The O.T. Scriptures were divided into three parts and we find the Lord Jesus recognizing this in Luke xxiv. 44:

> "And He saith unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning Me. Then opened He their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures."

The third division, the Psalms, included more than the Psalms themselves and comprised in addition, Proverbs, Job, the Song of Solomon, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, Esther, Daniel, Ezra-Nehemiah and Chronicles. In the large, the Psalms were written (1) for public praise in the Temple, (2) for private experience and prayer (which covers all ages) and (3) prophecy, looking forward to the coming of Messiah and the establishment of the earthly phase of God's kingdom over the whole Gentile world through redeemed Israel. It has been said that the Psalms constitute Israel's hymn book and while this is true, they also cover a wider ground.

The Psalms are divided into five books each ending with a doxology and a double or single Amen except the last one Psa. cl. Book 1, Psa. i.-xli.; Book 2, Psa. xlii.-lxxii.; Book 3, Psa. lxxiii.-lxxxix.; Book 4, Psa. xc.-cvi.; Book 5, Psa. cvii.-cl. These five books have been compared with the Mosaic Pentateuch and their arrangement is ancient although there is not unanimous opinion as to when they were given their present form.

The Authorship and Age.

These two matters are obviously related, for if we are sure of the authorship, it would not be difficult to fix the date. It has been fashionable for certain critics to assume late dates for the greater number of the Psalms and to find their origin in the later Persian and Greek periods, and in the Maccabaean age. There is no need for this, for the heavy weight of evidence is for the major portion of the Psalms to have been written from David to Hezekiah (B.C.1000 to B.C.700 and the rest probably belong in the main to the exilic and post-exilic periods). This does not mean that we can pronounce with certainty the actual year in which they were written. Out of the 150 Psalms, 101 are related to authors by their title. Of these 73 are attributed to David, 10 to the school of Korah, 12 to the school of Asaph, 2 to Solomon, 1 to Ethan, 1 to Heman, 1 to Moses and 50 are anonymous.

We have the N.T. to guide and help us on this question of authorship. This will certainly carry weight with those who believe in the divine origin of the Word of God. The unbelieving critic alas, will not be impressed. No less an authority than the Lord Jesus Christ stated that David wrote Psa. cx.:

> ". . . . . Jesus asked them (the Pharisees), saying, What think ye of Christ? Whose son is He? They say unto Him, The Son of David. He saith unto them, How then doth David in spirit call Him Lord, saying, the Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou on My right hand, till I make Thine enemies Thy footstool?" (Matthew xxii. 41-44; Psa. cx. 1 and see Luke xx. 41-43).

In Mark's account the Lord Jesus adds the fact that in saying the words of Psa. cx. 1, David spoke by the Holy Ghost, so we have a doubly divine guarantee of the human authorship of this Psalm. Those who reject this are deliberately flouting the Holy Spirit and the One Who said, "I am the Truth" (John xiv. 6). Not only this, but the book of the Acts asserts that David spoke before concerning the treachery of Judas and did so "by the Holy Ghost" (Acts i. 16-18; Psa. xli. 9; John xiii. 18). In Acts iv. 25 we are assured that David wrote Psa. ii.

Again, the Apostle Paul in Rom. iv. 6, 7 stated:

> "Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works saying, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered" (Psa. xxxii. 1, 2).

Also in Rom. xi. 9:

> "And David saith, Let their table be made a snare, and a trap, and a stumbling block, and a recompense unto them: Let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow down their back alway" (Psa. lxix. 22, 23).

In addition we have the testimony of Hebrews that David is the author of Psa. xcv.:

> ". . . . . Today, if ye will hear His voice, harden not your hearts" (Heb. iv. 7).

This same context dealing with Psa. xcv. is quoted more fully in Heb. ii. 7-11 and declared to be the words of the Holy Ghost (Heb. iii. 7), so once more God has given a double testimony to the truth and human authorship of this Psalm and this will never be questioned by any who revere the Word of God as the Word of Truth.

If Hezekiah's "My songs" (Isa. xxxviii. 20) were ever incorporated into the Psalter, they will surely be the ten anonymous Songs of Degrees, for reasons that will be given later in this series of studies. There is no doubt that the foundation of the Psalms is Davidic. A. F. Kirkpatrick says:

> "with the son of Jesse a new era of religious poetry commenced. He also was the originator of the Temple liturgy (I Chron. xxv.). His skill as a poet and musician, and his interest in the development of religious music are attested by the earliest records. The leaders of the return from the exile believed themselves to be restoring his institutions" (The Book of Psalms).

However, we must remember that the Psalms were not the earliest hymns. We have the song of Moses (Exod. xv. 1-19); of Miriam (Exod. xv. 20, 21); of Deborah (Judg.v.1) and of Hannah (a prayer, but surely praise as well, I Sam. ii. 1-10).

As regards the ancient titles of the Psalms we shall be considering these in another study. One recurring title is: To (or for) the Chief Musician. It occurs in connection with fifty-five Psalms. These must have been composed and later handed over to the choir master of the Temple for use as hymns of praise and worship in the Temple services.

Systematic training in music started with the schools of the prophets inaugurated by Samuel (see I Sam. x. 5) and note the association with prophecy. This is confirmed in I Chron. xxv. 1-3:

> "Moreover David and the captains of the host separated to the service of the sons of Asaph, and of Heman, and of Jeduthun, who should prophesy with harps, with psalteries, and with cymbals . . . . ." (and note verses 2 and 3).

Note also the early reference to music in Gen. xxxi. 26, 27. Music played a large part in the worship of the Lord as described in the O.T. and this was all in accordance with His mind and will. As regards musical instruments themselves we are not certain of some of them and their characteristics. Psalteries and harps would be stringed instruments. Organs would be nothing like our modern instruments but would be reed pipes. Trumpets were silver and ram's horns. The tabret was like the tambourine and the timbrel was a drum. Could we have heard the sound of these O.T. orchestras and the music they played, more than likely we should have been puzzled. Our Western ears would have heard nothing like it. It is practically certain that there was no harmony as we know it today, but singing was in unison or in octaves, possibly like plain-song and the natural speech rhythm we now have in singing the psalms. This does not mean that such music was not impressive. One has only to read the descriptions in the O.T. of special occasions when praise and rejoicing were accorded to the Lord. Such a time was the procession of the Ark as recorded in II Sam. vi. 5:

> "And David and all the house of Israel played before the Lord on all manner of instruments made of fir wood, even on harps and on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets and cymbals" (see also I Chron. xv. & xvi. and note xv.16,27,28; xvi.41,42).

Surely two of the most impressive occasions were the crowning of Solomon and the dedication of the Temple:

> "So when David was old and full of days he made Solomon his son king over Israel . . . . . and four thousand praised the Lord with the instruments which I made, said David to praise therewith" (I Chron. xxiii. 1, 5).

Imagine an orchestra of 4,000 players! We sometimes go in for massed bands today but seldom is there anything to match this! The number of the choir is given as 288 in I Chron. xxv. 7, small by comparison, but this chapter is dealing with the normal services of the Temple.

At the dedication of the Temple to the Lord we have the striking detail that is given in II Chron. v., and the whole chapter v. should be read. Here is the conclusion:

> "Also the Levites, which were the singers . . . . . having cymbals and psalteries and harps, stood at the east end of the altar, and with them an hundred and twenty priests sounding with trumpets. It came to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord; and when they lifted up their voice with the trumpets and cymbals and instruments of music, and praised the Lord, saying, For He is good; for His mercy endureth for ever: that then the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the Lord; so that the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud: for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of God" (verses 12-14).

What an uplifting yet awe-inspiring scene and sound this must have been, and the Lord accepted it as a token of praise when He entered with His overwhelming glory to claim His house.

When one thinks of the arguments and upsets that have occurred in some sections of Christendom over the introduction of instruments such as the organ to support the singing, one wonders what the objectors would have felt like had they been present on this great occasion! Would they have been offended or joined wholeheartedly in the paean of praise? We have little doubt as to this.

We know of course that undue emphasis on music can be a snare in public worship, specially when the praise is coming from the lips only and not from the heart. But then anything that is out of proportion can become a snare. Holiness is whole-ness and balance and we do well always to remember this. To hear the Lord's praise in the Temple must have been an unforgettable and uplifting experience. May all our praise today when we meet together be likewise, as with heart and voice we honour and worship Him Who loved us and gave Himself for us. Let us never forget that the Lord listens to our praise as much as our prayers and with that in view we should give Him our best even though this is imperfect. May the Lord keep us ever praising and thanking Him. This is such a bulwark against failure and declension!

No.2. pp. 66 - 72

One of the things that the diligent student of the Psalms discovers is their amazing range of feeling and expression. It has been said there is no human experience that is missing from this part of the O.T. We give some indication of the wide range covered by various Psalms.

(1) Prayers for blessing and protection (lxxxvi., cii.).
(2) Psalms of praise for special mercies, the wonders of creation, the majesty of God (xlvii., lxviii., civ.).
(3) Psalms asking for divine intervention and deliverance from danger, calamity, enemies and sickness (xxxviii., lxxxviii.).
(4) Confession of faith that God is Creator, King over the earth, Judge and moral Ruler of the universe (xxxii., xciv., xcvii., cxiv., cxxxvi.).
(5) Psalms of penitence for sin of which there are seven (vi., xxxi., xxxviii., li., cii., cxxx., cxliii.).
(6) Intercession for the king, the people, the house of David, and Jerusalem (xxi., xlvii., lxxxix., cxxii.).
(7) Imprecatory Psalms (xxxv., xlix., cix.).
(8) Psalm of wisdom and religious instruction (xxxvii., xlix., cxxii., etc.).
(9) Experimental Psalms which deal with the strange experiences that befall God's people and the puzzling prosperity of the wicked (xvi., xlix., xciv., etc.).
(10) Psalms which praise the greatness of the Torah (the Law) and the Word of God generally (cxix.).

With this great variety and coverage it is no wonder that believers of all ages have been attracted to the Psalms.

The Psalm Titles.

The meaning of these titles has been obscure since ancient times and it is apparent that the key to their understanding had been lost very early. Bible students of all schools have acknowledged this. In his work on the Psalms, Bishop Jebb stated that "so great are the difficulties attending this enquiry, that, in many instances, little more than conjectures can be offered" (vol.2 p.133). Delitzsch declared that "the Septuagint found them already in existence and did not understand them . . . . . the key to their comprehension must have been lost very early" (Commentary on the Psalms).

And yet there is general agreement that these titles form a part of the primitive sacred text and are connected in some way with the Temple worship.

Early in this century, however, the key was discovered by Dr. J. W. Thirtle who was editor of The Christian at this time. He noticed that the third chapter of Habakkuk was a typical Psalm with a superscription and subscription. The superscription was "A prayer of Habakkuk the prophet upon Shigionoth" (verse 1). Verses 2-19 give the Psalm proper. At the end we have the well-known phrase "To the chief Musician" (upon Neginoth). If we look at the Psalms in our English Bible we note that the phrase "To the chief Musician" is always found at the beginning of a Psalm, or, in other words, as a superscription. We should bear in mind that, in the original manuscript, there was no break or division between the various Psalms. There is not even a space between the lines from the beginning to the end of a page. Consequently, when the Psalms were separated, a division had to be made somewhere and our Bibles follow the Septuagint who consistently divided and put the phrase "To the chief Musician" at the top of the Psalm, whereas Hab. iii. makes it clear that this should have been left as the subscription of the preceding Psalm. In other words some of these titles have got appended to the wrong Psalm!

No wonder that Bible commentators have been puzzled in the past and could find no connection in meaning of the title to the Psalm to which it was attached. If we read Hezekiah's psalm of praise recorded in Isa. xxxviii. 9-20, we find he ends in a similar way to the phrase "To the chief Musician". He says ". . . . . therefore we will sing my songs to the stringed instruments all the days of our life in the house of the Lord" (20).

The Psalms therefore had three divisions, not two. (1) The superscription, (2) The Psalm proper, (3) The subscription, "To the chief Musician". It is good to know that the Psalm titles have been correctly appended in The Companion Bible, though we do not know of any other edition of the Bible where this has been done.

Once these titles are in their right position they begin to shed light on the Psalm to which they are properly attached. They do not solve every problem as, in some cases, there is not agreement among scholars as to the exact meaning of some of the Hebrew words. As an example of the help in understanding that Dr. Thirtle's discovery gives us, we can look at Psa. lv. In our A.V. the phrase "To the chief Musician upon Jonath-elem-rechokim" stands as part of the superscription of Psa. lvi. Using the key given to us we should place it as the subscription to the previous Psalm which is lv. The words mean "the dove of the distant woods" and we shall search Psa. lvi. in vain for any reference either literally or figuratively to a dove. But the moment we connect it with the 55th Psalm we cannot help but notice that in verse 6 David says:

> ". . . . . oh that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away, and be at rest."

David likens himself to a dove. He was in deep trouble through the rebellion of Absalom recorded in II Samuel xv.-xix. Like Hezekiah, "he mourned as a dove" (Isa.xxxviii.14). He tells of his weeping, his fearfulness and trembling and how he longed to be like a dove, to fly away and be at rest (verses 4-8). Not only did he face the deep trouble Absalom's insurrection brought, but he was deserted by his close friend Ahithophel to whom he alludes in verses 12-14:

> "For it was not an enemy that reproached me; then I could have borne it . . . . . but it was thou, a man mine equal, my guide and my familiar friend (R.V.). We took sweet counsel together and walked unto the house of God in company."

David knew the bitter experience of being let down and deserted by a close friend. With all these troubles pressing upon him, no wonder he longed to be like a dove and fly away and be freed from these exceedingly painful happenings. David was going through a similar trial as his greater Son centuries later Who was betrayed by one of his intimate circle, namely Judas. Judas, like Ahithophel, went and hanged himself (II Sam. xvii. 23; Matt. xxvii. 5-8).

At this juncture it will be helpful for us to look at the meaning of some of the Hebrew words which occur in connection with the Psalm titles.

Shoshannim and Gittith.

The first word occurs in connection with Psa. xliv. and lxviii. (not xlv. and lxix. as in the A.V.). Certain Psalms were used on special occasions in the Temple worship just as there are some designated as "proper Psalms" for certain days in our modern churches. The great feasts of Passover and Tabernacles would certainly have their own proper Psalms, for they were the first and last of Jehovah's feasts as commanded in Lev. xxiii. and marked the beginning and ending of Israel's religious year which covered a span of seven months. Shoshannim means lilies and gittith means wine-presses. Passover was the spring feast and Tabernacles was the autumn feast. The universal symbol of spring is flower and of autumn, fruit. In Bible lands, lilies are spring flowers and grapes and pomegranates are fruits of autumn. Moreover, the nation of Israel is repeatedly symbolized as a vine (Isa. v. 1-7; xxvii.2-6; Jer. ii. 21; xii. 10; Psa. lxxx. 8; Hos. x. 1). It was also represented as a lily (see 2 Esdras 5:23-28 R.V. and Hos. 14:5-7). Lilies and pomegranates were seen everywhere in the Temple (I Kings vii. 18-20).

Thus the lily represented spring and the spring feast of Passover which sets forth redemption. Pomegranates represented autumn and the feast of Tabernacles which shadows forth the realization of the earthly kingdom with redeemed Israel enjoying their earthly inheritance and God's purpose for the whole earth at last bearing fruit and becoming a wonderful reality.

Shoshannim is also connected with the word eduth which means testimony and belongs to Psa. lix. and lxxix. not lx. and lxxx. as in the A.V. The probability is that these Psalms were linked with the conclusion of Passover, 50 days later, namely Pentecost, or the Feast of weeks. This was to be done when Israel came into the promised land. It could not be kept in the wilderness. Passover celebrates and portrays the Lord's mighty deliverance of His people from the bondage of Egypt. The divine purpose was not complete until they set foot in the land (Exod. iii. 8; Lev. xxiii. 10-21). Moses testifies "He brought us out from thence that He might being us in" (Deut. vi. 23). This conclusion was celebrated in the two Psalms mentioned above, even though there were enemies in the land, yet in the power of Jehovah they could be subdued.

This is generally translated as meaning "the death of the champion" and interpreted by some of Goliath. It is of course linked with Psa. viii. and not Psa. ix. as in our English version. The Septuagint however renders it quite differently. "Concerning the secrets of the Son" and here it seems clear that the Septuagint translators did understand the original Hebrew. Psa. viii. concerns the first Adam, the son of God and his earthly dominion, typical of the last Adam, the Lord Jesus Christ (Heb. ii. 6-9) and His final exaltation over all creation. This tremendous truth was not revealed at once in the Scriptures. Little by little the divine purpose concerning His final triumph is revealed and comes to its climax in Eph. i. and Phil. ii. In Ephesians Paul declares his knowledge concerning the Secret (mystery) of Christ, revealed to him by that same exalted One and in his allusion to Psalm viii. (Eph. i. 17-23) dominion over earthly things gives way to universal dominion in heaven as well as earth (verses 20-22). Here the secret concerning the Lord's final exaltation "far above all" is revealed in all its fulness. Those who want fuller details should consult The Alphabetical Analysis Part 4 p.211.

Mahalath.

This word is connected with Psa. lii. (not liii.) and is linked with the word leannoth with reference to Psa. lxxxvii. (not lxxxviii.). As opposed to the above, it is evident here that the translators of the Septuagint were baffled, for they do not attempt to translate the word but just transliterate it as macleth which has no meaning whatsoever. Some ancient interpreters rendered the word For, or in the Dance, but could see no connection with this title and the psalms to which it is attached (liii. and lxxxviii.) in our English translation. Directly they are linked with the previous Psalms the meaning becomes clear. In Psa. lii. the reference is to the Lord's deliverance of Israel from the Philistines and Goliath's blasphemous challenge (1-5). If we turn to I Sam. xviii. 6, 7 we read that the women came out of all the cities of Israel, singing and dancing, which expressed their rejoicing concerning David's victory over Goliath. Twice afterwards this event was referred to as a great historical event (I Sam. xxi. 11 and xxix. 5).

The dancings and shouting (Mahalath leannoth) the title connected with Psa. lxxxvii. (not lxxxviii.) surely refer to the significant event in David's life when the Ark was restored to Israel after being taken by the Philistines.

When David came to the throne, his first action was to bring up the Ark of God to Zion and II Sam. vi. gives us the account of this great event. In verses 14 and 15 we read:

> "And David danced before the Lord with all his might . . . . . so David and all the house of Israel brought up the Ark of Jehovah with shouting and with the sound of the trumpet."

It was a time of great rejoicing. There was only one fit place for the Ark of God and that was Zion. Other places might make their boast and set forth their claims. Men might claim their citizenship of other cities, but there was one city that God delighted in and was yet to be the joy of the whole earth. The time would surely come when all the other boasts of earthly cities would fade into nothingness beside the privilege of being born in and belonging to Zion (Jerusalem). In the future earthly kingdom, it is this city that will be the premier one on the earth, both spiritually and commercially and from this will radiate God's light and truth to the whole world through the mediation of saved and restored Israel.

Aijeleth Hash-Shahar (The Day-Dawn).

This title occurs once only and belongs rightly to Psa. xxi. as a subscription. The margin gives as its meaning, the hind of the morning. This is a common Eastern poetical expression for the dawning of the day. The figure is that of the rays of the rising sun shooting up above the horizon like horns before the sun actually appears, just as the horns of a deer might be seen above the rising ground before his body comes into view. It denotes therefore the rays of the sun, the first beams of light mounting up as is frequently seen in pictures of the sun rising. The Psalm title means the day-dawn, a lovely picture of the beginning of Messiah's reign, when the night and darkness of man's dominion will be abolished, and the light of the One Who declared Himself to be the light of the world will spread over the whole earth at His second coming. Psa. xxi. deals outwardly with David and his sovereignty, but it is prophetic of David's greater Son.

David uses the same beautiful poetic description of Messiah's kingdom in II.Sam.xxiii.. 1-5:

> "And He shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain" (verse 4), and the glories of the Lord's earthly kingdom are graphically described in Psa. lxxii., at the end of which we read "the prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended" (verse 20). This does not mean that this Psalm was David's last prayer. It is rather that when the glorious prophecy of Psa. lxxii. is fulfilled, all David's prayers will be consummated and all his hopes wonderfully realized.

Al-Taschith (Destroy not).

The Psalms to which this title is properly attached are four: lvi., lvii., lviii. and lxxiv. Al-Taschith means 'destroy not' and these Psalms are a special appeal for mercy and justice at a time of crisis.

In the wilderness the Lord had threatened to destroy the whole nation of Israel and make another nation of Moses (Exod. xxxii. 10). Moses' reply is summed up in Deuteronomy ix. 25 and 26 "I prayed unto the Lord and said, O Lord God, destroy not Thy people and Thine inheritance . . . . .". These Psalms are a similar petition, bearing in mind the promise recorded in Deut. iv. 30, 31:

"When thou art in tribulation, and all these things are come upon thee, even in the latter days, if thou turn to the Lord thy God, and shalt be obedient unto His voice; (for the Lord thy God is a merciful God); He will not forsake thee, neither destroy thee, nor forget the covenant of thy fathers which he sware unto them."

Nehiloth.

We keep this title to Psa. iv., not Psa. v. Some commentators derive the word from chalal to bore, which, by transition leads to the world 'flute'. However, the ancient versions suggest another derivation. Aquila's version of the Septuagint has "divisions of inheritance" and that of Symmachus "allotments". The original Septuagint reads "concerning her that inherits" as the meaning of the title, evidently reading Nehaloth rather than Nehiloth. This gives us a deeper insight than the word 'flute'. Jehovah was the inheritance of His people (Psa. xvi. 5 and see lxxiii. 26; cxix. 57; cxlii. 5) and this great inheritance was infinitely more than anything material. The Psalmist's confidence and repose were therefore in the word (Psa. iv. 3, 7, 8) and he could sleep with the peace of God guarding his heart and mind. The Lord was his inheritance and he, in turn, was the inheritance of the Lord (verse 3).

The tendency of expositors has been to interpret most of these titles as musical expressions or musical instruments. As we have seen, there is no need for this. However, there are three words which are linked with the special choirs that sang in connection with the praise and worship of God. They are Al alamoth (relating to the maidens' choir); Sheminith, meaning the eighth (division); and Jeduthun who was one of the three directors of the Temple worship and the music associated with it (I.Chron.xvi.41,42; xxv. 1-6; II Chron. v. 12). There is no need to regard Jeduthun as a musical instrument. If alamoth refers to the maidens' choir, and there seems no reason to doubt it, then sheminith may refer to the male singers. I Chron. xv. 20 and 21 should be compared where these two divisions of the choir are mentioned. The word 'on' can be rendered 'relating to'. As sheminith means eighth, it could refer to the octave, and the fact that the men would be singing an octave below the women. It is very probable that the singing was in unison and not in any form of harmony as we know it today. There are other various explanations which are little more than guesses and we do not think it necessary to mention them here.

Sheminith occurs only with Psa. v. and xi. Alamoth is found with Psa. xlv. and note the references to "king's daughters", "honourable women" (verse 9), "the daughter of Tyre" (verse 12), and "the virgin her companions" (verse 14).

We must also consider the words connected with literary form, such as michtam, maschil, shiggaion or higgaion. For michtam the A.V. has a 'golden Psalm' from kethem, gold. It seems more likely to be from katam to engrave as in Jer. ii. 22. It would then mean something written in a permanent form which cannot be erased. There are 6 michtam Psalms (xvi., lvi., lvii., lviii., lix. and lx.). These are all David's and are private, personal and direct.

Maschil means understanding and is attached to 13 Psalms (xxxii., xlii., xliv., xlv., lii., liii., liv., lv., lxxiv., lxxviii., lxxxviii., lxxxix., cxlii.). The maschil Psalms seem to be public rather than private and therefore have to do with public instructions (see Psalm xxxii. 8, 9).

The meaning of shiggaion is uncertain, but the most likely meaning is "crying aloud" either in joy or trouble. It is found in association with Psa. vii. The plural shigionoth is found in Hab. iii. 1.

Higgaion is derived from a word meaning to soliloquize, to speak to one's self, hence to meditate. As a noun it would mean meditation and is found with Psa. ix. 16; xix. 14 and xcii. 3.

Neginoth is from nagan to strike, hence its connection with the striking or plucking of the strings of a musical instrument. The Psalms with which it is associated are iii., v., liii., liv., lxvi., lxxv. and Hab. iii. It may well be that the smiting goes deeper than the playing of instruments with strings, and refers to the smitings of affliction and difficulties.

The phrase the chief Musician, lamenatzeach occurs 55 times and designates the Psalms handed over to the leader of the Temple's praise for singing and worship.

