. xi. 25 will show. Here in the second epistle the apostle feels under the necessity to warn his children concerning Judaism that would lead them back to bondage. Therefore he institutes a comparison which it will be helpful to observe.

II Corinthians iii. & iv.
The old covenant.	The new covenant.
The letter that killeth (iii. 6).	The spirit that quickeneth (iii. 6).
The ministration of death (iii. 7, 8).	The ministration of the spirit (iii. 7, 8).
The ministration of condemnation (iii. 9).	The ministration of righteousness (iii. 9).
That which is done away (iii. 11).	That which remaineth (iii. 11).
Moses and Israel vailed (iii. 13-15).	The vail done away in Christ (iii. 13-15).
When Israel turn vail removed (iii. 16-18).	We all with unvailed face (iii. 16-18).
The glory of God in the face of Moses "done away" (iii. 7).	The light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ (iii. 6).

II Cor. iv. 3 needs a fuller explanation than we can give in this tabular form:--

> "But if indeed our gospel be vailed, by those things which are perishing they have been vailed."

The "perishing" things are the things of the old covenant which are said to be "done away" and "abolished". The god of this age uses the old covenant and ministration of death to vail the light of the glory of the gospel that shone in the face of Christ. One further word from Jer. xxxi. and then we must return to Exod. xix.:--

> "If these ordinances (see verse 35) depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a NATION before Me all the days" (Jer. xxxi. 36).

It is not possible to hold to the inspiration of Scripture and deny the national character of the new covenant. We do not wish to be aggressive or controversial, but in an article purporting to deal with fundamentals of dispensational truth we must perforce "use great plainness of speech", and we must state that we have no hesitation or diffidence with regard to our attitude concerning the observance of the Lord's supper as a member of that elect company called into favour during the time of Israel's rejection. Let us now turn to Exod. xix. and read the terms of the first covenant.

The terms of the First Covenant.

> "Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob, and tell the children of Israel; Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto Myself. Now therefore IF ye obey My voice indeed, and keep My covenant, THEN ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto Me above all people; for all the earth is Mine: And ye shall be unto Me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation. These are the words that thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel" (Exod. xix. 3-6).

Moses descended from the mount, called for the elders of the people, and laid before them the words commanded him. There was an unanimous acceptance of the conditions. "And all the people answered together, All that the Lord hath spoken will we do" (Exod. xix. 8). From this point on to chapter xxiii. 33 we have the preparation of the people, the descent of the Lord to Sinai, the giving of the ten commandments, and the judgments. Then Moses came once more to the people and told them all the words of the Lord and all the judgments, and once more all the people answered with one voice, "All the words which the Lord hath said will we do" (Exod. xxiv. 3).

The people having re-asserted their agreement, Moses next put the words of the Lord unto writing (Exod. xxiv. 4). He then built an altar on twelve pillars, one for each tribe, and caused sacrifices to be made. Half of the blood shed Moses reserved in basins. He then took the book of the covenant, and read it over in the audience of the people: and they again replied, "All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient" (Exod. xxiv. 7). Moses then took the blood and sprinkled it on the people, saying:--

> "Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words" (Exod. xxiv. 8).

A covenant instituted with such solemnity, framed with words of such weight and far reaching effect, demands a respectful study. We cannot hope to do more than point the way in articles such as these, but we earnestly trust that the reader will be stirred up to see something of the heights and depths of this revelation of the righteousness of God.

The Ten Words (Exod. xxxiv. 28 margin).

The ten commandments are pre-eminently the basis of the covenant:--

> "And the Lord said unto Moses, Write thou these words; for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel . . . . . And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments" (Exod. xxxiv. 27, 28).
>
> "He declared unto you His covenant, which He commanded you to perform, even ten commandments, and He wrote them upon two tables of stone" (Deut. iv. 13).

Let us summarize these ten commandments. There are quite a variety of ways in which the commandments have been divided and numbered, for it must be remembered that there is no numeration in the original. Some think that numbers I.-IV. belong to the first table and relate to God, and numbers V.-X. belong to the second table and relate to man. This would place number V. as "the first commandment with promise" at the head of the list, and remove the difficulty created by the apparent promise found in Exod. xx. 6. On the other hand "that thy days may be long upon the land" (verse 12) is the first definite promise in the covenant.

The Companion Bible draws attention to the fact that the first five commandments contain the title "The Lord thy God", but that no title or name of God appears in the second set. This seems to fall under the natural division of two sets of five, the one dealing with love to God, the other with love to neighbour. If this be accepted, the honouring of parents is placed upon the table devoted to the honouring of God, and demands serious thought.

The Covenant and the Commandments.

Each of the commandments are vital parts of the covenant, and in many cases passages may be found where this connection is definitely stated. On others it is clearly implied. We will not occupy space in printing the commandments, but the reader with Exod. xx. open before him may find some help by noting the following facts and particulars.

I. "No other God."—It is implied in the expressions, "Thy God", "I will be their God", "The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob", that there is a covenant relationship between the two parties named. This is established by such a passage as:-- > "Behold, I make a covenant . . . . . thou shalt worship no other god . . . . . lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land" (Exod. xxiv. 10, 14, 15).

II. "No graven image."—Had this command been observed by Israel, it alone would have made them a separate people on the earth, for idolatry and image worship was practically universal:--

> "Take heed unto yourselves, lest ye forget the covenant of the Lord your God, which He made with you, and make a graven image, or the likeness of anything . . . . . ." (Deut. iv. 23, 24).
>
> "Wherefore hath the Lord done this unto the land? . . . . . because they have forsaken the covenant of the Lord God of their fathers . . . . . FOR THEY WENT and served OTHER GODS" (Deut. xxix. 9-28).

III. The covenant Name.—When the Lord bade Moses hew two tables of stone in order that the words of the covenant might be written thereon, we read:--

> "And the Lord descended in the cloud, and stood with him there, and proclaimed the NAME of the Lord . . . . . and He said, Behold, I make a covenant" (Exod. xxxiv. 1-10).

The name here proclaimed is "The Lord God", and the title "The Lord thy God" occurs in each of the commandments on the first table. It is the covenant name, and therefore sacred and central.

IV. The sabbath.—The sabbath was a sign of the covenant:--

> "Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath . . . . . for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between Me and the children of Israel" (Exod. xxxi. 16, 17).

V. The honouring of parents.—The honour due to father and mother is a marked feature of the Old Testament, and it gains in importance when we see that this command finished the first table that deals with Israel's relation to God. We may the better understand the Lord's words in Matt. xv. 4-6 when we see the place of this fifth commandment. The Pharisees transgressed this commandment by their tradition. They taught that if a man declared that all his possessions were given to God, saying, "It is Corban, that is to say, a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me, he shall be free" (Mark vii. 11).

This the Lord condemned as transgressing the commandment of God. It is not possible to honour God by the dishonour of parents. Let us now notice the relation of the commandments the one to the other:--

A | I. No other gods before Me. "The land of Egypt."
B | II. No image or likeness. "Heaven", "earth", "water".
C | III. The Name.
B | IV. The Sabbath. "Heaven", "earth", "sea".
A | V. Father and mother. "The land the Lord giveth."

This arrangement not only shows the relation of the first and the fifth, but also shows how an intelligent observance of the sabbath was a preservative from idolatry. It would not be possible to bow down to images of things in heaven or earth if one remembered that in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is.

The Second Table.

VI. Thou shalt not kill.—Although the name of God is not mentioned in the second table, it becomes abundantly clear upon examination that a right conduct towards our neighbour is governed by, and is a reflection of, our conduct toward the Lord. "Thou shalt not kill" takes our mind back to Gen. ix. 6, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed, for in the image of God made He man". Murder aims at the heart of the purpose of creation, the destruction of the image of God on earth. Murder links man with Satan, who was a murderer from the beginning (John viii. 44), and with Cain, who was of that wicked one (I John iii. 12).

VII. Thou shalt not commit adultery.—If murder aims at destroying the image of God, adultery is calculated to corrupt the seed:--

> "Judah hath profaned the holiness of the Lord which He loved, and hath married the daughter of a strange god. The Lord will cut off the man that doeth this . . . . . the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously, yet she is thy consort, and the wife of thy covenant. Truly did He not make (the twain) one (flesh)? Yet had He the residue of the Spirit (and so could have made more than one wife for Adam). And wherefore one (emphatic)? Because He desired a SEED OF GOD" (Mal. ii. 11-15).

The discerning reader will perceive Gen. iii. and iv. in a clearer light by remembering the comment of Malachi. The universal association between immorality and idolatry throughout the Scriptures from Genesis to Revelation, the story of Gen. vi., the two attacks upon Sarah before Isaac's birth, the downfall of Solomon, the vehement protest of Nehemiah, these and similar examples reveal the place that adultery takes in the attack upon the purpose of the ages.

So vital is this relationship, that the Lord uses it as the most fitting figure of His covenant relationship with Israel. Their very land is to be called Beulah or "married", and the climax of revelation, apart from the mystery, is "the marriage of the Lamb", with its Satanic counterpart, "the whore" of Rev. xvii. and xviii. Even the members of the church of the one body may manifest the love of Christ and the church in their own married relationship (Eph. v.). Idolatry and adultery are convertible terms in the Scriptures.

If holiness is involved in the sin of adultery, righteousness is involved in the sin of stealing.

VIII. Thou shalt not steal.—Satan was a murderer from the beginning. Satan has sought down the ages to corrupt the true seed. Satan entered into Judas, who betrayed his Lord, and Scripture says Judas "was a thief" (John xii. 6). Malachi whose words we have quoted above says, "Will a man rob God?" (Mal. iii. 8).

The weights and measures of Israel were not beneath Divine legislation, for in them were set forth the equity and righteousness of the Lord. "Just balances, just weights, a just ephah and a just hin, shall ye have" (Lev. xix. 36), and this command is immediately followed by a reference to the Lord Who brought them "out of the land of Egypt". Deut. xxv. 15 puts the same truth in connection with the land of promise:--

> "Thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have, that thy days may be lengthened in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

Righteousness is the foundation of the throne of God, the basis of the covenant with Israel, the bed rock of the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, the lasting character of the new heavens and earth, "wherein dwelleth righteousness", when "the tabernacle of God will be with men and He will dwell with them". Any system of interpretation that juggles with good and evil, until at last their distinct difference is bedimmed, must stand condemned before the simple example of "the just weight and balance".

IX. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour.—Satan, the breaker of the commandments already cited, is also the arch-false witness. "He is a liar, and abode not in the truth." Eph. iv. 25 and 28 bring together two of the commands of this table:--

> "Wherefore putting away the lie, speak every man truth with his neighbour . . . . . Let him that stole steal no more."

Stealing transgresses righteousness, false witness transgresses truth. The new man of Eph. iv. created in righteousness and holiness of truth. If Satan entered into Judas the thief, he inspired Ananias; "Why hath Satan filled thy heart to lie?" (Acts v. 3). It appears from Zech. v. 3 that among the last phases of the curses of Babylon to the earth is the condoning of stealing and false swearing. The Hebrew word naked should be translated declare innocent or let off:--

"For every one that stealeth hath been let off (is written) on the one side according to it (the curse or the scroll), and everyone that sweareth (falsely) hath been let off (is written) on the other side according to it."

X. Thou shalt not covet.—It has been said that covetousness breaks all the commandments. It certainly breaks the first, for Mammon is its god. It breaks the second, for Col. iii. 5 calls a covetous man an idolator. We can well see how many if not all of the others can be sacrificed upon the altar of this idol. "This love of money is a root of all evil" (I Tim. vi. 10).

This brief survey enables us to perceive something of the depth of the terms of the covenant made by God, and entered into by Israel. Israel broke that covenant even before Moses could reach them with the two tables of stone. It is a feature of the utmost importance to remember that those broken tables of stone were re-written, and placed in the ark. This ark is called the ark of the covenant (Deut. x. 8), and the ark of the testimony (Exod. xxx. 6). Exod. xxxi. 18 tells us that the two tables of stone were the tables of testimony. Exod. xxxiv. 28 and 29 calls them both the "tables of the covenant", the "two tables of the testimony" and the "ten words".

The ark and the mercy seat together represent the perfect redemption of Christ. The new covenant does not set aside the ten commandments, but fulfils them. As we look through the epistles we find practically every one of the commandments re-stated with one exception, namely, the sabbath.

I.	No other God.	"To us there is but one God" (I Cor. viii. 6).
II.	Idolatry.	"Ye turned to God from idols" (I Thess. i. 9).
III.	The Name.	"That the name of the Lord be not blasphemed" (I Tim. vi. 1).
V.	Honour parents.	"The first commandment with promise" (Eph. vi. 2).
VI.	Not kill.	"Love . . . not as Cain who . . . slew his brother" (I John iii. 11, 12).
VII.	No adultery.	"Adulterers God will judge" (Heb. xiii. 4).
VIII.	Not steal.	"Let him that stole steal no more" (Eph. iv. 28).
IX.	Not false witness.	"Speak every man truth" (Eph. iv. 25).
X.	Not covet.	"No covetous man hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God" (Eph. v. 5).

The IVth commandment is the exception. During the Acts period Paul wrote to the Galatians, "Ye observe days . . . . . I am afraid of you" (Gal. iv. 10, 11). To the Romans he wrote, "One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind" (Rom. xiv. 5). After the Acts period Paul wrote to the Colossians, "Let no man judge you . . . . . in respect of the sabbath days, which are a shadow . . . . ." (Col. ii. 16, 17). These words could not have been written had the sabbath observance continues.

Exod. xxxi. 13 tells us that the sabbath is a sign between Israel and the Lord. Like the other sign, namely, circumcision (Rom. iv. 11), and the signs, namely, the miracles wrought during the earthly life of the Lord, and the Acts of the Apostles (I Cor. i. 22; xiv. 22), these together with the sabbath belonged to Israel, and cease with the setting aside of that nation. Let us conclude this survey of the ten commandments with the apostle's comment in Rom. xiii.:--

> "Owe no man anything, but to love one another; for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet, and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, viz., Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (Rom. xiii. 8, 9).

and with the Lord's words in Matt. xxii.:--

> "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets" (Matt. xxii. 37, 40).

#55. The application of the Ten Commandments as shown in the judgments of Exod. xxi. - xxiii.
pp. 86 - 92

We have seen in the "ten words" the great basis of the covenant made with Israel, and we are yet to see how the whole tabernacle and its services revolve around the ark, in which rested the tables of testimony, and the mercy seat which covered it. Before we turn our attention to the tabernacle it seems fitting that we should acquaint ourselves with the judgments that were added to the "ten words". It will be found upon examination that they unfold and apply the law given in the tables of stone. It will be remembered that the ten commandments divide the duties of Israel into two sets, five dealing with God and five dealing with man. The N.T. sums up the law and the prophets as love to God and love to neighbour.

The ten-fold exposition.

In Exod. xx. the covenant is given, and in Exod. xxiv. the covenant is ratified, and it will be seen that this covenant is concerned with:--

1. All the words of the Lord, i.e., the "ten words" of xx. 1-17.
2. All the judgments, i.e., those of xxi.-xxiii.

> "And Moses came and told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice, and said, All the words which the Lord hath said will we do" (Exod. xxiv. 3).

These "judgments" follow the arrangement of the ten commandments, namely, five sections are devoted to Israel's attitude to God, and five sections deal with Israel, or the Lord's attitude to man, one to another or to strangers.

Let us take a broad view of the whole section xx. 21 – xxiii. 33.

The ten-fold judgments.

A1 | xx. 21-26. GOD. His worship and idolatry.
B1 | xxi.-xxii. 17. MAN. Servitude, murder, stealing, negligence.

Here we have a five-fold alternation, corresponding to the two tables of stone. This amplification is not confined to Exodus. Psa. cxix. 122 reads, "Be surety for Thy servant for good, let not the proud oppress me". This verse is the subject of a Massoretic note* which draws attention to the fact that every verse in Psa. cxix. with the exception of verse 122 contains one of ten words, all of which refer to the commandments of God. These ten words are way, testimonies, precepts, commandment, word ('imrah), law, judgment, righteousness, statute, word (dabar). The one exception uses the word "surety" instead and points to the fact that the tabernacle with its offerings was appointed when Israel failed, and looks forward to the new covenant of which Christ Himself is "the surety for good".

The Judgments.

The word judgment (mishpat) is often translated "the manner of" as in xxi. 9, "He shall deal with her after the manner of daughters". The relation of the word to the service of God may be gathered from II Kings xvii. 26, "The nations which Thou hast removed, and placed in the cities of Samaria, know not the manner of the God of the land". The king of Assyria commands that one of the captive priests shall be sent to teach the new arrivals, and we read that he taught them "how they should fear the Lord" (verse 28). It was a sorry business however, for in verse 33 we read that "they feared the Lord, and served their own gods", which broke the very first words of the covenant (verses 34-41). These judgments therefore, given to supplement and expand the "ten words", show "the manner of the Lord", and His manner is "right":--

"Shall not the Judge (Shaphat) of all the earth do right?" (mishpat, Gen. xviii. 25).

Let us now see a little more in detail this righteous dealing between God and man.

[NOTE: * - These notes occur in the margin of the Hebrew Bible and have reference to the sacred text, with the intention that such information shall guard against any alteration or corruption of the original. For illustration see page 82 of Appendix to The Companion Bible.]

I. Servitude and freedom (Exod. xxi. 1-11).

In the case of the Hebrew male servant six years was the limit of his servitude, "in the seventh he shall go out free for nothing", the only exception being that in the event of the servant marrying a wife given by his master, and having children and not wishing to leave them, then he could voluntarily devote himself "for ever" to that master's service. That such servitude was not "slavery" can be gathered from the words, "If the servant shall plainly say, I love my master, my wife, and my children; I will not go out free". The question of the connection between the boring of the ear with the readings of Psalm xl. 6 and Heb. x. 5 has been dealt with at some length on pages 59-61 of this Volume.

In the case of the Hebrew maid servant particular regard is paid to the liability of abuse that awaits a lonely woman, and it is clearly stated that "she shall not go out as the menservants do". This kindly fatherly element in God's judgment, given in a day when woman were reckoned as cattle or household chattels, gives the lie to those who would bring down the law of Sinai to an imitation of that of Khammurabi or Babylon: "To sell her unto a strange master he shall have no power." This has reference to a betrothal made, but rejected. In the case of adding another wife, the feelings and status of the first wife are preserved:--

> "Her food, her raiment, and her duty of marriage, shall he not diminish . . . . . If he do not these three unto her, then shall she go out free without money."

II. Death penalty and refuge (Exod. xxi. 12-17).

Murder, the cursing of parents, and man-stealing were to be punished with death, without the option of sacrifice or fine. Manslaughter was provided with "a place to flee".

III. Recompense (Exod. xxi. 18-36).

In cases of striving, smiting and negligence a variety of instances of sinful acts done to another that could be put right by a payment for the loss of time, money, limb, etc., are given. For hurting an equal: "He shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed." For hurting a servant: "He is his money." Causing an abortion, without mischief following, must be paid for as the judges determine and the husband lays upon him. If mischief follow, then there must be "eye for eye, tooth for tooth", etc. This is further enforced in the setting free of a servant as a recompense for the loss of eye, or tooth.

Negligence to keep under control an ox that gores a person to death is compensated by the loss of the ox. If, however, the negligence be culpable, both ox and owner must be put to death. This also applies with modification to negligence that causes the death of ox or ass.

IV. Full restoration and a fine in addition (Exod. xxii. 1-17).

For stealing one ox he shall restore five. If a thief be smitten to death when caught in the act, it is quits. If he survives and have nothing, he shall be sold. If the theft be found, he shall restore double. Feeding cattle in another man's field and destroying crops through careless fire-lighting demands restitution. Those entrusted with goods must be responsible unto double the value. To entice a maid that is not betrothed must be recompensed either by marriage or dowry.

Such is a very imperfect summary of the first section xxi. 1 - xxii. 17. This is followed by a brief section (Exod. xxii. 18-20) dealing with the Godward side. 1. The witch. 2. The confusion of seed. 3. The sacrifice to any other god save the Lord. In each case the penalty is death. The section following (xxii. 21-28) is devoted to the question of vexing and afflicting strangers, widows, fatherless, and borrowers. Verses 29-31 emphasize the claims of God upon the first-fruits, first-born sons, and first-born of cattle; also that in the question of their food Israel were to be "holy men unto Me".

Exod. xxiii. 1-9 deals with false witness, unkindness, bribery, and oppression. Exod. xxiii. 10-19 with God's command concerning the sabbatical year, the sabbath day, and the three feasts in the year, namely, the feast of unleavened bread, the feast of harvest, and the feast of ingathering. Also that no leaven must be offered with the blood of sacrifice, neither must the fat remain till the morning. The following one little clause stands out alone:--

> "Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk" (Exod. xxiii. 19).

This humane stipulation was intended to restrain the more brutal instincts of man, much in the same way that the command concerning the bird and its young in Deut. xxii. 6, and the cow and its calf in Lev. xxii. 28.

Exod. xxiii. 20-25- promises the leadership and protection of the angel in whom is the name of the Lord upon the condition of obedience, and the angel is said to go before them and to bring them into the land of the Canaanites. A final warning is given concerning idolatry and an exhortation to serve the Lord. Then comes the last man-ward section, viz., Exod. xxiii. -25-33. This contains promises concerning bread and water, sickness, fruitfulness, and length of days. The clearing of the land of promise of the Canaanites, and of the beasts of the field, the boundaries of the land of promise, and the man-ward effect of any covenant made with either the Canaanites or their gods, such was the tenor of the covenant made with Israel. This is by no means all, for in subsequent books Moses reveals further expansions of the principles here set forth.

Judgment and mercy.

A superficial view of these laws has led to a great deal of misrepresentation. The God Who could think of the little kid, Who legislated for slaves, for fatherless, for strangers, cannot be either harsh or merciless. Many have objected to the severity of the law, “eye for eye, tooth for tooth”, when a closer acquaintance would lead them to magnify God for His mercy. The laws that were in force at the time when God gave the law to Moses reveal what a merciful advance is here made. Instead of an eye for an eye it would be a vendetta and perhaps many lives. This can be tested by reading what is called the Code of Khammurabi (the Amraphel of Gen. xiv. 1), and comparing the offences and penalties under the two legislations.

In the Sermon on the Mount the Lord reveals the deeper spirituality of the law. Moses does not only teach an eye for an eye, but he teaches (by implication and comparison with other laws) not many eyes for one, that is, Moses taught that justice should be tempered with mercy. The Lord Jesus does not contradict the law of Moses, but shows its legitimate “fulfillment”. The same is true regarding the murder that is incipient in heart hatred. We can well believe that had Israel been able to fulfil their promise to obey all the commandments of the Lord, they would have fulfilled their calling, and have been a great outstanding witness for truth in the earth.

Deuteronomy.

The title of the fifth book of Moses in the LXX is Deuteronomy, meaning “Second Law”, being taken from the LXX version of Deut. xvii. 18 where we read, “Then shall he write for himself this repetition of the law” (kai grapsee hauto deuteronion touto). This book of thirty-three chapters cannot be a mere repetition of the law given in Exodus, unless we mean “vain repetition”, for in very bulk it is eight times as large. It means therefore that just as the ten commandments were expanded in Exod. xxi.-xxiii., so they are more completely expanded as the times arrives for Israel to enter into the land. This is more easily seen when we realize that the whole book of Deuteronomy is occupied with a ten-fold address given by Moses, giving expansions, expositions, blessings and cursings of the Ten Words of Exod. xx.:--

> “And it came to pass in the fortieth year, in the eleventh month, on the first day of the month, that Moses spake unto the children of Israel, according unto all that the Lord had given him in commandment unto them” (Deut. i. 3).

The Ten Addresses in Deuteronomy.

Introduction.—A resume of Israel’s history from the time they commenced their journeyings unto the eve of the entry into Canaan (i.-iii.).

(I.) Deut. iv.—Baal Peor. No similitude or graven image.
Reference to the land in last verse.
(II.) Deut. v.—The Ten Words of the Covenant. Reference to the land in last verse.
(III.) Deut. vi. 1 - x. 11.—One God (vi. 4). No other gods (vi. 14).
The table of stone (x. 1-5). Reference to the land in last verse.
(IV.) Deut. x. 12 - xxvi. 19.—Blessing and cursing (xi. 26).
Laws governing all classes.
Reference in last verses to the land (15), and “holy people” (19).
(V.) Deut. xxvii., xxviii.—Cursing and blessing.
(VI.) Deut. xxix., xxx.—The covenant beside that of Horeb.
(VII.) Deut. xxxi. 2-6.—Joshua the leader. The Lord goes before and with them.

(VIII.) Deut. xxxii. 1-43.—The song, a witness against Israel if they break the covenant (xxxi. 19-21).
(IX.) Deut. xxxii. 46, 47.—"It is your life." Reference to the land in last verse.
(X.) Deut. xxxiii. 2-29.—Sinai, the law, the blessing of the twelve tribes. Reference to the land in last verse.

Throughout this repetition the terms of the original covenant are continually in mind, together with the effect upon Israel consequent upon obedience. A peculiar treasure, above all people, a kingdom of priests, a holy nation, the possession and enjoyment of the land.

The book of Revelation, to say nothing of the testimony of the Prophets, testifies to the fact that although Israel can never enter into their peculiar blessings upon the basis of the old covenant, by virtue of the new covenant all these blessings shall be theirs. This fact raises the question as to what is the position of the law. Is it set aside? Is it fulfilled vicariously? Will it be fulfilled? The true answer to the question, if it is to be established from Scripture, must of necessity take more space than a closing paragraph, and we therefore leave it until time and space afford the necessary opportunity. Meanwhile we trust that the fullness of those ten words which form the basis of the covenant with Israel have been the better appreciated by our study together, and the inability of man to keep them will but magnify that great justification which has been made ours freely by the grace of God through the redemption and propitiation of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

#57. The Tabernacle. A general survey (Exod. xxv. 1-9).
pp. 177 - 182

In tracing the history of Israel as a nation we start with redemption, the Passover deliverance from Egypt, where a fresh start was made. The Passover month became "a beginning of months" unto them. We have followed them through the waters of the Red Sea, which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned. None but the redeemed of the Lord can reach the other side alive. We have seen their trials and temptations, their first great battle with Amalek, and its spiritual teaching. We have seen them enter into covenant relationship with God, both book and people being sprinkled with blood; we have heard the words of the covenant given in solemn grandeur from Sinai, and we have reached that point in the development of their typical history that demands the tabernacle and its ritual.

In the articles under the heading of Redemption we have discussed the difference between redemption as the exodus, and the atonement as the eisodus, the one leading out and giving deliverance, the other leading in and giving acceptance and access. Therefore we will not stay over that phase now.

The present creation is described in Gen. i. & ii., and the record of that mighty work comprises 34 verses. The tabernacle is described in Exod. xxv.-xxxi. & xxxv.-xl., and the record comprises 457 verses. This disproportion can be explained only in the light of their relative importance, the understanding of the way into the presence of God being far more important than the understanding of the way in which He created heaven and earth. The new creation is so much greater than the present, as the finished temple the scaffolding erected for its building.

The shadow of heavenly things.

In Exod. xxv. 9, 10, xxvi. 30, xxvii. 8, and Numb. viii. 4 Moses is commanded to see that all things in the tabernacle are made after the pattern that was shown him in the mount, and this is repeated in Heb. viii. 5. In the latter passage the reason for this exactness is given:--

> "The example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle, for, See, saith He, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount."

Again, in Heb. ix. 23 the tabernacle is spoken of as "The pattern of things in the heavens". The holiest of all in the tabernacle was evidently a symbol of heaven, for we read:--

> "We have an high priest . . . . . in the heavens, a minister of . . . . . the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man" (Heb. viii. 1, 2).

It is called "a greater and more perfect tabernacle" in ix. 11, and the holy places made with hands are called "figures of the true", and the true is further defined as "heaven itself" in ix. 24. It is therefore a matter beyond controversy that the tabernacle and its offerings, its priests and its furniture, are intensely typical, and speak of heaven itself where Christ as the great high priest has for us entered.

"Of Thine own have we given Thee."

The whole of the material necessary for the construction of the tabernacle and its furniture was given willingly by the people of Israel:--

> "Every man that giveth it willingly with his heart" (Exod. xxv. 2).
> "And they came, every one whose heart stirred him up, and every one whose spirit made him willing" (Exod. xxxv. 21, 29)

The same element of wholehearted willingness entered into the preparation for the temple in David's day:--

> "Who then is willing to consecrate his service?"
> "Then the people rejoiced, for that day they offered willingly, because with perfect heart they offered willingly to the Lord" (I Chron. xxix. 5, 9).

The chapter also reveals the secret of this willing offering:--

> "All things come of Thee, and of Thine own have we given Thee."
> "All this store that we have prepared to build Thee an house for Thine holy name cometh of Thine hand, and is all Thine own" (I Chron. xxix. 14, 16).

These material things, such as silver and gold, were but the evident types of unseen realities that pertain to God. David's ascription of praise (I Chron. xxix. 11-13), punctuated by 14 "ands" (including "now" of verse 13, and so making 15 items), may be compared with the "pattern of things in the heavens" given in Exod. xxv. 3-7:--

The fifteen patterns. (Exod. xxv. 3-7).	The things themselves. (I Chron. xxix. 11-13).
1. Gold.	1. Greatness.
2. Silver.	2. Power.
3. Brass.	3. Glory.
4. Blue.	4. Victory.
5. Purple.	5. Majesty.
6. Scarlet.	6. All in H. and E. is Thine.
7. Linen.	7. Kingdom and headship.
8. Goats' hair.	8. Riches and honour.
9. Rams' skins.	9. Reign over all.
10. Badgers' skins.	10. Power.
11. Shittim wood.	11. Might.
12. Oil.	12. To make great.
13. Spices.	13. To give strength.
14. Onyx stones.	14. Thanks.
15. Stones (various).	15. Praise.

We do not intend to teach by these parallels that (1) gold represents greatness, or (8) goats' hair represents riches and honour. All we intend is to emphasize the spiritual value of these typical materials, and to take advantage of that characteristic of inspiration where even words are weighed and numbered. The same element of symbolism is discernible in the gifts brought by the wise men to the infant Christ "born Kings of the Jews", viz., "gold and frankincense and myrrh" (Matt. ii. 11).

The fifteen items enumerated in Exod. xxv. 3-7 retain the special number (5) that pervades the tabernacle. The outer court was 100 cubits wide, covering an area of 5,000 square cubits. The 60 pillars of this court multiply the tabernacle number (5) by the number of tribes (12). The pillars that held the curtains were 5 cubits apart and 5 cubits high; the whole of the outer curtain was divided into squares of 25 cubits. We will not pursue this further, but as we come to individual details we shall find five (5) dominating the whole structure. We are distinctly told in Psa. cv. that the offerings made by Israel for the tabernacle were brought from Egypt at the Exodus:--

> "He brought them forth also with silver and gold" (Psa. cv. 37).
> "They asked of the Egyptians jewels of silver and jewels of gold, and raiment" (Exod. xii. 35).

This was provided for in the covenant made with Abraham:--

> "And also that nation, whom they serve, will I judge, and afterward they shall come out with great substance" (Gen. xv. 14).

It practically amounted to deferred pay, the taskmaster being compelled at the end to disgorge the wage withheld. The same principle is seen in Isa. lx. 5, 11, 16, lxi. 6. That service and honour due to God, and which sin has diverted to itself, shall by virtue of redemption be taken from the usurper and willingly offered to the rightful Lord. The same may be said of the various ascriptions of praise found in the book of the Revelation, they are all so much of the Lord's due held back for a time by sin. When the day of glory arrives:--

> "The kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it" (Rev. xxi. 24).
> "Thy people shall offer themselves willingly in the day of Thy power" (Psa. cx. 3).

The first article of the tabernacle to be specified is the ark. This we will examine later, but first we had better obtain a general survey. The tabernacle itself was an oblong, 30 cubits in length, and 10 in the height and breadth. This was divided by a veil into two parts; the holy place being 20 cubits long, and the most holy, the holy of holies, being a perfect cube of 10 cubits length, breadth and depth. These are referred to in Heb. ix. 2, 6, 7 as the first and second tabernacle, respectively. In the first tabernacle stood the lampstand, the table of shewbread, and the altar of incense. In the holiest of all stood the ark and the mercy seat. None but the high priest was allowed to enter into the holiest of all.

The tabernacle itself was constructed of planks of shittim wood overlaid with gold, which planks were placed upon silver sockets and fastened together by long rods. Inside the tabernacle were woven tapestries containing embroidered cherubim, and outside the tabernacle were successive layers of curtains of goats' hair, rams' skins dyed red, and badgers' skins. Before the door of the tabernacle stood the brazen altar and the laver, and the whole was surrounded by the white curtained court. Disposed around this tabernacle were the priests, the tents, and the tribes. Rabbinical tradition has it that each tribe carried as a sign one of the twelve constellations of the Zodiac. These twelve signs, beginning with the sign of the virgin (Genesis), and ending with the sign of the lion (Revelation), depict the whole story of redemption.

The twelve tribes were distributed according to the four points of the compass, the whole forming a wondrous picture—all Israel grouped around the ark, the mercy seat, and the pillar of cloud or fire, setting forth the day when God shall be all in all. The order here referred to is given in full detail in Numb. ii. and The Companion Bible, Dispensational Truth (page 106), and Newberry's Supplement to The Englishman's Bible set the whole before the eye in a diagram. It is of interest to note that the tribes that occupied east, west, south, and north had as their signs the lion, ox, man, and eagle (scorpio), so that both at the centre (the mercy seat) and at the circumference (the standards) the cherubic pledge of restoration was remembered.

The primary purpose of the tabernacle.

In Exod. xxv. 8, immediately following the enumeration of the materials necessary for the building of the tabernacle, God gives the primary purpose of its construction, "Let them make Me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among them". "The tents of Shem" were from the days of Noah destined to be the dwelling place of God (Gen. ix. 27), and it is the purpose of redemption and atonement to make the sons of men fit for God to dwell among them. The climax of the book of Revelation is expressed in the words:--

> "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself shall be with them, and be their God" (Rev. xxi. 3), and when this takes place tears, death, sorrow, crying, and pain, the close attendants upon sin ever since paradise was lost, shall for ever pass away. This blessed time of restoration is expressed in the typical tabernacle of Israel.

Why a tabernacle?

A tabernacle is a tent, a dwelling place that belongs to pilgrims. It speaks of the wilderness and its wanderings rather than the kingdom and its peace. Consequently it has an application all down the age to all companies of the redeemed who are pressing on to the hope laid up for them:--

> "By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac, and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise" (Heb. xi. 9).

Not only so, it represents the willingness of God in His grace to have no settled place upon this earth until sin is removed, and His pilgrim people are at home in peace. Since Gen. iii. the sabbath rest of creation has been broken by the activities of redemption. The date upon which the tabernacle was set up is also of a typical nature, "on the first day of the month". Moses records one other important typical event that took place upon this same date, namely, the day when the waters were dried up from off the earth at the time of the flood, and when Noah removed the covering of the ark (Gen. viii. 13). Both events have restoration in view, both have an ark as the central feature (two words in the Hebrew O.T., but one in the Greek N.T.).

Noah's ark had no cherubim, for man, lion, ox, and eagle were there in reality; the ark of the covenant had golden cherubim. Noah's ark was covered with pitch, the first occurrence of the Hebrew word atonement in the O.T. The mercy seat is in Hebrew kapporeth, pitch being kopher, and to pitch, kaphar.

We are now ready to give closer attention to the detailed description given in Exodus of the various parts of the tabernacle, and we pray that the exhibition of these rich types may be a means of blessing not only to the young believers among our readers for whom they are primarily intended, but to the most advanced also.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

#42. The principal thing.
A seated priest in a heavenly sanctuary. (vii. 26 - ix. 20).
pp. 5 - 14

Returning to chapter ix. we learn that the way into the holiest was not made manifest because of the character of the sacrifice and the service connected with that period. It is stimulating to observe the sturdy faith of the apostle in Holy Scripture—"The Holy Ghost this signifying." However varied and strange "the sundry times and divers manners" may have been, the teaching of Heb. i. 1 is that "God spake". So in Heb. iii. 7, where Psa. xcv. is quoted, the apostle says, "As the Holy Ghost saith".

To come now to the peculiar character of the earlier dispensation. Before the coming of Christ all were "shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed" (Gal. iii. 23). The service of the priests is called "the example and shadow of heavenly things" (viii. 5). The law is said to have " shadow of good things to come, and not the very image" (x. 1). So here the tabernacle and its services are said to be "a figure" (ix. 9).

The word is literally a "parable". A reference to Ezek. xx. 49, Psa. xlix. 4, lxxviii. 2, Matt. xiii. 10-13 and John xvi. 28, 29 will show that an element of obscurity is connected with a parable. Heb. ix. 9 tells us that this particular parable remained "unto the present time" (which we believe to be the true rendering of this passage). Now that Christ has come the shadows vanish. All the offerings, sacrifices and services of the tabernacle, while most wonderfully adapted to their purpose, could never lead to the goal of Hebrews:--

> "They could not make him that did the service PERFECT as pertaining to the conscience" (Heb. ix. 9).

The purpose of the parable.

The dispensational truth related to the use of the parable is too important to pass over without a fuller note. A type sets forth with more or less clearness the reality which it foreshadows. A parable veils truth. It will be remembered that the parables of Matt. xiii. are closely associated with the Lord's rejection (Matt. xii.), and with the "mysteries" of the kingdom of the heavens.

We have shown elsewhere ("The Reconciliation of All Things") that the word "mystery" is introduced as a result of failure, and must be kept distinct from the original plan and will of God. When Israel came out of Egypt, they were led by Moses to Sinai. There they were assembled to enter into solemn covenant with the Lord. Here are the terms of that covenant:--

> "Now therefore, if ye will obey My voice indeed, and keep My covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto Me above all people, though all the earth is Mine. And ye shall be unto Me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation" (Exod. xix. 5, 6).

When Moses descended from the smoking mountain he spake no word concerning tabernacle, ark or mercy seat, but solemnly sprinkled the people with the blood of the covenant saying:--

> "Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words" (Exod. xxiv. 8).

After this Moses re-ascended the mountain in order to receive the tables of stone. During Moses' absence the people headed by Aaron broke the solemn covenant into which they had entered by worshipping the golden calf, for among the "words" which constituted the covenant were "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me". The covenant was broken, and Moses manifested it by breaking the tables of stone (Exod. xxxii. 15-19). When the duplicates were given they were placed in the ark of the covenant, which ark was the nucleus and centre of the whole tabernacle ritual. Israel's destiny is to be a kingdom or priests.

The attaining of that destined end is the meaning of "perfect", teleios, which is allied with telos, "end". Israel can never be a kingdom of priests under the old covenant that was broken, neither can they reach their goal by the typical ritual of the tabernacle. "The law made nothing perfect." Israel's "perfection", the attaining unto that for which they had been laid hold of by the Lord (see Phil. iii. 12), can only be accomplished under the new covenant of which Christ, not Moses, is the Mediator. This new covenant, it will be observed, is immediately introduced after the comparison between the priesthood of Christ and that of Levi has been made. The Levitical priesthood and sacrifices:--

> "Could not make him that did the service PERFECT as pertaining to the conscience" (Heb. ix. 9).

Carnal ordinances.

The apostle reduces the ceremonial and typical ordinances to two heads, viz., (1) Meats and drinks; (2) Diverse baptisms. A reading of Lev. xi.-xv. will give some idea of the apostle's meaning. Writing to Gentile Believers in another connection he says:--

> "Touch not, taste not, handle not, which all are to perish with the using" (Col. ii. 21, 22).

and shows this man-made prohibition is vain, and he turns the believer's attention away from the "shadows", for, says he, "the body is of Christ", and directs their hearts and minds to where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.

It will be observed that we do not follow the A.V. and translate "diverse washings", but "baptisms". This brings the apostle's argument into line with that of Heb. v., vi., where, in urging the reader to "go on unto perfection", he says, "leave . . . . . not lay again

. . . . . the doctrine of baptisms". The one great reason for leaving these gifts and sacrifices, this tabernacle service, these distinctions between meats and drinks, these washings, dippings and sprinklings, is that they were all "carnal ordinances", and these ordinances can no more lead on unto perfection than could the "carnal commandment" of Heb. vii. 16 "perfect the Son" (vii. 28) in His office as high priest after the order of Melchisedec.

Until the time of reformation.

Not only were these ordinances "carnal", they were temporal, they were "imposed until the time of reformation" (Heb. ix. 10). The word "imposed" suggests a burden. In Luke v. 1 it is "to press upon" as a crowd, or "to lay on" as a stone on a grave (John xi. 38). Peter expresses this conception when he speaks of the law as "a yoke which neither our forefathers nor we have been able to bear" (Acts xv. 10). This burden was but for a time "until the time of reformation":--

> "The law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did" (Heb. vii. 19).
> "The law was our pedagogue unto Christ" (Gal. iii. 24).

Reformation.—This word bears two meanings:--

1. The idea of getting back to some primitive simplicity that had become obscured, and
2. The idea of a radical change that reforms the subject.

The Greek word diorthosis (reformation) does not occur elsewhere in the Scriptures, but diorthoo comes in Jer. vii. 3 in the command, "amend your ways". The time of reformation dawned when "grace and truth" came by Jesus Christ, in contrast with the "law that was given by Moses" (John i. 17). The reformation introduced better promises, a better hope, and had as its basis a better covenant, ministered by Christ the Mediator of the better covenant. The argument is designed to lead the Hebrew believer to see the temporary character of these laws, which according to the teaching of their Rabbis were eternal and unchanging (see Acts vi. 13, 14). The abiding priest, the once offered sacrifice, the unchanging covenant, the sure and stedfast hope, these touched the conscience, led on to perfection and were found only in Christ.

Heb. ix. 9, 10.
No perfection by carnal ordinances.

A | 9-. The present season.
B | -9. | a | Gifts and sacrifices.
b | No perfection, not touch conscience.
B | 10-. | a | Meats, drinks, baptisms.
b | Carnal ordinances.
A | -10. The season of reformation.

Rom. viii. 3 supplies the true comment, "weak because of the flesh". But what the law could not do God has done by sending His Son. This is equally the teaching of Hebrews as it is of Romans. The law concerning the priesthood was weak because of the flesh, and no perfection can come that way. God's answer is Christ, the priest in the power of an endless life. The sacrifices, both in their nature and by their repetition, failed to touch the conscience. God's answer is Christ. He said "Lo, I come", and, coming, set aside all types and shadows by the offering of Himself.

A blessed change.

The new section, commencing with verse 11, therefore opens with the words "But Christ". Dispensational and doctrinal changes are introduced by some such expression in other places. For example, in Acts xvii. 30:--

> "And the times of their ignorance God winked at, BUT NOW commandeth all men everywhere to repent."

So, in Rom. iii. 21, when the apostle had brought the whole world in guilty before God, with no hope of righteousness in themselves, he then introduces the wondrous provision of grace with the word:--

> "BUT NOW the righteousness of God without the law is manifested."

Both the doctrinal and dispensational portions of Eph. ii. are marked in the same way:--

> "BUT GOD, Who is rich in mercy . . . . . made us alive" (4, 5).
> "BUT NOW in Christ Jesus . . . . . made nigh" (13).

When the apostle had clearly shown both the weakness and unprofitableness of the dispensation of type and shadow, he swings the door of the new dispensation upon the same small hinges "BUT CHRIST":--

> "But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come" (Heb. ix. 11).

The good things to come must not be interpreted only of the new life and the glory yet to be, they include, and perhaps principally refer to, the dispensational change which set aside the types and shadows and provided the antitype, Christ. This may be seen by consulting Heb. x. 1:--

> "For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things."

We remember the opening words of chapter viii., and that the "principal thing" is a seated priest in a heavenly sanctuary. This important fact is again prominent. We have such a high priest of good things to come, in contrast with those priests whose ministry was confined to shadows. At ix. 11 we have the subject of ix. 1-5 resumed in the words, "By a greater and more perfect tabernacle". Not only is this tabernacle "greater and more perfect", it is "not of this creation", for so the word rendered "building" should be translated. The use of this word "creation" is noteworthy, for in II Cor. iii.-v. the new covenant is linked with the new creation, and both with the reconciliation. Israel are a people of types, and in this they foreshadow the purpose of the ages.

The blood of Christ.

We noted, in Heb. ix. 6 and 7, that the high priest entered into the holiest of all once every year, "not without blood". This therefore is the next item to be developed in the argument. Verse 12 continues:--

> "Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by His own blood, He entered in once unto the holy place, having obtained aionian redemption for us."

Negatively, Christ entered "NOT with the blood of goats and calves". Positively, Christ entered "by His own blood". As to time Christ entered "once", in contrast with the type of verse 7, "once every year". The "aionian redemption" finds expansion in the succeeding verses.

The importance of the ascension.

While many are aware of the essential character of the death and resurrection of Christ, all are not so impressed with the importance of His ascension. Eph. i. 19-23 stresses the ascension of Christ in connection with His present headship of the church which is His body, and Eph. iv. 8-10 sets forth the triumphant character of His ascension when He led captivity captive. The present dispensation with its fourfold ministry is also essentially related with the ascended Lord (Eph. iv. 11, 12). The high privilege of the believer who has been "made to sit together in the heavenlies in Christ Jesus" (Eph. ii. 6), and also the power to walk in newness of life, are related to the fact that Christ now "sitteth at the right hand of God" (Col. iii. 1).

Not only do the epistles of the mystery stress the fact of the Lord's ascension, but the epistle of the Hebrews does also. Let us notice some of the references:--

> "When He had Himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high" (Heb. i. 3)
>
> "We have a great high priest, that is passed into the heaven, Jesus the Son of God" (Heb. iv. 14).
>
> "We have such a high priest, Who is set on the right hand of the Majesty in the heavens" (Heb. viii. 1).
>
> "Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true, but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us" (Heb. ix. 24).
>
> "But this man, after He had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God" (Heb. x. 12).
>
> "Looking unto Jesus . . . . . Who is set down at the right hand of the throne of God" (Heb. xii. 2).

These, and all passages which speak of the Lord's heavenly ministry and intercession, necessitate the ascension. We shall understand our calling the better if we keep this fact before us.

Israel, the aionian people.

It is necessary to remember that the apostle makes pointed allusion to the great day of atonement in Heb. ix. To this solemn day refer the statements concerning the blood of bulls and goats, as also the entry into the holiest of the high priest alone once every year. The mediation of the high priest on the day of atonement accomplished a reconciliation for the year. In vivid contrast the effect of Christ's one offering is called an aionian redemption, and as it touched the conscience needs no repetition.

Israel are the aionian people (Isa. xliv. 7).
Christ is the author of aionian salvation (Heb. v. 9).
With His blood He obtained aionian redemption (Heb. ix. 12).
This blood of the new covenant ensures the aionian inheritance (Heb. ix. 15).
This new covenant itself is called the aionian covenant (Heb. xiii. 20).

Israel are a typical people, and foreshadow in their calling and history the wider dealings of God with man during the course of the ages.

It now becomes necessary to the argument of the apostle that he should establish the superiority of the offering of Christ, and this he does by a series of comparisons. The first comparison is drawn between the offerings that were provided by the law to sanctify those who had become unclean, and the cleansing power of he blood of Christ.

Heb. ix. 13, 14.

A | 13-. For if. The fact assumed.
B | -13-. The blood, and ashes of heifer.
C | -13. Sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh.
A | 14-. How much more. Superiority assumed.
B | -14-. The blood of Christ.
C | -14. Purge conscience from dead works.

The argument cannot be appreciated fully without a knowledge of Num. xix. There the Lord commands Israel to bring:--

1. A red heifer without spot, wherein is no blemish and upon which never yoke came.
2. The heifer was slain, and the blood sprinkled before the tabernacle.
3. The remaining carcass, together with cedar wood, hyssop and scarlet, was burned, and the ashes gathered and laid up without the camp, with which the water of separation was made.
4. The defilement which necessitated the application of this water of separation is particularly connected with death.
5. A person was rendered unclean by touching a dead body, being in a tent wherein a man died, touching a bone or a grave.

It will be seen that some defilement was unavoidable. God would not have been pleased with that man who for the avoidance of ceremonial defilement withdrew himself from the dead or the dying. Yet this presses upon us the absolute necessity for the provision for uncleanness, for at times our very duties carry with them defilement, and though "not of the world' we are nevertheless still "in the world", and though we are cleansed completely in one sense, we shall, till our pilgrimage is over, be under the necessity to "wash the feet" continually (John xiii. 10). The emphasis upon death and the dead in Num. xix. provides the argument of Heb. ix. 14.

Covenant or Testament?

While it is a truth worthy of the fullest emphasis that the cleansing power of the blood of Christ excelled the types and shadows as conscience is greater than ceremony and dead works more defiling than dead bodies, yet this truth is placed here to lead on to another which is vital to the argument of the epistle:--

> "And because of this, He is the mediator of a new covenant, so that death having taken place for a redemption of the transgressions against the first covenant, those having been called might receive the promise of aionian inheritance. For where a covenant exists, it is necessary to bring in the death of the covenant victim, because a covenant is confirmed over dead victims, since it is never valid when the covenant victim is living" (Heb. ix. 15-17).

To introduce the word "testament" here, with its associated ideas of a "will" and the death of the "testator", is foreign both to Hebrew thought and the design of this epistle.

Diatheke occurs in Hebrews 17 times, and in every occurrence other than those of ix. 15-18 it is used of either the old or the new covenant. Heb. ix. 20 reads "the blood of the testament". The passage is a quotation from Exod. xxiv. 8, where the same version reads "the blood of the covenant". The A.V. is obliged to introduce the word "men" into Heb. ix. 17; we translate instead "dead victims", referring to the sacrifices that accompanied the making of the covenant. In Heb. vii. 22 we read:--

> "By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better covenant".

In viii. 6:--

> "By how much also He is the mediator of a better covenant".

In xii. 24, in contrast with Mount Sinai and the old covenant, is placed Mount Sion and the new covenant:--

> "And to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel."

It is clear from these passages that Heb. ix. 15 speaks not of a testament, but of a covenant in the Hebrew sense of the word. In Heb. viii. 8-12 we have a long quotation from Jer. xxxi. concerning the old and new covenants. In Heb. x. 15-17 this self-same chapter is quoted again. Heb. ix., which comes in between these two quotations, is written expressly to show that Christ is the mediator of that very covenant of prophecy, and the word "testament" therefore, instead of helping forward the apostle's argument, tends to hinder it. After speaking of the sprinkling of the tabernacle and all the vessels of the ministry, the apostle adds:--

> "And almost all things are by the law cleansed by blood; and apart from the shedding of blood is no forgiveness" (Heb. ix. 22).

Having come so far we shall now be able to appreciate the general structure of the chapter, which will be found to be chiefly concerned with

The old and the new covenants.
Heb. ix. 1-22.

A | 1-. The First Covenant.
B | -1-10. | a | -1-7. The Tabernacle. Worldly.
b | 8-10. Its significance. No way in. Conscience untouched.
B | 11-14. | a | 11. Greater and more perfect tabernacle. Not of this creation.
b | 12-14. Its significance. He entered in. Conscience purged.
A | 15-20. The New Covenant.

We shall have to extend this structure to include ix. 21 - x. 18, but this is a member too large and too important for rapid treatment. Here therefore we pause in our survey, and may the Lord Who is magnified in this epistle to the Hebrews be magnified also in the daily life and spiritual conception of those who are blessed under other terms than those of this new covenant, which forms so important a feature of our present study.

#43. One sacrifice for sins for ever (ix. 23 - x. 18).
pp. 49 - 63

The section of this epistle that lies before us is the last of the series that, step by step, sets aside the old covenant with its types and shadows, and leads on unto perfection. The next section opens with the words:--

> "Having, therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus . . . . . and having a high priest over the house of God, let us draw near" (Heb. x. 19-22).

This reverses the order in which the subject has been dealt with. We have:--

1. The perfect priest (v.-viii.)
2. The heavenly sanctuary (ix. 1-24).
3. The once offered sacrifice (ix. 25 - x. 18).

We are, in this article, to review the teaching of the apostle on the last and perhaps most critical element of both old and new covenants, viz., the sacrifice. The section ix. 23 - x. 18 bases its teaching upon the contrast that exists between the repeated sacrifices of the law and the once offered sacrifice of the new covenant, the one a shadow, the other the very image.

Heb. ix. 23 - x. 18.

A | ix. 23, 24. Patterns and figures of heaven itself.
B | ix. 25. The offering "often", "annually".
C | ix. 26-28. The offering ONCE.
A | x. 1-. A shadow.
B | x. -1. The offering "annually".
C | x. 2-18. The offering ONCE.

The cleansing of heavenly things.

In what sense are we to understand that "it was necessary" that the "heavenly things themselves" should be purified? The difficulty arises from the fact that we are not Hebrews and have had no personal contact with the Mosaic economy. In verse 22 we read that "almost all things are by the law purified by blood", and it will be observed in verses 19-21 that inanimate—and consequently unsinning—things as "the book", "the tabernacle" and the "vessels of the ministry" were purified by the sprinkling of blood. The dedication to God likewise of the heavenly realities can only be by blood, but this time by the precious blood of Christ. The tabernacle needed purifying on account of the people (Lev. xvi. 16). So "heaven itself" needed to be cleansed, not only because of those who have heavenly destiny (Eph. i. 10; Col. i. 20), but also because of those who by sin forfeited their heavenly abode (II Pet. ii. 4).

Better sacrifices.

Seeing that the apostle's argument in this section finds its strength in the fact that Christ offered one sacrifice for sin, as contrasted with the repeated sacrifices of the law, why does he speak of Christ's offering in the plural, "better sacrifices"? There is a recognized figure of speech in the Hebrew of the O.T. called Heterosis or "Exchange. It has a wide range into which we will not enter here, the section which includes our difficulty being the Heterosis of number. A few examples will suffice:--

Gen. iv. 10.—"Bloods" = life's blood.
Gen. xix. 11.—"Blindnesses" = intense blindness.
Psa. li. 17.—"Sacrifices" = the great sacrifice.
Psa. xc. 10.—"Strengths" = great, unusual strength.

This last reference is practically identical with Heb. ix. 23. The apostle, using a recognized figure of speech must be understood to mean "the infinitely better sacrifice". while we are dealing with this figure we might observe that in verse 24 "holy places" means "the most holy place", as it is translated in ix. 8.

The end of the world.

In contrasting the offerings made under the law with the offering of Christ, the apostle makes much of the fact that the law offered sacrifices continually, but that Christ offered but one sacrifice, and one only. Otherwise, said the apostle, it would be necessary that Christ should suffer often since the foundation of the world. We know from Heb. ix. 15 that the sacrifice of Christ was retrospective, and was "for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first covenant", and also from Rom. iii. 25 we learn that the offering of Christ declared God's righteousness in remitting the sins of the past. The reference to the foundation of the world is easy to understand. The apostle, however, makes another statement in Heb. ix. 26, "But now once in the end of the world hath He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself" (epi sunteleia ton aionon), "upon an ending together of the ages". The LXX uses the word sunteleia in Exod. xxiii. 14-16 in a way which may help us. "Three times shalt thou keep a feast unto Me in the year":--

1. The feast of unleavened bread.
2. The feast of the harvest.
3. The feast of the ingathering (sunteleia) which is in the end of the year.

Once again may we be permitted to say that those to whom the apostle wrote knew the law and much of its significance? The instructed Hebrew saw in the feasts of Israel, as set out in Lev. xxiii., the plan of the ages. He saw that Christ was the true Passover and the true Firstfruits. The feast of the seventh month, the sunteleia, would vividly bring to mind the sunteleia of the ages. It has been objected that "the consummation of the ages" has not arrived, and therefore this passage as it stands in the A.V. is not true. The same objection can be lodged against Heb. i. 1, for the period called "these last days" was over 1900 years ago.

When Christ was born Gal. iv. 4 declares that it was fullness of time. We must avoid the error of introducing truth that belongs to another dispensation to confuse the teaching of earlier revelations. Paul's prison ministry is, so far as time is concerned, a parenthesis. During the Acts period the coming of the Lord was expected to take place during the lifetime of the believer then living. Peter had no "difficulties" when he joined together the "blood and fire and pillars of smoke" that have not yet come with the Pentecostal gifts that are long past. Moreover the objection to the application of the sunteleia of the ages to the time of the offering of Christ robs the passage of another vital connection, viz., the Day of Atonement.

The Day of Atonement, like the feast of the sunteleia, took place in the seventh month, after the interval that provides a typical anticipation of the parenthesis that has actually come. Yet at the time of writing the apostle finds no difficulty in speaking of Christ's sacrifice in the terms of the Day of Atonement. The condition of things during the Acts is likened to the time when the high priest had entered into the holiest of all, during which time the people waited for His second appearing, when they were assured of forgiveness and acceptance. The fact that this second appearing did not take place, that Israel's forgiveness and acceptance is deferred, that it was all anticipated in the plan of the feasts somewhat similar expression occurs in I Cor. x. 11, "They are written for our admonition, unto whom the ends of the ages have reached" (ta tele ton aionon).

The typical happenings to Israel in the wilderness foreshadowed the state of things that would be true at the end, and the Corinthians were living at that time of the end, for so Scripture declares. The Jews divided all time into three great ages. 1. Before the law. 2. Under the law. 3. After the law. The age after the law they naturally thought of as the Millennium, not realizing that the elective period, when Gentiles were being called, was also to be reckoned with it.

To put away sin.

What are we to understand by this expression? It is usually taken to mean just what the A.V. says. The word "to put away" in the original is athetesis from atheteo. Let us examine the usage of these words; we shall then have positive evidence, and moreover be made independent of the opinion of others.

Atheteo.

Mark vi. 26.	"Reject her."
Mark vii. 9.	"Full well ye reject the commandment", margin "frustrate".
Luke vii. 30.	"Rejected the counsel of God", margin "frustrated".
Luke x. 16.	"He that despiseth" (four times).
John xii. 48.	"He that rejecteth Me."
I Cor. i. 19.	"I will bring to nothing the understanding."
Gal. ii. 21.	"I do not frustrate the grace of God."
Gal. iii. 15.	"No man disannulleth."
I Thess. iv. 8.	"He therefore that despiseth" (twice), margin "rejecteth".
I Tim. v. 12.	"Cast off their first faith."
Heb. x. 28.	"He that despised Moses' law."
Jude 8.	"These despise dominion."

We believe that no one after pondering this list of occurrences can avoid the conclusion that atheteo means "to set aside" or "to annul" as a covenant or a commandment. The word occurs 57 times in the LXX, and in order that no phase of the meaning should be left unconsidered we have consulted every reference. We cannot spare the space to give them here, but it is not necessary. Every occurrence deals either with rebellion, treachery or the setting aside of covenant obligations. Indeed, in one of the cases the word stand alone, the word covenant being implied. The same remarks are true also of athetema and athetesis.

Athetesis, the word actually occurring in Heb. ix. 26, occurs nowhere else but in Heb. vii. 18. There the passage is rendered:--

> "For there is verily a DISANNULLING of the commandment going before for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof. For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did, by the which we draw nigh unto God."

Chapter vii. is dealing with the failure of Israel's priesthood, the law concerning priesthood "perfected nothing". Only in the virtue of a "better hope" can any draw nigh unto God. Chapter ix. 26-28 is dealing with the failure of Israel's sacrifices, the law concerning sacrifices was a shadow and could not "perfect" those who drew nigh. Only in the virtue of a "better sacrifice" can any draw nigh to God. The parallel is complete. Moreover both sections deal with the removal and failure of the old covenant:--

A | vii. 18. The setting aside (athetesis) of the commandment concerning the priests.
B | viii. 8. Finding fault with the first covenant.
A | ix. 26. The setting aside (athetesis) of the sin offering.
B | x. 9. Taking away the first covenant.

It may be objected that where we have inserted "sin-offering" the A.V. says "sin", but it is recognized by all students of Scripture that the word "sin" often stands for the "offering of sin", and consequently may be so understood here. Heb. ix. 26 is not dealing with the forgiveness or the putting away of sin, it deals with the abrogation of the sin-offering, a fact absolutely necessary if Israel were to believe on the Son of God, and leave the shadows of the old covenant. "He appeared to set aside the sin-offering by the sacrifice of Himself." The reader has only to read Heb. x. 4-9 to find abundant confirmation of this interpretation.

The idea that has been read into this verse that the offering of Christ was "for the repudiation of sin at the conclusion of the eons" does violence to the order of the words in the original and fails to give the true meaning of athetesis. There is not one single instance in either the N.T. or the LXX where the word is used in connection with "putting away sin", whereas the consistent usage compels us to see that here, in Heb. ix. as in Heb. vii., the disannulling of a weak and profitless symbol is entirely in harmony with the context and aim of the epistle. Verses 27 and 28 must be read together, as they are two members of one simile indicated by the words "as" and "so". Some intended likeness must be discovered, for if a contrast were intended we should get the expression used in Rom. v. 15.

Now what is the intention of the writer when he says, "and as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment"? The majority of commentators take it to refer to mankind in general, and that the offering of Christ "once" is set over against the dying "once" of verse 27. While this contains truth, we are not persuaded that it is the true meaning of the passage. For one thing there is hardly a deviation from the one great theme discernible in the whole of chapters vii., viii. and ix. Every effort and argument is brought to bear upon the one absorbing theme, the superiority of the priesthood and offering of Christ, and the typical teaching of the types and shadows of the law.

Who are "the men"?

"It is appointed to the men once to die." The priests of the order of Aaron are definitely called "dying men" (Heb. vii. 8), and "men having weakness" (Heb. vii. 28). So that, to say the least, we may admit the probability that in the context that speaks of the typical tabernacle priesthood and offerings, "the men" may refer to these same dying priests.

It occurred to us at this point to consult the LXX for the usage of "judgment", knowing that in many cases the word judgment is synonymous with salvation in the O.T. Turning up the word krisis we found the list too formidable for the time at our disposal, but believing that the key to Heb. ix. 27, 28 lies in the law concerning the cities of refuge, and knowing that Numb. xxxv. contains a full statement concerning these cities, we looked to see whether krisis occurs in that chapter. It does:--

> "And they shall be unto you cities for refuge from the avenger; that the manslayer die not, until he stand before the congregation in judgment (krisis)" (Numb. xxxv. 12).