Selah. This is the word which has been given more variety of meanings than any other found in the Psalms. It occurs 74 times in the Bible, 71 times in the Psalms and many see in it nothing more than a musical direction. One cannot help feeling that a word occurring so frequently in the inspired Scriptures has a deeper meaning than this. It seems to mark the end of one section and the beginning of a new one. In other words it is a connecting link. The word derived from one of two roots, namely salah, to pause or salal, to lift up. It is a thought link either in development of the teaching or is antithetic and adds a contrast. The student should carefully note each usage and note what has preceded it and what follows.

The Songs of the Degrees.

Here again there are many opinions as to the interpretation of the word 'degrees' which means 'steps'. Some have asserted that these were Psalms sung on the fifteen steps of the Temple, but we have no Scriptural or other evidence that there were fifteen steps. Other ideas include 'a higher choir', 'a higher key', or perhaps the going up of the Ark to Zim, or the going up of the Tribe to the feasts.

Dr Thirtle pointed out that the definite article is used—the degrees which makes one ask what exactly are these degrees? The only degrees we read about in the Scriptures are those on the sundial of Ahaz, by which the shadow of the sun went backward. These were a sign from Jehovah in connection with Hezekiah that he would recover from his sickness. The reader should consult II Kings xx. 8-11. One of the great divines of the 17th century Dr. John Lightfoot (1602-75) suggested this interpretation over 300 years ago in his Old Testament Chronology.

These Songs of Degrees are 15 which correspond to the years added to Hezekiah's life, 10 of them are anonymous, corresponding to the number of degrees by which "the shadow of the sun went backward". These could have been by Hezekiah himself for he says in his praise and gratitude:

> "The Lord was ready to save me: therefore we will sing my songs to the stringed instruments all the days of our life in the house of the Lord" (Isa. xxxviii. 20).

These were evidently handed over to the chief Musician together with one Psalm by Solomon in the centre and 2 by David on either side. They find their counterpart in Hezekiah's life and for details of this the reader should consult Appendix 67 of The Companion Bible.

The Messianic character of the Psalms.

Not only are many of the Psalms intensely prophetic, looking forward to the establishment of God's kingdom on earth, but a large number are profoundly Messianic, and portray in advance the Lord Jesus Christ as Israel's Messiah, Redeemer and King. This is a very important aspect of the Psalms. We have the authority of the Lord Jesus Himself that the Psalms point forward to Him, for He said:

> "All things must be fulfilled which were written in . . . . . the Psalms concerning Me" (Luke xxiv. 44).

Not only this, but we have the warrant of the N.T. that this is so, as the following references will make clear:

His Manhood.

> "What is man that Thou art mindful of him? . . . . . For Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels and hast crowned him with glory and honour . . . . . Thou hast put all things under his feet" (Psa. viii. 5, 6).
> "What is man that Thou art mindful of him . . . . . Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; Thou crownedst him with glory and honour . . . . . Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet . . . . . But now we see not yet all things put under him, but we see Jesus, Who was made a little lower than the angels . . . . ." (Heb. ii. 6-9).

His Sonship.

> "I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto Me, Thou art My Son: this day have I begotten Thee" (Psa. ii. 7).
>
> "For unto which of the angels said He at any time, Thou art My Son; this day have I begotten Thee?" (Heb. i. 5).
>
> "God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that He hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second Psalm, Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee" (Acts xiii. 33).

His Lordship.

> "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou at My right hand until I make Thine enemies Thy footstool" (Psa. cx. 1).

". . . . . Jesus asked them what think ye of Christ? whose son is He? They say unto Him The son of David. He saith unto them, How then does David in spirit call Him Lord saying, The Lord said unto my Lord, sit Thou at My right hand, till I make Thine enemies Thy footstool" (Matt. xxii. 41-45).

His Deity.

"Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: the sceptre of Thy kingdom is a right sceptre" (Psa. xlv. 6).

"But unto the Son He saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of Thy kingdom" (Heb. i. 8).

His holiness.

"Thou lovest righteousness and hatest wickedness: therefore God, Thy God, hath anointed Thee with the oil of gladness above Thy fellows" (Psa. xlv. 7).

"But unto the Son He saith . . . . . Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even Thy God, hath anointed Thee with the oil of gladness above Thy fellows" (Heb. i. 8).

No.4. pp. 106 - 109

The Melchizedek Priesthood of Christ..

"The Lord hath sworn and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek" (Psa. cx. 4).

"As He saith also in another place, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek" (Heb. v. 6).

His Kingship.

"Yet I have set My King upon My holy hill of Zion" (Psa. ii. 6).

"For the Lord is our defence; and the Holy One of Israel is our king" (Psa. lxxxix. 18).

"And He hath on His vesture and on His thigh a name written KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS" (Rev. xix. 16, and see I Tim. vi. 14-16).

His conquests in the day of wrath.

"The Lord at Thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of His wrath. He shall judge among the heathen, He shall fill the places with the dead bodies, He shall wound the heads over many countries . . . . ." (Psa. cx. 5, 6).

"And the kings of the earth, and the great men . . . . . hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us and hide us . . . . . from the wrath of the Lamb: For the great day of His wrath is come and who shall be able to stand?" (Rev. vi. 15-17).

His Everlastingness.

"His Name shall endure for ever: His Name shall be continued as long as the sun and men shall be blessed in Him: all nations shall call Him blessed" (Psa. lxxii. 17).

". . . . . They shall perish, but Thou shalt endure: yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment; as a vesture shalt Thou change them, and they shall be changed: But Thou art the same, and Thy years shall have no end" (Psa. cii. 25-27).

"But unto the Son He saith . . . . . And Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundations of the earth; and the heavens are the work of Thine hands: They shall perish; but Thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; And as a vesture shalt Thou fold them up, and they shall be changed: but Thou art the same, and Thy years shall not fail" (Heb. i. 8-12).

His universal Sovereignty.

"He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth" (Psa. lxxii. 8).

"The Lord hath prepared His throne in the heavens; and His kingdom ruleth over all" (Psa. ciii. 19).

"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. xi. 15).

". . . . . that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth . . . . ." (Phil. ii. 10).

His obedience as the perfect Man.

"Sacrifice and offering Thou didst not desire; mine ears hast Thou opened: burnt offering and sin offering Thou hast not required. Then said I, Lo, I come: in the volume of the Book it is written of Me. I delight to do Thy will O My God. Yea, Thy law is within My heart" (Psa. xl. 6-8).

"Wherefore when He cometh into the world, He saith, Sacrifice and offering Thou wouldest not, but a body hast Thou prepared Me: In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin Thou hast had no pleasure. Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the Book it is written of Me), to do Thy will, O God" (Heb. x. 5-7).

His Zeal and His Sufferings.

"For the zeal of Thine house hath eaten Me up; and the reproaches of them that reproached Thee are fallen upon Me" (Psa. lxix. 9).

"He said unto them that sold doves, Take these things hence; make not My Father's house an house of merchandise. And His disciples remembered that it was written, The zeal of Thine house hath eaten Me up" (John ii. 16, 17).

"For even Christ pleased not Himself: but, as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached Thee fell on Me" (Rom. xv. 3).

His Betrayal.

"Yea, Mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of My bread, hath lifted up his heel against me" (Psa. xli. 9).

"I speak not of you all: I know whom I have chosen: but that the Scripture may be fulfilled, he that eateth bread with Me hath lifted up his heel against Me" (John xiii. 18).

The disposal of His seamless robe.

"They part my garments among them, and cast lots for my vesture" (Psa. xxii. 18).

"They (the soldiers) said, Let us not rend it, but cast lots for it, whose it shall be: that the Scripture might be fulfilled, which saith, They parted My raiment among them, and for My vesture they did cast lots" (John xix. 23, 24).

His thirst.

"They gave me also gall for my meat; and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink" (Psa. lxix. 21).

"After this, Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the Scripture might be fulfilled saith, I thirst. Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a sponge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop and put it to His mouth" (John xix. 28, 29).

Yet not a bone of Him was broken.

"He keepeth all His bones: not one of them is broken" (Psa. xxxiv. 20; Exod. xii. 46).

"Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified with Him. But when they came to Jesus . . . . . they break not His legs . . . . . for these things were done that the Scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of Him shall not be broken" (John xix. 32-36).

His Death.

"I am poured out like water, and all my bones are out of joint: my heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of my bowels. My strength is dried up like a potsherd; and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws; and Thou hast brought me into the dust of death" (Psa. xxii. 14-18).

"When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, He said, It is finished and He bowed His head, and gave up the ghost (gave up His life)" (John xix. 30).

His Resurrection.

"I have set the Lord always before me: because He is at my right hand, I shall not be moved. Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth; my flesh also shall rest in hope. For Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell (grave); neither wilt Thou suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption" (Psa. xvi. 8-10).

". . . . . Ye have taken and by wicked hands have crucified and slain: Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not possible that He should be holden of it. For David speaketh concerning Him, I foresaw the Lord always before my face, for He is on my right hand, that I should not be moved: therefore did my heart rejoice . . . . . and my flesh shall rest in hope: because Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell (grave), neither wilt Thou suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption" (Acts ii. 23-27, compare also Psa. ii. 7 with Acts xiii. 33-36).

His Ascension.

"Thou hast ascended on high, Thou hast led captivity captive: Thou hast received gifts for men" (Psa. lxviii. 18).

"Wherefore He saith when He ascended up on high, He led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men" (Eph. iv. 8).

His Second Coming to the earth.

"Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein: then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice before the Lord: for He cometh, for He cometh to judge the earth: He shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with His truth" (Psa. xcvi. 12, 13; xcviii. 8, 9 and compare the 4 Psalms xcvi.-xcix.).

"And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven . . . . . in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ . . . . . When He shall come to be glorified in His saints, and to be admired in all them that believe . . ." (II Thess. i. 7-9; Matt. xxiv. 29-31 and many other N.T. Scriptures).

In our previous studies we have sought to make clear the profound Messianic character of many of the Psalms, which character is clearly endorsed by the N.T. usage of these Psalms. The majority of them are by David and the N.T. asserts that he was a prophet as well as being a king (Acts ii. 29-31). When we consider the complete testimony of the O.T. concerning the coming Messiah in all its detail, we can surely see how great was Israel's responsibility, for to them the O.T. was entrusted by God (Rom.iii.1,2). They were therefore entirely without excuse when they rejected and crucified their Messiah, Redeemer and King. This was indeed their climax sin.

Another important character of the Psalms is their historic element. It is true to say that there are sufficient references to places, people and events to construct a history from Adam to the time of David and Solomon. Psalms lxxviii., cv. and cvi. are outstanding for the use they make of Israel's past history and the nations who came into contact with them. We give an outline of this period from the Psalms which does not profess to be complete, but makes clear how fully the writers of the Psalms dealt with the various happenings and experiences of the people of Israel before their (psalmist's) time:

The varied experiences of David are given full expression in the Psalms bearing his name. The latest historical event deals with the captivity of Israel in Babylon (Psa.cxxxvii.). It will be seen that a detailed history of Israel could be constructed from the Psalms alone and the historical content of the Psalms is of great importance.

We now intend to consider individual Psalms in more detail and commence with Psalm xix. This is one of the greatest of the Psalms in its comprehensiveness. It is in three parts. (1) The revelation of God in creation (verses 1-6). (2) The revelation of God in Scripture (verses 7-11). (3) The revelation of God in experience (verses 12-14). The opening section tells us that the creation is not just an inanimate collection of stars and planets, but rather they reflect the great glory of their Creator Who is the Lord Jesus Christ. Not only this, but they give a message, they speak as it were, and give knowledge to those who behold them and are willing to be taught. Gen. i. 14-19 informs us that the stars were set for "signs, and for seasons, and for days and years". The Hebrew word for signs, oth, comes from a root, meaning to come. The stars are therefore concerning someone or something to come and those who understand them receive enlightenment as Psa. xix. declares. The zodiac marks the stages of the sun's path through the heaven corresponding to the 12 months of the year. This is evidently referred to in Gen.xxxvii.9 in connection with Joseph's dream of himself, his parents and brethren.

We should remember that the stars were all name by God (Psa. cxlvii. 4; Isa. xl. 26 R.V.), and they all originally must have had a meaning many of which have been lost. There are over 100 names preserved through the Arabic and Hebrew and are used by astronomers today. Some of them occur in Scripture though the meaning is not always certain. Three are found in Job ix. 9 (compare also xxxviii. 31, 32), Arcturus, Orion and Pleiades. Arcturus is connected with the Great Bear. Orion means a strong one (see Amos v. 8), and Pleiades the congregation of the judge. Thus the Word of God is not silent as the great antiquity of the signs and constellations. The twelve signs of the zodiac are the same as to the meaning of their names and their order, in all the ancient nations of the world. The Chinese, Chaldean and Egyptian records go back to more than B.C.2,000. The zodiacs in Egyptian temples are doubtless copies of zodiacs still more ancient, going back to B.C.4,000. The signs of the zodiacs have been preserved in order among all nations and ages, showing their common origin from one source. The figures or pictures on them have nothing to do with the grouping of stars. For instance in Virgo there is nothing to suggest the shape of a woman. They must have been drawn around and connected with certain stars so that they might be identified and associated with them and their meaning and thus be handed down to posterity.

It seems clear that in these signs we have the truth preserved of Gen. iii. 15, the Coming One, He Who was to suffer and redeem and afterwards come into His glory as universal King. Jewish tradition asserts that the Bible astronomy was invented by Adam, Seth and Enoch who were, in their turn, taught by God. Thus for some 2,500 years, before the written Scriptures came into being, God's truth was enshrined in the heavens where no human hand could touch it. After the writing of the Scriptures there was no more need of this heavenly testimony, and its original teaching gradually faded away, finally degenerating into the mythologies and perverted ideas of the heathen.

Those who want to go into this subject with greater detail are referred to The Witness of the Stars by Dr. E. W. Bullinger and Appendix 12 of The Companion Bible.

In the 19th Psalm then, David extols the 'speech' or message of God which the heavens constantly declare to all the world. One must add to this the impressive wonder of the universe which bears eloquent testimony to overwhelming greatness of the Creator. The sun is represented as a bridegroom full of joy like a runner full of strength (xix. 5, 6).

Here the Psalm abruptly changes to the law of the Lord, the written Word. This has always baffled commentators, for, on the surface, this next section has nothing to do with the former one. But once we see that the heavens declared the truth of God, we can appreciate the transition to the written Word which now enshrines the same glorious truth, but with greater detail. Verses 7-9 give six titles of the Word with 6 attributes and 6 effects. The One Who is its Author, Jehovah, occurs 7 times in the second half of the Psalm.

The 6 Titles are, the Law, the Testimony, the Statutes, the Commandment, the Fear, and the Judgments. The Law gives divine instruction as to character and conduct. The Testimony tells of the witness to what God is and what we should be. The Statutes are God's directions to secure obedience. The Commandments speaks of divine decrees which guide us. The Fear tells of the habit of mind which is informed by the Word or Law of God. The Judgments reveal the judicial decisions and sentences of Jehovah.

The 6 Attributes are perfect, without flaw or mistake, sure, utterly reliable and worthy of trust, right or righteous, exhibiting perfect justice, pure, like the sun giving light and making things plain, clean, that is, it cleanses and removes corruption and guilt, true, it is ever faithful and free from deception. These wonderful characteristics of the Word of God should lead us to a deeper appreciation of its worth and the spiritual treasures contained therein.

The 6 Effects of the Word are: It restores or turns the person God-ward, refreshing the inner life. It makes wise the simple, giving practical guidance to the inexperienced. It rejoices the heart or mind, giving satisfying joy, and pleasure to those who believe and obey it. It enlightens the eyes, illuminating what is dark and puzzling. It endures for ever and is eternal like God Himself.

The Psalmist goes on to declare the true worth or value of the Word and here we get advice which is so greatly needed today. More and more the god of materialism dominates mankind. People are trained from all angles to believe that the chief and only thing that matters is money and material possessions.

Politicians everywhere and the media constantly dangle this lie before the people young and old. They forget the words of One Who declared Himself to be the Truth, and He said "Take heed and beware of all covetousness, for a man's life does not consist in the abundance of his possessions" (Luke xii. 15 R.S.V.). Would that this was blazoned from the housetops today. Even if it was, the probability is that few would heed it, so great the enslavement of the human mind to this deception.

David had his priorities right and this should be the concern of all of us today. God's Word, he declared, was better than all the money and riches that the world can offer, better than much fine gold (Psa. xix. 10). It is sweeter and more satisfying than honey and moreover it warns us concerning things that can only bring unhappiness and sorrow. It not only constrains but restrains, and so brings the reward of peace and contentment to those who obey it. The Psalmist knew some of his own weakness, yet realized his knowledge was partial even regarding his own sins and failings. Who can completely discern all his own errors? he asks, and he proceeds to pray that God would restrain him from presumptuous sins and their domination. Then, he said, I shall be innocent from the great transgression or better, much transgression.

The last words of his prayer are those we can all continually use with real sincerity: "let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer". The word strength is the word 'rock', immoveable, strong and utterly dependable. Redeemer is gaal, kinsman-redeemer, the One Who became human and is therefore touched with the feeling of our infirmities and weaknesses and completely understands us (Heb. iv. 15, 16). We can therefore come boldly to Him at all times, knowing that He not only understands us, but, in His great love, can undertake in every circumstance and time of need.

No.6. Psalms xxii., xxiii., xxiv.
pp. 141 - 146

These three Psalms form a trilogy. In Psa. xxii. we have a vivid picture of the Good Shepherd Who gives His life for the sheep. "I am the good shepherd; the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep" (John x. 11). In Psa. xxiii., the great Shepherd in resurrection is the One Who provides for and guides the sheep in their earthly pathway. "Now the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep . . . . ." (Heb. xiii. 20). And in the 24th Psalm the chief Shepherd is portrayed, He Who is coming again in glory to reign and reward the faithful under-shepherds, "when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away" (I Pet. v. 3 and notice verses 2 and 3).

Psalm xxii. was written by David, but this Scripture goes beyond any experience of David's and relates to his greater Son and Lord (Matt. xxii. 41-45). He Who is the "root and offspring of David" (Rev. xxii. 16). It gives an intense prophetic foreview of the crucifixion of the Saviour. It has been said that the psalmist gives a more vivid description of the sufferings of Christ on the cross than the authors of the gospels. Note the following: verse 1 arrestingly gives us the exact words of His agonizing cry "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" (Matt. xxvii. 46; Mark xv. 34). Verses 7, 8, 13 describe the mockers gathered around the cross and their taunts; the literal piercing of the hands and feet (verse 16); the distorted body and the physical torment (14, 15, 17); the divided garments and the untorn vesture (18). Why was there no mention of the spear thrust? Because the Lord Jesus was already dead when that was done, and the Sufferer could not be represented as telling what happened after He died.

All this was pure prophecy and genuine prediction under the guiding hand of the Spirit of God and moreover was exactly describing crucifixion, a form of punishment unknown in David's day and in the experience of Israel. No wonder the N.T. describes David as a prophet (Acts ii. 29-31). We shall never be able to comprehend the awesome experience of our Saviour at Calvary. The physical side was terrible enough, but infinitely worse and beyond our understanding was the overwhelming moment when God the Father had to turn away His eyes from His beloved Son, when the sin and guilt of His people were 'laid upon Him' and He was made abhorrent, a sin-offering, though He knew no sin Himself (II Cor. v 21). For the first time, that perfect unity between the Father and the Son was broken, wringing from His lips the agonizing cry, "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken Me?". The whole scene, too awful to see or contemplate, was shrouded in thick darkness by God Himself (Matt. xxvii. 45). And if we ask why all this happened to Christ, there is only one answer, it was because of your sins and mine and at what a cost to Him! Who can have a light view of sin when he recognizes this?

At Psa. xxii. 22 a sudden change takes place. Death and suffering is passed and in resurrection we now see the Throne and the universal kingdom of the Lord in all its fulness and glory:

> "All the ends of the world shall remember and turn to the Lord: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before Thee. For the kingdom is the Lord's and He is the Governor among the nations" (xxii. 27, 28).

All on earth in that day shall bow down before Him and give Him His rightful place, anticipating that more glorious day when the whole universe including all in heaven and under the earth shall bow the knee and own that Jesus Christ is LORD SUPREME (Philippians ii. 9-11). First the Cross and then the Crown.

The Psalmist ends by extolling the Lord's righteousness and His mighty power, for "He hath done this" (xxii. 31). The Companion Bible points out that these words are the equivalent of "It is finished". Thus we have the mighty work of redemption accomplished and finished by the Lord on the cross, "the sufferings", and then "the glory to follow", the purpose of God finished when the kingdom is established and Christ is owned as Lord of all.

Psalm xxiii.

This has been called the Pearl of the Psalms and there was a time when most of those who profess to be Christians could recite it from memory. Children in Christian families were taught it in this way, but with the landslide from the truth of God that we see all around us, we doubt very much if this is so today. It has been called the Shepherd Psalm because of verse 1, but it would be a mistake to make this the one theme throughout. In verses 3 and 4 we have the Guide and the traveler, and in verses 5 and 6 the Host and the guest, so that this precious Psalm is portraying the truths of provision, direction and communion of the child of God. It is all intensely individual. Primarily David was applying it to himself, but surely God's family of all generations, can join in here, experiencing what the Lord can be to them at all times.

If the first part of verse 1 is true, then the second part most surely follows. If each one of us can appropriate the Lord Jesus for himself by faith, if we all can say as Paul did, "the Son of God Who loved me and gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii. 20), then all anxiety will vanish and we can rest assured that we shall never want. Although the days grow darker and more difficult yet this is still true and will be true for always. The faithful shepherd not only protects his sheep from harm and danger, he guides them into rich pastures, feeds and cares for them so that they are in need of nothing that is essential to their well-being. If only we could always believe this, how much worry and strain would be avoided!

It has been said with truth it is worry that kills, not hard work. Yet both the apostles Paul and Peter show us the antidote, "Casting all your care upon Him: for He careth for you" (I Pet. v. 7). "Do not be anxious about anything, but in everything, by prayer and petition, with thanksgiving, present your requests to God. And the peace of God, which transcends all understanding, will guard your hearts and your minds in Christ Jesus" (Phil. iv. 6, 7 N.I.V.). The wonderful thing is that the Lord in His great love, constantly offers to carry our burdens for us. Let us then hand them over to Him and in no way take them back again. We surely "shall not want" if we do this and will experience what the Psalmist goes on to say "He makes me to lie down in choice (green) pastures, He leadeth me beside the waters of rest or peace (still waters)".

It follows that these paths are right paths (verses 3), the heavenly shepherd can make no mistake. "He led them forth by the right way" declares Psa. cvii. 7 and although in Israel's experience this was sometimes puzzling and testing, yet they proved in the end that God knew what He was doing and His way was best. This is always true for the child of God. Our lives may sometimes appear to be a tangle with much that is baffling. Yet as we get older we can begin to see a pattern that the Lord Himself is weaving as He leads us along His own way. Our great danger is to refuse to walk in those paths and then all the peace and assurance and joy disappear. At the same time, because we are going through the enemy's territory so to speak, the external may be difficult and dark; the valley of the shadow of death may be gruesome reality, but He is ever with us (verse 4). "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee", He has promised (Heb. xiii. 5), so why fear? "Thy rod and Thy staff comfort me". The eastern shepherd always carried two things, the club (rod) and the crook (staff). The club was for the sheep's enemies and the crook for help and guidance of the sheep. So the Lord safely and gently leads His people according to His will for each one.

Not only this, but we are so safe with the Lord constantly overshadowing us, that even if surrounded by enemies, we can enjoy a feast without any fear! Moffatt's translation of verse 5 is suggestive:

> "Thou art my Host, spreading a feast for me, while my foes have to look on!".

What a glorious position and all because we are absolutely safe in His keeping! The psalmist goes on to speak of the soothing anointing oil and overfull 'cup' that quenches all thirst and 'runs over'. Such is the generous giving and provision of the Lord in the pilgrim pathway. There can be only one conclusion:

> "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever" (Psa. xxiii. 6).

For David, the house of the Lord was the Temple on earth. For the member of the Body the eternal dwelling place for Christ will be the completed Body, then merging into the heavenly Temple or holy of holies in the heavenlies "far above all" which God is now preparing as His home for ever (Eph. ii. 20-22).

It is noteworthy in Psa. xxiii., short though it is, that a number of the compound Jehovah titles are illustrated. These wonderful titles of God add another word by way of attribute to the great name of Jehovah. Jehovah-Rohi is the Lord my shepherd. Jehovah-Jireh (Gen. xxii. 14) is seen providing my needs (verse 1). Jehovah-Shalom, Jehovah my peace (Judg.vi.24) leads beside the still (peaceful) waters. Jehovah-Ropheka, the Lord that heals (Exod. xv. 26) restores my soul. Jehovah-Shammah, the Lord is there (Ezek. xlviii. 35) is with me even in the valley of the shadow. Jehovah-Nissi, the Lord is my protection (Exodus xvii. 15) guards me even in the presence of my enemies. Jehovah-Mekkadishkem, the Lord that anoints and sanctifies (Exod. xxxi. 13) does so with the oil of gladness. He is the One Who leads me in paths of righteousness because He is Jehovah-Tsidkenu, the Lord my righteousness (Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16).

What more can one say? This is the great God Who gives us rest, refreshment, restoration, guidance, companionship, comfort, sustenance and abounding joy. Truly we can say with gratitude "my cup runneth over". By these great truths multitudes have lived and died, and every one of these truths is treasured up in the Lord Jesus Christ and if we have Him, we have everything! Surely Christ is ALL (Col. iii. 11).

If Psa. xxii. can be summarized by the word CROSS, and Psa. xxiii. by CROOK, Psa. xxiv. is summed up in the word CROWN, for here we look into the future with the establishment of God's kingdom on earth in power and great glory, when the Lord Jesus shall return in triumph, binding the deceiver Satan and taking complete control of this world's affairs. Men forget that the earth and all its content belong to the One Who created it, namely Jehovah. Today men act as if they owned the earth. Arab and Jew wrestle over Palestine, but God said "the land is Mine" (Lev. xxv. 23) and He gives it to whomsoever He wills to have it.

When Psa. xxiv. becomes reality in the millennial age mankind will be brought to the point when at last they recognize this. Ezekiel's glorious temple (Ezek. xl. 2; Isa. ii. 2), yet to be built we believe, near Jerusalem, will be the divine centre from which light and blessing will radiate over the whole earth. Micah iv. 1-4 describes this time when the nations will long to know God (so different from the present time) and will journey to this house of God upon its high mountain, to learn His ways and His truth which will "go forth of Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem" (Micah iv. 2). But they will have to learn the truth of Psa. xxiv. 3, 5:

> "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in His holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart . . . . . he shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from God . . . . .".

It never has been a light thing to approach a holy God. The Psalm concludes with a wonderful anthem of praise concerning the Lord Jesus, the King of glory, entering this Temple. It is sung antiphonally, one choir asks the question and the other answers it:

> "Lift up your heads O ye gates; and > be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors; > and the King of glory shall come in.
> Who is this King of glory?
> The Lord of hosts, He is the King of glory" (xxiv. 9 and 10).

No.7. Psalms xxxvii. and xlvi.
pp. 161 - 166

Psalm xxxvii.

Psalm xxxvii. is a precious Psalm containing much truth which is for all time. This is an acrostic Psalm of which there are nine in the original text. Some are complete and some are not, using only a portion of the Hebrew alphabet. In the case of Psa. xxxvii., we have a perfect acrostic. This device was probably used as an aid to memory, for doubtless many psalms were memorized and treasured in the mind. In the first nine verses we have a series of words advising us in our daily walk. Fret not (verses 7 and 8), trust (3), delight (4), commit (5), rest (7), and wait patiently (7).

The problem in the first verse is echoed in Psa. xlix. and lxxiii. dealing with the prosperity of the wicked. It is often difficult to understand why ungodly and unbelieving persons get on so well in this life with the minimum of trouble, while the believer seems to be compassed with problems and difficulties. But it is the end that shows up the utter difference between the two classes. The end of the wicked is destruction; the end of the righteous is peace and eternal security. At that time, what has happened in this life is irrelevant. With this in mind, there is no need whatsoever to be envious of the workers of iniquity (Psa. xxxvii. 1). Their prosperity is so short lived compared with eternity. "They shall soon be cut down like the grass and wither as the green herb" (verse 2). The positive antidote to all this is to trust in the Lord (3). The word "fret" literally means to be warmed. How easy it is to get "hot and bothered" rather than to experience "the peace of God that passes understanding".

The writer, who was David, goes further, and reminds us not only of the need to fully trust the Lord, but to delight ourselves in Him (verse 4) and so for Him to be the ground of lasting pleasure. It may be that many place their faith in the Lord, but how few seem to exhibit real joy and pleasure in Him and all His fulness! Too often the believer's pleasures are found only in earthly things which perish with the using. The delight which is in the Lord will result in our desires being granted by Him (4). Now of course this does not mean that we can ask the Lord for anything we choose, for some of these things may be against His will for us. But if our minds find their supreme delight in Him, shall we, in this frame of mind, ask for things which are contrary to His Word? Surely not.

The fifth verse enjoins us to commit our way unto the Lord. The word translated commit means 'to rest upon'. Moffatt's version here is suggestive:

> "Leave all to Him. Rely on Him and He will see to it."

One thing is absolutely certain, the believer's way, left in the Lord's hands, is absolutely safe and sure.

In verse 6 judgment means vindication. This is true in many places in the O.T., specially in those prophecies looking forward to Messiah's reign on earth. Then judgment, or better justice, will rule. This is what man has been striving to obtain for centuries and been defeated owing to his own sinful and failing nature. God's rule will be absolutely fair and just, for the first time in the world's experience since the Fall. Once again we quote Moffatt:

> "He will bring your innocence to light, and make the justice of your cause clear as noonday."

Verse 7 bids us to rest in the Lord and to wait patiently for Him. To rest in the Lord is to roll all our burdens on Him, knowing that He has offered to carry them for us and then to wait in patience for Him to move and lead. This is easier said than done, for most of us can wait impatiently and chafe all the while, but this merely brings tension and unhappiness, leading once more to 'fretting'. Neither should we be unduly upset by the deeds of those who bring 'wicked devices to pass'. It is only "a little while and the wicked shall not be" (verse 10). Not only this, he has finally to face God. "The Lord shall laugh at him; for He seeth that His judgment (day) is coming" (13). God is represented as 'laughing' by means of anthropomorphism, or to use a shorter word, by the figure of condescension. In the use of this figure many parts of the body are ascribed to the Lord, such as eyes, ears, mouth, arms, hands, etc., but we know that God, as spirit, has no external dimensions like this. He has something corresponding to these members but this is really the Lord in His graciousness, stooping down to our level and using "baby language", so that we can receive some understanding of His infinitely great and limitless nature.

It is significant that God is represented as laughing only three times in the Bible (Psalms ii. 4; xxxvii. 13; lix. 8) and in each occurrence it is not the laugh of joy, but the laugh of derision in connection with His enemies. When we come to the N.T. we find there is no record of the Lord Jesus smiling or laughing, but we must not make wrong deductions from this. One can hardly believe that He remained perpetually stern and long-faced to those whom He loved, but for some wise reason, this has not been recorded, and if it had been it would probably have been misunderstood or misrepresented.

What a contrast we have between the end of the wicked and the righteous:

> "For evil doers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth" (Psa. xxxvii. 9)

This is repeated four more times in this Psalm, in verses 11, 22, 29 and 34. In the last two occurrences "land" is substituted for "earth" in the A.V. but it is the same word being used. Its primary reference is to the earthly inheritance that God promised unconditionally to Israel and we find the Lord using the same words in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. v. 5) "the meek shall inherit the earth". Here the Lord is not revealing something new, but bringing forward the divine promises contained in Psa. xxxvii.

An undiscriminating orthodoxy has one place only for the redeemed in the next life, and that is heaven. But this grossly over simplifies and whittles down the greatness of God's purpose of the ages which embraces earth as well as the highest heavens. The whole creation will be the eternal destiny of God's redeemed children as He has willed and appointed for them, which fact is clearly revealed in the Scriptures. This being so, no one who wants real understanding of the Word of God is going to confuse earth with heaven and stress one at the expense of the other.

The Body of Christ is eternally linked with its associated Head, the Lord Jesus Christ, in the heavenlies, "far above all" and even now is seen by God as seated with Him there (Eph. ii. 6). Other members of the Lord's redeemed children will find their place on earth and finally in the new earth "wherein dwelleth righteousness" (II Pet. iii. 13) which will be a glorious inheritance. We need minds enlarged and freed from tradition in order to appreciate this. The Psalm ends with the assured position of the righteous in contrast to the wicked and this is because the believer is in the secure hands of the Lord Who will never leave or forsake those who trust in Him.

We pass on to this Psalm which has been a comfort in trouble to so many all down the centuries:

> "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear . . . . ." (Psa. xlvi. 1 and 2).

The Psalm is linked with the next two, xlvii. & xlviii., and they form a trilogy. They could well refer to Israel's deliverance from Sennacherib and God's defence of His people from this bitter enemy. If so, their author was probably Hezekiah.

This hymn of praise opens with the complete safety of the people of God in spite of all difficulties, human and otherwise. The river of verse 4 primarily refers to the conduit built by Hezekiah which brought the water from Gihon to a new pool he had made for the purpose (II Kings xx. 20), thus ensuring the water supply for the city in times of difficulty and war.

There is another way of looking at this Psalm and that is to regard it from a prophetical standpoint. Many of the Psalms are intensely prophetic, looking forward not only to the first coming of the Lord Jesus, but also the second coming to the earth to rule and reign. The 47th and 48th Psalms back this up, for they are a wonderful looking forward to the time when God's rule will be established and recognized all over the earth (Psa. xlvii. 2, 7, 8, 9) and Jerusalem (Zion) will be its chief city.

Psalm xlvi. could well be the hymn of praise that Israel will sing after the Lord's second coming when He rescues them at the end of the Great Tribulation, from the united world forces, bent on Israel's final destruction. It will indeed be a time of "Jacob's trouble", the worst and most dangerous that they have ever had to face, but the nation will be rescued out of it (Jer. xxx. 7, 8) by the returning Christ in power and great glory.

The recurring phrase "The Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge" will then be sung by them with real feeling. The nations will assuredly rage (xlvi. 6) against the Lord and His anointed (Psa. ii. 1-3), but God will speak in judgment and the earth's opposing forces will be routed and destroyed. The terrible destruction in the earth after the judgments described in the book of the Revelation are referred to in verse 8:

> "Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations He hath made in the earth."

The attainment of real peace when the Prince of peace returns is a wonderful feature of the earthly kingdom of the Lord. Micah iv. 3 declares:

> "He (Christ) shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off: and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks, nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

It is quite obvious that this must refer to the future, for war and slaughter have characterized history since the Fall of man. If lasting peace is going to be a reality, then God must deal with the armaments problem and our Psalms assures us:

> "He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; He burneth the chariot in the fire" (xlvi. 9).

The bow, spear and war chariots are weapons of war and the psalmist declares that the Lord will abolish them. How He will do it is beyond our understanding at the moment. Just imagine a world where the appalling burden and colossal danger of armaments is lifted for ever! No wonder everyone is exhorted to be quiet and recognize God as the One Who will be exalted among the nations (heathen) and all over the earth (xlvi. 10).

Surely then saved and restored Israel will be able to say:

> "The Lord of hosts (Jehovah Sabaoth) is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge" (xlvi. 7 and 11).

We can join in here and now with the last verse of the third Psalm in this trilogy:

> "This God is our God for ever and ever; He will be our guide even unto death" (Psalm xlviii. 14).

No.8. Psalms l. and lxxxix.
pp. 181 - 185

Psalm l.

This Psalm opens with God in all His majesty—El, Elohim, Jehovah, the God of gods, even Jehovah. He is presented as the almighty One, the awe-inspiring and covenant God. It is the only Psalm of Asaph in this second Book, the others occurring in Book three.

There is an introduction (verses 1-6), a conclusion (verses 22 and 23). In between we find two divisions, first of all rebuking formalism (7-15) and the other rebuking hypocrisy and unfaithfulness in His people Israel (16-21).

This Psalm could apply to Israel many times during their history, but we believe it goes further than this and can be regarded as a prophecy of the end time which comes to its climax with the Second Advent of Christ in power and great glory.

It will be to the Mount of Olives and Jerusalem that the Lord Jesus will return (Zechariah xiv. 1-4):

> "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence" (Psa. l. 2, 3).

He comes first of all to save and judge His earthly people Israel and then to judge the world that has rejected Him.

> "He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that He may judge His people. Gather My saints together unto Me, those that have made a covenant with Me by sacrifice. And the heavens shall declare His righteousness: for God is Judge Himself. Selah" (l. 4-6).

In His revelation of the tremendous events of the end of this age culminating in His coming the second time to this earth; the Lord Jesus said:

> "Immediately after the tribulation of those days (see verses 21 and 22) shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth (or land) mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And He shall send His angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together His elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other (that is, dispersed Israel all over the earth)" (Matt. xxiv. 29-31).

Many are the Scriptures which foretell this great re-gathering of Israel to the land that God promised unconditionally and permanently to Abraham and his posterity (Genesis xiii. 14-17; xv. 18; xvii. 7, 8).

If this never comes to pass, God will have broken His Word, and if He can do this with His earthly people how do we know that He will not do so with us who are members of the Body of Christ? We are assured that the "gifts and calling of God are without repentance" (i.e. change of mind on His part, Rom. xi. 25-29). Truly His covenant "will He not break nor alter the thing that has gone out of His lips" (Psa. lxxxix. 34-37).

Consequently the returning Lord and Judge sends out His command as we have seen in verse 5. In the eleventh chapter, Isaiah declares:

> "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set His hand again the second time to recover the remnant of His people . . . . . and He shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth . . . . ." (Isa. xi. 11, 12).

This, and many other passages in the Word of God assure us that the true Israel, descended from Isaac, will at last enjoy the earthly inheritance that God has promised them. Now is the time of God's silence in grace which has characterized this present age. When He speaks again, it will surely be in judgment as the book of Revelation clearly teaches, but His scrutiny is first given to the people of Israel:

> "Hear, O My people, and I will speak, O Israel, and I will testify against thee, I am God, even thy God" (l. 7).

Nothing can alter the fact that added light and knowledge bring added responsibility. Later on Amos brings this home to the same people, showing that guilt is in proportion to privilege:

> "You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities" (Amos iii. 2).

The wicked made the fatal mistake of thinking that God was like themselves (l. 21). This was because He did not summarily punish them. They misinterpreted His longsuffering silence as apathy and indifference. Doubtless there are multitudes today who make the same mistake. Evil abounds everywhere and nothing appears to happen. God apparently does not take any notice, but verse 22 contains a terrible warning showing that God does know and care and one day sin will be judged by Him Who is the Judge of all the earth.

> "Now consider this, ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver."

The whole Psalm is a warning against religious formalism which was stressed so much by the later prophets.

This great Psalm brings before us the faithfulness of God. The word occurs seven times, in verses 1, 2, 5, 8, 24, 33, 49. In the last verse the word rendered 'truth' is the same as the other occurrences translated 'faithfulness' as the R.V. shows. One of the greatest characteristics of our great God is that He is utterly faithful to His word. It is upon this that all hope depends. If God promises and does not perform, but breaks His word, then we are of all men the most miserable. It is because of the unchangeability of that Word that the nation of Israel has a future which this Psalm makes so clear. This is true of course of the Body of Christ and the whole redemptive plan of God. No wonder we are all called to be faithful in response to such a God Who changeth not.

The Psalm consists of an introduction (verse 1-4) and three main sections dealing with hope (5-18), promise (19-37) and trouble (38-51), and ends with praise and a double Amen, thus concluding the third book of the Psalter. Not only do we have faithfulness occurring 7 times but also the word mercy or loving kindness (1, 2, 14, 28, 33, 49). The Psalmist commences with song, resulting from his personal experience of this God of faithfulness and grace, Who had dealt so wondrously with David in making His unconditional covenant concerning his throne and its perpetuity.

The majesty of God is now stressed. He is incomparable among the angels of heaven. The "sons of the mighty" bow down before Him (6 and 7). On earth below He is incomparable in nature (9) and in history (10). He broke the power of Egypt (Rahab) and the whole creation of heaven and earth are His (11-13). His people are those who "know the joyful sound" (15) possibly the jubilee trumpet which heralded deliverance from debt and bondage.

The second section (19-37) deals with promise, specially that related to the Davidic Covenant concerning David's seed and his throne. II Sam. vii. should be read here, for this section cannot be properly understood without it. Verses 19-28 deal with God's promises to David personally and then his seed in verses 29-37. This purpose of God cannot be frustrated or annulled, even though the seed fails, whether it is Solomon (II.Sam.vii.12-15) or Israel (Psa. lxxxix. 29-33). They may profane God's statutes (lxxxix. 31 margin) yet God will not profane His covenant (34, break = profane).

Three outstanding unconditional covenants of God relate to Israel and God's purpose for them and world blessing cannot be appreciated or understood unless the covenants are born in mind. To Abraham, Isaac and Jacob God promised a perpetual seed and a land from the Nile to the Euphrates (Gen. xiii. 14-17; xv. 17, 18). To David the Lord repeats His promise concerning the seed and adds the throne. In the final fulfillment, the Lord Jesus Christ, as the true seed of David, will surely bring all this to pass, but we must not make the mistake that some do, specially those of amillennial persuasion, that all these promises relate solely to Christ, for sometimes the word 'seed' is used in the plural and must refer to Abraham's posterity (see Gen. xvii. 4-8 and note verse 7). There are too many verses declaring God's intention of preserving the people of Israel for ever for them to finally fail or be wiped out.

True it is that if everything depended upon them, then this great purpose would founder, but it rather depends on the Lord's new covenant of grace with the house of Israel and the house of Judah (Jer. xxxi.) which rests upon the shed blood of the Lord Jesus on Calvary's cross.

How good it is to realize and believe that:

> ". . . . . My loving kindness will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer My faithfulness to fail. My covenant will I not break (profane), nor alter the thing that is gone out of My lips. Once have I sworn by My holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure for ever and his throne as the sun before Me. It shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah" (Psa. lxxxix. 33-37).

Note carefully what is said. God will not break this covenant of grace with David or alter it in any way. So important is this that the God of truth takes an oath on it. There are expositors who wish to get rid of the literal Israel and apply all the promises of God to the church in which case God would have altered what He has here stated. We have the N.T. assurance that the gifts and the calling of God are without repentance (i.e. change of mind on His part, Rom. xi. 29). These facts make havoc of those ideas of the spiritualizers who often do so much damage to the interpretation of the Word of God.

The last section of the Psalm possibly refers to Jehoiachin as the king in verses 43-45. This youth was only 18 years of age when he came to the throne (II Kings xxiv. 8) and he reigned only 3 months and 10 days. The rest of his life was spent in exile in which he was literally 'clothed with dishonour' (45). The Psalm closes with a plea that the writer soon might see the loving kindness of the Lord carried into effect, for life was so brief (47, 48) and that God would remember the insult (reproach) of the enemies. The last verse (52) is not part of the Psalm, but was evidently added by the editor to close the third book of the Psalter. How good it is to realize afresh that the unchangeable God of the O.T. (Mal. iii. 6) is the Lord Jesus of the N.T. Who is "the same yesterday and today and for ever" (Heb. xiii. 8). His eternal love never varies towards us and will be brought to fruition when we are presented in resurrection "holy and unblameable and unreproveable in His sight" (Col. i. 22).

No.9. Psalms ciii., cvii., cxix., cxxxiii., cl.

Psalm ciii.

In Eph. v. 18, 19 we are exhorted to be filled by the Spirit, speaking in psalms, hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in our heart to the Lord. In Psalm ciii. we have one that we can use regularly to the Lord's praise. It is divided into three parts: Personal (verses 1-5); National (6-18) and Universal (19-22). There are 22 verses, the number of letters in the Hebrew alphabet and the great covenant name of Jehovah occurs 10 times.

First of all we are called to "bless the Lord" for his wondrous goodness and matchless benefits which we are so apt to forget (1, 2). These are expressed in forgiveness, healing, redemption, crowning, satisfaction and renewal. Dr. Alexander Whyte used to say that in these verses we have the Law Court—forgiveth all thine iniquities; the Hospital—healeth all thy diseases; the Slave Market—redeemeth thy life from destruction; the Throne Room—crowneth thee with loving kindness; and the Banquet Hall—satisfieth thy mouth with good things! God's infinite graciousness is portrayed in the following verses, His slowness to chide and His swiftness to bless. His mercy is unmeasurable as the height from earth to heaven (11) or its breadth from east to west (12). Our sins are forever gone. They have been blotted out because they have been borne by the Redeemer Himself. No wonder the Psalmist says "the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting" (17) and who can measure this?

As the Psalm comes to its end there is a crescendo of praise from the whole creation in heaven and earth. The myriads of angels and heavenly beings join in the chorus and so a mighty paeon ascends to our great God and Saviour Who alone is worthy to receive it.

> "Bless the Lord (Jehovah), all His works in all places of His dominion: bless the Lord (Jehovah), O my soul."

Psalm cvii.

This wonderful Psalm belongs to a group of three, namely cv., cvi., cvii. If we add the testimony of Psa. civ., then we have a summary of the O.T. for this Psalm gives the narrative of creation, Psa. cv. the Patriarchal history, Psa. cvi. the story of Israel in the land of promise to the Babylonian Captivity, and Psa. cvii. the return of the exiles from Babylon.

Psalm cvii. has an introduction (1-3) and a conclusion (43) and in between two sections, verses 4-32 and 33-42. In the introduction Israel are called upon to give thanks to the Lord for His delivering mercies from exile (2-7). It is not enough for them to feel grateful. They must say so and give an external acknowledgment of their gratitude. This is a lesson to all of us. How easy it is for us to forget all the Lord's benefits (ciii. 2)! A constant praising heart is a great antidote to ingratitude and spiritual declension. As we look back into the past, we can truly say of the Lord's leading that it has always been the right way (7), though sometimes not of our choosing.

It has been difficult and perplexing at times, as it was with Israel, but the afterward has always vindicated the Lord's dealing with us, if we obtain the right viewpoint. The Lord led Israel to Marah, the bitter place, before Elim the place of plenty. But this was to test them to see how far they would trust Him:

> ". . . . . thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these 40 years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldest keep His commandments, or no. And He humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger . . . . . that He might make thee know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live" (Deut. viii. 2, 3).

In verses 4-32 the Psalmist presents the Lord as the great deliverer in times of trouble, and as a Guide, as we have seen (verse 7). Then as captives, His people need a Rescuer (10-16). Those with bodily affliction need a Physician (17-22), and storm-tossed seamen need someone who can still the tempest (23-32). After each of these sections comes the refrain, "Oh that men would praise the Lord for His goodness and for His wonderful works to the children of men!" (15, 21, 31). To such a God we should "sacrifice the sacrifices of thanksgiving and declare His works with rejoicing" (22) and this reminds us of Heb. xiii. 15.

The theme now changes to the providential goodness of the Lord in the world. Israel's blessings were earthly, but none the less precious because of this. When they walked closely with their God He showed His approval by blessing their land and their possessions (35-38). The reverse happened when they indulged in backsliding (39). The conclusion of the Psalm calls His people to be wise and observe these things which reveal the great loving kindness and patience of the Lord in His practical training and guidance of His redeemed people.

We feel we must go back to Psalm cxix. It is most significant that this Psalm, the longest one, has one subject namely the Word of God. This is referred to in ten different ways, the number corresponding to the Ten Commandments of Exodus. They are as follows: (1) Way, derek. (2) Testimonies, eduth. (3) Precepts, pikkudim. (4) Commandments, mizvah. (5) Word (Saying), imrah. (6) Law, torah. (7) Judgment, mishpat. (8) Righteousness, zedek. (9) Statute, hok and hukka (from hakak, to hew). (10) Word, dabar. Out of the 176 verses of the Psalm these words occur in 173 of them. It should be noted that 'judgment' in verse 84 is not a designation of the Law, but a sentence that will be carried out in keeping with it and "faithfulness" in verse 90 is an attribute of the Law rather than a name for it.

The Psalm is an acrostic, and, as we have seen, there are eight others, some of which do not use all the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet. There are also two examples of the acrostic device outside the psalter, Prov. xxxi. 10-31 and the book of Lamentations. Psa. cxix. is complete, and eight verses are given to each of these 22 letters and each of the eight verses begins with its respective letter. These are noted in the A.V. translation and to show how the Psalms would look if our English alphabet were similarly used, we quote from the compilers of The Psalms Chronologically Arranged taking the letter D as an example:

25: Depressed to the dust is my soul
Quicken Thou me according to Thy Word
26: Declared have I (to Thee) my ways and Thou heardest me
Teach me Thy Statutes
27: Declare Thou to me the way of Thy precepts
So shall I talk of Thy wondrous works
28 Dropping is my soul for heaviness
Strengthen Thou me according to Thy Word
29: Deceitful ways remove from me
And grant me Thy law graciously 30: Determined have I upon the way of Truth;
Thy judgments have I laid before me
31: Deliberately have I stuck unto Thy testimonies
O Lord, put me not to shame
32 Day by Day I will run the way of Thy commandments
When Thou shalt enlarge my heart.