This statement is followed by a law making a distinction between a willful murder and a manslayer, and when these distinctions have been made the Scripture continues:--

> "Then the congregation shall judge between the slayer and the revenger of blood according to these judgments (krimata). And the congregation shall deliver the slayer out of the hand of the revenger of blood, and the congregation shall restore him to the city of refuge, whither he was fled (katapheugo), and he shall abide in it unto the DEATH of the high priest, which was anointed with the holy oil . . . . . after the death of the high priest the slayer shall return into the land of his possession" (Numb. xxxv. 24-28).

This is the "judgment" equivalent to salvation that was to be pronounced by the congregation, and hinged upon the death of the anointed high priest. It will be seen that such an interpretation harmonizes with the simile here intended:--

A | 27-. And as.
B | -27-. The men die once.
C | -27. Judgment.
A | 28-. So also.
B | -28-. Christ was offered once.
C | -28. Salvation.

Judgment and Salvation.

In Judges ii. 16-19 we have the close connection established between the judge and deliverance:--

> "And when the Lord raised them up judges, then the Lord was with the judge, and saved them out of the hand of their enemies all the days of the judge . . . . . when the judge was dead, they turned back . . . . ."

The judges of Israel were first of all saviours. This is seen in the judgeship of Othniel and Ehud. "The Lord raised up a saviour to the children of Israel" (Judg. iii. 9-15). The reader will doubtless call to mind the many passages where the poor, the needy and the righteous call upon God to "judge" them, and such passages as Psa. i. 5 where the ungodly are excluded from "judgment". It is this Old Testament conception of judgment and the particular exercise of it seen in Numb. xxxv. that must be kept to the fore as we read Heb. ix. 27.

The Day of Atonement.

The type of the city of refuge is now dropped and the great Day of Atonement is in view. The return of the Lord "the second time" is to be understood in the light of the action of the high priest on the Day of Atonement. There in the holiest of all the high priest appeared in the presence of God for the people (Lev. xvi. 23, 24); then putting on his gorgeous robes he came out to bless the waiting congregation. The apostle could hardly find a grander and more impressive moment in the whole levitical ritual with which to impress a Jew than this. He however draws attention even here to the surpassing excellence of Christ. When the high priest came out from the presence of God, he made a fresh atonement for himself and for the people (Lev. xvi. 24). This shows once more the failure of the type, for when Christ, the true high priest appears the second time it will be "apart from a sin offering"—"Christ dieth no more."

The second appearing of the Lord, in fulfillment of the type of Lev. xvi., will also be His second coming, and as we have already indicated, at the time of the writing of "Hebrews" that second coming was imminent. The Lord had ascended, had entered into the presence of God, and had Israel repented and "looked for Him", He would have returned in His robes of glory and beauty without sin unto salvation. Israel however failed. The second coming is deferred. A parenthetical dispensation must now run its course before that typical seventh month is fulfilled, and before every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him.

Perfected for ever.

We have already had brought before us the solemn fact that "the law made nothing perfect", and this statement was not allowed to remain merely as a general remark, it was particularized. The priesthood made nothing perfect, the tabernacle services made nothing perfect, and now we are to have the final argument to show that the sacrifices of the law made nothing perfect, but that the one offering of Christ did. Chapter x. 1-18 is devoted to this theme.

Heb. x. 1-18.

A | 1-4. | a | The yearly offerings.
b | Not able to perfect for ever.
c | Those that draw nigh.
d | Argument from cessation of offerings.
e | Argument from remembrance of sins.
B | 5-10. | f | The prepared body.
g | No pleasure in sacrifices.
h | I come to do Thy will.
i | The first taken away.
i | The second established.
h | By the which will.

g | Sanctified through one offering.
f | The body of Jesus Christ.
B | 5-10. | f1 | The priest standing.
g1 | The repeated sacrifice.
h1 | Never take away sins.
g1 | Christ's one sacrifice.
h1 | For sins.
f1 | He sat down.
A | 1-4. | a | By one offering.
b | Perfect for ever.
c | Them that are sanctified.

"For the law having a shadow of good things to come and not the very image of the things" (x. 1).

The Syriac version interprets this clause, "For the law, a shadow was in it, not the substance itself". Just as in Col. ii. 17 "the shadow" is in antithesis to the "body of Christ", so here the "shadow" is in contrast with the "very image", the reality itself. That which cast its shadow in the law is the real thing. Every sacrifice offered upon Israel's altar was a foreshadowing of the one and only acceptable offering of Christ.

"Can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year" (x. 1).

The inability of the sacrifices of the law is associated with their repetition, a feature which is enlarged upon in the next verse. The feature that is most important in this verse and which shows up prominently in the structure, viz., A | b, is hidden in the A.V. word "continually". The English reader sees in it but an extension of the words "year by year". The Greek reads eis to dienekes, "unto the unbroken continuance". The phrase does not occur outside the epistle to the Hebrews, and in that epistle it occurs four times:-

"Abideth a priest continually" (vii. 3).
"They offered year by year continually" (x. 1).
"One sacrifice for sins for ever" (x. 12).
"For by one offering He hath perfected for ever" (x. 14).

It will be seen that the phrase is used in connection with the vital theme of the epistle. The Melchisedec priesthood is "for unbroken continuance", unbroken by death, as was the case with every other priest. In connection with x. 1 a complete balance is discovered in verse 14, "perfected unto unbroken continuance". The verse therefore reads thus:--

"For the law having a shadow of the good things about to be, not the very image of the things, can never with those annual sacrifices which they offer, perfect unto unbroken continuance those who draw near."

The English word "continually" bears two distinct meanings. (1) Frequently, repeatedly; (2) Permanently. The translation given in the A.V. of x. 1 uses the word

"continually" in the sense of "repeatedly" year by year. This rendering has only to be used in the other passages to demonstrate its unsuitability. "Christ abideth a Priest repeatedly" is opposed to both sense and truth. "One sacrifice for sins repeatedly" has no meaning. We have been misled here in x. 1 by the twofold meaning of an English word, and this is not by any means an isolated case. Let us translate eis to dienekes, "unto perpetuity", which phrase is less cumbersome than the more literal rendering given above. The next verse exposes the fatal failure of every sacrifice offered under the law. The never touched the conscience.

This feature has been enlarged upon in ix. 12-14, where the "blood of bulls and goats and the ashes of an heifer" are seen in their typical "purifying of the flesh", and the blood of Christ Who offered Himself without spot to God is seen as the great antitype purging the conscience from dead works that those thus cleansed may serve the living God. Likewise in the same chapter the apostle, speaking of the gifts, sacrifices, meats, drinks and divers baptisms, says they were imposed until the time of reformation and could never make those who did the service "perfect as pertaining to the conscience". Further in x. 22, when the controversy is over, the apostle exhorts his readers to:--

> "Draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience."

Had the sacrifice once perfected the offerer as pertaining to the conscience, no further offering would have been necessary or tolerated. The law was a shadow, it purified the flesh, and its repeated offerings testify to its insufficiency. Further, the very repetition is a continual remembrance of sin, whereas when the new covenant is in force God says, "Their sins and iniquities will I remember no more".

The final setting aside of the sacrifices of the law is made in verse 4:--

> "For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away sins."

The argument now rests upon the very nature of things. Nothing more can be said. Can a shadow save us? Will a ceremonial, an external cleansing, satisfy us? Can the blood of an animal make reconciliation for a man? The answer is No, and that Scripture has already anticipated this answer in the fortieth Psalm.

The prepared body.

In brushing aside the last remaining hope of Israel under the law, and in shutting down any future argument by the word "impossible", the apostle was but reaching forward to the glorious fact that "what the law could not do, God did by sending His Son in the likeness of sinful flesh" (Rom. viii. 3). The quotation from Psa. xl. is prefaced by the words, "Wherefore when He cometh into the world". This can only refer to His first coming in the flesh. He is yet to be brought into the world again, when all the angels of God shall worship Him (Heb. i. 6). We are permitted (let us remember what holy ground is here) to learn the words that the Son of God breathed when the moment came for His birth at Bethlehem. His name was then called Jesus, for He was to save His people from their sins by the sacrifice of Himself:--

> "Sacrifice and offering Thou wouldst not, but a body hast Thou prepared Me."

When we turn to the Psalm quoted we read:--

> "Sacrifice and offering Thou didst not desire: mine ears hast Thou opened."

It is a fact unquestioned that Psalm xl. gives a translation of the Hebrew, yet the LXX which purports to translate the Hebrew reads as the Greek N.T. It is too wide a subject to discuss here as to how the LXX came by its present rendering; what we may do is to realize that the twofold statement of Psa. xl. and Heb. x. present two versions of one truth. Just as Matthew and Luke, both recording one utterance of the Lord, use slightly different words to express their phase of the utterance, yet without fully exhausting it, so we must take both O.T. and N.T. records as supplying a full quotation of the utterance of the Word, immediately before He became flesh and tabernacled among us. The Hebrew word "opened" is karah and is usually translated "dig", as a grave, a pit, or a well. The feminine form of the noun, however, mekurah, is translated "birth" in Ezek. xvi. 3, and "nativity" in Exek. xxi. 30. Compare the two references following:--

> "Thy birth (margin cutting out or habitation) and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan; Thy Father was an Amorite, and Thy Mother an Hittite" (Ezek. xvi. 3).
> "The place where thou wast created in the land of thy nativity" (Ezek. xxi. 30).

This use of the word to dig for birth or nativity is parallel with the words of Isa. li. 1, 2:--

> "Look unto the rock whence ye were hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged. Look unto Abraham your Father, and to Sarah that bare you."

This strange (to us) use of the word makes the meaning of Psa. xl. clearer. "The ear" being "digged" is by an easy transition "the body" that was "prepared". The ear standing as it does for obedience, as in Isa. l. 5, 6:--

> "The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away my back. I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; I hid not my face from shame and spitting."

Some expositors see in this expression "mine ears hast thou opened" a reference to Exod. xxi. 6, where the willing servant is taken and his ear bored with an awl as a sign of obedience "for ever", an act largely the result of love for wife and children who would otherwise be left behind had the man gone free. The word "bore" is entirely different from the word "dig" or "open", nevertheless the type is too beautiful to ignore, and aptly sets forth that One Who voluntarily laid aside His glory, "and took upon Him the form of a slave . . . . . and became obedient unto death" (Phil. ii. 7, 8). This body prepared for the Lord set aside all sacrifice and offering, gathering into one their varied phases and aspects of sacrifice and obedience as it is written in the volume of the book:--

"Lo I come to do Thy Will, O God."

The four kinds of sacrifice which were ordained by the law, and which were shadows of the one offering of Christ, are divided into two groups—burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin. The former are a sweet savour to God, the latter for the sins of His people. Both aspects combine in the one offering of Christ.

By the which will.

It is important to the Scriptural meaning of sacrifice that we bear in mind the teaching of this passage. "Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God" is equivalent to "Lo, I come to do all that burnt offering and sacrifice for sins typified". By so doing the first covenant was taken away and the second established (x. 9):--

> "For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been found for the second" (viii. 7).

The first covenant was faulty because it was a shadow, it was weak because of the flesh, it was impossible because its sacrifices were bulls and goats, it was a failure because it did not touch the conscience. All this has found rectification in Christ. His blood has ratified the new covenant, His offering touches the conscience and makes a way into the true holiest of all:--

> "By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all" (Heb. x. 10).

It will help us if we carefully analyse the statements of this verse:--

1. What is the will of God intended by—"The which will"?
2. What is the purpose of God by this will?—"We are sanctified."
3. What means were used to accomplish this will?—"The offering of the body."
4. What constitutes its eternal efficacy?—"Once for all."

The strange expression "by the which will" must mean the "done will" accomplished by Christ. This will done by Christ cannot be confined to the earthly life and perfect obedience of those sinless years, for the very accomplishment of that will is found in "the offering of the body of Jesus Christ" and that as a sacrifice which involved:--

1. Suffering (Heb. ix. 26; xiii. 12).
2. Crucifixion (Heb. vi. 6; xii. 2)
3. Shedding of blood (Heb. ix. 14; x. 19).
4. Death (Heb. ii. 9; ix. 15).
5. An Altar (Heb. xiii. 10).
6. A Priest (Heb. viii. 1; ix. 11).
7. A Sanctuary (Heb. ix. 24; x. 19).

It is utterly impossible to avoid the sacrificial character of the work of Christ when thinking of His accomplishment of the Divine will. That was the will of God in its essence. The purpose of this will is "sanctification". This sanctification involves all that the types set forth but failed in its fullness to achieve. Sanctification involves a complete heart dedication to God and His service, set forth typically by the sprinkling of the blood of the covenant, the people and the vessels of ministry (Heb. ix. 18-22). Sanctification involves cleansing from both external and internal defilement, set forth typically in the "diverse washings", "the ashes of the heifer sprinkling the unclean" (Heb. ix. 10, 13). Sanctification is the will of God for all His children irrespective of the differences of dispensations under which they have been called.

"Will of God."

This is seen in Eph. i. 4:--

> "According as He hath chosen us . . . . . that we should be holy and without blame."

And it is accomplished, as in Heb. x., by the offering of the body of Jesus Christ, for in Eph. v. 26, 27 and Col. i. 22 we read:--

> "That He might sanctify . . . . . that it should be holy and without blemish."
> "In the body of His flesh (nothing could be more definite) through death, to present you holy and unblameable and irreproachable in His sight."

The eternal efficacy of the offering of Christ is expressed in the fact that it was offered "once for all". Over and over again, first from this angle, then from that, the apostle brings to view the repeated offerings of the law and the once offered sacrifice of Christ. Where there is remission of sin no more offering is necessary. It may be of service to remark that the words "once for all" mean "once for all time" and have no reference to the number for whom the sacrifice was made.

We now come to the close of the long argument that has gathered around the Lord as high priest and sacrifice supreme. By way of recapitulation the apostle reminds us that the typical priest "standeth daily offering oftentimes the same sacrifices", whereas Christ "sat down on the right hand of God". The sacrifices repeatedly offered were such that they:-- > "Can never take away sins" (x. 11).

> "But this man offered one sacrifice for sins unto perpetuity" (x. 12).

His sacrifice is finished, He now awaits the end, "expecting, till His enemies be made His footstool". Then emerges the last word of the argument, embodying in itself the essence of chapters vii.-ix.:--

> "For by one offering He hath perfected unto perpetuity them that are sanctified" (x. 14).

This while being in absolute contrast with the old covenant (see x. 1-3 and structure) is in entire conformity with the new covenant, as set forth in verses 15-18.

The effect of sanctification is seen in the laws written in the heart and mind. The fullness of the sanctification is seen in the fact that "their sins and iniquities will I remember no more". The completeness, the "perfecting unto perpetuity" of the sanctified, is expressed in the words, "there is no more offering for sins".

> "The comers" have been made perfect.
> The conscience has been purged.
> There is no more remembrance.
> There is no need for annual or daily repetition. (x. 1, 2).

We now stand at the opening of a new, a practical section, which urges us to draw near, to endure, to live by faith, to run with patience. This we must reserve for a future article. The condensed nature of The Berean Expositor prevents us from writing articles that apply the doctrines of Scripture, touch the affection or stir the spirit. Such is not our mission, but we do earnestly pray that none will contemplate either the great offering or its marvelous results without heartfelt thanksgiving and desire for fuller practical consecration.

#44. Perdition, or the saving of the soul (x. 19-39).
pp. 129 - 138

Doctrine has held sway over the reader of this epistle for a long period, but however involved the argument may be, and however involved the proofs, it must certainly somewhere before the close give place to practical teaching and exhortation. To that we have arrived, and it is introduced by the words of verses 19-22, "Having therefore . . . . . let us". The exhortation "let us" is valueless without the "having therefore", but so also is the having without the using. What does the apostle say these believers "have"?

Boldness to enter into the holiest.—Under the law this was restricted to the high priest, and to the day of atonement. "The high priest alone once" (ix. 7), "with the blood of others" (ix. 25). The case is now different. Boldness to enter is the privilege of all believers by the blood of Jesus.

By a new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us.—The legal way was old. "Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away" (viii. 13). This way is new. Prosphatos means "newly-slain"; the legal way was dead. "Priests . . . . . were not suffered to continue by reason of death" (vii. 23). The entrance is "by the blood of Jesus" (x. 19) and "His flesh" (x. 20).

The flesh is likened to the vail. Of all the many and wonderful suggestions that have been made by commentators as to the meaning here of the vail, none seem worth a second thought that have no place for that historic fact that "the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom" (Matt. xxvii. 51) when the Lord Jesus died. The second vail barred the entrance to the holiest of all, "the Holy Ghost thus signifying that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest". The newly-slain and living way means a rent vail.

And having an high priest over the house of God.—As chapter viii. puts it, we have a seated priest in a heavenly sanctuary. So far the summary of the doctrine—what we "have". Now follows the summary of the practice "let us".

Let us draw near with a true heart.—To draw near expresses the full privileges of those who are sanctified. It is a word used nowhere else in the epistles of Paul except I Tim. vi. 3, where "consent" translates the word, and shows an entirely different usage. So special a word we would expect to be stamped with its hall mark "seven", for that is the number of its occurrences in Hebrews.

To draw near (proserchomai).

A	iv. 14-16.	Having a great high priest, let us hold fast our profession and draw near boldly.
B	vii. 25.	Saved unto all perfection those who draw near.
	x. 1.	Could not perfect unto perpetuity those who draw near.
A	x. 19-23.	Having an high priest, let us draw near with boldness, and let us hold fast our profession.
B	xi. 6.	Those who draw near to God must believe that He is.
	xii. 18.	Sinai \
	xii. 22.	Sion /	Spirit of perfected righteous ones.

The true heart means the heart of the new covenant realities in contrast with the old covenant shadows. So the "true" tabernacle (viii. 2), the antitypes of the "true" (xi. 24).

In full assurance of faith.—Heb. vi. 11 speaks of a full assurance of hope, and both hope and faith find their anchor "within the vail" (Heb. vi. 19, x. 20).

Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.—The sprinkling here refers to the "ashes of the heifer sprinkling the unclean", which set forth in type that cleansing of the conscience from dead works, which was only possible through the blood of Christ (ix. 13, 14). The washing of the bodies with pure water refers to the spiritual reality set forth in the typical "divers washings" of the law (ix. 10).

Let us . . . . . let us . . . . . let us. Three times over comes the beseeching command. Let us draw near, let us hold fast, let us consider one another. The first is Godward, the second is personal, the third is for others.

Let us hold fast the profession of our hope without wavering.—The word here (elpis) is hope, not faith, and refers to "that better hope whereby we draw near to God" (vii. 19). This must be held at all costs "without wavering". This firm hold of the hope and its profession is in view in Heb. iii. 6 & 14, and to this all the exhortations to endure are directed. Without wavering (aklines) may be translated "without bending". It is the exact opposite of klino, "turned to flight" (Heb. xi. 34).

For He is faithful that promised.—Much is made of the promises in this epistle, indeed epaggelia occurs therein 14 times. Much too is made of the faithfulness of the promiser, especially in Heb. vi. 13-19.

Let us consider one another.—There is a false piety that believes that God is well pleased with a monastic isolation, that God only wrote four commandments and not ten. This is a travesty of truth. "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God Whom he hath not seen?" (I John iv. 20). The special "provoking" here is to "love and to good works". The word "good" here is not agathos, but kalos as in Heb. v. 14; vi. 5.

Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is.—The interpretation of this passage revolves around the assembly and its fellowship, urging the need for regular attendance at the place of worship. The word "assembling" (episunagoge), and its cognate (episunago) are never used of an "assembly" in the sense of a church. Episunago is used in Matt. xxiii. 37 and the parallel passage for the Lord's desire to gather the children of Jerusalem to Himself as a hen does her chickens. It is used in Matt. xxiv. 31 and the parallel passage of the gathering together of the elect by the angels. It is used in Mark i. 33, and Luke xii. 1, for the crowd who gathered for healing or interest. The only other place where episunagoge occurs is II Thess. ii. 1, "The coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering together unto Him".

The apostle by the use of the word "forsaking" evidently glances back to such passages as II Chron. xxiv. 18, where the "forsaking" of the house of the Lord meant apostasy, and was visited with wrath, and also to Neh. x. 39 and xiii. 11, where adherence to the house of God indicated loyalty. The "gathering together to ourselves" has value only as it foreshadows the hope of "our gathering together unto Him". At the present time faithfulness to truth and to the blessed hope often cuts one off from the assemblies of the Lord's people, and the use of this passage may under altered conditions be an abuse.

Hope, the author of the soul.

The added words, "so much the more, as ye see the day approaching", confirms the thought that the hope is all the while in view. As we see the day approaching we must confess that it has cut off from assembling with the Lord's people, simply because corporate testimony has gone the way of all the earth.

A further confirmation of this higher and fuller meaning is found in the argument that immediately follows. The forsaking of the assembly is called a "willful sin after the reception of the truth", and for such "there is remaineth no more sacrifice for sins". Under the law sins were placed under two heads:--

1. Sins of omission, ignorance, and inadvertence (Lev. iv. 2, etc.).
2. Sins of presumption, high hand, malice aforethought (Num. xv. 30, 31).

Apostasy from the profession of the hope had the character of presumptuous sin, for which the law made no provision. That David, for example, could be forgiven shows that a fuller sacrifice is found under the gospel than under the law, but the apostle does not bring this forward, neither does he mitigate the severity of the judgment that is pronounced against such. "Fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries", "died without mercy", "of how much sorer punishment", "vengeance is Mine", "it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God", all stress the extreme severity of the penalty. "Trodden under foot the Son of God", "counting the blood of the covenant unholy", "doing despite to the spirit of grace", these terms reveal the enormity of the sin of turning back to Judaism. In this light Heb. vi. 1-8 is to be read, to which the word "illuminated" of x. 32 evidently refers.

Things that accompany salvation.

Just as the apostle in Heb. vi., after speaking in severe terms of apostates, turns to the Hebrew believers saying, "But beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak" (vi. 9), so here in Heb. x. 32 the apostle continues:--

> "But call to remembrance the former days, in which after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions."

There is also blessed condescension to the frail and the weaker faith. Not only does he call to remembrance the conspicuous hero of the fight, but the more reticent and less observed partner in the fight. Some were made a "gazing stock". Not so much is said of violence, or of actual sufferings, but the Lord enters into that shrinking which most of us have of being pilloried for our faith. Blessed truth, He knows, and weighs these things in the balance of the sanctuary. They might have gone free from observation. They might have remained quietly shielded, but they are remembered in that they became "companions" of them that were so used. Instead of the reading, "Ye had compassion of me in my bonds", the text reads, "of those in bonds". This epistle to the Hebrews does not teach that the writer (Paul as we believe) was a prisoner at the time of writing. They also took with joy the spoiling of their possessions, probably by "extortion" as the words are rendered in Matt. xxiii. 25.

> "Knowing that you have for yourselves a better and enduring possession" (Heb. x. 34).

The text omits the words "in" and "in heaven". Upon this basis the apostle rests his exhortation.

> "Cast not away therefore your confidence (boldness, x. 19) which hath great recompense of reward" (x. 35).

What they did need was "patience". Patience is essential for perfecting. The epistle of James is written around that thought. The first chapter opens with it (verses 3, 4 and 12), and the fifth chapter closes with it, "Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord" (James v. 11). "The day" is approaching. That day is the coming of the Lord, "for yet a little, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry" (Heb. x. 37).

The quotation from Habakkuk.

This introduces the quotation from Habakkuk which figures prominently in the epistle to the Romans. The words "The just by faith shall live" are divisible under three heads, and the apostle has taken this course with the verse.

"The just by faith shall live" (Rom. i. 17). The argument of Rom. i. is concerning the provision of righteousness. "The just by faith shall live" (Gal. iii. 11). The argument of Gal. iii. revolves around works of law, and faith. "The just by faith shall live" (Heb. x. 38). The argument of Heb. x. and xi. is entirely devoted to "living by faith". Here we have a splendid example of exhortation, where doctrine and practice are both given their place. Referring once again to Heb. vi. 22 we read of "faith and patience" inheriting the promises. Out of the thirty-two occurrences of pistis ("faith") in Hebrews twenty-nine are found in this practical section x. 19 - xiii. 25.

The essence of Habakkuk (ii. 3, 4) seems to be found in the words "though it tarry, wait", The long delay, the silence of God (Hab. i. 1-4) is solved by the assurance that "the vision is yet for an appointed time". The long wait does not mean that God is indifferent. All the details of His purpose have an appointed time. This fact of itself should enable us to wait. Further, "at the end it shall speak and not lie". When the time does come, nothing can prevent God from speaking, acting, delivering, or doing whatever is particularly required. Yet further, the feeling of delay is merely human. "Though it tarry . . . . . it will surely come, it will not tarry." It is here that the prophet writes the words which are repeated with such fullness by the apostle, "the just shall live by faith".

The Hebrew believers had suffered the spoiling of their goods, and a reference to Hab. iii. 17, with its sixfold failure of fig, vine, olive, field, fold and stall, places them in the goodly fellowship of the prophets. The better and enduring possessions that they had are found in Hab. iii. 19, "The Lord God is my strength, and He will make my feet like hinds' feet, and He will make me to walk upon mine high places". Living by faith is placed in contrast with "drawing back unto perdition", and this drawing back is in its turn contrasted with "believing unto the acquiring of the soul".

Perfection and perdition.

We are here confronted with a group of problems which will repay the time devoted to their solution. The two words that provide the key to the difficulty are perdition and saving.

What is perdition?—Does this passage teach that a believer who does not hold fast the profession of his hope can draw back and finally be cast into hell? However we may object to the phrasing, that, bluntly, is the difficulty before us. In searching for an answer which would satisfy the demands of all scripture, we discovered that there are three sets of passages in which perdition is used as the alternative to perfection. The first scripture is this epistle to the Hebrews. It hardly needs demonstrating that the epistle is summed up in the words of chapter vi. 1, "Let us go on unto perfection", and that x. 39 provides the alternative, "draw back to perdition". It may be objected that as this emphasizes the very verse we seek to understand, our use of it is biased and unfair. We therefore turn to the second passage (Phil. iii.), where "Let us go on unto perfection" is expressed by the words, "Not as though I were already perfect, but I follow after" (Phil. iii. 12).

"As many as would be perfect" (Phil. iii. 15) are exhorted positively to follow the example of Paul; and negatively to avoid the example of those whose end is perdition. Now it does not seem possible that a church that had reached such a height of spiritual experience as that attained by the Philippians should need to be solemnly warned not to follow the example of the ungodly. Those who were more likely to cause a slip and possibly a forfeiture were those believers who were following the policy expressed in the words, "making the best of both worlds". These caused the apostle to weep as he spoke of their walk, and summarized it as the walk of those who were:--

> "The enemies of the cross of Christ, whose end is perdition, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things" (Phil. iii. 18, 19).

The last statement proves that those enemies are not the unsaved, for how can an unsaved man mind anything else but earthly things? To believers the apostle can write, "Set your mind on things above, not on things on the earth" (Col. iii. 2). Such a believers as those Philippians referred to constitute themselves the enemies of the cross of Christ, for that cross speaks of separation from the things of the flesh and the world.

Keeping this passage in mind we look at the third, viz., The Sermon on the Mount (Matt. v.-vii.). The exhortation to endure, to suffer with the reward of the kingdom in view, has only to be mentioned to be accepted as the main theme of this sermon. Its goal is expressed in Matt. v. 48, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect". The word perdition comes later in Matt. vii., "Broad is the way, that leadeth to perdition". The passage immediately goes on to say, "by their fruits ye shall know them" (verse 20).

Here we have three occasions where these words occur as the two poles of their respective contexts. Still the question remains, What is intended by the word perdition? Perdition, as some of its contexts indicate, can mean utter destruction, as of the Man of Sin, but if we could only find a passage where the word is used without any doctrinal or theological meaning we could then understand how such a word could be used of so vastly different subjects. In the providence of God such a passage exists, and moreover is used by Matthew who has provided one of the sets already:-- > "There came unto him a woman having an alabaster box of very precious ointment . . . . . To what purpose is this WASTE (perdition)?" (Matt. xxvi. 7, 8).

Before proceeding, let us be sure we understand the meaning of perfection. Teleios is a cognate with telos, and telos means the end, the goal. To go on unto perfection is to reach one's goal. That this is innate in the word two passages will show. In Phil. iii. 12 the apostle explains what he means by being perfect, by adding, "That I may apprehend that for which I am also apprehended to Christ Jesus", and in Gal. iii. 3 he places "perfected" in antithesis to "begin": "Having begun in the spirit, are ye now made perfect (ended, as it were, finished off) by the flesh?" Perdition set over against perfectness then means to end in waste. Therein lies the tragedy of drawing back. The foundation is laid, the builder will be saved, but he may be saved "so as by fire". He may not himself be lost, but he may "suffer loss", and see his life's work turn to smoke (I Cor. iii.). This was the dreadful possibility before the Hebrews.

If Phil. iii. speaks of "enemies", Heb. x. speaks of "adversaries". If Phil. iii. speaks of "enemies of the cross of Christ", Heb. x. speaks of "treading under foot the Son of God". If Phil. iii. speaks of a "prize" to be won, Heb. x. speaks of a "reward". If Phil. iv. says "the Lord is near" (eggus), Heb. x. says "the day is drawing near" (eggizo). In Volume XIII (pages 139-142) we give nine items where the Sermon on the Mount runs parallel with Philippians, not of course confusing their distinctive teaching. This article we will not repeat here, but mention it as confirming the fact that these three sets of Scripture, each using perfection over against perdition, express a scriptural principle. As we gain knowledge of the meaning of perdition in Heb. x. we begin to sense the meaning of "saving the soul" also.

Purchasing the soul.

Peripoiesis occurs but five times in the N.T., viz.:--

"The redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. i. 14).
"To obtain salvation" (I Thess. v. 9).
"To the obtaining of the glory" (II Thess. ii. 14).
"The saving of the soul" (Heb. x. 39).
"A peculiar people" (I Pet. ii. 9).

Peripoieomai is translated "purchased" in Acts xx. 23, and "purchase" in I Tim. iii. 13.

Not only must we have the true conception of the word "saving", but we must also be sure that we have no traditional warp regarding the expression "saving the souls". It is used in evangelical preaching and literature as though it expressed the goal of the gospel of grace, but the striking thing is that Paul has no use for the expression. Peter uses the words "the salvation (soterian, not peripoiesis) of your souls", but not in the sense it is usually employed, for he speaks of "salvation ready to be revealed at the last time . . . . . at the revelation of Jesus Christ" (I Pet. i. 5-9). So far as the present is concerned, believers are exhorted rather to lose their souls, which is not a popular expression to-day. The moment we see this we are on the track of the truth of Heb. x. Matt. xvi. supplies the key:--

"If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me. For whoever will save his soul shall lose it, and whoever will lose his soul for my sake shall find it. For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and > lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? For the Son of man shall come in the glory of the Father with His angels: and then He shall reward every man according to his works" (Matt. xvi. 24-27).

The man who denies himself, and takes up his cross, loses his souls in this life. If he turns back to the good things that he has relinquished, making his belly his god, and finding his glory in his shame, he saves his soul in this life, but becomes an enemy of the cross, for he will not bear it. The one who is willing to lose his soul for Christ's sake finds it when the Lord gives reward at His coming. All this is meant in the words of Heb. x. 39. Here, as in Heb. vi., hope is the anchor of the soul, is connected with the obtaining of the promises, enters within the vail, and belongs to those once "enlightened". Heb. xi. which immediately follows contains a list of O.T. saints who lost their souls for Christ's sake, to find them in the resurrection.

As this chapter is so important, and we have one special feature to make clear, we conclude this paper at this point. We trust that the close parallel that is observable between Philippians and Hebrews (a parallel insisted on many times in the articles entitled "The Hope and the Prize") will not be without salutary effect upon us all. Let us go on unto perfection, let us remember the awful waste of precious opportunities that will be ours if we "neglect so great salvation", if we neglect to "work out our own salvation". The body of our humiliation is soon to be fashioned like unto the body of His glory. A little while and the time will come, "the appointed time" for which we wait. Let us then take heart. We have need of patience. Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, lacking nothing.

#45. "Let us draw near . . . . . not draw back" (x. 19-39).
pp. 161 - 167

The whole of the epistle to the Hebrews may be summed up under two phrases:--

1. Let us go on unto perfection, or
2. Draw back unto perdition.

How it is possible for believers to draw back to "perdition" will be manifest when we have enquired into the meaning of the word used at the close of the chapter x. Everything in this epistle contributes its quota to this dual theme. Christ is set forth as better than angels, Moses, Joshua, Aaron, and all typical sacrifices, in order that the Hebrew believer, in pressing on to perfection, may have no qualms in leaving behind the types and shadows that never made those under them "perfect as pertaining to the conscience". The land of Canaan is shown to be but a shadow of the heavenly city and true rest that remaineth unto the people of God. Joshua never led into that rest. In fact there is a series of contrasts in this epistle, all put forward with the one object of rendering "perfection" a desirable goal, and "perdition" one to be shunned.

The examples of those that draw back to perdition are those whose carcasses fell in the wilderness (Heb. iii.), those who are "dull of hearing" and never advance from being "babes" (Heb. v.), or who like Esau despise their birthright (Heb. xii.), or prefer Sinai to Sion (Heb. xii.). Here we find such alternatives as:--

SHADOW and VERY IMAGE.
WORLDLY SANCTUARY and HEAVENLY HOLIEST OF ALL.
OLD COVENANT and NEW COVENANT.
FLESH CLEANSED and CONSCIENCE CLEANSED.
MOUNT SINAI and MOUNT SION.
VANISHING and REMAINING,

all set forth, with earnest instruction and entreaty, to urge along the upward path to perfection, and to shun apostasy and perdition. Heb. x. 19-39, the passage before us, takes up this double exhortation. Doctrine has reached its zenith at verse 18, and from verse 19 to the end of the epistle it is largely a matter of exhortation. The double theme sets the bounds of the section before us.

A	22.	Let us draw near.
		In full assurance of faith.
A	38, 39.	We are not of them who draw back.
		Believe to the saving of the soul.

Having . . . . . let us.

No exhortation in Scripture stands alone. Beneath the feet of practice stands privilege. The fruit of good works derives its nourishment from the root of grace. If the apostle says, "Let us", he will also say, "Having therefore".

"Having therefore boldness . . . . . high priest."	/	Let us draw near.
	{	Let us hold fast.
	\	Let us consider one another (x. 19-24).
"Seeing we are encompassed."	/	Let us lay aside.
	\	Let us run with patience (xii. 1, 2).
"Wherefore we receiving a kingdom."	/	Let us have grace.
	\	Let brotherly love continue (xii. 28--xiii. 1).
"Wherefore Jesus suffered without the gate."	/	Let us go forth therefore.
	\	Unto Him without the camp (xiii. 12, 13).

Here are four groups of teaching which space out the remainder of the epistle, and each group manifests the same feature. The strongest preventative against "drawing back" is evidently to "draw near", and we have every reason to draw near seeing that we "have therefore" boldness of access, and a great High Priest.

The new and living way.

The old typical way into the holiest is not the way that one must pass who desires to go on unto perfection.

> "The way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing: which was a figure for the first time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service PERFECT, as pertaining to the conscience" (Heb. ix. 8, 9).

In place of the old and typical way stands the new and living way—"newly slain", as the word means etymologically, although we cannot discover any example of its usage that will warrant the doctrine that appears to lie in these suggestive words. This new and living way has been consecrated, or dedicated, for us. Heb. ix. 18, using the word, reads, "Neither was the first covenant dedicated without blood". Consecration or dedication here includes the idea of something "new", or as we might say "initiation". Consecration in Heb. vii. 28 has the entirely opposite thought of attaining an "end".

Teleioo . . .	Heb. vii. 28 . . .	To perfect, bring to full end.
Egkainizo . . .	Heb. x. 20 . . .	To initiate, bring in new.

Here is the introduction of something new in its consecration, new in its constitution. A new way, newly dedicated.

Reconciliation by incarnation?

The way into the holiest of all is "through the veil, that is to say His flesh". The connection between the incarnation and reconciliation is a theme that attracts many believers and teachers. The fact that Christ became man, and, as they express it, brought His Godhead down to our humanity that He might lift our humanity up to God, is not the Scriptural basis for reconciliation. Heb. ii. 14 most surely reveals the absolute necessity for the Lord to partake of flesh and blood, but it as surely declares the purpose to be:--

> "That THROUGH DEATH He might destroy . . . . . and deliver."

Or again, in Heb. x., if we read in verse 5 of a "body prepared", we read in verse 10 of that body "offered". Not by His incarnation but by His one sacrifice are we saved and sanctified. Calvary and not Bethlehem is the place of redemption, and though the crib at Bethlehem was necessarily the first step, it is the cross of Calvary that is the consummation. There could be no access into the holiest of all until "the veil, that is to say His flesh" was rent in twain from top to bottom (Matt. xxvii. 50, 51).

The three-fold exhortation.

Let us draw near. Let us hold fast. Let us consider. The true heart with which we are exhorted to draw near is consonant with the fact that Christ is the minister of the true tabernacle (Heb. viii. 2; ix. 24). Instead of external washings this heart is sprinkled from an evil conscience. The bodies washed with pure water seems to be a reference to the washing of the high priest and the Levites (Lev. xvi. 4; Numb. viii. 7), which type is fulfilled in the heart sprinkled from an evil conscience.

Side by side with this threefold exhortation is seen the abiding three "Faith, hope and love" (Heb. x. 22-24). As we see these graces in their context we realize that to the Hebrews, as to the Corinthians (I Cor. xiii.), and to the Thessalonians (I Thess. i. 3), "these three" are the true antidote to apostacy.

Drawing back unto perdition.

There is an evident parallel between Heb. ii.-iv. and Heb. x. 19 - xii. 3. In both passages we see the evil heart of unbelief that departs from the living God. In both the true antidote is "Let us draw near". In both there is the holding fast of the "confession". In chapter iii. we have stressed those who failed to enter in because of unbelief. In chapter xi. we have those who "through faith" obtained promises and triumphed. The twofold title of Christ, "The Apostle and High Priest of our profession" (Heb. iii. 1), is parallel with the twofold title of Heb. xii. 2, "The Captain and Perfecter of faith". The key to the character of the apostacy that is in view is found in Heb. x. 30:--

> "Vengeance belongeth unto Me, I will recompense, saith the Lord; And again, The Lord shall judge His people."

These words are a quotation from Deut. xxxii., the great prophetic forecast of Israel's history given by Moses just before his end. This song of forty-three verses traverses the whole of prophetic time. It reveals the failure of Israel and their setting aside, the period while they are Lo-ammi, "not My people", and provoked to jealousy, and the mercy of the Lord that gathers them back again with rejoicing. Dr. Ginsburg reads Deut. xxxii. 34, 35, as follows:--

> "Is not this laid up in store with Me,
> Sealed up in My treasuries?
> For the day of vengeance and recompense,
> For the time when their foot shall slip," and this is evidently "the day approaching" of Heb. x. 25. The apostacy foretold by Moses is manifestly at hand in Heb. x., and explains Heb. vi. as well.

Ye have need of patience.

While Israel as a nation were fast slipping away, the apostle turns with renewed earnestness to the tried and tested remnant with words of encouragement and exhortation. He bids them to call to remembrance the former days, in which, after they were illuminated, they endured a great fight of afflictions. Among the elements of endurance that the apostle enumerate are:-- > Being made a gazing stock.

> Being a fellow-partaker of those so used.

There is something very gracious in this recognition. To be a "gazing stock", a "spectacle", may not seem half so heroic as some other forms of martyrdom, yet the Lord knows the intensity of mental suffering that some natures may endure. Then, further, the Lord takes note of those who simply stand by and share the sufferings of others. Whether we read as in the A.V., "For ye had compassion of me in my bonds", or with some texts, “For indeed you sympathized with the prisoners”, this Christlike “sympathy” (Heb. iv. 15) is noted. The suffering of “reproaches” associated them with Christ Himself (Heb. xiii. 13), and the “enduring possession” with the “enduring city” (xiii. 14). Early Christians were called by their enemies, atheists, their places of assembly were misrepresented as being convened for most immoral purposes, all of which misrepresentations would constitute a very real suffering of reproach for Christ.

The words “goods” and “substance” should be rendered by the same word, and perhaps “possession” is the most suitable. The words in the original being huparchonta and huparxin.

> “And submitted to the seizure of your possessions with joy, knowing in yourselves that you have in heaven, a better and on enduring possession” (Heb. x. 34).

The case of Moses in Heb. xi. 24-26 supplies a very full example of the meaning of the apostle here. He esteemed this “reproach” as greater than all the treasures of Egypt. He too looked unto the recompense of the reward. So the apostle urges these Hebrew saints:-- > “Therefore cast not away your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise” (Heb. x. 35, 36).

An article could well be devoted to the words, “Ye have need of patience”. It is the “patience of hope”, the patience that James speaks of when he says:--

> “My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; knowing, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her PERFECT work” (James i. 2-4).

It is evident that the words, “ye might receive the promise”, indicate a long wait and patient endurance, by the conclusion of the matter in Heb. xi. 39:--

> “And all these, having received a good report through faith, received NOT the promise.”

What does the apostle bring forward to encourage these tried and tested believers?

The Coming of the Lord.

The relation of the coming of the Lord to the church of the mystery is dealt with in a separate article, but it is here brought forward as the crowning argument in the apostle’s testimony:--

> “For yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them that draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul” (Heb. x. 37-39).

As space is limited we leave this passage without comment, except to touch upon the meaning here of the word perdition. In some contexts perdition may express the most awful punishment of the ungodly. In one context at least no element of punishment can possibly be allowed. The two foci of the epistle to the Hebrews may be expressed in the words:--

> "Let us go on unto PERFECTION" (Heb. vi. 1).
> "Not draw back unto PERDITION" (Heb. x. 39).

It may be questioned, however, whether "perdition" is a true antonym to "perfection"; some would think that salvation and perdition would be truer. Our only authority must be the Word, and if we can find other passages where perfection is used in contrast to perdition, the question will be answered. The first passage we turn to is Phil. iii. Readers will remember that on more than one occasion we have called attention to the parallel lines of teaching of Philippians and of Hebrews. Without quoting the passage in full, we give the context of the two words:--

> "Let us therefore, as many be PERFECT, be thus minded . . . . . walk . . . . . for many walk . . . . . whose end is PERDITION . . . . . who mind earthly things" (Phil. iii. 15-19).

The relation of these two words is evident to all. The second passage is in "The Sermon on the Mount":--

> "Be ye therefore PERFECT . . . . . Broad is the way, that leadeth to PERDITION" (Matt. v. 48, vii. 13).

It may be objected that in this case the two words are removed too far to constitute an argument. The word "perfect" is introduced with the argument:--

> "That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven; for He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good."

The word "perdition" is introduced with the argument:--

> "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask Him."

The distance between the two words is greater than in Phil. iii. by reason of the long chapter devoted to "reward", either present or future, that comes in between. This, however, but connects it more strongly with Hebrews. While these two passages clearly demonstrate the fact that perdition is a true alternative to perfection, one other occurrence will reveal the reason why:--

> "There came a woman having an alasbaster box of very precious ointment . . . . . To what purpose is this WASTE" (Matt. xxvi. 7, 8).

It would not be good sense to translate the word here "perdition", but nevertheless it is the same. Its usage throws vivid light upon the danger that threatened the Hebrews.

Instead of going on to perfection they were in danger of drawing back unto sheer waste; "Nothing but leaves"; "Wood, hay and stubble"; "Saved, yet so as through fire"; "Nigh unto cursing". Here we must stay, but shall have to take up the passage again as introductory to the great chapter on Faith, namely, Hebrews xi.

While we may not be Hebrews, the close parallel with Phil. iii. makes this passage one of solemn import to us all.

The Language of Doctrinal Definition.
pp. 14, 15

A plea for the fuller recognition of the importance of the Hebrew words employed in the teaching of doctrinal truth.

In a recent discussion concerning the correct translation of a word, we turned from the Greek of the N.T. and based our argument upon the Hebrew equivalent in the O.T. This has appeared in the eyes of some as the result of a "policy"; instead it is the practice of a "principle". On page 98 of our July 1925 number (Volume XV) we said:--

> "Without attempting to justify or explain the following statement, I have come to the conclusion that the language of revelation and of doctrine is not primarily N.T. Greek, but O.T. Hebrew, and that it is dangerous to build up a theory upon the etymology of Greek words without continually checking it by the Hebrew equivalent. We may look into this matter upon some future occasion."

Let us give the matter a consideration now.

Doctrine rooted in O.T.

When we speak of such subjects as Sin, Sacrifice, Sanctification, Justification, Grace, Forgiveness, Soul, Spirit, Life and Death, while we readily agree that the crown and climax of these doctrines is to be found in the N.T., we most surely perceive that each and every one of these doctrines has been practically defined once and for good by the words used in the Hebrew O.T. This we found in connection with the word "faith" (see pages 97-99 of Volume XV).

Seeing that the Greek N.T. is largely taken up with the fulfillment of O.T. promises, it is impossible, if connected thought and sane argument is to rule, that doctrines should suddenly take on characteristics that are derived merely from the meaning and usage of the Greek word employed to translate the Hebrew equivalent.

When we read of sacrifice in the N.T., nothing pertaining to the Greek word must be allowed to overrule or minimize the established meaning of the word in the O.T. It is impossible to fix upon the Greek word translated "sin" and build up a doctrine that ignores or treats merely as supplemental that Hebrew teaching which should rather be looked upon as fundamental.

God and Lord.

Perhaps two rather extreme examples may help us to appreciate the position of affairs. The Hebrew words El and Elohim are translated into Greek by Theos and into English by God. These translations are quite correct so long as we leave them as translations, but the moment we attempt to seek the truth concerning "God" by looking into the derivation and connotation of either the Greek or English word, we leave the true foundation.

God has revealed Himself under the name of El or Elohim, words which include the idea of "strength", possibly "secret" and having affinity with words meaning a species of "oak", a "ram", or other horned animal, and portions of a "building". Now these are Divinely inspired associations and lead on in the understanding of what El, "God", means. Theos is merely the Greek translation, a convenient word, but not to be looked upon in the same light as El and Elohim.

The O.T. name "Jehovah" is translated in the Greek by kurios, which means "Lord". We cannot get a glimpse of the actual meaning of "Jehovah" by looking at the word kurios. The Greek word implies authority, property, possession, and can be used of men as well as of God, for it is translated in the A.V. sometimes "Lord" and sometimes "sir". Now whatever we may believe as to the meaning of the Hebrew "Jehovah", it is agreed that it is formed from a part of the verb "to be", and that it is given in the paraphrase of Rev. i. 4, "He Who is, and Which was, and Who is to come". While therefore the word kurios "Lord" is quite good as a Greek translation, it is hopeless to attempt to discover the real meaning of the name Jehovah except by reference to the Hebrew.

There are of course some subjects of revelation which are peculiar to the N.T. Of these we do not speak, but "sin" is most certainly not one of them. We shall find the principle suggested here of service when seeking to understand the teaching of Romans on "Justification". We will not elaborate the theme further here, believing that enough has been said to make the matter clear to any interested reader.

The Ministry of Consolation.

#19. The God of patience, consolation, and hope.
pp. 94, 95

> "Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be likeminded . . . . . Now the God of hope fill you with all joy" (Rom. xv. 5 and 13).

It is not our intention at the moment to show the relation of these titles with the practical and the dispensational teaching in which they are set. Our present purpose is simpler. In II Thess. ii. 16 we have an aionian consolation connected with good hope. Here, in Rom. xv., God is called the God of patience, consolation and hope. We have seen the close association of consolation and hope, here we see the link between them—patience, "the patience of hope". What work is to faith, what labour is to love, that patience is to hope. Work perfects faith.

> "Seest thou how faith wrought with his (Abraham's) works, and by works was faith made perfect?" (James ii. 22).

Patience has a perfect work to perform. It is not sufficient to hold the teaching of the pre-millennial coming of the Lord. It is not sufficient to be a "Second Adventist". Scripture speaks of those who "love" His appearing, who because they have this hope, "purify" themselves. So, to entertain the blessed hope scripturally we shall realize its calming influence in the midst of life's alarms, we shall be saved from murmuring in the face of life's disappointments, we shall be saved from despair when we face life's frailties. As patience flows from hope, so consolation flows from both, and each re-act upon the other to their mutual strengthening:--

> "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" (James v. 8).

As we look at the context of Rom. xv. 5 there are two items that contribute further to our understanding of this ministry of consolation. In verse 5 we have the title, "the God of patience and consolation", but in verse 4 that title is made very clear, for there we read:--

> "That we through the patience and consolation of the Scriptures might have hope."

This reference to the Scriptures prevents us from flying off into the realm of imagination or mere experiences, for God Himself here condescends to limit His titles and their scope to what is "written for our learning".

The outcome of this patience and consolation of the Scriptures with which God Himself is so intimately related, is to be manifested in the unity of His believing people. There were two grounds for disunity in the church at Rome as chapter xiv. clearly shows, but the patience of God was to regulate the inter-relation of Jewish and Gentile saints in order that they may > "Receive one another, even as Christ also received us to the glory of God" (Rom. xv. 7).

#20. The Grace of Waiting . . . . . Watching and Waiting. pp. 110, 111

The R.V. of Isa. lxiv. 4 speaks of God as One "Who worketh for him that waiteth for Him", while Rotherham's translation says:--

> "Although from age-past times it was never heard, it was not perceived by the ear, neither did the eye ever see, that a God beside Thee could work for the man who waited for Him."

The context speaks of the misery and desolation that had befallen Israel, and their hope is expressed in the words "Look down", "Come down" (Isa. lxiii. 15, lxiv. 1). All that man can do is to wait. The peculiar character of God is brought forward, in that unlike anything that had been heard or seen He worketh for him that waiteth for Him.

Is there no word of peace and assurance here for the child of God in the present day? Is it no encouragement to believe that while he perforce must wait, God can work? So important is this attitude of waiting, that Isaiah elsewhere tells us that God waits until we are led to wait: "And therefore will the Lord wait, that He may be gracious unto you . . . . . blessed are all they that wait for Him" (Isa. xxx. 18). He waits that He may be gracious. We wait and are blessed.

Waiting without murmuring and without anxiety is the essence of the life of faith: "The vision is yet for an appointed time . . . . . wait for it . . . . . the just shall live by his faith" (Hab. ii. 3, 4). Moses must wait the appointed time, 80 years, before he is ready to lead Israel out of Egypt. Joseph must wait, and endure false charges and prison, until the appointed moment places him upon the throne. God Himself waits, that He may be gracious. The long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah. The very creation itself is waiting the day of deliverance. Let us then with patience wait, knowing that in the silent years, while we must wait, God is working.

The verse quoted above from Isa. lxiv. is quoted in I Cor. ii. 9 but with a slight change of wording: "the things that God hath prepared for them that love Him." "To wait" then in the scriptural sense is "to love", or rather we wait confidently and uncomplainingly because we love. Here, instead of Israel's restoration, we have that which God ordained before the ages unto our glory (I Cor. ii. 7-9).

To wait not only fulfils the idea of "faith" (Hab. ii.), and "love" (I Cor. ii.), but also "hope". "But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it"

(Rom. viii. 25). It is a comforting thought that a quiet uncomplaining waiting for God may express in simple fashion the sublime grace of faith, hope, and love.

Waiting and waiting.

He who manifested the grace of waiting, and expressed by patience the truth of living by faith, found strength for waiting in the exercise of watching: "I . . . . . will watch to see what He will say to me . . . . . and the Lord answered . . . . . wait . . . . ." (Hab. ii. 1-4). To wait unintelligently may be mere inertia; to wait because one knows the will of the Lord may be the most active service: "When I . . . . . meditate on Thee in the night watches. Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice" (Psa. lxiii. 6, 7). "Watch therefore", said the Lord to His disciples, and proceeded to tell of the servant who failing to watch failed to wait, and said, "My Lord delayeth His coming" (Matt. xxiv. 42-51).

Watching and waiting merge in experience:--

> "I wait for the Lord, my soul doth wait, and in His word do I hope. My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning: I say, more than they that watch for the morning" (Psa. cxxx. 5, 6).

My soul waiteth, my soul watcheth, the two are constant companions. One of the characteristics of the Thessalonian believers was that they waited for the Son of God from heaven. This is found in the first chapter. In the last chapter, continuing the subject of the coming of the Lord commenced in chapter iv., we find waiting translated into terms of watching: "Let us watch and be sober" (I Thess. i. 10; v. 6).

> "Watchman, what of the night? . . . . . The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night" (Isa. xxi. 11, 12).

Let us watch and wait, for joy cometh in the morning.

#21. "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and He shall sustain thee" (Psa. lv. 22).
pp. 157 - 159

Here we have a very gracious word, which knows no bounds of dispensational distinction, but remains "present truth", until the "former things pass away". Let us pass it in review, and as we do so may the Spirit of all truth minister the rich fulness of Christ to our hearts and minds. What are you invited to do?

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord."

There is something very vigorous about the word "cast". It is used of the casting down of the fallen cherub (Ezek. xxviii. 17), of the casting of sins behind the Lord's back (Isa. xxxviii. 17). We are not invited to share the burden with the Lord, He rather bids us get rid of it, not in part, but as a whole.

"Thy burden."—If we would speak truth it is impossible to avoid being personal. Sin is so personal, aye, death is so personal too, with its forerunners, sorrow and vanity and vexation of spirit. The Lord does not speak of burdens generally, but of "thy" burden in particular. Now we will grant at once that "thy burden" is peculiar. It is connected so intimately with yourself. It concerns you private life, it is involved with your tears and your griefs, with your hopes and your disappointments; you feel that it is hardly the thing to cast that upon the Lord, yet that is what he says. "Cast THY burden upon the Lord."

Then this word burden is rather a peculiar one. It is not the usual word for burden in the O.T. The margin shows that the word is "gift", and the literal meaning is, "which He hath given thee, i.e., thy lot". He therefore knows all about it, and has given it to thee, so that having tasted of its bitterness, and felt its sting, having realized its sorrow, you may be led to the Lord Himself to find your all in Him.

To contemplate the idea that the "burden" which we carry has been "allotted" by the Lord may cause us either to rebel or to bow according as the truth holds sway over our hearts. Look at a portion of the burden that the Psalmist was bearing:--

> "The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart."
> "His words were softer than oil, yet were they drawn swords. Cast thy burden upon the Lord" (Psa. lv. 21, 22).

This surely is a grievous trial. Nothing seems so base as betrayal, yet as we think of that word we think of Judas, and we think of Christ, and all His gracious forbearance and longsuffering. Is there no echo of Psa. lv. 22 in the words of that betrayed One? When facing the rejection that had come, He said:--

> "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."
> "Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart" (Matt. xi. 28-30).

What is the Lord's promise? "He shall sustain thee."

Sustain.—He shall "feed" thee as the word is translated in I Kings xvii. 4, "I have commanded the ravens to feed thee". He shall sustain, as the word is translated in I King xvii. 9, "I have commanded a widow . . . . . to sustain thee". Elijah's allotted portion of trial was sustained by the Lord, Who was behind the ravens and the widow.

Yet more than feeding and nourishing the word means "contain" (I Kings vii. 26) as well as sustain, "comprehend" (Isa. xl. 12), and "make provision for" (I Kings iv. 7). The Lord Who appointed the wilderness wandering also "sustain" His people in it (Neh. ix. 21). The Lord Who suffered Jacob to be grieved at the loss of Joseph appointed also that Joseph should "nourish" his father in the hour of need (Gen. xlvii. 12).

As we think of Job, of Joseph, of Jacob, of Elijah, of Israel, the invitation of Psa. lv. becomes more insistent, more attractive, more real.

"Cast THY burden upon the Lord, and He shall sustain THEE."

Further, is there not a real connection between this "thy" and "thee"? Can we hope for this sustaining apart from this casting? He Who bore our sins in His Own body on the tree can surely bear our burdens. You who have been made free from sin; can you not believe that He can make you free from care? "Care" or "anxiety" is the LXX translation of Psa. lv. 22, and brings Phil. iv. 6, 7 forward as a N.T. parallel and explanation. "Be careful for nothing" (care is the burden of the Psalm), "but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving" (this is how the burden is "cast"), "and the peace of God, which passeth all understanding", this shall be the sustenance, the nourishment, the provision throughout the pathway of faith.

Peter's words, "Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you" (I Pet. v. 7) bring Psa. lv. 22 over bodily into the N.T., placing it in an epistle the theme of which is "suffering in view of glory", and which warns us, in spite of the peculiarity of our allotted portion, to:-- > "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you" (I Pet. iv. 12).

May the contemplation of these words mean the losing of burdens for many of the Lord's tried ones, for "He is faithful that promised".

Studies in the Epistles of the Mystery.

#77. Christ and the church in home and business (Eph. v. 22 - vi. 9).

pp. 17 - 25

The last words of Eph. v. 21 are:--

> "Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God."

The opening words of the new section are:--

> "Wives submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord."

We are evidently embarking upon an application of teaching of verse 21, and therefore must remember that while the wives are here told specifically to submit to their own husbands, it is only a working out of that spirit that reverences Christ and submits to whatever He shall lay upon us. Further, the submission of the wife to the husband is "as unto the Lord", and this spirit runs throughout the sixfold command. Before tracing this through the section before us, let us seek an understanding of the word "submit", for unless we understand a command our obedience will not be of a very high order.

The meaning of submission.

The word translated "submit" is hupotasso, and is used in Ephesians as follows:--

> "And hath put all things under His feet" (i. 22).
> "Submitting yourselves one to another" (v. 21).
> "Wives submit yourselves" (v. 22).
> "As the church is subject unto Christ" (v. 24).

Tasso properly means to set in order, as in Luke vii. 8. In the passive it carries the idea of "being disposed" as opposed to "judging oneself not worthy", as in Acts xiii. 48.

Taxis indicates order, arrangement (I Cor. xiv. 40; Col. ii. 5). Without multiplying examples, it will be seen that the idea of "submission" in Eph. v. is not of a humiliating or servile description, but of so recognizing the Lordship of Christ as to be willing or the lowest or the highest place as He shall will. It will be seen that the husband who acts in his position as "head of the wife" is as submissive to the will of the Lord as is the wife who sets forth the relative position of the church.

When we remember that the first occurrence of the word is Luke ii. 51, "and came to Nazareth and was subject unto them", surely the last shred of rebellion must vanish as we realize what the submission involved.

Submission "as unto Christ".

A1 | Eph. v. 22-24. Wives submit, as the church to Christ.
B1 | Eph. v. 25-33. Husbands love, as Chris the church.
A2 | Eph. vi. 1-3. Children obey in the Lord.
B2 | Eph. vi. 4. Fathers train in nurture of the Lord.
A3 | Eph. vi. 5-8. Slaves obey, as unto the Christ.
B3 | Eph. vi. 9. Masters do the same, for Master in heaven.

A great deal of harmful discussion has revolved around the question, "Should the bride say obey at the marriage service?" When Paul treats of the social fabric and its inter-relation, he reserves the word "obey" to children and slaves, with their correlatives "bring up" and "forbear threatening", using the higher word "submit" of the wife. This word "submit" is wrongly translated "obedient to their own husbands" in Titus ii. 5. The only passage where wives are said to obey is I Pet. iii. 6, which grows out of the submission of verses 1-5. A wife who has submitted to the Divine arrangement will of necessity "obey" when obedience is demanded, but it is the result of a willing compliance with the Lord's will, a grateful seizing of the opportunity to typify the church's relation to the Lord, a very different thing from that obedience of the child, which is "right", and according to commandment.

The relation of wives and husbands.

"Wives submit . . . . . as the church unto Christ."
"Husbands love . . . . . as Christ the church."

It will be seen that we are upon higher ground than that of I Cor. xi. & xiv. and I Tim. ii. There the apostle goes back to Nature and Creation.

> "For man is not of the woman, but woman of the man, neither was man created for the woman; but the woman for the man . . . . . Doth not even nature itself teach you" (I Cor. xi. 1-16).

Law.

> "Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be submissive, as also saith the law" (I Cor. xiv. 34).

Creation and Sin.

> "For Adam was first formed, then Eve, and Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived has come to be in transgression" (I Tim. ii. 9-15).

The apostle had all these courses open before him to enforce his point, but he passes them all by for the greater and higher motive used in Eph. v. To the wife the apostle says, "The husband is the head of the wife", but to the husband he says, "Love your wives". He feels under no necessity to say, "Husbands rule your wives". To each is the word given tempered with much graciousness. Because the husband is head that does not mean ruthless rule and rough shod methods. The husband in Christ is "submitted" to an obligation that cannot be computed. He is to love his wife, "even as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself for it".

Perhaps when wives are loved with that kind of love, all argument as to submission and obedience will become unnecessary. The love of the husband moreover is to be all in the direction of blessing, not for selfish ends:--

> "That he might sanctify, cleanse, present a church in glory, not having spot, or wrinkle or any such thing: but that it may be holy and without blemish" (Eph. v. 26, 27).

Take one item, perhaps the lowliest, "not having wrinkle". The word "wrinkle" in the original means exactly the same as the English word, viz., "a corrugation of the skin", and is allied with rhusa (old age, the time of wrinkles). Care and anxiety, worry of any description are the chief causes of wrinkles; how this reveals the character of the husband's love, that shields the wife from as many anxieties as is possible.

The physical and the spiritual.

Throughout this passage the physical interchanges with the spiritual as type with antitype.

A1 | Physical. Wives submit.
B1 | Spiritual. As the church.
A2 | Physical. Husbands. So ought men.
B2 | Spiritual. Even as the Lord the church.
A3 | Physical. Wives and husbands. One flesh.
B3 | Spiritual. The mystery. Christ and His church.

The union of husband and wife is looked upon in Scripture as something deeper than a civil or religious joining together of two persons in marriage. Every true marriage harks back to Eden:--

> "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh" (Eph. v. 31).

The same apostle says in I Cor. vi. 17, "he that is joined to the Lord is one spirit", which shows the antitype to be mentally supplied in Eph. v. 31, 32. Moreover the argument concerning a man nourishing and cherishing his own body finds its alternative in that sin which is against his own body (I Cor. vi. 18). If I Cor. vi. 15-20 be carefully weighed with Eph. v. 28-32, a great deal of irrelevant matter need never have been written.

It is an established truth that the church of Ephesians is "the body" and "the new man". Now the Scriptures uses figures with discretion. The bridal relationship to Christ belongs to another calling; in Ephesians we are dealing with the bridegroom if such a figure is allowable at all. The passage before us is not discussing the title of the church of the dispensation of the mystery, it is dealing with the relationship of husbands and wives who belong to this dispensation. If Eph. v. teaches that the church is "the bride", Eph. vi. teaches that the church is "a child" and "a slave", neither of which titles are true. The last two may be true of course of individuals.