When the whole of this marvelous Psalm is read, one cannot help noticing the extreme importance of the Word of God to the Psalmist, who may have been Hezekiah or Ezra. It was more to him than wealth, "the law of Thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of (piles of, Moffat) gold and silver" (72). It was better than sleep, "I am up before the dawn to pray, waiting for Thy promises. I waken through the night to muse upon Thy Word" (147, 148 Moffatt). The writer knew that the divine understanding he longed for was only obtainable from God's Word. "Through Thy precepts I get understanding; therefore I hate every false way" (104). "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path" (105). "The entrance of Thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding to the sincere (simple A.V.)" (130). To read the Word of God was no chore; it was a perpetual delight. "O how love I Thy law! It is my mediation all the day" (97). And he was convinced of its truth, "Thy Word is true from the beginning, and every one of Thy righteous judgments endureth for ever" (160).

It is obvious that such an one was walking closely with the Lord. Our spiritual health can be rightly judged by our assessment of the Word of God and where we place it in our lives. Can we truthfully say that it is first and foremost, as the Psalmist was able to do? If not, we should think seriously and definitely do something about it, for to be in a cold attitude of mind towards the holy Scriptures is to be in a dangerous condition indeed.

This little Psalm is precious because it stresses the important truth of unity. This is a popular word at the moment in Christendom and many who use it seem oblivious of the fact that external unity (and this is what they usually mean) is impossible without internal and spiritual unity on the basis of the inspired Scriptures and the fundamentals contained therein upon which true Christianity rests. In spite of all that is being said about ecumenicalism, the tragic fact remains that there is no agreement on these basic truths in the various denominations. To deny, or not wholeheartedly support the full inspiration of the Word of God, the deity of Christ, His atoning sacrifice of Himself for our sins, His physical resurrection and His redeeming grace and power is to forfeit the right to be regarded as true Christian. It is all very well to quote John xvii. 21 "that they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us . . . . .", but these words primarily relate to the eleven disciples and their future witness together in the period covered by the Acts and to those who were saved by grace through their ministry "those who shall believe on Me through their word" (xvii. 18-20). The divided state of present Christendom fortunately did not exist at this time. "The welding together into some sort of unity of the Roman Catholic Church, the Greek Orthodox Church, the Anglican Church and the Nonconformist Churches would be a universal calamity, for it could be done only by making sacrifices which would be a betrayal of Christ." These words of Dr. Graham Scroggie hit the nail on the head. One would think, judging from much contemporary religious literature, that the only thing God was concerned about today is external unity.

The fact is that external unity can only be realized when first of all one recognizes the spiritual unity that God has already made. Israel's unity became a reality as they recognized the great Torah, the law of God. It was this that bound them all together. In Eph. iv., members of the Body of Christ are exhorted to keep or guard the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace (iv. 3). Note they are not asked to create a unity themselves but to guard one that already existed as a reality through the work of the Holy Spirit. All other unities are deceptive and useless. The sacred Scriptures warn us that at the end of this age there will be a world federation of nations, a false unity activated and ruled by Satan through the Antichrist and with this there will be a world religion which will give Satan the deceiver what he has been scheming for, ever since his fall—namely world worship (Matt. iv. 8, 9; Rev. xiii. 3, 4, 11, 12).

In dealing with the conditions of the world just prior to the Second Advent, the Lord Jesus gives a fourfold warning of deception (Matt. xxiv. 4, 5, 11, 24; II Thess. ii. 8-10; Rev. xiii. 12-14). There is only one way of escaping this, and that is to cling fast to the Word of God and "to rightly divide" it (II Tim. ii. 15). One must be prepared to be called narrow minded, devisive, and other epithets, but we seek to follow One Who described Himself as the Truth (John xiv. 6), yet was called worse things than these. He indeed was "despised and rejected of men" (Isa. liii. 3), therefore we must not expect popularity in the world that knows Him not. To be acclaimed in the resurrection day as faithful by Him will be the only thing that then really matters. Let us seek a deeper understanding of what the unity of the Spirit really means and then obey God's command to guard it. In doing it we shall be preserved from false unities that are merely external and deceptive.

Psalm cl.

The last Psalm (cl.) is a twelve-fold paeon of praise to the Lord and on what better note can the Psalms end? As long as we are consciously in a praising frame of mind we are unlikely to go wrong. If we can only remember constantly the exceeding riches of grace and glory which are ours in Christ by faith, the effect will be a very practical one. We shall say with the psalmist "what shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits towards me?" (Psa. cxvi. 12). We shall be constrained to place ourselves and all we have at His disposal and sing with Frances Ridley Havergal:

> "O use me, Lord, use even me,
> Just as Thou wilt, and when, and where,
> Until Thy blessed face I see,
> Thy rest, Thy joy, Thy glory share."

Something like this must have affected the psalmist when he wrote Psa. cl. He calls for every living creature in heaven and earth, assisted by a mighty orchestra, to praise Jehovah, the covenant keeping God of love, grace and mercy.

This is the grand finale of this wonderful five-fold Book of praise:

> "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord. Allelujah!" (Psa. cl. 6).
> "And every creature which is in heaven, and in the earth and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and Honour, and Glory, and Power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the Throne and unto the Lamb for ever and ever" (Rev. v. 13).

There is no doubt whatsoever that a knowledge of what the holy Scriptures teach concerning the Holy Spirit is of supreme importance. The need to get a Bible-based view of the Holy Spirit becomes more and more evident as various charismatic movements appear on the scene. The study is indeed profound as any consideration of the great eternal God must be. The Unitarian, who denies the deity of Christ, has the same problem regarding the Holy Spirit. His personality is denied and He is relegated to being merely a divine influence or a manifestation of divine power. Judged by the Scriptures, this view is completely defective and must be rejected by all who value and want to attain to the knowledge of God's truth.

We make no attempt in this work to deal with the Trinity. This has been done in other studies. We would re-iterate that while the word 'trinity' does not occur in the Bible, yet the fact of it does. Owing to the way the 'person' is used today, usually being synonymous with an individual, separate from all other individuals, this word is better avoided as far as possible in dealing with the Godhead, though it is very difficult not to use it, as we have no satisfactory English word as an alternative.

As Dr. W. H. Griffith Thomas wisely remarks,

> "instead of meaning the fact of separate individuality, personality in God is intended to convey an idea of inner distinction which exists in the unity of the divine Nature. The facts from Scripture demand from us an acknowledgment of the unity of the Godhead and at the same time those interior distinctions between Father, Son and Holy Spirit, which we can only express by our word 'person'. While therefore, it is true that the term is used today in connection with human life in a way that is quite different from its use in connection with the Godhead, it is also true that no other term has yet been found adequate to express the essential distinctions in the Godhead" (The Principles of Theology, p.95).

Let us consider the following passages of Scripture:

> "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (Matt. xxviii. 19).
> "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen" (II Cor. xiii. 14).

It should be obvious that both Matthew and the Apostle Paul place the same emphasis on the Holy Spirit as they do on the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. It would be quite improper, irreverent and misleading to associate the Holy Spirit in this way with the Godhead unless He was equal with the Father and the Son.

Moreover, in connection with the sin of Ananias and Sapphira, Peter accuses them of lying to the Holy Ghost (Acts v. 3), lying to God (verse 4), and tempting the Spirit of the Lord (verse 9). It is obvious from this that Peter considered the Holy Spirit to be God and not just a power or an influence. It is impossible to lie to a force. Furthermore, Paul, in Eph. iv. 30 exhorts members of the Body not to "grieve the Spirit of God whereby they are sealed unto the day of redemption". Again, it is quite impossible to grieve power. We live in an age of power, which has come to the fore today as it has never done in times past. Yet no one in their senses would think it possible to grieve, let us say, atomic power, tremendous though this may be. One can only grieve a moral being. When one considers this and the whole revelation of the Bible concerning the Holy Spirit, there should be no doubt whatever that He is a manifestation of the one God Who declares that there is 'none else' beside Him (Isa. xlii. 8; xliii. 10; xliv. 6; xlv. 18, 21). Anything less than this is, as we have before said, utterly defective and is therefore misleading and dangerous.

The deity of the Holy Spirit may raise problems in our minds, but the first thing we must always do, if we want nothing but truth, is to believe what God says in His Word, even if we do not understand it. Anything less than this dishonours Him and exhibits an heart of unbelief which comes under His condemnation. If we are only going to believe what we can understand, our creed will be a small one indeed and moreover we are then open to the deception of the enemy; because our loins are not girded about by truth (Ephesians vi. 14).

The closeness of the relationship between the three manifestations of the triune God is seen by how one honours the other.

(1) The Father honours the Son. "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son: that all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father which hath sent Him" (John v. 22, 23).

(2) The Son honours the Father. "Then answered the Jews, and said unto Him, Say we not well that Thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil? Jesus answered, I have not a devil; but I honour My Father, and ye dishonour Me" (John viii. 48, 49).

(3) The Spirit honours the Son. "But when the Comforter is come, Whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, He shall testify of Me" (John xv. 26). "He (the Spirit of truth) shall glorify Me: for He shall receive of Mine, and shall show it unto you" (John xvi. 14). It is this one God, Who has found it necessary to manifest Himself as Father, Son and Holy Spirit for our salvation and the completion of His redemptive purpose for heaven and earth, that we worship and serve.

Titles of the Holy Spirit.

There are various titles of the Holy Spirit:

The Spirit of God.
"And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters" (Gen. i. 2).

The Spirit of the Lord.

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me" (Isa. lxi. 1; Luke iv. 18; Acts v. 9).

The Spirit of our God.

". . . . . ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God" (I Cor. vi. 11).

The Spirit of grace.

Those who have "trodden under foot the Son of God . . . . . and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace" (Heb. x. 29).

The Spirit of truth.

"He (the Father) shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth . . . . ." (John xvi. 16, 17).

The Comforter.

John xiv. 16, 26; xv. 26; xvi. 7 parakletos, comforter, helper. Note that the Lord says "another Comforter", for He Himself was a comforter.

In I John ii. 1 parakletos is rendered 'Advocate'. The English word is derived from the Latin Advocatus and both words mean one called to the side of another for help or counsel. The Companion Bible points out that the Rabbinical writings often refer to the Messiah as M-nahem (Comforter) and speak of His days as the days of consolation. In the context we see that the Lord with His love and care for the disciples could see their continued need of a comforter and helper, so in view of His imminent departure, He provides another One, the Holy Spirit, Who would abide with them continually.

In connection with the momentous event of the resurrection of Christ, which is the basis of Christianity, we find the whole Godhead engaged. In John x. 17, 18 we have the astounding assertion by the Lord Jesus that He could and would not only lay down His life when He chose to do so, but also take it again:

"No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down for Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again . . . . .".

He likewise said "destroy this temple (His body), and in three days I will raise it up" (John ii. 19). Obviously, these words could never have been made by mortal man or by any created being. They are another proof that He combined (mysteriously and seemingly impossibly to us) humanity and deity. No wonder Paul says "great is the secret of godliness, God was manifest in the flesh" (I Tim. iii. 16), God took upon Himself a human body. Then in Gal. i. 1 we have the statement that Christ was raised by the Father, and in I Pet. iii. 18:

"For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened (made alive) by the Spirit . . . . .".

So we can say with truth that Father, Son and Holy Spirit combine to conquer death in the resurrection of our Lord and Saviour, and we hear His thrilling words in Rev. i. 18:

"I am He that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore", and as He said to His disciples, "Because I live, ye shall live also".

In I Cor. ii. 9-11 we read:

". . . . . Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God . . . even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God."

The Holy Spirit, being God, can plumb the depths of God, and He is the only One Who can. What created being can search and discover God to perfection in all His fullness? What a mighty aid then we have in the person of the Holy Spirit the great Revealer of truth, so that "we might know the things that are freely given to us by God" (I Cor. ii. 12). All this has been conveyed to us through the holy Scriptures which are "words . . . . . which the Holy Ghost teacheth" (verse 13). The Apostle asserts that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (verse 14). Unaided man cannot get to know the things of God.

In other words we, as believers, are shut up to the revealing power of the Holy Spirit working upon the holy Scriptures, and it is by this alone that we receive a knowledge of the truth lying behind the words contained in the Word of God, as we humbly read and seek divine illumination and understanding. Like the Psalmist of old we must continually pray:

"Open Thou mine eyes, the I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law" (Psa. cxix. 18).

Let us get this quite clear. Divine enlightenment cannot come from theological courses or by any special methods of study by themselves. It can only come from the Holy Spirit of wisdom and revelation (Eph. i. 13-19), the great Revealer of the truth He Himself has caused to be written.

No.2. pp. 21 - 25

The Work of the Holy Spirit.

The creative work of Genesis i.

While creation is always linked with the Lord Jesus Christ in the Scriptures (John i. 3; Col. i. 13-17), yet His work was combined with that of the Holy Spirit:

"And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters" (Gen. i. 2).

Just as we have this in connection with the material creation, so it is with reference to the spiritual creation, as we shall see later on in this study.

The inspiration of the holy Scriptures.

Peter, in his second epistle, asserts:

> "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (II Pet. i. 20, 21).

This statement as to the origin of the Word of God is obviously complementary to that of the Apostle Paul in II Tim. iii. 16, 17 and it is noteworthy that both Peter and Paul, at the end of their lives, stress the divine authorship of the sacred Scriptures which are the sole basis for a knowledge of the living Word, the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Revealer of Truth.

Not only is the Holy Spirit the inspirer and author of God's Word, He is the only one Who can give illumination and understanding of its divine contents. In our last study we note how Paul stresses the fact that man without the aid of the Holy Spirit, is unable to receive and comprehend what God has caused to be written. "The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God" that by His enlightenment "we might know the things that are freely given to us of God" (I Cor. ii. 11, 12), for "God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit" (verse 10), and these words are described as "words which the Holy Ghost teacheth" (verse 13). The Lord Jesus promised the disciples that the Holy Spirit would 'guide them into all truth'. "He shall glorify Me; for He shall receive of Mine, and shall show it unto you" (John xvi. 13, 14).

Here is something then which is absolutely vital, something which neither intellectual ability nor theological training can give by themselves, namely divine understanding of the Bible.

The witness of the Holy Spirit.

"The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God" (Rom. viii. 16). In this work the Holy Spirit makes real to the believer what has been taken by faith and gives the consciousness of that reality. It is with this in mind that the Apostle John says "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself" (I John v. 10). The enjoyment of this precious witness is conditioned upon our walking with the Lord. If we get spiritually cold or backslide, we must not expect to experience the assurance that we are really sons of God, although the fact of our sonship rests squarely upon what the Lord Jesus has accomplished for us and not upon our experiences, however precious they may be.

In II Cor. i. 21, 22 Paul wrote:

> "Now He which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God; Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts."

John, likewise in his first epistle wrote:

> "But ye have an unction (anointing) from the Holy One, and ye know all things" (I John ii. 20).

> "But the anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth and is no lie . . . . ." (I John ii. 27).

The verb chrio and the noun chrisma occur only in those Scriptures written during the Acts period and relate to the distributing of evidential gifts that are listed in I Cor. xii. One of these gifts is spiritual knowledge (verse 8) and the reference in John's first epistle makes it quite clear that this came directly from the Holy Spirit apart from human mediation; "ye need not that any man teach you". "Ye know all things." When we "rightly divide" the Word, we shall have no problem with the fact that this does not obtain today. It is only as we 'search the Scriptures' like the Berean of old meditate and pray for 'opened eyes' by the Holy Spirit, that divine illumination comes. If we are not prepared to dig into the treasures of the Word of God, we shall miss much. There is little in the way of enlightenment and understanding of the Scriptures for lazy Christians.

Sealing.

The seal speaks of the completed undertaking whether in the rational or spiritual world. The sealing of the Holy Spirit belongs to those who are justified and perfected for ever in Christ. In II Cor. i. 22 we read ". . . . . God Who hath sealed us, and given us the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts". In Eph. iv. 30 we are exhorted to "grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption". In the first chapter the Apostle Paul states:

> ". . . . . Christ: in Whom ye also, having heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation, in Whom, having also believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise" (Eph. i. 13, R.V.).

The student should be careful to avoid the A.V. rendering "after that ye heard . . . . . after that ye believed" which is completely misleading. There is no 'after' in the original Greek. The moment of 'hearing' and 'believing' was the same moment when the Holy Spirit performed His work of sealing. There is no basis here for the second blessing or filling of the Holy Spirit after salvation as taught by the Pentecostalists, and this should be a warning to those who seek to base doctrine on translations alone.

Sanctification.

The basic meaning of sanctification is separation for a particular purpose. Its first occurrence in the Bible gives us this sense in connection with the sabbath:

> "And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it, because that in it He had rested from all his work which God created and made" (Gen. ii. 3).

Here the purpose is stated; God had ceased working on the seventh day, not because He was tired, but by reason of its typical value and the N.T. later is to tell us that this was a picture of the "rest (sabbath) that remains to the people of God" (Heb. iv. 9 margin). God's choice and separation of us as believers in Christ was in order that we should be "holy and without blame" (Eph. i. 4). This is absolutely basic to the purpose of the ages in bringing all things back to spotlessness and perfection. No wonder then that we read in Heb. xii. 14 ". . . . . holiness (sanctification), without which no man shall see the Lord", and also Heb. x. 10:

> "By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all."

This is primarily received by the believer in the same way that he is saved, namely by trust in Christ's redemptive work on the cross:

> ". . . . . Christ Jesus, Who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification (holiness), and redemption" (I Cor. i. 30 and see Eph. v. 25-27).

It is God Who both saves and sanctifies and it is the Holy Spirit Who applies this to the believer ". . . . . God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth" (II Thess. ii. 13). It is absolutely impossible for any man to make himself holy. If he could do so, there would be no need for the work of the Lord Jesus and His great sacrifice for sin.

There is however a progressive or experimental sanctification that should follow from this. The work of the Holy Spirit in the believer enables him to walk day by day so as to please the Lord. It is written:

> "For this is the will of God, even your sanctification that ye should abstain from fornication: that every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour" (I Thess. iv. 3, 4).

Timothy was informed by Paul, that "having been sanctified" he was "meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work" (II Tim. ii. 21). Through the operation of the Holy Spirit, the work and the mighty resurrection power of Christ is applied to the believer who is set apart by God, making him sufficient for all his needs and daily walk, anticipating that day in resurrection, when he will be presented "holy and without blemish", being conformed to the image of the Lord Jesus Christ (Rom. viii. 29).

The Earnest.

We take the liberty of quoting from our work The Unfolding Purpose of God on this point:

> "The word rendered 'earnest' is interesting. In Gen. xxxviii. 17, 18, 20 it is used in the Septuagint, the Greek translation of the O.T., to render the word 'pledge'. In a slightly different form it meant an engagement ring, a pledge of marriage and was used by the Phoenicians to signify the first installment of a payment which would be made in full later on. Just as God gave Israel a 'first installment' as it were of the good land of Canaan before they entered it, by allowing the spies to bring back the enormous grapes of Eshcol and its luscious pomegranates and figs (Numb. xiii. 17-27), so God the Holy Spirit is graciously pleased to give us here and now glimpses of the coming glory, and these are a divine pledge that God's will and plan cannot be frustrated. The goal must be reached. Now we have the firstfruits of the Spirit (Rom. viii. 23). Then it will be the reality where Christ is exalted to the Majesty on high" (Page 63).

This is further confirmed by the fact that the Holy Spirit has sealed us until the day of redemption as we have already seen. God's seal cannot be broken either by Satan or the believer. The Lord will not allow anything whatsoever to come between the believer and the realization of his 'blessed hope'. What abiding joy and confidence this should give, specially when we remember our own frailty and failing.

The great redemptive purpose of God which embraces all things in heaven and earth does not rest upon any created being, but upon God's own almightiness, foreknowledge and wisdom. If one of these was only partial or if it rested upon us in any way, we could have no real assurance that God would attain His glorious goal. Truly we can say with Paul "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out!" (Rom. xi. 33).

No.3. pp. 41 - 45

Types of the Holy Spirit.

Oil.

In the Old Testament we find truth set forth in picture form or types. Particularly is this so with regard to redemption and atonement which are set forth by animal sacrifice. There are many types of Christ which foreshadow His Person and His work and with some of these are blended types of the Holy Spirit. The sweet savour offerings are apart from the sin offerings, in that they do not portray the Lord Jesus as the sin-bearer, but set forth the perfection of His Person and His service.

In the meal offerings of Lev. ii. 1-6 we see Christ foreshadowed in His sinlessness. There were to be no lumps; its consistency must be prefect. But with it was blended oil, and oil was also poured upon it. Oil was used for healing, for comfort, for illuminating and anointing for specific purposes. Likewise the Holy Spirit heals, comforts, illuminates and consecrates. With consecration in view, before the Lord Jesus commenced His public ministry, the Holy Spirit descended upon Him as a dove, which is another picture of the Spirit of God (Matt. iii. 16, 17).

It was as the perfect Man He was sustained all through His life and witness by the Holy Spirit and it is important to realize that the Spirit was given to the Lord in an unlimited way, "without measure". In John iii. 34 we read: "For He Whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto Him". As God He needed no strengthening, but as Man He rendered all His service and witness by the power of the Spirit. This is what made the action of the Pharisees and Sadducees so terrible in asserting that He performed His miracles by the power of Beelzebub or Satan (Matt. xii. 24-32).

The Lord Jesus declared that this is the one sin that cannot be forgiven, for it should be obvious that anyone who declares that God accomplishes His work by the power of Satan, the liar and the prince of darkness, puts himself outside the realm of salvation and forgiveness. Satan is no Saviour! but God's greatest enemy. Some in this age have been tormented with the thought that they have sinned terribly and committed the unforgivable sin. It is not possible to do this unless they have blasphemed exactly as these Pharisees did. This relates to one specific sin only, the one noted above. All other sin is forgivable, as the Lord made clear.

So we see that our Saviour was consecrated by the Holy Spirit at the beginning of His ministry to Israel. It is interesting and instructive to note how oil was used in the O.T. in connection with the cleansing of the leper and his being received back into fellowship. Leprosy was a type of sin and the leper represents all of us as we are in ourselves, for "there is none righteous no, not one". "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. iii. 10, 19, 23). Lev. xiv. 10-42 should be read carefully. The priest had to pour oil into his left hand and apply it to the leper's ear, the thumb of his right hand, the great toe of his right foot, and then upon the blood of the trespass offering. What was left was poured on the head.

Translated into spiritual terms we have the cleansing and sanctification of the entire person by the Spirit's work which the oil typifies. The ear is no longer a vehicle for receiving the things of the flesh and the world, but is now 'swift to hear' the voice of God, speaking through His Word. The hand is no longer to be used as an instrument of wrong doing, but to be stretched forth in acts of righteousness and grace. The foot is no longer to tread in the pathway of sin and folly, but to go in the way marked out by the Lord and His will. Finally the whole man is to be dedicated to the Lord in the energy of the Holy Spirit.

We should also note that the 'oil' was put upon the 'blood of the trespass offering'. The work of the Holy Spirit rests upon the redemptive work wrought by the Saviour on Calvary's cross and they go together. As sinners, we could know nothing of the truth represented by the 'oil' save on the ground of what is set forth by the 'trespass offering'. God's practical illustrations of truth are always accurate.

Not only did the 'oil' symbolize consecration, but it served as the source of light in the Tabernacle and Temple (cp. Exod. xxv. 6) reminding us in a twofold way that the Holy Spirit is the only source of spiritual light, for He alone can give the illumination and understanding of the Word of God, enabling us in our turn to "shine as lights in the world, holding forth the Word of life" (Phil. ii. 15, 16).

Further, one of the abiding gifts of the Spirit is joy. In Psa. xlv. 7 there is a reference to the 'oil of gladness' and Paul declares the 'fruit of the Spirit is . . . . . joy' (Gal. v. 22). This is also one of the abiding and precious gifts of the Saviour which the Spirit makes real to the believer who looks away from temporal things for lasting satisfaction and rests upon the unchanging Word of God.

> "These things have I spoken unto you, that My joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full" (John xv. 11).

Such will be constantly full of the 'oil of gladness' in spite of there being so much to depress all around us.

Wind.

The action of the Holy Spirit is likened to wind by the Lord Jesus when to Nicodemus He said:

> "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou heareth the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit" (John iii. 8).