The great mystery.

When the apostle draws to the conclusion of his exhortation to wives and husbands he says, "This is the great mystery, but I speak with a view to Christ and His church" (Eph. v. 32). That there is a mystery in marriage let anyone decide after reading Matt. xix. 5, 6, "And they twain shall be one flesh". Such is the quotation from Gen. ii. "Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh", is the comment of the Lord Himself. But, says the apostle, granting the sanctity and the mystery of marriage under the thought of "one flesh", the great mystery I have in mind is that union with the Lord which makes "one spirit". Nevertheless, turning back to the typical union of man and wife:--

> "Nevertheless let each one of you individually so love his wife as himself: and the wife see that she reverence her husband" (Eph. v. 33).

We have not felt called upon to enter into a detailed examination of the idea that the church of the body is also the bride, not wishing to spend time disproving an obvious failure to discern things that differ. If, however, we have misjudged our readers and there are those who have misgivings on this point, we may prepare an article upon the subject later.

Children and their parents.

> "Children, obey your parents in the Lord" (Eph. vi. 1).

How are we to understand the clause "in the Lord"? Does it imply disobedience to parents if they are not "in the Lord"? Does it mean only obey your parents in those things that you recognize are "in the Lord"? The first suggestion seems to be quite apart from the spirit of the Scriptures, the second presupposes too advanced a stage of spiritual perception. Col. iii. 20 supplies an answer:--

> "Children, obey your parents with respect to all things: for this is well pleasing in the Lord."

While the children here addressed would probably be connected with the church (for otherwise they would not hear this passage read at all), they are not placed upon so high a platform as that of husband and wife. The first reason given in Eph. vi. 1 is the primitive one, "for it is right".

In the training of our children, while grace and love and even an appeal to their profession of faith are all legitimate, there is a sense in which it differs from that of the more adult believer. Not only is such obedience "right", but the apostle even goes back to the fifth commandment with promise.

We are not to reason from this that an obedient child of parents who are members of the body is assured a long life on the earth, but to gather from the quotation the marked approval of the Lord upon the obedience of children to parents, even though "the promise" now may be expressed in some other way than "long life upon the earth". On the other hand it is morally certain that seeds are sown in childhood by disobedience that materially influence their well-being in after years. As we have already indicated, children and slaves are addressed differently from wives, and this may be the better seen by noticing the recurring features:--

A | vi. 1-3. a | Ye children.
b | Be obedient.
c | To parents.
d | "Right." "Promise."
B | vi. 4. e | And ye fathers.
f | Provoke not.
g | Your children.
h | Bring them up.
A | vi. 5-8. a | Ye slaves.
b | Be obedient.
c | To masters.
d | "As unto Christ." "Reward."
B | vi. 9. e | And ye masters.
f | Threaten not.
g | Them.
h | Your Master is in heaven.

Promise and reward figure more prominently here. While "parents" are spoken of in Eph. vi. 1, and "father and mother" separately mentioned in verse 2, "fathers" are specially addressed in verse 4.

One of the results of modern civilization has been the transference of this responsibility from the father to the mother. To thousands of young children the father is someone who appears on the scene at week-ends, whose name is held up as a kind of bogey as a last recourse, but who does not come into every-day living contact with the growing child. The mother's duties connected with the material and physical well-being of the child often prevent the exercise of those other elements of training that are so necessary.

Mother-love is protective. Father-love is corrective as well. Mother-love shields the child from the due results of its own wrong-doing, whereas father-love looks ahead and sees the dire results in the future. As neither parent can be a substitute for the other, the child needs both, but in "discipline and instruction" (en paideia kai nouthesia) the father is the true agent. Heb. xii. 5-11 should be read in this connection. The apostle explains fairly clearly what he conceives to be the functions of the mother and the father in I Thess. ii. 7-11:--

> "We were gentle in the midst of you, as a nursing mother cherisheth her own children."

This motherliness is further expanded in such words as "being affectionately desirous", "willing to impart our very lives", "ye were endeared to us", "labouring night and day so as not be burdensome". Who that knows mother-love cannot sense it here? The apostle, however, was a father to these saints as well as a mother. So the language changes. He speaks of his deportment as "pious", "righteous", "blameless", and that he "exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you as a father doth his own children, that ye should walk worthy". Such is the necessary combination for true child welfare. Before the apostle says one word as to how the children were to be disciplined, he gives a caution to the fathers, "and ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath". Col. iii. 21 says, "Father, provoke not your children, lest they be discouraged". Rom. x. 19 uses the expression "provoke to wrath" in the words, "by a foolish nation I will anger you". The lesser word in Col. iii. means "to exasperate".

Have we never entered a home and felt the baneful effects of this "exasperation" and "discouragement"? Children have a keen sense of justice and will take punishment for offences without resentment when they know that they are being dealt with rightly. They have no words oftentimes to explain the motives for their actions, and often that which seems a peculiarly flagrant case of disobedience or malice may prove to be the result of some childish misconstruction or misunderstanding. We appeal to all fathers who may read these words to weigh these passages over before the Lord, seeking to avoid the discouraging attitude and gladly assuming the responsibility of disciplining and instructing those who are dependent upon them.

These things have a serious meaning moreover when considered in the light of ministry, for although none would now speak of themselves as bishops or deacons, yet the principle of I Tim. iii. 1-12 still holds good:--

> "One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all dignity. For if a man knows not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?"

Slaves and masters.

The question of "Christianity and slavery" is never raised in the N.T. These things were left for the working of the truth to accomplish in time. The slave of the apostle's day and the servant of to-day may differ in many things, even to great extremes, but the principle of their service remains unaltered. The child of God then or the child of God now is compelled to serve an earthly master is provided with no lower a standard than:--

> "In singleness of your heart, as unto Christ. Not with eye service, as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. With good will doing service as to the Lord and not to men" (Eph. vi. 5-7).

These words were once read by a reader of The Berean Expositor to an extremist in social matters who explained passionately, "The man who wrote that was a devil". The brother said, "Well, what do you say of the man who wrote this?" and read verse 9, "and, ye masters, do the same things unto them". We do not know his reply, but it is obvious that the apostle was no champion of class warfare. That there are crying evils among servants and masters no one can deny, but the child of God is not left here to reform or to patch up, but to witness for the truth, to endure what may come as a result and to leave his case with the Lord:--

> "Knowing that whatsoever good things any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free" (Eph. vi. 8).

We have had a very unscriptural idea based upon this verse presented to us. It is this. Only the good we do will be dealt with by the Lord in that day, for this verse says nothing about any bad thing we may have done. The good will be recognized, the evil will have been forgiven. That is a very "comfortable" doctrine no doubt, but as Col. iii. 24, 25 writes upon the same theme and to the same people dispensationally it cannot hold:--

> "Knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance: for ye serve the Lord Christ. But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done: and there is no respect of persons."

Masters are exhorted in Ephesians to "do the same things" which in Colossians becomes "give that which is just and equal", which is not incipient communism, but refers to the relation of wages to service, that it must be equitable. Further, the master is exhorted to "forbear threatening", a matter of even greater difficulty than to-day, when the slaves were the personal property of their masters and without redress.

Behold, the dreamer!

Those of us who have received the truth of the mystery and who have sought to carry out as far as possible its teaching have to submit to the misunderstandings of our fellows, and among the charges made against us is that we have exchanged realities for dreams, that we are no longer a practical force, etc. We wonder how many husbands and wives when faced with Eph. v. would dare to speak of our teaching as unpractical and only stuff for dreamers? We wonder how many fathers, surveying their children's progress, would deny the practical teaching of Eph. vi., to say nothing of the servants and the masters that are forming into hostile camps even though professing the same faith?

The world has a proverb, "Charity begins at home", and if home life and business life were permeated with the spirit of Eph. v. and vi. the church life and gospel testimony would look after itself. God is not served by multiplying meetings and neglecting the claims of home. God is not served at the expense of faithful daily service or at the expense of faithful recognition. In many things we offend all. Let us for the remainder of our time seek grace to live in harmony with the practical outcome of being members of that church of which Christ is the Head, and the church His body.

#78. The power of His might (Eph. vi. 10).
pp. 81 - 86

"Finally."—At length this wondrous epistle nears its close. In height, depth, length and breadth it stands without a peer in the whole range of inspired Scripture. Readers of The Berean Expositor must have sense that our conception of truth makes this epistle to us something akin to what the epistle to the Galatians was to Luther. It has given us a liberty beyond the dreams of man. It reveals a Christ raised far above all, Who fills all in all, Who ascended and descended that He might fill all things, Whose love surpasses knowledge, Whose riches are unsearchable. It has given us a sacred trust: a "good deposit" to guard, a unity to keep. It has brought its blessedness into every department of life. It takes us back before the overthrow of the world, and on to the ages yet to come. Its grace abounds. What then shall be the "Finally" of the apostle?

He reminds us that we are not actually seated in the heavenlies, but beset by foes who at present hold to these very spheres. Though fellow-citizens with the saints, we are yet walking in the wilderness. Though sealed unto the day of redemption, we have to remember that we actually live in an evil day. Hence the apostle concludes his letter with an exhortation to be strong, to put on the armour of God, to stand, to watch and to pray. The language of faith says, as we look at our inheritance in the heavenlies, "Let us go up at once and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it" (Num. xiii. 30). Caleb, who said these words, tasted something of the strength that Paul refers to here, and knew something of the need for the armour and the sword:--

> "And now, behold, the Lord hath kept me alive, as He said, these forty and five years . . . . . as yet I am as strong this day as I was in the day that Moses sent me . . . . . for war . . . . ." (Joshua xiv. 10, 11).

Before the armour, however, comes the strength, for without the necessary strength armour would be but a death-trap: "Be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might" (Eph. vi. 10). Philosophers have said to men "Be strong". Psychologists tell us to say to ourselves "Be strong", but the only strength that will avail us in this conflict is the strength that is ours in the Lord.

The power of His resurrection.

No other writer in the N.T. uses the word which is here translated "be strong" except Luke, who in Acts ix. 22 uses it of Paul himself. The exception but proves the rule. The word is peculiar to the teaching of Paul and his own experience of the risen Lord.

The eight occurrences of the word endunamao speak of resurrection, and the seven occurrences in the epistles are worth a moment's attention.

Endunamao in Paul's epistles.

A | Rom. iv. 19, 20. Strong, not weak, in faith.--O.T.
B | a | Eph. vi. 10. Strong in the Lord.--WAR. \
b | Phil. iv. 13. Strong in Christ.--ENDURANCE. \ After
C | I Tim. i. 12. Christ Jesus.--MINISTRY. } Acts
B | a | II Tim. ii. 1. Strong in grace.--WAR. / xxviii.
b | II Tim. iv. 17. Strong in the Lord.--ENDURANCE. /
A | Heb. xi. 34. Strong in faith, out of weakness.--O.T.

The first example, that of Abraham, is a strong witness for "the power of His resurrection", for it is said that "he believed God Who quickeneth the dead". The words of Eph. vi. 10 look back to Eph. i. 19. In vi. 10 we have endunamao, "be strong"; kratos, "power"; ischus, "might". In i. 19 we have dunamis, "power"; ischus, "mighty"; kratos, "power".

The believer is turned back to the risen and ascended Christ as the source of the power whereby he may stand the shock of battle. There is no other power at present either available or sufficient. All believers, whether conscious of it as an experimental fact or not, "have the sentence of death in themselves that they should not trust in themselves, but in God which raiseth the dead" (II Cor. i. 9).

The essential basis.

Before principalities and powers come into view as opponents in Eph. vi., a necessary fact is pre-supposed, and that is the teaching of Rom. v.-viii. This basic portion of Scripture is devoted to the exposition of two laws, viz.,:--

1. The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus. \ (Rom. viii. 2).
2. The law of sin and death. /

It is not for us to deal with Romans in this article; we simply trace the stream of this law of the spirit of life until it reaches the glorious climax of Rom. viii. 37-39:--

> "In all these things we are MORE THAN CONQUERORS through Him that loved us. For I Am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor PRINCIPALITIES, nor POWERS . . . . . shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Here is the essential basis of Eph. vi. 10. In Christ and by virtue of His resurrection we are already "more than conquerors" over "principalities and powers". We go forth to this unequal conflict in "the power of His resurrection". We go forth to achieve experimentally that victory already accomplished in Christ. So far as He is concerned, He has been raised far above all principality and power (Eph. i. 21, 23). So far as the Lord Himself is concerned, He "stripped off principalities and powers, and made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it" (Col. ii. 15). To attempt the conflict of Eph. vi. in any other power than that of the risen Christ is to seek defeat. To attempt it in that power is to make experimental proof of the fact that in Him we are "more than conquerors".

Are all the saved Soldiers?

If we allow the typical history of Israel to influence us, we may conclude that only those who have reached spiritual maturity are called upon to take up the armour:--

> "From twenty years old and upward, all that are able to go forth to war in Israel" (Num. i. 3).

It was no light matter to be "chosen as a soldier" as both II Tim. ii. and Num. xiv. will show:--

> "Your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness; and all that were numbered of you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old and upward, which murmured against Me" (Num. xiv. 29).

The two exceptions to this statement are Caleb and Joshua. Of Caleb the Lord said:--

> "He had another spirit with him, and hath followed Me fully, him will I bring into the land" (Num. xiv. 24).

Now the words "hath followed Me fully" are literally "hath filled after Me", and Col. i. 24 comes to mind as a close parallel:--

> "And fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ."

To Joshua the Lord had said:--

> "Moses . . . . . is dead . . . . . arise . . . . . be strong" (Joshua i. 2-6).

Just as the inheritance of Israel was in possession of the "giants" who had to be overcome in the strength of the Lord, so the inheritance of the church in the heavenlies is held by spiritual foes of high rank and power. The soldier has something to win or to lose:--

> "Thou therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus . . . . . endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ" (II Tim. ii. 1-3).

A crown is in view and reigning with Christ (ii. 4-12). This recurs in chapter iv., where Paul speaking of himself says:--

> "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown" (II Tim. iv. 7, 8).

Yet, further, it is in the parallel epistle of the "Prize", namely Philippians, that Paul calls Epaphroditus a "fellow-soldier". We feel therefore with these passages before us that every believer is not necessarily numbered among the ranks of those able to go forth to war.

Stand and Withstand.

It is noteworthy that the actual word "fight" does not occur in Eph. vi. We are instructed that our "wrestling" is not towards (pros) flesh and blood, but spiritual foes. The word that is most prominent in the description of the conflict is the word "stand":--

> "That ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil-- . . . . . that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. STAND THEREFORE" (Eph. vi. 11-14).

There appears to be three phases of conflict suggested here:--

1. Standing against the wiles of the devil.
2. Withstanding in the evil day.
3. Having worked out all, to stand.

The wiles of the devil are in active operation at the present time; open warfare is not yet the order of the day. Wiles, strategems, craft, cunning, snares, wolves in sheep's clothing, ministers of satan like ministers of righteousness, these are some of the devil's devices. Eph. iv. 14 uses the word methodeia, translated "lie in wait to deceive", which has been rendered a "systematic deception". We find the system at work in II Cor. iv. There Paul repudiates the "craftiness" and the "deceitful handling of the word of God" by his opponent, and appears clad in the armour of righteousness as he battles for the truth (II Cor. iv. 2-4; vi. 7). The days in which we live are evil (Eph. v. 16), evil is to increase (II Tim. iii. 13). We are at present training for the mighty battle that lies ahead. Some interpret the words "having done all" by "having overcome all the spiritual foes". While it certainly involves that thought, we shall come nearer to the truth by observing the actual word employed and its usage in other passages. Katergazomai means to thoroughly work, or to achieve. Two occurrences of the word in the epistles seem to give light upon its meaning in Eph. vi. The first is:--

> "WORK OUT your own salvation with fear and trembling" (Phil. ii. 12).

Salvation was the blessed possession of the Philippians, but the object of that epistle is to urge these believers into practical realization of their position in Christ. It speaks of "striving", of running for a "prize", of "suffering", and of the "power of His resurrection". The other passage is II Cor. iv. 17:--

> "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, WORKETH for us a far more exceeding eternal weight of glory."

Once again we have suffering connected with glory. So in Eph. vi. 13, "Having worked out all, to stand".

We cannot help seeing in this a reference back to Rom. viii. 37-39. We have been saved, let us work out this salvation. We have been made more than conquerors in Christ, let us work out this victory in our own experience. This appears to be the essence of the passage. More than conquerors in the risen Christ, putting the whole armour of God, withstanding every assault in the "power of His might", and standing when all is finished, this is our portion. We must consider in subsequent papers:--

1. The whole armour of God, and
2. The three-fold nature of the conflict.

Meanwhile there is no more important word for the soldier of Christ to-day than "STAND THEREFORE".

#79. The whole armour of God (Eph. vi. 11-18).
pp. 121 - 125

The familiar word "panoply" is made up of pan, "all", and hoplon, "arms". Here in Eph. vi. 11 it is called the whole armour of God. The word occurs in but one other place in the N.T., viz., Luke xi. 22, where it is used of the whole armour of Satan (verse 18). In Luke xi. 18-22 we have the following words of Eph. vi., viz., "strong", "panoply" and "stand". How is it possible to stand against the wiles of Satan, clad as he is in his whole armour in which he trusts, unless we put on the whole armour of God? Nothing less than this can avail in that conflict. There is reason therefore for the apostle's full title. "The whole armour of God."

This armour of God has two other descriptions given to it by the apostle in his epistles, and just as the armour of God is seen set over against the armour of the Devil, so in these other titles the Devil's armoury is suggested by antithesis.

"The armour of righteousness" (II Cor. vi. 7) suggests the unrighteousness that characterises Satan's warfare. This armour moreover is described as being "on the right hand and on the left" (II Cor. vi. 7). Schleusner sees in this a reference to the amphidexios, "right-handed on both sides", a Greek name for the soldier fully and completely armed, as we say, head to foot, cap-a-pie, or as Paul said to the good soldier Timothy, "thoroughly furnished" (II Tim. iii. 17).

"The armour of light" of Rom. xiii. 12 suggests the powers of darkness against whom the fight is directed. The negative is strongly stated in II Cor. x. 4, "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God". What a panoply! The armour of light, of right and of might, the whole armour of God.

The sixfold armour.

The whole armour of God comprises six pieces. Why six? One would have thought that such perfection would have been given a sevenfold presentation. The reason seems to be that warfare belongs to the "evil day", and it is not carried over into "the rest that remaineth to the people of God". There are six, not seven, references to the "mystery" in Ephesians. The mystery deals with the present interval of Israel's rejection. Both the armour and the present dispensation are perfect in themselves, but they imply an imperfect period. It has been said that the proximity of the Roman soldiers during the writing of Ephesians suggested the description of the armour to Paul the prisoner. Most if not all of what Paul has said is found in the prophecy of Isaiah and in the Psalms:--

> "Faithfulness shall be the girdle of His reins" (Isa. xi. 5).

The LXX translates faithfulness by aletheia, "truth", and reins by pleuras, "the sides" or loins. Here is the girdle of truth.

> "He put on righteousness as a breastplate, and an helmet of salvation upon His head" (Isa. lix. 17).

Here is the breastplate of righteousness and the helmet of salvation.

> "How beautiful . . . . . are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace" (Isa. lii. 7).

Here are the feet shod with preparation of the good tidings of peace.

> "He that made my mouth like a sharp sword" (Isa. xlix. 2).

Here is the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God.

> "His truth shall be my shield and buckler" (Psa. xci. 4).

"Truth" in the O.T. often stands for God's faithfulness. Here is the shield of faith.

Satan did not commence operations in Eph. vi., neither did God wait until Eph. vi. before providing His people with the panoply of God. Eve must have laid aside the armour when attacked by the Devil. She tampered with truth; she entertained doubts of God's faithfulness; she failed to quench the fiery darts of the wicked, and she handled the sword of the Spirit deceitfully.

The sixfold armour.

A | The GIRDLE. Truth or faithfulness.
B | The BREASTPLATE. Righteousness.
C | The SHOES. Gospel of peace.
A | The SHIELD. Faith or faithfulness.

B | The HELMET. Salvation.
C | The SWORD. The Word of God.

Let us notice some features that come into prominence by this twofold arrangement.

The breastplate and the helmet (heart and head).—There is no more vital connection in either law or gospel than that of righteousness and salvation. A salvation that had not righteousness as its basis would be useless in the conflict with the evil one. This is why in II Cor. vi. 7 Paul calls the whole armour "the armour of righteousness". The breastplate and the helmet are brought together in I Thess. v. 8, where the breastplate is "faith and love", and the helmet "the hope of salvation".

The shoes and the sword (feet and hands).—Both speak of a message. Once the gospel of peace, the other word of war. The idea conveyed by the word "preparation" seems to be that of a firm footing, the word being sometimes used for a "base" in the LXX. We must fully understand peace if we would succeed in war. The peace here appears to refer back to Eph. iv. 3 and ii. 15. Anything that breaks the unity of the spirit, or that introduces the first element of faction, will trip us up in the conflict, and well the evil one knows it.

The girdle and the shield (under and over all).—To an Eastern whose garments were loose and flowing, the girding of the loins was the initial act of preparation for service. We preserve the figure in our saying "buckle to" when we would urge anyone to diligence. The wiles of the devil can be met only by absolute sincerity. A secret doubt, a double heart, anything outside the single eye entertains a traitor within the camp who will betray us to the enemy. This feature has been brought forward in Eph. iv. 14, 15. The "wiles (methodeia) of the devil", "whereby they lie in wait to deceive", are met by "speaking the truth", or as the margin reads, "being sincere". The reference in Isa. xi. 5 speaks of righteousness and faithfulness in connection with the girdle, and we have observed before that practically every word translated faith and faithful in the O.T. is derived from the Hebrew amen, which also means truth. We have already alluded to the LXX translation, and there is no doubt that truth, sincerity and faithfulness are absolutely essential to the soldier of Christ.

The shield of faith.—Is this our faith or the Lord's faithfulness? The reference to Psa. xci. not only indicates that our shield and buckler is the Lord's faithfulness, but describes some of the "fiery darts":--

"Thou shalt not be afraid of the terror by night; nor of the arrow that flieth by day."

Proved armour.

We are exhorted to "put on" the armour of God, to "take" the armour, the shield, the helmet and the sword. Like the foolish virgins, it will be too late to start looking for armour in the evil day. How ridiculous young David must have looked with the armour of Saul upon his youthful limbs. David "assayed to go" for he had not proved them, and wisely put them aside. Smooth stones taken from the brook he had proved, and with the help of God they were more than sufficient. David's example should urge us to realize that if we are going to "withstand in the evil day" we must "stand" now. How shall we quit ourselves in the day of battle if we are strangers to the sword of the Spirit? How can we hope to quench the fiery darts of that fight if we have never proved the efficacy of the shield of faith? Our Lord, when tempted by the Devil in the wilderness, proved for us the power of that sword and the reliability of that shield. We can only be more than conquerors "through Him that loved us".

The present contest, though not the final battle, is not by any means a mere spectacle. The word "wrestle" comes from pallo, "to shake", and the word wrestle itself means "dust of meal", "ashes", "fine powder", etc. It is a wearing, grinding endurance, rather than the brilliant charge. Patience and unquestioned sincerity are demanded and that continually.

Not flesh and blood, but . . . . . spiritual wickedness.

Where our feet touch earth we are shod with peace, and while flesh and blood will often be bitterly opposed to us, we do not take up the armour of God against such. The only use of the armour against the flesh is found in Rom. xiii. 12-14:--

> "Put on the armour of light . . . . . put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make no provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof."

The foes against whom we wrestle are spiritual. The A.V. introduces the word "world" where the best texts omit it, this being the A.V. translation of aion, really "age", and it omits to translate the word "world" which does occur in composition. Rotherham's version seems to set the passage in its true light, giving each word its place:--

> "Against the principalities,\
> Against the authorities, } of this darkness,
> Against the world-holders,/
> Against the spiritual forces of wickedness in the heavenlies" (Eph. vi. 12).

The title "world-holder" is significant. Kosmokrator should be considered with the title of the Lord, pantokrator, "omnipotent" and "almighty". We may obtain a glimpse at the extent of the power and authority of these "world-holders of this darkness" by reading Dan. x. There we read of a messenger sent from heaven (5, 6), whose appearance was so glorious that at the sight Daniel's comeliness turned to corruption (8), yet this mighty messenger was successfully withstood for twenty-one days by "the prince of Persia", whose opposition was only overcome by the advent of Michael the archangel (13). Reference is made in verse 20 to another prince, "the prince of Grecia", and yet again in 21 to "Michael your prince". Now Dan. xii. 1 tells us that Michael is "the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people (Israel)". It appears therefore that with the exception of Israel, the nations of the earth were under the authority of one of the "world-holders of this darkness", and these facts cast light upon the present conflict.

It is to be observes that the cause of the opposition in Dan. x. was that the heavenly messenger was sent to show Daniel what was noted in “the Scripture of truth”. These principalities, powers and world-holders are summed up as “spiritual things (or forces) of wickedness in the heavenlies”.

Were it not that we can say with the apostle that we are persuaded “that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers . . . . . shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord” (Rom. viii. 38, 39), we should doubtless quail before these mighty opponents and sink lower than Daniel did, but Christ is risen and we are “more than conquerors through Him that loved us”, and strong in the Lord and in the power of His might, we shall both stand and withstand, knowing that “the God of peace shall bruise Satan under our feet shortly” (Rom. xvi. 20).

#80. The threefold conflict (Eph. vi. 12).
pp. 138 - 143

The questions that we are about to consider are of such importance that we deal with them here rather than wait until we reach the typical teaching in the series entitled "Fundamentals of Dispensational Truth". The questions are these:--

1. How far are we warranted in speaking of "war" against principalities and powers in the heavenlies, now?
2. Are these several phases of this conflict?
3. Can we learn anything from O.T. typical history?

A threefold conflict.

We believe the answer is that the conflict is threefold:--

1. We look back to the cross, and there see that Christ triumphed over principalities and powers, thereby rendering us "more than conquerors" in His victory (Col. ii. 15).
2. Our present conflict is with the "world-holders of this darkness", it is described as a wrestling.
3. A conflict upon a more vast scale will take place in the heavenlies, when the church prepares to enter its inheritance in resurrection.

These tree phases of conflict are found in the typical history of Israel.

The victory of the cross.

The first, which typifies the triumph over principalities and powers by the cross, and which lies at the basis of all victory (Rom. viii. 37-39), is set forth by the victory over Pharaoh, a victory in which Israel did nothing but "stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord, for . . . . . the Lord shall fight for you and ye shall hold your peace" (Exod. xiv. 14). This initial victory had far-reaching effects:--

> "The people shall hear, and be afraid: sorrow shall take hold on the inhabitants of Palestina . . . . . all the inhabitants of Canaan shall melt away . . . . . they shall be as still as a stone, till Thy people pass over, which Thou hast purchased" (Exod. xv. 14-16).

Rahab, of Jericho, said to the spies:--

> "I know that the Lord hath given you the land, and that your terror is fallen upon us, and that all the inhabitants of the land have melted because of you. For we have heard how the Lord dried up the water of the Red Sea for you, when ye came out of Egypt" (Josh. ii. 9, 10).

Here it will be seen that the initial victory at Israel's redemption went before them, melting the opposition of their foes. By reading Joshua ii. 10, 11, and v. 1, we see that the second victory, namely, that of Israel over Amalek, Sihon and Og, all of which be it noted are on "this side of Jordan", likewise carried consternation into the ranks of the Canaanites.

The present conflict.

The present conflict with the "world-holders of this darkness" is typified in Israel's battles with Amalek, Sihon and Og. We must remember that the reason why Israel were led through the wilderness, instead of taking the shorter road through the land of the Philistines, was to prevent the people from being discouraged, "lest peradventure the people repent when they see war" (Exod. xiii. 17). Consequently, the battles of the wilderness are not to be reckoned as "war" in the full sense. Our present conflict is spoken of as "wrestling", the shock of battle may be yet future.

It will help us considerably to note a few features of this typical wilderness struggle. The first great victory was immediately subsequent to redemption. After Amalek's attack Israel do not meet Canaanite foes until they have met with God, been cleansed, sanctified, and made a covenant people. Readers are already acquainted with the difference that exists between redemption and atonement. Before Israel could meet either King Og of Bashan or King Sihon of Heshbon, even on this side of Jordan, they needed the instruction and the types of acceptance foreshadowed in the tabernacle. This order is observed in Ephesians.

1. Redemption (Eph. i. 7).
2. Atonement; "made nigh"; "access" (Eph. ii.).
3. The conflict (Eph. vi.).

To invert this order, or to omit one section, is to court dismal failure. Moreover, Joshua, who led the people on to victory, was a man of the Word (Josh. i. 8). He knew the value of the "sword of the Spirit", and of that weapon that was mighty through God to the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan, as at Jericho. Let us now notice the foes of Israel's wilderness period.

Amalek.—Some think that it is an error to suppose that the Amalekites are descendants of Esau who had a grandson of that name (Gen. xxxvi. 10-16), for the country of the Amalekites is mentioned together with Canaanite nations, as that of the Rephaims and Amorites in Gen. xiv. 7, long before the birth of Esau, the grandfather of Amalek. Be this as it may, Amalek's attack is separated from the rest. So far as Israel were concerned Amalek's attack was a treacherous act:--

> "He met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou wast faint and weary" (Deut. xxv. 18).

His opportunity seems to have been provided by the murmuring and rebellious spirit of the people. Conquest no longer lay in "standing still and seeing the salvation of the Lord", but by active and prayerful co-operation. "Go fight" were the words of Joshua; "Go pray" the words to Moses. The opportunity afforded by murmuring and the power of prayer will not be lightly passed over by those to whom Eph. vi. comes as personal truth.

The essential character of Amalek's opposition, however, is found in the margin of Exod. xvii. 16, "Because the hand of Amalek is against the throne of the Lord". The "world-holders of this darkness" oppose the purpose of the ages, and that purpose involves the very throne of the Lord. The enthroned Christ and all His people are the great centre of Satanic attack. This is developed in full in the Book of the Revelation.

Saul, type of Antichrist as he was, the people's choice, the persecutor of the Lord's anointed (David) forfeits his throne through failure to blot out Amalek (I Sam. xxviii. 18). Haman the Agagite almost accomplished the destruction of Israel (Esther iii.). Balaam, however, foretold that Amalek, the first of the nations, should nevertheless end in destruction (Numb. xxiv. 20).

Sihon.—Israel sought no quarrel with Sihon. A request was sent asking Sihon to allow Israel "to pass through", their objective being the territory of Canaan but not of Sihon. Sihon, however, "would not suffer Israel to pass through his border". Our inheritance lies beyond the borders of this earth, even in the heavenlies, but the conflict started by Amalek is perpetuated by Sihon even here and now. Israel consequently smote Sihon and possessed his land "this side of Jordan" (Deut. iv. 47). In Numb. xxi. 1-3 we have one more encounter recorded:--

> "And when King Arad the Canaanite, which dwelt in the south, heard tell that Israel came by way of the spies, then he fought against Israel, and took some of them prisoners."

By way of the spies.—We know that Moses sent the spies (Numb. xiii. 17) at the command of the Lord (xiii. 1, 2), but we must not forget the words of Ezek. xx. 6:--

> "In the day that I lifted up mine hand unto them, to bring them forth of the land of Egypt into a land that I HAD ESPIED for them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands."

Was there any element of unbelief in this spying out of the land? Was it a concession to the weakness of the flesh, much like the law of Moses concerning divorce (Matt. xix. 3-8)? It appears to have made one more opponent, and led to the captivity of some of Israel. There is a lesson for us here. Let us so fully trust the goodness and the word of the Lord that we shall "walk by faith and not by sight", needing neither the evidence of the grapes of Eshcol to encourage us, nor the description of our giant foes to dishearten us, resting in the blessed victory already ours in Christ (Rom. viii. 37, 38), and recognizing that "as our day so shall our strength be". We are more than conquerors through Him that loved us.

King Og of Bashan.—This king was the only one left of the giants, thereby connecting him with the seed of the serpent, and fit type of the principalities and powers that war against the purpose of the Lord. The reader may know the book entitled The Giant Cities of Bashan, where the literal character of the word "giant" is demonstrated. The destruction of King Og of Bashan is recounted in Psa. cxxxvi. 20 and followed by the refrain, "for His mercy endureth for ever". The satanic character of the Canaanites justifies this somewhat strange use of the word mercy.

These opponents, Amalek, Sihon and Og set before us the character of the attack we may expect "this side of Jordan". The full triumph follows the crossing of the Jordan.

The third conquest.

Joshua reaches the banks of the Jordan and lodges there "three days" before passing over (Josh. iii. 1, 2). They were to go on a new journey, "For ye have not passed this way heretofore" (iii. 4). The passage of the ark and of the people through the Jordan was to be taken as a pledge that the Lord was among them, "and that He will not fail to drive out from before you the Canaanite" (iii. 10). Twelve men were chosen, one for each tribe, who took twelve stones from the firm bed of the river as a memorial. All Israel were involved in this crossing, the ark of the covenant also pledging God's word and power in the victory (iii., iv.). It is most suggestive to read that at the crossing of the Jordan the waters

> "stood—rose up in one mound a great way off, by the city ADAM, which is beside Zarethan, and they which were going down to the sea of the waste plain, the salt sea, failed—were cut off, and the people passed over right against Jericho" (Rotherham, Josh. iii. 16).

Stanley translates the passage, "High up, far away in Adam, the city which is beside Zarethan". It seems too clear a type to be put down to mere coincidence that the waters that flowed down from Adam to the salt sea (called to-day The Dead Sea) should be so completely cut off. The stream of sin and death which started its course in Eden by one man must be arrested before the people of the Lord can pass over Jordan into their inheritance. Rom. v. 12 - viii. 39 is seen in type and shadow here.

Thus the Red Sea passage sets forth our union with Christ in His triumph over sin and death, and the Jordan passage our actual triumphant passage into literal resurrection glory. The reader may fill in many other parallels, for example, the Lord's baptism in Jordan followed by His genealogy back to Adam, and the calling of the twelve "from the baptism of John", as witnesses, but these details are somewhat apart from our theme.

It is noticeable that Israel pass the Jordan "right against Jericho". Just as the passage through the Red Sea spread consternation among the natives of Canaan, so also did the passage of the Jordan (Josh. v. 1). It is here that Joshua meets "The Captain of the Lord's host" (v. 13-15). This is the beginning of the conquest of Canaan. The first to fall is Jericho and its king, and in the Lord's mercy the initial victory of this third phase is seen to be all of faith. Now follows a series of battles, interspersed with events that we must consider together when we reach this book in Fundamentals of Dispensational Truth, until at the close of chapter xii. a halt is made and a list drawn up comprised of thirty-one kings that had been smitten.

The record of Caleb and Joshua given in Numbers and Joshua may throw light upon the position of those who, like these men of faith, press on to the goal and overcome. Sufficient, however, has been said to point the direction for the child of God that he may realize the past, the present and the future phases of this mighty conflict with principalities, and powers, who, like the Canaanites, are doomed to destruction, who shall be turned out of their possessions in the heavenlies, and who already, like Sihon and Og, seek to prevent us "passing through". Let us not forget the solemn lesson of "then came Amalek", nor the fact that Christ's triumph has traveled on ahead through all spheres, and is the basis of our ultimate victory. The power of His might in Eph. i. 19 and Eph. vi. 10 is both His triumph and our triumph, Both Rom. v.-viii. and I Cor. xv. link the doctrine of Adam, death, and resurrection victory together, a truth so blessedly set forth in the heaped up waters of Jordan near the city of Adam. "Stand therefore."

#81. The mystery of the gospel and its ambassador (Eph. vi. 18-24).

pp. 145 - 153

Immediately following the exhortation to put on the whole armour of God comes prayer. The statement with which this idea of prayer is introduced is somewhat involved:--

"With all prayer and supplication praying in every season in spirit, and thereunto watching with all perseverance and supplication, for all the saints" (Eph. vi. 18).

The two words "prayer and supplication" have been rendered "supplication and deprecation". That is asking for what is good and deprecating what is evil. At the root of the former word lies the idea of a wish, at the root of the latter a fear. The one is the pouring out of the heart's desire, the other the expression of a need.

"Praying in every season": like the preaching of the Word (II Tim. iv. 2), prayer is not to be limited to any one season or occasion. Paul when writing to the Romans could call God to witness that "without ceasing" he made mention of them in his prayers. The solemn appeal to God as a witness prevents any idea of exaggerated language here. Paul "never left off" praying. At the same time he was traversing sea and land preaching the gospel. He was earning his own living, sometimes labouring night and day with his own hands. His sufferings and trials were beyond measure, and upon him came the cares of all the churches. Yet he never left off praying!

The conventions of the faith are safeguards. It is good to kneel or to stand when we pray. It is good to close the eyes and fold the hands—the outside attitude should express the hidden spirit. It is good to turn aside from the things of daily life, withdraw to the quiet room alone in secret. But all these things may be dispensed with without touching the essence of prayer. Paul could pray as he walked, as he talked, as he worked. He could pray without closing the watchful eye, or folding the labouring hand. He could pray without ceasing, serve without ceasing, labour without ceasing. Let us not confound true prayer with mysticism. To kneel for a long time in silence may be the highest form of worship, it may but numb the sensibilities and lay the unguarded spirit open to invasion. In some cases it is a form of self deception and pride:--

"When Moses was gone into the tabernacle of the congregation to speak with Him, then he heard THE VOICE OF ONE speaking to him" (Num. vii. 89).

It is never safe to omit the Word of God when we think of prayer. It is the connection seen here in Eph. vi. 17, 18, "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, praying always".

What is prayer? Why do we pray? Can we by prayer cause God to alter one line of His purpose? Can we add or subtract one name from the book of life? Can we alter by one second the "appointed time"? Would the Lord come one moment sooner if all His people prayed that He would? God's purpose will go on to its glorious end whether we pray or whether we remain silent. He is not like the unjust judge who can be worried into action by sheer importunity. That which sometimes passes for great piety may prove to be sheer unbelief. We remember sometime ago that our little one had prayed in her childish fashion that on some particular day, weeks ahead, the weather might prove fine. Nothing more being mentioned, the mother reminded her saying, "You have not asked God any more about the fine day you want". "Oh no, mother", was the response, "I told Him once, and He won't forget".

Prayer does not mean arguing with God, or trying to get our own way. Prayer gives us access to God, fellowship with Himself. Gives us insight into His purposes, sends us out again into the turmoil of life with less anxiety, with greater patience, with more sympathy,

> "With a heart at leisure from itself,
> To soothe and sympathise."

Prayers are answered because God wishes His children to share His secrets, trust Himself, but prayers never alter God's plans. Prayer comes to God with his own Word and says, "Do as Thou hast said". Prayer is never answered that is not in accordance with the will of God. There are some things that God Himself has placed at our disposal upon the condition that we "ask", "seek", and "knock", but there is no more mystery about this than when the child asks its parent for bread, or knocks at the door for entrance.

Watching with all perseverance.

The Lord did not simply say, "Pray . . . . . lead us not into temptation". He also said, "Watch and pray that ye enter into temptation". Is it right to pray the one prayer, and forget to watch? Will prayer alone avail us, if the Lord has said watch and pray? "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch" (Mark xiii. 37). The word "watch" in Eph. vi. 18 means "sleeplessness". In II Cor. vi. 5 and xi. 27 we have the word in a setting of tumult, prison, weariness, cold and nakedness. It is of the Spirit of the Lord Himself. "Behold, He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep" (Psa. cxxi. 4). Luke xxi. 34-36 urges watchfulness by such words as "unawares", "snares", "escape".

What should we pray for? In one sense we must all confess with Rom. viii. 26, "we know not what we should pray for as we ought", "but that is not exactly our meaning in the question. There are some children of God whose integrity is beyond question, who feel that prayer must be confined to spiritual things only, and that such things as problems of daily business, home, etc. are not proper subjects for prayer. What then should we pray for? Surely the apostle has answered in Phil. iv. 6:--

> "Be over-anxious for NOTHING, but in EVERYTHING by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your REQUESTS BE MADE KNOWN unto God."

Anxiety for nothing, prayer in everything seem to allow no neutral ground. When once we are saved, may we not believe that all our affairs are a part of the Lord's concern, that somehow or other where we live, where we work, the friends we have or lose, all the complex happenings of everyday are part and parcel of His purpose. If the everyday affairs of everyone are outside the scope of prayer, what is there left of human affairs as part of God's purpose? For our own part we want to be more simple, more like child and parent when we pray.

This watchful and prayerful spirit which the apostle enjoins was not to be spent upon self. It was "for all saints". If one member suffer, all suffer. It is true unselfishness to pray for the rest of the body the church, for our own individual peace and blessing is largely connected with the blessing of the whole. Is there in all the epistles of the N.T. a more beautiful exhibition of unconscious modesty and humility than the words that follow, "and for me". It is Paul that speaks. Paul, to whom the dispensation of the mystery had been granted. Paul, who had been caught away to the third heaven. It is such a one that says "and for me". There is a precious mingling of the homely and the sublime in this concluding passage.

What is Ministry?

There is an intimate connection between the ministry for which Paul asks prayer, and his "affairs" which he makes known through Tychicus. We are apt to limit our conception of ministry too closely to the actual work of speaking or writing. Were not Paul's private affairs a part of his ministry? Had not his "prospects" been ruined for the truth's sake? When he sometimes laboured with his hands to provide the necessary things of life could he not render that humble service "as unto the Lord"? When the Philippians sent once and again unto his necessities did they feel any need to distinguish between the sacred and the secular? Was it not at the same time "fellowship in the gospel"? (Phil. i. 5; iv. 15, 16). Ministry is simply service, and this includes the whole manner of life, for often the demands of the ministry rendered seriously, deflect the whole current of daily affairs. So it is that Paul could link together the high ministry of the mystery and "how I do" without any feeling of incongruity.

Prayer expresses a sense of need.

His prayer is for "utterance", "boldness", the ability and the courage to speak freely as he "ought'. Here is a man of like infirmity as ourselves. He knew what it was to feel a shrinking, and could sympathise with the timid spirit of Timothy (II Tim. i. 7). He knew what it was to despised (I Tim. iv. 12; II Cor. x. 10), and to have indifferent health (Gal. iv. 14). He knew that whenever there is an "open door" there will be "many adversaries" (I Cor. xvi. 9), and prayer was needed that the opposition may not be allowed to turn him back from the appointed path. Did he never have moments of doubt when with aching limbs and tired brain he laboured and travailed at some lowly occupation for the bare necessities of life? Did no one whisper that he might have served the Lord better by staying in honour and influence at Tarsus? Did he never need the vision at night of the Lord saying:--

> "Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace: For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee, for I have much people in this city" (Acts xviii. 9, 10).

Unless we have made a most critical mistake in our understanding of Paul's temperament and circumstances, we believe he had the scholar's shrinking from the physical blow, the super-sensitiveness to criticism, the knowledge within of his own utter unworthiness, the consciousness that in following his calling he must ever appear in the eyes of many as a presumptuous boaster. Yet he turned not back. This man who shrank from the tumult of Corinth was ready to face the mob at Ephesus (Acts xix. 30), and the enraged Jews at Jerusalem (Acts xxi. 40). He could write to the Philippians:--

> "That with all boldness, as always, so now also Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether by life or by death" (Phil. i. 20).

He could speak of himself as a drink-offering poured out upon the sacrifice and service of faith (Phil. ii. 17). There is some compensation to the sensitive spirit, if he or she "suffer as a Christian", but Paul had to face the shame of "suffering as a malefactor" (II Tim. ii. 9; Luke xxiii. 32). He understood in measure what the Lord felt when He faced not only death and suffering, but the intense shame of being "numbered with the transgressors" (Luke xxii. 37). Compulsory association with the brutal company may be more torture than the stake. And so Paul said "and for me".

The mystery of the gospel.

The utterance and the boldness that Paul desired was that he might make known the mystery of the gospel. There are two sources of help available in seeking the meaning of this expression. We may observe its connection with the use of the word "mystery" in this epistle. We may read it in the light of the parallel passage in Colossians. Now the mystery is mentioned six times in Ephesians:--

A | i. 9, 10. The dispensation.
B | iii. 3. THE MYSTERY.
C | iii. 4. The mystery of Christ.
A | iii. 9. The dispensation (R.V.).
B | v. 32. THE GREAT MYSTERY.
C | vi. 19. The mystery of the gospel.

We have already learned to distinguish between the mystery itself which was revealed only to Paul, and the mystery of Christ which had been made known in measure down the age, but in its final and highest sphere, to Paul. It would appear therefore that the mystery of the gospel was connected specially with the mystery of Christ. Let us now turn to Col. iv. The context is identical with that of Eph. vi.:--

> "Withal praying for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance, to speak the mystery of Christ, for which I am also in bonds, that I may make it manifest, as I ought to speak" (Col. iv. 3, 4).

This passage confirms our finding. Why should the Apostle lay such stress upon this feature. The reason seems to be this. Every message sent by God in grace to man has been inseparably connected with Christ, and until His person and position were made clear no "good message" could be intelligible. If one would preach the gospel of the kingdom one must preach the advent of the King. If one would preach the gospel of grace, one must preach Christ crucified, dead, risen. If one would preach the good tidings of the Mystery which places the redeemed "far above all", it is essential that before that statement can be received, or even be intelligible, Christ must be preached "far above all" too. Where Paul surpassed all in the revelation he received, was that over and above the accumulated knowledge of the Mystery of Christ, that had grown ever since the first revelation given in the garden of Eden, he had received the climax of truth, viz., that the risen but rejected Messiah was now at the right hand of God, Head of both principalities and the church, and that the Mystery of the union of the church with the ascended Lord constituted the fullness of Him, Who in His turn was designated to fill all in all. It was in order that he might make this message clear, without compromise and without fear, that he asked the prayers of the saints.

We have "boldness" before God (Eph. iii. 12), shall we be fearful before man whose breath is in his nostrils! Yet we are, and hence the value of intercessory prayer for one another.

An Ambassador.

> "In behalf of which I am conducting an embassy in a chain" (Eph. vi. 20).

Speaking as a man, Paul had a passion for liberty. One has only to read Gal. ii. to catch something of his burning spirit. Yet he could rejoice in the honour of his bonds, his prison, his chains, for after all they were the badges of highest honour. The figure of an ambassador provides a very apt illustration of the distinctive spheres of administration given to the apostles Peter and Paul. At the moment of writing the King of England has Ambassadors in France and Germany. Now the ambassador in France, when dealing officially with Franco-British affairs, speaks with all the authority of the King he represents. If however, the ambassador to France should go to Germany, he would of course have the individual's right of personal opinion, but he could no longer act in things of state nor speak with delegated authority. Peter, the Ambassador of the Lord to the circumcision, received power and authority which he exercised, but Peter when dealing with the present interval of the mystery confesses to things that are hard to be understood, and realizes that they belong to the embassy of Paul, and that he has no jurisdiction in that province (II Pet. iii. 15, 16). Paul was the apostle to the Gentiles. To him had been granted the dispensation of the grace of God to the Gentiles. He was an Ambassador in a chain, and when he spoke as the Ambassador he spoke with full authority.

My affairs and how I do.

It is one thing, however, to pray with a purely doctrinal interest; it is another to pray because of acquaintance with actual needs. When the reader takes up a printed page, his mental image of the writer may be far removed from reality. How can intelligent prayer therefore be offered? The apostle felt this need, and adds to his request for prayer the means for information. Yet once again, let us observe the delicacy of his method. Here is no harrowing list of details of prison life, no list of privations and hardships, no pose, for we know from his own words that he felt a fool when compelled in sheer defence to appear boastful. What he does do is to give an intimation to those who were desirous of this intelligent fellowship that the necessary information could be obtained from Tychicus. That this was no casual mission to fulfil we may gather from the character of the man who received it:--

> "Tychicus, the beloved brother and faithful minister in the Lord" (Eph. vi. 21).
> "Tychicus, who is a beloved brother, and faithful minister fellow-servant in the Lord " (Col. iv. 7).
> "Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus" (II Tim. iv. 12).

The last reference is comforting. Demas had forsaken Paul. All in Asia had left him, but Tychicus remained faithful. Tychicus and Trophimus are mentioned in Acts xx. 4, and Trophimus was an "Ephesian" (Acts xxi. 29). Both Tychicus and Trophimus therefore are connected with Ephesus, and this is a strong argument in favour of the retention of the word "Ephesus" in verse 1 of this epistle. If the epistle had been written to "the saints that are", as some have suggested, to whom would Tychicus convey the message concerning the personal affairs of Paul? Paul's last thought, however, is for the saints. Not only did he send Tychicus with the necessary information concerning his own affairs, but he concludes, "and that he might comfort your hearts" (Eph. vi. 22). The same is true of Col. iv. 8. A glimpse is given of the intimate relationship between Paul's "affairs", "the mystery", and the "heart's comfort" of the believer in Col. ii. 1-3:--

> "For I would that ye knew what great conflict I have for you . . . . . that their hearts might be comforted . . . . . the full knowledge of the mystery of God—Christ, in Whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

The Benediction.

The contemplation of this noble spirit falls like a benediction itself in a world of sordid self-interests and covetousness, but the "peace" and the "love with faith" so markedly present come not from the heart of man but "from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ" (Eph. vi. 23), and so the benediction falls from Him Who was the strength and the sweetener of Saul of Tarsus,

> "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity."

The word translated "sincerity" is aptharsia = incorruptibility. Are we to understand that our love to the Lord is "incorruptible", and that this benediction rests upon those only whose love will never change, but is incorruptible? This is the opinion of many. Dr. Bloomfield, however, cites the interpretation of Beza to show that the words en aphtharsia are to be read with the word "grace" and not with "love". It is the grace of the Lord that is imperishable, incorruptible, immortal. It is a point that perhaps we cannot settle. True love is as strong as death. The grace of the Lord is beyond the touch of corruption. Let us seek to love with all sincerity, and rest upon a grace that reaches out beyond the grave. Here is the last word of the epistle—"incorruptibility". Resurrection is stamped on the whole unfolding of the epistle. In chapter i. it is "the power to usward that believe", in chapter ii. it is the sphere of our blessings, in chapter iv. it is seen in the new man, in chapter v. it forms the exhortation to awake from sleep, and in chapter vi. it constitutes the strength of the good soldier.

What shall we say unto these things? Who is sufficient for these things? What shall we render for these things? As we ask these questions in the presence of the Lord there can be but one answer:--

> "I follow after, if that I may laid hold of that for which also I was laid hold of by Christ Jesus . . . . . but one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, according to a mark I press toward the goal, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. iii. 12-14).

So concludes a long but happy, and we trust profitable, study. Though we pass from the definite study of this epistle to other parts of Scripture, this one epistle more clearly indicates our peculiar testimony than does any other single book of Scripture. We shall from time to time revert to this epistle to consider from some fresh angle truth already reviewed. We shall, if spared to continue this witness, be obliged to remember new readers and the need for a re-statement of fundamentals. To all who have this precious truth at heart, who value the "good deposits", and realize both its privilege and responsibility, we would humbly but most sincerely repeat the apostle's prayer:--

"And for me, that utterance may be given."

Perfecting Holiness

#1. II Cor. vii. 1.
pp. 41 - 45

The Scripture speaks of faith being perfected by works, of love being perfected by keeping the word of God, of holiness being perfected by the cleansing from the filthiness of flesh and spirit (James ii. 22, I John ii. 5, II Cor. vii. 1). Before we can give any real heed to the exhortations that underlie these passages it is essential that we entertain correct ideas as to the meaning of perfection.

In associating the word perfect with holiness we are very likely to allow the thought of freedom from taint, or blemish, to express something of the meaning of the word perfect. This is undoubtedly the meaning of such a passage as Lev. xxii. 21, where it says of the sacrifice, "it shall be perfect to be accepted", for the words immediately follow, "there shall be no blemish therein". It is when we read such a passage as the following of the Lord Jesus that we feel called upon to pause and consider:--

> "Yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered, and being made perfect, He became the author of aionian salvation unto all them that obey Him" (Heb. v. 8, 9).

Does this teach that the Lord became without blemish through the things that He suffered? We know that such an idea is contrary to the whole teaching of Scripture. We must therefore look closer and criticize our own views rather. Perfect, teleios, is allied with telos, the end. The primary meaning of "perfect" is "attaining the end" as expressed by the apostle in Phil. iii. 12, "That I may lay hold on that for which I have been laid hold of by Christ"; and set in contrast with "beginning" in Gal. iii. 3: "Having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?"

We can understand in this sense that through sufferings the Lord was perfected, for until He "finished" the work He came to do He could not be said to have been "perfected", for that implies the reaching of a goal. Of all the blessings that we receive through Christ holiness seems the last which we should be exhorted to perfect, yet so it is:--

> "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God" (II Cor. vii. 1).

In this passage the word perfecting is epiteleõ, "to bring to a full end".

To have arrived at some approximation to a Scriptural meaning of the word perfect is to have come a long way towards an understanding of the phrase "perfecting holiness", but as the verse is introduced by a "therefore" and the "having" of certain "promises", it is necessary also to know what promises these are. The promises are found in the closing verse of II Cor. vi.:--

"I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be My people."

"I will receive you and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

These are the promises that are the propelling force that makes for the "perfecting of holiness". But these promises do not stand alone, they too are closely connected with the argument of the context. We must therefore go back to verse 14 to commence the conditions that regulate the enjoyment of the promises, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers". The unequal yoke appears to refer back to the typical law forbidding the use of ox and ass together at the plough (Deut. xxii. 10), and therefore speaks particularly of service. The first epistle told them that while at heart and in spirit they were to be a separated people, it was not possible, neither were they called upon, to withdraw themselves from all contact with the outside world. When we come to participation in the things of God no such latitude is allowed. The unequal yoke is contrary to the first principle of holiness. This inequality is expanded for us in a series of statements:--

"For what participation has righteousness with lawlessness?
Or what fellowship light with darkness?
And what concord Christ with Belial?
Or what portion a believer with an unbeliever?
And what connection a temple of God with idols?" (II Cor. vi. 14-16).

There is no need to labour the point. There can be but one answer. The last figure, that of the temple, carries the argument to a higher point. The saints themselves are the temple of the living God, purged by the promise that God has said that He will dwell among them, walk among them and be their God.

Let us now observe the turn that is taken both in the exhortation, the quotation and the consequence. "Ye are the temple" states a fact; accomplished by God. "Come out, be separate, touch not" states a personal outworking of that fact, and not something static. "I will walk, dwell and be their God" is connected with the fact of the believer's holiness in Christ. "I will receive, be a Father, and ye children" is the blessed result of "perfecting holiness", of living as though we were the temple, of practicing and making our own that sainthood that is ours by the blood of Christ.

The title "Father" is deeper than the name "God". We have been reconciled to God. That is the initial fact. We can have access to the Father. That is the consequent privilege (Eph. ii. 18). So here. While it is glorious to be the temple of God, it is even more glorious to be sons and daughters of the Father. If the temple of God is holy by reason of its use and purpose, the children of God will be holy because they are children of such a Father. The temple stones may be no better than the stones of the house near by, the gold no purer than that which adorned the careless in the street. Its sanctity is not personal, it is not moral, but the holiness that is brought to its end (perfected) is that response in the quickened believer to rise and walk in newness of life and serve in newness of spirit. The highest incentive to practical holiness lies in sonship, and it is cramping and harmful to have only in mind the ceremonial or un-moral side. All the types of O.T. sanctification are swallowed up in our relation to the Father, Who chose us to holiness, and predestined us to sonship.

We perceive, too, how personal this perfecting should be; "let us cleanse ourselves." It is not so much the ceremonial "touch not the unclean thing"; the unclean thing is within. It is not the Pharisaic separation, "God, I thank Thee, I am not as other men . . . . . or even as this publican" (Luke xviii. 11), it is that sanctification that keeps us truly separate while we mingle with publicans and sinners, sit at their tables, eat their food and run the risk of being labeled and libeled "gluttonous and wine-bibbers" as the ceremonialists misunderstood the perfect holiness of "the Son".

The Pharisee would have been defiled had he touched a leper; not so Christ. The believer whose conception of holiness is still expressed in terms of "temples" and "unclean things" may fell compelled to stay away from this meeting, to avoid appearing at that function: the believer whose holiness is expressed in terms of the Father and His children will manifest the spirit of the Father combining two aspects of holiness that are usually condemned by those who are on a lower standing:--

> "That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven . . . . . be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect" (Matt. v. 45-48).

To those who rest satisfied with the sanctification of temples and holy things, separation from evil and unjust men seems the only consistent thing, but those whose holiness has passed beyond the images to the reality act in just the reverse way:--

> "For He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust" (Matt. v. 45).

There are some who will not give a penny to a hospital collection because it may not be "of God"; such have the ceremonial and temple conception of holiness. Others, who have passed this stage and seen the "end", feel no more contamination over helping a purely humane institution than their heavenly Father is less perfect because He does not discriminate in His largesse of sun and shower. In none of these things must we judge another, and in no circumstance must liberty be construed as license. He who attempts, as an outcome of this highest conception of holiness, to "cleanse himself of all stain either of flesh or spirit", will have no occasion to boast except in the Lord.

We have not by any means exhausted the subject, and hope at intervals to return to it and view the important reaching of holiness from other angles. Let us rejoice that the same Christ Who is made unto us redemption and righteousness and wisdom, is surely made unto us sanctification, but let us not hide from ourselves the fact that he who is righteous, whether by faith or by works, will do righteousness, and he that is sanctified will act as such to the glory of God, "perfecting holiness in the fear of the God" (II Cor. vii. 1).

#2. Root and Fruit (hagiasmos).
pp. 76 - 78

Everything pertaining to the new nature is unalterably ours in Christ. Yet practically every blessing thus already our own is placed ahead of us for our own personal realization. These two statements are true of holiness. It is impossible to "perfect" that which does not exist—fruit can only be expected after the root has become grounded and settled.

The figure of fruit is a true picture of the idea of perfection. The cycle of vegetable life reaches its climax in fruit. The man in the street thinks of fruit as such things as apples and pears; the botanist knows that fruit is the goal of the lovely rose, the meadow buttercup or the stalwart oak. The cycle is then finished or perfected. The root from which all practical sanctity must spring is that holiness which is ours in Christ once and for all:--

> "But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, Who is made to us wisdom from God, besides righteousness and holiness and redemption" (I Cor. i. 30).

The apostle was writing to Corinthians among whom wisdom was highly esteemed. Had he been writing to a company who trusted in their own righteousness, he could have placed the word righteousness where wisdom stands. Or those to whom he wrote may have needed the teaching that sanctification is as much ours in Christ as is justification, holiness as much as righteousness. Yet knowing this would we say that the man to whom Christ has been made wisdom manifests this fact best by always acting like a fool? Is justification by faith safeguarded most when those thus justified remain destitute of practical righteousness? Can holiness in Christ be best manifested by uncleanness of person? Are the holy fakirs of India nearer the truth than the apostle Paul? The use of the word hagiasmos, "sanctification", makes the will of the Lord very clear:--

> "For this is the will of God, even your sanctification . . . . . for God has not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness" (I Thess. iv. 3-7).

What the uncleanness is that is set over against sanctification and how intensely practical this sanctification is, the passage before us declares. It is largely a matter of "going beyond", of overstepping bounds fixed by God, of defrauding a brother. Holiness in Scripture is a healthy thing. It does not drive men and women into monasteries and nunneries, it declares marriage to be honourable and undefiled. Mere abstinence or negation is not holiness; holiness in its practical aspect is the outcome of righteousness in action, not of emasculation. For this we may turn to Rom. vi. 19:--

> "As ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness."

Further on in verse 22 he speaks of "servants to God, and fruit unto holiness". The whole passage (Rom. vi. 16-23) is to the last degree intensely practical and everyday doctrine. Our members are the instruments either of unrighteousness or of holiness. "The mortal body" of verse 12 is not rendered immortal for this service; the same hands that stole may steal no more but rather labour in order that their owners may not only earn their own living, but have to give to the needy. The same feet that were swift to shed blood may, like Paul's, carry the gospel unto the regions beyond. It is not a blessed thing that here and now with all the consciousness of our failings this manifestation of the victory of Christ can be given?

If I Cor. i. 30 exhibits the root of holiness, Heb. xii. 15 reveals the root of bitterness that can defile. In Heb. xii. 14-16 we read:--

> "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord. Looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled: Lest there be any fornicator, or profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright."

In what way was Esau "profane"? The word bebelos is related to belos, a threshold, and indicates anything "trodden", "accessible", and so not "private". This word being used as an antithesis to holiness partly explains the latter word. That is something sacred, set apart for God, not for the crowd. Now Esau thought more of easing a healthy appetite than he did of the higher things of God, and holiness can easily be sacrificed upon similar principles. Self sows a bitter root whose fruit is not unto holiness but unto corruption.

Hagiasmos occurs ten times in the N.T., and is translated five times "holiness", and five times "sanctification". We give the ten occurrences so that any who may so desire can read the complete setting given in Scripture of this one phase of the doctrine of sanctification: Rom. vi. 19, 22; I Cor. i. 30; I Thess. iv. 3, 4, 7; II Thess. ii. 13; I Tim. ii. 15; Heb. xii. 14; I Pet. i. 2. Seven of the occurrences deal with the practical outworking of holiness, the remaining three speaking of sanctification in Christ and by the Spirit.

Redemption. New Series.

#5. The Cherubim, their pledge.

pp. 4, 5

(Concluded from Volume XV, page 191).

Although we have now traversed the whole of the Scriptures and tested the references to the cherubim, we believe there is yet one other period where their presence is felt if their name is not pronounced. Let us tabulate the different periods that have already been dealt with in which the cherubim are mentioned.

1.	Ezek. xxviii.	Eden. Profaned. Cast out. The anointed.
2.	Gen. iii.	Eden. Pledge to life and restoration.
3.	Exodus	The tabernacle and the covenant.
4.	Kings	The glory and the temple.
5.	Ezekiel	The glory departing and returning.
6.	Revelation	Gen. iii. fulfilled.

Christ, the fulfillment.

There is one period of history that must be added, if we are not only to have the pledge of Gen. iii. fulfilled, but see how it was accomplished. That period is the earthly life of Christ covered by the four Gospels. Why four Gospels? Why a fourfold presentation of Christ? Because in Him is fulfilled the pledge of the cherubim, and by Him was accomplished the undoing of the works of the cherub of Ezek. xxviii. He too was on "the holy mount" (II Pet. i. 18), but he was not cast out as profane, but rather was proclaimed as the beloved Son in Whom the Father was well pleased. We do not read anywhere in Scripture except in Ezek. xxviii. of an anointed cherub. This title is reserved for Christ. The four Gospels set Him forth in the fulfillment of the four faces of the cherubim:--

1.	Matthew	The LION	The King.
2.	Mark	The OX	The Servant.
3.	Luke	The MAN	Genealogy to Adam.
4.	John	The EAGLE	The Word.

This now fills in the list, brings the number to seven periods, and provides the great antidote to the profanity introduced by the anointed cherub who fell ere man was made. Let us conclude therefore by inserting this important member and let us glory in the fullness that there is for "the all things" in Christ, the living One.

A | The anointed cherub. His Fall.
  B | Paradise lost, pledge of restoration.
    C | Tabernacle and Wilderness (Exodus).
      Temple and Land (Kings).
      The Glory (Ezekiel).
A | The Anointed. His Triumph.
  B | Paradise restored.

#6. The Jubilee.
pp. 37 - 41

In dealing with the great importance of redemption in the typical history of Israel, the year of the jubilee must be included. The jubilee occurred every fifty years, when hired servants, property and possessions (with one or two exceptions) automatically went out free, were restored to their liberty or to their possessions.

The meaning of the word.

The word jubilee has come into English as a transliteration of the Hebrew word yobel, which is derived from yabal, meaning to flow or go forth, as in Isa. lv. 12:--

> "For ye shall go out (yotsa, as in the exodus, Exod. xiv. 8, and in the jubilee, Exod. xxi. 2, 3), with joy, and be led forth (yabal) with peace."

The first and the last occurrences of the word yobel are Exod. xix. 13 and Josh. vi. 4, 5, 6, 8, 13, where it is translated in the A.V. by "trumpet" and "rams' horns". The remaining twenty occurrences, all of which are found in Leviticus and Numbers, are translated by the word jubile, which we more commonly spell jubilee.

While dealing with the meaning of the word we must not ignore the testimony of the Septuagint. Granting that the translators of the Septuagint were uninspired men, we must ever remember the following facts, that the bulk of the quotations in the N.T. are from the Septuagint version, and the presence in home, synagogue and school of that version for several centuries gave sanction and fixity to the words used in its doctrines which neither the Lord nor His apostles contravened, but accepted as starting points for their own teaching.

The word used by the LXX throughout Leviticus and Numbers for translating jubilee is the Greek word aphesis. What they meant by the word they explain themselves:--

> "And ye shall hollow the fiftieth year and proclaim liberty" (Lev. xxv. 10).
> "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon Me . . . . . to proclaim liberty to the captives . . . . . to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord" (Isa. lxi. 1, 2).

The connection between the jubilee and the acceptable year of the Lord is beyond controversy if words mean anything. Moreover this "acceptable year" is given another title in Isa. lxiii. 4 where it is called "the year of my redeemed". Isa. xxxv. refers to the same event. There we have the close association of vengeance and the salvation of Israel. If the acceptable year is called the year of my redeemed in Isa. lxiii., they who participate in it are called "the ransomed of the Lord" (Isa. xxxv. 10).

Whatever our appreciation of the LXX may be, we can have no reserve with regard to the inspiration of the Hebrew of Ezekiel. There we have the Greek word aphesis translating the Hebrew deror, "then it shall be his to the year of liberty" (Ezek. xlvi. 7), which is a direct reference to the jubilee, "to proclaim liberty throughout the land" (Lev. xxv. 10).

These passages present one solid unassailable front and he who rejects them rejects the Word of God. To complete our survey we must observe the way in which the word aphesis is used in the N.T.:--

Forgiveness.—Mark iii. 29; Acts v. 31; xiii. 38; xxvi. 18; Eph. i. 7; Col. i. 14.
Deliverance.—Luke iv. 18 (confirming Isa. lxi. Sept.).
Liberty.—Luke iv. 18 (confirming Isa. lxi. Sept.).
Remission.—Matt. xxvi. 28; Mark i. 4; Luke i. 77, iii. 3, xxiv. 47;
Acts ii. 38, x. 43; Heb. ix. 22, x. 18.

The institution of the Jubilee.

The institution of the jubilee follows immediately upon the law concerning the sabbatic year recorded in Lev. xxv., and is indeed an extension of the principle of the sabbath:--

> "And thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years, and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the day of atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all the land. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof; it shall be a jubilee unto you: and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family" (Lev. xxv. 8-19).

There is a designed stress upon the number seven. The trumpet of the jubilee sounds at the end of the 49^{th} (7*7) year, in the 7^{th} month. The tenth day of the seventh month is the day of atonement. The jubilee is most clearly associated with that day. It comes into effect in the fiftieth year, but it has its roots in the 10^{th} day of the 7^{th} month of the 49^{th} year. The jubilee is the year of the Lord's redeemed. The self-same redemption that formed a basis for the forgiveness (aphesis) of sin purchased the possession into which the redeemed shall yet enter (Eph. i. 7 and 14), but there were not sacrifices offered for this twofold redemption. What we must remember when dealing with Israel is that they were a redeemed people. The jubilee and the day of atonement belong to Israel as a redeemed people and not otherwise. Seeing moreover that their redemption, their sacrificial system, their land were typical of the future reality, we must trace this progression of sabbaths up to its climax. We have the seventh day, the seventh month, the seventh year, the seven times seven years, and lastly as a fulfillment of all the seventy times seven of Dan. ix.:--

> "Seventy sevens are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to > bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most Holy" (Dan. ix. 24).

In the climacteric period the day of atonement, the jubilee, the redemption of the purchased possession, all meet together in blessed fulfillment. The fact that at the second coming the Lord Jesus shall appear "apart from sin", and "without a sin offering" gives no warrant to believe that any blessing then introduced can be experienced and enjoyed apart from the shedding of His blood both as the great redeemer and atoning sacrifice.

"The last trump."

The year of jubilee was ushered in by the sound of a trumpet (Lev. xxv. 9). In Lev. xxiii. 24 we find the first day of the seventh month ushered in by the blowing of trumpets. This is a holy convocation. What is of importance is that the trumpet sounded on the 10th day of the seventh month is "the last trump" of Israel's typical year. I Cor. xv. 50-57 is "the last trump" in reality. Rev. x. 7 and xi. 15 is the last trump of the seventh angel, and fulfils the type. The "trump of God" of I Thess. iv. 16 is not called the "last" and may be a fulfillment of the earlier trump on the first day of the seventh month.

The jubilee trumpet not only means deliverance for Israel, but the overthrow of Israel's enemies, for the very word "jubilee" is translated "rams' horns" in Josh. vi. Joshua vi. tells of the fall of Jericho. Seven priests bear before the ark seven trumpets and compass the city six days. On the seventh day they compass the city seven times and blow with the trumpets. At the sounding of a long blast of the trumpet all the people shout and Jericho falls:--

> "And it came to pass at the seventh time, when the priests blew with the trumpets, Joshua said unto the people, SHOUT: for the Lord hath given you the city" (Josh. vi. 16).

This shout and the sounding of the jubilee trumpet on the overthrow of the accursed city finds its echo in the Hallelujahs that go up at the judgment and overthrow of Babylon (Rev. xix., and the "shout" of I Thess. iv.). It is interesting to note that the "shout" of Josh. vi. 5 & 20 and the word jubilee in Lev. xxv. 9 are the same. The note in The Companion Bible at "trumpet" is misleading. The word yobel does not occur until verse 10.

Such is a brief survey of the teaching connected with the jubilee, and we believe few would have the temerity to divorce what God has joined together, and will give little heed to that system of teaching which has to say that those who are saved at the consummation are not elect and not redeemed. Such types as "the present interval of bondage", "the two seeds" and "the kinsman-redeemer" are by the same system set aside as being "all concerned with the process and not the goal. They apply to intermediate conditions and not ultimate result . . . . . few were set free by redemption, but all went free in the jubilee". The Virgin birth and the doctrine of I Cor. xv. 21, 22 appear to us as being the very truth of the kinsman-redeemer type of Israel, and as being connected not only with intermediate conditions but ultimate results.

Summarizing what Scripture actually says, we find that the jubilee is a wonderful type of redemption, emphasizing by the language used the liberty and the re-entry into forfeited rights that are inseparable from the conception of redemption everywhere presented in the Word. We have been redeemed (Eph. i. 7), we are looking forward to our jubilee (Eph. i. 14), to the day of the redemption of the purchased possession. Let no man rob us of the blessed hope, ours by the blood of Christ.

#7. Sin.
pp. 183 - 191

Redemption is both "from" and "to". Sin underlies the whole purpose of redemption, and necessitates its peculiar characteristics. It is impossible to under-estimate the importance of a Scriptural understanding of "sin". The purpose of the ages, redemption, death, and resurrection, indeed practically all doctrine, prophecy, and practice are shaped and coloured by its fact and presence.

While it is possible for a study of words to remain barren and lifeless, yet no true doctrine of sin can be attained which either ignores or traverses the words that are used in Scripture, and the meanings which that usage establishes. To study the words we must consider the Hebrew of the O.T., the Greek of the N.T., and also the Greek of the LXX, the latter which, though uninspired, forms a providential link, or bridge, whereby the original Hebrew idea as contained in the O.T. can be discovered without reference to classical Greek in the New. At some other time we hope to deal with the place of the Septuagint Version (LXX) in the interpretation of the Scriptures, but will not go into the matter here other than express deep gratitude for the overruling providence of the Lord, Who has so wonderfully provided us with a ready means of extending and of checking our knowledge and interpretation of the Old Testament Hebrew.

Sin is essential failure.

The word that stands for sin in its widest meaning in the O.T. is derived from the Hebrew word chata, which finds its Greek equivalent in the N.T. word hamartano. The meaning of both the Hebrew and the Greek word is failure. The word chata is used in a non-doctrinal sense in Judges xx. 16, where we read of "seven hundred chosen men left-handed, every one of whom could sling stones at an hair's breadth, and not miss". In Prov. xix. 2 we read, "He that hasteneth with his feet sinneth". Here the word "sinneth" has been rendered "strayeth", "trippeth", "miss his step".

Cremer gives the derivation of hamartano as privative or negative, and meiromai, not to become participator in, not to attain, to arrive, to arrive at a goal. Numerous examples can be found in classical Greek writers where the word means "to miss", as in shooting (Il. xxiii. 857), or "to miss the way" (Thucyd. Iii. 98, 2). As a rule the LXX renders chata by hamartanein; other renderings are rare.

The apostle Paul gives expression to the radical idea of sin in Rom. iii. 23 when he says, "For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God".

Sin is essentially negative.

At first sight it may appear that these two words chosen by God to express generic sin are not strong enough, that we look in vain for the guilt, the transgression, the positive wickedness of sin. Upon closer acquaintance with the subject we learn that wickedness and rebellion with all their concomitants spring from that initial failure on the part of man. Man was made in the image of God, and placed on the earth to have dominion. By the deception of Eve Satan caused Adam to miss the mark, to come short of the glory of God expressed in the "image", and he who had been given dominion himself came under the twofold dominion of sin and death. One has only to read II Cor. iv. 4, "the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, Who is the image of God", to see the complete reversal of this failure on the part of Adam brought about by the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. There are one or two passages in the N.T. which taken together present an inspired and authoritative definition of sin.

Sin defined.

> "Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law; for sin is the transgression of the law" (I John iii. 4).

A literal translation of this verse reads:--

> "Every one who is doing the sin is doing the lawlessness also, and the sin is the lawlessness."

"The sin is the lawlessness." The definition is negative. In I John v. 17 we read, "All unrighteousness is sin". Again unrighteousness is negative. In Rom. xiv. 23 we read, "Everything which is not out of faith is sin". Not out of faith is once more a negative. Here we have the three occasions where Scripture uses the expression "sin is", and in each case it has to be defined by a negative. Sin is the negation of law, of right, of faith.

Anomia and anomos do not in their primary sense mean transgression, but rather that state denominated "not under law" with its resulting condition "lawless". For example, I Cor. ix. 20 and 21 places the Jew who was "under the law" in contrast with the Gentile who was anomos, "without law", in this instance limiting nomos to the law as revealed in the O.T. The same may be said of Rom. ii. 12, "Those who sinned without law"; for in the fuller sense sin cannot be imputed where there is no law at all (Rom. v. 13). Sin is that state and resulting condition that places the sinner outside the pale of God's law (not necessarily limiting the word to the law of Moses). Righteousness on the other hand is that condition and state arising out of complete conformity to God's law (not necessarily limiting the word to the Mosaic). Hence sin and righteousness are the two extremes, sin the negative, righteousness the positive. This is further emphasized in the words, "All unrighteousness is sin".

Righteousness, the real and the positive.

It is an indescribable comfort to have reached this Scriptural conclusion. Darkness is the negation of light; sin is the negation of right. The perennial dispute as to the origin of sin ceases to have interest. God is light, darkness is the result of shutting out that light. We are here concerned with the positive "light"; there is no problem concerning the negative "darkness". All the other phases of sin with which both Scripture and experience have made us familiar are but the "unfruitful works of darkness", they arise of necessity out of the lawless condition that is essentially sin. Let us give attention to some of the outstanding developments of that original "failure" whereby man "sinned and came short of the glory of God".

The first word which we intend to study is asham. This word occurs 35 times in the O.T., and is translated as follows in the A.V.: acknowledge offence; be desolate; be found faulty; be found guilty; be guilty; be made desolate; become desolate; become guilty; hold one's self guilty; offend; trespass; destroy. The LXX translates asham by ten different Greek words, agnoeo, to be ignorant; hamartano, sin; aphanizo, corrupt or disfigure; metameleomai, repent; miaino, defile; *mnesikakeo, to bear in mind evil received; parapipto, fall away; *plemmelleo, behave unseemly. In combination: exolothreuo, destroy; krino, judge. ( - These do not occur in N.T.).

The LXX like the A.V does not use one Greek word for one Hebrew word, but allows a wide margin in the translation. We must, therefore, to make our understanding clearer and our ground work broader, see what other Hebrew words beside asham the LXX renders by the various Greek words cited above:-- / Sakal (II Chron. xvi. 9), "to do foolishly".

Agnoeo translates	/ Yaal (Numb. xii. 11), "to do foolishly".
	\ Shagag (Lev. v. 18), "to err", "sin ignorantly".
	\ Shagah (Lev. iv. 13), "sin through ignorance".
Hamartano translates	so many words and particularly chata that we reserve notes until we consider that word.
Aphanizo translates	/ Abad (Esther ix. 24), "to destroy".
	\ Ayin (Prov. x. 25; xii. 7), "no more", "are not".
Metameleomai translates	/ Nacham (Gen. vi. 7), "to repent".
	\ Asah (Prov. xxv. 8), "to do".
	/ Gaal (Lam. iv. 14), "to pollute self".
	/ Chata (Deut. xxiv. 4), "cause to sin".
	/ Zanach (II Chron. xxix. 19), "to cast away".
	/ Nuach (Eccles. vii. 18), "withdraw".

Miaino translates { Chalal (Gen. xlix. 4), "to defile".
\ Chaneph (Jer. iii. 1), "be polluted".
\ Tumah (Ezek. xxiv. 13), "filthiness".
\ Tame (Gen. xxxiv. 5), "to defile".
\ Lamad (Jer. ii. 33), "to teach".

Mnesikakeo translates / Gamal (Joel iii. 4), "recompense".
\ Chasab (Zech. vii. 10), "imagine".

Parapipto translates / Maphal (Esther vi. 10), "to let fall".
\ Maal (Ezek. xiv. 13), "trespass".
/ Maal (Josh. vii. 1), "trespass".

Plemmelleo translates { Male (Jer. xvi. 18), "to fill".
\ Shagag (Psa. cxix. [cxviii.] 67), "to go astray".
/ Abad (Deut. vii. 10), "destroy".

/ Baar (II Sam. iv. 11), "take away".

Exolothreuo translates { Gada (I Sam. ii. 31), "cut off".
\ Charam (Exod. xxii. 20), "be utterly destroyed".
\ Charath (Gen. xvii. 14), "cut off".

Krino translates / Din (Gen. xv. 14), "judge".
\ Shaphat (Gen. xvi. 5), "judge, etc.".

The word asham is used many times in Lev. iv. and v. For example, in Lev. iv. 13 asham is rendered "are guilty", and is used to sum up the whole verse, which is as follows:--

> "If the whole congregation of Israel SIN THROUGH IGNORANCE, and the thing be HID FROM THE EYES of the assembly, and they have DONE SOMEWHAT against any of the commandments of the Lord concerning things which should not be done, AND ARE GUILTY (asham)."

Similar words come in verses 22 and 27, asham is guilt as a result of a sin of ignorance. In Lev. v. 2 the touching of an unclean thing, if it be hidden from a person, renders such guilty (asham). In verse 17 come the words, "though he wist it not, yet is he guilty", and in verse 19, "he hath certainly trespassed against the Lord". Asham is used in Lev. vi. 4 not only for a sin of ignorance, but for positive dishonesty: "Because he hath sinned, and is guilty (asham), he shall restore that which he took violently away."

The result, effect, and fruit of asham are indicated in the other words by which it is translated. It gives "offence" (Ezek. xxv. 12); it brings "desolation" (Ezek. vi. 6); it is "found faulty" (Hos. x. 2); and carries with it the element of destruction (Psa. v. 10, 11). The Greek renderings emphasize the character of ignorance, foolishness, pollution, defilement, and wandering. It is possible that asham has been confounded with the verb shammah, "to be desolate", and therefore "desolate" should be expunged from the meaning of the word asham.

Returning to Lev. v. and vi. we find the word continually rendered "trespass offering", and it is the word used in Isa. liii. 10, "When thou shalt make His soul an offering for sin". In II Kings xvii. 30 we read, "The men of Hamath made (Ashima)". This idol the Rabbins say was in the form of a goat and a man, much as the Romans describe the satyrs and the god Pan. The connection of the word asham both with sin and sin offering might easily suggest this form. There is probably an allusion also to the "sin" of Samaria (Amos viii. 14), which was plainly the golden calf set up by Jeroboam (I Kings xii. 30; Hos. viii. 5; Deut. ix. 21).

The Companion Bible gives as the meaning of asham, "It is a breach of commandment done in ignorance, but when guilt is proved, requiring atonement". It appears to have close relation to commandments, and cannot be predicated of those to whom no law is given. The reader when reminded of the tragedy of Gentile ignorance revealed in such passages as Rom. i. 18-32, and Eph. iv. 18, 19 (see Volume XV, pp. 99-106 for fuller treatment of this phase) will not consider this firstborn child of sin one to be treated lightly.

Purposeless toil.

The next in the awful genealogy of sin is amal. Failure (chata) begat ignorance (asham), and guilty ignorance begat weary, purposeless toil (amal). Sin has made life a burden, work has been turned into weariness, why? Because it has missed the mark. Labour that does not consistently and consciously aim at the glory of God must spend its strength in vain. Sin dominates the members of our bodies, and uses them as instruments of unrighteousness. Only when freed from this dominion, only when we can "serve in newness of spirit" can we entertain the hope that our labour shall not be in vain (I Cor. xv. 58). The book of Ecclesiastes is Scripture's commentary upon sin's purposeless, wearisome toil.

Amal occurs 68 times and is translated as follows in the A.V.: grievance, grievousness, mischief, misery, pain, perverseness, sorrow, toil, travail, trouble, labour, iniquity, and wickedness. With the exception of Hab. i. 13 ("iniquity") and Job iv. 8 ("wickedness"), all the other renderings stress the sorrow, toil and travail of that labour which, having lost its true aim, gives to self and Satan that which belongs alone to God. The old English word irk, which gives us irksome, is but the Runic yrk, work of labour, and tells the same story. Neither time, space, nor the purpose of these articles will allow us to give a similar analysis as that given under the word asham; this we may do separately in subsequent issues. What is the next in this descent from sin? Job xv. 35 says, "They conceive mischief (amal) and bring forth vanity (aven), and their belly prepareth deceit (mirmah)". So the frightful pedigree grows.

Aven.—Although the word aven is rendered in Job xv. 35 vanity, that is not the best translation, and the margin reads, "or iniquity", and this is the true rendering. Whereas vanity occurs but six times for aven, iniquity occurs 47 times, wickedness or wicked 7, idol twice, affection and mischief three times each, and one occurrence only of the following, evil, mourning, nought, sorrow, false, mourners, unjust, unrighteous, and vain. While iniquity may be a truer rendering of aven than vanity, yet we must not bring our modern idea of iniquity into the word. In Hos. iv. 15 Beth-aven is the house of idolatry or vanity, and a play upon the word is found in Amos v. 5—"Bethel shall come to nought (aven)". The last occurrence of the word used in the O.T. is in Zech. x. 2: "The idols have spoken vanity". Both Jew and Gentile have passed through this stage:--

The Gentile.

> "Because when they knew God, they glorified Him not as God, neither were they thankful; but became vain in their imagination . . . . . and changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image . . . . . uncleanness and vile affections . . . . . inventors of evil things" (Rom. i. 21-30).

The Jew.

> "They changed their (or My) glory into the similitude of an ox that eateth grass . . . . . they joined themselves unto Baal-peor . . . . . they provoked His anger with their inventions" (Psa. cvi. 20-29).

The first meaning of iniquity, as discovered by the meaning and usage of the word aven, is not so much the violation of any one particular law, but the violation of the basis of all law, "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me". The LXX renders aven by anomia more than by any other word. The mystery of iniquity is expressed by the "lawless one", and manifested by the usurpation of Divine honours by the man of sin. It is a wholesome corrective to remember this phase. We are more prone to place murder, robbery, adultery, and lying, foremost; these are but the outcome of that primitive iniquity which, by enthroning self, dethrones God. The state of heart and mind resulting from sin is expressed in the word avah (N.B.—Care should be taken by those who "search and see" not to confuse this word which commences with the letter ayin with the word avah which commences with the letter aleph).

Deformity.

Avah means wrong. Wrong comes from the same source that provides "to wring" and "awry", and is cognate with the Dutch "wrang", acid or sour. The original idea of avah is expressed in the following:--

> "I was bowed down at the hearing of it" (Isa. xxi. 3).
> "He hath made my paths crooked" (Lam. iii. 9).
> "He turneth it upside down" (Isa. xxiv. 1).

Perversity seems to express the meaning of the word. Sin having missed the mark renders all labour abortive, and our very natures are wrung out of course or "wrong", "perverse".

Deceit.

Avah leads to aval. If avah means that nature which is crooked, aval indicates those actions that are deceitful and unfair. In about thirty passages the word is rendered iniquity, and in the sense of a departure from that which is equal or right; this expresses fairly well the meaning of the word. "He that soweth iniquity (aval) shall reap vanity (aven)" (Prov. xxii. 8). And so the weary process is repeated from generation to generation.

We now reach those aspects and phases of sin that demand more vigorous and active titles to express their character. Up till now we have seen sin as a failure, its condition ignorance, its fruit vanity, its course distortion, but this can have but one result, viz., active rebellion and transgression.

Restless revolt.

Thus we get abar, transgression. The primary meaning of abar is to pass over (see Gen. xxxii. 10, 16, 31, xxxiii. 3; Exod. xii. 12). Pasha, rebellion, and rasha, wickedness. I Sam. xx. 3 uses the word pasha, "There is but a step between me and death", and the marginal reading of Isa. xxvii. 4, "I would march against them". These usages show that pasha is similar to abar in the thought of overstepping. Abar oversteps the bounds, pasha revolts against authority. "I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against Me" (Isa. i. 2).

Rasha, wickedness, is revolt in progress, rebellion rushing to ruin. Its essential meaning is that of violent commotion, the exact opposite of peace. Micah vi. 11 speaks of the "wicked balances", which contrast with that sense of equal poise expressed by "just balances". Job iii. 17 speaks of the wicked in a context that expresses restless character. "There the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary be at rest." So also Isa. lvii. 20, 21 speaks to the same effect: "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waves cast up mire and dirt. There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked." These are the "ungodly" of Psa. i. 1, 4, 6, and the "malefactors" and "thieves" indicated prophetically in Isa. liii. 9.

Evil and ruin.

Such negation of right and commission of wrong has but one end. This is foreshadowed in the word ra, evil. This word is translated evil no less than 444 times in the O.T. Its primary meaning is to break, and to destroy, "Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron" (Psa. ii. 9). Then to afflict, to entreat evil (Job xxiv. 21). Ra is translated by a number of words that suggest calamity and trouble: adversity 4 times, affliction 6, calamity once, displeasure 4, distress once, grief and grievous 3, harm once, hurt 20, misery once, sad, sore, sorrow, trouble, wretchedness among others will show that the primitive idea of "ruin" is never absent from the word. The reader, with a concordance before him, or even the above citations, will not be greatly troubled by those who wish to bring out of Isa. xlv. 7 a bolster for the teaching that God is the creator of sin. The book of Ecclesiastes provides a commentary upon the meaning of evil no less than that of vanity. The writer speaks of sore travail (i. 13), work that is grievous (ii. 17), a vanity and a great evil (ii. 21), as he sees the ruin and the purposeless toil that has resulted from sin.

There are several other words used to portray the many-sidedness of sin, but those we have considered are the chief. By one man sin entered into the world, and all have sinned and COME SHORT (chata). This condition is named as one of lawlessness and unrighteousness. Our very natures are wrung out of their course, or wrong and crooked (avah), we are plunged into ignorance that is not synonymous with innocence (asham), and all our efforts are purposeless, wearisome toil (amal). We have turned our backs upon God, and a usurper has dominion over us. Sin has mounted the throne of God (aven), and deceit and inequality, iniquity in fact, now mark us (aval). We pass over or transgress the law of conscience or of revelation (abar), and become rebels (pasha). Restless wickedness becomes our characteristic (rasha), and utter ruin, or evil, is our end (ra). Such is the condition of the sons of Adam. From such a state nothing can deliver them, but the redemption that is in Christ.

It will be found that in Rom. v. 6-10, when speaking of those who stand in need of salvation, the apostle deals with sin in somewhat the same way in which we have treated its development. He begins with the negative and passive, and leads on to the positive and active:--

For when we were yet WITHOUT STRENGTH \ negative.
In due time Christ died for the UN-GODLY /
While we were yet SINNERS \ positive.
When we were ENEMIES /

The types of sin in the Scriptures will need examination before we have considered all that has been given to teach us, and these we must pass in review in a subsequent article. So far we have gathered something of the nature of sin from the inspired language employed to describe its character and its outgoings. We must, however, seek a clearer Scriptural understanding of the redemption that delivers. We commend this study to all true Bereans, praying that the method suggested in investigating the word asham may stimulate others to search out similar phenomena in connection with the remaining words. We should welcome any help in this direction, and would forewarn any who contemplate the search, that they will have “need of patience”, and that, as the study requires accuracy both of text reference and original words, some system of checking must be adopted to make such study of service.

The Epistle to the Romans.

#1. Introduction to the Study.
pp. 33 - 37

Perhaps no one book in the whole of the Scriptures may be considered to have a claim upon all who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, more than the Epistle to the Romans. Where all exhibit the hall-mark of inspiration comparisons are odious, but inasmuch as a building needs foundations as well as top stones, so we may speak of the epistle to the Romans as essentially fundamental in character.

In this epistle Israel as well as Gentile, both in their sin and their salvation, are placed in their true relation to the purpose of God. Here sin receives its fullest exposure and here justification by faith its grandest exposition. Doctrinal, practical and dispensational truth receive equal attention, and the whole argument is conducted upon a calmer level than was possible when dealing with matters so personal as those which prompted the epistles to the Galatians and Corinthians.

To those who are vitally concerned with the teaching of Ephesians, Rom. v. 12 - viii. 39 is of supreme importance, for Eph. ii. 1 proceeds upon the assumption that Rom. vi. is practical truth. Philippians too does not teach but assumes knowledge of justification by faith (Phil. iii. 9). (See Booklet "Romans Stones for the Ephesian Temple").

The theme of the Epistle.

As we read the epistle it is very evident that the church at Rome contained a fairly even mixture of Jewish and Gentile believers, and the necessity to adjust the differences between them and both of them to the gospel is the motive that prompted the writing of the epistle.

We must be on our guard against a too sweeping generalization in the attempt to express in one line the teaching of this epistle. As Dean Farrar writes, "Who will pretend to give in a few words the central conception of the 'Prometheus Vinctus' or of 'Hamlet'?" Much less can we hope to do so with such an epistle as that to the Romans.

The central feature of the epistle may well have been the dispensational passage covering chapters x. and xi., for this touches the sore point of Israel's rejection. This would necessitate not only a reference to Sinai and to the covenant made before that with Abraham, but in virtue of Paul's apostleship to the Gentiles would demand a statement that carried things as far back as Adam. This is indeed what we find. To the apostle Paul we must look for information concerning the relation of Adam and the race, and to this epistle in particular for its fullest exposition.

Inner and outer teaching.

The epistle to the Romans, while it must be read through as one would an ordinary letter, must be studied along the lines of its divisions, and the first division of importance is that which we call the outer and the inner. The outer occupies Rom. i. 1 - v. 11 and ix. 1 - xvi. 24. The inner occupies Rom. v. 12 - viii. 39 and xvi. 25-27. The dominant figure (speaking of men) in Rom. i. - v. 11 is Abraham, whereas the dominant figure in Rom. v. 12 - viii. 39 is Adam. The background of Rom. i. is Babel; the background of Rom. v. 12 is Eden. Sins are the concern of the outer; sin the concern of the inner.

The reader will observe that the concluding verses of Rom. xvi. are considered as a part of the inner teaching of Romans. This we must study in its place, but we will here say that we do not believe that "the mystery" of Ephesians is in view in Rom. xvi. Let us compare the opening and closing words of the epistle.

The Outer Section. Introduction. (Rom. i. 1-7).	The Inner Section. Conclusion. (Rom. xvi. 25-27).
The gospel of God.	My gospel.
Concerning His Son Jesus Christ.	The preaching of Jesus Christ.
Promised afore by His prophets in the holy Scriptures.	According to the revelation of the mystery, kept in silence in age times, but now manifested, and through prophetic writings made known.
For obedience of faith unto all nations.	To all nations for the obedience of faith.
Grace from God our Father.	Praise to the aionian God and the only wise God.

As a further unfolding of the different point of view of the inner and outer portions of the epistle we observe the usage and occurrence of some important words.

Sin.—Occurs 47 times. Of these 6 occurrences are found in the outer portion (chapters i. - v. 11, ix. - xvi.) and 41 in the inner portion (v. 12 - viii.). It will be seen that this word is particularly connected with the inner portion.

Wrath.—This word occurs 12 times, and is exclusively used in the outer section. Contrary to popular exposition, the wrath of God is not mentioned in connection with Adam's sin. As a parallel to this, we might mention that wrath is not spoken of at the great white throne; wrath was completed in the vials poured out upon the earth before the Millennium.

Justify.—

Dikaioo (to justify).	11 times in outer, 4 times in inner.
Dikaioses (justification).	One occurrence in each.
Dikaioma (judicial sentence).	Twice in outer. Three times in inner.
Dikaiosune (righteousness).	28 times in outer, 8 times in inner.
Dikaios (righteous).	5 in outer, 2 in inner.

Justification and righteousness are the theme of the outer portion, rather than the inner.

Faith.—

Pistis (faith).	38 occurrences, all in outer section.
Pisteuo (believe).	20 occurrences in outer, one only in inner.

Here we have 59 occurrences of "faith" and "believe" with but one occurrence only in the inner section.

Gospel.—

Euaggelion (gospel).	9 occurrences in outer, once in inner.
Euaggelizo (preach gospel).	4 occurrences in outer portion.

The one occurrence in the inner section is in the doxology of chapter xvi., where the gospel is intimately related to the mystery. There is no mention of either faith or gospel in v. - viii.

Death.—

Thanatos (death).	Once in outer, 21 in inner.
Thanatoo (to die).	3 times in inner portion only.
Apothnesko (to die).	9 times in outer, 12 in inner.

Spirit.—

Pneuma. 12 in outer, 22 in inner. Of these 22 occurrences, 21 are found in chapter viii.

Comparing this word with the distribution of "faith", it will be seen that faith is practically confined to the outer section and spirit to the inner. Another method of comparison, which brings out the distinctive viewpoints of the two sections, is to take similar expressions found in both sections, and observe their different usage and connection, e.g:--

Redemption.—

Apolutrosis. Rom iii. 24 outer: Rom. viii. 23 inner.

The first occurrence speaks of the redemption that is in Christ and deals with sin and justification. The second speaks of the redemption of the body, the adoption, the resurrection. In the former we are saved by faith, in the latter we are saved by hope.

Reckon.—Logizomai. In chapter iv., where the word occurs 11 times, it is God that reckons, the believer being passive. In Rom. vi. and viii. it is the believer who reckons, and he is no longer passive.

The earnest student will not rest here, but will accept the above as a suggestion only, and will prosecute similar comparisons and so bring the two sections into clearer focus.

The outer section (i. 1 - v. 11 and ix. 1 - xvi. 24) is sub-divided as follows:--

Doctrine (i. 1 - v. 11).

a | i. 1-17. General statement. Justification by faith.
b | i. 18-32. Gentile.
c | ii. 1-29. Jew.
d | iii. 1-31. All the world.
e | iv. 1 - v. 11. Particular exposition. Justification by faith.

Dispensation (ix. - xi.).

a | ix. 1-29. Elect remnant.
b | ix. 30-33. Prophets.
c | x. 1-13. Law.
d | x. 14-21. Gospel.
e | xi. 1-36. Elect remnant.

Practice (xii. - xii. 24).

a | xii. 1-21. Relation to God and members of body.
b | xiii. 1-14. Relation to civil authority and neighbour.
c | xiv. 1 - xv. 7. Relation of Jewish and Gentile members.
d | xv. 8-33. Relation of Jewish and Gentile believers.
e | xvi. 1-24. Relation to individual workers.

This article is confessedly introductory, and here for the moment we stay so that we may commence the exposition of the epistle proper untrammelled by these tabulations and outlines. This we hope to do in our next article. We do not mean that the above method of study is to be despised or discounted, but rather valued and encouraged, and we commend it to all readers who desire first-hand knowledge of the Word itself.

#2. The Salutation (i. 1-7).
pp. 65 - 76

The opening section of the epistle is comprised of three parts,
(1) The salutation (1-7);
(2) The personal references to the apostle (8-16);
(3) The thesis of the epistle (17).

The salutation, which occupies seven verses, is far more doctrinal and weighty than that of any other epistle. The earlier epistles to the Galatians, Corinthians and Thessalonians are addressed to the churches in those respective towns. This epistle is the first to be addressed, not to a church, but to the "saints". Whatever may have been the reason for this change of address, it certainly reveals the fact that the individual believer began to occupy a position of greater importance than did the corporate assembly, the church.

The salutation is sent (1) from Paul the apostle, (2) to the saints at Rome, (3) greeting them with the twofold salutation of grace and peace. Paul describes himself as (1) a bond slave of Jesus Christ, (2) a called apostle, (3) one separated unto the gospel of God.

At the revelation of the gospel the apostle pauses to make two most vital observations, shewing (1) the gospel's relation to the O.T. Scriptures, and (2) the gospel's relation to the Son of God.

For reasons to be given later, the reference to the Son of God is divided into two parts, one referring to Him "according to the flesh", and the other referring to Him "according to the spirit of holiness". Paul returns to his apostleship to affirm that it was (1) for obedience of faith, and (2) among all nations (or Gentiles); and so to those particularly in view, (1) all at Rome; (2) beloved of God; (3) called saints. Such is the brief analysis. It will repay us to give these weighty words a closer scrutiny.

Paul's three titles.

"Paul, bond slave of Jesus Christ."—From the moment that Paul had been commissioned as a chosen vessel to bear the name of the Lord to the Gentiles, his life had been a fight, both for his message and for his authority. How his whole being shrank from the appearance of boasting that the assertion of his apostleship necessitated may be sensed in II Cor. xi. How vital to the progress, nay the very existence, of the truth, the recognition of his apostleship is may be gauged by reading Gal. i. and ii. Yet we are certain that there was no title that was nearer to the heart of him who loved much, because he had been much forgiven, than that which comes first in this salutation "Paul, a bond slave". He recognized indeed that he was not his own, but that he had been bought with a price. "Whose I am and Whom I serve" is his clear heart-felt testimony.

The first spoken words of Paul the saved were, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do". Even in the epistle to the Galatians, where inspiration demands two chapters out of six to prove the independence and authority of Paul, even there, at the very last, and written with his own hand, he speaks of the "brand marks" that he bears in his body as the bond slave of Christ. Yet as we learn through this self-same Paul that the Lord he served laid aside His glory and humbled Himself, taking upon Him the "form of a slave", we can begin to appreciate that Paul could know no higher honour than to be called the bond slave of that same Christ.

"A called apostle."—It is not correct to read as in the A.V., "called to be an apostle". He was "a called apostle". What this means may be gathered from Heb. v. 4, "And no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God". The apostle being called of God was neither self appointed nor commissioned by man. We can trace this feature in several references to his apostleship:--

> "Paul, an apostle (not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father, Who raised Him from the dead)" (Gal. i. 1).
>
> "Am I not an apostle? Am I not free? Have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord? Are not ye my work in the Lord?" (I Cor. ix. 1).
>
> "I am ordained a preacher, and an apostle (I speak the truth in Christ and lie not), a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and truth" (I Tim. ii. 7).

The word "apostle" is from apostello, "to send from" someone as his legate (Acts xxii. 21, xxvi. 17). In this sense the Lord Himself is called "the Apostle" (Heb. iii. 1), for He was pre-eminently "the Sent One" (see John's Gospel). The "sent one" or the "apostle" comes with all the authority of the One that sends him (Matt. viii. 9; Luke x. 16), and it is this fact that lies behind the title "apostle". Not only was Paul an apostle, he was peculiarly separated unto the gospel of God. This separation took place at birth and at Antioch:--

> "But when it pleased God, Who SEPARATED me from my mother's womb, and called me by His grace, to reveal His Son in me that I might preach Him among the Gentiles . . . . ." (Gal. i. 15, 16).

Here we have three items that are repeated in Acts xiii., xiv. and Rom. i., viz., (1) the separation; (2) preaching Him; (3) among the Gentiles:--

> "The Holy Ghost said, SEPARATE me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them . . . . . they preached the word of God . . . . . I have found David . . . . . of this man's seed hath God according to His promise raised unto Israel a Saviour, Jesus . . . . . as it is written in the second Psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee . . . . . by Him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses . . . . . it was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you (Jews) . . . . . we turn to the Gentiles . . . . . they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how He had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles" (Acts xiii. and xiv.).

The parallels of this passage with Rom. i. 1-17 are too patent to necessitate detailed proof. It is very evident that Paul's separation unto the gospel of God took place then. Some of the allusions we have quoted will appear more clearly when we have examined Rom. i. a little more. Paul's separation was unto the gospel of God.

What is this gospel?

It is common knowledge with most of our readers that the word gospel means "good news". It may be as well to have the meaning more fully demonstrated at this first occurrence, as we desire this series on Romans to provide as complete a repository of knowledge and understanding as possible for those who are engaged in making this gospel known.

Euaggelion is made up of eu (well) and aggelia (a message). It is one of a group of words made up with aggeleia.
Aggeleia is a message, news (I John i. 5).
Aggello. To bring a message (John xx. 18).
Aggelos. Messenger, angel (Luke vii. 24; ii. 13).
Anaggello. To report back (I John i. 5).
Apaggello. To announce or report (Acts iv. 23).
Diaggello. To convey a message (Rom. ix. 17).

There are thirteen more words necessary to complete the list, but the above are all we need to show the primary idea.

The gospel is God's good message.

God's good message may be the proclamation concerning our forgiveness, our hope of heaven, our peace, etc. God's good message may be the proclamation of the ground or source from which all these blessings flow. In other words, the gospel may be a detailed proclamation of the ills that may be cured, or the proclamation concerning Him Who alone can cure them. Rom. i. leaves us in no doubt as to which is the Scriptural view:--

"The gospel of God . . . . . concerning His Son" (Rom. i. 1 and 3).
"The gospel . . . . . the power of God unto salvation" (Rom. i. 15, 16).
"Christ the power of God" (I Cor. i. 24).
"We preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified" (I Cor. i. 23).
"We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord" (II Cor. 14. 5).

These and many other passages clearly set forth this fact. Salvation is not the gospel--the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. Justification is not the gospel, for in the gospel is revealed a righteousness of God. Rom. i. 1-4 gives three important tests for the gospel:--

1. It is of GOD.
2. It is according to His WORD.
3. It is concerning His SON.

We believe these three features are unalterable. That neither Christian charity, nor force of circumstances, neither empty churches nor declining subscriptions can ever justify the modification or the excision of one of these three items. No other message has a right to the name gospel, but that of which God is Author. No other message can use this title, but that which rests upon the promises of Holy Scripture. No other message is the gospel, but that which coming from God and fulfilling His word finds its goal in the person of the Son of God.

The gospel and the O.T. Scriptures.

Paul had been charged with introducing innovations, of preaching a self-evolved message, of altering laws and customs, and therefore before he defines his gospel he turns aside to declare that it was entirely in harmony with the O.T. Scriptures, and indeed was the fulfillment of its promises. In verse 17 he picks out one verse from an O.T. prophet and makes it live for all time: "The just shall live by faith." In chapter iii. 10-18 he shows that his doctrine of universal sin is founded upon the O.T. Scriptures, and in chapter iii. 21 declares that the gospel presentation of a righteousness of God without the law is witnessed by the law and the prophets.

The controversy as to faith or works is settled by the appeal "What saith the Scriptures?" (iv. 3). The same appeal runs through chapters ix.-xv. where the remnant, Israel's temporary blindness, the sovereignty of God's choice, the judgment of believers, the justification of Paul's extended ministry, and the inclusion of Gentiles, are all based upon quotations from the O.T. Scriptures. This attitude is not to be looked upon as peculiar to the apostle Paul, it is also the attitude of Peter:--

> "The word of the Lord endureth for ever. And THIS IS THE WORD which by the gospel is preached unto you" (I Peter i. 25).

This moreover is the attitude of Christ Himself.

> "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed Me; for he wrote of Me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe My words?" (John v. 46, 47).

He who tampers with Moses destroys John iii. 16 (see iii. 14). He who ridicules Jonah denies the resurrection (Matt. xii. 40). He who disbelieves the flood doubts the second advent (Matt. xxiv. 37-39). Moreover as a final witness against modernism it was the risen Christ Who declared that all things must be fulfilled that had been written of Him, "in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms" (Luke xxiv. 44). The many who believe the gospel of God as preached by Paul can have neither part nor lot with one who denies the inspiration of the O.T., narrow and old fashioned though such an attitude may appear.

His Son Jesus Christ our Lord.

Those who are able to read the original have presented to them in the arrangement of verses 3 and 4 a wonderful conception of this title of Christ, for the words "His Son" are separated from the words "Jesus Christ our Lord" by the whole of verses 3 and 4, thereby enclosing all the testimony of those verses in this one great title. It is important enough to display in English.

	/	According to flesh, Seed of David.	\
HIS SON	{	According to Spirit, Son of God with	}	JESUS CHRIST
	\	power, by resurrection of dead.	/	OUR LORD.

This fact reveals how full that statement is which says, "The gospel of God is concerning His Son".

We have yet to discover the fullness of that great parenthesis of verses 3 and 4 where the title "Son" is explained. We will not waste valuable time and space in repeating the great variety of interpretations that have been put forward by both ancient and modern commentators as to the meaning of almost every clause of this passage, but with a consciousness both of our own fallibility and also of the utter trustworthiness of the Scriptures we seek afresh its meaning and its purpose. And surely this last thought is a good start along the road. If we do not believe that the apostle had any particular purpose in view or that he chose his words with precision like Koheleth of old ("words of truth") we rob ourselves of a great incentive to search and see. If we believe that the words used are the most fitting to express his meaning, and if we believe that the passage is most relevant to the theme of the section and of the epistle, we are the more prepared to receive its message. Let us begin to read and note any feature that looks important.

"Which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh."—Why the seed of David? David's testimony in the Psalms is most emphatic concerning the resurrection of Christ (Acts ii. 25, 29-34; iv. 25). To David were promises made that could only be fulfilled in Christ (Acts xiii. 22, 34, 36). The prophecy of the rebuilding of the tabernacle of David was intimately connected with the salvation of the Gentiles (Acts xv. 16). David unites with Abraham in bearing witness to the essence of the gospel (Rom. iv. 6), and prophesies the failure of Israel (Rom. xi. 9).

If we examine the testimonies of Peter and Paul in the Acts with reference to David we shall perceive a fundamental difference between the good news appertaining to each. Peter sees Christ as the seed of David raised from the dead to sit upon the throne of his father David (Acts ii. 30). Paul sees the same Christ raised from the dead as Saviour both for Israel and the Gentiles, and bringing to light the doctrine of justification by faith (Acts xiii.). Both Peter and Paul were divinely inspired and both give in their opening utterances (Pentecost and Antioch) the key to their respective messages. Peter had preached "Jesus Christ of the seed of David raised from the dead" according to his gospel, which had the circumcision always in mind, whereas Paul in writing to Timothy says:--

> "Remember that Jesus Christ of the seed of David was raised from the dead according to my gospel, wherein I suffer trouble as an evil doer . . . . . study . . . . . rightly dividing the word of truth" (II Tim. ii. 8-15).

Paul knew from painful experience the attitude of the circumcision to his gospel, and it was necessary therefore when writing to the saints at Rome to begin with Christ according to the flesh and to lead on to Christ according to the Spirit. Paul's gospel necessitated Jesus Christ "made of a woman, made under the law" (Gal. iv. 4), to touch the need of Gentile and of Jew, more than Christ as the Seed of David. Paul needed to emphasize that Christ was the Seed of Abraham (Gal. iii. 16) for the Gentiles' sake, rather than His descent from David. Christ as the Seed of the woman, the Seed of Abraham, and the Seed of David are the three great foundation stones of the gospel. At the same time Paul adds "according to the flesh", and as such he had already declared that he no longer knew Christ (II Cor. v. 16). Christ according to the flesh is connected with Israel: "Who are Israelites . . . . . and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came" (Rom. ix. 4, 5). Until the Lord died on the cross He was "straitened", and limited His ministry to the lost sheep of the house of Israel:--

> "Now this I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers" (Rom. xv. 8).

Not until He was raised from the dead could the Gentiles glorify God for His mercy (Rom. xv. 9-12, 16). The Gentiles' relation to Christ as root of Jesse is clearly millennial in its full application (Rom. xv. 12; Isa. xi.). The reference to Christ as the Seed of David according to the flesh is preparatory to the second statement.

"And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead."—There are a series of problems that need solution in this verse. What is the meaning of horizo, "declared"? Do the words "with power" read with the word "declared", i.e., powerfully declared, or do they read with the words "the Son of God"? Do the words "spirit of holiness" refer to the Holy Spirit, the gifts of the Spirit given at Pentecost, or the risen and spiritual nature of Christ? Finally, does the resurrection of the dead refer to the raising of such as Lazarus, or to the saints as recorded in Matt. xxvii. 52 and 53, or to the resurrection of Christ Himself? Quite a number of answers have been given to these questions.

Horizo, "declared", and aphorizo, "separated" (verse 1), have much the same meaning. The ancient Syriac translates horizo by "known to be". The Latin Vulgate reads "predestinated". The primary idea of the word is "to be bound", "to fix the limits", as in Acts xvii. 26, "and hath determined (horizo) the bounds (horothesio)". Then, to determine as a purpose (Luke xxii. 22; Acts ii. 23). The resurrection of the dead marked off the Lord Jesus as the Son of God with power. It fixed a boundary, it indicated a phase of the purpose of God. Scripture declares that Christ "was crucified through weakness, yet He liveth by the power of God" (II Cor. xiii. 4). Scripture declares that "Christ dieth no more", and it is equally true to say Christ suffereth no more, is weary no more, is hungry no more, is tempted no more, weeps no more, shall be buffeted and scourged and spit upon and crucified no more. The boundary fixed by God for that weakness was at the cross. The resurrection marked Him off the Son of God with power. It will be remembered that Peter quotes the second Psalm in Acts iv. and Paul quotes it in Acts xiii. In that Psalm we read:--

"I will declared the decree: the Lord hath said unto Me, Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee . . . . . Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron" (Psa. ii. 7, 9).

The word decree has much the same force as horizo, and it is possible that there is an allusion to this passage in the apostle's words. A great number of commentators and expositors translate the words "with power" adverbially, "powerfully demonstrated to be the Son of God", referring the power to the act of demonstrating. The order of the words in the original seems to be against that interpretation, for the ordinary Greek construction was open to the apostle and would have expressed that meaning without ambiguity. We believe that had he meant the words "with power" to be understood adverbially he would have placed en dunamei between tou and horisthentoo; as it is en dunamei follows the words huion Theou, "Son of God". Moreover it is not in line with Greek thought to use dunamis, "power", for a "powerful" argument or demonstration. The simpler rendering and the one that fulfils all requirement is to read, "The Son of God with power".

What are we to understand by the spirit of holiness? We may be fairly sure that the Holy Spirit is not intended here, for the words used when the Holy Spirit or spiritual gifts are intended are to pneuma to hagion, or pneuma hagion, whereas the words used here are pneuma hagiosunes. Moreover the words "according to the flesh" and according to "the spirit of holiness" are in such evident relation to one another as to demand the meaning to be the setting forth of the two aspects of the nature of Christ. In resurrection the Lord is called "Spirit":--

"The last Adam was made a quickening Spirit" (I Cor. xv. 45).
"Now the Lord (Jesus) is that Spirit" (II Cor. iii. 17).
"Offered Himself through the aionian Spirit" (Heb. ix. 14).
"Put to death in flesh, yet quickened in Spirit" (I Pet. iii. 18).
"Manifested in flesh, justified in Spirit" (I Tim. iii. 16).

"From resurrection of dead."—The word from is ek, out of suggesting origin. There is no article before either resurrection or dead. The resurrection manifested Him to be the Son of God with power. Why is the expression so vague? It does not definitely say "by His resurrection" or "by the resurrection from among the dead", but just "by resurrection of dead". Paul himself has made it abundantly clear in I Cor. xv. that all who ever have or who ever will be raised from the dead are raised only through Christ. The raising of Lazarus is closely associated with the confession of Martha, "I believe that Thou art the Christ, the Son of God" (John xi. 27), and in fulfillment of that glorious title, "I am the resurrection and the life" (John xi. 25). From the fact that the words of Rom. i. 4 may read, "by a resurrection of dead persons", some see a reference to Matt. xxvii. 52, 53, where "many bodies of the saints which slept arose and came out of their graves after His resurrection", and once again (in the context) we must meet with the confession, "Truly, this was the Son of God".

In John v., by claiming to be the Son of God, the Lord came near to being stoned for blasphemy, and He added to that claim the power to raise from the dead, "all that are in the graves". All the claims made by the Son of God were vindicated at His resurrection. Then it was that He was declared to be the Son of God with power. The resurrection of Christ is the pledge given by God that all His purposes shall be fulfilled:--

"He will judge the world in righteousness by that Man Whom He hath ordained, whereof He hath given ASSURANCE unto all men, in that He hath raised Him from the dead" (Acts xvii. 31).

"Therefore let all the house of Israel know ASSUREDLY, that God hath made that same Jesus, Whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ" (Acts ii. 36).

"Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted . . . . . He hath shed forth THIS" (Acts ii. 33).

Now all this is involved in the title, "His Son Jesus Christ our Lord"; and all this is of necessity involved in the gospel of God which is concerning His Son. The preaching of "Jesus, a man approved of God" is not sufficient, and, despite popular evangelism, to determine to know nothing among men save Jesus Christ and Him crucified does not fulfil the requirements. The gospel of God concerns His Son Who died and was buried and rose again according to the Scriptures.

The gospel. His Son Jesus Christ our Lord.
The apostle.

If the gospel is seen to be so full by reason of Him Who is its glorious subject, the apostleship of Paul also grows in dignity as we realize the One Who sent him.

"By whom we have received grace and apostleship."—The apostle never seemed to be able to think of his office unmoved. The glory of it made him marvel at the grace that could save and commission one such as he had been. Speaking not merely of his salvation, but of his ministry, he said, "To me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given" (Eph. iii. 8). This apostleship was

"For faith obedience among all the Gentiles for His name."—How are we to understand the words "obedience of faith"? Some refer to Acts vi. 7, "A great company of priests were obedient to the faith". In Rom. i. 5 there is no article, whereas in Acts vi. 7 there is. The gospel is often designated "the faith". The same expression "faith obedience" is repeated in Rom. xvi. 26. There it is not believing the gospel that is in view, but the "stablishing" of those who had already believed and moreover had knowledge of the mystery there revealed. A comparison of Rom. i. 8 with Rom. xvi. 19 suggests the true meaning:--

"Your FAITH is spoken of throughout the whole world."
"Your OBEDIENCE is come abroad unto all men."

Or again, in Rom. x. 14 and 16 he says:--

"How shall they BELIEVE in Him of Whom they have not heard."

"They have not all OBEYED the gospel, for Isaiah saith, Lord, who hath BELIEVED our report?"

Faith obedience is set in vivid contrast with legal obedience. The one is grace, the other works. The sphere of one is spirit, the other flesh. Christ is the head of one, Moses if the other. This faith obedience was for all nations, and on account of His name. Among these nations were the believers at Rome. They were "the called of Jesus Christ", "the beloved of God" and "called saints". To such the apostle sends the greeting:--

"Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ."—"Grace" by itself was the light hearted Greek salutation (Acts xxiii. 26). "Peace" (shalom), the deeper greeting of the Hebrew. The two are combined by the apostle. Such is the greeting of the apostle placed at the opening of this weighty epistle. Like all the works of God, it is entirely in keeping with its position. Witness how in its short compass it contains weighty words concerning:--

(1). Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles.
(2). The gospel as it relates to Christ.
(3). Christ considered according to the flesh and the spirit.
(4). The sphere of Paul's ministry.--"All nations."
(5). The nature of his testimony.--"Faith obedience."
(6). The incentive for both minister and believer.--"For the sake of His Name."

May we be permitted to make a few observations for the help of those who are engaged in the ministry of the Word. You are not your own master, nor your congregation's servant. You like Paul are the bond slave of Christ. Whether you labour with your hands in the work-a-day world, or whether your whole time is devoted to the ministry, you are separated unto the gospel of God. You cannot preach that gospel and doubt the O.T. Scriptures. Neither can you preach that gospel and fail to preach Christ. Even though you preach Christ you will not preach a full gospel without Christ risen. Your own obedience and the obedience enjoined by you upon others is not a legal obedience, but an obedience of faith. Grace and peace be with all such.

#3. Paul: the man and the message (i. 8-17).
pp. 113 - 121

"Plans pertain to the heart of man, but the last word is from the Lord" (Prov. xvi. 1).

These words apply not only to the average man, but even to an apostle. Paul had on more than one occasion experienced the crossing of his plans. Nevertheless he had proved that the "last word" of the Lord excelled the dearest plans of the heart of man. "Forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia", he "assayed to go into Bithynia, but the Spirit suffered him not", and therefore taking the only course left he found himself at Troas, there to see the vision of the man of Macedonia, and to "gather assuredly" both the will of the Lord and the reason for the closed doors in Asia and Bithynia (see Acts xvi. 6-9). On another occasion the Corinthians apparently suggested that he made promises but did not keep them, and the paraphrase of Chysostom on II Cor. i. 17 is:--

> "Did I show levity, ... or do I plan after the flesh, that the yea with me must be always yea, and the nay always nay, as it is with a man of the world who makes his plans independently of God's overruling of them?"

It may appear to be a very high standard of righteousness that makes a man's word his bond: it may actually be a higher one still for a man to appear untrustworthy because he desires ever to obey the higher will of God. To recognize such a state makes the added "D.V." a sacred duty and no longer a pious convention. Consistency has sometimes been obeyed before the claims of added light, and then humbling for a leader to confess to making a mistake, but what a trustworthy leader is he who will make the confession!

Paul's projected visit to Rome.

Paul had many times prayed for and planned a journey to Rome. His non-appearance he says must not be put down either to fear or laxity.

> "Oftentimes I purposed to come unto you, but was let hitherto" (Rom. i. 13).

In chapter xv. he gives expression to the latest plan he had devised and the grounds upon which it rested. We are men, we make plans, our grounds may be as true as the apostle's, but our ability to forecast all that God has for us to do may as signally fail. Therefore it will be no waste of time to learn from the apostle here. He had fully preached the gospel, and had striven to preach where Christ was unnamed, and had accomplished a grand circle from Jerusalem unto Illyricum:--

> "For which cause also I have been much hindered from coming to you" (Rom. xv. 19-22).

He now saw that his work in those parts was done, and this combining with a great desire for many years to visit Rome, his plan was that after taking the contribution he had for the poor saints at Jerusalem, he would journey to Spain and on his way visit Rome and be somewhat filled with their company. Let us view this "plan" in the light of "the last word". His estimate was correct as to his having finished his appointed ministry in those parts. His desire to visit Rome was granted, and his assurance that when he did visit Rome he would come "in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ" (Rom. xv. 29) was fulfilled in a sense that Paul then could not conceive. He asked the saints' prayers that he may be "delivered from them that do not believe in Judaea" (Rom. xv. 31).

This apprehension of the apostle was prophetic. It was the instrumental cause of his journey to Rome, and also of his imprisonment. It will be seen that God's answer to Paul's prayers transcended in spiritual value the highest flight of his petitions. It was a glorious thing to contemplate a visit to Spain with the gospel, but seen from the standpoint of history it was infinitely more glorious for Paul to have been cast into prison, there to receive the crown of all revelation. This story should be a comfort to us. It may be that we see clearly that another phase of our experiences is closing. We pray, we plan, we think we see, we go partly forward. Doors close, we appear in the eyes of others to have hesitated, trifled, failed to make up our mind. Perhaps we have too readily said yea yea, and nay nay, and not so emphatically "If the Lord will". Both in Rom. i. 10 and xv. 32 we find the expression "by the will of God to come unto you". God reads the heart. It was good to find in the heart of David the desire to build a house for God, although it could not be permitted to him.

The apostle Paul has been given to us as an example. A picture was once described in a catalogue as being "After Rembrandt", and someone prefixed the words "A long way", making the description read "A long way after Rembrandt". Most of us must come in this category, "A long way after Paul", yet we have received him as a precious gift from the Lord, as a pattern, as a guide, one who bids us follow him as he followed his Lord. Therefore, however far off our following may be, we rest easy when we can find any parallel between our path and that of the great apostle. When we are thwarted as he was thwarted, when we are cast down as he was cast down, when we are delivered as he was delivered, and oh joy! when unconsciously we are falsely accused and misrepresented as he was. Nothing is so strengthening to one's position than to receive a letter from someone whose fulminations against one's teaching or character resemble those which were hurled at the apostle of the Gentiles by the religious leaders of his day.

All my affairs, and how I do.

It will therefore be readily understood that the personal items that the Spirit of God has included in Holy Writ concerning the apostle Paul are items of too deep an interest for us to slur over. We are convinced that it is a false species of sanctity that cannot stoop to these lowly things of daily life. The "high-brow" will be found in religion as well as in art or music. The God we love marks the sparrow's fall, the Lord we trust spoke of such trifles as patching old garments. Paul could entrust Tychicus, a beloved brother and faithful minister in the Lord, with so lowly a message as "my affairs, and how I do" (Eph. vi. 21).

Can we imagine Tychicus resenting the humble task? He would have been neither the beloved brother nor the faithful minister if he had. We remember hearing once that the words of Paul asking for "the books, but especially the parchments", saved the library of a super-sensitive soul. Have the words or Paul respecting "the cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest bring with thee" no word of comfort to-day? Is it of no service to be reminded that the mighty Paul was a man of like infirmities as ourselves? There is a great deal of hypocrisy which passes for sanctity, that vanishes into the air upon the searching acquaintance of a few months under the same roof. Let us live in the company of this man of God, we shall all be the better for it.

Paul's concern for Rome.

We must now turn our attention a little more closely to Rom. i., noting the steps that lead up to the great declaration of verse 17:--

1. Thanksgiving for the faith of the saints at Rome.
2. Incessant prayer for them also.

This prayer is further detailed so as to show his intense desire to visit them, which had in view:--

3. The stablishing of the saints by the imparting of some spiritual gift.

This is very graciously expanded to include the comfort also of the apostle, "by the mutual faith of you and me". Moreover the apostle desired fruit from these Gentiles as of others.

4. To show that his long delay was prompted neither by fear nor laxity he declares that he was a debtor to preach the gospel to all men, Rome included, and that
5. He was not ashamed of the gospel, because it was the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth.

This leads on to the theme of the epistle, viz., i. 17. Why did Paul feel it necessary to call upon God as a witness concerning his prayer for the Romans? When he called upon God to bear witness that he had not used flattering words, nor a cloak of covetousness (I Thess. ii. 5), it must have been because some had falsely accused him of these things. When he claimed to be a preacher and an apostle and a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and truth he was compelled to say, "I speak the truth in Christ and lie not" (I Tim. ii. 7), the reason being that his apostleship had been challenged. When he heads the dispensational section of Romans with the words, "I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost" (Rom. ix. 1), the reason is that his zeal as the apostle of the Gentiles had been misrepresented and he had been accused of having lost his love for his own people, which was grossly untrue. So in Rom. i. 9. Paul knew that enemies were busy defaming and misrepresenting him. He says in effect that no man can be said to be either afraid or neglectful of whom God will bear witness that unceasingly he prays for the opportunity of visiting them and of being a means of blessing to them in the hands of God.

The apostle desired by his visit to impart some spiritual gift "to the end ye may be established". The apostle's attitude to spiritual gifts was of preference for those that edified the church rather than drew honour and credit to the possessor. Gifts were confirmatory (I Cor. i. 6, 7, and II Cor. i. 21). He desired to establish the saints at Rome. The apostle had one gift that was perhaps greater than all put together, the gift of love that "vaunteth not itself and is not puffed up", and he immediately follows the statement which makes him the dispenser of the gift by one that makes him the sharer with others, viz., "the mutual faith of you and me", a blessed echo of the words and spirit of Matt. xvii. 27. He who could say with clear conscience that he remembered all the saints without ceasing was not above publicly asking the prayers of those to whom he ministered, including such humbling requests as "utterance", "boldness", and grace to speak “as he ought”. It takes a great spirit to be so humble. What pigmies we are as we compare ourselves with this man of God!