The Authorized Version presents difficulties here. The word 'listeth' is old English for the Anglo-Saxon lusteth which meant pleases or desires. The original uses thelo, to wish or desire. Has the wind got a will of its own? Furthermore we do know whence it comes and whither it goes for we use the points of the compass to describe its direction (compare Job i. 19; Eccles. i. 6; Ezek. xxxvii. 9). When John wanted to refer to the wind he used the normal Greek word for it, anemos: "And the sea arose by reason of a great wind (anemos) that blew" (John vi. 18). But in chapter iii. 8 he uses pneuma, spirit, so the verse begins and ends with this word. Taking these facts into consideration we render the verse:

> "The Spirit breathes where He wills, and His voice thou hearest; but thou knowest not whence He cometh or whither He goeth. Thus it is with everyone who has been begotten by the Spirit."

The context shows the contrast between flesh and spirit, earthly things and heavenly things. As the Holy Spirit in His movements is contrary to and above nature (i.e. supernatural), so is that which is begotten of the Spirit. Just as the unsaved world only once born, neither knows Christ nor those who have a second birth (I John iii. 1), so the working of the Spirit within the believer, the new will and the new desires, are unknown to mankind around us.

The Holy Spirit in the Old Testament.

There is a distinct difference in the work of the Holy Spirit during the O.T. period and that covered by the N.T. In O.T. days He came upon men to strengthen and equip them for some specific work, but He did not abide with them and indwell them.

The Lord Jesus gave a new aspect of His work as His own was finishing and He was under the shadow of the cross. To the disciples He said:

> "And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth . . . . . for He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you" (John xiv. 16, 17).

The indwelling of the Holy Spirit was unknown during O.T. times. This does not mean that His activities were small and little known. Various O.T. saints knew by experience His gracious enabling. In Exod. xxxi. 1-5 we read:

> "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, See, I have called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri . . . . . and I have filled him with the Spirit of God, in wisdom and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship, to devise cunning (clever, ingenious) works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in cutting of stones, to set them, and in carving of timber, to work in all manner of workmanship" (see also Exod. xxxv. 30-35).

Here was the Spirit of God specially equipping this man to make objects of beauty for the dwelling place of God in the Tabernacle. God is worthy only of the best. The second best will not do, and this is a lesson we can all learn. Too often God has been offered anything but the best by His people. It is easy to say "our best is nothing worth" and make this an excuse for giving Him anything no matter how inferior it is. We need the spirit of David when he assembled all the costly materials for building God's permanent house, namely the Temple. I Chron. xxix. should be read carefully and there we shall see how David gave the very best that he could obtain. He could say "I have prepared with all my might for the house of the Lord" (verse 2) and then follows a list of exceeding precious things of gold and silver, wood, marble and all kinds of precious stones and at the end of it all David said "for all things come of Thee and of Thine own have we given Thee" (verse 14).

In our service let us never offer the Lord anything but the best of our ability, even though this is far from perfect.

The activity and enabling of the Holy Spirit is clearly seen in the book of Judges. We see Him coming upon Othniel, Caleb's younger brother, to execute his duties as judge and also deliver Israel from their enemies:

"And the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he judged Israel, and went out to war: and the Lord delivered Chushan-rishathaim king of Mesopotamia into his hand; and his hand prevailed against Chushan-rishathaim" (Judges iii. 10).

Exactly the same thing happened with Gideon (Judges vi. 34). So much so that God reduced Israel's army from 32,000 men to 300, and He said "The people that are with thee are too many for me to give the Midianites into their hands, lest Israel vaunt themselves against Me, saying, Mine own hand hath saved me" (Judges vii. 2). How well God knows the frailty and sinful pride of human hearts! No wonder He has devised His mighty redemption plan so that no man may "have a finger in the pie" as it were, and boast of his own achievements. The most man can do is to exercise faith in what God has accomplished on his behalf. It is "not of works lest any man should boast" (Eph. ii. 8, 9). God plans to have all the glory at the consummation. "Unto Him be the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations for ever and ever" (Eph. iii. 21).

We have noted how the Holy Spirit came upon leaders in the book of Judges, strengthening them so that they were able not only to judge Israel righteously, but also to deliver them again and again from their mighty enemies. We have seen how Othniel and Gideon were enabled by the Spirit's might to accomplish what God had purposed for them.

Jephthah had a similar experience (Judges xi. 29) and so did Samson. As a child Samson was specially blessed of the Lord, "And the Spirit of the Lord began to move him at times (to and fro) in the camp of Dan between Zorah and Eshtaol" (xiii. 24, 25). He was given special strength by the Spirit to destroy an attacking lion (xiv. 5, 6), also thirty of the Philistines of Ashkelon and in the next chapter 1,000 more (xv. 11-15). Yet what a contradiction he was, swayed as he was alternately by the flesh and Spirit! In spite of this, the God of all grace and longsuffering used him to carry out His purpose for Israel's need at that particular time and we must not forget that his name occurs in the list of overcomers given in Heb. xi. Truly God's judgments are very different from man's, for He looks not at the outward appearance, but on the heart (I Sam. xvi. 7). God is first concerned about the mind with its motives, its plans, its hopes and fears and all is naked and open to Him (Heb. iv. 13). Such an assessment is impossible by a human being and this is one of the reasons why human judgment is so often wrong and unjust. How good it is to realize that all we are and all we have done will be assessed one day by the righteous Judge (II Tim. iv. 8) Who is free from all bias and makes no mistakes, and Whose overriding motive is love.

We have another problematic character in Saul, who started so well, like Solomon of a later date, and ended so badly. Saul was man's choice, but even so, God did not withhold the Holy Spirit's enabling from him. Once again Israel became involved with their enemies, this time the Ammonites who threatened to destroy the Israelites at Jabesh-gilead. It was at this time of danger that the Holy Spirit came upon Saul and so strengthened him that he was enabled to lead his people to victory (I Sam. xi. 6). So much so that the Ammonites were slain and scattered "so that two of them were not left together" (xi. 11). This was not Saul's first experience of the Spirit's power, for the previous chapter recalls Saul's ability to prophesy among the company of prophets who met him (x. 10), given again by the enduement of the Spirit of God.

It is clear then that this man's declension was not due to any lack of enabling of the Holy Spirit, but rather his refusal to carry out the Lord's will and to put Him first in all things. As man's choice we are not surprised that he failed and God finally said to Samuel:

> ". . . . . How long wilt thou mourn for Saul, seeing I have rejected him from reigning over Israel? Fill thine horn with oil, and go, I will send thee to Jesse, the Bethlehemite: for I have provided Me a king among his sons" (I Sam. xvi. 1).

A little later on we read "But the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him" (xvi. 14). Once the Holy Spirit's power was removed, this man went down hill rapidly and finally ended by having delight with spiritism, so strongly forbidden by the Mosaic law.

God's choice of a king for Israel centred upon David. Samuel was divinely guided, for when David as a youth was brought into his presence we read that "the Lord said, Arise, anoint him: for this is he . . . . . and the Spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day forward" (I Sam. xvi. 12, 13). Nor did the Holy Spirit leave him all through his life, for, in spite of his failures, his heart was right with the Lord and this is the first thing that comes under God's scrutiny as we have seen. David knew that he deserved to lose the Spirit's influence, for, after his sin with Bath-sheba, he said "Take not Thy Holy Spirit from me" (Psa. li. 11). The Reformers, not realizing the change of dispensation, brought this prayer over into the morning prayer of the Church of England and each Sunday those who worship here ask God not to take the Holy Spirit from them. But, as we shall see, this is what the Lord never does in this age of grace. "Right division" can save us from many mistakes in doctrine. The Holy Spirit is now a permanent indweller in the believer. The Lord Jesus said:

> "I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever . . . . . for He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you" (John xiv. 16, 17).

This is one of the great differences between the O.T. dispensation and the present one.

The Holy Spirit in His relationship to the world.

The Lord Jesus dealt with that relationship in John xvi. 7-11:

> "Nevertheless I tell you the truth, It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send Him unto you. And when He is come, He will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment: of sin, because they believe not on Me; of righteousness, because I go to My Father, and ye see Me no more, of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged."

There are some who seek to restrict the meaning of elengcho (translated 'reprove') to the thought of enlightening, but this is misleading. Enlightening there certainly is with regard to the Holy Spirit's work with the unsaved world, but it is enlightening regarding their sinful condition and a conviction that this is so. The usage of this word in the N.T. is decisive. It occurs 17 times (Matt. xviii. 15; Luke iii. 19; John iii. 20; viii. 9, 46; xvi. 8; I Cor. xiv. 24; Eph. v. 11, 13; I Tim. v. 20; II Tim. iv. 2; Titus i. 9, 13; ii. 15; Heb. xii. 5; James ii. 9; Rev. iii. 19). Typical occurrences are Titus i. 13 and ii. 15 where 'enlighten' would be completely unsatisfactory as a translation.

The threefold work of the Spirit is described by the Lord as being connected with (1) sin, (2) righteousness, and (3) judgment. Note that it is sin in the singular, not sins. It goes to the root and deals with the parent sin of unbelief 'of sin', the Saviour said, "because they believe not on Me" (John xvi. 9). This is the one sin that completely alienates from God. In fact, it makes the God of truth a liar. "He that believeth not God hath made Him a liar, because he believeth not the record that God gave of His Son" (I John v. 10-12). This is something that God will not tolerate. "He that cometh to God must believe that He is (i.e. exists), and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him", and earlier in the verse, "without faith it is impossible to please Him" (Heb. xi. 6).

Now “faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God (or Christ)” (Rom.x.17). So it is evident that the parent sin of unbelief has to do with man’s attitude to the written and living Word of God. This is absolutely basic, and it is because of this drift away from believing the Word of God and the Christ of that Word that we see the apostasy deepening today with all the terrible problems that accompany it. It was not for nothing that one of the Apostle Paul’s last commands to Timothy was to “Proclaim (preach) the Word” (II Tim. iv. 2), and there is certainly no substitute for this if we wish to see the truth progressing and darkness being banished.

As regards salvation, man can do nothing to achieve this, and it is for this reason that all has already been done for man by the Lord Jesus Christ. His last words were “It is finished (completed)” (John xix. 30) and a completed work needs no additions. This is a hard lesson for man to learn, for he believes that he can and must do something, and all the false religions are agreed on this one fact, however much they may differ among themselves. But the truth is that God has done everything that is needful, leaving the individual with only the one issue, believing or not believing what He has done. The true gospel does not present something for the unsaved to do. Rather it presents something for them to believe, and the Holy Spirit’s work is to convict the lost about the character and extent of the sin that “they believe not on Me (Christ)” (John xvi. 9) and then points them to the Saviour, “Who can save to the uttermost” (Heb. vii. 25).

The second characteristic of the Holy Spirit’s present work in relation to the world is “of righteousness, because I go to My Father” the Lord declared (John xvi. 10). Without doubt, this is Christ’s righteousness and upon this glorious fact the whole of redemption rests. If the Lord was not perfectly holy in thought, word and deed from the cradle to the grave, then He would have needed a Saviour Himself. He could not have been a Saviour of others and how could a sinner and a blasphemer have been raised from the dead and exalted to the glory of heaven’s holiest of all with everything under His feet? His going to the Father in resurrection and ascension was the fitting consummation of His perfect work on earth and a triumphant vindication of His righteousness so that He can be the Saviour of the world. This the Holy Spirit reveals in measure to the convicted sinner.

The third characteristic is found in the Lord’s statement “of judgment, because the prince of this world is judge”. Here we have the usurper, Satan, whose one object is to take God’s place and exercise his dominion. At the moment while God is overall the world system is not being run by Him, but rather by the deceiver who has “blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, Who is the image of God, should shine unto them” (II Cor. iv. 4). Satan aspires to the very titles of Christ. It was Satan who offered the kingdoms of this world to the Lord in the wilderness. For the moment Satan has usurped them and the Lord did not deny this. He is the false prince or ruler of this world (John xiv. 30) just as Christ is the true One (Revelation i. 5). Satan is the false God of this age and the Word of God does not hesitate to describe him as such (II Cor. iv. 4), but it is the Lord Jesus Christ Who is the true One (John i. 1). But, thank God, the enemy has been judged. The victory of Calvary means his defeat and final overthrow. The sentence has not been carried out yet, but the time is coming when it will surely take place and sin and death and the deceiver will be finally removed from God's perfected universe.

The Holy Spirit as the life-giver.

This brings us to the doctrine of regeneration, the basic meaning of which is birth and the beginning of life. One of the terrible consequences of sin is that it has brought humanity into a state of death both physically and spiritually. Is there any future for a dean man so far as this world is concerned? The answer is decidedly 'no', unless he can be brought to life again. Eph. ii. 1 describes believer as being "dead in trespasses and sins" as far as the past was concerned, and many other Scriptures clearly show the ravages that sin has made on the human mind and understanding.

How does God remedy this? He does so in two ways: (1) by giving sinners a second birthday, a spiritual one, hence the Lord's words to a religious man, "ye must be born again" (John iii. 3, 7). This only goes to show it is possible to have religion without life! (2) By making men new creations (II Cor. v. 17).

We have seen how regeneration and re-creation are God's answers to the problem of spiritual death which is the result of sin. It should be quite obvious that, just as a dead man cannot bring himself to life again physically, neither can he give himself spiritual birth. The Lord Jesus Christ described this spiritual life as a 'must', declaring to a leader of Israel, Nicodemus, that without this he could not 'see the kingdom of God' (John iii. 3, 7).

Now the Author or Begetter of this new life is none other than the Holy Spirit, for Christ declared that a man must be 'born of the Spirit' (John iii. 5-8). He is the quickener, the life giver. Let us not lose truth because an archaic word 'quicken' is used. To quicken has nothing to do with pace or movement, but means 'to give life' and this is the basic need of all sinful mankind which is under the dominion of sin and death. All must start here from the spiritual angle. It is possible to be very religious, to be absorbed in ritual and good works and yet to be dead spiritually. Thousands do not realize this, and they imagine that by their religious activities they are fully meeting God's demands, but these can never of themselves produce the life of God which is eternal.

The second effect of the Holy Spirit's work in regeneration is to bring these quickened ones into family relationship with God. It is a generally accepted idea, but quite false, that God is the Father of all mankind, and so all the world can be looked upon as His children. The statement of John i. 11, 12 shows the error of this:

> "He came to His own, and His own received Him not. But as many as received Him, to them gave He power (the right) to become the sons of God, even to them that believe > on His Name, which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

It is only by the spiritual birth and creative activity of the Holy Spirit that any person becomes a child of God and can look to Him and call Him Father. All mankind has relationship to God as Creator and Judge, but not as Father. The universal fatherhood of God is an untruth, lulling the minds of the unsaved into a false sense of security.

It has been the habit of some dispensationalists to keep regeneration to Israel and the new creation to the Body of Christ. But we need to remember that the word translated regeneration occurs after Acts xxviii. in Titus iii. 5 and if we want unadulterated truth, we must be prepared to be absolutely accurate in our study. It is easy to make rigid distinctions which do not have the backing of Scripture. On the other hand, it is true to say that creation goes deeper than birth. Adam was created, but Abel was born. Nevertheless the basic thought underlying these two conceptions is the beginning of spiritual life, and this is where we must all start if we have any place in God's great redemptive purpose.

Some confuse regeneration with conversion. Regeneration is solely God's work. Conversion, or turning, is the act of man as a result of this work. Regeneration deals with life, just as justification and sanctification deal with sin. These different aspects need to be clearly distinguished. As we study the Word we shall find that the whole Godhead is concerned with regeneration:

The Father.

> ". . . . . the Father of lights, with Whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Of His own will begat He us with the Word of truth . . . . ." (James i. 17, 18).

The Son.

> "For the Bread of God, is He Which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world" (John vi. 33 and see x. 28; and xvii. 2).

The Holy Spirit.

> "The wind bloweth where it listeth . . . . . so is every one that is born of the Spirit" (John iii. 8).

The same is true of the resurrection of Christ (Gal. i. 1; John x. 18; I Pet. iii. 18). As the life of God is a basic need for a dead world, we are not surprised to find that it is not confined to the Gospels. Both Titus i. 1, 2 and II Tim. i. 1 clearly teach that this unending life is a precious possession of each member of the Body of Christ, for what is the use of speaking about blessing in heavenly places without life to enjoy it?

> "Paul, a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness: in the hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began (the beginning of time) . . . . ." (Titus i. 1, 2), and in his last epistle:

> "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, according to the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus" (II Tim. i. 1).

At the end of the first epistle to Timothy he describes it as "the life which is life indeed" (I Tim. vi. 19 R.V.). This future life is the real one; the present is only a shadow. Eternal life in the epistle is a gift and cannot be revoked.

The Indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

We have noticed in past studies that the Holy Spirit's presence with men was temporary, and it was not until the gift of the Holy Spirit as the Comforter that it could be said that He would abide with the believer for ever and be in him (John xiv. 16, 17). The Apostle Paul confirms this in Rom. viii. 9 and 11:

> "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you . . . . ."
> "But if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you."

Not only this, but the Lord Jesus Himself indwells the believer. Later on in Ephesians Paul was to pray that these believers might be strengthened by the Spirit in order that Christ may dwell in their hearts by faith (Eph. iii. 16, 17). With two such mighty indwellers we can surely accomplish all God's will for us whatever this may involve!

Spirit or spirit?

There is great difficulty in translation to know when to render pneuma, spirit, with a capital "S" or a small 's'. The translator can get no help either from the original Greek manuscripts or the printed editions of the Greek Testament. One class of manuscripts is written all in capitals. These are called "Uncials". The other class is written all in small letters with very few capitals at the beginning of books or sections, or of large paragraphs. These are called "Cursives". There are no capitals for certain words as we used them today.

We get little help from the A.V. of 1611. Many editions have been printed and in these, great modifications have been made from time to time. We can say that none of the existing editions of the A.V. exactly represents that of 1611. The use of capitals was much more common in the 17th century and words like Sabbath, Ark, Mercy-Seat, Altar always had capitals. The modern tendency is to diminish their use.

As a consequence of this, the translator is compelled to fall back on the context and weigh up carefully whether a capital "S" should be used, thus making it refer to the Holy Spirit, or a small 's', referring to His gifts or to some psychological use. As the word pneuma, spirit occurs some 385 times in the Received Text, the problem is a frequent one. The reader should therefore bear in mind that capitals in any translation are the opinions of the translator and become interpretation rather then translation. Moreover, they obviously affect the sense of the passage in which they occur.

It is very surprising that so little has been written to deal with this subject. The best work we know is Dr. E. W. Bullinger's The Giver and His Gifts, which deals with every occurrence of the word 'spirit' in the N.T. Unfortunately at the moment it is out of print. If one carefully studies a chapter like Rom. viii., where the word 'spirit' occurs frequently, one is constantly faced with this problem of when to use capitals. In the current editions of the A.V. the capital "S" is used all through the first 14 verses with the exception of 'spiritually minded' in verse 6. The R.V. is very different and commences using a small 's' in verse 4, making 'spirit' the opposite of 'flesh', in other words the two natures in the believer are the subject, and we feel this to be nearer to that which the Apostle Paul was intending. Let no one think that the Holy Spirit is being eliminated in this way for there cannot be a gift without a Giver and so there cannot be a new nature in the believer without the work of the Holy Spirit. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which born of the Spirit is spirit" (John iii. 6). The Giver and the gift clearly appear in verse 16 of Rom. viii.

The Apostle Peter in his second epistle describes this gift coming through "exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature . . . . ." (II Pet. i. 3, 4). Every truly saved person therefore possesses a small portion of God's holy nature implanted within by the Holy Spirit and this in direct contrast to the old sinful nature inherited from fallen Adam, hence the internal conflict that is often experienced. The doctrine of the two natures in the believer is of great importance and failure to understand the teaching of the Word of God on this subject can cause many difficulties both in the interpretation of Scripture and in the individual life. Here again a work of Dr. Bullinger is of great help, The Two Natures in the Child of God and this should be carefully considered by lovers of the Word.

A study of the word 'spirit' in the N.T. will reveal that it is used in fourteen different ways. Readers who have The Companion Bible should turn to Appendix 101 where much helpful information is given. Sometimes it is employed with the definite article "the" and sometimes without it. It is used with hagion holy in four ways:

(1) pneuma hagion (holy spirit).
(2) hagion pneuma (spirit holy).
(3) the hagion pneuma (the holy spirit).
(4) the pneuma the hagion (the spirit the holy).

All these are rendered in the A.V. "the Holy Spirit", but is this correct? Pneuma hagion (without the definite article) occurs 52 times in the N.T. and often refers to the gift the Holy Spirit gives rather than Himself, whereas the longer expression (4) refers to Him personally. It has been pointed out that the Acts of the Apostles is really the Acts of the Holy Spirit, for He is the dominating personality of the book, and this longer emphatic expression referring to Himself and His activities occurs 15 times (i. 16; ii. 33; v. 3; vii. 51; x. 44, 47; xi. 15; xiii. 2, 4; xv. 8; xix. 6; xx. 23, 28; xxviii. 25).

There is no doubt that great care is needed in interpreting the various phrases employed in the N.T. containing the word ‘spirit’, otherwise wrong doctrines can be built up which lead to error and wrong understanding of other parts of holy Scripture.

No.6. pp. 101 - 106

The Baptism of the Holy Spirit.

With baptism, we come to a doctrine that has done more to shatter external unity in Christendom than anything else. Many are the ideas that Christians have concerning baptism, some of them leading to division and disunity. We should seek to study the Scriptures on this point with an open, teachable mind, and if necessary, be willing to unlearn and learn afresh. First of all, let us look at the words used. The verbs are bapto and baptizo. The former is used only three times in the N.T., namely Luke xvi. 24, John xiii. 26 and Rev. xix. 13. The word means to dip or stain. Baptizo, on the other hand is of frequent occurrence, namely 79 times. Its primary meaning is to immerse or submerge. The secondary meaning is described by Dr. J. W. Dale in his Classic Baptism, p.354:

> “Whatever is capable of thoroughly changing the character, state, or condition of any object, is capable of baptizing that object; and by such change of character, state or condition does, in fact, baptize it.”

It is in this secondary sense that the word is used in most of its occurrences in the N.T. We do not intend here to deal with the doctrine of baptism in its various usages in the Bible. We have touched upon this subject in The Unfolding Purpose of God, pp.92-96. Our theme now is the Holy Spirit and His relationship to baptism; specially baptism as presented by the Apostle Paul in Rom. vi., Eph. iv. and Col. ii. Here we believe that we are dealing, not with an external type but with a great spiritual reality, the work of God and not the work of man. The baptism that the above Scriptures present is one that has permanent effects. Believers were not just baptized with water but into Christ’s death (Rom. vi. 3). Neither man nor water could do this. It is solely the work of God the Holy Spirit, and such became permanently united with Christ in His death, burial and resurrection, so that all of their spiritual values are secured eternally. The saved in this chapter of Romans are not taken back to a day when they were immersed by a human being in water. Rather they are taken back to Joseph’s tomb where Christ was buried and there, by the work of God, they were crucified, they died, were buried, and rose again IN HIM (Rom. vi. 3-6). No amount of water could do this. It could only touch the body not the mind or spirit. In any case how can water baptism represent crucifixion?

Sunthapto, the word used by Paul, was only used of burial in a tomb, never in water, either literally or figuratively. As Col. ii. 12 expresses it, this spiritual baptism is “the work (operation) of God” and not the work of any man, Christian or otherwise. What needs to sink into our minds is the fact that Biblical types are only shadows; they are not the reality. They only imperfectly set forth the reality as an illustration.

Heb. x. 1 is not only true of animal sacrifice. It is true of all types or pictures of spiritual truths when the reality has come:

> "For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect."

The Hebrew believers, now that they had the spiritual reality in the death and resurrection of Christ, were asked "to go on to perfection (maturity)" and leave the shadow behind. Believers today are asked to do the same thing, but many, however much they may want to do this, feel they must still cling to the "picture book". For them this is more real because it is appreciated by the senses, something they can see, touch and feel. Such should remember that all ritual is but an illustration, a "shadowing forth". It can never be the reality which is eternal and spiritual and God asks us to walk by faith in these glorious realities and not by sight or feeling. Dr. Merrill Unger in Bibliotheca Sacra writes:

> "In these passages (Rom. vi. 3; Col. ii. 12; Eph. iv. 5) the holy Apostle is not considering ritual baptism at all. The sublimity of thought, the context of the argument, the exalted nature of the spiritual verities taught, support this position. He is speaking of something infinitely higher, not of a mere symbolic ordinance that is powerless to effect intrinsic change, but of a divine operation which places us eternally in Christ, and into His experience of crucifixion, death, burial and resurrection."

In his book on Romans (chapter six), Dr. Martyn Lloyd Jones states, in expounding verses 2 and 3:

> "The conclusion therefore at which I arrive is that baptism by water is not in the mind of the Apostle at all in these two verses; instead it is the baptism that is wrought by the Spirit . . . . . Again take the statement which the Apostle makes in Gal. 2:20 which is so frequently misquoted: 'I have been crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me . . . . .'. Now there you have the identical doctrine (as Rom.6:2,3), but baptism is not mentioned. That is because water baptism does not achieve union, it does not produce it; indeed at that point it does not even represent it. This is a baptism which is carried out by the Holy Spirit when He incorporates us into, engrafts us into the Lord Jesus Christ" (page 36).