Moreover the apostle wanted fruit, "fruit unto holiness" (Rom. vi. 22), which was not exclusive of the contribution to the poor saints at Jerusalem, which he called "this fruit"

(Rom. xv. 28). "Fruit of the Spirit" (Gal. v. 22); "Fruit of the light" (Eph. v. 9, R.V.); "Fruits of righteousness" (Phil. i. 11); "Fruit unto God" (Rom. vii. 4), and "Fruit that may abound to your account" (Phil. iv. 17). Paul always urged the believer to go on unto perfection.

"I am debtor" (Rom. i. 14).—In verse 5 Paul speaks of "grace and apostleship"; here he speaks of responsibility and indebtedness. What he "ought" to do. It is a perversion to look upon grace as a release from all responsibility and obligation, as giving a liberty that is but a veiled license. "I am debtor", said Paul the apostle to the Gentiles. "You are debtors", he said to the Gentile saints when speaking of Jewish believers (Rom. xv. 27). The "grace and apostleship" was unto "all nations" (Rom. i. 5). The indebtedness was to Greek and barbarian, wise and unwise, in verse 14. They are but two sides of one truth. That indebtedness included "Rome also" (verse 15).

Rome and the gospel! Rome the proud mistress of the world. The ruthless, crushing iron kingdom on the one hand, the gospel, the preaching of the Crucified on the other. The gospel may be well enough for barbarians and fools, but Rome! Paul had, however, perceived that "all the world was guilty and helpless before God". The highest pinnacle of Roman glory was transient, enduring but for a moment; the purest wisdom of this world was but foolishness with God. "I am not ashamed of the gospel" (verse 16) said Paul. Unless we can feel the force of the figure here we shall lose much of the triumphant ring of Paul's words. There are several examples of the figure of belittling or tapeinosis in Romans. "I would not have you ignorant" (i. 13) means much more than a negative wish. It was a strong desire that they should know his intentions and hindrances. "And being not weak in faith" (iv. 19); in reality Abraham was very strong in faith. "Hope maketh not ashamed" (v. 5), yes, but that is not its meaning. Hope triumphs over all tribulation and rejoices in the prospect of the glory of God. The street urchin who replies to our question as to whether he would like this or that by saying "Not half!" is undoubtedly using slang, but those acquainted with the writings of James Russell Lowell will see in the slang of to-day the tropes and figures of to-morrow's poetry. When Paul said, "I am not ashamed", he meant that he gloried in the gospel committed to him. Though he be loaded with ridicule and contempt he knew enough of the power of that gospel to lift him above it all. This same undaunted spirit is manifested in the last epistle he wrote, and the cause is much the same:--

> "I suffer these things, nevertheless I am not ashamed, for I know Whom I have believed" (II Tim. i. 12).

In this section of Rom. i. the argument is indicated by the presence of the word "for". He says, I am ready to preach even at Rome, for I am not ashamed of the gospel. The reason why he gloried in the gospel, and was willing to preach it to wise and unwise, he expresses by saying, "for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth". The power is next discerned in the words "for therein is righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith" (verse 17). The power of God was manifested to the Gentile world by His works in creation (i. 20), but the power of the gospel is something different from this evidence of the old creation, because it belongs to the new, even that power which is so signally connected with the risen Son of God (i. 4). Christ crucified

(I Cor. i. 18) and Christ risen (Rom. i. 4) make the gospel the power of God unto salvation.

A dispensational note.

Between the statement concerning the gospel and its revelation of righteousness the apostle interposes a remark concerning the priority of the Jew. To say that he paused at this important point to remark the perfectly obvious fact that the Jew had the gospel preached to him before the Gentile is scarcely complimentary to his sense of fitness, to say nothing of its trifling character. Are we also to believe that the Jew will be judged at a special judgment earlier than that of the rest of mankind? (Rom. ii. 9). The words of Rom. ii. 16 do not countenance such an idea. "To the Jew first" is a recognition of Israel's dispensational position, and Paul's custom of going first to the synagogue in a town was a recognition of this priority. The apostle was called to serve among the Gentiles, and he magnified his office, yet his heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel was that they might be saved (Rom. x. 1).

Now Rom. i. 17 shows that salvation is essentially connected with righteousness by faith. Rom. x. reveals that the failure of Israel to obtain salvation was because they were ignorant of God's provision, and sought a righteousness of their own by works of law. Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, and they had rejected Him. Believing the fact of the resurrection of Christ and believing unto righteousness are parallel expressions in Rom. x. 9, 10. Salvation came to the Jew first, but they failed, and:--

> "Through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles, to provoke them to jealousy" (Rom. xi. 11).

Israel were not provoked either to jealousy or to emulation, they became hard and deaf and blind. In Acts xxviii. we see the rejection of Israel, and that the salvation of God was sent unto the Gentiles, as revealed in the prison epistles.

The place of the Gentile during the Acts.

While the believing Gentile was blessed with faithful Abraham, and as a wild olive graft partook of the root and fatness of the olive tree, it is a mistake to believe that the covenant with Abraham was really put into force. The Gentile participation in the covenant with Abraham awaits the salvation of the Jew (Gal. iii. 13, 14), and the calling out of nature’s darkness of a company of Gentiles in the time of Israel’s probation during the Acts was with the object of provoking Israel to jealousy and making them wake up to the call of the gospel. They did not respond, and their day passed. The present dispensation of the mystery is not the fulfillment of the Abrahamic covenant; that will begin to operate when Israel are saved and become the kingdom of priests unto God. The fact that the olive tree was cut down to the ground, together with its Jewish and Gentile branches, shows that the Abrahamic covenant could not have been in operation, for that will never fail so miserably. After this dispensational digression we come to the great statement of verse 17:--

"For therein is righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith."

What are we to understand by the "righteousness of God"? What is meant by "from faith to faith"? Do these words read with the word "revealed" or with the word "righteousness"? Is it correct to speak of justification as a forensic or legal term? Is faith a modified work, a kind of dividend? These are questions that must be answered. The way has been prepared, we have caught something of the spirit of the epistle, we must now be prepared to devote both time and patience as we seek light from the Lord upon this critical verse. Let us close this present paper by giving the structure of the opening verses of Rom. i.:--

Paul and the gospel (Rom. i. 1-17).

A | a | i. 1. Paul separated unto the gospel.
b | c | i. 2. Promised in the Scriptures.
d | i. 3-5-. The gospel . . . . . the power.
B | i. –5, 6. The sphere of Paul's apostleship. "All nations."
C | i. 7-13-. Paul's concern for Rome. "Service in the gospel."
B | i. –13-15. The sphere of Paul's apostleship. "Greeks and Barbarians."
A | a | i. 16-. Paul unashamed of the gospel.
b | d | i. -16. The gospel . . . . . the power.
c | i. 17. Anticipated in the Scriptures.

The focal points are the relation of Paul to the gospel, the sphere of his ministry, and the twofold power.

#4. The righteousness of God (i. 17).
pp. 168 - 173

Rom. i. 17 is the crux of the epistle to the Romans, and indeed of the gospel as committed to Paul. All that follows in this epistle is necessitated by the statements of this verse, as we hope to show. That it is vitally connected with that gospel of which Paul was unashamed, and which he declared to be the power of God unto salvation, we can see by the presence of the word "for". Where all is important it may be unwise to suggest distinctions, but the student of Scripture, and of Paul's epistles particularly, should never lose sight of the little word gar, generally translated "for". The theme runs: The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to all that believe, for—then follows the reason:--

"For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith. "

Before we can make any real progress in the understanding of this passage, we must seek the Scriptural meaning of the terms, "the righteousness of God", and "the just".

The truth from the Hebrew.

If we commence our study of these words with allusions to the legal processes of either the Roman Forum, or any modern court of law, we shall soon obliterate the simple issues of these terms; our safe course is to go back to that repository of all doctrine, the Hebrew of the O.T., and taking this as our basis, to build thereon. In this we have the apostle's own example, for he concludes his statement in Rom. i. 17 by a quotation from the prophet Habakkuk, which we shall find throws light upon one, if not more, disputed point in this verse.

Dikaiosunē = "righteousness", arises out of the verb dikaioō, which, in the LXX, translates the Hebrew verb tsadaq. Let us observe the way in which this word is used in the O.T.:--

> "If there be a controversy between men, and they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them; then they shall JUSTIFY (tsadaq) the righteous, and CONDEMN the wicked" (Deut. xxv. 1).

Here the issues are simple. It is a case of pronouncing judgment. The words, "they shall condemn the wicked", are literally, "they shall make him wicked", which of course mean, to declare him to be so. As there can be no thought on the part of the judge of infusing into the wicked man any wickedness, neither can there be any thought of imparting righteousness into the one who is justified. He is simply "declared righteous". These sentiments recur in Exod. xxiii. 6-8 and Prov. xvii. 15. The primary idea of the word tsadaq is "balance", "equivalence", "up to standard". This underlying meaning comes out in the law, "eye for eye, tooth for tooth", and in the insistence upon "Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin" (Lev. xix. 36), and in such passages as, "To be laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter than vanity" (Psa. lxii. 9; see also Dan. v. 27).

There is moreover an echo of this feature in the word "sin", which means "to miss" or "to fail", as expressed in Rom. iii. 23, "Coming short of the glory of God". Canon R. B. Girdlestone remarks in his "Synonyms of the Old Testament":--

> "It is unfortunate that the English language should have grafted the Latin word justice, which is used in somewhat of a forensic sense, into a vocabulary which was already possessed of the good word righteousness, as it tends to create a distinction which has no existence in Scripture . . . . . No distinction between the claims of justice and the claims of love is recognized in Scripture . . . . . We have no one word which can convey the idea of righteousness, and that of justification, as they are set forth in Scripture . . . . . We see the wisdom of God in selecting Hebrew as a means of communication with His creatures, because here the ideas of righteousness, justification, and acquittal all cluster round one verbal root, and are seen to be parts of one whole."

Dikaioō is used in the N.T. in the same way as the Hebrew tsadaq (Piel and Hiphil) is used in the O.T. Let us take a few examples that are not doctrinal first, in order to see its meaning:--

> "Wisdom is justified of her children" (Matt. xi. 19).

"By thy words thou shalt be justified" (Matt. xii. 37).
"The people . . . . . justified God" (Luke vii. 29).
"He, willing to justify himself" (Luke x. 29).
"Ye are they which justify yourselves" (Luke xvi. 15).

In none of these citations can the idea be tolerated that justify implies the transfusion of righteousness within. The meaning is simply the declaring righteous of those in view. This is the meaning in all the passages where Paul uses the word in his epistles.

Light from equivalent terms.

When we read of the imputation of righteousness without works (Rom. iv. 6, 11), the apostle speaks of the forgiveness of sins, and the covering of iniquity. So in Rom. v. 9, 10, justification by the blood of Christ is placed in correspondence with reconciliation by His death. There is no idea of the infusing of anything into the believer by the work of reconciliation. By comparing Acts xv. 11, Gal. ii. 16, Eph. ii. 8, 9, salvation is seen to be an equivalent to justification. The remission of sins, receiving the reconciliation, not coming into judgment, these and similar expressions may all be taken as illuminating the meaning of justification, the declaring righteous the one that believes in the Lord.

Law terms are used.

In both the Old and New Testaments the process of justification is expressed in terms of law, e.g.:--

1. God is looked upon as a Judge (Isa. i. 7, 8; Rom. viii. 33).
2. The person to be justified is guilty. He is looked upon as exposed to the judgment of God (Rom. i. 32), and whose mouth is shut (Rom. iii. 19).
3. There are three accusers: (i.) The law (John v. 45); (ii.) Conscience (Rom. ii. 15); (iii.) Satan (Zech. iii. 2 and Rev. xii. 10).
4. The charge is drawn up in legal handwriting (Col. ii. 14).
5. The gospel provides the guilty person with a plea (Rom. iii. 23-25).
6. The Lord Himself is the Advocate (I John ii. 1, 2).
7. The sentence for all believers is one of complete remission, justification, acceptance, and title to life and to inheritance (Rom. viii. 1, 33, 34; II Cor. v. 21).

Dikaiosunē is that which fulfils the claims of dikē, which meant to the Gentiles "right established by custom", and was personified as the daughter of Zeus, and mentioned in Acts xxviii. 4, where it is translated "vengeance". In the sense of demanding justice it is found in Acts xxv. 15, the rendering of justice in Jude 7, and the punishment meted out for the violation of right in II Thess. i. 9. Instead of custom being the standard, the Scripture reveals God, and in the Scriptural meaning of the word dikaiosunē is that conformity of heart and life to right, of which God Himself is the standard and author. In the teaching of Paul, justification by faith is that righteousness which God bestows upon the believer in Christ in virtue of which he stands accepted and assured in Christ for ever.

Viewed dispassionately, and shall we say anatomically, we may speak of this righteousness as being imputed without being imparted, we may speak of justification as something distinct from sanctification, but, as Liddon says, only "as are the arterial and nervous systems in the human body: but in the living soul they are coincident and inseparable". John's dictum is universally true, "Let no man deceive you, he that doeth righteousness is righteous" (I John iii. 7).

The righteousness of God.

It seems that we are shut up to one of two meanings, for the above expression:--

1. The righteousness of God as Judge.
2. The righteousness provided by God through Christ.

The righteousness of a judge meeting the unrighteousness of a sinner can have but one issue—condemnation. This can hardly be the meaning of the apostle, for he declares that this righteousness of God constitutes the very power of the gospel, and its issue in salvation. Phil. iii. 9 speaks of a righteousness of God by faith, which is contrasted with "mine own righteousness which is of the law". This righteousness of God is, moreover, contrasted with "their own righteousness" in Rom. x. 3, and is proved by the next verse to be Christ Himself, "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to everyone that believeth" (Rom. x. 4), which is further contrasted with the righteousness of the law as "The man that doeth these things shall live by them" (Rom. x. 5).

Moses and Habakkuk.

With Rom. x. 5 and Rom. i. 17 we arrive at a point when the truth emerges into light. The two quotations made by Paul settle the matter:--

"The righteous by faith shall live."	The is GOSPEL.
"The man that doeth shall live."	The is LAW.

There are two ways revealed by Scripture whereby a man may be saved. Whether it is possible for anyone to "do" the things of the law, we shall see as we go through the epistle. What we have learned is that the term, "the righteousness of God", refers to that "gift" (Rom. iii. 22, v. 17) of God in the virtue of which the sinner may be justified and saved.

From faith to faith.

Ek pisteõs eis pistin: How are we to understand these words? The problem is mainly the question as to whether ek pisteõs belongs to dikaiosunē, "righteousness", or to eis pistin, "to faith". Many authorities have decided in favour of the latter. Theophylact says: "Our first faith is not sufficient, but we must ascend from inceptive faith to a more perfect degree of it." We ourselves have leaned rather to the idea that "out of faith" refers to the faith or faithfulness of Christ, and "unto faith" to the faith of the believer. Now that the passage is before us, we must examine it afresh, and if need be adjust our previous views. First, what is the demand of the passage?

The idea that justification is in any sense a process, a series of developments, leading on to a climax, as Clemens Alex puts it:-- does not seem to be in line with the apostle's continual stress upon the freeness and the fullness of justification which he preached. As the interpretation of this passage lies very near the root of the gospel, let us spare no pains to arrive at a right conclusion. We may attain a true perspective by considering the usage of parallel expressions in Paul's epistles:--

> "A common faith is as it were a foundation . . . . . a teleia faith is one that can remove mountains";

> "A righteousness of God through faith" (dia pisteõs) (Rom. iii. 22).
> "Justify . . . . . by faith (ek pisteõs) . . . . . through faith" (dia pisteõs) (Rom. iii. 30).
> "Seal of the righteousness of the faith" (tes pisteõs) (Rom. iv. 11).
> "The righteousness of faith" (dia dikaiosunēs pisteõs) (Rom. iv. 13).
> "Therefore being justified by faith" (ek pisteõs) (Rom. v. 1)
> "The righteousness which is of faith" (ek pisteõs) (Rom. ix. 30; x. 6).

We need not go further than this very epistle to establish the apostle's usage. In every case it means a righteousness that is of faith, and in contrast with a righteousness of works or of law. If these six steps in the development of the doctrine all point one way, it is surely strange to believe that in the enunciation of the theme of the epistle Paul should use these words in a different manner. The rendering that does not violate the testimony of the remainder of the epistle simply supplies the word "righteousness" after the word "revealed":--

> "For therein is the righteousness of God revealed, a righteousness of faith, unto faith, as it is written, The just by faith shall live" (Rom. i. 17).

The quotation from Habakkuk seems clearly to confirm this when seen in the original. There diakios ek pisteõs, "the just by faith", is clearly placed in correspondence with dikaiosunē . . . . . ek pisteõs. It is quoted by the apostle to confirm his teaching, "as it is written". The translation, "revealed from faith", when examined does not seem to yield any good sense.

So far we have dealt with the idea of righteousness and its meaning. We need to give closer attention to the other term, "faith". This, together with an examination of the quotation from Habakkuk, we must reserve for another article.

The Unity of the Spirit.
pp. 154 - 157

What it means to "keep" it, and how much truth may we sacrifice in the endeavour?

The direct exposition of Ephesians as a whole has now been completed in these pages, but there are many side issues both of a doctrinal and practical nature that demand attention. There is much more to be said in connection with the subjective side of the conflict of Eph. vi. which cannot be satisfactorily dealt with until Rom. vi. has been considered also. The particular point that we feel called upon to deal with at the moment is that which has reference to the keeping of the unity of the Spirit and the problem that attaches by reason of differences of doctrine and practice on the part of other believers.

May we agree to differ?

If we have studied the addresses of those who urge the union of Church with Dissent, or of one phase of sectarianism with another, one item is constant. The union contemplated can only be brought about by agreeing to differ concerning some items of doctrine or practice. From an outside position it is apparent that many of the causes of division are man made, and could well be dropped to mutual advantage, but the unity thus brought about would not be the unity of the Spirit.

We cannot remember one passage in the whole of Scripture that would warrant a child of God relinquishing the veriest jot or tittle of truth for the sake of unity. All truth comes from God, and we as stewards are not free to be liberal with our Master's possessions, even though such liberality be called by fair names, and faithfulness be called by very foul ones. If Paul had "agreed to differ" he would have saved himself many a sleepless night and heart-ache. Because he perceived the sacredness of stewardship and the blindness of truth, he had to write, "all in Asia be turned away from me".

What is the unity of the Spirit?

This unity cannot be brought about by agreement, neither are we enjoined to do anything but endeavour to "keep" it. Its author is the Spirit. The expression is loosely used by all sorts and conditions of Christians. Those who are keen on the re-union of Christendom appeal to Eph. iv. as an argument why Baptists should not stress believer's baptism, Churchmen should not sprinkle infants, Presbyterians and Episcopalians should sink their differences on the question of holy orders. These things may be the causes of differences and divisions, and their abandonment would bring about a species of unity, but it would not be the unity of the Spirit. Eph. iv. has something most uncompromisingly insistent to say about baptism, holy orders, etc., which cannot be ignored.

The One Baptism.

We may take it as a fact that the bulk of believers repudiate the teaching of Eph. iii. 1-11 and Col. i. 24-27, and stoutly maintain that the church began at Pentecost. It is impossible for such to discern the things that differ, and consequently their idea of the unity of the Spirit is a fusion of the teaching of more than one dispensation. The unity of the Spirit among other items emphatically speaks of one baptism. Everyone who believes that the church began at Pentecost has no option but to believe that there are two baptisms (Acts x. 44-48; xi. 15-18), and the word "one" has to be so explained as to imperil the truth that there is one Lord and one God.

Can the unity of the Spirit be maintained by tampering with one item of its sevenfold perfection? In the dispensation of the mystery there is one baptism. If Col. ii. 12 teaches baptism in water, Col. ii. 11 as surely teaches literal fleshly circumcision. If one be spiritual so must the other. If one be a literal ordinance so must the other.

The One Hope.

In the unity of the Spirit there is no room for more than the one hope of our calling. At the end of the Acts Paul confessed his adherence to "the hope of Israel" (Acts xxviii. 20), and as he had previously written the epistles to the Thessalonians, Corinthians and Romans, the hope of the church during the Acts period cannot be dissociated from the hope of Israel. In the epistles of this period we read of the archangel (I Thess. iv.) who is connected with the hope of Israel (Dan. xii. 1, 2), the manifestation of the man of sin in the temple of God, which also links the hope of Israel with the church of the Acts (II Thess. ii.).

The one hope with which the unity of the Spirit is occupied is "the one hope of our calling". This, taken together with the parallel expression in Eph. i. 18, "the hope of His calling ", must indicate something different from the hope of the Acts period, for the apostle prayed that in order that the church may get to know this hope, a "spirit of wisdom and revelation" might be granted, which would be quite unnecessary had no change taken place since the writing of the earlier epistles. "The hope of glory" of Col. i. 27 was "the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles", viz., "Christ among you", Who had been previously preached only in association with Israel. The "blessed hope" of Titus ii. 13 goes back "before the world began", or "before the age times" (see Titus i. 2), so also does its "calling" (see II Tim. i. 9). Here once more we have the unique character of the "hope" and the "calling" connected with a period parallel only with Eph. i. 4, "before the foundation of the world".

Having seen this truth and having embraced it, how can we think of giving it up or merging it with the hope of another calling in the name of unity? Such unity cannot be the unity of Eph. iv.

The bond of Peace.

Rom. xii. 18 says, "if it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men". It will be noticed, that there are two qualifying statements. "If it be possible" suggests that there will sometimes arise conditions that will render peaceableness impossible. "As much as lieth in you" shows that a disturbing factor may arise from without. "Peace at any price" evidently is not a maxim of Scripture.

The complete armour of the saint includes "feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace". This shows that the believer has no conflict with man, but when all has been said, no thought of giving up an iota of truth is countenanced by the Scriptures, even though such an attitude bring not peace, but a sword.

The bond of peace is specific. It definitely refers to Eph. ii. It is really "the bond of the peace", that peace connected with "the creation of the two into one new man, so making peace" (Eph. ii. 14, 15). There we have the creation of the one body, and this is the first item in the sevenfold unity of the Spirit. To attempt to introduce I Cor. xii. in face of I Cor. xiii. 10 ("in part", I Cor. xiii. 10, and "in particular", I Cor. xii. 27, are translators of the same word) is to introduce the passing things of childhood into the experience of "the perfect man" (Eph. iv. 13). This will not keep the unity of Eph. iv. This "peace of God" is to act as "umpire" (not "rule", Col. iii. 15), and is inseparable from the "calling" of the "one body" as it is written:--

> "Let the peace of God be as the umpire in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body."

To allow any tampering with the sevenfold unity of Eph. iv., to add to, to subtract from, or to agree to differ, is not allowing the peace of God to be umpire, but our own ideas of fellowship, usefulness, charity, etc. To deny the one body, its one baptism and its one hope of glory, is to decide against the "ruling" of this very peace of God, and shatters all semblance of true unity. The unity that we are enjoined to keep is perfect and sevenfold, viz.:--

ONE LORD.
ONE HOPE OF CALLING. ONE FAITH.
ONE SPIRIT. ONE BAPTISM.
ONE BODY. ONE GOD AND FATHER.

There are not two baptisms or two hopes any more than there are two Lords.

To us has been committed a sacred trust, a "good deposit" (I Tim. vi. 20; II Tim. i. 12-14, ii. 2). It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful—peaceable, useful, charitable by all means, so long as the first element of stewardship be untouched. Keeping the unity of the Spirit is part of walking worthy of our calling (Eph. iv. 1-6). Let us not be tempted to "come down" from our glorious position, but humbly, yet resolutely, set ourselves by the grace given us and by the power that worketh in us to endeavour to keep as a sacred trust the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

#4. Faith. A Few sidelights.

pp. 29 - 31

A.—I do not bring forward any particular difficulty this time, but simply ask for any further light you may have upon the subject of faith.

B.—Let us take notice of some of the contexts of faith in the Scriptures. These will include the objects of faith, the parallels of faith, synonyms and antonyms. All these will illuminate our understanding. Take a few instances of the objects of faith as set forth in John's Gospel:--

Belief is said to be "on His name" (i. 12); "in Him" (iii. 16); "on the Son" (iii. 36); "on the Son of God" (ix. 35); "on Him that sent" the Son (v. 24). The Lord said, moreover, "If ye believe not that I am, ye shall die in your sins" (viii. 24). This reference to the great name I AM not only takes us back to Exod. iii. but also comprehends the seven great claims recorded in John, such as "I am the light of the world", "I am the bread of life", etc.

The whole purpose of John's Gospel is concentrated in the one note:--

> "These are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through His name" (John xx. 31).

A.—I notice in this last reference a distinction which in some measure clears up the difficulty I have expressed with regard to the connection between "historic faith" and "saving faith".

First, "these things" which were written are nothing less than "signs which Jesus did in the presence of His disciples" (John xx. 30), and were to lead to believing certain facts about the Person of Christ, namely, that "Jesus", the man, was "the Messiah", and moreover "the Son of God". So far this is mere historic fact, but it is impossible to believe that the man "Jesus" was God's Anointed and God's Son without also believing all that these names connote consequently "life through His name" is the sequel, and historic faith in an event or a person that can mean nothing if they do not mean salvation must also of necessity be saving faith too.

B.—That is a well learned lesson, and you have made it your own. There is one other phase given in John's Gospel that we must not pass by. In John v. 39 we read, "Search the Scriptures", a command that not one of us can neglect with impunity. Nevertheless, we believe the Lord did not intend a command here, but made a statement:--

> "Ye search the Scriptures: for in THEM ye think ye have aionian life: and they are they which testify of ME. And ye will not come to ME, that ye might have life" (John v. 39, 40).

"There is one that accuseth you, even Moses in whom ye trust. For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed ME: for he wrote of ME" (John v. 45, 46).

Faith in the Scriptures can only bring salvation because of the fact that its testimony is concerning Christ. II Tim. iii. 15 does not say that the Scriptures save, but that they are able to make wise unto salvation through faith that is in Christ Jesus. So that believing the word, like believing the signs, leads to believing the Saviour and receiving His salvation.

Can you think of any words that are used as parallels or synonyms of faith?

A.—We have already referred to John i. 12, there we read "as many as received Him" placed over against "them that believe on His name", so receiving is a synonym for believing.

B.—This synonym is found again in John iii. 11, "ye receive not our witness". So also iii. 32, 33. You must seek for others yourself.

Looking now at the antonyms or opposites to faith, we notice that Heb. x. 39 places "drawing back" in opposition to "believing". John xii. 47, 48 places "believing" and "rejecting" in opposition. A vast field lies before us in the epistles of Paul, which we can only mention but not investigate here.

It will not be difficult to reconcile believing with receiving, or seeing that its opposite is drawing back and rejection, for the faith that accepts the testimony concerning the Saviour must necessarily accept the way of salvation.

A.—I see clearly that Scripture does not raise the question as to what faith is so much as Who is the object of faith. I know I have believed, and I know Whom I have believed, and there I gratefully rest, praying now for grace to live by faith even as in the first case I receive life through faith in His name.

[N.B.--The reader is notified that there is no intention of presenting a systematic view of any one phase of truth, but rather a series of helpful talks upon various subjects that exercise the minds of believers. There is much to be said concerning faith of a profound character that could not be dealt with in these little talks. The reader must look for such notes in the more serious expositions given in our pages.]

#5. Faith. Head verses Heart.
pp. 45 - 47

A.—You remember our conversation concerning the nature of faith? Well, I have a difficulty in accepting your presentation owing to the continual use of the word "heart" in connection with saving faith. Your way of looking at it savours too much of the "head".

B.—Let us have some of the passages which show this continual use.

A.—"If thou shalt confess with my mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness" (Rom. x. 9, 10).

B.—That is one passage, certainly, and must be considered, but let us have the others before we commence our examination.

A. (After a pause).—I do not seem to be able to discover the other passages. Yet I am sure there are many.

B.—Perhaps the word translated "heart" occurs elsewhere under another rendering.

A.—No, that is not so, for Young's Concordance Index says kardia, heart, 158 occurrences, and that it is not translated in any other way.

B.—It looks as though you have imagined that there were many such passages, partly because of your earlier conceptions as to "historic faith", &c. The truth is that this passage quoted from Rom. x. is the only one which makes the positive statement. I can help you to add two more if we include the negative point of view. Heb. iii. 12 speaks of an "evil heart of unbelief", and the Lord rebuked His disciples saying, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe" (Luke xxiv. 25). but these hardly warrant your statement as to "continual use". You will remember that Rom. x. 9, 10 is contextually associated, in verses 14-17, not so much with a miraculous interposition of God, but with such arguments as:--

> "How shall they believe in Him of Whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher?"

A.—What is your object in taking away the emphasis upon the heart, and transferring it to the head?

B.—That is hardly a fair statement. You have read the only passage that there is in the N.T. which speaks of believing with the heart, and the context immediately speaks of the necessity of hearing and preaching in order to make faith possible. Without being uncharitable I would suggest that you are labouring under the influence of a misunderstanding.

A.—What is it I pray? let me not rest on unscriptural foundations.

B.—Well, I think I should be right if I said that in your way of thinking the "heart" is set in contrast with the "head".

A.—Yes, that is so.

B.—The Scripture does not make the distinction. The brain is never mentioned, and the idea of thinking with the head as opposed to believing with the heart is unscriptural. Let us see what Scripture says. Where is the first occurrence of the word "heart" in Scripture?

A.—Gen. vi. 5.

B.—What does it connect with it?

A.—“The imagination of the thoughts of the heart.”

B.—Will you turn to Matt. ix. 4, xiii. 15, xv. 19 and Mark ii. 8 and see what is said?

A.—The passage connect "thinking", "understanding", "thoughts" and "reasoning" with the heart.

B.—You will find, moreover, that the Hebrew word for heart (leb) is translated 12 times by the word "mind", and such passages as Heb. viii. 10 shows a great affinity between heart and mind. Without prosecuting this point further I think you will see that it is not quite in harmony with Scripture to speak of "believing with the heart" as something very different from merely "intellectual faith".

A.—While I readily accept the facts of Scripture on this point, the difficulty I had in mind remains untouched.

B.—I think I know your difficulty, and will do my best to help you to solve it, but I felt that we must first get rid of unscriptural ideas, as otherwise we should only add to our confusion. Your problem is something like this:--

> If believing the gospel and the Word of God is the exercise of that same faith which we put into operation upon the testimony of accredited witnesses, "for if we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater", how is it that men who are possessed with normal faculties and exercise faith in everyday matters appear to be utterly unable to believe the truth apart from some act of grace?

A.—Yes, that expresses fairly well my difficulty, and in the attempt to solve it I concluded that the difference must be between heart belief and mere intellectual faith.

B.—We must meet again and carry the subject further.

#6. Repentance.
pp. 78 - 80

A.—When we were talking over the nature of faith you seemed to imply that something was necessary before the natural man would believe the testimony of God. I should be glad if you would take up that point.

B.—Most readily. You will find the answer in the following passages which you might read: Mark i. 15; II Tim. ii. 25; Acts xi. 18; xx. 21.

A.(Reads).—

> "Repent ye, and believe the gospel."
> "If God peradventure will give them repentance unto the acknowledging of the truth."
> "Then hath God also to Gentiles granted repentance unto life."
> "Repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ."

B.—Here you will observe that repentance comes before faith, before knowledge and before life, and that it is necessary for repentance to be directed toward God if faith is to be exercised in the Lord Jesus Christ. Before we go further, however, we must be sure that we understand the meaning of the term we use. What does repentance mean?

A.—I understand that repentance is derived from the word penitence, and implies a certain amount of sorrow for sin.

B.—That is true so far as the English word is concerned, and sorrow or penitence is a part—perhaps a later part—of Scriptural repentance, but that is not its primary meaning. What are the Greek words for repent and repentance?

A.(Using Concordance).—Metanoeo and metanoia.

B.—What does meta mean when used in composition with other words?

A.—Meta means "after" or "change".

B.—Can you give me any illustrations of this meaning?

A.—

Metathesis.—Translated or transferred (Heb. xi. 5).
Metallatto.—To change one thing for or into another (Rom. i. 25).
Metamorphoo.—To be transformed (Matt. xvii. 2; Rom. xii. 2).

B.—What does noeo and noia mean?

A.—Noeo means to think, and noia comes from it.

B.—So then repentance literally means a change of mind. The reason why natural man does not believe the testimony of God concerning His Son is because something is wrong with his mind. The reason why he does not acknowledge the truth is for the same reason.

You may remember that we found in the Scriptures that the heart and the mind are not such separate terms as they are in modern use. A man thinks with his mind and believes with his heart in modern phraseology, but in Scripture thoughts arise in the heart--"as a man thinketh in his heart so is he."

A.—What then is wrong with the mind of man?

B.—Let us discover from Scripture. Speaking of man by nature Scripture says that he walks "in the vanity of his mind", that his "understanding is darkened", that he is "alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in him" (Eph. iv. 17, 18). That men's minds are "corrupt" and "defiled" (I Tim. vi. 5, II Tim. iii. 8), and that they have been given over to a "reprobate" mind (Rom. i. 28). Now if this be the case, how is it possible for that man whose very compass is wrong, whose judgment is distorted, whose understanding is so darkened as to alienate him from the very life of God, how is it possible, I say, for him to believe the gospel or to acknowledge the truth without that change of mind which we call repentance?

A.—Repentance then of itself does not necessarily mean a change of life.

B.—Not necessarily, but in the Scriptures it is usually presented as one half of an action, the other half of which consists in the change of conduct and life. For example, you will find metanoia joined with epistrepho, to turn:--

Acts iii. 19, "Repent and be converted." "Change your mind and turn you."
Acts xxvi. 20, "They should repent and turn to God."

While men are exhorted to repent, Scripture also tells us that it is God Who gives or grants this change of mind, and into that problem we will not at this point enter.

A.—Thank you for this opening of the subject, I must give it a fuller consideration.

B.—You must remember that there is another word translated repent, namely metameleomai, which means "to be concerned about something after something has been said or done", and ametameletos, which is the same word with a negative.

#7. Faith as a fruit, a gift, and inwrought.
pp. 92 - 94

A.—May I re-open the question of faith? There seems to be a phase of the subject that does not conform to the presentation you made when last we spoke on the subject.

B.—By all means; one point of view rarely gives a full presentation of any Scripture.

A.—My new problem arose out of Gal. v. 22, 23, where we read:--

> "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance,"

B.—Your point is that this hardly conforms to the idea that faith is the reception of accredited testimony.

A.—That is so; it is said to be part of the fruit of the Spirit, which cannot be produced before the person producing it has believed on the Lord Jesus. Besides, it is classed with long-suffering, meekness, temperance and the like, which removes it still further from that idea.

B.—If you turn to Rom. xii. 3-6 you will find faith used in a somewhat similar way.

A.—I notice that the apostle addresses the believer, and tells him not to think more highly of himself than he ought, "but to think soberly, according as God has dealt to every man a measure of faith".

B.—You notice also in verses 4 and 5 references to the body and its members, and then verse 6 returns to the subject saying:--

> "Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith."

A.—The allusion to the body and its members, together with gifts, makes me think of I Cor. xii.

B.—If we turn to that chapter we shall see more clearly this phase of faith which is before us:--

"But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom . . . . . knowledge . . . . . faith . . . . . healing . . . . . miracles, etc." (I Cor. xii. 7-11).

You will find also by reading Gal. iii. 2-5 that the same faith which is associated with justification is also connected with working miracles. It seems therefore that we must be prepared to find that faith may mean:--

1. That faith whereby the sinner believes unto salvation.
2. A spiritual gift exercised during the Acts period and spoken of together with miracles, tongues and other gifts of the Spirit.
3. The fruit of the Spirit, which by being contrasted with the works of the flesh indicates not so much a supernatural gift exercised only by those endued, but the product of the new nature.

A.—I notice that all our references keep within the period of the Acts. Is there anything parallel to these in the prison epistles?

B.—Oh yes, for read the following:-

"And what is the exceeding greatness of His power to usward who believe according to the inworking of His mighty power, which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead" (Eph. i. 19, 20).

"Buried with Him in the baptism, wherein also ye are risen with Him through the faith of the inworking of God, Who hath raised Him from the dead" (Col. ii. 12).

While we have not "the gift of faith" as in I Cor. xii., we certainly have an inwrought faith directly connected with the power of the resurrection, which transcends all other manifestations of the Spirit. That this faith may not be experienced and enjoyed as it should be is sadly true, and because of this the apostle prayed, "that we might know". Let us then pray along the lines marked out for us, and not vex ourselves because we do not possess the "gift of faith". At the same time it should be a real concern that the fruit of the faith should take the place of the works of the flesh.

A.—I think I now see the distinction between faith unto salvation and faith exercised thereafter; it is all a matter of "right division".

#8. Can “before the foundation of the world” refer to the future?
pp. 173 - 175

A.—I am afraid I must introduce a subject that may be considered controversial, but it lies near the root of much of your teaching, and I believe you ought to consider it. Someone who is very much opposed to your teaching has offered some criticisms; among them he gives his interpretation of the expression in Eph. i. 4, "before the foundation of the world", which I feel needs attention.

B.—Let us be prepared at all times to test the teaching we hold, for after all it is the truth we seek, even though it should involve the casting aside of accepted ideas, and with them our little reputations.

A.—I will read what has been written in explanation of Eph. i. 4:--

> "We are as 'lively stones', material in preparation for a building to be erected in the future, and 'predestinated', or intended for that age or world before it is 'founded', and before the 'present evil world' is 'overthrown' for its establishment."

B.—There are several items in this reply that call for consideration, but the chief feature, I take it, is the one dealing with the words, "before the foundation of the world"?

A.—Yes, that is so, for I have little difficulty with regard to predestination and election.

B.—If I understand the interpretation suggested aright, "the foundation of the world" refers to "the future", and that the present time during which the "lively stones" are being prepared is a period before that time comes.

A.—Yes, I cannot understand the interpretation otherwise.

B.—Our first concern then is to seek from the Scripture evidence of that which will determine whether the period called "the foundation of the world" is past or future. In I Pet. i. 20 we have the words concerning Christ, "Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world". Can that refer to this present period?

A.—From what I understand of our critic's belief concerning Christ, I think he would probably say that it did.

B.—Yet Peter contrasts the period "before the foundation of the world" with "these last times", i.e., about A.D.60.

A.—I do not see how our critic can fit his interpretation in here.

B.—The phrase occurs again in John xvii. 24, "Thou lovedst Me before the foundation of the world". This must be read with verse 5, "O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self, with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was".

A.—I believe that our critic holds that this love and glory were only possessed in purpose and not in person.

B.—This, as you know, I most decidedly repudiate, yet on his own ground "before the world was" cannot be "after the world has been running some 4,000 years", and therefore this takes us back to Gen. i. But there are seven passages which use the expression "From or since the foundation of the world". Let us have them all before us:--

> "I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world" (Matt. xiii. 35).
>
> "Come . . . . . inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. xxv. 34).
>
> "The blood of all the prophets, which was shed from the foundation of the world" (Luke xi. 50).
>
> "Although the works were finished from the foundation of the world" (Heb. iv. 3).
>
> "For then must He often have suffered since the foundation of the world" (Heb. ix. 26).
>
> "Whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. xiii. 8).
>
> "Whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world" (Rev. xvii. 8).

I believe your critical friend would agree that a period called "from or since the foundation of the world" must be later than a period called "before the foundation of the world".

A.—If he cannot accede to that, I should say that argument was wasted on him.

B.—If therefore we prove that "from the foundation of the world" goes back to Gen. i.-iv., then "before" that period cannot by any form of reasoning be a time yet future. We need not examine the whole seven, one or two will be sufficient. The passage quoted from Luke xi. 50 is practically dated for us.

A.—How dated? I don not see any date.

B.—No? yet verse 51 says, "from the blood of Abel", which dates this period near enough to Gen. iv. for our argument, does it not?

A.—Yes, it does.

B.—And with it dates Eph. i. 4 as earlier still?

A.—Yes, I cannot avoid that argument either.

B.—Heb. iv. 3 is dated likewise?

A.—I will not question it, I will look at the context.

B.—You grow wise I see—what do you discover?

A.—I find that verse 4 takes us back to the creation of Gen. i., ii.

B.—So then Eph. i. 4 must be before Gen. i., ii.?

A.—May I venture to say that Heb. ix. 26 is also dated?

B.—You may, for you have observed that the period "from the foundation of the world" is placed in strong contrast with "Now", "the end of the world or ages", and the "now" was written before A.D.70.

A.—Thank you. Scripture evidence is abundant to prove that the period when the church of the One Body was chosen in Christ was before the creation of Gen. i.

B.—That is all we had to prove. The question as to whether a better translation would not be, "before the overthrow of the world", is not before us at the moment. Before we leave the question you may take note of a further corroboration in II Tim. i. 9, where speaking of the same "choice" the apostle says:--

> "According to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began (or as it is literally, 'before age times')."

"Before age times" and "before the foundation of the world" are one and the same period. "Since the ages" and "since the foundation of the world" are one and the same period, and as we have seen, this latter period lies back behind Abel and the creation. The first feature therefore of our teaching appears to stand the test.

DEAR FELLOW-MEMBERS,

Since the first number of The Berean Expositor, as far as human limitations have allowed, the claims of a rightly divided Word of truth have been honoured in its pages. We trust that our readers perceive that the study of dispensational truth is only of value as it reveals the fullness of Christ, which fullness is the glory of the Prison Epistles.

Now that the long period of pioneering has in measure passed, we intend, as grace is given, to sound this note more emphatically in future issues.

We commend to every reader the words of Col. iii. 11:--

"CHRIST IS ALL, AND IN ALL",

and make it our prayer that the witness of this magazine may, in some degree, merit this glorious message as its motto.

Yours in the bond of the peace,

CHARLES H. WELCH

Answers to Correspondents.
p. 115

E. (Urmston) asks for information concerning words which are used in Scripture that have a bearing upon the idea of eternal or everlasting. We give just a preliminary hint here, hoping to deal with the subject more fully later.

Hebrew.

Ad.—Eternity, ever, everlasting, old perpetually. Refers to past (Job xx. 4), to the Divine present (Isa. lvii. 15).

Netsach.—always constantly, evermore, perpetual. Usually rendered by the LXX, eis to telos, unto completion.

Tamid.—Always, continual, daily, ever, perpetual. Usually rendered by the LXX, diapantos, continually.

These are the most important. Added to these we have:--

Orek (Psa. xxiii. 6); dor (Psa. lxxvii. 8); tsemithuth (Lev. xxv. 23); qedem (Deut. xxxiii. 27); yom (Deut. vi. 24); eth (Psa. x. 5).

All these words are used to express some form of duration, beside the one which is most frequently used, viz., olam.

Greek.

Aion and aionios.—Variously translated age, world, for ever, etc.
Aidios.—Perpetual (Rom. i. 20).
Pantote.—Evermore (John vi. 34).
Eis to dienekes.—For ever (Heb. x. 14).

These words practically cover the whole ground. You may look for explanation of their meanings, examples of their usage, and LXX translations in a series of articles in course of preparation.

To our new readers.
p. 177

It is a joy to those responsible for this magazine to know that many who subscribed to the first volume are still keenly interested in its witness. At the same time we gladly welcome every new reader, trusting that they may be an additional strength in this fellowship of the gospel, while the darkness deepens and perilous times draw near.

We realize, however, that there are many items known to older readers that must seem puzzling to new subscribers, and so, without going over the ground already covered, we hope to help the newcomer as well as more fully establish the veteran by commencing a series in January, 1928, entitled:--

The Mystery.
Its meaning, its message and its ministry.

We should value the co-operation of all readers in drawing the attention of any who would profit by such a series. Do you know of any gift costing 3s. that would represent as much value for the outlay? Let us send a copy to your friend. Canadian and Australian readers are reminded of the honorary agencies tabled on the notices page.

"British-Israel Truth", and "The Great Pyramid, its Divine Message".

What should be our attitude to these things?

pp. 33 - 36

British-Israel Truth.

In nine cases out of ten the attitude of Neh. vi. 3 is the one to adopt when tempted to turn aside from positive testimony, and only occasionally does the seriousness of error justify a departure from this rule. If we so desired, we could easily occupy a deal of space monthly in the unsavoury exposure of the erroneous teaching that is growing all around, but we have neither the commission to attempt the task, nor the qualification necessary to make it profitable. There is, however, a double line of teaching that appears to have fascinated many true children of God, and as we have been asked more than once what our attitude might be, we feel that a brief word may be of service to the generality of readers. The two lines of teaching about which we have been asked to express opinion are (1) Anglo-Israelism, and (2) The Witness of the Great Pyramid.

Anglo-Israelism, or British-Israel Truth, as it is called teaches that the "lost" ten tribes of Israel migrated across Europe, and by a series of divinely guided settlements or invasions found themselves established in Great Britain. There are as adjuncts to this idea wonderful stories which speak of Jeremiah coming to Ireland with a daughter of Zedekiah, bringing with him also the ark of the covenant and the stone used by Jacob at Bethel, which stone is now under the Coronation Throne in Westminster Abbey. Into all this we do not here attempt to enter, but we draw attention to one serious and awful result of accepting Anglo-Israelism.

Under this teaching the reigning house of Britain is said to be the dynasty of David, and a book is published by one whose letters are M.A., F.R.G.S., and A.V.I., to prove that our present King, His majesty George V, is a direct and lineal descendant of David through the marriage brought about by Jeremiah between the daughter of Zedekiah and a King who ruled in Ulster, Northern Ireland. Together with this is the teaching that the "Stone Kingdom" of Dan. ii. is the British Empire, and that it began to function round about 1558A.D. The whole fabric is so monstrously unscriptural, and so manifestly untrue, that the space devoted to its exposure would be sheer waste were it not for this serious and anti-Christian issue. Anglo-Israelism, by declaring that the British reigning house "is in direct succession" to the throne of David, aims a blow at the royal rights of the Lord Jesus!

Two genealogies of the Lord appear in Matthew i. and Luke iii., respectively, the one through David's son Solomon, the other through David's son Nathan. These two lines meet in the person of Christ, and are exhausted in Him. The Lord Jesus Christ is shown to possess the exclusive right to David's throne. He died without natural successor. He was raised from the dead "to sit upon his (David's) throne" (Acts ii. 30), and consequently any other claimant to that throne must be an incipient Antichrist. The stone kingdom also of Dan. ii. is described as a kingdom which "the God of heaven shall set up", "which shall never be destroyed", and "which shall stand for ever". This is said to be the British Empire. Dan. vii. shows that this kingdom is that of the coming Christ:--

> "And there was given Him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve Him; His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and His kingdom that which shall not be destroyed" (Dan. vii. 14).

If the royal house of Great Britain be the true dynasty of David, and if the stone kingdom which is to fill the whole earth and never pass away be the British Empire, FOR WHAT PURPOSE IS THE LORD COMING AGAIN? We leave the subject at this issue. All else is subsidiary.

The Great Pyramid, its Divine message.

Closely associated with British-Israelism is the teaching connected with the Great Pyramid of Gizeh, which stands on the border of upper and lower Egypt, and is said to fulfil the word of Isa. xix. 19, 20:--

> "In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord. And it shall be a sign and a witness unto the Lord of hosts in the land of Egypt."

The Great Pyramid of Gizeh is a marvel of masonry, its stone work being compared to the accuracy of an optical instrument. This very feature is fatal to its ever being "an altar unto the Lord", for the law has never been rescinded that is given in Exod. xx. 25, 26:--

> "If thou wilt make Me an altar of stone, thou shalt not build it of hewn stone: for if thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou hast polluted it, neither shalt thou go up by steps unto Mine altar."

Here we see that as an altar the Great Pyramid must be reckoned as polluted, and all are familiar with the huge blocks of stone that make the ascent like climbing a giant stairway.

Just in the same way the identification fails in connection with the word "pillar". In what way can the Great Pyramid be called a "pillar"? The Hebrew word matstsebah is sometimes translated "image", "standing image". Moreover, the two words "altar" and "pillar" come together in Exod. xxiv. 4, "And Moses . . . . . built an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes of Israel". Isaiah himself uses the feminine form of the same Hebrew word in vi. 13, where the margin reads "stock or stem". A pillar that in any sense resembles an image of Baal or a stem of a tree is no true description of the Great Pyramid of Gizeh.

Into the ocean of astronomical mathematics and chronological arguments we cannot plunge, but quite a series of books have been written purporting to show that the Great Pyramid contains a most elaborate and detailed prophecy of the purpose of God in Christ. The chronology of "the time of the end" as given by the Great Pyramid covers A.D.1557 to A.D.1914. Its minuteness of detail is remarkable. The exact date of the entry of Great Britain into the War in August, 1914, together with the date of the Armistice is given by the Great Pyramid.

So many dates and events which have such deep and immediate personal application are given, that one of the effects is that the prophetic chronology purporting to be that of the Great Pyramid becomes more vivid and important than the Scripture itself. Imagine the effect upon the mind of a person who has accepted the teaching that the Great Pyramid is God's own divinely ordained prophetic witness for these last days, being solemnly told that the Great Pyramid marks off with uncanny precision the following dates as events in the bringing in of the end, 3:53p.m. on 29th May, 1928; 11:14a.m. on 16th of September, 1936; 0:45a.m. on 20th August, 1953. The Bible can show nothing like it. If this is divine, then the Bible so far as prophetic exactness is concerned must take a second place. Without dating the second coming of the Lord, the Great Pyramid makes it very plain that it cannot be later than 16th September, 1936. If the Lord has not come by 16th September, 1936, what will the Pyramid believers do if Antichrist should appear? Will they not be forced to accept him?

We do know that the Egyptian Book of the Dead has much to say of Pyramid symbolism. Osiris is called "The Lord of the Pyramid", and "The Lord of death and resurrection". Ancient Egyptian religion is Messianic in character. So was ancient Babylonianism. As surely as God recorded the coming of the Seed of the woman, so did Babel travesty that truth and fill the earth with its prophecies and its symbols.

We have already referred to Anglo-Israelism. According to Pyramid chronology the times of the Gentiles ended in 1917, the stone kingdom, namely kingdom, Britain, holding the mandate over Jerusalem now being not a Gentile power, but, unknown to the Jews, really Israel. The Pyramid prophecies really bolster up Anglo-Israelism, and so from two points of view should be left alone by all those who believe that in the written Scriptures we have all the revelation of God's purpose that we may legitimately expect until that day when we shall know even as we are known.

Covenant and Passover.
pp. 126, 127

In the pamphlet entitled The dispensational place of the Lord's Supper, the third edition of which we have just published (see Notices), readers will remember that we have drawn attention to the intimate association of the Lord's Supper with the new covenant, and teaching that the passover stands to the old covenant in somewhat the same relation as the Lord's Supper stands to the new. The relation of a covenant with the passover has been called in question, and as this is an important item we would add the following:--

The exodus and the covenant.

> "The children of Israel sighed by reason of the bondage . . . . . and God heard their groaning, and God remembered His covenant with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob" (Exod. ii. 23, 24).

This one citation alone would be proof enough that the deliverance of Israel from Egypt was in direct line with a covenant, and a reference back to Genesis will confirm this:--

> "Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years; and also that nation, whom they shall serve, will I judge: and afterward shall they come out with great substance . . . . . in the fourth generation they shall come hither again" (Gen. xv. 13-16).

There can be no shadow of doubt but that this refers to the exodus of Israel from Egypt. We have further evidence in Exod. vi.:--

> "I appeared unto Abraham . . . . . I have also established My covenant with them, to give them the land of Canaan . . . . . I have also heard the groaning of the children of Israel, whom the Egyptians keep in bondage; and I HAVE REMEMBERED MY COVENANT . . . . . I will redeem you . . . . . and ye shall know that I am the Lord your God, which bringeth you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will bring you in unto the land concerning the which I did swear to give it to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; and I will give it you for an heritage: I am the Lord" (Exod. vi. 3-8).

The deliverance of Israel by the passover is central in the remembrance of this covenant, and cannot be considered apart from it. Jer. xxxi. looks back to the passover and the old covenant, and looks forward to the true passover Lamb, and the new covenant:--

> "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers IN THE DAY that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt, which My covenant they brake" (Jer. xxxi. 31, 32).

When the Lord Jesus took the cup on that passover feast, and said, "This is My blood of the new covenant", it was a direct fulfillment both of type of the passover covenant, and the prophecy of the new covenant of Jeremiah.

I Cor. x., xi., and the wilderness.

Another objection is based upon the fact that I Cor. x., which speaks of the cup, the Lord's table, and the broken bread, relates to the wilderness and not to the passover. In Exod. xii. 12-14 we read:--

> "I will pass over you . . . . . and this day shall be unto you for a MEMORIAL."

while in I Cor. xi. 24 we find the words:--

> "This do in REMEMBRANCE of Me."

It was quite impossible to "remember" as a memorial feast the passover in Egypt until it was an accomplished fact, and it would have been equally impossible for the twelve apostles to have "remembered" the Lord's death at that first "Lord's Supper", for that death had not then taken place. But as the years succeeded their exodus from Egypt, so the memorial feast was spread, and as the occasion was seized, the new covenant saints of the early church showed forth the Lord's death while they waited for "the hope of Israel" which covered the Acts (see Acts xxviii. 20), and therefore included the hope expressed in the words "till He come".

We are grateful for the query, for it has enabled us to see the connection of passover and covenant more clearly than before. Criticism is welcomed, for we can do nothing against the truth.

Fundamentals of Dispensational Truth.

#58. The Tabernacle.
The ark and the mercy seat (Exod. xxv. 10-22).
pp. 17 - 25

The first item of the tabernacle that is specified is the ark. This is severally called:--

"The ark of the testimony" (Exod. xxv. 16);
"The ark of the covenant" (Numb. x. 33);
"The ark of the Lord" (Josh. iii. 13);
"The ark of God" (I Sam. iii. 3);
"The ark of the Lord God" (I Kings ii. 26);
"The ark of Thy strength" (II Chron. vi. 41);
"The holy ark" (II Chron. xxxv. 3).

These seven titles are doubtless distributed throughout the Scriptures with that discrimination which we always find whenever we subject the Word to a careful examination. For example, the title "The ark of the testimony" is reserved for the period covered by Moses and Joshua, whereas the title "The ark of the covenant" extends from Moses' tabernacle to Solomon's temple, from wilderness to kingdom. We must leave the tabulation of these titles, with the added one "The ark of the God of Israel" (I Sam. vi. 3) and others, to those who may be able to spare the hours that verification and accuracy demand.

The ark and its contents.

The ark was an oblong wooden chest 2-1/2 cubits long, 1-1/2 cubits wide, and 1-1/2 cubits high, covered within and without with gold, and having upon it round about a crown of gold. For the purpose of transport four rings of gold were fixed to the four corners, and two staves of shittim wood overlaid with gold were placed in the rings, and left there in constant readiness for the removal of the ark. The shittim wood of which the ark was made is most probably that of the acacia tree. It is mentioned, together with the cedar, the myrtle and the oil tree, fir tree, pine, and box, in Isa. xli. 19, and appears to be one of seven trees that indicate blessing:--

> "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of My sanctuary' (Isa. lx. 13).

Jerome says that the wood of the shittim tree affords long planks smooth and free from knots, and that it does not grow in cultivated places, or in any other place of the Roman Empire, except in the desert of Arabia. It is intensely interesting to note that the LXX renders the word shittim wood xulon asepton = "incorruptible wood". The woodwork of the tabernacle was covered; it was designed for constructional purposes, and not for beauty, and the humbler office was fulfilled throughout by the shittim or acacia tree. Where every detail is so specifically shown, and where the typical character of every item seems so apparent, we can hardly dismiss as fanciful that suggestion that the two natures "flesh" and "spirit" (Rom. i. 3, 4) are set forth by the wood and gold used in the construction of the ark. Within the ark was placed, at different intervals of time:--

1. The tables of the covenant.
2. Aarons' rod that budded.
3. The golden pot of manna.

The tables of stone are called "the testimony" and "the covenant", and give their names to the ark. These were the only articles placed in the ark when it was first made (Exod. xxv. 16). The tables of stone originally given to Moses were broken by the angry law-giver at the sight of the people and the golden calf, and after having demonstrated that they had so soon broken the covenant into which they had entered, Moses prayed for the people:--

> "Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold. Yet now, if Thou wilt forgive their sin---; and if not, blot me, I pray Thee, out of Thy book which Thou hast written" (Exod. xxxii. 31, 32).

Passing over much that we shall have to consider later, we find the Lord restated the covenant, after bidding Moses to hew tables of stone like unto the first. After the proclamation of His mercy and graciousness, the Lord in restating the covenant lays particular stress upon idolatry (Exod. xxxiv. 10-28). Moses returned to Israel with the new tables of stone, and Exod. xxxv. 4 re-introduces the question of the tabernacle. What we have to learn from this rather complicated parenthesis is the old lesson of the ages. Before Israel actually received the tables of stone, they had broken them, and when Moses once more returned with the fresh tables of stone, he said in effect: "Make an ark. This covenant cannot be kept by you. All that you can hope for is to have a system of types and shadows, and await the advent of Him Who alone can magnify the law and make it honourable."

The same story is found in Gen. iii. Man failed, and is shut up to the promised Seed. Israel failed, and is shut up unto the faith that should afterward be revealed. The important fact for us at the moment is that the ark contains the unbroken law. It is fundamental to both doctrinal and dispensational truth that it should be so. One cannot imagine, after a knowledge of the truth, the broken tables of stone being placed in the ark. The ark speaks of a law and a covenant fulfilled. Now the tabernacle and its furniture were shadows of the true or heavenly reality. Two references from the Apocalypse will be sufficient to prove that the ark was a pattern of a heavenly reality:--

> "And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in His temple the ark of the His covenant" (Rev. xi. 19).
>
> "Behold, the inner shrine of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened" (Rev. xv. 5).

Following the former quotation came lightnings, voices, thunderings, earthquakes, and great hail, which in turn is followed by the sign of Israel and the dragon (Rev. xii.).

Following the latter quotation we find the seven angels with the vials of wrath spoken of as a sign "great and marvelous" (Rev. xv. 1).

This is the covenant of marvels, which God made upon the restatement of the covenant with Israel:--

> "Behold, I make a covenant: before all thy people I will do marvels, such as have not been done in all the earth, nor in any nation" (Exod. xxxiv. 10).

Thus it is that the plagues which fell upon equaling about three pecks) instead of the ark; a lid made of lead, instead of the mercy seat made of gold. Wickedness within instead of righteousness, and two women with wings like those of an unclean bird to serve as cherubim, finally taking it back to its own resting place, Babylon. A remarkable statement in Jeremiah leads us to understand still further the typical character of the ark:--

> "In those days (of Israel's restoration) saith the Lord, they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord; neither shall it come to mind; neither shall they remember it; neither shall they visit it; neither shall it be made again" (Jer. iii. 16), the reason being, according to verse 17, that the throne of the Lord will then be at Jerusalem, and therefore the type will no longer be necessary.

Priesthood and provision.

Beside the two tables of the covenant, there were placed in the ark Aaron's rod that budded, and the golden pot of manna. The rebellion of Korah and Dathan, that foreshadows the great revolt against the Lord Himself, was followed by the command to lay up in the tabernacle, before the testimony, the rods of the leaders of Israel, among them Aaron's. On the morrow it was discovered that Aaron's rod had budded, bloomed blossoms, and yielded almonds. This symbol of life, while it confirmed Aaron in his office, pointed on to Him Who by means of resurrection hath an unchangeable priesthood. The golden pot of manna was a constant memorial of the faithfulness of God in supplying all pilgrim needs until the land of promise was reached, and is a very real type of Christ. Is it no comfort to us in our wilderness journey to know that beside the unbroken law, there is the reminder of that Priest Who ever liveth to make intercession for us, and of that faithfulness that has said no good thing will He withhold while we walk the pilgrim pathway?

The golden ark with its crown, its unbroken covenant, its pledge of the ever living Priest, and its memorial of ever faithful care, was incomplete without the mercy seat that rested upon it. Righteousness without mercy would not bring salvation to sinners:--

> "Though justice be thy plea, consider this, that in the course of justice, none of us should see salvation."

In the ark and the mercy seat, “righteousness and peace have kissed each other”.

The mercy seat.

The mercy seat was made of pure gold, unlike the ark which was made of wood overlaid with gold. Made of one piece with it were the cherubim with their wings stretched forth on high, and with their faces toward the mercy seat:--

> “And thou shalt put the mercy seat above upon the ark; and in the ark thou shalt put the testimony that I will give thee. And THERE I WILL MEET WITH THEE, and I will commune with thee . . . . .” (Exod. xxv. 17-22).

The N.T. word mercy seat in Heb. ix. 5 is translated in Rom. iii. 25, “propitiation”, and is the word used by the LXX to translate the Hebrew word mercy seat. The word mercy seat (kapporeth) is from the word kaphar, to make atonement. Now whatever our conclusions may be as to the exact meaning of the word translated “atonement”, one thing is established, and that is that it is an essential part of the great sacrificial work of Christ.

We endeavour in this series to avoid arguments that are complicated, or that necessitate too close an investigation into the originals, and as we hope to give the doctrine of the atonement a careful study in the series headed “Redemption”, we leave the controversial side alone in this article. If we were asked what ideas came to the mind at the mention of the mercy seat, we should probably say, something to do with atonement, acceptance, or forgiveness. All these are true, but they are not the primary truth. This atonement is necessitated by our sins, but what is the object before us which necessitates the removal of the barrier, sin? We may receive a precious lesson from the very first statement made concerning the use of the mercy seat. To Moses the Lord said, “There I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee”. Fellowship and communion, these are the real objects; all else but makes a way.

I will meet.—The words to meet mean “to meet by appointment”, and the Hebrew word enters into one of the names of the tabernacle, viz., “the tabernacle of the congregation” (Exod. xxvii. 21). It is translated “to betrothe” in Exod. xxi. 8, 9, and “agreed” in Amos iii. 3. It will be remembered that the tabernacle number was given as number 5, and 5 times in the book of Exodus does the Lord speak of the mercy seat, or the altar, where the blood was shed that sprinkled the mercy seat, as the place where He would meet Moses, and the children of Israel (Exod. xxv. 22; xxix. 42, 43; xxx. 6, 36).

The meeting place, a beautiful symbol of the result of the atonement, contains within itself the ideas of entrance, access and acceptance. A most interesting and helpful suggestion of the fullness of this meeting with God is contained in the LXX rendering of the word “meet” in these passages, where the translation reads, “And I will make Myself known to thee from thence”. The knowledge of Himself and His ways are made known there. Knowledge in the scriptural sense is far removed from mere scholarship, valuable asset though that is. Asaph learned this lesson, and recorded it in Psa. lxxiii., for when he went into the sanctuary of God he understood that which before he could not discover.

I will commune.—The Hebrew word dabar, which is translated "commune" 20 times, is translated "speak" 814 times, so that while we lose an apparently spiritual idea by giving up the deeper word "commune", we in reality gain by using the commoner word "speak", for instead of thinking of set occasions, and for specially holy purposes Moses heard the voice of the Lord, it was here at the mercy seat that every word was heard, every instruction given, every problem settled. Here it was that the Lord "spake (dabar) with Moses face to face, as a man speaketh (dabar) unto his friend" (Exod. xxxiii. 11). Here it was that the Lord "talked" with Moses (Exod. xxxiii. 9):--

> "When Moses was gone into the tabernacle of meeting to speak with Him, then he heard the voice of One speaking unto him from off the mercy seat that was upon the ark of the testimony, from between the two cherubim, and he spake unto him" (Num. vii. 89).

Who will have the temerity to decide that the meaning of the last clause should be written, "and He spake unto him", or "and he spake unto Him"? Is it not the very essence of this meeting place that both should speak; Moses speaking with God, and God speaking with Moses? Is not this "communion"? To speak with God, and to hear His word, before the blood sprinkled mercy seat? Truly we have yet to learn of burnt offerings and sin offerings, offerings to make atonement and peace, yet are they not all with the very object to remove all barriers and unfitness so that, unhindered, we may enter into the presence of God, to "meet" with Him and to have this "communion"?

So important is this somewhat forgotten aspect of the result of atonement, that the word dabar was used as a name for the holiest of all, and appears in the word "oracle" (II Sam. xvi. 23), and in the slightly modified form (debir) in sixteen other passages in the O.T. The mercy seat, though associated with the work of atonement, is essentially a place of fellowship, and the hearing of the word of God.

The references to the mercy seat (kapporeth) in the tabernacle are 26 in number, and those who have Dr. E. W. Bullinger's Number in Scripture will find examples tending to show the connection of the number 13 and its multiples with the subject of atonement. These 26 references to the mercy seat are divided into three groups:--

1. Those in Exodus which speak of the actual making and placing of the mercy seat.
2. Those in Exodus and Numbers that refers to it as a place of meeting and communion.
3. Those in Lev. xvi. which deal with the great day of atonement.

The references in Lev. xvi. are seven in number. What was the actual origin of the day of atonement? The sin and death of Aaron's two sons Nadab and Abihu. These men offered strange fire before the Lord, and were destroyed:--

> "Then Moses said unto Aaron, This is that the Lord spake, saying, I WILL BE SANCTIFIED in them that come nigh Me, and before all the people I will be glorified" (Lev. x. 1-3).

Lev. xvi. begins with the words:--

> "And the Lord spake unto Moses after the death of the two sons of Aaron, when they offered before the Lord, and died . . . . . Speak unto Aaron thy brother, that he come not at all times within the vail before the mercy seat, which is upon the ark; that he die not."

The words "at all times" mean "just at any time". Aaron and his sons were becoming too familiar, and made certain religious conventions necessary. It is the habit of the superior person to sneer at conventions, but with some natures they have their place, and while set forms, solemn ritual, and ceremonial may degenerate into superstition and empty formalism, they have their place. The solemn ritual of the day of atonement, and the restriction of access to the high priest once every year, would have the tendency to hallow the name of God and prevent that unholy familiarity that was evidently developing. And so there is the washing of the flesh, the linen clothes, the sin offering and the atonement, the incense and the seven times sprinkled blood. The words of the wise man are very appropriate here:--

> "Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear, than to give the sacrifice of fools; for they consider not that they do evil. Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thy heart be hasty to utter anything before God: for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth: therefore let thy words be few" (Eccles. v. 1, 2).

The cherubim [which are so closely associated with the mercy seat as to be made "of the matter of the mercy seat" (Exod. xxv. 19 margin)], have been dealt with in the series Redemption, both in connection with the cherubim themselves, and in connection with the original office of Satan, and though we do not pretend to have exhausted the teaching of Scripture, we can say nothing more to profit at the end of an article. May the four simple features brought before us in connection with the ark and mercy seat be a blessing to us:--

1. An unbroken covenant.
2. An undying Priest.
3. An unfailing supply.
4. A place of fellowship and communion.

> "And truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ . . . . . If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin" (I John i. 3-7).

#59. The table of shewbread (Exod. xxv. 23-30). "All one in Christ."

pp. 49 - 55

Having considered something of the rich teaching set forth by the ark of the covenant, and the mercy seat within the second veil, we now, following the order of the narrative before us, pass into the holy place and turn our attention to the furniture there.

Divine service.

Before passing on to detailed descriptions, however, we must have some idea of the typical meaning of the "holy place" in which this furniture stood:--

> "There was a tabernacle made; the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shewbread; which is called the sanctuary (margin, the holy, Gr. hagia). And after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all" (Gr. hagia hagion) (Heb. ix. 2, 3).

Here we have very clearly the subdivision set forth with the distinctive names of the two parts, the division being made by the second veil:--

> "Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God. But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood" (Heb. ix. 6, 7).

Without seeking to force a distinction beyond its limits, it appears from the usage of the words "service" and "serve" that these do not so much describe the great atoning work of Christ, as that they refer to the worship and service of the redeemed. Both the Saviour and the saved were set forth in type in the tabernacle. The Saviour being typified by the solitary act of the high priest "alone once", the saved being typified by the priests who went "always" accomplishing the "service". Latreia (service) occurs in Heb. ix. 1 and 6, latreuo (to serve or worship), in Heb. viii. 5; ix. 9, 14; x. 2; xii. 28; xiii. 10. It will be seen that the "service" is entirely connected with the Levitical priesthood, or its N.T. counterpart. They that did the service were not perfected as pertaining to the conscience by the daily ritual then imposed (Heb. ix. 9). It necessitated a greater high priest than Aaron, and a better sacrifice than was offered on the day of atonement to purge the conscience from dead works to serve the living God (Heb. ix. 14). The shadows of the law with its typical sacrifices could not make the comers thereunto perfect, for their consciences were not really purged from sin (Heb. x. 1, 2). The gifts and sacrifices that constituted the service of the typical tabernacle "stood only in meats and drinks, and divers baptisms, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation" (Heb. ix. 10).

Latreuo and latreia, are not found in the Septuagint of Genesis, they appear for the first time in Exodus. The Passover feast is called "this service" (Exod. xii. 25, 26). Pharaoh understood "service" to involve the offering of sacrifice, for in Exod. iii. 12; iv. 23; vii. 16; viii. 1 & 20 the demand had been made that Israel should be liberated to "serve" God, Pharaoh's words are, "Go ye, sacrifice to your God in the land" (Exod. viii. 25). Moses, moreover, when speaking once again to Pharaoh, uses another expression of similar import. To Pharaoh's "Go, serve the Lord", Moses replies, "We must hold a feast unto the Lord" (Exod. x. 8, 9).

While latreuo seems to have special reference to "the service of a worshipper", and is omitted from Genesis, douleuo is of frequent occurrence in that book. It is used of the service rendered of kings (Gen. xiv. 4); of Israel's bondage (xv. 14); of the elder serving the younger (xxv. 23); of men serving man (xxvii. 29, 40); and of Jacob's service to Laban (xxix. 15, 18, 20, 25, 30; xxx. 26, 29; xxxi. 6, 41). The apostle uses the two words in Rom. i.:--

> "Paul, a bond salve (doulos) of Jesus Christ" (Rom. i. 1).
> "Whom I serve (latreuo) with my spirit in the gospel" (Rom. i. 9).
> "Who worshipped and served (latreuo) the creature" (Rom. i. 25).

If the distinct aspects of service that these two words indicate are kept in mind, the meaning of the apostle will become more clear. Coming now to Exod. xxv. we bring with us the thought that here in the first tabernacle, where priests ministered daily, we are dealing with service, and it is in connection with service that we must view the table of shewbread.

Divine sustenance.

The table not only held the twelve loaves of shewbread, but also was laid with "dishes, spoons, covers, and bowls of pure gold". It was a table, not an altar, a table spread in the presence of the Lord with food wherewith those who rendered service might be fed. The margin of Exod. xxv. 29 renders "to cover withal" by "to pour out withal", and the LXX reads:--

> "And thou shalt make its dishes and its censers, and its bowls and its cups, with which thou shalt offer drink offerings; of pure gold shalt thou make them" (Exod. xxv. 29).

This makes us think of the supreme act of service contemplated by the apostle Paul in Phil. ii. 17, and carried through in II Tim. iv. 6, where we have the only occurrence of spendomai in the N.T. He was willing to be poured out as a drink offering upon the sacrifice and service of faith. While therefore the bread is the important item on the table, the drink offering must be remembered.

This feminine form of the word occurs seven times in Scripture. The passages are Lev. ii. 2, 9, 16; v. 12; vi. 15; xxiv. 7 and Numb. v. 26. Zikkaron, the masculine for, occurs twenty-four times. We give a selection only. We use the word "reminder" as variant, as familiarity with the A.V. sometimes blunts our senses: "This day shall be unto you for a reminder" (Exod. xii. 14). "It shall be for a sign . . . . . and a reminder" (Exod. xiii. 9). These two passages refer to the feast of the Passover and the unleavened bread: "Stones for a reminder unto the children of Israel . . . . . their names before the Lord . . . . . as a reminder" (Exod. xxviii. 12, 29). Here the names of Israel engraven upon the stones of the ephod and breastplate are a reminder both to Israel and to the Lord. We cannot give all occurrences, they can easily be found. Zikkaron is used seven times in blessing, and once in judgment against Amalek in Exodus. Zeker, another masculine form, occurs several times. The first occurrence is Exod. iii. 15, "This is My name for the age, and this is My reminder unto all generations".

The Passover was a reminder of redemption, the unleavened bread of the bondage endured and the exodus effected, together with the need to "purge out the old leaven of wickedness". The name "Jehovah Elohim of your fathers" was a sufficient reminder for God to "remember His covenant" (Lev. xxvi. 42, 45). The frankincense upon the twelve loaves was a reminder. A reminder of what? Before we can answer that question we must answer another: "What did the twelve loaves typify?"

The bread of the presence.

It is good to see in books dealing with the tabernacle and its typical teaching that every opportunity is seized to bring forward the fullness of Christ, but there may be even in this, zeal without knowledge. We refer to the interpretation that speaks of the twelve loaves as typical of Christ as "the bread of life". In John vi. the Lord says, "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead . . . . . I am the living bread" (John vi. 49, 51). It will be seen that lying upon the ground outside the tabernacle morning by morning was to be found the type of Christ as the bread of life. That therefore can scarcely be the meaning of these twelve loaves also. This "bread of presence" before the Lord "always" (Exod. xxv. 30), the "continual bread" (Numb. iv. 7), like the names engraved upon the stones of the ephod and the stones of the breastplate, represented the twelve tribes of Israel.

The table of shewbread is mentioned in II Chron. iv. 19 under Solomon, and again in II Chron. xiii. 11 it is mentioned in king Abijah's appeal to the ten tribes when he pleaded for the true unity of Israel, also in Hezekiah's reign (II Chron. xxix. 18). When the captivity returned under Nehemiah, even though called by their enemies "these feeble Jews" (Neh. iv. 2), and even though the restored temple was in the eyes of those who knew the Lord's house in its first glory "as nothing" (Hag. ii. 3), there is not the remotest suggestion either by Abijah, Hezekiah, or Nehemiah that any number of loaves than twelve should be used, or that the frankincense should be omitted. The twelve loaves set forth Israel as viewed in Christ, not as viewed in themselves. "He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath He seen perverseness in Israel" (Numb. xxiii. 21). This was no "legal fiction", but based upon the offering of their Messiah:--

> "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God" (Rom. iii. 25).

Whatever the personal state of Israel may have been whether united as one nation or divided into two, whether humbly seeking God or wickedly departing from His commandment, one thing remained "always" and "continual". That was the "everlasting covenant" or the "covenant of the ages". This it will be remembered is connected with the command concerning the shewbread in Lev. xxiv. 5-9. Just as the memorial in the offering for jealousy was to bring "iniquity to remembrance" (Numb. v. 15), so the memorial upon the shewbread was to bring the sweet savour of Christ to remembrance.

The age-abiding covenant.

The first mention of berith olam, "an age-abiding covenant", is in Gen. ix. 16, where God sets His bow in the cloud as a "reminder" ("that I may remember") of His covenant with all flesh. Now this covenant was made notwithstanding the fact that "the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth" (Gen. viii. 21), and in close association with the "sweet savour of rest" that spoke of the offering of Christ. So with Israel. Abram's name was changed to Abraham, and the Lord said:--

> "I will establish My covenant between Me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an age-abiding covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, And I will give unto thee, and to they seed after thee, the land of thy sojournings, all the land of Canaan, for an age-abiding possession; and I will be their God" (Gen. xvii. 7, 8).

Though Israel broke this age-abiding covenant (Isa. xxiv. 5), yet in the person of their Messiah that covenant is established (Isa. lv. 3 and lxi. 8). This age-abiding covenant lies behind the new covenant which was sealed by the blood of Christ (Jer. xxxii. 40 and xxxi 31-37). Perhaps there is no more marvelous setting for this covenant, nor a passage that emphasizes its utter independence of human merit than Ezek. xvi. 60. Charges are made against Israel in Ezek. xvi. that reveal a condition that dwarfs the sin of Sodom "as a very little thing (xvi. 47), and by comparison can justify the words "they (Sodom and Samaria) are more righteous than thou" (xvi. 52). Then come the words of verse 60:--

> "Nevertheless I will remember My covenant with thee in the days of thy youth, and I will establish with thee an age-abiding covenant."

All this is set forth in the table of shewbread. Twelve loaves show Israel complete and undivided before the Lord. These twelve loaves are all unleavened, Israel's righteousness is fully provided for in Jehovah Tsidneku. "Pure" frankincense above, and a "pure" table beneath, indicate their perfect acceptance in the Beloved. Here is a "reminder" of that "age-abiding covenant" that glorifies the end of Ezek. xvi., and will glorify the end of this stiff-necked and gain-saying people.

The shewbread and service.

Returning to our

(Eph. v. 27) the "offering and sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour" (Eph. v. 2). For us no type or symbol is necessary. "The bread of presence" is expressed for the church once and for ever in the blessed words, "Accepted in the Beloved" (Eph. i. 6), and "Made meet" (Col. i. 12).

#60. The golden lampstand (Exod. xxv. 31-40).
Unity in witness.
pp. 84 - 89

If it be true, as we sought to show in our last article, that the holy place is connected with worship and service, that will be true not only as it relates to the table of shewbread, but as it relates to the golden lampstand. The word candlestick is misleading. No candles were used, but oil for the lamps is specifically mentioned:--

> "And thou shalt make the seven lamps thereof" (Exod. xxv. 37).
> "Oil for the light" (Exod. xxv. 6).
> "Pure olive oil beaten for the light" (Exod. xxvii. 20).

"Not by might, nor by power."

There is a chapter in Zechariah that deals so pointedly with the symbolism of this golden lampstand, that to attempt an interpretation of Exod. xxv. before first considering this passage would be to insult the Author of Scripture, therefore, let us turn to Zech. iv. Here we have one of a series of visions, all concerned with one object, the fulfilling of the age-abiding covenant, whose memorial or reminder we have seen was found in the twelve loaves of presence, the shewbread. These visions are eight in number, and occupy chapters i.-vi., a new section of the prophecy commencing with chapter vii. Readers of The Companion Bible will notice a light change in the structure of these visions, as we feel that there is no warrant for uniting the sixth and seventh as one member.

The eight visions of Zech. i.-vi.

A | i. 7-17. The horses. "My house shall be built." "The Lord shall yet choose Jerusalem."
  B | i. 18-21. The horns and the smiths. Gentile oppressors and deliverers.
    C | ii. 1-13. Measure Jerusalem; breadth and length.
      "Jerusalem shall be inhabited." His eye.
      D | iii. 1-7. The high priest. "The Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem."
        E | iii. 8-10. My servant the Branch. "Every man under his vine and fig."
          Seven eyes.
      D | iv. 1-14. The lampstand. The laying of the foundation of the house. Eyes.
    C | v. 1-4. The flying roll; length and breadth.
      "Zion that dwelleth with Babylon."
  B | v. 5-11. The ephah. Gentile dominion. "Build it an house."
A | vi. 1-8. The chariots. The four spirits of the heavens. Judgment.
        E | vi. 9-15. The man whose name is the Branch. Temple and throne.

It will be seen that the common theme of these visions is the restoration of Israel, showing the satanic opposition (manifested through Gentile powers and finally at Babylon), and the triumph of the Lord (manifested through Joshua and Zerubbabel, and finally through Christ, the Branch). We are not, however, dealing with Zechariah, but seek light from Zech. iv. upon the symbolism of the candlestick.

The Branch.

In Exod. xxv. 31-36 when reading the description of the lampstand we come upon the word "branches" repeatedly, in fact twelve times. The word branch here is qaneh. In Zech. iv. 12, where we read of "the two olive branches", the word is shibboleth. In Zech. iii. 8 and vi. 12 the Branch is Tsemach. Now although these seem so diverse at first, they are nevertheless intimately related.

In Gen. xli. 5 we have the first occurrence of shibboleth, where it is translated "ears of corn". In Gen. xli. 5 also we have the first occurrence of qaneh, where it is translated "stalk". This establishes a connection between the "branches" of the golden candlestick of Exod. xxv. and the "two olive branches" of Zech. iv. In Psa. lxv. 9, 10 tsemach is used of corn, "the springing". So also in Hos. viii. 7 where it is translated as the "bud" that yields no meal, and is connected with sowing, reaping and standing corn (see margin). It is demonstrated, therefore, that the three words translated branch are all used of corn, and therefore cannot be widely dissimilar, but, to adopt the words of Scripture, may be as closely allied as "the blade, the ear, and the full corn in the ear". We have here a sequence. First the type of the lampstand in the tabernacle, next the vision of the lampstand in Zech. iv., and finally the prophetic fulfillment of both type and vision in "The Man Whose name is the BRANCH".

It is readily granted that we should naturally have considered the lampstand in the tabernacle as a type of Christ, the light of the world, but we should have made the same mistake that we observed is made by making the shewbread a type of Christ as the bread of life. As the light of the world Christ is set forth by other figures, but as the light in the holy place another office is implied. Prophecy is said to be a "light that shineth in a dark place" (II Pet. i. 19), until the day dawn, and the Lord comes. Zech. iv. is most certainly prophetic of the day of Israel's restoration and the coming of the Lord. The explanation of the vision of the lamp fed from the two olive trees is given by the angel:--

> "This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit, saith the Lord of hosts" (Zech. iv. 6).

There can therefore be no two thoughts as to the symbolism of the olives. They speak of the witness and the work of the spirit in contrast with the arm of the flesh. The seven lamps are evidently "those seven" of verse 10, which are explained to be "the eyes of the Lord" that watch over His purpose. The last word of explanation in Zech. iv. 14 forces us to turn to the book of the Revelation.

> "These are the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth."

The two witnesses.

The state of things under Joshua and Zerubbabel at the return from the captivity is to be repeated on a vaster scale in the time of the end. In Rev. xi. we have the measuring of the temple by an angel (verse 1), parallel to the measuring of Jerusalem by an angel in Zech. ii. The two witnesses withstand the beast until their testimony is finished. This testimony lasts for 42 months. Upon their martyrdom resurrection and ascension follows the sounding of the seventh angel:--

> "The kingdom of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ" (Rev. xi. 15).

To this the two witnesses, the vision of Zech. iv., and the golden lampstand of the tabernacle bore their testimony. "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy" (Rev. xix. 10). It will be seen that "oil for the light" and for the "anointing" (Exod. xxxv. 28) come to much the same thing. Every anointed priest and every anointed king bore testimony to the day when Zech. vi. 12, 13 should be fulfilled:--

> "Behold the man whose name is The BRANCH . . . . . and He shall be a priest upon His throne."

All point forward to the King-Priest, after the order of Melchisedec. They too are to combine kingship with priesthood. They are to be "a kingdom of priests', "a royal priesthood" (Rev. i. 16; I Pet. ii. 5, 9).

The seven lampstands.

While the unity of Israel, so far as God's view-point is concerned, remains unchanged throughout their whole chequered history, their manifest witness as set forth by the seven branched lampstand did not remain intact. When we come to the book of the Revelation, we have seen separate lampstands, each standing for a church in Asia that was bearing a testimony of some kind. Christ is seen in their midst as the great King-Priest, upholding the seven angels who are responsible for the testimony of these seven churches. Failure could involve the removal of a lampstand out of its place (Rev. ii. 5). Israel were the Lord's witnesses (Isa. xliii. 10), the tabernacle was called "the tabernacle of witness" (Numb. xvii. 7), they who reign for the thousand years include those who were beheaded "for the witness of Jesus" (Rev. xx. 4). The ark is called both the ark of the covenant, and the ark of testimony or witness (Exod. xl. 3), and when the seven angels appeared, then John said, "Behold the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony (or witness) in heaven was opened".

The great thought of the lighted lampstand in the holy place is that of witness bearing. Gen. i. 3 differentiates "light" itself from a "light bearer" (Gen. i. 14, 15), light being or in i. 3 and maor in i. 14, 15. This distinction is carried over into the LXX. Exod. xxv. 6 "oil for the light" uses maor, the light bearer. "Light" (or) occurs but once in Exodus, namely, in x. 23, whereas "light bearer" (maor) occurs seven times, and each time is used of the lampstand.

In Isa. xi. 2 we have the sevenfold anointing of Christ:--

> "And the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon Him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord."

He is pre-eminently "the faithful witness", and all other witness must draw its inspiration from Him, the great Anointed, and receive its light from Him, the true light.

In the description of the lampstand we sometimes use the expression, "The seven branched candlestick". This is incorrect.

> "Six (not seven) branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches . . . . . out of the one side, and three . . . . . out of the other side" (Exod. xxv. 32).

Though there were seven lamps, there were but six branches, the central stem supporting both its own lamp and the remaining branches. It is a fit symbol of the essentials for witness, whether in Israel or the church. The central supporting and uniting shaft is the Lord Himself; the oil for the light, the Holy Spirit; and apart from union with the Lord, and the Spirit of God, we shall have neither light nor testimony. This sevenfold arrangement is well seen in the special testimony for the church of the mystery as given in Eph. iv. 4-6, where the one Lord is in the midst with the two sets of three on either side. "Oil for the light" is a word that should make us examine our own testimony to see that the source of our illumination is that of which God can approve.

The two features of the holy place specified by Exod. xxv. are the table of shewbread and the golden lampstand. They stood over against each other. The light from the lamps would shine upon the pure gold of the table, the twelve unleavened loaves and the pure frankincense. Testimony in the holy place is not taken up with flesh and failure, but with the purpose of grace as seen in Christ.

[* - Both in the Hebrews and the Greek, witness and testimony are the same.]

One more article of furniture that was found in the holy place, viz., the altar of incense, is not mentioned here, but its description is deferred until after chapters xxviii. and xxix. These chapters are devoted to the consecration of the priests, and then, with the opening verse of chapter xxx., comes the first reference to the altar of incense. The reader will realize the necessity to abide by this divine order, and we therefore follow the leading of the Lord and likewise refrain from comment upon this third item until the proper time, which will be after chapters xxvi.-xxix. have been considered.

a two-fold covering. The tent was made of goats' hair, and is described in verses 7-14 (once called "covering'), the twofold covering of the tent being made of rams' skins dyed red, and of badgers' skins. We must therefore distinguish between the tabernacle proper, made of the glorious linen curtains, and the goats' hair tent and covering of skins, as we find them distinguished for instance in Exod. xxxv. 11: "the tabernacle, his tent, and his covering"; also by comparing the record of Exod. xxvi. 6 and 11 together.

> "And thou shalt make fifty taches of gold, and couple the curtains together with the taches: and it shall be one tabernacle."
>
> "And thou shalt make fifty taches of brass, and put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together, that it may be one."

In order that we may appreciate these three features we will set out the meaning of each word.

> TABERNACLE.—

It can truly be said that righteousness was the warp and woof of the dwelling place of God. It is a lesson that bears repetition, lest at any time we should be inclined to entertain doctrines that necessitate the lowering of this high standard.

Blue is intimately connected with the high priest by the "ephod all of blue" (Exod. xxviii. 31), and with the separation of Israel unto God (Numb. xv. 38). Purple is the colour of kings (Judges viii. 26 and Esther viii. 15). Scarlet speaks of redemption (Josh. ii. 18). The great Babylonian travesty seizes upon these symbols for its own ends.

> "The woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour" (Rev. xvii. 4).
> "Alas, alas, that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet" (Rev. xviii. 16).

The cherubim speak of the great goal of the ages, the restoration of man, and his dominion in and through Christ. This subject is too vast for a note of this character: the interested reader is referred to a fuller exposition of the mater in Volume XV, page 181.

The tabernacle and its symbolism sets forth the only possible way whereby the lost paradise of Gen. iii. with its cherubim and flaming sword, its curse and its death, can ever be exchanged for the paradise of God with its river of life, where there shall be no more curse or death. That way was shown to our first parents before they left the garden, their covering of skin being perpetuated in the covering of rams' skins dyed red, a symbol too patent to need much proof. The fabric of the tabernacle therefore speaks of redemption and restoration, a king and a priest, and we have not found any New Testament passage that would lead us to alter the testimony.

The tent of goats' hair could never be, in the mind of an Israelite, dissociated from the great offerings that occupied so large a place in the daily life of the people. Goats were used as well as lambs for the passover (Exod. Xii.5); they were also used for the burnt offering, the peace offering, thee sin offering, and for the great day of atonement, Lev.i.10, iii, 12, iv. 23, and xvi. 5, & c. It was the purpose of God that the glorious prophecy of the tabernacle should ever be seen beneath the shadow of atonement, the tent of the goats' hair.

Protecting this tent was a two-fold covering, one of ram's skins dyed read, the other of badgers' skins. Rams skins alone would have spoken plainly of sacrifice and consecration (Exod. xxix. 27; Lev. v 15 and xix. 21), but the red dye would emphasize sin and its cleansing (Isa. i. 18).

Badger's skins are not so easy to interpret. The usual suggestion is that the beauty of the tabernacle was hidden from view, and the only rough badgers' skins were seen, just as it is written that Israel saw no beauty in the Lord when He walked the earth in the days of His flesh. Apart from the tabernacle, badgers' skins are only mentioned once in the Scriptures, viz., Ezek. Xvi. 10, where the other references to silver, linen, and embroidered work are considered by many to be an allusion to the tabernacle itself.

While modern translators consider the Hebrew word tachash to mean a badger or some such animal, this has not been always the case, for the voice of the ancient versions of the practically unanimous in stating that the word stands for a colour. Josephus has the following remark in His Antiquities:

> "There were also curtains made of skins above these which afforded covering…..and great was the surprise of those who viewed these curtains at a distance, for they seemed not at all to differ from the colour of the sky" (Book iii., Chap. vi.).

The LXX and Jerome translate the word by hyacinthus, the "jacinth" of Rev. xxi. 20, which is azure or sky-blue. Other ancient versions, together with the Vulgate, translate the word by ianthinus, violet coloured. That hyacinth was an article of commerce, and used in the dyeing of dress material, can be seen by consulting the LXX of Ezek. xxvii. 24 and Isa. iii. 23. It will be remembered that Moses was instructed to make the tabernacle according to the pattern shown him in the mount (Exod. xxv. 9, 40; xxvi. 30; xxvii. 8; Acts vii. 44; and Heb. viii. 5). It is also very plain that the tabernacle in the wilderness was an example and shadow of "the heavenly things themselves", that "true tabernacle", which the Lord pitched, and not man (Heb. viii. 2, 5; ix. 23, 24). May we not have in this fact an explanation of the added covering, and the reason of its azure colour? The true external cover of the tabernacle was the one of rams' skins dyed red, the superimposed covering of blue representing heaven itself in which the true tabernacle really existed. This was but an anticipation in type of Solomon's prayer: "Hear Thou in heaven Thy dwelling place." There are many other features of interest in the details revealed in this wonderful structure that we must leave to the reader to investigate, while we notice briefly the framework, foundations, and the vail, before concluding this survey.

Golden boards and silver sockets.

The walls and framework of the tabernacle were made of shittim wood (or as the LXX renders it "incorruptible wood"), overlaid with gold. Forty-eight boards were used altogether, twenty on either side, six across the back, and two to form the corners in some way not revealed. These boards were held in place by a series of bars and rings, and the boards terminated at the bases in two tenons or "hands" that fitted into silver sockets placed in the earth to receive them. When we read in John i. 14, "The Word was made flesh, and tabernacled among us", we can readily see in the gold and the wood a type of the true deity and the sinless humanity of the Lord Jesus Christ, while the sockets of silver are explained in the book of Exodus himself. In chapter xxx. 11-16 we find that every man of Israel gave for the ransom of his soul a half shekel of silver. This atonement money was appointed for the service of the tabernacle. Exod. xxxviii. 25-28 tells us how this silver was used. One hundred sockets of silver weighing one talent each were made of this atonement money, and constituted the great foundation upon which the whole typical fabric rested. No words of ours are necessary to illuminate the lesson here. Fine linen and silver, righteousness and atonement, the warp, woof and foundation of the great plan of the ages!

The new and living way.

The record of Exod. xxvi. is not completed until a description is given of the vail and the door hanging. Both vail and hanging are made of the same material, the vail alone having the cherubim. Beautiful as this vail must have been, its presence spoke of man's failure. Before the typical prophecy of the tabernacle could be fulfilled, that vail must be rent, that golden mercy-seat spattered with blood, such is the nature of sin and of holiness:--

> "Having, therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us THROUGH THE VAIL, that is to say, His flesh" (Heb. x. 19, 20).
>
> "And behold, the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom" (Matt. xxvii. 51).

In the writings of the apostle Paul there is scarcely a reference to the earthly life of the Lord, but we find constant reference to His death:--

> "In the body of His flesh through death" (Col. i. 22).
>
> "The children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same; that through death He might destroy . . . . . and deliver" (Heb. ii. 14, 15).

Such is the continual testimony of Scripture. There is no gospel in the spotless life of the Son of God taken by itself, that only aggravates our sinfulness the more, and, like the vail, bars our access to God.

Through the rent vail, through that spotless life laid down in death is found a way into the holiest. Just as the tabernacle rested upon the silver sockets of atonement, and was covered by the rams' skins dyed red, so no part of the mighty purpose of the ages shall be accomplished apart from the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. This is a fundamental of all truth, yea a very chief corner stone.

We earnestly ask our younger readers, for whom this series is particularly written, to test all the modern "gospels" and schemes by this great exhibition of the mind and will of God. No one can believe its message and trifle with the vitals of the faith, which are everywhere proclaimed through type and symbol, by fabric, colour and position, to be the sacrificial death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ.

> "Without shedding of blood is no remission . . . . . For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true: but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us" (Heb. ix. 1-28).

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

#46. Heb. xi. and the rainbow of faith.
pp. 11 - 14

Chapter x. as we have seen ends on the exhortation to live by faith. The words "we are not of them who draw back unto perdition" imply the alternative, "we are of them who go on unto perfection". In our last study we drew attention to the meaning of perdition when set over against perfection. To live by faith is evidently very closely allied with perfection, and in chapter xii. comes the exhortation to run with patience, "looking unto Jesus, the author and perfecter of faith".

For those who have a desire to "go on unto perfection", here in Christ is the great example. Even as we say the words however we are conscious of a "great gulf" between the Lord and ourselves. It is just here that Heb. xi. so wonderfully fits in and comes to our aid. Here, living by faith is sub-divided for us, and we see one phase in one example, and another phase in another, and are gently led on to contemplate the perfecter Himself in Whom all faith was resident in its fullness.

Light from the works of God.

It will be profitable for us to turn aside for a moment from the written Word that we may obtain help from an analogy in the works of God. The light of the sun untinted by the atmosphere through which it comes is pure white. If falling rain or water-mist intercept the rays of sunlight, we have the phenomenon called the rainbow. We have all seen with pleasure in our childhood the colours of the rainbow caused by a decanter of water standing on a white tablecloth, or by the prism-shaped pendant ornaments that our grandparents had upon the mantelshelf. These are but demonstrations of the fact that pure white light is made up of three primary colours, red, yellow, & blue, and these mingling form the secondaries, orange, green, & violet. For reasons the explanation of which lies outside the scope of this paper, the actual spectrum or rainbow is found to contain bands of seven colours, always in the following order, red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo & violet.

All colour in nature is dependent upon the fact that sunlight contains in itself the whole range of colour that exists. The red rose is called red because the petals have the power of absorbing the blue and the yellow rays of light, and throwing back to our eye the red. A leaf is green because it lays hold upon the red rays and throws back the blue and the yellow. A white chalk cliff throws back the blue rays, while a black felt hat retains all the rays. Hence, a white dress is cooler than a black one as the light and heat rays are in measure treated alike. Now it is not our intention to attempt to give a paper upon the spectrum as an illustration of the place of Heb. xi.

If we see the pure white light of the sun, as representing perfect light, composed of the perfect number of colours, viz., seven, this will represent Christ, as set forth in

Heb. xii. 2. Heb. xi. will then represent the prism of glass which has the power of splitting up the perfect light of the sun, and will split up the perfect faith of Christ, and focus a ray of each colour, as it were, upon one or more examples, enabling us to see the better the seven-fold splendour of the perfection of faith in Christ, after having seen the seven aspects of it separately in the lives of others. To help us in our study, let us examine the following diagram.

- - - I l l u s t r a t i o n - - -

The sun is placed to one side and indicated as a type of Heb. xii. 2. Heb. xi. intercepts the beam of light and the result is seen at the side. Before we go further we must make certain that there are these sets of "sevens", and so taking nothing for granted we begin to count, 1. Abel, 2. Enoch, 3. Noah, 4. Abraham, 5. Isaac, 6. Jacob, and 7. Sarah. Here the record comes to an end for a time, while verses 12-16 speak of the pilgrim character of faith. It will be observed that a woman ends the series. We commence counting again in verse 17, 1. Abraham, 2. Isaac, 3. Jacob, 4. Joseph, 5. Moses, 6. Israel, and 7. Rahab. Here we have another set of seven, again ending with a woman. In verse 32 the apostle says that time would fail to tell of all that could be brought forward, but nevertheless the apparently haphazard list that is assembled in this verse still presents the spectrum, 1. Gideon, 2. Barak, 3. Samson, 4. Jephthae, 5. David, 6. Samuel, and 7. The prophets.

We believe that the seven-fold division of Heb. xi. is an established fact, and so we can now proceed to a further examination. How are these lists related to each other. It seems to be a Scriptural principle that truth is confirmed by two or more witnesses. Believing this to be the case, we approached the double list of names that are mentioned in detail, and found that they were arranged in pairs. For example, Abel and Enoch are both connected with death:--

"He being dead yet speaketh" (verse 4).
"Enoch was translated that he should not see death" (verse 5).

The next pair, Noah and Abraham, are related to an inheritance:--

Noah "became heir of the righteousness which is by faith" (verse 7).
Abraham "was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance" (verse 8).

Isaac and Jacob are mentioned as dwelling in tents, heirs with Abraham of the same promise, and looking for a city which hath foundations, so emphasizing their pilgrim character. Sarah and Abraham are by this arrangement brought together in the centre. Here resurrection is the theme.

Sarah "received strength to conceive seed . . . . . of . . . . . him as good as dead" (verses 11, 12).

Abraham "offered up his only begotten son . . . . . accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead, from whence also he received him in figure" (verses 17-19).

Isaac and Jacob are both mentioned together in connection with blessing that overruled the flesh.

Isaac "blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come" (verse 20).
Jacob "blessed both the sons of Joseph" (verse 21).

Joseph and Moses are both closely associated with Egypt. Joseph spoke of the exodus of the children of Israel (verse 22). Moses turned his back upon the treasures of Egypt (verse 26). Israel and Rahab conclude the series. Both are associated with the fall of Jericho and with being spared during judgment. Israel were saved, while Egypt's first-born perished and the Egyptians were drowned in the Red Sea (verse 29). Rahab "perished not with them that believed not" (verse 31). Thus we have the perfect white light of faith split up into its seven parts:--

A | Faith in connection with DEATH.—Abel and Enoch.
  B | Faith in connection with INHERITANCE.—Noah and Abraham.
    C | Faith in connection with PILGRIMAGE.—Isaac and Jacob.
      D | Faith in connection with RESURRECTION.—Sarah and Abraham.
    C | Faith in connection with BLESSING.—Isaac and Jacob.
  B | Faith in connection with EGYPT.—Joseph and Moses.
A | Faith in connection with DELIVERANCE.—Israel and Rahab.

The three chief features, viz., beginning, middle, and end, emphasize death, resurrection, and deliverance.

A principle of interpretation.

The way in which we are to interpret this series is suggested in Heb. xii. 24. Concerning Abel's faith Heb. xi. 4 says, "He being dead yet speaketh", and in Heb. xii. 24 we read of the blood of sprinkling that "speaketh better things than Abel". Here is the principle of interpretation. Heb. xi. are types, "the better things" are found in Christ. We can say that Christ's well-pleasing walk speaketh better things than that of Enoch, and so of all the rest. It is helpful to see the rays of light separated and set forth in this example, but their chief good is that they enable us the better to appreciate the fullness that there is in Christ.

"Each sees one colour of the rainbow light,
Each looks upon one tint and calls it heaven,
Thou art the fullness of our partial sight,

We are not perfect till we find the seven."

#47. The perfecting of faith (xi.). Encouragement and reproof. pp. 44 - 47

The sevenfold analysis of perfected faith that occupies the bulk of Heb. xi. is introduced by a statement that reveals the underlying and essential character of this faith in all and every one of its manifestations; "Now faith is the SUBSTANCE of things hoped for, the EVIDENCE of things not seen." This passage may be taken apart from its context as a general definition of faith, but its real force can only be appreciated as it is seen at the head of this sevenfold exposition of perfected faith.

Moreover, viewing the statement in its context, it cannot be separated from the closing words of chapter x. There the believer is seen "losing" in this life, but sustained by the consciousness of that "possession of a better and more lasting nature" (x. 34), which was held in faith and prospect. The words immediately preceding the definition of faith in Heb. xi. 1 speak of a future day when those who have "lost their soul" for Christ's sake shall "gain" or "acquire it". Now it is evident that if these believers were to really take joyfully the spoiling of their goods, they must have had very vividly before them "the better and more lasting possessions" that awaited them in glory.

Substance and evidence.

As we examine the testimony of this chapter to the faith of Abel, Abraham, Moses and others, we shall see how much and how readily they gave up life, home, and wealth for the Lord's sake, and of them all it could be said that they were sustained by that faith which is the substance of things hoped for. Moses "endured as seeing Him Who is invisible". What therefore are we to understand by the words "substance" and "evidence".

In preparation for this article we covered a fairly wide circle in the examination of this word substance, and its usage, but nothing revealed the intention of the apostle so well as the way in which it is used in the LXX, or Greek version of the O.T. Hupostasis, the word translated "substance", is found in a number of passages in the O.T., a few of them being given hereafter as illuminating Heb. xi. 1: "And now, Lord, what wait I for, my hope is in Thee" (Psa. xxxix. 7). Where the Hebrew has the simple word "hope", the LXX has "My hupostasis (or ground of hope) is in Thee". "I sink in deep mire where there is no standing." In the next reference it is difficult to avoid a lengthy explanation if a literal rendering, together with the LXX parallels, be demanded. It so happens that in the A.V. the two adjoining verses contain the word "substance" as a rendering of other words. We think, however, that sufficient for our purpose will be provided by ignoring the surrounding difficulties, and lifting out the word translated by hupostasis. Spurrell's translation avoids some of the pitfalls.

"My own person was not concealed from Thee, when I was formed in a secret manner; curiously wrought in the lower bowels of the earth. Thine eyes beheld me in embryo; and my members, each one of them was recorded in the book" (Psa. cxxxix. 15, 16).

"My bones which Thou hast made in secret, were not hidden from Thee, nor my SUBSTANCE, in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes saw my unwrought (substance)" (LXX translation).

There is much in the passage for meditation. Faith is to the things hoped for as the unborn embryo is to the fully formed and living child. There is much that is secret, dark and mysterious, but the whole presses forward to fullness of life. Such is the underlying thought of Heb. xi. 1. The things hoped for were at the moment "not seen", they were as yet "unborn", yet very real to faith. As we watch the expectant mother lovingly and quietly preparing the little garments for the life that is not yet manifest, we have God's own illustration of that faith which is the substance of things hoped for. Let us now examine the second statement. "Faith is the evidence of things not seen."

Elengchos occurs but twice in the N.T., Heb. xi. 1 and II Tim. iii. 16. The A.V. translates it once "evidence" and once "reproof". When we turn to the verb elengcho we have a wider field for investigation. The following are the renderings in the A.V., convict, convince, rebuke, reprove, tell one's fault. In no one place is it ever translated "prove" or "demonstrate", or by any such word that is parallel to "evidence". We find the word in Heb. xii. 5, where it is translated "to be rebuked". Now structurally this passage balances Heb. xi. 1 thus:--

A | Heb. xi. 1. Faith. Substance and elengchos.
  B | xi. 2-40. The cloud of witnesses.
  B | xii. 1, 2. The cloud of witnesses.
A | xii. 3-5. Faith. The elengchos.

Now if the last passage is rightly rendered "rebuke", how can the only other occurrence of the word in Hebrews, bound as it is by all the ties of structure and consistent argument, how can Heb. xi. 1, we say, be rightly translated "evidence"? The reader may by this time be ready to consult the LXX again, and the first passage we note will be Hab. ii. 1, "I will stand upon my watch . . . . . what I shall answer upon my reproof", which is in the immediate context of the quotation, "the just shall live by faith". Instead of "proof" we find "reproof". Let us search this matter further. Now elengchos occurs some 21 times, and elengcho come 53 times. It is manifestly impossible with our limited space to provide a concordance of the occurrences here. We will give a few, but would here assure the reader that everyone of these 74 occurrences has been investigated, and that all point in one direction, namely, that elengchos does not mean "evidence", but "rebuke". Let us see a few examples:--

"And Abraham REPROVED Abimelech because of the well of water" (Gen. xxi. 25).
"Thou shalt in any wise REBUKE thy neighbour" (Lev. xix. 17).
"The Lord had REBUKED him" (II Chron. xxvi. 20).
"Behold, happy is the man whom God CORRECTETH" (Job v. 17).
"My son, despise not the chastening of the Lord, neither be weary of His CORRECTION, for whom the Lord loveth He CORRECTETH" (Prov. iii. 11, 12).

The apostle has quoted this passage of Prov. iii. 11, 12 in Heb. xii. 5, 6, and there, instead of giving the word "correction" twice as does the LXX, he uses the word "chasteneth". For confirmation of this synonym we may turn to Rev. iii. 19, "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten". Those desirous of searching out this matter more fully will doubtless find opportunity. Sufficient has been here noted to show that the primary idea of Heb. xi. 1 is "faith is a substance of things hoped for, a reproof of things not seen". This, however, does not convey sense to English ears, so we must consider the matter further. As the verse stands in the A.V. we have a repetition. Faith is a substance and an evidence. When we look at the actual thing in progress and in fact we find that faith has a twofold association: (1) It looks forward to future glory; (2) It endures present suffering.

The Hebrew believers would readily believe that faith was the substance of things hoped for. They would rejoice in Enoch's translation; but would they so readily rejoice in Abel's death? They would rejoice in Noah's preservation and inheritance, but would they so readily rejoice Abraham's surrender? Were they ready for the fact to be applied to themselves that these examples of faith "All died NOT HAVING RECEIVED the promise"? Were they ready to follow Moses not only for the future reward, but in the reproach and suffering of the present? What is this "reproof" then? It is the Lord's discipline meted out in love to every son, to every one of the "many sons" who by this very selfsame "Author", "Captain", and "Perfecter" of faith are being led as He was Himself through suffering to glory (Heb. ii. 10). It is the Gethsemane experience of Heb. v. 7-9, for there in the garden the Lord sweat as it were great drops of blood, and in Heb. xii. 4 is the application to "every son": "Ye have not yet resisted unto blood." Here then is the twofold character of perfected faith. A hand that reaches out on either side to join together suffering and glory. No one can fail to see the tremendous value of such a word to those who were passing through the experiences of the Hebrews at the time of writing the epistle. Here then, in this present time, faith is hope in embryo, with its accompanying sorrows; it is both substance and reproof, both crown and cross.

#47. (contd.). The perfecting of faith (xi.).
Encouragement and reproof.
pp. 61 - 63

In attempting the translation of Heb. xi. 1, and retaining the rendering "reproof", care must be exercised in ascertaining the meaning of the genitive case expressed by "of". It may be the genitive of character, like "the bond of perfectness"; or of origin, "the gift of God"; or of possession, "the sword of the spirit", i.e., "the spirit's sword"; or of apposition, "the firstfruits of the spirit", i.e., "the firstfruits (of our inheritance), that is to say, the spirit"; or of relation, "the reproach of Christ", i.e., reproach in connection with Christ. Of all these the last appears nearest to the meaning of Heb. xi. 1, "The reproof in connection with faith" being very parallel with "The reproach in connection with Christ", and in this way we should translate the passage. Faith assumes the invisible. Every believer should be able to say, though with purer intent than she who first uttered the words,

"Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present, and I feel now
The future in the instant."

This faith characterized "the elders" who received a good report. Report is martureo, and this constitutes them the great cloud of witnesses (martur of Heb. xii. 1). These elders come before us again at the close of the chapter, "These all, having obtained good report through faith received not the promise" (Heb. xi. 39), but although they received it not, "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them" (Heb. xi. 13). They had both the substance and the discipline, and these alone will enable the believer to go on unto perfection.

Dispensational truth and faith.

According to the A.V., verse 3 turns aside to speak of the creation of "the worlds". It is reserved for the speculative mind of man to conceive of "worlds". Scripture speaks of the "world". Creation however is not in view here. An age was drawing to its end. A dispensation that was secret was about to be introduced. The Hebrew believer could see nothing tangible, things were being shaken, and the apostle draws attention to the fact that:--

"By faith we understand that the ages were readjusted by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things that do appear" (Heb. xi. 3).

The word translated "framed" in the A.V., and which we render "readjust", is katartizo, and occurs in Heb. x. 5, where it is translated "prepared", also in xiii. 21, where it is translated "perfect". In both passages "adapt" seems the best translation. That there is a sense of repairing or readjusting in the word can be seen in Matt. iv. 21, the first occurrence, where it is translated "mending", and in Gal. vi. 1 where it reads "restore". The peculiar work of the gifts of the ascended Lord at the inauguration of the new dispensation seems to combine both words. The apostle, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers of Eph. iv. were to "readjust and adapt the saints", owing to the cleavage that had come at Acts xxviii.

The Hebrew believers were being shown that a change was imminent. The setting aside of Israel involved a change in the economy of the ages. Not only had these Hebrew believers to have a faith that could grasp the realities while the types and shadows passed away, but they must be prepared to exercise a faith that would appear to have nothing substantial beneath it, except the bare Word of God, and blessed hope of resurrection. This faith saw no "land" or "city", saw no evident prosperity as a reward for faithfulness and obedience, all its possessions were afar off, and those who were exhorted to "live by faith" were also told of those who "died in faith" without having received the promises, but who saw them "afar off".

These words, weighty in themselves, introduce the seven-fold series of those who each in their turn set forth some one aspect of that faith which in its perfection was exhibited in Christ.

#48. The perfecting of faith
Abel's offering (xi. 4).
pp. 75 - 79

The first of the series of examples of perfected faith that is given in Heb. xi. is the twofold witness of Abel and Enoch, who though unlike in some respects, are alike in this that they both have to do specifically with the death in connection with their faith. Let us give attention in the first instance to the witness of Abel.

The first feature of perfected faith emphasizes the atonement. Elsewhere we have drawn attention to the two words that mark the difference between redemption (exodus = a leading out), and atonement (eisodus = a leading in). Abel does not speak so much of redemption from sin, as access and acceptance. There are many things that belong to the life of faith, but all service, witness, suffering or warfare are secondary when compared with Abel's initial witness, which gives first place to the recognition of the claims and provision of the holiness of God. Enoch's faith corresponds with this in the fact that it emphasizes both the walk that is pleasing to God, and further that "he that cometh to God must believe that He is".

The faith of Abel.

"By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than that of Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh" (Heb. xi. 4).

Here the good report becomes both "witness" and "testifying", and the correction should be made in our translation of the passages. We must turn to Genesis in order to see for ourselves the record that is referred to here:--

"And in process of time it came to pass, that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord. And Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof. And the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering. But unto Cain and to his offering He had not respect . . . . . If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door. And unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him" (Gen. iv. 3-7).

"In process of time."—Literally, "At or after the end of some days", "Some" being often expressed by the plural form alone. Nothing certain as to what days are intended. Some think the Sabbath, some the end of the year, or at some set time like harvest. The important fact to observe is that there was some recognition of appointed time, and hence the implication is that Abel's faith was connected with "a word of God" as all faith has ever been.

"An offering" (minchah).—This word is often used as a contrast to zebah, a sacrifice with blood, but standing alone it is often used for sacrifice in general.

As the passage stands in the A.V. the word "also" in verse 4 ("And Abel, he also") simply adds the action of Abel to that of Cain. If, however, the word "also" be read after the verb, as it actually stands in both the Hebrew and in the LXX, there is a possibility that a deeper lesson is intended. There is something suggestive in the Greek of Heb. xi. 4 too. There is no word for "excellent" there, that must be supplied. Translating the words just as they come we read, "By faith more sacrifice Abel than Cain offered". Is it possible that in this simple and literal statement we have fuller light on Gen. iv. than the A.V. gives us? In what way did Abel offer "more sacrifice"?

Coming back to Gen. iv. and reading the "also" after the verb we have, "And Abel he brought also of the firstlings of his flock", and this at least opens the way for the implied thought that Abel brought a bloodless gift as Cain did, but he "brought also" the lamb which alone made any other offering acceptable. This at least is exactly the teaching of the epistle to the Hebrews. All the typical offerings even though they were of bulls and goats, were in measure but the offering of Cain in this sense, that they sought to render the offerer accepted without the precious blood of Christ which alone cleanses and gives access. On the other hand a bloodless sacrifice was acceptable (see Heb. xiii. 15), but only when sanctified by the blood of Christ.

The LXX rendering of Gen. iv. 7 is somewhat strange, and the relation of the existing Hebrew text with the Greek is too complicated to be dealt with in this paper. We give it, however, for what it may be worth, for it seems to suggest that the mistake of Cain was not so much in the offering that he bring, as in the offering that he refused:--

"If thou hast brought rightly, but not rightly divided* it, hast thou not sinned?"

[* - To avoid wrong associations, we may explain that this word is not the same as used in II Tim. ii. 15, but is diaireo.]

However difficult it may be for us at this date to reconcile such a rendering with the Hebrew of Gen. iv. 7, we must give the credit of common sense to the translators of the LXX that they felt that such a translation expressed the teaching of the passage. Cain sinned through a failure to discern the difference between the offering of fruit, which had in it no confession of human unworthiness, and the offering which involved the shedding of blood, which pointed to the one sacrifice for sin and for acceptance which was to be offered by the Lord Himself.

If we understand the word "sin" in verse 7 to mean Cain's own transgression, the sense is not very clear. "If thou doest not well" indicates sin, and the statement resolves itself into, "If thou art a sinner—thou art a sinner". But "sin" is spoken of in Exod. xxix. 14 as having flesh, and skin, and capable of being "burnt with fire"; it has "blood" according to Exod. xxx. 10; the worshipper could "lay his hand" upon his head according to Lev. iv. 19, and it could be "eaten" according to Lev. x. 17. This is sufficient to prove that "a sin offering" in the shape of a bullock, a goat, or a lamb could be the true meaning of the word "sin" in Gen. iv. 7. The statement "sin lieth at the door" is to-day a proverb, but a proverb that has arisen from this very translation, and therefore not a proof that such would be the interpretation which Cain would give to the term. The idea that sin was typified as in the act of springing upon Cain is hardly justified by the usage of the word "lieth".

When we read in Psa. xxiii. 2, "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures", we certainly have no thought of a beast of prey in the act of taking a spring. We are not to suppose that when Jacob saw the flocks of sheep "lying" by the well that they were preparing to spring at him, or at one another (Gen. xxix. 2). The word is indeed spoken of a leopard, but not in the act of springing on its prey: "the leopard shall lie down with the kid" (Isa. xi. 6). The word is spoken of the couching of sheep, and wild beasts, lions, leopards and asses, of the needy that shall "lie down" in safety (Isa. xiv. 30); of flocks that "rest" (Song of Sol. i. 7), but not one passage can bear the meaning often read into Gen. iv. 7. "The door" is neither the door belonging to Cain or Abel. So far as the Scriptures actually state it can just as well be the door of the primal tabernacle mentioned in Gen. iii. 24. Over 40 times in the Pentateuch is this word used of the "door of the tabernacle". The sense therefore of Gen. iv. 7 seems clearly to be:--

"If thou does not well, a sin offering coucheth at the door of the tabernacle."

Cain was without excuse. Inasmuch as faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, Abel must have "heard". Cain also would have heard likewise, and even if he had misunderstood, the Lord graciously pointed out his error, and gave him full opportunity for repentance and acceptance. Cain, Korah, and Balaam make up a terrible trio that fitly prefigure the state of the things at the time of the end (Jude 11). The hymnology of Cain's successors harps upon the string:--

"Something in my hand I bring", while the language of faith is expressed by:--

"Nothing in my hand I bring, Simply to Thy cross I cling."

We must not lose sight of the Epistle to the Hebrews, nor the fact that Abel is mentioned as one of a series that sets forth the fact that the just shall live by faith. Abel's example is given here as an encouragement to the Hebrews who were losing heart, were in danger of drawing back, and to whom he writes at the close of Heb. xi.:--

"For consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds. Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin" (Heb. xii. 3, 4).

The rock upon which faith rests is the blood of Christ, and that is the rock upon which unbelief is broken to pieces. Our next study deals with Enoch, whose life and witness is the complement of Abel's witness; this, however, we must reserve for another paper. A principle of interpretation is supplied by Heb. xii. 24. Whatever is good in Abel is better in Christ. Whatever will be found good in Enoch, or Noah, or Abraham, or the rest will likewise be found better in Christ. He is the Perfecter of faith. In Him the whole spectrum meets, all others are so many broken facets reflecting something only of His ineffable perfection:--

"By faith Abel offered unto God more sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God bearing witness of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh" (Heb. xi. 4).

"The blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than Abel" (Heb. xii. 24).

#49. Enoch,
or the faith that transfers (xi. 5, 6).
pp. 106 - 111

While it is misleading as a rule to speak in generalities, it seems clear from Scripture that, so far as the human side of the purpose of the ages is concerned, all doctrine may be reduced under two heads, (1) Adam, (2) Christ. As practice flows from doctrine, practical teaching will also have reference to these two heads of mankind. With this thought in mind it will not be difficult to see that each successive witness to faith in Heb. xi. in some way reverses the action and attitude of Adam.

For example, Adam's refuge in the covering of fig leaves is reversed in Abel's refuge in the atonement by blood. Adam's sin spoiled that fellowship which he enjoyed when it could be written, "I heard Thy voice . . . . . and I was afraid". This is reversed in Enoch's walk with God. Adam's sin involved his house in death, and his heritage in a curse, whereas Noah's faith prepared an ark to the saving of his house, and he became the heir of the righteousness of faith. The reader may continue the parallel. Enoch was the seventh from Adam; he lived 365 years, and evidently completes a typical cycle of time. In Enoch we have full restoration typified. We have seen moreover that Enoch and Abel make one dual witness, showing that man's restoration can come only along the lines of the great sacrifice for sin.

ADAM walked with God.
ADAM covered himself with leaves.
ABEL covered by the atonement.
ENOCH walked with God.

Not only do the numbers "the seventh" from Adam, and the 365 years, point out Enoch as the end of a cycle, but his name means "Initiated", and his translation appears to have left its mark upon the old world, for it is highly probable that the Phoenix, is simply Pa-phenoch, "The house of Enoch".

Enoch, the perfected.

We are apt to forget in our studies that all Scripture, though universal in its application, and true for all time, nevertheless had a primary and restricted origin. Heb. xi. is so full, each character so great, that we forget that the writer was addressing "Hebrews", and urging them to "go on unto perfection", and that every item of Heb. xi. has been divinely selected with that fact in mind. Abel showed the absolute necessity for the "one sacrifice" of Christ, and the danger of the way of Cain should that one offering be despised or rejected. Enoch's case sets forth the goal, summed up in the "walk", and the "translation". Toward the close of Heb. xi. the apostle speaks of:--

"Others (who) were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a BETTER RESURRECTION" (Heb. xi. 35).

It must be observed here that the obtaining of a better resurrection is directly connected with not accepting deliverance, and the question arises, How can Enoch's example have any bearing upon this, or upon the Hebrews, seeing that Enoch did not die?

It is time therefore to search and see. The sources of direct information are the following. The passage in Gen. v., the LXX translation, and the passage in Heb. xi. These we must give first.

"And Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him" (Hebrew of Gen. v. 24).

"And Enoch pleased God: and he was not found, for God translated him" (LXX version of Gen. v. 24).

"By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death, and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God" (Heb. xi. 5).

It will be noticed that the record grows as we proceed. The Hebrew is the shortest statement. Paul does not quote the Hebrew original, but quotes the LXX version as more suitable to his purpose, and more familiar to his readers, who used that version daily.

Did Enoch die?

Let us examine the actual statements used before we come to any conclusion.

"He was not."—Identical words are used in Jer. xxxi. 15, "Rachel weeping for her children refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not". There is now ambiguity in Reuben's meaning when he cried, "The child is not" (Gen. xxxvii. 30), or of Jacob's lament "Joseph is not, and Simeon is not" (Gen. xlii. 36), indeed Jacob said "Me ye have bereaved".

"For God took him."—The Hebrew word laqach is used both of death and of translation:--

"Behold, I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke" (Ezek. xxiv. 16).

"Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master from thy head to-day?" (II Kings ii. 3).

The case of Elijah is somewhat parallel with that of Enoch. Elijah is take up to heaven by a whirlwind, and Elisha "saw him no more" (verse 12). When the sons of the prophets urged Elisha to send the fifty men to look for Elijah, the result is recorded, "They sought three days, but they found him not" (verse 17). It is the LXX that adds the word "found" in Gen. v. 24. While this reference to Elijah strengthens the conception that Enoch did not die, Psa. xxxvii. 35, 36 shows that the avoidance of death is not necessarily implied by the word, "I have seen the wicked . . . . . yet he passed away, and lo, he was not; yea, I sought him, but he could not be found".

By faith Enoch was translated.—It is usual to suppose that the use of the word "translation" is the end of all controversy, and that such a word could not apply to any who had died. Yet, notice the first occurrence of the word in the N.T.:--

"So Jacob went down into Egypt, and DIED, he, and our fathers, and were TRANSLATED into Sychem, and laid in the sepulchre . . . . ." (Acts vii. 15, 16).

It is evident that the word "translation" of itself does not necessitated escape from death. Heb. vii. 12 has already used the word to speak of the change of the priesthood and the law.

That he should not see death.—The fifth chapter of Genesis is punctuated by the words, "and he died", eight times. Enoch's translation breaks the sad sequence of mortality and provides the exception. Heb. xi. 5 does not say simply "Enoch was translated that he should not die", but "that he should not see death". We found that in the words of Heb. ii. 9 and Matt. xvi. 28 "tasting death" was not exactly synonymous with dying (Volume X, page 180). May there not be a reason for the choice of the expression "see death" here? In John viii. 51 we have a parallel expression, though a different word is used for "to see".

Verse 52 in most MSS paraphrases the expression by the words "taste death", although the Vatican MS here retains the word "see". The idiom is explained for us in Acts ii. 26, 27:--

"My flesh shall rest in hope; because Thou wilt not leave my soul in Hades, neither wilt Thou suffer Thine holy One to SEE corruption."

It will be observed that death is contemplated here, but not corruption. In verse 29 Peter expands the idea: "The patriarch David is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." To this add Acts xiii. 36, 37:--

"David . . . . . fell on sleep, and was laid with his fathers, and SAW corruption."

Peter's further remark, "David is not ascended into the heavens" (acts ii. 34), shows that the idea involved in "not seeing corruption" was not so much that of dying, or even of being buried, but of being left in the tomb, of not ascending into the heavens. We venture nothing in speculation upon the holy nature of the Son of God. We know not what would have taken place had He remained in the tomb for a long period. What we do know is that He was raised on the third day, "was not left in Hades, neither suffered to see corruption" which says as much as we can bear.

Leaving . . . . . the resurrection of dead ones.

The ambiguity that surrounds the translation of Enoch serves a good purpose. While we cannot say with certainty that Enoch did die, or that he was taken away by God without dying, this very uncertainty enabled the apostle to use the example of Enoch to encourage the Hebrews "to go on unto perfection". We may be better prepared to follow the teaching of Heb. vi. having come so far. Among the items that were to be "left" as they pressed on to perfection" is included, strangely, "the resurrection of dead ones".

This does not mean a denial of the resurrection, but the giving up of the hope of a general resurrection of dead ones, for a special and prior hope of "a better resurrection" of those who, though dying, should not "see" death, who in other words should attain unto an "out resurrection". The parallel with Philippians is apparent and instructive. This "better resurrection" which could be illustrated by Enoch's translation is seen in Heb. xi. 40 compared with xii. 23:--

"God having foreseen some better thing for us, that they without us should not be perfected."
"But ye are come to . . . . . the spirits of just men perfected."