It is only fair to say that Dr. Lloyd Jones is not a dispensationalist and accepts that water baptism has its place, but certainly not in Rom. vi. and Col. ii. This makes his testimony all the more telling.

It is this spiritual baptism effected by the Holy Spirit that is the "one baptism" of Ephesians iv. As to "hope", "Lord", "faith", "God" there is little, if any, difference among true believers. But when we come to baptism, so many forget that the one baptism is mentioned in equal terms with the above words. The emphasis in "one" is in opposition to corporate diversity in the Body of Christ. There are those who suggest water baptism can be blended with the Spirit's baptism here and yet be looked upon as one baptism. We do not understand this kind of mental jugglery, but it cannot be true, not only in view of the above arguments, but also because water baptism did not form a necessary part of the commission Christ gave Paul. "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel" (I Cor. i. 17) he asserted. Even though he did baptize a few, it should be quite evident from the clear command of the Lord that ritual baptism was not essential to the ministry entrusted to him and therefore it is an intruder in Eph. iv. 5 and Col. ii. as well as being quite foreign to the context. Each member of the Body is "filled full (complete) in Christ" (Col. ii. 10). What can "shadows" add to this glorious fullness? And is it not lack of appreciation of this fullness that causes many to cling to these 'shadows'?

We would sum up by saying that the real Spirit baptism identifies and unites a believer with Christ eternally. There are three great unities in Scripture:

(1) The unity between the members of the Godhead (John xvii.).
(2) The unity between Christ and the believer (Rom. vi.).
(3) The unity between believers themselves (Eph. iv.).

No wonder we are not exhorted to make a unity, but to carefully guard one already made by God.

The filling of the Holy Spirit.

Eph. v. 18 is another verse of Scripture which is often misunderstood:

> "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit; speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord."

This verse is beloved of Pentecostalists who use it to teach that it refers to some exalted feeling in the believers experience subsequent to salvation when he receives the 'second blessing', or receives the baptism or fullness of the Spirit. The verb "be filled" is pleroo which takes the accusative case of the thing filled, the genitive case of the matter with which the thing is filled and the dative case of the means used to accomplish the filling, the agent. Sometimes the preposition en is added to emphasize the agent. In English we say "filled with". Greek says "filled of". Here are two examples out of many:

> "And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost" (Greek, filled of joy and of holy spirit) (Acts xiii. 52).
> "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing" (Greek, fill you [accusative] of all joy and peace in [en with dative] believing) (Rom. xv. 13).

Coming now to Eph. v. 18 we find that 'be filled' is the present passive plural, "be continually filled" en pneumati, "by (the) Spirit" (dative). The Holy Spirit is the Filler, not the substance with which the believer is filled. The Berkeley Version translates the verse "be filled by the Spirit" and the N.E.B. "let the Holy Spirit fill you" and if anyone asks with what does the Holy Spirit fill the believer, the answer is given in the parallel context in Col. iii. 16:

The one object of the Holy Spirit in this age of grace is to uplift and glorify Christ. "He shall not speak of Himself . . . . . He shall glorify Me, for He shall receive of Mine and shall show it unto you" (John xvi. 13, 14). Let us not make the mistake of limiting the words of Christ to those to whom He spoke on earth when He was a "minister of the circumcision (the Jew)" (Rom. xv. 8) and limited His ministry to the people of Israel (Matt. xv. 24). He now "speaks from heaven" (Heb. xii. 25) through the human channel He has appointed for the Body of Christ, the Apostle Paul (I Cor. xiv. 37; Col. i. 24-27) and the context already quoted in Col. iii. makes it quite clear what it is that the Holy Spirit fills the believer with, namely the spirit of praise and thanksgiving, not tongues, excitable feelings and emotions and the various experiences that Pentecostalists have deduced from these verses.

We should take care to distinguish in the Scriptures between the Giver (the Holy Spirit) and His various gifts which can be rendered 'spirit' with a small 's'. A verse that cries out for this distinction is I Thess. v. 19, "quench not the spirit". Most versions render the last word with a capital "S" and make it mean the Holy Spirit. But a moment's thought should make us realize that it is impossible for limited finite beings to quench or bring to nought the Infinite. If we render spirit with a small 's' and make it refer to any gift of the Holy Spirit, then we have truth. I Thessalonians was written during the Acts period when the various evidential gifts of the Holy Spirit were much in evidence. But no one was compelled to use them, "the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets" (I Cor. xiv. 32). They could be neglected or misused, hence the admonition not to 'quench' them. The next verse confirms this: "despise not prophesyings", which was also one of the these gifts (I Cor. xii. 4-11).

We hope it has become clear to the reader and student of the Word of God, that not only is it of paramount importance to get Scriptural conception of the Person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ, it is necessary to get likewise a Scriptural conception of the Holy Spirit, especially what His work entails in this dispensation of grace. Owing to failure to 'rightly divide' the Word there are many faulty ideas abroad today in Christian circles concerning these persons of the Godhead and this leads to wrong doctrine and practice which does not further the truth of God, but rather the darkness and deception of the evil one. Let us test all things and only hold fast to that which is truth for today, and then seek to make it known 'in season and out of season' (II Tim. iv. 2).

No.7. pp. 121 - 125

Let us now sum up what we have discovered from the Word of God in relation to the Holy Spirit.

(1) The Spirit is the divine Author of the Word of God (II Pet. i. 19-21).

It is for this reason that the holy Scriptures are designated the sword of the Spirit (Ephesians vi. 17). This is the only offensive weapon permitted to the believer and the only weapon that overcomes the devil and the powers of darkness. We have a wonderful example of its use by the Lord Jesus Christ when tempted by Satan for forty days in the wilderness. Three times He foiled the devil, not by the power of His deity, but by the power of the written Word of God (Matt. iv. 1-11). This is certainly an example to all His followers, and we should remember that practice is essential for the effective use of all weapons. A scanty knowledge of the Word is useless in this spiritual warfare and the devil is certainly not afraid of Christians who keep the Book shut. It is of the utmost importance to have the word of Christ dwelling in us richly in all wisdom (Col. iii. 16) and this can only be realized when there is constant application to the Word and absorption of the same until it becomes part and parcel of our minds and beings. We are assured that it was the Holy Spirit who spoke through human channels (Mark xii. 35; Acts i. 16). This is why the Bible is the Word of God and not the word of man.

(2) The Holy Spirit is the quickener of all spiritual life (John iii. 3, 5-8).

This is where Christian life really begins and it cannot be realized by education alone or intellectual capacity. Theological courses may be helpful in giving information about the Bible, but none of them by themselves can give life eternal to a spiritually dead sinner, however religious he may appear to be. This is God's work alone, accomplished by the Spirit of God Who leads the quickened sinner to appropriate by simple faith the unending life which is found only in Christ (II Tim. i. 1; I John v. 11, 12).

(3) The Holy Spirit's seal (Eph. i. 13).

This is a figurative way of emphasizing the complete security of each member of the Body of Christ. No believer can accomplish this eternal security by his own power or actions. God the Holy Spirit sets His seal upon the salvation of the believer at the moment of believing. This shows that the whole work of salvation is God's and not man's. The Holy Spirit puts His stamp upon it making it secure for eternity. This work of the Spirit does not refer to some exalted experience subsequent to salvation. How we should rejoice and be thankful when we realize this! Some object and say that such doctrine will lead to a careless walk. If it does, then such can expect the Lord's discipline. God's truth is always balanced and in other studies we have pointed out how the Word of God teaches that not only is each member of the Body saved with an eternal salvation, but he becomes a servant of the Lord with a service to discharge unto Him, and then the question of good or bad service, faithful or unfaithful comes into the picture with the possibility of reward and divine commendation, or loss of it and shame, so that no child of God gets away with a careless walk.

(4) The Holy Spirit baptizes.

This is most surely a spiritual baptism on believing, and is only a figurative way of setting forth the eternal unity of the believer with Christ in His crucifixion, death, resurrection and ascension, again most obviously the work of God alone (Rom. vi. 1-11; Col. ii. 10-12; Eph. ii. 4-6; iv. 5). This complete identification with Christ, this one-ness is little known or understood among believers today. A shallow evangelism so often prevails which is only a travesty of the glorious position and privilege of each member of Christ's Body. The lack of full and deep Bible exposition, together with the neglect of the Word of God by the individual believer is surely one of the chief causes of this lamentable condition in the religious world around us. The result is that those who in Christ are spiritual millionaires, are living like spiritual paupers because all this tremendous wealth is unknown to them!

(5) The Holy Spirit is not only the Author of God's Word, He "opens the eyes", gives divine understanding and reveals the Truth contained in the holy Scriptures (I.Cor.ii.9-14). This cannot be obtained in any other way, certainly not by intellectual attainment or education as we have seen.

(6) The Holy Spirit gives the earnest, a foretaste now of the coming glory of our heavenly inheritance to be enjoyed eternally in resurrection (Eph. i. 13, 14).

(7) The Holy Spirit strengthens the believer, not only for service, but as a preparation for the indwelling of the Lord Jesus Christ (Eph. iii. 16).

(8) The Holy Spirit constantly intercedes for the saints and fills up the deficiency of their own praying (Rom. viii. 26, 27). How true it is that "we know not what should pray for as we ought" (Rom. viii. 26)! Believers who have no problems regarding prayer must be ignorant of this fact. The disciples felt their inadequacy, for they said to the Lord, "Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples" (Luke xi. 1), and in response the Lord gave them the earthly kingdom prayer (xi. 2-4). This was not given to be repeated over and over again mechanically as is so often done today, with the result that the words have little meaning. It was a model on which members of God's earthly kingdom could base their praying.

If we are troubled with our prayer life, two things can help us. Prayer is not always asking God for something. True prayer is often praise, and we shall not have to think long before we can find something for which we thank and praise the Lord. A thankful and prayerful heart is such a wonderful antidote to spiritual declension. The nations of old sank into their darkness because they not only refused to give God His rightful place, but also they were not thankful (Rom. i. 20, 21). A thankless mind is one that has forgotten God, His boundless love and overwhelming blessings. No wonder the Psalmist exhorts us to 'forget not all His benefits' (Psa. ciii. 1, 2).

The second thing is to be delivered from self and remember the needs of someone else. This is true intercession where self is forgotten and the needs of others are paramount. We must always remember though, that all our praying must be subject to God's will. No believer is in the position to force God to do anything, though some seem to act as though they are. They apparently think that if they worry the Lord long enough they will get the answer they want. This is completely unworthy and more than that, it can be dangerous.

Israel kept complaining and worrying God for flesh food when they grew tired of God's wonderful provision of the manna. The Psalmist's comment is:

> "He gave them their request; but sent leanness into their soul" (Psa. cvi. 15), and so the answer to their prayer, instead of bringing them blessing brought misery in its place.

Let us never forget that, however poor our praying may be, the Holy Spirit is always interceding for us "according to the will of God" (Rom. viii. 26, 27) and on top of this, the Lord Jesus constantly intercedes for us too (Rom. viii. 34). In what a strong position we are then, not that this should make us careless and indifferent in our prayer life; rather it should stimulate us to "pray always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit" (Ephesians vi. 18) and so "continue in prayer and watch in the same with thanksgiving" (Col. iv. 2).

(9) The Holy Spirit can quicken the memory (John xiv. 26). How often we fail because we forget! There is not one of us that does not need reminding from time to time of the exceeding grace of God that has chosen, saved us and called us to a heavenly calling and destiny that is beyond our dreams and desserts.

(10) The Holy Spirit works in the believer to produce His fruit. This fruit of the Spirit is described in Gal. v. 22:

> "But the fruit of the Spirit, is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance (self-control)."

This nine-fold fruit is Christ-likeness in practice that brings glory to God in our daily witness. Fruit bearing or truth in practice is the subject of the Lord's teaching in John xv. 1-8 and He sums it up by saying:

> "Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be My disciples" (John xv. 8).

May we not disappoint Him!

(11) The Holy Spirit abides in the believer for always:

> "And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever."
> ". . . . . for He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you" (John xiv. 16, 17).

In past studies we noted that in O.T. times the Holy Spirit only came upon men to achieve some special object or mission. He was not an abiding possession at that time.

(12) The supreme work of the Holy Spirit is to uplift and glorify the Lord Jesus Christ.

> ". . . . . He shall not speak of Himself . . . . . HE SHALL GLORIFY ME: for He shall receive of Mine, and shall show it unto you" (John xvi. 13, 14).

Wherever the Lord Jesus is given His rightful place as First and Last, so that in "all things He has the pre-eminence (first place)" (Col. i. 18), the Holy Spirit is there whether consciously felt or not. Let us cast from our minds the idea that the power of the Spirit of God must be felt as an irresistible force. There is far too much religion of feeling today instead of walking by faith and not by sight or sense of any kind. The Lord wants us to trust Him fully apart from feelings and so few apparently can do that.

Today, when at last there is so much focus upon the Holy Spirit in religious circles and also unscriptural and undispensational views concerning His work and witness in this dispensation of grace, we need, as never before, to have a sound basis upon a rightly-divided Word (II Tim. ii. 15). These are days of great of deception as the Lord forewarned (Matt. xxiv. 4, 5, 11, 24; II Thess. ii. 7-10), and to deceive, Satan makes the lie look Scriptural and true. He quotes Scripture and knows the Bible a good deal better than many Christians. As Shakespeare says "He lies like the truth" and to deceive, his fabrication must look very much like truth or it would mislead no one. Those with a superficial or no knowledge of the Scriptures are in great danger whether they know it or not. Let us constantly 'prove all things' by the Word of God (I Thess. v. 21) and so order our lives that we 'grieve not the Holy Spirit of God' (Eph. iv. 30) and the Saviour and Lord Whom He exalts. He has done so much for us by giving no less than Himself (Ephesians v. 2) to redeem us and to present us one day in glory "not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing" (Eph. v. 25-27). May this always be first and foremost in our minds.

The Epistle to the GALATIANS.

No.1. i. 1 - 5.
pp. 221 - 226

That the epistle to the Galatians is of great importance there can be no doubt, because it deals with the fundamentals of the Christian faith, as does also the epistle to the Romans, and in some senses it is the counterpart of this epistle. Before we can consider its contents we must understand what is meant by Galatia for this will decide to whom the epistle is addressed and its date. We have to distinguish between the kingdom of Galatia which was situated north east of Asia Minor and the Roman province of Galatia, which, in addition to the kingdom went southwards to include Lycaonia, Isauria, Phrygia, and a portion in which area lay Antioch, Iconium, Lystra and Derbe.

The kingdom consisted of a broad strip of land over 200 miles in length, the chief cities of which were Tavium, Ancyra and Pessinus. To which of these portions of Asia Minor was the epistle to the Galatians sent? Some scholars champion the northern district and others the southern. If the northern theory is right, Paul founded the churches there on his second missionary journey; but if the southern theory is right, it was when he was on his first missionary journey that the churches were founded in the south east.

The northern theory is championed by Bishop Lightfoot and others, whereas the southern is held by Professor W. M. Ramsay and a number of expositors. The ancestors of the northern kingdom were chiefly Gauls who poured into Asia Minor in the third century B.C. and while the majority of believers in the churches situated there were Gallic Celts, there were certainly Jews as well, for the Galatian epistle assumes an acquaintance with the O.T. which converted Gentiles could not be expected to have, except under Jewish instruction.

The northern Galatian theory was held until the nineteenth century, but since then Bible scholars, the chief of whom was Sir William Ramsay, have adopted the southern theory and others give the epistle an earlier date. If the second visit of Paul is the one mentioned in Acts xvi. 6, the epistle must have been written after the council of Jerusalem in Acts xv. On the other hand if the second visit is identified with that mentioned in Acts xiv. 21, when Paul and Barnabas revisited the southern Galatian churches on their return journey to Antioch, the date may be before the council and consequently about 49A.D. This would mean that Galatians is Paul's first epistle and not I Thessalonians which is usually held to be his first writing.

There is no mention of the Jerusalem Council's decisions in the Galatian epistle and this is extraordinary if this letter was written after Acts xv., for it would have but stressed Paul's arguments concerning the law of Moses and greatly assisted his dealings with the Galatian apostasy.

We do not think it necessary to go into more detail of the southern and northern theories in these articles, but for those who wish to pursue the matter further we would recommend Mr. C. H. Welch's comments in The Apostle of the Reconciliation, pp. 75-86 and those of Dr. Donald Guthrie in the second volume of his New Testament Introduction, pp. 72-79. Mr. Welch's summary of the advantages of the south Galatian theory are as follows:

(1) By this view no visit of Paul to Jerusalem is suppressed.
(2) The most forcible arguments that could be used at the time are used.
(3) No inconsistency is intruded into the Acts.
(4) Every phrase which bears upon the date is simply and naturally explained.
(5) The authority of the Council at Jerusalem, and the decree made, remain unimpaired.
(6) The epistle was written from Antioch or the neighbourhood.
(7) The churches of Galatia were those of Pisidia, Antioch, Iconium, Lystra and Derbe.
(8) The epistle is probably the earliest book in the New Testament.

(The Apostle of the Reconciliation, p.86).

Accordingly we adopt to south Galatian position.

The object of this letter is clear. The Apostle had heard of serious trouble in the Galatian churches which was twofold, just as it was at Corinth. Judaizers claiming authority from Jerusalem, were trying to place the yoke of the Mosaic law on Gentile believers, and their method was to deny Paul's apostolic standing and discredit his teaching. The rapidity with which the Galatians had departed from the freedom of the gospel served as a goad to the Apostle and the urgency of the situation caused him to dispense with formalities and write in a style that was burning with deep feeling and indignation.

He therefore sets out in this epistle what was destined to become the charter of Christian liberty through the subsequent history of the professing church. Dean Farrar writes:

> "St. Paul saw that it was time to speak out, and he did speak out. The matter at issue was one of vital importance. The very essence of the Gospel, the very liberty which Christ had given, the very redemption for which He had died, was at stake. The fate of the battle hung apparently upon his single arm. He alone was the Apostle of the Gentiles. To him alone had it been granted to see the full bearings of this question. A new faith must not be choked at its birth by the past prejudices of its nominal adherents. The hour had come when concession was impossible, and there must be no facing both ways in the character of his conciliatoriness. Accordingly he flung all reticence and all compromise to the winds. Hot with righteous anger, he wrote the epistle to the Galatians. It was his trumpet note of defiance to all the Pharisees of Christianity, and it gave no uncertain sound" (The Life and Work of St. Paul, pp. 427-428).

Coming now to the exposition of the epistle we first exhibit the structure as a whole:

A | i. - ii. 14. Paul's apostolic authority and gospel. Salutation.
B | ii. 15 - iv. 11. Doctrine. / Faith v. Works.
\ Liberty v. Bondage.
B | iv. 12 - vi. 16. Practice. / Spirit v. Flesh.
\ Liberty v. Bondage.
A | vi. 17, 18. The marks of the Lord Jesus. Benediction.

The epistle sets out in startling contrast the freedom of the gospel and the bondage of the law. One is connected with the spirit, and the other with the flesh. One is linked with the Jerusalem which is above, and the other the earthly Jerusalem "which now is" and is in bondage. The Apostle Paul, in no uncertain language, shows the Galatian believers where their defection is leading them—to utter slavery which in practice cancels the glorious freedom in Christ.

His opening words in chapter i. are a challenge. There is no attempt to give a conventional introduction; the situation was too serious for that. First of all his Christ-given apostleship must be recognized, for without this, the message which he had to give would be of no avail. Over and over again Paul's enemies sought to disparage his apostleship. They accused him of being a self-appointed apostle; that no one could accept the story of his conversion, that he could not compare with the apostles at Jerusalem who had been appointed by Christ in His earthly ministry and had enjoyed close personal contact with Him. Paul had never seen Christ in the flesh and therefore in no sense could his apostleship be recognized.

We find the same opposition manifested in the church at Corinth and in the second epistle he is compelled to be a fool in his boasting to show that not only was his apostleship real and Christ-directed, but that he could go further in suffering for it than any other apostle (II Cor. xi. 5, 16-30).

As Charles H. Welch has pointed out, the opening chapter of the epistle is so structured to throw into relief Paul's apostleship, the gospel preached by him and his authority. The sections are divided by the recurrence of the three common words "not", "neither" and "but". (Shown below on the structure).

b1 | i. 1-5. Paul's apostleship. / Not from men
{ Neither through man
\ But through Jesus Christ
c1 | 6-10. No change in gospel "ye received".
b2 | 11, 12. Paul's gospel. / Not according to man
{ Neither from man
\ But by revelation of Jesus Christ
c2 | 13, 14. His past attitude "ye heard".
b3 | 15-17. Paul's authority. / Not flesh and blood
{ Neither from other apostles
\ But he went into Arabia
c3 | i. 18-24. His present attitude "they had heard".

Thus it was that, defying all conventions, he plunges straight away into the all-important question of his apostleship. His aim was not to magnify himself, but his office (Rom. xi. 13), which had been given him by the risen Christ:

> "Paul, an apostle (not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ and God the Father, Who raised Him from the dead) and all the brethren which are with me, unto the churches of Galatia" (Gal. i. 1, 2).

The Greek word apostolos means "one sent by and in the name of another", thus exhibiting the truth of Christ's words "he that receiveth you receiveth Me" (Matt. x. 40). While his commission differed from the Twelve in a number of respects, yet its origin was the same, namely from the Lord Jesus Christ, and it was the first apostleship conferred from heaven. This God-given apostleship so vital to the truth he preached is bought forward in several of his epistles. In Rom. i. 5 he writes "Christ by Whom we have received grace and apostleship", he states in Rom. xi. 13 "I am an apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office". He throws out a challenge in I Cor. ix. 1 "Am I not an Apostle? Am I not free? Have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord?". In I Tim. ii. 7 he says, "I am ordained a preacher, an apostle (I speak the truth in Christ and lie not), a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and truth".

There had been no problems about Paul's apostleship from the Galatian churches, for at the first they had received him "as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus" (Gal. iv. 14). But the old enemy was doing his deadly work of sowing doubt and distrust among them by the old tactic of undermining the messenger, so spoiling his message. So straight away he asserts his independence from the Twelve, and in fact from any human source. He had a divine commission and as such it was not receive from men, neither was its origin through man (literally that is any human being), but it was "by Jesus Christ and God the Father". This took place on the Damascus road as recorded in Acts ix. 22 & 26 and is expanded in Gal. i. 15, 16.

He continues by sending grace and peace from the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ:

> "Who gave Himself for us, that He might deliver us from this present evil world (age), according to the will of God and our Father to Whom be glory for ever and ever" (Galatians i. 4, 5).

The Father gave the Son (John iii. 16) and the Son gave Himself, thus comprising the greatest of all gifts, for it embraces everything. "The Son of God Who loved me and gave Himself for me", Paul wrote (Gal. ii. 20). "Thanks be to God for His unspeakable Gift" (II Cor. ix. 15).

The Epistle of James.

No.6. pp. 16 - 19

James now calls the Hebrew believers, who were failing so much, to amend their ways:

> "Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts ye double minded. Be afflicted, and moan and weep; let your laughter be turned to mourning and your joy to heaviness. Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord and He shall exalt you" (iv. 8-10, R.V.).

The joy and laughter that the writer refers to here is the shallow and empty frivolity of the darkened world and is not to be confused with the abiding joy of the Lord which can be the believer's precious possession at all times. James continues:

> "Speak not one against another, brethren. He that speaketh against a brother, or judgeth his brother, speaketh against the law, and judgeth the law; but if thou judgeth the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. One only is the law giver and judge, even He Who is able to save and to destroy: but who art thou that judgest thy neighbour?" (James iv. 11, 12, R.V.).

James adopt the same attitude as the Apostle Paul on the question of unfair criticism of other brothers in Christ (Rom. xiv. 4, 9, 10-13). The only persons we are allowed to strictly judge are ourselves, "for if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged" (I Cor. xi. 31), but of course this is not so attractive to the flesh as criticizing other people! The Greek katalaleite means literally "to talk against another" and in later Greek had the significance of talking against others behind their backs and is used in this sense by the Septuagint version of Psa. ci. 5 "Whoso privily (privately) slandereth his neighbour" and also in Psa. l. 20. Tyndale renders the word in James "back bite", and the adjectival form is found in Rom. i. 30, translated 'back biters' in the A.V. and R.V. Such conduct is really a subtle form of self-exaltation, because those who indulge in it think they are very much better people than those they are criticizing. Not only this, but as James reminds us, they assume the position of judge, a role that belongs to God only.

This sad human weakness is ages old, for the O.T. also deals with it. Lev. xix. 16 reads, "thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among thy people" and verse 18: "thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself: I am the LORD".

As Paul reminded the superior Jew "wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself" (Rom. ii. 1). No wonder James asks "who art thou that judgest another?" (James iv. 12).

In the next paragraph, the writer seems to have in mind traveling traders, probably Jews:

> "Go to now, ye that say, today or tomorrow we will go into this city, and spend a year there, and trade, and get gain: whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow" (James iv. 13, 14, R.V.).

Such confidence about the future is presumptuous. Prov. xxvii. 1 reminds us "boast not thyself of tomorrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth" and the Lord, in the parable of the rich fool, describes one who acted as though he infallibly knew the future and could plan accordingly to his own advantage. God's verdict was "thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee" (Luke xii. 20). James not only reminds such of their presumption but also of their frailty. He says that their life is no better than a vapour which appears for a little while and then vanishes away (iv. 14). The future is entirely subject to God. Therefore, in looking to the future regarding ourselves we should constantly say "if the Lord wills" we will do this or that (iv. 15).

The Apostle Paul is a good example to us here. When he said farewell to the Ephesian believers he said "I will return again unto you if God will" (Acts xviii. 21). His decision to visit the believers at Corinth is qualified by the phrases "if the Lord will" and "if the Lord permit" (I Cor. iv. 19; xvi. 17). He "trusts in the Lord" that he will be able to send Timothy shortly to the Philippians and that he himself will also be able to pay them a visit (Phil. ii. 19, 24).

Of course we can say "God willing" as a mere habit, but realizing our utter dependence upon the will of the Lord, we should use these words with a deep sense of their meaning, for none of us can in any sense control the future. James reminds his readers that any who imagine they can, are indulging in proud boastings which are evil (iv. 16, 17).

Chapter v. commences with retribution for the rich who were misusing their wealth. It seems evident that James knew of such who professed the Christian faith, yet were opposing their poorer brethren:

> "Go to now, ye rich, weep and howl for your miseries that are coming upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver are rusted; and their rust shall be for a testimony against you, and shall eat your flesh as fire. Ye have laid up your treasure in the last days" (v. 1-3, R.V.).

It is important to note the R.V. rendering "in the last days" rather than "for the last days" as the A.V. James was an early epistle in the Acts period when the nearness of the Lord's coming for judgment and the setting up of the earthly kingdom was a possibility depending upon the repentance of Israel. This period was regarded as the last days of the dispensation by Peter, John and Paul as well as James, who is shortly going to declare that the coming of the Lord was near and as the Judge He stood at the doors (v. 8, 9). We should remember the divine judgment on Ananias and Sapphira (Acts v.) and on certain brethren at Corinth for abuses of the Lord's supper (I Cor. xi. 30) which show clearly that the dispensation of pure grace had not yet started. Consequently James' warnings to these rich Jews were solemn indeed.

Nowhere in the N.T. are rich people denounced merely for being rich, but for yielding to the temptations to which the rich are especially prone. One almost invariable accompaniment of wealth is the false sense of security and a love of the power it brings. In His earthly ministry the Lord said it was very difficult for rich people to enter into the kingdom of God. He warned "Woe unto you that are rich! for ye have received your consolation" (Luke vi. 24). The Apostle Paul likewise warned those who desired to be rich and the dangers that can follow such desires (I Tim. vi. 9, 10). In an age when money and material things are worshipped so much, we all need to be constantly on our guard that we are not ensnared by such attitudes of mind.

We have seen that the first section of chapter v. deals with the rich who were oppressing poorer brethren. Verse 4 tells us how his was being done:

> "Behold, the hire of the labourers who moved your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth out: and the cries of them that reaped have entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth (hosts). Ye have lived delicately on the earth, and have taken your pleasure; ye have nourished your hearts in a day of slaughter. Ye have condemned, ye have killed the righteous one; he doth not resist you" (James v. 4-6, R.V.).

This avariciousness in defrauding workers of their pay and denying them their living had always been offensive to the Lord. In the law of Moses Israel had been warned "thou shalt not oppress an hired servant that is poor and needy . . . . . at his day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down on it; for he is poor, and setteth his heart upon it, lest he cry against thee unto the Lord and it be a sin unto thee" (Deut. xxiv. 14, 15).

In later centuries God made it known that His punishment would fall upon such inhuman conduct:

> "I will come near to you in judgment; and I will be a swift witness against . . . . . those that oppress the hireling in his wages" (Mal. iii. 5).

Such conduct does not escape the notice of God, for it has "entered into the ears of the Lord of hosts". This majestic title of God is found constantly in the O.T., drawing attention to His sovereign omnipotence. He is the God of the 'hosts', that is the armies of heaven, multitudinous angels who are constantly at His bidding. It is rare in the N.T. occurring only here and in a quotation Paul makes in Rom. ix. 29 from Isa. v. 9. Though poor believers were being robbed and defrauded without apparently anyone to defend them on earth, yet they had as their helper and avenger none other than the Lord God omnipotent Who was ready to intervene in judgment.

A further bad trait that often characterizes the rich is luxury and extravagance. "Ye have lived in pleasure" (delicately R.V.). Etruphesate suggests a life of luxury and self-indulgence. The cognate noun is found in Luke vii. 25 where it describes the "delicate" living associated with king's courts. Centuries before, Amos had denounced such a mode of life:

> "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion . . . . . that lie on beds of ivory, and stretch themselves upon their couches and eat the lamb out of the flock, and the calves out of the midst of the stall . . . . . that drink wine in bowls, and anoint themselves with the chief ointments" (Amos vi. 1-6).

The expression 'in a day of slaughter' seems to refer to the day of judgment by God, such as is alluded to in Isa. xxxiv. 6 and Ezek xxi. 15. Just as animals are fattened for slaughter, so these sinful rich were 'nourishing their hearts', filling their lives with every form of pleasure, and thus were ready for 'the day of slaughter' when the Lord would come in judgment and deal with them.

As we have before indicated, James now introduces the near return of the Lord as Judge (v. 7 and 8). This second advent of Christ was possible all through the Acts period and all the epistles written during this time stress it. Careful note should be taken of Acts iii. 19-26, specially verses 19 and 20. Fuller details of this most important fact are given in the author's The Unfolding Purpose of God pages 42-44. The word used for 'coming' is the Greek parousia which means personal presence and arrival on the earth rather than the act of coming to it. In secular usage it referred to the arrival of important personages on state occasions. In the N.T. it refers to the arrival of Him Who is "Kings of kings and Lord of lords" when He returns to defeat Satan and the powers of darkness and bring in a reign of justice and righteousness. Then "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ and He shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. xi. 15). The only crown He received at His first coming was a crown of thorns. At His second coming He receives "many crowns" (Rev. xix. 12), and at last exercises complete dominion over the earth. This coming was a possibility all through the Acts period and believers were taught to live and wait for it with patience. James cites as an example the patience of the farmer who has to wait for the harvest after all his labour (James v. 7).

In the case of the believer, the Lord's early return was not only his hope but also that of One Who is the righteous Judge and will therefore fairly assess all that has been done for Him. "Murmur not, brethren, one against another, that ye be not judged: behold, the Judge standeth before the doors" (v. 9 R.V.). "Grudge" in the A.V. is archaic in the sense of complain or grumble, and such conduct would come under the Lord's condemnation at His coming. Those to whom James was writing were bidden to think of the patience and suffering of the prophets. There was scarcely one who did not have to suffer affliction in one way or another. Stephen said in his defence, "which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted?" (Acts vii. 52). Perhaps the most outstanding example of this was Jeremiah, who was beaten, put in stocks, imprisoned and then thrown into a cistern. His life was one of continual suffering, yet he maintained his divine calling as a prophet, speaking for the Lord to a rebellious people.

James now brings in the experience of Job and says "Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord, how that the Lord is full of pity and merciful" (James v. 11). The word translated 'patience' would be better rendered 'endurance' for in some respects Job was not patient, specially with his so-called friends. Yet, in spite of all his heavy trials, Job's faith did not waver. "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him" (Job xiii. 15) was his cry. The end or goal of the Lord was attained when Job had abandoned his own righteousness and in true penitence said, "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes" (Job xlii. 5, 6). God's object was to bring Job to the end of himself and surely this is the Lord's concern for all of us whatever age we live in. "Not I, but Christ" must be our continual motto. We deal with a God Who is exceedingly patient with all of us and is "very pitiful and of tender mercy" (James v. 11). As Psa. ciii. 8 expresses it, "The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger and plenteous in mercy".

The next section of the epistle deals with the prohibition of oaths. We do not believe that this refers to oaths in courts of law on important matters, but rather the taking of the Lord's name in vain in ordinary conversation in an irreverent way. The Pharisees were guilty of this, and the Lord, in His Sermon on the Mount, attacked their hypocrisy and forbad all such oaths (Matt. v. 33-37). James here reiterates Christ's teaching:

> "But above all things, my brethren swear not, neither by the heaven nor by the earth, nor by any other oath; but let your yea be yea and your nay, nay; that ye fall not under judgment" (v. 12, R.V.).

The way to avoid false swearing is to be strictly truthful in one's speech. We should always really mean what we say. Yes should mean yes, and no should mean no without any reservations and the name of God should be avoided in frivolous conversation or in a thoughtless way. "The Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh His name in vain" (Exod. xx. 7).

The writer of the epistle now asks a number of rhetorical questions:

> "Is any among you suffering? Let him pray. Is any cheerful? Let him sing praise. Is any among you sick? Let him call for the elders of the church and let them pray over him . . . . ." (v. 13, 14, R.V.).

We must realize the condition of the Christian world in the first century was vastly different from today. At the present time we see around us Christendom, which comprises a vast assortment of churches with varying beliefs, religious movements of all kinds, a veritable Babel of differing voices. It was not like this at the beginning. There existed the recent converts to Christianity who lived in local groups. There were no denominations as we know today. Consequently, when James refers sick people to the elders of the 'church', there was only one church then existing and there could be no misunderstanding of this. But today, if we apply James v. 14 to ourselves when we fall ill, to which church shall we go? Many are spiritually dead; others are modernistic and reject the fundamentals of the faith as found in the N.T. Will any church do, no matter what its tenets are?

These are problems which arise when we do not rightly divide the Word of Truth. Those who use this vital principle in their study of the Word and understand what true dispensational teaching embraces, will not be troubled by these last verses of James' epistle. They will interpret them according to their context and that context is set in the period covered by the Acts of the Apostles. This book, one of the most important in the N.T., has been obscured by the traditional view that Israel was set aside by God at the Cross and that the Body of Christ, which belongs to the dispensation of the Mystery or Secret (Eph. iii.), commenced on the day of Pentecost. When we carefully study the book we find that Israel, far from being cast off by God, figure prominently all through this period due to the forbearance and mercy of God and are given a further opportunity to repent and turn back to the Lord (Acts iii. 19-26). If this had taken place, then the Lord Jesus would have returned and the earthly kingdom, so graphically described by the O.T. prophets and brought so near by the first coming of the One Who was Israel's Messiah and King, would have commenced.

The confirmatory and evidential miracles, which had also been foretold in the O.T., and had accompanied the earthly ministry of this King of kings, persisted right throughout the Acts and it is in this setting that the epistle of James was written. Not to see this causes confusion and has given rise to much of modern Pentecostalism with its mixing up the earthly kingdom of the Lord with the Body of Christ and its heavenly destiny.

No.8. pp. 55 - 60

As we pointed out at the conclusion of our last study the problems raised in James.v.13-19 are greatly eased when one understands the dispensational position of this epistle. It was written during the Acts when the turning back to God in repentance by the people of Israel was a possibility. This made the realization of the earthly kingdom also a possibility, with the near return of the Lord Jesus to take the reins of government in righteousness and justice, so bringing in the time when world peace and the knowledge of God would thereby spread over the earth. This is why the evidential miracles which accompanied the Lord's earthly ministry to Israel right throughout the Acts and are alluded to in the epistles written during this period, James being one of them.

The first two of the rhetorical questions that James asks cause no problems, but the third may do so:

> "Is any among you sick? Let him call for the elders of the church and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save him that is sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; an if he have committed sins, it shall be forgiven him" (v. 14, 15, R.V.).

First of all let us say what this passage does not teach. The Roman Catholic doctrine of Extreme Unction is based on this verse. This so-called sacrament is used by the priest for those who are near death, in which they are anointed with previously consecrated oil. This is supposed to be effective in the forgiveness of sins of those who are too ill to make a conscious confession and so receive priestly absolution. The Douay Roman Catholic English version of the Bible has a footnote here which says "see here a plain warrant of Scripture for the sacrament of extreme unction, that any controversy against its institution would be against the express words of the sacred text in the plainest terms". But there is no such plain teaching in these verses. There is nothing in the context to suggest that the sick person is near death or needs prayer to prepare him for it. Furthermore the footnote deliberately alters the word translated 'elders' to 'priests'. James uses presbuteros=elders not sacerdotes=priests.

It is most significant that the usual word for priest hierens is never used in the N.T. for Christian ministry, with the exception of the O.T. Jewish priesthood. This word is reserved for Christ alone; and the former word is not used once in the New Testament. Moreover we should note that it is elders (in the plural) that are sent for, not one man who had so-called priestly functions. The application of oil would not be strange to a Jew for in the Talmud it is mentioned as a curative agent. In Isa. i. 6 the prophet laments that Israel's sick condition spiritually was like a body riddled with disease ". . . . . putrifying sores; they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with oil" (margin). We also have the parable of the good Samaritan who pours oil and wine into the wounds of the man lying injured by the roadside (Luke x. 34). But we must not regard the oil as the sole agent of cure in James. Sometimes the Lord heals without any intermediary means. Other times He uses them as He did when He made clay from saliva and anointed the blind man's eyes.

What is important on this subject is to realize that good health and healing are a distinctive feature of the earthly kingdom of the Lord when it is established. We all know, (but sometimes forget), the tremendous blessing of good health, for how can the experience of a full life be enjoyed without it?

This is why the Lord Jesus in His earthly ministry as a "Minister of the circumcision" (Rom. xv. 8) constantly healed bodily ailments as well as spiritual ones and moreover gave the 12 apostles the same gift. "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritan enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And as ye go preach, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils (demons) . . . . ." (Matt. x. 5-8). In Mark's account we are told that "they went out, and preached that men should repent. And they cast out many devils (demons) and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them" (Mark vi. 12, 13).

This power to heal miraculously continued right through the Acts. Peter healed and so did Paul. Even a handkerchief that had touched Paul's body healed at a distance (Acts xix. 11, 12) and we find him healing in the last chapter of the book (xxviii. 8, 9). Certain believers were also given the gift of healing by the Holy Spirit (I Cor. xii. 9). After the Acts period however, there was a dramatic change. When Paul wrote to the Philippians he expressed his great concern for the health of Epaphroditus for "he was sick nigh unto death" (Phil. ii. 27) but the Apostle does not heal him and it is unthinkable that if Paul still had the miraculous gift of healing, he would not have used it in the case of so valued a friend and companion in labour (verse 25). In II Tim. iv. 20 he has to leave Trophimus ill at Miletum and in the case of his beloved son in the faith, Timothy who was frequently ill, all he could do was to prescribe a little wine (I Tim. v. 23).

It is quite wrong to say that this gift of healing gradually disappeared in century one. As far as the Scriptures are concerned they ceased when the earthly kingdom purposes of God were suspended at the laying aside in unbelief of the earthly kingdom people, Israel, at Acts xxviii.

With all this in mind we can better understand the verses we are dealing with in James' epistle. We have already pointed out another feature of the Acts and that is the Lord's judging of His people for sin even to the extent of taking away their lives, for example Ananias & Sapphira and I Cor. xi. 28-30 makes it quite clear that illness and this death judgment had come upon many believers because of their sins in connection with the Lord's Supper, "for this cause many are weak and sickly among you and many sleep", that is, are dead.

This is the key to the understanding of the last portion of the epistle of James. It is noteworthy that James links together healing and the forgiveness of sins (v. 15) and it would appear therefore that the sickness was due to failing on the part of the one who was ill. Not only this but James also writes:

> "My brethren, if any among you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall cover a multitude of sins" (v. 19, 20, R.V.).

The converting does not refer to the salvation of the unsaved, but to bring back a believer who has erred from the truth, in other words a backslider. The word used for 'err' means to wander. The N.I.V. is to the point here:

> "My brothers, if any of you should wander from the truth and someone should bring him back, remember this: whoever turns a sinner away from his error will save him from death and cover many sins."

The death here is the death judgment which was operative at this time and does not refer to eternal death, which in any case would be impossible for one who was truly saved and counted as one of the 'brethren' among them. The 'covering' of sins is the same thought as is expressed by Peter in his first epistle:

> "And above all things have fervent charity (love) among yourselves, for charity (love) shall cover the multitude of sins" (I Pet. iv. 8).

True love does not expose or gloat over sins, it covers them.

The writer stresses the effectiveness of prayer when he says, "the supplication of a righteous man availeth much in its working" (v. 16). As an illustration he cites the case of Elijah:

> "Elijah was a man of like passions with us and he prayed fervently that it might not rain and it rained not on the earth for three years and six months. And he prayed again and the heavens gave rain and the earth brought forth her fruit" (v. 17).

There are commentators who say that there is no reference to this in the O.T. They have not looked far enough. On the surface this incident looked like a stupendous act of power on Elijah's part. It was true that the Jew accorded him a unique position among the prophets, for in Mal. iv. 5 he was declared to be the forerunner of Messiah and furthermore he was miraculously translated to heaven. Yet Elijah was a man of the Word and he knew Deut. xi. 16, 17:

> "Take heed to yourselves . . . . . and ye turn aside and serve other gods, and worship them, and then the Lord's wrath be kindled against you, and He shut up the heaven, that there be no rain, and that the land yield not her fruit; and lest ye perish quickly from off the good land which the Lord giveth you."

Israel in the time of Elijah was largely in apostasy and all Elijah was doing was to ask the Lord to be as good as His Word and so discipline the nation to bring them back to repentance. In I King xvii. 1 we are told:

> "And Elijah the Tishbite . . . . . said unto Ahab, As the Lord God of Israel liveth before Whom I stand, there shall not be dew or rain these years but according to my word."

Later in I Kings xviii. 1 we have:

> "And it came to pass after many days that the word of the Lord came to Elijah in the third year, saying, go, show thyself unto Ahab; and I will send rain upon the earth."

Moreover, the Lord Jesus confirms this in Luke iv. 25:

> "But I tell you of a truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout the land."

Elijah was a righteous man and obviously his prayer life was based upon the Word of God, hence its effectiveness. Yet in himself he was of 'like passions' as ourselves, just a normal man with normal limitations.

This should be a stimulus to ourselves that our own prayer ministry may be real and effective for the furtherance of the truth. The study of this practical epistle has been a help we trust, in our applying the great principle of right division in our interpretation of the holy Scriptures. We shall have learned to distinguish what is eternally true in this portion of God's Word and what is dispensational, that is, true at that time and for that particular calling related to believers who were of the twelve tribes of Israel (James i. 1).

It is only in this way shall we get to know the fullness of truth for today. We shall leave the miraculous and evidential gift of healing where the Word puts it, that is as an accompaniment of the Lord's earthly ministry to Israel and the Acts period following, when Israel was still being dealt with by the Lord and was still "first" (Acts iii. 26; xiii. 46; Rom. i. 16; ii. 8-10). This does not mean that the Lord does not now heal His people. His touch has not lost its ancient power, but all is subject to His wise will. We can constantly go to Him with all our problems including illness and leave all in His loving hands. We shall be saved from the false assumption that it is God's will that everyone should enjoy continually perfect physical health. Paul learned this with his "thorn in the flesh" which the Lord allowed to remain so that the Apostle could experience more deeply His abounding grace.

May all of us come to know in our experience that spiritual maturity (perfection) which this epistle stresses and “grow up into all things, which is the Head, even Christ” (Eph. iv. 15). So shall we be amongst those who are pressing on to the goal of maturity, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus (Phil. iii. 12-15).

Men God Called

pp. 11 - 16

It is sometimes suggested that the call of Isaiah is not recorded for us, and that the events recorded in chapter vi. are in fact a re-commissioning of the prophet. There seems to be no good reason for this view, except that there are prophecies which occur in the book before the sixth chapter. Yet as we read this chapter, it has a certain 'ring' to it which is strongly suggestive of an initial commission. If it is to be inferred that the preceding five chapters are chronologically before the sixth chapter, then verses 8 and 9 would suggest that the 'earlier' activity had been by a man unsent of God. We therefore take it that in this chapter we have the call and commission of Isaiah.

This being the case the historical background is clearly set for us: "in the year that king Uzziah died". There was to be a change of monarch; what did the future hold? Would the new king be a godly man or not? On the whole, king Uzziah had been a good leader of his people. We read of him:

> "And he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his father Amaziah did. And he sought God in the days of Zechariah, who had understanding in the visions of God: and as long as he sought the Lord, God made him to prosper" (II Chron. xxvi. 4, 5).

But, alas, he did not constantly seek the Lord, and so it had to be written of him:

> "And his name spread far abroad; for he was marvelously helped, till he was strong. But when he was strong, his heart was lifted up to his destruction: for he transgressed against the Lord his God, and went into the temple of the Lord to burn incense upon the altar of incense" (II Chron. xxvi. 15, 16).

The result of this act of sacrilege was that "he was a leper unto the day of his death" (xxvi. 20, 21). His downfall came "when he was strong". Uzziah became strong through the goodness of God to him, then his heart was lifted up with pride in his prowess and, in the sight of God, he became weak. Nonetheless, apart from this lapse, he had been a good and godly king. Would his successor be as good? or would he be a king who had no place for Jehovah and worshipped Baal?

In the year that king Uzziah died, Isaiah was found pondering the future. In spite of Uzziah's example "the people did corruptly" (II Chron xxvii. 2). Would the new king be able to alter the people? Isaiah saw a need: the need for a people who would do right in the sight of the Lord. He was under no illusion as to the state of the nation: "I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips" (Isa. vi. 5). God's commission was for him to "go, and tell this people" these facts (vi. 8, 9).

As with Moses, Isaiah saw a need: unlike Moses, he did not take it upon himself to act, until he was commissioned of God. But what could he have done in the circumstances? The commission suggests that there was nothing that could be done. He saw a need: but to see a need is not, in itself, sufficient. Something more must be 'seen'.

There being nothing Isaiah could do, he did the only thing possible, he "took it to the Lord in prayer". For he was in the Temple, and "in the year that king Uzziah died", he says, "I saw the Lord". The word 'saw' signifies to see clearly. He had a clear concept of the God Who was to commission him. It can be comparatively easy to see the need, and equally easy to see (as in the case of Moses) a course of action, which seems to be reasonable and humanly acceptable; but in addition to seeing the need, there is the greater need to see the Lord; to have a clear concept of the God we serve. In the Temple this was granted to Isaiah.

He saw also the contrast between his knowledge of the king who had died, and the King Who lives forever. He saw the mortal and the Immortal; the leprous and the glorious; the sinful and the holy. It was the glory and holiness of Jehovah which impressed him:

> "I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Above it stood the seraphims: each one had six wings: with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory" (Isa. vi. 1-3).

He saw also the Lord: as well as a good king who failed at the moment of his strength, a new king, untried. He saw the King Who reigns forever, Who is also the God of the Covenant: the Covenant keeping God Who would not fail, no matter what might happen.

After Isaiah's vision his reaction was the reaction of all who clearly see the Lord. Not, as is often the case today, "Jesus is my Friend", or I smile because God loves me, truth though these things may be, Isaiah's reaction was:

> "Woe is me! for I am undone: because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts" (Isa. vi. 5).

This was a depressing picture if ever there was one, a hopeless man surrounded by hopeless men, faced with the glory and holiness of the unchanging God. Such is the vision made plain in the cross of Christ. But neither vision ends there.

> "Then flew one of the seraphims, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar: and he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin is purged" (vi. 6 and 7).

The discerning vision of reality leads to forgiveness; the fire of sacrifice cleanses, the blood of the cross brings peace and reconciliation. Only then is the man (or woman) God calls, fit for service, and not until the vision of God's glory and holiness and of man's weakness and sinfulness has wrought in the man the attitude which can experience the mercy and forgiveness of God, can he be commissioned for the good works "God hath before ordained that we should walk in". Nor does the effect of the vision wear off: Paul at the end of a fruitful life of service to God confessed himself the 'chief of sinners'. Indeed it is only as the vision remains effective that service can be effective. There came the time when Uzziah trusted to his own strength, and "when he was strong, his heart was lifted up to his destruction".