Just as the blood of Jesus, the mediator of the new covenant, speaks better things than that of Abel, so the resurrection that awaited those who pressed toward the mark, and who laid aside every weight and ran with patience, surpassed the translation of Enoch. The parallel with Philippians is found even in the word "better". Hebrews speaks of a resurrection that was "better", while Paul in Phil. i. 23 says, "To depart, and be with Christ; which is far better".

Metathesis occurs three times in Hebrews, so also does metatithemi. It will be wise to allow these references a place before concluding. Heb. vii. 12 speaks of a "change" of both priesthood and law. Heb. vii. 12 speaks of a "change" of both priesthood and law. Heb. xi. 5 speaks of the translation of Enoch, and Heb. xii. 27 says:--

"Yet once more, signifieth the translation of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things that cannot be shaken may remain."

Apart from inspiration altogether we would expect that so important a word would be used with judgment, and that the reference to Enoch's translation was not made in forgetfulness of the presence of the word in chapter vii., nor of its appearance in chapter xii. It is evident that "translation" does not express the meaning in xii. 27 or vii. 12, but "transfer" does. The important point in the interpretation of this epistle is that a change had come, bringing with it the possibility of a transfer. Heb. xi. opens with the fact that the ages were framed or adjusted by God, and seeing that some things had become shaken, and were set aside upon the failure of Israel, a transfer was held out to faith, whereby the "word of the beginning" could be left for "better things". Abel will stand for the "better sacrifice", and Enoch for the "better resurrection", and while these Hebrews may indeed die in faith, not having received the promise, they may nevertheless be able to entertain a better hope, founded upon better promises, embracing a better country, that is a heavenly.

The closing down, for the time being, of the earthly section of the purpose of the ages, opened for the believing Hebrews the prospect of a transfer as more fully detailed in Heb. xii. 22-29, and being in some degree a secret. This while being by no means the same either in sphere, calling, or character as the dispensation of the mystery, did hold out, to those who believed the added revelation, a prize connected with this heavenly calling, which could be attained only by "going on unto perfection". The subject will not be dropped until we reach the end of chapter xii. It may be helpful as a side light upon this theme to note what the wisest King of Israel is alleged to have said:--

"For honourable age is not that which standeth in length of time, nor is it measured by number of years. But wisdom is the gray hair unto men, and an unspotted life is old age. He pleased God, and was beloved of Him: so that living among sinners he was translated. Yea speedily was he caught away, lest that wickedness should alter his understanding, or deceit beguile his soul . . . . . He, being made perfect in a short time, fulfilled a long time" (Wisdom of Solomon iv. 8-13).

The reader may have missed the familiar comment which sees in Enoch's translation the rapture of the church, but we trust he will have gained by having attention drawn both to the difficulties of the case, and of its fitness with the theme of the Hebrews:--

"Let us go on unto perfection . . . . . leaving . . . . . a resurrection of dead ones . . . . . for a better resurrection . . . . . and the spirits of just men made perfect."

That the prize of Phil. iii. may be considered parallel, the reference to "reward" in Heb. xi. 6 will show, and that "to walk and please God" is the high goal of faith, Heb. xi. and the bulk of the epistles testify.

#50. Noah.
The faith that inherits (xi. 7).
pp. 140 - 143

However personal we may feel the application of this or any other scripture, we deprive ourselves of much that is helpful in its interpretation when we lose sight of the original purpose of its writing, and the conditions under which it was written. Heb. xi. is so full of teaching that we are apt to isolate it from its context in the appreciation of its present application. The aspect of faith we are to consider under the names of Noah and Abraham, while containing much that has a direct personal application to ourselves, was nevertheless written in the first place to the Hebrews, and written to them in circumstances that make the examples cited of supreme importance in the process of the apostle's instruction.

The faith that inherits.

Among the items of prominence in the message to the Hebrews is that which deals with the relation of faith to inheritance. Chapters iii. and iv. are devoted to the idea of the necessity of faith in connection with inheriting. "So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief" (iii. 19). It is time, however, that we saw for ourselves that inheritance is the connecting theme of this second pair of examples:--

"By faith Noah . . . . . became HEIR of the righteousness which is by faith" (xi. 7).
"By faith Abraham . . . . . went out . . . . . to the place he should afterward receive for an INHERITANCE" (xi. 8).

Without the scriptures before us we should doubtless assign the position of "heir of the righteousness by faith" to Abram, rather than to Noah, as so much is said of him in that connection in Romans and Galatians as well as in Gen. xv. The fact that Noah is also associated with righteousness by faith, shows that from earliest days this principle has been in operation, and but the more emphasizes that unpalatable fact, that "the law made nothing perfect"; that Sinai is a transition, not a goal (Heb. xii. 18-24), and that the gospel committed to Paul, and which reaches back as far as Adam, and as wide as the ends of the earth, is the gospel that carries with it age-lasting issues. It separated in Eden, and was believed by Abel.

The epistle to the Hebrews looks at righteousness by faith from a different angle from that of Romans. Here we see faith at work. "By faith Noah . . . . . prepared an ark". Such is the simple statement. We must, however, not omit the moving causes that assisted Noah's faith to prepare, against all reason, an ark on dry land. Noah's act is the result of (1) divine warning, and (2) a pious fear.

A divine warning.

We are not allowed to forget the important truth that "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God". Noah was doubtless wise in consequence of his 600 years of experience, his fellowship with God, and his purity of life, which would all be in favour of enabling him to foresee the goal toward which the ungodliness of his day was fast heading, but this wisdom would never have evolved "an ark". Chrematizo = to warn, is used in the N.T. to indicate a warning given by means of a dream (Matt. ii. 12-22); by the Holy Spirit (Luke ii. 26); or by an angel (Acts x. 22). Its direct connection with the body of the epistle to the Hebrews will be seen by looking at Heb. viii. 5 and xii. 25. Moses was "warned" by God in connection with the tabernacle which he "prepared" (see Heb. ix. 2). Heb. xii. 25 applies this "warning":--

"See that ye refuse not Him that speaketh. For if they escaped not who refused Him who WARNED them on earth, how much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from Him that WARNS us from heaven."

The verse following reveals that the two "warnings", the one so much greater than the other, were the voices of Sinai and Calvary. Heb. ii. 1-4 is here repeated with solemn emphasis, AND with the same sequence. The warning of Heb. ii. 1-4 is followed by a reference to the "world to come" and its dominion; the warning of Heb. xii. 25 is followed by a reference to a kingdom that abides the terrific "shaking" of the last days. So, to come back to Noah, we have the warning, the flood (parallel with the shaking), and the world to come, the dominion restored after the flood, called in Heb. xi. 7 "the inheritance of the righteousness which is by faith". Though we may have passed these close parallels lightly by, the originally exercised readers of this epistle would have found the very pointed.

Both Noah and Abraham received a message from God that put a great test upon faith, for Noah was warned of things "not seen as yet", and Abraham went out "not knowing" whither he went. What they did know was the faithfulness of Him who spake. So these Hebrews, taught from infancy to believe the law of Sinai to be eternal and unalterable, to believe their ritual to be not only of divine appointing, but to be as lasting as God's throne, found an almost insuperable difficulty in the teaching of the apostle that such things were waxing old and vanishing away, that God Himself found fault with the first covenant and had set it aside for the aionian covenant sealed by the blood of Christ Himself.

A pious fear.

The second motive that is revealed is that Noah was "moved with fear". The word "fear" has to stand for (1) phobos, a "fear that flees", from phebomai = to flee; for (2) deilos, a "fear that shrinks"; and for (3) eulabes, a "fear that worships". This last is the word used in connection with Noah in Heb. xi. 7. He certainly did not have the fear that flees, not the fear that "draws back unto perdition", but the fear that reverently acquiesces in the will of God. We find the word, or its cognates, translated "devout" in Luke ii. 25; Acts ii. 5 and viii. 2. The true translation of Heb. v. 7 is "He was heard for His piety" (godly fear), and so it is translated in Heb. xii. 28, adding one more link to the record of Noah that we have already seen exists. Phobos and eulabes are definitely contrasted in Heb. xi., so that we need make no mistake. Moses was NOT moved with phobos (Heb. xi. 23-27); Noah WAS moved with eulabes (Heb. xi. 7), and both acted "by faith".

Practical piety.

This is once more a needed lesson to the tried, persecuted and wearied saints. This godly fear, this piety, despised as it is by the so-called practical world, is a great force in the realm of godliness. "Noah moved by godly fear prepared" (kataskenazo); in other words, we have an example of the somewhat trite expression, "practical piety". Kataskenazo, translated "prepared", is used of creation in Heb. iii. 3, 4; of the tabernacle in ix. 2-6, and of the ark in xi. 7, & I Pet. iii. 20, and is derived from a utilitarian word skenos = an instrument or vessel; the very human body itself (I Thess. iv. 4). Noah, in faith, acting upon a divine revelation, and in godly fear, not by sentiment, nor precipitately, prepared an ark. The border line between faith and its works is too fine to be of service to us. If we believe God concerning wrath to come, shall we not flee to the refuge provided. If we say that we believe God, and refuse to act accordingly, do we not really deny Him? Noah provides an example of the "faith-obedience" that Paul speaks o in Romans:--

By faith Abel OFFERED | By faith Enoch was TRANSLATED.

By faith Noah PREPARED | By faith Abraham OBEYED.

#50. (concluded). Noah.
The faith that inherits (xi. 7).
pp. 152, 153

Saved . . . . . condemned.

Noah's faith moved him to prepare an ark "to the saving of his house, by the which he condemned the world". While from one point of view Christian charity knows no bounds, from another point of view it is very drastic and provoking. This is not limited to the Christian faith. It belongs to all propositions, and to all issues. The man who is convinced that the Teetotaller is right, cannot avoid the alternative that the Drinker is wrong. The man who sees in Socialism the panacea for all evils, cannot avoid condemning Conservatism and Capitalism by his very conviction. The church by its very constitution condemns the world. There is no justification for bitterness, for wrangling, for strife, but even among professing Christians it is not possible to hold certain vital doctrines without condemning those who deny them. Christian charity is a lovely thing, but it does not enable us to hunt with the hounds and run with the hare.

The inheritance.

All that we have seen concerning Noah has been leading to this last clause, "He became the HEIR of the righteousness which is by faith". The warning, the preparing, the saving of his house had one thing in view—the inheritance. Noah was not moved to construct an ark either to demonstrate his own prowess, or even his faith, but as a means to an end.

Redemption is for a purpose; it is not an end in itself.

So marvelous is that redemption, that we have spoken of it as though it was the end of itself of the purpose of God. Eph. i. 1-14 shows as clearly as any passage the intermediate position of redemption, with the will of God stated first, the inheritance reached at the last, and the "mystery of His will" coming between. This has been touched upon more fully in articles dealing with redemption, and cannot be developed here.

The blessing of God upon Noah, when he stood upon the restored earth with his saved house, was practically a repetition of the dominion given to Adam, modified by the changed circumstance (Gen. ix. 1-7).

"In the six hundred and FIRST year, in the FIRST month, the FIRST day of the month, the waters were dried from off the earth" (Gen. viii. 13).

Thus Noah and his inheritance anticipates that day when He that sits upon the throne shall say, "Behold, I make all things new", faintly suggested also by the "no more curse" of Gen. viii. 21. We have further light upon the faith that inherits in the case of Abraham, who pairs with Noah; this we must reserve for another paper. Meanwhile, let us rejoice in the fact revealed in Rom. viii. 17, "If children, then heirs; heirs of God".

#51. Abraham.
The obedience that inherits (xi. 8).
pp. 183 - 188

The association of faith and inheritance is set forth by the two great examples of Noah and Abraham. In our last example, the great contributing motives were a divine warning, a godly fear, and a preparation. Abraham's example supplies other facets of the jewel of truth.

The obedience of faith.

"By faith Abraham . . . . . obeyed." This simple statement is supplemented by illuminating clauses which we must earnestly consider.

A1 | He was called to GO OUT.
B1 | Unto a place . . . . . an inheritance.
A2 | And he WENT OUT.
B2 | Not knowing whither he went.

First let us observe, "He was called to go out . . . . . and he went out". Such is the record on the tablets of faith. Abraham's actual record is not so simple. His obedience was partial, and in stages; this we can read in Genesis. The record in Heb. xi. 8 indicates how many seasons of our lives are blanks in the roll of faith. The story of Abraham's obedience is written for our learning. Let us seek grace to be humble disciples in this school of grace. The first movement is indicated by Stephen:--

"The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Haran, and said unto him, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I will shew thee" (Acts vii. 2, 3).

The second movement is revealed in Gen. xii. 1:--

"Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee."

The third movement is given in Gen. xiii. 14, 15:--

"And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: For all the land that thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever."

The fourth and crowning movement is given in Gen. xxii. 11-18:--

"Now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from Me . . . . . in blessing I will bless thee . . . . . because thou hast obeyed my voice."

The old man.

It is very evident when we compare Acts vii. 2, 3 with Gen. xii. 1 that the Lord spoke to Abram twice. Gen. xii. adds to Acts vii. by saying not only "country" and "kindred", but "thy father's house". In the first movement, instead of leaving his father's house, we find Terah, his father, accompanying Abram.

"And Terah took Abram his son, and Lot the son of Haran his son's son, and Sarai his daughter-in-law, his sons Abram's wife; and they went forth from Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Canaan; and they came to Haran, and dwelt there" (Gen. xi. 31).

Here Abram is seen leaving his native land, and Stephen declares that "he came out of the land of the Chaldeans", but we feel a little uneasy about the presence of Terah and Lot in the face of the command "from thy kindred". Notice the failure also in the effort suggested in the words:--

"And they went forth to go into the land of Canaan; and they came to Haran, and dwelt there."

If the map is consulted it will be seen that Abram and Terah made a journey of some 600 miles, but when they stayed at Haran they were still on the wrong side of the Euphrates. The whole story is repeated at the time of the Exodus. Nothing but a "three days' journey" could satisfy the command of God, and Pharaoh, it will be remembered, tried to play the part of Terah by suggesting first that Israel should worship God "in the land", and then, this being rejected, that Israel should go "not very far off", anything except that which set forth resurrection ground. In spite of the 600 miles' journey, Abram was no nearer entering the inheritance. He must cross the river. He must become "Abram the Hebrew", the one who crossed over. This, however, could not take place while Terah lived. Stephen's words echo the doctrine of Rom. vi. when he said, "When his father was dead, he removed him into this land". Terah stand for the old man, and the old man is a hinderer. Not until we can realize that our old man has been crucified, and that we are alive unto God, can we proceed.

The flesh.

The second movement sees Abram leaving Haran and his father's house, and actually entering the land of Canaan. Then to him is made the great sevenfold covenant. Famine, however, soon puts Abram to the test. A question which perhaps cannot be answered presents itself. Had Lot not been with Abram, would Abram have stood true? The analogy of Israel in the wilderness gives light. Just as Abram took Lot with him across the Euphrates, so we read in Exod. xii. 38, "A mixed multitude went up also with them". And just as trouble with Lord and the latter's inability to resist the well watered plain of Sodom was directly connected with flocks and herds, so with this mixed multitude is enumerated "flock, herds, even very much cattle". Numb. xi. 4, 5 reveals the evil effect of this company:--

"And the mixed multitude that was among them fell a lusting, and the children of Israel ALSO . . . . . we remember the fish we did eat in EGYPT."

Famine tested Abram while Lot was with him, "And Abram went down to Egypt" (Gen. xii. 10). All this period in Egypt is so much waste of time. Abram returned with Lot (Gen. xiii. 1) unto the place of the altar which he had made there at the first, and there Abram called on the name of the Lord. Lot stands for the flesh which clogs and trips the true child of God. So far as Terah was concerned, Abram moved not from Haran until Terah was dead. With Lot, however, it was different. Abram began to realize the need of separation, and the moment the trouble arose about the flocks and the herds Abram seemed to seize the opportunity: "Separate thyself I pray thee from me" (Gen. xiii. 9). Lot "lifted up his eyes" and chose the plain of Sodom. The Lord spoke to Abram after that Lot was separated from him, "Lift up now thine eyes". Lot had lifted up his and seen Sodom. Abram, when separated from Lot, saw his inheritance. Lot pitched his tent toward Sodom—odious name! Abram removed his tent, and came and dwelt in the plain of Mamre, which is in Hebron, and built there an altar unto the Lord. Hebron means fellowship. Abram's fellowship with God was impossible while Lot remained with him. How would the Hebrews, to whom this epistle was written, understand all this? Would not some of them begin to see the need for the separation from the "Lots" of their profession? Would they not perceive the true Abrahamic spirit in the call to go outside the camp?

Faith perfected.

It was after Abram's victory (where Lot met with such humiliating defeat) that he met the high priest whose name so fills the epistle to the Hebrews (Melchisedec), and it is immediately after the meeting with Melchisedec that we arrive at the inheritance and righteousness of faith. This close association of righteousness and inheritance is a feature lost sight of by too many, for us to pass it by. Gen. xv. 6, the great passage concerning justification by faith, is introduced by Abram's question concerning his heir, and the Lord's answer concerning this is the groundwork of Abram's faith. Rom. i.-iii. lays the foundation of justification by faith, and is followed by chapter iv., which is nothing more nor less than an exposition of Gen. xv. 6. In the midst of this chapter we read:--

"The promise, that he should be the HEIR of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. For if they which are of the law are HEIRS, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect" (Rom. iv. 13, 14).

In like manner Gal. ii. and iii. conclude with the words:--

"If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise . . . . . if a son, then an heir of God through Christ . . . . . the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman" (Gal. iii. 29, iv. 1, 7, 30).

Titus iii. 7 also testifies to the same truth:--

"That being justified by His grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of aionian life."

The perfecting of Abraham's faith, however, is seen in Gen. xxii. There he not only stood before God, having left his native land, his kindred, his father's house, but he had also foregone his rights in the matter of Lot, and now he goes to the full limits and voluntarily gives his best, his beloved son in whom all the promises of God were vested. The Hebrews were exhorted to:--

"Be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience INHERIT the promises. For when God made promise to Abraham, because He could swear by no greater, He sword by Himself" (Heb. vi. 12, 13).

Abraham "patiently endured" and "obtained the promise". So, continues the epistle to these tried Hebrews:--

"Ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise" (Heb. x. 36).

James ii. 22 declares that in the offering of Isaac Abraham's faith was "perfected", brought to its true end, the key-word of Hebrews. Translated into terms of doctrine the several steps in Abraham's faith are seen to be so many approximations of the cross of Christ:--

1. The step that follow the death of Terah stands for the crucifixion of the "old man" (Rom. vi. 6).
2. The separation from Lot, and the vision that followed, with the dwelling at Hebron, the place of fellowship, stands for the crucifixion of the flesh (Gal. v. 24).

3. The repudiation of all reward from the king of Sodom "lest he should say, I have made Abraham rich", stands for the crucifixion of the world (Gal. vi. 14).
4. The offering up of Isaac, the beloved son, is the fellowship of His sufferings, the conformity to His death, which is on the one hand intimately connected with the perfecting, the prize, and the heavenly citizenship, and on the other is strongly contrasted with those who mind earthly things, and constitute themselves "enemies of the cross of Christ" (Phil. iii. 10-21; Heb. vi. 6).

So far we have traced the meaning of the statement, "By faith Abraham . . . . . obeyed". Looking to the opening paragraph of this article we see that there is another pair of statements to consider. The obedience of faith is found in A1, A2, "Go out", "He went out". As we read Heb. xi. 8 it might appear that the fact that Abraham knew all about the inheritance enabled him to step out in faith. "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed." This, however, is not the meaning. When he obeyed he did not have the inheritance so definitely revealed, for the verse continues, "and he went out, not knowing whither he went". This brings Abraham into line with the other examples of faith. "Faith is the substance . . . . . of things not seen". Noah was warned of the things not seen as yet. Abraham knew that he was to go into a land of the Lord's providing, and he knew that it was to be his inheritance, but the revelation of that inheritance grew with his obedience.

Is there no parallel experience suggested in Eph. i. 18? "That ye may know what is . . . . . the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints." Is there no parallel in I Cor. ii. 9, 10? We shall learn presently that Abraham received a higher call and a fuller revelation that eclipsed the original inheritance of the land, but this we must deal with in its true place. For the time being we must stop. The thread is taken up in the record of the next pair, Isaac and Jacob.

Let us not set aside this word "obey". True we are of faith, true we are not under law, but under grace, true we are sons, not servants. Does this mean that obedience, the obedience of faith, is not for us? "Though HE were a Son, yet learned He obedience . . . . . all them that obey Him" (Heb. v. 8, 9). The words obedience and obey mean "to hear with submission". It is translated simply "hearken" in Acts xii. 13. It is incipient in Heb. iii., iv. in the words, "To-day if ye will hear His voice". Faith comes out of hearing (Rom. x. 17), and the obedience of faith is simply that hearing continued throughout the walk of life.

The Man Christ Jesus.

#1. Jesus Christ come in the flesh.
pp. 81 - 84

We have in a recent Volume of The Berean Expositor reviewed the testimony of Scripture on the subject of the deity of Christ. We propose to take up the teaching of the same Scriptures concerning the humanity of Christ.

It is not our intention to speculate upon the question as to how Christ could be both God and man, for we have not the faintest idea. We do believe that we know why God became man, at least in one important particular, and that is explained by the Kinsman-Redeemer. Without therefore attempting things beyond our scope, we believe that the strong emphasis which we have placed upon the deity of Christ demands an equally strong emphasis upon His humanity.

The denial of antichrist.

Antichristian teaching denies both the deity and the humanity of Christ. It denies the deity, for it ascribes divine honour to "The man of sin" (II Thess. ii. 4), and it denies the humanity, as the following Scriptures show:--

> "Every spirit that confesseth Jesus Christ to have come in the flesh is of God, and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: And this is that spirit of antichrist whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world" (I John iv. 2, 3).
>
> "For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not Jesus Christ coming in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist" (II John i. 7).

The word used in I John iv. 2 for "is come" is in the prefect tense, and refers to the past.

The word used in II John i. 7 for "coming" is the present participle. The antichristian denial therefore is twofold. It denies that Christ did come, or will come in the flesh. It goes without saying therefore that true scriptural confession will believe that Christ did come and will come in the flesh. Yes as we say these words we wonder whether there are not many of God's children whose conceptions of the resurrection and future life are so beclouded that they have practically reduced the state of glory to that of an abode of phantoms. Some seem at least to need the words of Christ repeated again to them:--

> "Behold My hands and My feet, that it is I Myself; handle Me and see; for a spirit (some read 'a phantom') hath not flesh and bones, as ye see Me have" (Luke xxiv. 39).

Scripture reveals that there is not only a "natural body", but also a "spiritual body" (I Cor. xv. 44, 45). The first body is connected with Adam who was made a living soul, for the word "natural" is the word psuchikon, from the word "soul" (psuche). The second body is connected with the risen Christ, the last Adam, Who is a "life giving Spirit". In order to go step by step with the Scriptures, and leave nothing assumed, we must not go on into other departments of this truth before we have seen just what Scripture says concerning "Jesus Christ come in the flesh".

The Word became flesh.

> "And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth" (John i. 14).

We have quoted from the A.V., but must draw attention to the omission of the article in this verse. Literally we must read, "A glory as of an only begotten from a father", and the teaching is that the glory that John beheld was just such a glory as one would associate with such a begettal, and such a father. Moreover, the word translated "only begotten" is clearly connected with "becoming flesh". John's other references to the "only begotten" are John i. 18; iii. 16, 18; I John iv. 9. The last reference takes us back to the passage already considered, namely, the antichristian denial that Christ came in the flesh. Luke uses the word three times, vii. 12; viii. 42; ix. 38, and in each case it means literally an only child. Heb. xi. 17 completes the references, and uses the word of Isaac.

It will be seen that the word cannot have reference to the period before the Word became flesh, but that the title "only begotten" must be taken strictly literally. To tamper with the literal begettal, birth, and humanity of the Lord Jesus Christ is to tamper with the foundations of our faith. Several issues arise here to tempt us aside, but we shall do more service by dealing with one feature at a time.

> "His Son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead" (Rom. i. 3, 4).

The focal points of this passage are the terms, "according to the flesh", and "according to the spirit". The Son of God according to the flesh was of the seed of David. The resurrection marked Him off as the Son of God with power, and that according to His holy spirit, which made it impossible for death to hold Him, or for Him to see corruption.

> "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh" (Rom. viii. 3).

The inability of the law was because of the weakness of the flesh. In dealing with the expression "the likeness of sin's flesh" we must beware of putting out a hand to save the ark of God. That ark at the moment is the sinlessness of Christ. Scripture declares "He knew no sin". Let us not, therefore, because we fear for the doctrine of the sinlessness of Christ, so emphasize the word "likeness" as to make it amount to unreality. A parallel passage is Phil. ii. 7, where we read, "and was made in the likeness of men". His flesh and blood humanity was real but sinless. Therefore the passage does not say "sinful flesh" as the A.V., but "sin's flesh", the flesh which in all the sons of Adam had become the instrument of sin.

> "Whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, Who is over all, God blessed for the ages. Amen" (Rom. ix. 5).

Omitting for the time II Cor. v. 16 and Eph. ii. 15 as demanding too long an argument to assign their true connection with our theme, we pass to:--

> "In the body of His flesh through death, to present you holy and unblameable and unreproveable in His sight" (Col. i. 22).
> "Great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh" (I Tim. iii. 16).

After a long search into the question of the readings "God was manifest", "Who was manifest", and "which was manifest", which search includes the latest evidence of the camera, revealing letters and marks no longer visible to the eye, we have come to the conclusion that the A.V. presents the true reading. If a sufficient number of readers would appreciate the demonstration we would gladly devote a number of the magazine to this debateable point, but we rather fear that so highly technical a subject would be appreciated but by the few.

> "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same, that through death He might destroy . . . . . and deliver" (Heb. ii. 14, 15).
>
> "Who in the days of His flesh, when He had offered up prayers and supplications . . . . . was heard for His piety" (Heb. v. 7).
>
> "By a new and living way . . . . . through the veil, that is to say, His flesh" (Heb. x. 20).
>
> "Christ . . . . . being put to death in the flesh" (I Pet. iii. 18).
>
> "Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh" (I Pet. iv. 1).

Such is the testimony of the Scriptures to the truth which lies at the basis of redemption, viz., Jesus Christ has come, and will come in the flesh. Other aspects of this theme we hope to present in subsequent articles.

#2. The last Adam, the one Mediator.
pp. 124 - 126

In our last paper we considered the testimony of Scripture as to the fact that "the Word became flesh", and in dealing with Rom. viii. 3, "the likeness of the flesh of sin", we made a comparison with Phil. ii. 7, "in likeness of men". Let us therefore observe the teaching of Scripture with reference to the word "man" as used of Christ. This witness must be divided into three parts, (1) The Lord's own testimony to Himself; (2) The testimony of those who knew Him; (3) The testimony of the apostles.

> "Man shall not live by bread alone" (Matt. iv. 4; Luke iv. 4).
> "A man that hath told you the truth" (John viii. 40).

These are the two passages that come under the first heading. In the Lord's own estimation he was a man who depended upon the Father, and He was a man Who had been sent by the Father to speak the truth.

Under the second heading we have the testimony of both friend and foe:--

> "A gluttonous man" (Matt. xi. 19; Luke vii. 34).
> "I know not the man" (Matt. xxvi. 72, 74; Mark xiv. 71).
> "No fault in this man" (Luke xxiii. 4, 14).
> "A righteous man" (Luke xxiii. 47).
> "Never man spake like this man" (John vii. 46).
> "Doth our law judge any man" (John vii. 51).
> "A man that is called Jesus" (John ix. 11).
> "This man is not of God . . . . . this man is a sinner" (John ix. 16, 24).
> "Thou, being a man" (John x. 33).
> "This man doeth many miracles" (John xi. 47).
> "That one man should die for the people" (John xi. 50; xviii. 14).
> "One of this man's disciples" (John xviii. 17).
> "What accusation bring ye against this man?" (John xviii. 29).
> "Behold the man!" (John xix. 5).
> "This man's blood" (Acts v. 28).

In these references no doctrinal utterance is found except that of the Pharisees in their attempt to browbeat the man who had been born blind (John ix.), and even in these cases the manhood of the Lord is never questioned, but only His mission, His relation to sin, and His relation to God. Some misunderstood His free intercourse with publicans and sinners, while some marvelled at the manner and matter of His message. He was looked upon as a man that could die, as a man that could be judged, and Pilate concludes the list of references in the Gospels by saying, "Behold the man".

The references in the third series are those that are used in the epistles. We find six occurrences of the word anthropos, and one of aner. It may be as well to remark that anthropos is the name of the species without reference to sex, for while individually "a man" could not mean "a woman", anthropos covers humanity, and includes both sexes and all ages. Aner on the contrary means an adult male person, and is often translated husband.

Aner.

"Ye men of Israel . . . . . Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God' (Acts ii. 22).

Anthropos.

"By one man, Jesus Christ"(Rom. v. 15).
"By man came also the resurrection" (I Cor. xv. 21).
"The second man is the Lord from heaven´(I Cor. xv. 47).
"In the likeness of men" (Phil. ii. 7).
"In fashion as a man" (Phil. ii. 8).
"The man Christ Jesus" (I Tim. ii.5).

These doctrinal passages confirm the testimony of those who were eye witnesses and contemporaries, and illuminate the necessity of the Lord's humanity. [Users of Young's Analytical Concordance should see whether their edition contains a misquotation in Rom. v. 15 under Man (anthropos), as some editions quote the wrong half of the verse]. The references in Romans and I Corinthians set forth the Lord as "the second man and the last Adam". It is noteworthy that in Paul's early epistles he speaks of the Lord as man only in the two epistles in which he speaks of Adam. In the epistles written after Acts xxviii. Adam is not mentioned, but the emphasis seems to be that of mediation. Note I Tim. ii. 5 in full:--

"For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and MEN, THE MAN Christ Jesus."

In this one verse the whole problem of the Lord's deity and humanity is solved.

GOD MEN
|_____THE MEDIATOR_____|
Who is both GOD and MAN.

For God to meet man the mediator must be divine; for man to meet God the mediator must be human. The problem of sin, death, resurrection, redemption, and atonement are all solved in the Mediator, "the Man Christ Jesus".

#3. The Son.
"The Word became flesh."
"The second man is from heaven."
pp. 145 - 149

We turn our attention to the titles of the Lord which speak of His Sonship. We find this title "Son" distributed under the following sub-headings: Son; Beloved Son; Son of God; Son of the Highest; Son of David; Son of Abraham; Son of man; Only begotten Son; Son of Joseph; and Son of Mary. The title "The Son" without further qualification is used many times by the Lord Himself. For example:--

> "If the Son therefore shall make you free" (John viii. 36).
> "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (Matt. xxviii. 19).

It is not possible however from such passages to decide just exactly what is intended by the title, and therefore we must allow the remaining titles that carry explanatory additions to help us. Coming to the human parents of the Lord we find the following important fact. Christ is spoken of as the Son of both Mary and of Joseph, but with such clear distinctions that never allow the reader to misunderstand the meaning of the term. Let us first consider the Sonship of Christ as connected with Mary.

> "Now the begetting of Jesus Christ was thus. When as His mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost" (Matt. i. 18).

The Companion Bible comments on this verse as follows:--

> "Now; or, But, in contrast with those mentioned in vv. 2-16. Render: The begetting, then, of Jesus Christ was on this wise (for after His mother was espoused to Joseph [before they came together] she was found with child) of pneuma hagion."

Here we have the first of a series of features concerning the Sonship of Christ that we must notice. He was begotten of pneuma hagion, holy spirit. Luke i. 31-35 must be read in order to obtain all the evidence written: "Thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a Son, and shalt call His name JESUS." The language is uncompromisingly plain; so plain that Mary was troubled; so literal that she did not give two thoughts to a figurative interpretation of the words: "Then said Mary unto the angel, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?" The answer is in line with the passage in Matt. i.:--

> "Pnuema hagion (holy spirit, power from on high) shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee, therefore that holy Thing that shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God" (Luke i. 35).

This passage moreover enables us to understand another important feature of the Sonship of the Saviour. "The power of the Highest" is placed in correspondence with "pneuma hagion". In verse 32 the angel had said: "He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest", and in verse 35, "He shall be called the Son of God". Now there can be no possible doubt but that the "Highest" stands here in the relation of Father, and the relation of Father in the sense that Mary was the mother. This being so, the title Son of God must not be taken to assert Deity, but must be held to refer to the Lord as the Son of Mary His mother, and of God His Father by the operation of pneuma hagion.

A passage in John i. must now be noticed. The thirteenth verse reads: "which were born", and refers to "those that believe on His name". Antecedent to any extant manuscript there is found in the writings of the Fathers the reading "Who" instead of "which". This is not accidental, for Tertullian develops an argument on the subject, and charges the Gnostics with altering the original. If this testimony is to be accepted, verse 13 supplies another link in the chain—a negative one:-- > "Who was begotten, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

Bringing together the two features that we have seen, we find the Lord (1) was begotten by pneuma hagion = spirit, and (2) was not begotten of blood, nor flesh, nor man.

Before we pass on to the birth of Christ, it will be proper to note how the scripture assures us that Joseph had no part in the matter. How did he act? As soon as it became evident that Mary was about to become a mother, his one thought was that she must be "put away". Being a "kind" man, for such is often the O.T. meaning of the word, he was minded to take the merciful course, and put her away privately. The law that governed Joseph's action is painfully plain as a reference to Deut. xxii. 22 will prove. Joseph's qualms are stilled by the message of an angel, saying:--

> "Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife, for that which is conceived in her is of pneuma hagion, and she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call His name JESUS: for He shall save His people from their sins. Now ALL THIS was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, behold, THE VIRGIN shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call His name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us."

Joseph is directed to the prophecy of Isaiah, and to the birth of Christ as its fulfillment. The Hebrew word in Isa. vii. 14 for virgin is almah, and is a wider term than our word "virgin", although it includes it. The Greek word parthenos, however, does mean a virgin in its strictest sense, and consequently settles for us the meaning of Isa. vii. 14.

If the begettal of the Son is proved to be supernatural, the birth is found to be normal. So careful is Scripture to make this plain that we dare not shirk the exposition. Let us go back a little. Luke i. tells us of Zacharias and his wife Elizabeth, and that they had no children. Then an angel reveals to Zacharias that his wife, though old, should have a son. Luke i. 24-27 says, "And after those days his wife Elizabeth conceived and hid herself five months . . . . . and in the sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from God . . . . . to a virgin", and announces to her that she of all women has been highly favoured, and should be the mother of the Christ. In order to strengthen Mary's faith, God in His condescension bade Gabriel to say: "And behold, thy cousin Elizabeth, she (emphatic) hath also conceived a son in her old age: and this is the sixth month with her, who was called barren" (verse 36). With this encouragement we can fully appreciate the fact that Mary went to her cousin for asylum during the waiting time: "And Mary abode with her about three months, and returned to her own house" (verse 56). The reason why the stay with Elizabeth could be no longer protracted is because Elizabeth's "full time" had come. Then came the decree of Caesar that compelled Joseph and Mary to make the journey to Bethlehem, and we are told that:--

> "Mary, his espoused wife, was great with child, and so it was, that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered, and she brought forth her firstborn Son" (Luke ii. 5-7).

It is evident that Mary went the full time before the child was born. He was in the fullest sense "made of a woman" though not begotten of man. We do not feel that words could be more plain to teach the fact of the Virgin birth, and the divine begettal of the Son of God. To this, and to this alone, refer the words "The only begotten Son". When the Word became flesh, men beheld the glory as of an only begotten of a father, but never before. Men had beheld His glory long before His birth at Bethlehem, and John himself tells us so (John xii. 41), but when Isaiah saw the Lord high and lifted up in the temple, he saw not the same glory that John was permitted to behold. We have seen the teaching of Scripture concerning both the divine begettal and the human birth of the Son, and thereby understand how He could be called Emmanuel, God with us, and how He could be, though very man of flesh and blood, entirely disconnected from any taint of sin or corruption inherited from Adam. In other words, we have been permitted to look into the inner meaning of the primal prophecy, and have beheld "The seed of the woman".

There is a passage which speaks of Christ as the Son of Joseph. There are four altogether, but three are the expression of human and popular opinion. The one that calls for attention is that of Luke iii. 23. The Lord Jesus had gone to be baptized of John in Jordan, and there had been publicly acknowledged from heaven in the words, "Thou art My beloved Son; in Thee I am well pleased". The Lord was now about thirty years of age. He was the Son of God at His birth as we have seen, but this public recognition sets Him forth as the Son. While the genealogy of Matt. i. leads up to the birth of Christ, the genealogy of Luke iii. leads off from the public announcement of Christ.

The whole crux of the matter lies in the word translated "as was supposed". Nomizo means to reckon in law. Matthew's genealogy gives the Sonship of Christ by nature; Luke gives the Sonship in law. There is no ambiguity in the words of Matt. i. 16, that "Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary", nor that Jacob's father was Matthan, and so back to Solomon the son of David (Matt. i. 7). It is equally true that Joseph was the son of Heli, and so back to Nathan the son of David. Now it is positively impossible for both Nathan and Solomon, two sons of David, to be the forefather of Joseph, but the whole thing is explained by the words "in law". By marriage to Mary Joseph became the son-in-law of Heli before the child was born (Luke ii. 5), and thus all the problems arising out of the connection with Adam's corruption or Coniah's curse are set aside, and every prophecy concerning the promised Seed finds its goal in Christ.

See how perfect Scripture is. It never calls the Lord the Son of Adam. No, He is: (1) The Seed of the woman (Gen. iii. 15); (2) The Seed or Son of Abraham (Gal. iii. 16; Matt. i. 1); and (3) The Seed or Son of David (Rom. i. 3; Matt. i. 1). Such is the testimony of the Word. Begotten of the Father, of the Highest, by pneuma hagion, not of blood, neither the will of the flesh or man, but of God. Born of a virgin, in fulfillment of O.T. prophecy. Perfectly formed and fashioned as a man, He came into the world in the body prepared for Him (Heb. x. 5), to do the will of God as the Seed of the woman, the Seed of Abraham, and the Seed of David.

His title "Son of man" means that He was very man, the representative man. This title will occur in other studies, and therefore we will not embark upon its investigation here. If our hearts are moved as we contemplate the overwhelming fact that our Saviour is God manifest in the flesh, are not our hearts equally moved at the great kenosis, the condescension that did not abhor the virgin's womb, but was made flesh and tabernacled among us, lived for us, suffered for us, and at last died for us? The name of the Lord be magnified.

#4. The Apostle of apostles.
pp. 178 - 183

The heading of this article, "The Man Christ Jesus", and its sub-heading, "The Apostle of apostles", may strike the reader as somewhat incongruous. Scripture indicates Peter as "the chiefest of the apostles", and Paul as being "not one whit behind" in his office as the apostle to the Gentiles. Let us not forget, however, that both Peter and Paul were ministers of Christ. While Peter was equipped as the apostle of the circumcision, and Paul as the apostle of the uncircumcision, the Lord they represented was the Apostle of both Jew and Gentile, the Savoiur and Head of all that call upon Him.

The propriety of the title "Apostle" as applied to the Lord may be questioned by some, as we have been surprised to find well-taught believers who seem to have no knowledge of its existence. The title is found in Heb. iii. 1:--

> "Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus."

We are apt to limit the term "The Anointed" or "The Christ" to the three offices of Prophet, Priest, and King. Have we ever stopped to think that had the Lord never been the Apostle, no other office could have been held? The essential meaning of the word Apostle is "The Sent One", and the Lord as High Priest could never have gone back to God had He not first of all come from God. Inasmuch as every good and perfect gift cometh from above, inasmuch as the gospel, salvation, peace, and life, are all "of God", it is absolutely essential that whosoever shall bring that gospel, accomplish that salvation, make that peace, and restore that life shall be sent from God too. Therefore we see that in this office, as the Man Christ Jesus, He has the pre-eminence.

We have given unstinted precedence in these pages to the claims of the apostle Paul, but never to the exclusion or the eclipsing of the One who Paul so lovingly and so faithfully represented. He who is King of kings and Lord of lords; He whose Priesthood transcends Aaron's; in all things He has the pre-eminence.

The Apostle and High Priest.

These two titles practically cover the record of the Gospel according to John. Most readers know that this Gospel is divided into two parts. The first occupying chapters i.-xii., and the second xiii.-xxi. The first section is concerned with the outer ministry of the Lord; the second is occupied with the Lord's more private ministry among His own. The first section manifests the Lord as the "Sent One"; the second prepares us for His return to God. The Gospel that so strongly emphasizes the Lord as the "sent", records the passages which reveals that the Lord "went to God", long before the visible ascent from the Mount of Olives: "Jesus saith unto her, Touch Me not; for I am not yet ascended to My Father" (John xx. 17). Eight days after the same Lord could say to Thomas: "Reach hither thy finger . . . . . and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side" (John xx. 27).

The double title of Apostle and High Priest is suggested in the opening of chapter xiii., the second section of the Gospel:--

> "When Jesus knew that His hour was come that He should depart out of this world unto the Father . . . . . and that He was come from God, and went to God" (John xiii. 1-3).

Seeing therefore that the office of Apostle, or the "Sent One" is so important, and takes precedence over all other aspects and phases of His ministry, let us turn to the Scriptures to learn something of this neglected but vital feature.

The Sent One.

The Gospel according to John contains more occurrences than any other of the two words translated "to send", viz., apostello = "to send forth", and pempo = "to send". From chapter iii. to chapter xx. it is safe to say that every section speaks of the Lord as the Sent One in some vital sense, and directly connected with the argument. Let us follow this and learn as we go. John iii. 17 focuses the Lord's words to Nicodemus, and runs on as an immediate extension of John iii. 16:--

> "For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved."

Here is the first object stated, Salvation. Not condemn but save, or, as John iii. 16 teaches, not perish but have everlasting life. This connection with John iii. 16 moreover reveals that the word "sent" embraces all those passages where the Lord is said to "come" and the Father is said to "give". Truly a fulness dwells in this word. The next section deals with the relationship that existed between Christ and His forerunner John the Baptist:--

> "He must increase, but I must decrease. He that cometh from above is above all . . . . . He Whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto Him" (John iii. 25-36).

This second statement shows the full enduement of our great Apostle for Service. Another aspect of the service of the Sent One is exhibited in John iv. 4: "He must needs go through Samaria." Why? The woman wondered why, the disciples marvelled, but the Lord revealed why He must needs go through Samaria.

> "His disciples prayed Him, saying, Master, eat . . . . . Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me" (John iv. 31-34).

Here, then, is revealed His great unseen Sustenance. The next set of occurrences is connected with one of the great signs of John's Gospel—the healing of the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda. The outcome of the opposition that this miracle brought to the surface is expressed by the words, "He said also that God was His Father, making Himself equal with God" (John v. 18). To this the Lord replied: "The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do" (verse 19), and, after showing that this extended to judgment and equal honour, focuses the argument in the words:--

> "He that honoureth not the Son honoureth not the Father which hath setn Him . . . . . He that heareth My word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life" (John v. 23, 24).

Here we have demonstrated the true "equality" of the Son with the Father. The centurion who said "I also am a man under authority", recognized the full power of the Lord as "The Sent One", and manifested a faith that had not been seen in all Israel (Matt. viii. 5-13). The Lord proceeds to the great power of resurrection. This authority is given Him because He is the Son of man, the Sent One.

> "I can of Mine own self do nothing . . . . . I seek not Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me" (John v. 30).

Here in this divine sending is the Lord's Authority. Next comes the Lord's appeal to the Witness that He had:--

> "I have a greater witness than that of John, for the works that the Father hath given Me to finish, the same works that I do bear witness of Me that the Father hath sent Me, and the Father Himself, which hath sent Me, hath borne witness of Me . . . . . and ye have not His word abiding in you: for Whom He hath sent, Him ye believe not" (John v. 36-38).

Both the witness of the Father and the Word of God testify of Christ, and the Lord's indictment was: "And ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life" (verse 40). Chapter vi. is devoted to the feeding of the five thousand with five loaves and two small fishes, and the subsequent teaching given by the Lord concerning Himself. Rebuking the people because they followed Him merely because of "loaves and fishes", He said, "Work not for the meat that perisheth". They reply: "What shall we do that we may work the works of God?" to which the Lord answers:--

> "This (great miracle) is the work of God, with the object that ye believe on Him Whom He hath sent" (John vi. 26-35).

Here Christ is set forth as the Bread of Life. Again the Lord testifies that He came to do the will of Him that sent Him, and explains that will as comprising the eternal security of everyone given to Him, and their resurrection at the last day (John vi. 38-47). In these verses the Lord uses the word "sent" five times, and emphasizes the "will of Him that sent Him" as issuing in Resurrection Life, the manward side being expressed by "believing" and "eating", believing the Sent One being symbolically expressed as eating the sent bread from heaven.

In chapter vii. we find the Jews marvelling at the knowledge exhibited by the Lord, and to this the Lord replies, "My doctrine is not Mine, but His that sent Me", and declares that He sought only the glory of Him that sent Him (John vii. 16-18). Here we have the source of the Lord's Doctrine. The fact of His rejection becomes patent, and the Lord cries out in the temple:--

> "I am not come of Myself, but He that sent Me is true, Whom ye know not . . . . .yet a little while . . . . . and I go unto Him that sent Me" (John vii. 28-33).

Here, in spite of all opposition and rejection, the Lord rests His claim and His Commission. We will not pursue this throughout the book. The reader can continue the study for himself. To help all to do so we give the remaining occurrences of both apostello and pempo:-- > Apostello.—John viii. 42; ix. 7; x. 36; xi. 3, 42; xvii. 3, 8, 18, 21, 23, 25; xx. 21.

> Pempo.—John viii. 16, 18, 26, 29; ix. 4; xii. 44, 45, 49; xiii. 16, 20; xiv. 24; xv. 21, 26; xvi. 5.

Two passages perhaps demand notice by reason of their importance. The first is a note in chapter ix. It speaks of the healing of the man born blind, and in verse 7 at the command, "Go, wash in the pool in Siloam", the writer adds the suggestive comment, "Which is by interpretation, Sent". Even the pool of Siloam is made to yield its typical teaching. John xvii. is the other chapter that demands attention. The Lord is here about to enter into the second phase of His great work. His work as the apostle is seen as drawing to a close, and His High Priestly work is about to begin. The standpoint of the great prayer of this chapter is expressed in the words of verses 4 and 11:--

> "I have glorified Thee on earth: I have finished the work Thou gavest Me to do . . . . . I am no more in the world, and I come to Thee."

This is but continuing the key note given in chapter xiii. 3, "Jesus knowing . . . . . that He was come from God and went to God". The first occurrence of the word "sent" in John xvii. is in verse 3:--

> "And this is life eternal, that they may know Thee the only true god, and Jesus Christ Whom Thou hast sent."

This is the great covering reference, the six remaining occurrences dealing with the fact of the Lord being Sent One, and its relation to the believer and the world.

"Sent" in John xvii.

A | 3. Life by believing.
a | 8. The disciples believe.
b | 18. As the Lord.
| 18. So the disciples.
b | 21. Unity—world believe.
| 23. Unity—world know.
a | 25. The disciples knew.

If we doubted the importance of the fact that the Lord was the Sent One before, the place that it occupies in this solemn prayer must surely convince us. He could not be a Redeemer or a Priest apart from being a partaker of flesh and blood, and to partake of flesh and blood He must be the Sent One. We cannot leave this subject without a glance at John's first Epistle. There, in chapter iv., the sending of the Son is the great manifestation of the love of God:--

> "In this was manifested the love of God towards us, because that God sent His only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through Him . . . . . He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins . . . . . we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the son to be the Saviour of the world" (verses 9-14).

Here are life, propitiation, and salvation arising out of love, and manifested in the sending of the Son.

In conclusion let us ask ourselves, What wait we for? Setting aside the fact that the hope of the Church of the One body differs in detail from the hope of Israel, it is one with all the redeemed of whatever calling in that it is centred in the coming, or the revelation, or the manifestation of the Lord Himself. He was sent to be King, but He was rejected. God in His grace condescends to send Him the second time. "Repent ye therefore . . . . . and He shall send Jesus Christ" (Acts iii. 19, 20) may well summarize the position of all with regard to the realization of our hope. Blessed be God, He did not withdraw His mercy because of the rejection of His Son. He who was sent once to suffer and to die, shall be sent again. He who went back to God with no crown but that of thorns shall as a result of the second sending gather up all crowns, dominions, and thrones into one universal kingdom, that it may be laid at the feet of the Father, in order "that God may be all in all".

"Wherefore . . . . . consider the Apostle, ... of our profession."

The Ministry of Consolation.

#22. Sympathy.
pp. 59 - 61

The word sympathy does not occur in the A.V., but that is not to say that it does not occur in Scripture. Sympathy is a Greek word in English dress, and is composed of sun = "with", and pathein = "to suffer". The LXX uses the word in Job xxix. 25, and the version of Symmachus uses it in Job ii. 11. Before turning to the N.T. it will help us to take a note of these passages in Job:--

> "Now when Job's three friends heard of all this evil that was come upon him, they came every one from his own place . . . . . for they had made an appointment together to come and mourn with him and to comfort him" (Job ii. 11).

Here is sympathy. They came not only to comfort, but to share—"to mourn with him", sym-pathy—"suffer or feel together". Further, they had the grace to keep their sympathy in its right place, they did not obtrude. They did not come blustering into Job's grief, slap him on the back and cry, "Cheerio!" It has been said that the pessimist is he that is obliged to live with an optimist. These friends of Job seeing that his grief was great sympathized with him:--

> "So they sat down with him upon ground seven days and seven nights, and none spake a word unto him; for they saw that his grief was very great" (ii. 13).

Yet they failed; "miserable comforters are ye all" is Job's protest (xvi. 2). Wherein did these worthy men fail? If we examine the utterances of these three friends we shall find the fly in the ointment of their sympathy was that they could not refrain from lecturing Job, from giving the benefit of their experience, from exasperating the facts of his sorrow with their unfelt theories. Eliphaz's lecture is an expansion of the principle that no innocent man can perish, that he who sows evil must reap it. The beauty and the superficial truth of his speech is spoiled by the assumption that Job must have sinned in secret. This was but added gall to Job's bitterness (iv. & v.). Job in his reply in vi. & vii. likens his friends to a dried up brook, and speaks feelingly upon their lack of sympathetic understanding:--

> "Do ye reprove by fast'ning on my words,
> When one in sheer despair (at random) speaks
> Like to the wind?" (vi. 26)

Human nature is much the same in all ages.

> "I then, all smarting with my wounds being cold,
> To be so pestered with a popinjay,
> Out of my grief and my impatience,
> Answered neglectingly, I know not what;
> He should, or he should not . . . . .

* * * * * * *

And I beseech you let not his report
Come current for an accusation.
Betwixt my love and your high majesty" (King Henry IV).

Both the patient Jobs and the impatient Hotspurs of our acquaintance need sympathetic treatment if we would speak the word in season. Bildad and Zophar but follow Eliphaz in stirring up rebellion where they might have soothed and calmed. They brought their dead theories up against Job's living experience and failed. Job himself in the days of his affluence had been a royal sympathizer.

"'Twas mine to choose their way, and sit as chief;
As king among his subjects so I dwelt;
And among mourners as a comforter" (Job xxix. 25).

Here the LXX uses the word sympathy. Turning to the N.T. we find sumpatheo in Heb. iv. 15; x. 34; and sumpathes in I Pet. iii.8. The great high priest who has passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, in all His greatness knows by experience the pilgrim pathway.

"For we have not an high priest who cannot sympathise with our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, apart from fin" (Heb. iv. 15).

Christ is the true sympathizer.

"For in that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succour them that are tempted" (Heb. ii. 18).

Note how truly sympathetic this is. It does not say He is able to succour because He is Divine, because He is the Saviour, or even because He is High Priest, but because He Himself hath suffered being tempted. In Heb. x. 34, 35 we have sympathizers ranking with those who endured a great fight, and who lived by faith:--

"Ye became companions of them that were so used, for ye had sympathy with those in bonds."

Some passed through active conflict for the truth, others "sympathized", silently stood with them, outwardly perhaps escaping the suffering, inwardly sharing and supporting those who were afflicted.

Have you a dear one, one for whom you pray, who at present does not enjoy the fullness of blessing that you have received? Are your overtures resented, do you often feel sore wounded by their refusal to hear or consider? Have you ever stopped to review your own attitude? Are you riding rough shod? Are you giving all "doctrine" and little "practice"? Perhaps the one thing needful is a little sympathy. Where crude doctrine may repel, a loving word, a kindly thought, a sympathetic act, look, or silence may break the barrier. You may be a wife, a husband, a lover, a parent, a child. Go out of your way to seek to understand the point of view of the other. Put yourself in their shoes, view the truth and your own actions from their point of view. Let us remember the present office of the Lord Jesus, and let His great sympathy be our inspiration. "Thy condescension hath made me great" (Psa. xviii. 35).

#23. Earthen vessels.
p. 79

One of the consolations of Scripture for the servant of God is the fact that the Lord Who uses us, knows us, and while sin is never excused, or slackness condoned, it is a consolation to read, "He knoweth our frame, He remebereth that we are dust"—a knowledge and a remembrance sometimes lacking among His people. It is for our help that Scripture draws our attention to the fact that "Elias was a man subject to like passions (or infirmities) as we are" (James v. 17). Elijah who confronted the king, who dared the whole priesthood of Baal, who prayed and with his prayer closed the heavens for three-and-a-half years, was nevertheless mortal, fallible, and feeble in himself. Scripture not only records his daring, but as faithfully records his flight and his despair.

Abraham for his faith received the enviable title, "The friend of God" (James ii. 23), yet who does not remember Abraham's journey to Egypt, his equivocation concerning Sarah? These things are recorded alongside of that most marvelous act of faith and simple obedience, viz., the offering of Isaac (Gen. xxii.). David, the man after God's own heart, the sweet singer of Israel, type of His greater Son, and victor of Goliath, has left for all time that confession of sin that we now call Psalm li; truly a man of like passions as we are!

#23. (contd.). Earthen vessels.
p. 94

Paul, chosen vessel that he was, who could say with all good conscience, "for me to live is Christ", was a man as we are. When not defending his "office" he is careful never to magnify himself. He had a treasure it is true, but that treasure was contained in an earthen vessel. He had received a commission higher than had ever been given to man, yet in the midst of its acknowledgment he says, "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given" (Eph. iii. 8), and lest he should be exalted above measure, by reason of the abundance of revelations he had received, he had a thorn in the flesh, a messenger of Satan sent to buffet him.

Neither Elijah, nor Abraham, nor David, nor Paul give the least warrant for trading upon our conscious weakness, nor for excusing our slightest fall, but they do, in the midst of much frailty and weakness, give us heart to continue rejoicing that God has not only called Himself "The Holy One of ISRAEL", but also, blessed be His name, "The God of JACOB".

#24. Ourselves.
pp. 94, 95

There are several passages in Paul's second epistle to the Corinthians where he speaks very emphatically about ourselves. The first passage is introduced as a "ministry of consolation", for God is called "The God of all comfort", and Paul says that both his affliction and his consolation are for our benefits (II Cor. ii. 4-7).

> "For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that we despaired even of life: But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves; but in God which raiseth the dead" (II Cor. i. 8, 9).

Paul was brought very low, but the object was glorious, his trust in himself died, and he learned something of "the power of his resurrection". What was true in the wide experience of his life, was true in the narrower experience of his ministry:--

> "Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God" (II Cor. iii. 5).

The passage goes on to show that the sphere of Paul's ministry was in resurrection power, "spirit", "life", "glory". Yet again in II Cor. iv. 5 he says:--

> "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord, and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake."

To these same Corinthians the apostle had said:--

> "Who then is Paul, but a minister by whom ye believed?" (I Cor. iii. 5).
> "Was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" (I Cor. i. 13).

Once more, in II Cor. x. 12, he says:--

> "For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves: but they, measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise."

Paul's one standard of measurement was the will of God, all boastful comparisons he set aside, and so should we. Here are lessons for us that should help. Let us not trust in ourselves, but in God that raiseth the dead. Let us not think that we have any sufficiency of ourselves, but let us gladly acknowledge that our sufficiency is of God. Let us preach

Christ, as Lord, and ourselves as servants for Jesus' sake, and finally, let us be neither downcast nor elated by comparing ourselves with ourselves, but leaving all judgment until "that day" (I Cor. iv. 4, 5), let us seek closer conformity to the only standard that matters, the will and word of God.

#24. Sympathy.
pp. 156, 157

We have looked at the subject of sympathy as exhibited to others. Shall we just look at the way in which a truly sympathetic nature must be developed. If we have grasped the meaning of the word we shall know that no amount of reading or study can give us this priceless Christ-like thing, for it means "suffering together".

Have we not felt at times how impossible it has been for a big healthy man, tanned by sun and wind, with never an ache or a pain, to have real sympathy with the delicate invalid, the sufferer from chronic headache, the one whose nerves are all on end, whose digestion makes life a burden. He may give kindly words, but however well intended we can sense the one fact that renders them of little value—he has never suffered. When we reach out to Christ for sympathy as we fall into this or that trial along the way, we know that His words will not be of the unfeeling variety, but that when we tell Him our griefs He knows. Well then, this has a bearing upon ourselves. If we seek a life all sunshine, all roses, with no clouds, no thorns, we are but seeking a life of self. We are avoiding the opportunity of helping our fellow-members in their time of trouble. Paul gives full expression to this secret process in II Cor. i. 3-5:--

> "Blessed by God . . . . . Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, BY THE COMFORT wherewith we ourselves are comforted OF GOD. For as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ."

Paul had been taught many things by revelation, but it was necessary that he should himself be in tribulation, and have an abounding share of the sufferings of Christ, before he could be the channel of the comfort of God. Paul could not minister comfort by passing on a mere recipe; the only comfort he found available was "The comfort wherewith he himself had been comforted of God". In the midst, therefore, of your tears, let this rainbow be seen. You stand by the sick bed or the open grave; you lie prostate, and despair even of life, you know the bitterness of no employment. You may let these things embitter you, make you murmur and complain, or permit them to mellow you, and send you on the Christ-like ministry of soothing others with the balm you yourself received from God. Christ Himself has suffered being tempted, and because of this He can succour and sympathize. May we all therefore be blessedly exercised by our experiences, and reckon that we have been "graciously given on the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for His sake".

There are also two points of view as to the length of this endurance. One may say, Oh to think that I must endure this for a whole lifetime, while another may say, Praise God, this suffering can only last a lifetime. To both the time is the same, but how different the point of view. One may say, Why am I thus afflicted and burdened? while another may say, What a privilege to be counted worthy to share any part of the sufferings of Christ for His body's sake, the church. Beloved readers, there can be no two thoughts as to which should be our attitude.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

#25. The bowed soul, and the fixed heart (Psa. lvii. 6, 7).
pp. 158, 159

It is a consolation beyond our powers of estimation that while we so harshly and sometimes so cruelly judge one another, the Lord remembereth our frame, and while sin is never treated less than sin (and no evil can ever be called otherwise by a Holy God), He condescends to use those who are of like infirmities with ourselves. A word in season is found in Psa. lvii. It is the coming together of two apparently opposed conditions:--

"My soul is bowed down . . . . . My heart is fixed" (Psa. lvii. 6, 7).

Three times in this Psalm does the writer speak of his soul:--

"My soul trusteth in Thee" (verse 1).
"My soul is among lions" (verse 4).
"My soul is bowed down" (verse 6).

Here we may learn the necessary lesson, that trust in God does not mean exemption from trouble. What it does mean is triumph in spite of trouble. The Psalmist did not practice what is called "auto-suggestion"; he did not seek to strengthen himself by saying, "I am growing stronger every day", for he knew a better way: "I will cry unto God most high; unto God that performeth for me" (verse 2), which Spurrell translates as "my accomplishing God". At first sight, when the several occurrences of this word "perform" are considered, the true meaning underlying all is not readily apparent.

"The godly man ceaseth" (Psa. xii. 1).
"Doth His promise fail?" (Psa. lxxvii. 8).
"Let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end" (Psa. vii. 9).
"The Lord will perfect" (Psa. cxxxviii. 8).
"God that performeth for me" (Psa. lvii. 2).

The reader who remembers that the N.T. word "perfect" (teleios) indicates one who has gone unto the "end", will see that the same idea is found in this word gamar = "to end". Because the Psalmist trusted in God Who was able to bring all things through to their appointed end, he could, even while his soul was bowed down, truly say: "Oh God, my heart is fixed." By observing the words used in I Cor. x. 13 we shall see the same truth at work there. The A.V. speaks of a "way of escape", but this is not "enduring" to "bearing". The word occurs in Heb. xiii. 7 where it is translated "end" in the A.V. and "issue" in the R.V.:--

> "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, Who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able: but will with the temptation also make the end (or the issue), that ye may be able to bear it."

While therefore, in common with our fellows, we may have to say many times, "My soul is bowed down", let us remember that our trust is in God Who "perfect", or brings to an issue, and so be enabled also to say, "My heart is fixed".

Studies in the Prophets.

NO.1.

The theme of all the Prophets.

January 1927

Great stress has been placed upon the necessity for the right division of Scripture in the pages of this magazine, and with sixteen years of study and publicity we realize more than ever how fundamental, how essential 2 Tim. ii. 15 is to the true interpretation of all Scripture. This division, however, never loses sight of-the organic, oneness of the Scriptures, a truth expressed in our key pamphlet which we have entitled "United, yet Divided." The prophets of the O.T. spoke to Israel, Judah, or the nations. The church as understood by Paul in his later ministry was never in view, yet although this is so, it by no means indicates that the Gentiles, saved by grace and called to share the glories of the heavenly places, have no interest in these O.T. prophets, or that no spiritual blessings can be received by their prayerful study. On the contrary, while we see the essential difference that there is between Jew, Gentile, and Church, between Kingdom, Bride and Body, between earth, heaven and the super heavens, yet we also rejoice in the fact that all are the objects of the love of God, redeemed by the same precious blood, and parts of one great and majestic purpose. As fellow-partakers, therefore, of the grace of God, it warms our hearts and helps us to understand our own pathway better to trace His hand and see His ways with His typical people Israel.

We therefore propose to study the teaching of the O.T. prophets in this series. We are immediately confronted with the question of time and space, for the O.T. prophets equal two-thirds of the complete N.T. in bulk, and therefore anything like an exhaustive study is quite outside the possibilities of these pages. Our studies therefore will have to be broad views, with a descent into details where the passage is peculiarly representative, leaving the student to pursue by means of these helps and hints the delightful task of closer study of God's wonderful purposes for His ancient people.

The underlying theme.

The unity of theme that is traceable through the prophets (omitting Jonah, whose message was to Nineveh and not to Israel) is of greater importance as an aid to understanding than the observation of the individual peculiarities of each prophet. The fact that God used a great variety of human agents, who were cal1ed in a variety of circumstances "at sundry times and in divers manners," would necessarily leave its impress upon the mode of revelation without altering for one moment its full inspiration. Isaiah wrote his messages before the captivity, and spoke particularly though not exclusively "concerning Judah and Jerusalem"; Ezekiel and Daniel receive their visions during the captivity, both describe wonders and heavenly visions, but from different standpoints. Zechariah and Daniel prophesy at the close of the captivity. Sometimes the bulk of a prophet's burden is that of judgment, burning indignation, or bitter tears; terrible threats or tender entreaties may characterize this prophet or that, but whether dominant or recessive, whether minor or major, whether subdued or overflowing, we find one grand theme runs through every prophet's utterance.

Israel's restoration.

ISAIAH.-This great prophet, to whose rapt visions and burning words we turn for, perhaps the fullest Messianic prophecies, is divided into two parts;-

Chapter i.--xxxix. . . . Israel’s dispersion . . . "The Voice" (vi.).

Chapter xl--xlvi . . .... Israel’s restoration . . . "The Voice" (xl.).

These main sections have, of course, many sub-divisions. Moreover, we do not suggest that the prophet's words are to be considered as being in water-tight departments. Anticipations of coming glory find their way into the early section. References to dispersion and judgment are to be found in the later section, but speaking generally of the book as a whole the above is a fair presentation of its trend.

JEREMIAH.-The analysis of Jeremiah is much more complicated than that of Isaiah. Chronological sequence at times gives place to the necessities of prophetic and dispensational instruction. There is nevertheless a very complete parallel with Isaiah in the use and distribution of one important feature, to which we shall have to devote a separate paper owing to its length and importance. Two passages in Jeremiah, however, may be looked upon as the foci of his prophecy:

> "See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant. Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Jeremiah, what seest thou? And I said, I see a rod of an almond tree. Then said the Lord unto me, Thou hast well seen: for I will hasten My word to perform it" (Jer. i. 10-12).

> "And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict: so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the Lord. . . . If those ordinances depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever" (Jer. xxxi. 28,36).

The connection between these two passages is seen the better when we note that the Hebrew word for the almond is shaqed, and the word for "to hasten" and "to watch" is shaqad. These and other connections we must leave until we give the various books an individual examination. The main theme, however, is similar to that of Isaiah, and may be expressed in the words of Jeremiah xxxi. 10, "He that scattered Israel will gather him."

EZEKIEL.-When one first approaches the prophecy of Ezekiel with its living creatures full of eyes, its wheels, its wings, its flames of fire, and wonderful imagery, unity of theme or comparison with other prophets at first seems too difficult to yield to the circumscribed space at our disposal. Ezekiel, however, has the same basic theme as that of Isaiah and Jeremiah, namely, Israel's fall and restoration. Isaiah gives us an indication of his purpose in the two voices of Isa. vi. and xl. Jeremiah accomplishes the same object by his use of the almond tree, the "watcher." Ezekiel encompasses the same end by his visions of the glory of the Lord.

The departing Glory.	Ezek. ix. 3 . .. . . Removed to the threshold. Ezek. x. 18, 19. Removed to the east gate. Ezek. xi. 22 . . .. Removed to the mountain.
The glory among the nations	Ezek. xxxix. 21. Set among the nations, as a witness against Israel's iniquity.
The returning glory.	Ezek. xliii. 2 . . . Returning from the east. Ezek. xliii. 4, . . Returning by way of the east gale. Ezek. xliv.4 . . ...Returning glory fills the house.

That these visions of the departing and returning glory are connected with Israel's history as a nation may be gathered from Ezek. xxxix. 25-29, "Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob."

DANIEL. - The minor prophets must now be given a brief review. Daniel's prophecies may be sub-divided into two parts: - .

1, Those which speak of the kingdom being given to the Gentiles.
2. Those which speak of the kingdom being restored once again to Israel.

This prophet in his own way adds his quota to the development of the one great theme.

HOSEA.- The opening and closing chapters of this prophecy indicate the trend of the book :

Israel called 'Lo-ruhamah' and 'Lo.ammi' - not having received mercy, and not My people.
Finally called 'Ruhamah' and 'Ammi' (Hosea i.).

"0 Israel return. . . . . I will heal. . . . . they shall dwell" (Hosea xiv.).

Thus Hosea is seen to have the one great theme before him.

JOEL.-Joel reveals the purpose of his prophecy by the double reference to the locusts:

"That which .the palmerworm hath left hath the locust eaten, and that which the locust hath left hath the cankerworm eaten, and that which the cankerworm hath left hath the caterpillar eaten" (Joel i. 4).

"And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, and .the caterpillar, and the palmerworm, My great army which I sent among you" (Joel ii. 25).

The purpose remains the same, however varied may be the manner of its presentation.

AMOS.-The theme of Amos may be expressed in the closing chapter:

"I will sift the house of Israel among all nations like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth" (Amos. ix. 9).

"In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen and close up the breaches thereof. . . . . and I will plant them upon their land. . . ." (Amos. ix. 11-15).

OBADIAH. - This prophecy is directed to Edom, and therefore does not fall so exactly into line; nevertheless Israel's restoration is not forgotten in verses 17-21.

JONAH. - Jonah is also not concerned with Israel, but with Nineveh; no mention is therefore made of Israel or the restoration.

MICAH.-Micah resumes the theme of the prophets, which may be expressed in the words of chapters iii. and iv.:

"Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest" (Micah iii. 12).

" But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains . . . . In that day, saith the Lord, will I assemble her that halteth, and I will gather her that is driven out and her that I have afflicted" (Micah iv. 1-6).

NAHUM.-Nahum, like Jonah, is devoted to the burden of Nineveh, and therefore does not pursue the theme of Israel's fall and restoration.

HABAKKUK.-Habakkuk sets before us the individual, the just who lives by faith, waiting for the promises of the Lord.

ZEPHANIAH.-Zephaniah returns to the theme of Israel's restoration, which can be expressed in the closing verses of the last chapter:

> "Behold, at that time I will undo all that afflict thee. . . . I will set them for a praise and fame in every land where they have been put to shame. And at that time will I bring you again, even in the time that I gather you: for I will make you a name and a praise among all people of the earth, when I turn back your captivity before your eyes, saith the Lord" (Zeph. iii. 19, 20).

HAGGAI.-Haggai addresses his message to the remnant that returned from captivity, and its whole setting is prophetic of the great return at the end of the age. This typical foreshadowing is expressed as follows:

> "The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the Lord of hosts ; and in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of hosts" (Haggai ii. 9).

ZECHARIAH.-It is proverbial with students that Zechariah is the prophet of the restoration, e.g.:

> "Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls" (Zech. ii. 4).
>
> "I am returned unto Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem" (Zech. viii. 3).
>
> "It shall come to pass, that as ye were a curse among the nations, o house of Judah, and house of Israel, so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing" (Zech. viii. 13).

These are specimens only of the continual statement of this glorious theme.

MALACHL-Malachi rebukes Israel for their rebellion and despising of the Lord, prophesying the coming of the Messiah and the restoration of Judah and Jerusalem:

> "The Lord, Whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to His temple . . . . behold He shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. . . . Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years" (Mal. iii. 1-4).
>
> "All nations shall call you blessed; for ye shall be a delightsome land" (Mal. iii. 12).

The prophecy ends upon the promise of the sending of the prophet Elijah, and the repentance of the people.

We believe the evidence is too clear to be denied that the burden of the prophets who spoke concerning either Judah or Israel is their ultimate restoration. Let us keep this glorious goal in mind while we follow the footsteps of erring Israel and redemptive love, from Egypt's slavery, Sinai's law and Babylon's captivity to that day when they shall look upon Him Whom they pierced.

NO.2.

Israel’s restoration and the new covenant.

In the series of articles entitled Fundamentals of Dispensational Truth we have considered the covenant made by the Lord with Israel at Sinai, and seen it to be the basis of His dealings with them as a nation. Coming to the prophets, and endeavouring to find further indications of their great purpose, we find that much is said about this covenant. Turning to the prophecy of Isaiah we find that the references to the covenant exactly harmonize with the twofold division of the book. There are twelve references to a covenant in this prophecy, four occurring in the first section, and eight in the second. These references set forth most vividly the factors that led to the fall, and that will lead to the restoration of Israel, the burden indeed of all the prophets.

The two covenants.

Let us first of all look at the first and the last mention of covenant by Isaiah;

"They have broken the everlasting covenant" (lsa. xxiv. 5).

"I will make an everlasting covenant with them" (Isa. Ixi. 8).

Words could not more eloquently express the twofold theme of this prophecy; Israel forfeiting all by breaking the covenant, God establishing and restoring all by making the covenant Himself in Christ. With this encouragement to go forward in the study, let us notice the distribution of this word more carefully.

First part of Isaiah --Desolation. i--xxxix	A. xxiv. 5. Covenant broken.
	B. xxviii. 15. Covenant made with death.
	B. xxviii. 18 Covenant with death disannulled
	A. xxxiii. 8. Covenant broken.
Second part of Isaiah --restoration xl. – lxvi	A. xlii. 6; xlix. 8. Messiah given as a covenant of the people.
	B. liv. 10. Covenant of My peace.
	C. lv. 3. I will make and everlasting covenant
	A. lvi. 4, 6. They who take hold of My covenant
	B. lix. 21. This is My covenant.
	C. lxi. 8. I will make an everlasting covenant.

The most prejudiced reader can hardly deny that the distribution of this word is, to say the least, suggestive. In the first part, which deals with Israel's failure, we have a covenant broken, or a covenant made with death, but no reference to a covenant established or made by the Lord. In the second part there is no broken covenant, but instead the Messiah is given as a covenant of the people, and God Himself promises to make an everlasting covenant. Design is rendered more evident when we notice that the double reference in xlii. and xlix. instead of causing a difficulty is exactly balanced by the double reference to those who take hold of this covenant. Let us observe the contexts of some of these references.

The broken covenant.

The context of the broken covenant is one of chaos:

"Behold, the Lord maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and turneth it upside down, and scatteretb abroad the inhabitants thereof. . . . The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled: for the Lord hath spoken this word. . . . they. . . . have broken the everlasting covenant, therefore hath the curse devoured the earth" (Isa. xxiv. 1-6).

The parallel reference says:

"The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceasetb; he hath broken the covenant, he hath despised the cities, he regardeth no man. The earth mourneth and languisheth: Lebanon is ashamed and withered away: Sharon is like a wilderness: and Bashan and Carmel shake off their fruits" (Isa. xxxiii. 8. 9).

It is very probable that the passage in xxxiii. has immediate reference to Sennacherib, and prophetic reference to Antichrist. The breaking of the covenant by Israel drew down upon them the judgment of invasion:

"And the king of Assyria did carry away Israel unto Assyria . . . . because they obeyed not the voice of the Lord their God, but transgressed His covenant" (2 Kings xviii. 11, 12).

This desolation and affliction of the land of promise is reversed under the application of the new covenant:

"0 thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires" (Isa. liv. 11).

Such large sections of Isaiah would have to be quoted to justly present this aspect of their glorious restoration that we trust the reader will read through Isa. xl.-Ixvi. in order to apprehend the full effect of these passages.

The new covenant.

While the new covenant is very plainly in view in Isaiah, inasmuch as the Messiah Himself is given as the covenant for the people, it is not so called in Isaiah. Jeremiah very definitely gives expression to this fact:

“Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this covenant, which I commanded your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, , . . the house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken My covenant which I made with their fathers" (Jer, xi. 1-10).

Immediately following the reference quoted in the previous paper where the Lord declares that He will watch over Israel in blessing, even as He had watched over them in judgment, the basis of the new covenant is revealed:

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a now covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which My covenant they break, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord" (Jer. xxxi. 31, 32).

The new covenant of Jeremiah is evidently in view in Isaiah, for there we have a, “new song," a "new name," and a “new heavens and a new earth" (Isa. xlii. 10; lxii. 2; and lxv. 17). These items are repeated in the Apocalypse, to which we may add the "new Jerusalem" (Rev. xxi. 2). The new covenant also is in view in Ezekiel, for there we have a "new spirit," and a " new heart" (Ezek. xi. 19 and xxxvi. 26). Without pursuing this feature further and multiplying examples, the reader may remember the prayer of Daniel ix., and the close of the prophet Micah:

"Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham which Thou hast sworn unto our fathers from days of old" (Micah vii. 20).

The song of Zechariah at the circumcision of John the Baptist:

'"The mercy promised to our fathers, and remember His holy covenant: The oath which He sware to our father Abraham" (Luke i. 72, 73), carries this hope of restoration on into the N.T. The Lord on the eve of His death on the cross took the cup connected with the Passover, and said, "This is My blood of the new covenant" (Matt. xxvi. 28). We can understand the believer who has never questioned traditional teaching accepting without demur that the new covenant is the basis of the Christian church, but it is difficult to understand how students of the Word, with all the evidence from Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel before them, cannot see that the new covenant is essentially associated with Israel's hope and restoration.

We hope that readers will realise the fact that the law of Moses can be better understood in the light of the prophets who enforce its claims, denounce those who break it, and who see afar off its realization in the blood and righteousness of Him Who was given as a covenant for the people, and that this series on the Prophets may be read together with the series on Fundamentals of Dispensational Truth with profit.

NO.3.
"To obey is better than sacrifice”

May 1927

We have seen that departure from the covenant is at the bottom of Israel's dispersion and loss of blessing. The first clause of that covenant which Israel broke is, 'Thou shalt have no other gods before Me" (Exod. xx. 3). This command is comprehensive and includes all the moral law. Alas, Israel imagined that God could be placated with sacrifices and soothed with incense, forgetting that the mere externals of a divine religion are valueless and vain without heart obedience. It has ever been the same. Saul the king was reminded of this vital truth by Samuel in the words of I Sam. xv. 22, 23:

> “Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offering and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams, for rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, He hath also rejected thee from being king."

Here we have an epitome of Israel's failure, ending in rejection. The same spirit was manifested by the Pharisees in the days of the Lord on earth, for He said to them:

> “But go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy and not sacrifice" (Matt. ix. 13).

> "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Ye blind guides, which strain out a gnat, and swallow a camel" (Matt. xxiii. 23, 24).

In these words the Lord teaches (I) A complete agreement with the testimony of the prophets, as we are about to see; (2) A revelation of the spiritual character of the "weightier matters of the law," viz., judgment, mercy, and faith; (3) A full confirmation of the ceremonial law of Moses, by the added words, "these ought ye to have done." Here the Lord's attitude is seen to be in opposition to the critical theory that the prophets were opposed to a priestly caste who sought to impose a ceremonial system upon Israel. This we must remember as we read the scathing words of the prophets. They do not in any sense question the divine origin of the sacrificial law, they only tear off the hypocrite's cloak of mere ritual observance that but hides disobedience and corruption within. Indeed, it is the testimony of the selfsame prophets that when Israel are blessed under the new covenant, and obey with the new heart, that instead of repudiating sacrifice and offering they shall then for the first time offer them with true acceptance (see Jer. xvii. 21-27; Psa. Ii. 19; Mal. iii. 3).

The testimony of Isaiah.

The opening message of Isaiah reveals the condition of Israel. They had "rebelled," they did not "know or consider," they had "forsaken" the Lord, and had "gone away backward" (Isa. i. 2-4). The result was that the blessings of the covenant were taken from them: "Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire; your land, strangers devour it in your presence" (Isa. i. 7). Had it not been for a very small remnant, Israel would have been overthrown like Sodom and Gomorrah (Isa. i. 8, 9). This reference to the doomed cities of the plain is now taken up to characterize the moral condition of Israel, and it is here that the great repudiation of sacrifice and offering comes:

> "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto Me? saith the Lord; I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he goats" (Isa. i. 11).

The "treading" of the Lord's courts (Isa. i. 12) by such offerers is really a “trampling" (see the word in 2 Kings vii. 17; ix. 33; Dan. viii. 7; Isa. lxiii. 6). Their oblations are called "vain," their incense instead of ascending as a sweet smell is called "an abomination," their solemn assemblies were "unbearable" and "a weariness." The reason for all this is not found in the offerings themselves, they remained as ever the command of the Lord, and types of the great offering of Christ: the reason is found in the moral condition of the offerers, "Your hands are full of blood" (Isa. i. 15). Instead of making ceremonial observances a refuge, Israel is urged to repentance:

> "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before Mine eyes; cease to do evil.; learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow . . . . though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow. . . . if ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land; but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword" (Isa. i. 16-20).

To the same effect, and with apparent reference to this passage, are the words of James i. 26, 27:

> "If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

No explanation is offered in Isa. i. as to how Israel's sins which were as scarlet should ever be as white as snow, but in the next reference to which we turn, a step nearer to its understanding is provided. Before passing from the teaching of this first chapter we should notice the parallel testimony of the last chapter, viz.:

"To this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at My word" (Isa. lxvi. 2).

Apart from this spirit the very offering of sacrifices is wickedness:

"He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck; he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered swine's blood; he that burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol" (Isa. Ixvi. 3).

The whole sequence of thought expressed in these two chapters on this subject, and in those about to be considered in Isaiah, is wonderfully expressed in Psa. Ii.: "Blot out"; "wash me"; "whiter than snow"; "Thou desireth truth in the inward parts"; "Thou desireth not sacrifice"; "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and a contrite heart, 0 God, Thou wilt not despise"; "Then shalt Thou be pleased with the sacrifices of righteousness," i.e., when Jerusalem is rebuilt, and Israel restored. How this blotting out and washing whiter than snow can be accomplished Isaiah shows.

The second half of Isaiah proceeds upon the assumption of redemption. Gaal ("to redeem") occurs in Isaiah for the first time in xliii. I. "The redeemed" are mentioned for the first time in Isa. xxxv. 9, and "the Redeemer" for the first time in Isa. xli. 14, and as these different words occur over twenty times in the second half, which deals with Israel's restoration, and not once in the first half, it becomes evident that Israel can have no hope of restoration "by the deeds of the law," but are shut up to that new covenant which finds its strength and its sanction in the precious blood of Christ. For the sake of clearness we point out that the word "redeem" in Isa. i. 27 and xxix. 22 are not translations of gaal, the word that is used so much of the redemption accomplished by the great kinsman, the man Christ Jesus.

Coming then to Isaiah xliii., and remembering that there the people are addressed in verse I as "redeemed," the Lord says:

"But thou hast not called upon Me, 0 Jacob: but thou hast been weary of Me, 0 Israel. Thou hast not brought Me the small cattle of thy burnt-offerings; neither hast thou honoured Me with thy sacrifices. I have not caused thee to serve with an offering nor wearied thee with incense. Thou hast bought Me no sweet cane with money, neither hast thou filled Me with the fat of thy sacrifices; but thou hast made Me to serve with thy sins, thou hast wearied Me with thine iniquities. I, even I, am HE THAT BLOTTETH OUT THY TRANSGRESSIONS FOR MINE OWN SAKE" (Isa. xliii. 22-25).

It is evident from this passage that the Lord had no further use for the sacrifices of bulls and goats until this people were blessed and redeemed by a more perfect sacrifice, and called under the terms of a better covenant. By so saying we but paraphrase the teaching of the epistle to the Hebrews, where both covenant and sin-offering are "set aside" by reason of a "better," viz., "the blood of the everlasting covenant."

The next reference to the offerings takes us into the very heart of the subject, for we must turn to Isa. liii.:

"When thou shalt make His soul an offering for sin. . . . He shall hear their iniquities. . . . He bear the sin of many" (verses 10-12).

But Isa. liii. is too full, too deep, too sacred a passage to deal with as one of many in an article of this character. The connection with our theme is obvious, and we would rather leave it there, reserving a fuller study of the passage for another time. That it is vitally connected with the restoration of Israel a glance at the context will show:

"Awake, awake; put on thy strength, 0 Zion. . . . 0 captive daughter of Zion. . . . My people went down aforetime into Egypt to sojourn there; and the Assyrian oppressed them without cause. . . . the Lord hath comforted His people, He hath redeemed Jerusalem. . . . For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but My kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of My peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee" (Isa. lii.-liv.).

Jeremiah's testimony is not so full as that of Isaiah upon this subject, but what he does say is to the point:

"Hear, 0 earth; behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts, because they have not hearkened unto My words, nor to My law, but rejected it. To what purpose cometh there to Me incense from Sheba, and the sweet cane from a far country? your burnt-offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto Me" (Jer. vi. 19, 20).

"I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings or SACRIFICES, but this thing commanded I them, saying, OBEY My voice" (Jer. vii. 22, 23).

Sinai's law was given and the covenant made before sacrifices and offerings were elaborated. Here we have in another form the age-abiding truth, "to obey is better than sacrifice." In I Cor. xiii. "obey" is translated into "love," for all the law is fulfilled by love, and there again to give one's body to be burned is nothing without love. To love is better than martyrdom, and charity than the fat of rams. Closely parallel with Jeremiah's testimony is that of Hosea:

"For I desired mercy, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings, but like men they have transgressed the covenant" (Hos. vi. 6, 7).

"They sacrifice flesh for the sacrifices of Mine offerings, and eat it, but the Lord accepteth them not; now will He remember their iniquity, and visit their sins; they shall return to Egypt. For Israel hath forgotten his Maker, and buildeth temples" (Hos. viii. 13, 14.).

The great things of the law were counted strange, Israel forgot his Maker, yet such is human nature, though the great things of the law were counted strange, and the weighty matters of the law (judgment, mercy and faith) were omitted, yet they multiplied sacrifices, and though Israel forgot his Maker, he built temples. Unless the Lord find a temple in the heart of His people, what temple on earth can please Him, what society represent Him, what" church" manifest Him? Is Israel alone in this mistaken zeal for sacrifice and temple? Are we not all liable to be taken up with externals, and the tithing of mint? That the offering itself, when presented in the right spirit, is a type of a precious experience is manifested by comparing the words of Hos. ix. 3 and 4:

> "They shall not dwell in the Lord's land."
> "They shall not offer wine offerings unto the Lord."

An accepted people can offer an accepted offering, but a wicked and disobedient people turn all such symbols into abominations and cloaks for Pharisees. Amos says to Israel:

> "Bring your sacrifices every morning, and your tithes after three years, and offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving with leaven, and proclaim and publish the free offerings, for this liketh you, 0 ye children of Israel, saith the Lord God. 1 also have given you cleanness of teeth in all your cities, and want of bread in all your places" (Amos iv. 4-6).

It was right to bring sacrifices every morning, for this was the law (Numb. xxviii.); it was equally right to bring tithes after three years (Deut. xiv. 28). Even the presence of the leaven in the thank-offering was according to the law (Lev. vii. 13), all was in order; "the form of godliness" was intact, it was "the power thereof" that was denied. So in the next chapter, "the Lord, Whose name is the God of hosts," says:

> "I hate, I despise your feast days, and I will not smell in your solemn assemblies. Though ye offer Me burnt-offerings. . . . I will not accept them.. . let judgment run down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream. Have ye offered unto Me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness forty years, 0 house of Israel?" (Amos v. 21-25).

They had apparently expressed a desire for the coming of the day of the Lord, for the same chapter says:

> "Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord! To what end is it for you? the day of the Lord is darkness, and not light" (Amos v. 18).

Here we perceive the difference between believing the "Second Advent," and "loving His appearing," and the same distinction permeates the teaching of the prophets in connection with the offerings. By the time Malachi uttered his message, even this external punctiliousness had disappeared. The blind, the lame, the sick were used for the offerings. The table of the Lord was held to be contemptible. They sacrificed unto the Lord a corrupt thing, meet exhibition of the corruptness within. The sepulchres had ceased even to be whitened. The tithes had been withheld, and Israel was cursed with a curse.

Whilst we have no ceremonial whatever, and whilst our all in all is Christ Himself, let us read the epistles written for our instruction, and realize that though called with quite another calling, the flesh in the redeemed member of the body of Christ is the same flesh that manifested itself without mercy in Israel's sacrifices, and without the knowledge of God in their burnt offerings.

Studies in the Prophets.
NO.4.
Times and Seasons.
July 1927

The great burden of the Prophets is Israel's restoration, its basis is the new covenant, and its blessings can only be enjoyed by a new heart. So far we have seen. Another item that must of necessity be considered is that of time. All events that happen within human ken must be related to space and time. The place where this restoration takes place we must consider, but for this present article we will look into the question of the time when this promised blessing shall take place.

When we speak of time in connection with prophecy, we must remember that we have no warrant from Scripture to fix dates. It is a pathetic sight to see upon a second-hand bookstall, books that most solemnly and seriously fix the date of the Lord's return, and the end of the age, all discarded and self-condemned. Such attempts are foredoomed to failure. We should remember the reply of the Lord to His disciples when they enquired concerning the time of Israel's restoration, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in His own power" (Acts i. 7). What is provided for us in the word of prophecy is a sequence of events which must be fulfilled, and as we by faith see this fulfilment of Scripture, we are exhorted to look up, and lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh (Luke xxi. 28).

It ought not to be necessary, yet for clearness sake we would state that this passage from Luke, while providing us with a principle of interpretation, is not quoted here as though the hope of our calling is in any way connected with Israel's restoration, other than the broad inference that if Israel's time of blessing is obviously near, how much nearer must our own hope be. We are therefore to look into the prophets to note any features concerning the period of restoration, and shall expect that as these particulars accumulate, so the time of Israel's restoration will become more clear. Among the expressions that recur in this connection are (I) “The day of the Lord," (2) "In that day," and (3) "In the last days," or "In the latter days."

Prophetic periods in Isaiah.

The first reference to prophetic periods in Isaiah is that of chapter ii. Here we read of "the last days," "in that day," and "the day of the Lord of hosts." If we are to give careful examination of these passages, Isa. ii. will occupy the remainder of our available space. We feel, however, that the reader will be better served if we continue to take a broader view, and give a general impression. Therefore we shall assume that the passages will be studied and read while we content ourselves with outlines and salient points.

Isaiah ii.

A. In the last days (1-5).

B. a. The Lord's house exalted. All nations flow.
b. Many people say. Come ye, let us go . . . we will walk.
a. The Lord shall judge among the nations.
b. 0 house of Jacob, Come ye, let us walk.

C. 6-9. The land full of idols.

D. 10. Enter into rock, and hide in dust, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of His majesty.

A. In that day The Lord of hosts. (11-17)

B. a. The lofty humbled. The Lord alone exalted.
b The day of the Lord of hosts "upon" ten features of human pride.
a. The loftiness of man bowed down. The Lord alone exalted.

C. 18. The idols shall utterly pass away.

D. 19-21. Go into holes of rocks, and caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of His majesty.

This brief analysis brings forward several features which are severally expanded in the remainder of the prophets:

1. The exaltation of the mountain of the Lord's house, and
2. The exaltation of the Lord Himself.
3. The coming of the nations to learn of the law from Jerusalem.
4. The abolition of war.
5. The abolition of idols.
6. The terror of man.

7. The shaking of the earth.

Passing over several allusions to the condition of the people, and the final blessedness of Israel and Jerusalem that occur in chapters iii. and iv., we notice another full statement in chapters xi. and xii.:

> "In that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and His rest shall be glorious. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set His hand again the second time to recover the remnant of His people. . . and He shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. . . . . and there shall be an highway for the remnant of His people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt" (xi. 10-16).

One or two more important items are added here, which we will indicate:

1. This restoration is connected with some One who is a descendant of Jesse.
2. The ensign mentioned suggests the protection of a kinsman.
3. The Gentiles are again included.
4. There is a comparison between the exodus from Egypt, and the great restoration of the future,

This section of Isaiah is brought to a conclusion in chapter xii.

A And in that day thou shalt say,
B O Lord, I will praise Thee. God is my salvation. The Lord Jehovah is my strength.
C And my song.

A And in that day ye shall say,
B Praise the Lord. Declare His doings.
C I Sing unto the Lord.

Here is the song of Moses and the Lamb, for there is a linking of the song sung by the Red Sea (Exod. xv. 2) with the song of triumph of the Revelation, this of course being but an expansion of the truth already expressed in Isa. xi. 16. This will prepare us to find parallels between the day of the Lord, and its characteristics with earlier deliverances of Israel. We shall find that both Pharaoh, and Sennacherib, and Egypt, and Babylon foreshadow the beast of the Apocalypse. Moses and Aaron foreshadow the two witnesses, and the plagues of Egypt anticipate the vials of wrath, the one being the activities under the old covenant, which covenant Israel broke, the other being the result of the new covenant which cannot be broken. The very next chapter (Isa. xiii.) is occupied with Babylon, and speaks of its overthrow in the day of the Lord. This overthrow is accompanied by apocalyptic signs:

> "Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger. . . . the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light; the sun shall be darkened in His going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine. . . . Therefore I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place. . . . and Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah" (Isa. xiii. 6 -22).

In chapter xiv. 12-14 the king of Babylon foreshadows the pride and the fall of the great adversary himself. Passing to chapter xxvi. we come to another prophetic song in which the title "The Lord Jehovah" comes as in the song of chapter xii. Chapter xxvii. devotes one verse to the slaying of the dragon, and then takes up again a song of redeemed Israel, where the words come, "Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit" (verse 6). And once again at the end of the chapter is a reference to the exodus from Egypt as a prophetic type. Several other items will bring Isaiah's testimony to a conclusion. The deaf hear, and the blind see (xxix. 18), thus indicating the reversal of vi. 10. Isa. xxx. 22-26 shows that in that day idolatry shall be abolished (as we saw in chapter ii.), plentiful increase shall be upon the earth for man and beast, and the light of the sun shall be increased seven-fold, "in the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of His people, and healeth the stroke of their wound."

When we pass into the second section of Isaiah, prophecy concerning the day of the Lord is absent. This is quite in keeping with the two-fold teaching of the book, for prophecy is a light that shines in a dark place until the day dawns. Isaiah brings before us both vengeance and redemption, punishment and restoration, and while Israel as a nation occupy the foremost place, the nations are not forgotten or left out, in fact, one reference that we have passed over, namely Isa. xix. 24, 25, reveals that Israel shall be the third with Egypt and Assyria, whom the Lord shall bless saying:

> "Blessed be Egypt My people, and Assyria the work of My hands, and Israel Mine inheritance."

Surely the day of the Lord, though cruel with fierce anger, is also a day of grace beyond our dreams, if this passage be, as it is, the Word of God. A fuller consideration of this phase will be more possible when we deal with the nations, and the land under separate titles. So far we have followed the witness of Isaiah. Jeremiah and Ezekiel add their quota, but the minor prophets are practically full of this theme. It is important enough to demand a separate notice, and so we hope to return to the subject in our next article.

Studies in the Prophets.
No.5.
Sept. 1927

We have found while studying the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah that the future deliverance of Israel in the day of the Lord is frequently compared with the first deliverance of Israel out of Egypt. This is repeated in Hosea:

"Therefore, behold, I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably with her...and she shall sing there, as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt" (Hos. ii. 14, 15).

The speaking "comfortably" is parallel with the opening of the restoration section of Isaiah xl.

"And it shall be at that day, saith the Lord, that thou shalt call Me lshi (that is my husband); and shalt call Me no more Baali (that is my Lord). For I will take away the names of Baalim out of her mouth, and they shall no more be remembered by their name" (Hos. ii. 16, 17).

We have here stated in brief the marriage relationship of restored Israel and the abolishing of idolatry (both being vitally connected with the old covenant where idolatry and spiritual adultery are interchangeable terms), which are dealt with in Isaiah and other prophets at length.

"And in that day will I make a covenant for them with the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground: and I will break the bow and the sword and the battle out of the earth, and I will make them lie down in safety" (Hos. ii. 18).

This covenant of world-wide peace is followed by the betrothal of Israel unto the Lord: -

"And it shall come to pass in that day, I will hear, saith the Lord, I will hear the heavens. . . . earth. . . . corn. . . . wine, and the oil, and great shall be the day of Jezreel" (Hos. ii. 2l, 22).

Hosea's three children are brought forward at the close because of the prophetic intention of their names.

"And I will sow (Jezreel) her unto Me in the earth; and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy (lo-ruhamah): and I will say to them which were not My people (lo.-ammi), Thou art My people; and they shall say, Thou art my God" (Hos. ii. 23).

Here the great repudiation is cancelled, restoration is complete, and the figure of "sowing" used here is parallel with the introduction of the new covenant (Jer. xxxi. 27-33), and partly explains the reason for the parable of the Sower (Matt. xiii.). This day of restoration is literally, as well as symbolically, a day of resurrection, and this is more than suggested in Hos. vi. I, 2:

"Come, and let us return unto the Lord, for He hath torn, and He will heal us; He hath smitten, and He will bind us up. After two days will He revive us, and in the third day He will raise us up and we shall live in His sight."

The great and terrible day of the Lord.

The prophet Joel contains some terrible descriptions of "that day." Joel introduces his prophecy by speaking of a great judgment that had fallen upon the earth in the form of locusts, which devoured the fruits of the earth (i. 4), and of the invasion of a great army that laid the land waste (i. 6, 7); and of the withholding of the meat offering and of the drink offering in the house of the Lord (i. 8-13).

"Alas for the day! for the day of the Lord is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come" (Joel i. 15).

The second chapter elaborates this awful character of the day of the Lord:

"A day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains: a great people and a strong; there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of many generations" (Joel ii. 2).

The words used here are parallel with the statement of Dan. xii.1 concerning the "time of trouble," and the description of this invading army given in Joel ii. 3-11, especially the effect upon the heavens, the sun, moon and stars, shows that no ordinary army is intended:

"And the Lord shall utter His voice before His army: for His camp is very great: for He is strong that executeth His word: for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible; and who can abide it?" (Joel ii. 11).

The next reference provides God's own interpretation of the meaning and dispensational position of the day of Pentecost, for Peter quoted the book of Joel in explanation:

"And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out My spirit upon all flesh. . . . and I will show wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered; for in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call" (Joel ii. 28-32).

With this passage before us, and with the authority of the inspired apostle, we can unhesitatingly say that Pentecost:

1. Directly anticipates the great and terrible day of the Lord.
2. That dispensationally, Acts ii. and Revelation i. are joined together as one subject, and
3. That the company of believing Jews who came out on the day of Pentecost, and were "added to the church," were the "remnant" of O.T. prophecy spoken of in Isa. i. 9, xi. 11; Micah ii. l2; Zech. viii. 12.

The recognition of these facts, and the due appreciation of Eph. i.-iii. must surely dispose of the tradition that the church which is His Body began at Pentecost.

The gathering of Israel for blessing is the signal for the gathering of the nations for judgment:

"For, behold, in those days, and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down in the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for My people. . . . whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted My land . . . the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. . . . And it shall come to pass in that day, that the mountains shall drop down new wine. . . . " (Joel iii.).

This reverses the period of barrenness indicated in Joel i., where the meat offering and drink offering failed (see also Joel ii. 21-27).

The day of holiness unto the Lord.

The grand object of the day of the Lord is the establishment upon the earth of a holy people. All the instruments used have this as their goal. The restoration of Israel, the marriage relationship of Israel, the burning judgments that descend upon Israel, all lead to this end. This is implied in a brief statement of Obadiah:

"For the day of the Lord is near upon all the heathen. . . . but upon Mount Zion shall be deliverance, and there shall be holiness; and the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions. And the house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, and the house of Esau for stubble. . . ." (Obad. 15-18).

Here we have the gathering out of the kingdom of those that offend, Israel's deliverance and restoration, and the statement "There shall be holiness." The prophet that speaks much of Israel's restoration, and concludes with their position of holiness unto the Lord, is Zechariah. Tracing the steps in this prophet which lead to this goal, we observe the references to "the day." The Lord, choosing Jerusalem again, and dwelling in the midst of Israel, brings about the gathering of the nations, and Israel's holiness (Zech. ii. 11-13). This last feature is set forth under the figure of the High Priest in Zech. iii. 1-7 (note verse 2). In Zech. iii. 9 we read, "I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day." This is followed by Israel entering into her possessions in peace. "In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbour under the vine and under the fig tree" (Zech. iii. 10). It is a pity that the chapter ends here. What is it that comes to mind when thinking of Israel, and "the vine" and "the fig" are mentioned? Why, the "olive." This occupies chapter iv., and reveals the fact that Israel's restoration cannot be accomplished by leagues, parliaments, or movements, but by the Spirit of the Lord. Grace will as surely be manifested in Israel's restoration as in Gentile salvation (Zech. iv. 6, 7).

The three closing chapters, xii., xiii. and xiv., are very full with regard to the character of "that day." This day is spoken of about twenty times in these three chapters, and "Jerusalem" still more frequently, showing how closely this prophetic period is associated with that city, and all connected with it. First we read that the Lord will make Jerusalem "a cup of trembling" and "a burdensome stone" for all people (Zech. xii. 2, 3). Then, the nations that besiege the beloved city are smitten with madness, and Israel comes into favour with God (Zech. xii. 4, 5). A parallel comes next with Obadiah 17, 18, where the restoration of Israel is synonymous with the burning up of the stubble of the nations. Judah is saved first, and upon the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem is poured a spirit of grace and supplication, and, saith the Lord, "They shall look upon Me Whom they have pierced" (Zech. xii. 10).

There follows this national mourning for the crucifixion of the Messiah, the opening of a fountain "for sin and for uncleanness" (Zech. xiii. I). The very remembrance of idolatry shall be blotted out, and the unclean spirit shall pass out of the land. Chapter xiv. reverts to the day of battle of which Jerusalem shall be the centre, and the coming of the Lord to the mount of Olives for Israel's deliverance. Living waters are to flow from Jerusalem into the dead sea, wondrous symbol of the blessings of that day. Then after a reference to the nations and their relation to restored Jerusalem, we have the closing words both of Zechariah, and the day of the Lord;

"In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses,

HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD;

and the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the altar. Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts: and all they that sacrifice shall come and take them, and seethe therein; and in that day there shall be in the house of the Lord of hosts" (Zech. xiv. 20, 21).

Israel's history in its turn is symbolic of the race, the universe, the individual, and the church, for although each has a separate path and individual destiny, yet in broad outline "Holiness unto the Lord" and "No more Canaanite"; "Jacob shall possess their possessions" and "There shall not be any remaining of the house of Esau"; "The mystery of Godliness" and "The mystery of iniquity"; "The kingdom of the Lord," and "The kingdoms of this world" are so many facts indicating the one great conflict and goal. The course and the destinies of the two seeds are vividly set forth in this people of signs and symbols, and the day of the Lord foreshadows a yet greater day, the sequence being suggested in 2 Pet. iii. 10, 12 and 18. "The day of the Lord”; "The day of God"; "The day of the age."

The nation and the nations.
Nov.1927

Israel, though a separate nation, can never be separated from the nations, and a due recognition of this apparent paradox would, humanly speaking, have saved Israel from their pharisaic exclusiveness, while enabling them to maintain their true exclusiveness as the Lord's appointed channel of blessing. This two-fold relationship is the first feature of Israel's calling.

"And I will make of thee a great nation. . . and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xii. 2, 3 and xviii. 18).

Among the peculiar characteristics of Israel as a nation may be indicated the following;

1. A kingdom of priests, and an holy nation (Exod. xix. 6).
2. This nation is Thy people (Exod. xxxiii. 13).
3. Not reckoned among the nations (Numb. xxiii. 9).
4. A nation so great by reason of tbe presence of tbe Lord, and the possession of His law (Deut. iv. 7, 8).
5. Taken as a nation from the midst of another nation, by temptations, by signs, and wonders (Deut. iv. 34).
6. This nation shall reign over many nations (Deut. xv. 6).
7. This nation shall be set on high above all nations (Deut. xxvi. 19).

Among the nations whose destinies are intimately bound up with that of Israel, and which are mentioned by name in the prophets, are the following;

AMMON (Gen. xix. 88; Neh. ii. 10; lsa. xi. 14).
ARABIA (Isa. xxi. 13; Neh. ii. 19).
ASHKENAZ (Gen. x. 3; Jer. li. 27).
ASSYRIA (ASSHUR) (Gen. x. 11 (margin); 2 Kings; Ezra. vi. 16-22).
BABYLON (Gen. x. 10; 1 and 2 Kings; Ezra. v. 13-17).
CANAAN (Gen. xi. 31 ; Psa. cv. 11).
CHALDEA (Gen. xi. 28; lsa. xiii. 19; Hab. i. 6).
CUSH (ETHIOPIA) (Gen. x. 6 ; Isa. xviii. 1; Ezek. xxx. 5).
DEDAN (Gen. x. 7; Ezek. xxv. 13).
EDOM (Gen. xxxvi. 1; Jer. ix. 26).
EGYPT (MIZRAIM) (Gen. x. 6; lsa. xix. 25).
ELAM (Gen. x. 22; lsa. xi. 11; Jer. xlix. 39).
GOG, MAGOG AND GOMER (Gen. x. 2; Ezek. xxxviii. 21).
GRECIA (JAVAN) (Gen. x. 2; lsa. lxvi. 19; Zech. ix. 13).
LIBYA (PHUT) (Gen. x. 6; Ezek. xxvii. 10; Dan. xi. 43).
LUD (Gen. x. 22; lsa. lxvi. 19; Ezek. xxvii. 10).
MESHECH (Gen. x 2; Ezek. xxvii. 13).
PERSIA (Ezra. i. 1; Dan. viii. 20; Ezek. xxxviii. 5).
SEBA (Gen. x. 7; lsa. xliii. 3).
SHEBA (Gen. x. 7; 1 Kings x. 1; lsa. Ix. 6).
TUBAL (Gen. x. 2; lsa. lxvi. 19).
TARSHISH (Gen. x. 4; lsa. ii. 16, lxvi. 19).

Here is a list of twenty-four different nations that figure in prophecy. It does not pretend to be complete, for it has been compiled in circumstances that prevent access to books of reference, but it is sufficiently full for our immediate purpose. Considered as a list of names it can serve no spiritual purpose, but if this list of names shall compel us to accept a true canon of interpretation, then its compilation shall not indeed have been in vain. First as to the spiritualizing of such names. We know that sometimes names of nations or cities must be understood spiritually or figuratively. As a case in point we note Isa. i. 10, where the prophet addresses the rulers and people of Israel under the title, "Ye rulers of Sodom, and ye people of Gomorrah. "While, therefore, we must allow for this use of names, it is nevertheless the exception and not the rule. It cannot be denied by anyone who shall take the trouble to consult the references to this list of names, that in the great majority of cases these names must be taken literally, and refer to actual nations on the earth.

The second feature of importance that must strike the reader is the number of these names that go back to the great ethnic chapter Gen. x. Chronologically Gen. x. immediately precedes Gen. xii., the nations, and the nation. The prophets, by speaking of these nations as figuring in the yet future day of the Lord, assert an unbroken unity of purpose; that the nations of Gen. x. and the nation of Gen. xii. are too intimately connected to be omitted from our reckoning, and link the book of Genesis with the book of the Revelation, thereby indicating that all Scripture that relates to the earthly side of the purpose of the ages is one and undivided.

The third feature is suggested by the names in this list that are put into brackets. The English version gives the modern name to several of these ancient nations. Phut is Libya. Javan is Greece. Mizraim is Egypt. Cush is Ethiopia. These peoples are still in existence, and present no difficulty. When we look at the remainder of the list a two-fold problem is present.

1. Some names have become entirely obsolete. We have no precise information that will enable us to put our finger on the map and say “there, in such a place, this people are to be found." Yet these unknown peoples are spoken of by the prophets in the same breath with those of whose existence and continuance we are assured.

2. Modern names are not to be found. We look in vain for Great Britain, France, Germany, and the like. That does not prove that these nations are not there however. Be it noticed that we did not say modern nations are not to be found, but modern names.

If we search the Hebrew O.T. from beginning to end, we shall not find the name "God" mentioned once. The reader will immediately reply, that seeing that the word "God" is English, and the Hebrew word for God is "El," that does not prove that God Himself is unnamed. So with the nations of prophecy. He who could inspire the prophets with such peculiar accuracy to speak of events so far remote from their own day, could have easily caused Isaiah or Jeremiah to have given modern names to the nations spoken of. But what good purpose would this have served? The ancient nomenclature serves as a vail in some instances, so that the responsibility of the nations for their actions shall be in no sense influenced, but as surely as the nation of Israel must come into touch with the nations of the earth now in existence, so surely must these old names of Hebrew Scripture belong to many of them.

To take an example that is fairly generally known. Gomer, the son of Japheth, is named in the prophets, yet what nation does that name represent to-day? It is usually accepted that Gomer, who is called Gimirra by the Assyrians, and Kimmerii by the Greeks, and Cimbri by the Romans, is the name of the Welsh or Celtic race. The Jews have always maintained that Ashkenaz refers to Germany. Tubal is connected with a people that travelled from the Black Sea to Sicily, Spain, &c.

Without joining the ranks of those who undertake to give dates for prophetic events, we realize that it is not possible for the tribulation and restoration of Israel to take place without some reference to that nation that framed the "Balfour Declaration," whose army freed Jerusalem from the Turk, and who received the mandate for Palestine from the League of Nations. This people will follow their own ways, and be under no constraint by reason of the teaching of prophecy, any more than Israel were compelled to sin, yet nevertheless did so in full accord with the prophetic Word which was in their hands. Under one or more of their ancient names all modern nations come, and however many and multifarious the nations of the earth may appear, their number is in reality 70, and their habitations are fixed with regard to Israel and Israel's hope (Deut. xxxii. 8). It will be readily understood that a detailed examination of the teaching of the prophets lies quite outside the scope of these articles; we can but give a brief word by way of example.

The nation and the nations.

Under the title "The day of the Lord" we have quoted Isa. ii. 2 and noticed that when the Lord's house is established "all nations shall flow unto it." Zech. xiv. 16 gives in fuller detail:

"It shall come to pass, that everyone that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast or tabernacles."

Speaking of Israel, the Lord says:

"I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard My fame, neither have seen My glory; and they shall declare My glory among the Gentiles" (lsa. lxvi. 19).

Thus shall the evangelization of the world be really accomplished. There is, moreover, the precious promise of Isa. xxv. 7:

"And He will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations."

The reader must pursue this marvellous theme in the prophets in order to discover the many features of judgment and blessing that are in store for the nations of the earth. Moreover, the tracing out of the prophetic statements concerning anyone of the nations cannot fail to be illuminating. The prophetic witness concerning Assyria and Egypt is particularly valuable. Enough has been brought forward to demonstrate the fact that the hope of Israel as a nation (Jer. xxxi. 36), and the nations of the earth are to be taken literally, and the discerning student will not fail to see how this literal interpretation cannot be withheld from the sequel to the O.T. prophets concerning "the hope of Israel" contained in the Gospels, the Acts, many of the Epistles, and the book of the Revelation, neither will he fail to appreciate the fact that those epistles which professedly deal with a "mystery" hidden from the ages and the generations, which know neither Greek nor Jew, which look to heaven itself for their sphere of blessing- and citizenship, cannot possibly be "all one and the same" in doctrine, dispensation, and destiny with the subjects of the O.T. Prophets.

Redemption. New Series.

#8. A fresh enquiry into the meaning of redemption.

pp. 25 - 31

Whether we listen to the Evangelist, read the everyday Christian writer, or ponder the deeper theological volumes, we shall find that redemption is used interchangeably with atonement, salvation, reconciliation, or any and all of the blessings of life, peace and forgiveness that flow from the sacrifice of Christ.

The one offering and the many.

The confusion (for such we believe it to be) is in measure due to the fact that one side of truth has been apprehended at the expense of the other. In the O.T. we find a series of offerings, including offerings that have as their primary feature acceptable and fragrant surrender, as in the whole burnt offering, offerings that as a sacrifice for sin are burned to ashes outside the camp, the annual offering of the day of atonement, the daily offerings of the morning and evening sacrifice, the Passover lamb offered at Israel's deliverance. These and the rest not mentioned are all included in the one great antitypical offering of Christ "once for all".

By the same offering He offered Himself as a sweet smelling savour unto God, died under the curse of the law, was made sin for us who knew no sin, made peace through the blood of His cross, and became the great propitiation. It is fundamental to see that all O.T. typical sacrifices are embraced in the offering of the cross. It is nevertheless the starting point of much error to confuse these varied aspects of His one great work.

Redemption distinct from atonement.

For the time being we leave unquestioned the word atonement, using it to cover the whole range of offerings instituted by Moses and offered "for sin", "for cleansing", and "for acceptance". The point we wish to make clear at the moment is that redemption is to be considered as belonging to a class by itself, and is not to be confounded with the remaining offerings which for present convenience we classify under the heading atonement. The distinction we seek to prove may be visualized if we briefly consider the history of the offerings connected with Israel, proofs of a more definite character being given later.

For our purpose, Israel's history commences in Egyptian bondage. One offering, and one only, is connected with their redemption from the house of bondage; that is the Passover lamb. No priest is connected with this offering; no altar is sprinkled with its blood; no hands are placed upon its head; no atonement is made by it for sin; no acceptance is said to follow. This one offering is the only sacrifice connected with Israel offered in Egypt. Before another sacrifice is offered they must leave Egypt, and pass through the Red Sea. All the other offerings, however they may differ in their individual purposes, are grouped together in that they deal with the sin of God's redeemed people. They are all associated with an altar and a priesthood, and have the sanctuary of God in view.

The failure rightly to divide the Word of truth, and to try the things that differ, increases in importance and disastrous effects as the truth under consideration increases in importance. No doctrine of Scripture is so fundamental as that of sacrifice, and consequently no greater opportunity occurs for erecting false theories than here. Over and over again one takes up a treatise that, starting with redemption, runs off into atonement. Proofs started with redemption and belonging only to redemption are mistakenly carried over, and triumphantly applied to reconciliation. It is indeed regrettable.

What is redemption? Padah and Pesach.

Having indicated what we believe to be a scriptural distinction, we will now proceed to proofs. Let us examine the words used for redemption, and the nature of the redemption effected. Three words demand attention, viz., gaal, padah, and pesach. In earlier papers we have seen that gaal indicates that redemption which is carried out by a kinsman, and the reader is referred to Volume XII, pages 109-115. There we found that the book of Ruth provides a full presentation of what is involved in the Kinsman-Redeemer, and that Christ as God manifest in the flesh, could alone satisfy all the scriptural statements on the subject. Passing therefore to the next word we will examine the Hebrew word padah.

The primary meaning of padah is "to sever, separate, or divide". In Exod. viii. 23 we read, "I will put a division between My people and thy people". "Division" is p'doth, the margin reads "a redemption", while the LXX gives diastolen, which occurs in Rom. iii. 22 as "difference". Again in Isa. xxix. 22 we read, "The Lord, Who redeemed Abraham". The LXX translates redeemed by aphorisen = "hath separated", which occurs in Matt. xiii. 49; Rom. i. 1; II Cor. vi. 17, etc. If we take a glance at the context of Isa. xxix., we shall find that immediately following the section xxix. 22-24 comes the woe pronounced upon those who made a league with Egypt (Isa. xxx. 1-17). Redemption involved separation and division from Egypt, and Abraham's separation is brought to mind as a word of warning. One other use of the word will suffice. In the name Padan-Aram it denotes that tract of country separated so markedly by the two rivers Euphrates and Tigris, and so called by the Greeks Mesopotamia, the land lying in the midst of the rivers.

The third woe we must consider is pesach. This word followed by al ("over") means to pass or leap over. In I Kings xviii. 26 we read, "and they leaped upon the altar". In Isa. xxxi. 5 we read, "As birds flying (or hovering) . . . . . passing over He will preserve it". Spurrell's translation reads, "As hen birds fluttering . . . . . springing forward and rescuing". In I Kings xviii. 21 the prophet cries, "How long halt ye between two opinions?" and in II Sam. iv. 4; v. 6-8; ix. 13; xix. 26, either verb or adjective, the word is translated "lame".

The Passover was God's great stepping over of Israel, wherein He made a division and a difference (padah) between them and the Egyptians, and this effected by the Passover lamb typified that this redemption was that of the great Kinsman-Redeemer (gaal).

The testimony of Heb. ii.

The Lamb of God is Christ, and He in order to redeem became flesh and blood. As Kinsman-Redeemer His first great work was redemption, not atonement. Heb. ii. brings the Lord Jesus forward under three great aspects:--

1. Made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death not with sin in view, but with the redemption of the forfeited dominion given to Adam. "All things under His feet . . . . . leading many sons to glory" (Heb. ii. 5-13).
2. Made like the children of flesh and blood, He came with the object of destroying the devil, with particular reference to His hold upon DEATH, and of delivering from its bondage those who were all their lifetime held in its fear. Again, sin is not in view.
3. Made like unto His brethren in all things, this time to deal with SINS, and therefore He is presented as a PRIEST, and makes a PROPITIATION for the sins of the PEOPLE.

Here the distinction is faithfully observed. Redemption touches (1) inheritance, (2) bondage; this we have shewn in earlier papers, and this is taught here in Heb. ii. 5-16. Atonement touches the sins of a redeemed people, and is connected with a priest. No unsaved person is related to atonement; this is exclusive to the redeemed.

The kinsman and the passover.

When God would teach by type the truth of the resurrection, He had one of two ways open before Him:--

1. To perform a miracle every time the sacrifice was offered.
2. To arrange the typical offering so that it would set forth with sufficient clearness the fact of death and resurrection, without any miraculous interposition.

The second way is the way adopted. One bird is killed in an earthen vessel over running water, and in order to set forth resurrection another living bird, together with hyssop, cedar-wood, and scarlet, is dipped into the blood and set free. The blood moreover was sprinkled (presumably with the hyssop) upon the leper who was to be cleansed, and the death and resurrection of the substitutes applied to him (Lev. xiv. 1-7).

The firstborn son in Scripture occupies a unique position—a position not only of privilege, but of responsibility. This can be seen manifested in the concern of Reuben for Joseph (Gen. xxxvii. 30). Israel was the Lord's son, even His firstborn, and He warned Pharaoh that if he would not let Israel go, He would slay Pharaoh's firstborn. The Passover lamb was not selected "for sin", but "a lamb for a house", and if a household were too small to be thus represented, they were to join with another. The house was connected with death, "There was not a house where there was not one dead" (Exod. xii. 30), which was as true of Israel as of Egypt, only that in Israel's case the lamb died instead of the firstborn. It will be seen therefore that the Passover lamb really sets forth the Kinsman-Redeemer, the great Firstborn. Had the title of Christ "the Prototokos" (Col. i. 15) been read from this standpoint of the exodus and the Kinsman-Redeemer, much profitless and harmful speculation would never have seen the light.

The Passover is the great type of redemption in the Scriptures, "Thou wast a bondman in Egypt, and the Lord God redeemed thee thence" (Deut. xxiv. 18). Just as the sprinkling of the living bird with the blood by means of the hyssop spoke of resurrection, so the sprinkling of the doorposts with the blood by means of the hyssop spoke of redemption and deliverance.

Redemption and its object.

The Hebrew words gaal and padah occur some 170 times in the O.T. We read of redemption from Egypt, bondage, enemies, troubles, evil, destruction, death, and the grave. We have to the best of our ability searched the Scriptures, and have to record that out of all the places where padah and gaal occur, but one passage definitely associates redemption with iniquity, and that passage is Psa. cxxx. 8. There is no place where redemption is ever said to be for or from sin or sins. Now this statement of itself is so opposed to popular teaching and loose thinking that we doubt not that many readers will feel impelled to put the matter to the test before going further. If they do, it will transfer the responsibility to themselves that they keep redemption to its scriptural sphere.

There are several Greek words that stand as equivalents for padah and gaal; they are rhuomai, lutroo, lutrosis, apolutrosis, agorazo, and exagorazo. We must remember that these occur in the translation called the LXX, and though valuable beyond description, can never alter the original doctrine settled in the Hebrew originals. The LXX uses some of these Greek words in translating both redemption and atonement, and therefore great care must be exercised in deciding which is in view in any one N.T. passage. Examining their associations we find a people redeemed from the hand of their enemies, from the curse of the law, from vain conversation, but rarely redeemed from sin or sins. The resurrection is spoken of as the redemption of the body, the inheritance is spoken of as a purchased possession redeemed, the dominion of sin is broken by the deliverance from this body of death. Deliverance is moreover spoken of as from darkness, wrath, temptation, evil.

Titus ii. 14 quotes Psa. cxxx., where we read of redemption from all iniquity. Heb. ix. 15 speaks of redemption of the transgressions under the first covenant. Eph. i. 7 links redemption with forgiveness of sins, and Rom. iii. 24 with justification. These four passages are the only ones that actually associate redemption with sin or iniquity. The great provision for sin is expressed by atonement, and not by redemption. Titus ii. 14, with its emphasis upon the future coming of the Lord and the peculiar people, places this passage in line with that redemption of Israel out of Egypt when they too were made a peculiar people (Exod. xix.). Heb. ix. 15 and Rom. iii. 24 have one thing in common, namely, "the sins of the past". Eph. i. 7 associates redemption and forgiveness, but other scriptures reveal that forgiveness arose out of atonement made for a redeemed people. The bondage, the enemy, the evil, the curse, from which Israel were redeemed, are all so many scriptural titles of death.

Redemption and death.

Where the O.T. departs from mundane things like bondage, or enemies, it translates these not into terms of sin, but of death:--

> "I will ransom them from the power of the GRAVE; I will redeem them from DEATH" (Hosea xiii. 14).
>
> "None can by any means redeem his brother . . . . . that he should . . . . . not see corruption . . . . . Like sheep they are laid in the grave, death shall feed on them . . . . . but God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave" (Psa. xlix. 7-15).
>
> "Deliver him from going down to the pit. I have found a ransom" (Job xxxiii.24).
>
> "I know that my redeemer liveth . . . . . and though worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God" (Job xix. 25, 26).

Redemption goes back beyond our own personal sins to the one sin of Adam that involved us all in death. "By one man sin entered the world, and death by sin" (Rom. v. 12). Redemption is found in Gen. iii.—"The seed of the woman". Atonement is found in Gen. iv.—"The offering of Abel". Gen. iii. speaks of the curse, of an enemy, of death. Gen. iv. speaks of sin, of acceptance. In Gen. iii. it is the Lord Who slays the animal and provides the protection, symbolizing the promise already given of the Seed who, while bruising the serpent's head, should be bruised in the heel. That is redemption, and the issue is "the way of the tree of life'. In Gen. iv. it is man that brings the offering to God, and it is accepted or rejected according as it set forth the atonement of Christ or not. The issue here is acceptance.

Throughout Scripture redemption and atonement are kept distinct. While we have seen that the Passover lamb sets forth the work of Christ as redeemer, we still have to look for some scriptural expression that shall visualize for us just what part of the exodus reveals the inner meaning of redemption. The moment we describe in one word the passage of Israel out of Egypt, we use the scriptural word we are in search of.

#9. A fresh enquiry into the meaning of redemption.
pp. 55 - 58

It has been the policy of The Berean Expositor not only to seek the truth, but to so write that true "Bereans" may have the fullest opportunity of "searching and of seeing whether these things are so". The word exodus is, as we know, the name given to the second book of Moses in the Greek translation known as the LXX. It is therefore no part of O.T. Scripture. It occurs however in the N.T. Peter speaks of his "decease" in II Pet. i. 15, and uses the word exodus. Heb. xi. 22 speaks of Joseph mentioning the "departing" or exodus of Israel. The passage however from which light comes is Luke ix. 31, its first occurrence. This has reference to the transfiguration of the Lord. Moses and Elijah were seen together with the Lord, and the subject of their conversation was "His exodus which He should accomplish at Jerusalem".

Both Moses and Elijah were personally interested in the idea of the exodus, for singularly they both experienced it symbolically. Is it merely a coincidence that both Moses and Elijah passed through divided waters at a crisis in their lives?

> "Lift thou up thy rod, and stretch out thine hand over the sea, and divide it: and the children of Israel shall go on dry ground through the midst of the sea" (Exod. xiv. 16).
> "They two stood by Jordan. And Elijah took his mantle, and wrapped it together, and smote the waters, and they were divided hither and thither, so that they two went over on dry ground" (II Kings ii. 7, 8).

The passage through the Red Sea was a symbol of death and resurrection. Paul says that there Israel were "baptised into Moses" (I Cor. x. 2). This same Paul taught that the symbol of water baptism had the same message. It baptized into Christ, and if into Christ then into His death and resurrection (Rom. vi. 3-5).

Redemption from the house of bondage was by the blood of the Passover lamb, and led down through the waters of the Red Sea up to the shore beyond, where Israel could sing the song of triumph. Redemption we learned put a "division" between Israel and the Egyptians. Where Israel passed through unhurt "the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned" (Heb. xi. 29). This marks the great division of the earth in connection with redemption. Israel are redeemed and come forth from their typical death. For them the blood had been shed. The Egyptians are drowned. They do not share the miraculous triumph over the symbolic grave. To them the Passover lamb was a self-confessed "abomination". For Israel there could be burnt offerings, sin offerings, and atonement, but not for the Egyptians. These offerings were for the redeemed and for the redeemed alone. Coming back to Gen. iii. and iv. we notice that the one who had no acceptable offering was Cain, equivalent to the Egyptian, the seed of the wicked one.

The believer and death.

"The wages of sin is death." For the moment we will not press any particular meaning into the word "death", but are sure that whatever a person may believe as to "eternal death", "spiritual death", and the like, that actual, literal, physical death cannot eliminated from the wages of sin. Adam lived 930 years and he died. He returned to the dust from which he was taken (Gen. iii. 19). Death passed upon all men. Sin reigned unto death. In Adam all die. As we have said, conceding for argument's sake that physical death is the smallest part of the results of sin—it is a part. Now if redemption was accomplished by Christ bearing the penalty attached to sin, and if physical death be but a part of that penalty, then if as the Calvinist sings:--

> "Payment He cannot twice demand,
> First at my bleeding Surety's hand,
> And then again at mine," no believer should ever die. We need no testimony or theory other than our own painful experience, that "There is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked . . . . . As is the good, so is the sinner" (Eccles. ix. 12). Death, physical death, which came by Adam's sin, is the common end of saint and sinner. What then is the blessing of redemption? Life from the dead. It is an exodus. It leads down into the symbolic grave of the Red Sea on its path to glory.