Isaiah's reaction was "I am unclean". He did not react by saying "I have done this, or said that", but I am unclean. He was not concerned with either sins of omission or sins of commission, but what he was in himself. What he might say or what he might do was the result of what he was himself. It was not his acts which needed to be dealt with, but the man himself. Not till he had a true estimate of himself was there hope for Isaiah.

"Then flew one of the seraphims." Instantly upon true confession, upon the acknowledgment of the truth of God's assessment of us, there is cleansing and forgiveness, or the experience of blessing. Instantly, also, comes the enablement for the task to which Isaiah is called. Not until then did God present Isaiah with the challenge, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" (vi. 8). Instantly Isaiah replied "Here am I; send me". Isaiah had, indeed, clearly seen the Lord. Now there was no room for false modesty. Moses had demurred, perhaps with some justification, but God would enable him: Moses persisted, and Aaron was appointed to work with him, an arrangement which, on occasions was more of a hindrance than a help. When God calls He enables.

Verses 9 and 10 give us the commission with which Isaiah was entrusted:

> "Go and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed."

Isaiah, like others, was commissioned to a ministry concerned with failure. This was Jeremiah's experience; at the end of his ministry Paul had to say "all they which are in Asia be turned away from me"; and from the human standpoint the Lord's own earthly ministry was one of failure. God measures success by the rule of faithfulness, and that, sometimes, in the face of suffering and persecution. At Paul's commissioning he was to be told "how great things he must suffer for My Name's sake" (Acts ix. 16). Indeed this would appear to be the lot of the people of God during the present dispensation, for Paul tells Timothy:

> "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (II Tim. iii. 12).

Yet the ministry of failure and suffering, the ministry of faithfulness, is not fruitless. The outcome may be long delayed, but the fulfillment of God's purpose is certain. Isaiah enquired of the Lord "Lord, how long?", and the reply was given:

> "Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate, and the Lord have removed men far away, and there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land. But yet in it shall be a tenth, and it shall return, and shall be eaten: as a teil tree, and as an oak, whose substance is in them, when they cast their leaves: so the holy seed shall be the substance thereof" (Isa. vi. 11-13).

The 'failure' to which Isaiah was commissioned would be complete; but in God's own time the seed which Isaiah would sow would bring forth fruit to the glory of God.

The man God calls must see the need, it may be before, or after the call, but the need must be seen and realized. So also he must 'see' God and perceive His holiness and glory: this will have the effect of making the man realize his sinfulness and insufficiency. But with the response to the holiness and glory of God will come forgiveness and enablement, and so the call can be, and must be, answered. To whatever else the call and commission may be, it will be to faithfulness in spite of all else.

May we all, with a true vision of God in Christ say with Isaiah: "Here am I; send me".

No.10. Jeremiah.
pp. 50 - 55

The call of Jeremiah is specifically dated as being "in the thirteenth year" of king Josiah's reign. The historical background of the call and ministry of this prophet is thus more easily determined than is the case of some others whom God called.

We are told in II Chron. xxxiv. 1-3 that "Josiah was eight years old when he began to reign", and that "in the eighth year of his reign, while he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David his father" (verse 3): and "in the twelfth year he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem from the high places". In the eighteenth year of his reign a tremendous and tragic discovery was made: Hilkiah the priest "found a book of the law of the Lord given by Moses" (14). The book was taken to the young king and read to him. "And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the law, that he rent his clothes" (19). Not only did Josiah 'rend his clothes', he acted upon the words of the law, as the chapter goes on to show. So Jeremiah began his ministry against a background of reformation conducted by a young, but godly king.

Consider for a moment the tragedy of this history: the book of the law of the Lord had been lost in the house of the Lord. In the very place where it should have been made known, the book of the law had been 'misplaced'. What a tragedy! Yet it is a greater tragedy than the situation today? The Book of God is derided and abused in the house of God. The Bible is acclaimed as being important, yet its teaching is explained away and ignored. Sometimes, even, where it is acknowledged to be the Word of God, its teaching, where it is not expedient, is not followed. In Josiah's day the book of the law was rediscovered, and acted upon. Will this be the case with the Bible, in our day? It sometimes makes demands upon us we are not prepared to follow.

In the year following the commencement of Josiah's reformation the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah (Jer. i. 4). The father of Josiah, Amon, had been an evil king, but the son "received the love of the truth" and acted upon it. Then the Word of the Lord came to Jeremiah. It seems there was no burning bush, no vision of the Lord high and lifted up, no vision comparable to that of Ezekiel; there was no massive demonstration of Jehovah's holiness. Nevertheless Jeremiah was clearly acutely aware of God's holiness as chapter ii. shows. Was he a rare character who had no need of a special manifestation of God's holiness? Is that what underlies verse 5?

> "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee prophet unto the nations" (Jer. i. 5).

I set thee apart, I hallowed thee. Jeremiah experienced considerable distress because of false prophets, and it was, he says, "because of the Lord, and because of the words of His holiness". Jeremiah, like others God called, had a very clear concept of the holiness of God, in his case, because of the holiness of His words. It would therefore seem that the manifestation of God's holiness came to Jeremiah through the newly found "word of the law of the Lord". If our view of God is 'too small', perhaps it is because we do not sufficiently heed the holiness of His Word.

Jeremiah was sanctified to be a prophet before he came forth out of the womb. There are three others named in Scripture in similar terms: John the Baptist, Luke i. 13-15, Paul, Galatians i. 15-16, and Samson, Judges xiii. 3-7. John was to be filled with the Holy Spirit "from his mother's womb", similarly Samson was to be a Nazarite "from the womb". Paul was "separated from his mother's womb", which perhaps means rather more than the obvious. The word, aphorizo, is used in Luke vi. 22:

> "Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you . . . . . for the Son of man's sake."

In the majority of its occurrences it has this significance of separation to God. Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles, was separated from his mother's womb, Jeremiah was sanctified, and his calling was to be a "prophet unto the nations". Like Paul, this part of Jeremiah's calling seems to have particular reference to the latter part of his ministry, see chapters xlvi. to li. Much of his work concerned, to use Paul's phrase, "the hope of Israel", but he was commissioned 'a prophet unto the nations'.

Like others God called, Jeremiah was aware of his own inadequacy, and in response to his call he says "Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child", perhaps better, "a youth". We do not know how old Jeremiah was, and it is more likely the significance of the expression on his lips was "I am inexperienced". Moses, as we have seen, found it difficult to express himself, and Paul was accused of speech which was "contemptible", or of no account. Yet such men God deigned to use to His glory, perhaps even using their disability to add to His glory. It is not always, if ever, that God calls the most able and most confident to His service, although we may be tempted to appoint such. Jeremiah was assured of God's enablement (Jer. i. 7) "Say not, I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak. Be not afraid of their faces: for I am with thee to deliver thee". Then he was given a confirmatory sign: "Then the Lord put forth His hand, and touched my mouth. And the Lord said unto me, Behold, I have put My words in thy mouth". Unless the Lord puts the words into the mouth of the speaker, the most eloquent discourse is in vain.

Frequently we feel that when a man is called of God, his ministry will be all success and glory, but as with Isaiah, so it was with Jeremiah: he was warned of difficulties and opposition, and given a ministry of condemnation:

> "See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant."

His ministry was not to be totally negative, there would be the positive aspect also. Seldom is the one God called left totally without encouragement, though it may be only small, for no God commissioned mission is ever really fruitless.

Jeremiah had other experiences common to those God calls. He experienced opposition from those who ought to have been giving him encouragement and support:

> "Therefore thus saith the Lord of the men of Anathoth, that seek thy life, saying, Prophesy not in the name of the Lord, that thou die not by our hand" (Jer. xi. 21).

From the very first verse of the book we learn that there were priests at Anathoth, and it would seem that Jeremiah was opposed by relatives and friends, who were also those whose prime concern should have been with the Word of God and with His Law. This is confirmed in chapter xii. 6:

> "For even thy brethren, and the house of thy father, even they have dealt treacherously with thee; yea, they have called a multitude after thee: believe them not, though they speak fair words unto thee."

Those who should have been his support dealt 'treacherously' with him; they spoke 'fair words' to him: "I agree entirely with what you say, but . . . . .", "your ministry is faithful, but . . . . .". The result of this opposition was that there were times when his ministry seemed too much for him as he makes clear in chapter xv. 10-18. In verse 10 he complains that his ministry is causing strife and discord. He refers in verse 16 to the finding of the book of the law:

> "Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and Thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart" (Jer. xv. 16).

He had avidly read the Word of the Lord, and it had been the source of supreme joy to him; in consequence:

> "I sat not in the assembly of the mockers (merry-makers), nor rejoiced; I sat alone because of Thy hand: for Thou hast filled me with indignation" (xv. 17).

He could not rejoice with the 'merry-makers', for he was full of indignation at their rejection of that which had filled his heart with the joy of the Lord, and in verse 18 he goes on to say that his despondency is perpetually like an incurable and painful wound, for it seemed as though Jehovah was deceiving him.

But his God did not leave him without encouragement, and His Word to His despondent prophet was:

> "If thou return, then will I bring thee again, and thou shalt stand before Me: and if thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as My mouth: let them return unto thee; but return not thou unto them" (xv. 19).

If Jeremiah 'returns' from his despair to the Lord, the Lord would strengthen and reinforce him; but as to those who had opposed him, he was not to return to them. If there was to be reconciliation it must be on the grounds of their return to him.

At one time the situation had been so bad that Jeremiah goes so far as to say that "Thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived: Thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailed" (xx. 7). Indeed the opposition was such at one point that he says:

> "Then I said, I will not make mention of Him, nor speak any more in His name" (xx. 9).

But his 'I will not' was countered by his 'I could not', for he continues:

> "But His Word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay" (xx. 9).

Jeremiah's suffering in the service of God led him, like Job, to curse the day wherein he was born (xx. 14-18). At the same time he has this consolation:

> "But the Lord is with me as a mighty terrible One: therefore my persecutors shall stumble, and they shall not prevail: they shall be greatly ashamed; for they shall not prosper: their everlasting confusion shall never be forgotten" (xx. 11).

Perhaps in the days in which we live, when the enemy is so very active in opposing the work of those God has called, we need to remember with Jeremiah "the Lord is with me", not perhaps, in the present dispensation as a "mighty terrible One", but certainly as the God "Who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us"; and that power is 'exceeding great', "according to the working of His mighty power, which He wrought in Christ".

Ezekiel's ministry commenced 'in the thirtieth year' we are told, but no point of reference is immediately given: it is not stated as the thirtieth year of a certain king's reign, nor of the captivity. We are told also that this thirtieth year coincided with "the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity". Twenty-nine years before this date the book of the law of the Lord had been found in the Temple, and the great Passover had been held by Josiah. The nation had been given a tremendous opportunity: the Law had been brought before them, by a king who was obedient to it; but as a nation it had no effect upon them. Now the judgment has commenced and the captivity begun. Ezekiel is called to prophesy against a background of judgment, and in prospect of judgment.

It was at this time, Ezekiel tells us, "the heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God" (i. 1). Were this visions in which the prophet saw God, or were they visions inspired by God? The Companion Bible note at this point suggests they were from God, and as we read the accounts in chapters i. and x. it seems clear that this is the case:

> "This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord" (i. 28).

What Ezekiel saw was not the representation of the glory of Jehovah; it was the representation of the likeness of His glory. This is emphasized throughout: verse 5 alone, speaks of "the likeness of four living creatures", and they appeared like a man. As the account is read, there is given to us the impression of a man seeking to describe the indescribable. It is tremendously impressive and awe-inspiring. If the mere representation of the likeness of the glory of God is so indescribably impressive and awesome, what can the actual glory be like? And how totally unbearable would be a direct vision of God Himself! Perhaps Ezekiel, more than any other whom God called, was aware of the holiness and majesty and glory of Jehovah.

We have drawn attention to the similes in verse 5, and similar comparisons persist throughout the passage. Verse 13 speaks of "the likeness of the living creatures, their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps". Verse 14 continues "and the living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning". Again in verse 22 "And the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creatures was as the colour of terrible crystal", and who can describe "terrible crystal"? So it continues to the end of the chapter:

> "And above the firmament that was over their heads was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone: and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man upon it. And I saw as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it, from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward, I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about. As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord" (i. 26-28).

So it is also with what Ezekiel heard:

> "And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of an host" (i. 24).

Both the words 'noise' and 'voice' could be translated 'sound', for no articulate speech is referred to until verse 28.

Why should Ezekiel alone be given such a stupendous, awesome, terrifying experience of "the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord"? Was it not because "the glory of the Lord departed from off the threshold of the house" (x. 18)? The glory had departed from the Temple, from the city and from the nation. It is surely significant that the departure of the glory of the Lord from the Temple concludes a second vision similar to the first. The glory may have departed from the earthly People; but the glory had not departed from the Almighty God. His glory was far, far greater than anything this rebel nation had ever experienced. Though the glory had so gone, the former vision ends with a message of hope, for there was "the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain" (i. 28). The rainbow was to be a perpetual reminder that God would never again totally destroy mankind, for He had a covenant with them, so here in this vision is the reminder of the covenant Jehovah had made with His People. The glory would return! Much of Ezekiel's prophecies concern the time when that glory shall return in far greater measure than ever previously known by the Covenant People, and to a far greater and more magnificent Temple than the one from which the glory had departed.

The result of "the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord" upon Ezekiel was "when I saw it, I fell upon my face" (i. 28). The Jehovah said to him:

> "Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee. And the spirit entered into me when He spake unto me, and set me upon my feet, that I heard Him that spake unto me" (ii. 1, 2).

"God's calling, is God's enabling." This inexperienced 'youth' needed to be "set upon his feet" before he could hear. It is seldom indeed that God calls the inexperienced to His service; but when He does, He establishes that person that he may hear. In Ezekiel's case it involved the Spirit entering into him: today all believers have the Holy Spirit, but those God calls particularly need 'the spirit of wisdom and revelation' which normally comes with growth in grace and with experience of the ways of God. Before they speak, like Ezekiel, they must hear God speak to them.

It is to be noted that Jehovah spoke to the prophet as "the son of man", or son of Adam. Apart from Daniel, of whom the expression is used once (Dan. viii. 17), it is used only of Ezekiel apart from the Lord Jesus Christ. But there is a significant difference. When used of a man it lacks the definite article ("the"), but when used of Christ is has the article. Ezekiel was a son of Adam; Christ was the Son of Adam, the "second Man" and the "last Adam". But in the books of Daniel and Ezekiel the expression signifies a human being, or natural descendant of Adam in contrast with a heavenly being. The contrast is to be noted, for example, in Dan. viii. 16, 17. Here the heavenly being, the angel Gabriel is in contrast with, and speaking to "a son of Adam". God could have chosen a heavenly being instead of Ezekiel: He chose a son of Adam to speak to the sons of Adam: they rejected the message. Much later God spoke to them through a "heavenly being", His Son, and the sons of Adam still rejected His message, so that "they are without excuse".

Ezekiel's commission was, like others, to a ministry of failure, as is clear from chapter ii. 3 - iii. 11. Yet it was counterbalanced by the assurance of the ultimate fulfillment of God's purpose for His People. Though there may be much to discourage the man God calls, always there must also be the assurance of the final triumph of God. The visions which came to the prophet came from God (Elohim), the Creator, and Ezekiel's favourite name for God is Adonai Jehovah, Lord God as the A.V. translates it: Sovereign Lord Jehovah. God was and is God of all the earth, and though the nation might be held in captivity by their heathen enemies, their God was also the Sovereign Lord of all nations of the earth, of their enemies. Though for the time being He had discarded them for His purpose they were not beyond His influence and care.

In the course of his commissioning the "roll of a book" was spread before him (Ezekiel ii. 9, 10). He is told:

> "Son of man, eat that thou findest; eat this roll, and go speak unto the House of Israel" (iii. 1).

Just prior to this he had been told "Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house: open thy mouth, and eat that I give thee" (ii. 8). In Josiah's "reformation" the book of the law of the Lord had been found in the Temple. The nation had refused to 'eat' it: they may have heard the words when they were read to them, but they did not 'digest' them. Ezekiel was to digest the words of the law, and those words were to be the basis of all he had to say. He says "then did I eat it; and it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness" (iii. 3). The 'rebellious house' had rejected the book of the law; Ezekiel delighted in it.

So it is with all whom God calls. The call of the prophets of old, and of all whom God has called, is related to historical facts to do with the current 'people of God', related to their needs and to their failures. Such men (and women) have a very clear concept of the holiness and greatness of God, and of their own unworthiness before Him. Such can only speak as they 'hear' though their words may be offensive to those who hear them, and so they are often commissioned to a 'ministry of failure', though proclaiming at the same time, as did the prophet Ezekiel the ultimate triumph and success of God. Fundamentally the man God calls is one who receives and delights in God's Word.

So far as the record goes, there is no indication that Daniel ever received a specific call. Yet it would be a bold man who would suggest that Daniel was uncalled, and it would seem that he was one to whom the circumstances in which he found himself constituted his commission. The revelations he received were committed to him in visions, by angels and heavenly beings. It seems that unlike other prophets Jehovah did not speak to him directly. Israel was in a "lo ammi" period, and many of the nation, including Daniel, were in captivity in Babylon. This may account for the absence of any direct call, and for the absence of direct communication to him by the Lord.

Daniel is introduced to us as one of those brought to the king by Ashpenaz "of the children of Israel, and of the king's seed, and of the princes" (Dan. i. 3). He was clearly one of the 'ruling class', and probably of the seed-royal, a more accurate rendering of this verse being ". . . . . even (or both) of the king's seed, and of the nobles". In view of the godlessness of the kings and nobles at that time, it is remarkable not only that he was prepared to make a stand for the faith of his people, but that he had any faith for which to stand.

Here was a young lad, probably about sixteen years of age, in captivity, in a strange land, chosen for the king to be specially favoured and trained in "the learning and the tongue of the Chaldeans" (i. 4), and appointed "a daily portion of the king's meat" (i. 5). Daniel had much to lose, and there was every excuse for him to be restrained in the practice of his faith. Yet it is recorded in verse 8:

> "But Daniel purpose in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank" (Dan. i. 8).

Daniel made up his mind that he would not defile himself with the king's provision. It was no "spur of the moment" decision, he had considered the matter and concluded that there was only one course of action open to him. Having made up his mind he then spoke to the "prince of the eunuchs" who had charge of Daniel and his companions. It is clear that the prince of the eunuchs was scared of the king: "I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink . . . . . then shall ye make me endanger my head to the king" (i. 10). The king was no constitutional monarch, but a despotic dictator whose every whim must be obeyed. By his action Daniel not only risked his privileged position, but his very life. Yet because of the risk of defilement by the "king's meat and drink", he was prepared to risk his life. The meat was probably "killed with the blood", and the Law forbad eating such: "ye shall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl or of beast" (Lev. vii. 26), and had probably been "offered to idols", again forbidden by the Law:

> "For thou shalt worship no other gods: for the Lord, whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God: lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, and they go a > whoring after their gods, and do sacrifice unto their gods, and one call thee, and thou eat of his sacrifice" (Exod. xxxiv. 14, 15).

Such a small thing about which to make such a fuss! But Daniel knew he would be "guilty by association" if, while professing to believe in Jehovah and to keep His covenant, he partook of "defiled" food and drink. Common sense is a very different thing from sanctified common sense. How easy it is to be very 'practical' and 'sensible', and thereby to be unspiritual and carnal. We need to be constantly on guard against such an attitude, for we are bidden to walk worthy of our Lord, not worthy of commendation by the world.

Paul assures us that "it is required in stewards that a man be found faithful" (I.Cor.iv.2), and in the parable in Matt. xxv. 21, it is the faithful steward who is entrusted with greater responsibility. So it was for Daniel, "As for these four children, God gave them knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom: and Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams" (i. 17). Daniel's discernment in dreams led on to the events recorded in chapter ii. concerning Nebuchadnezzar's dream. When the situation was known to Daniel, the first thing he did was to go to his friends "that they would desire mercies of the God of heaven concerning this secret; that Daniel and his fellows should not perish with the rest of the wise men of Babylon" (ii. 17, 18). The result was that "the secret was revealed unto Daniel in a night vision" (ii. 19). After, in the king's presence Daniel made it clear that the ability to interpret dreams was due to no skill of his own: "there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days" (ii. 28). How easily he could have made this an opportunity to advance himself in the king's eyes; yet he took it as an opportunity to bear witness to this pagan monarch of the power of his God.

When Nebuchadnezzar had his second dream, he acknowledged that a divine spirit was in Daniel. The Authorized Version translates "I know that the spirit of the holy gods is in thee" (iv. 8, 9, 18). The word translated "gods" is the Chaldee elahin, and is the equivalent of the Hebrew elohim, so that it is a moot point whether Nebuchadnezzar was referring to "gods" or to God. It must at least have been a step on the road to the acknowledgment in the verse 37 of this same chapter:

> "Now I Nebuchadnezzar praise and extol and honour the King of heaven, all Whose works are truth, and His ways judgment: and those that walk in pride He is able to abase" (iv. 37)

Daniel's faithfulness is again emphasized in the interpretation of this second dream, for it spoke of God's judgment on the king. We have already pointed out that it was extremely dangerous to offend an absolute monarch such as Nebuchadnezzar. His faithfulness is again shown in the interpretation of the 'writing on the wall' (v. 22 ff.). Similarly when Darius was on the throne, and had issued the decree that none should "ask a petition of any God or man for thirty days" (vi. 4-end), as soon as Daniel heard the decree had been signed "he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime" (vi. 10). As a result of his faithfulness this time, Daniel found himself cast into the den of lions; but God was with His servant and preserved him through the danger.

Because of his faithfulness, and through that faithfulness, God had used Daniel. Then, after about sixty eight years of faithfulness, came the first revelation to the prophet concerning his own people and the future in relation to Gentile rule, and its climax: three years later came the second vision. These prophecies troubled Daniel greatly (see vii. 28; viii. 27; x. 15-17). But what encouragement it must have been for Daniel to hear the words: "O man, greatly beloved, fear not: peace be unto thee, be strong, yea, be strong" (x. 19). To a man of Daniel's outlook and faithfulness it must have meant far more than all the favour and promotion he had received from the various monarchs under whom he had served. Much, perhaps all, of the revelations he had received, were to be 'shut up' (viii. 26), or 'shut up and sealed' (xii. 4, 9). Only a truly faithful man could receive such messages and 'shut them up' and 'seal them'. The burden would have been too great for any whose faithfulness had not stood the test.

His faithfulness also led him to identify himself completely with his people in the prayer and confession of chapter ix. 3-19. For some seventy one years he had been faithful to the Word of God, and it was "in the first year of Darius the son of Ahasuerus" that he came to an understanding of the significance of "the seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem". Then it was that he identified himself with the nation in their rebellion against God. To know the mind and will of God does not always bring lightheartedness, and it may be that this accounts for the superficiality of so much Christian thinking in our day.

Perhaps we tend to overlook the faithfulness of Daniel in comparison with the prophecies given through him. Yet, surely, it was his faithfulness that called forth the words "O Daniel, a man greatly beloved" (x. 11). Daniel was faithful in spite of the pressures of circumstances; he was faithful in proclaiming the judgment of God, even to powerful, despotic monarchs; faithful in the face of threats to his person; faithful to the Word of God; faithful to his people. He was a rare character, even among the heroes of faith, for nothing is recorded against him.

O, that we might hear the words spoken of us: a man, or a woman, greatly beloved. To do so calls for faithfulness. It is comparatively easy to be faithful in one or two spheres: Daniel was faithful in all spheres. It is comparatively easy to be faithful in maintaining the truths of the Christian faith, it is not so easy to maintain that faithfulness by avoiding fellowship with those who deny those truths, for there are social pressures involved, and sometimes friendships.

pp. 192 - 196

Hosea, the man with a curious call! His ministry covered the last seventy years or so immediately before the fall of Samaria, the capital city of the northern kingdom of Israel, frequently spoken of in his prophecies as "Ephraim". Both from the historical books, and from the book of Hosea we learn of the terrible apostasy of the northern kingdom, so terrible in fact that there was no longer room for hope. Judah, the southern kingdom had also apostacized, but had not yet gone "beyond redemption point" and still there was hope for Judah.

> "But I will have mercy upon the house of Judah, and will save them . . . . ." (Hosea i. 7).
> "Ephraim compasseth Me about with lies, and the house of Israel with deceit: but Judah yet ruleth with God, and is faithful with the saints" (xi. 12).

Nonetheless a harvest of judgment is appointed also for Judah.

> "Also, O Judah, He hath set an harvest for thee" (vi. 11).

In the names of the prophet and his father, and in the names of his children and his symbolic acts is a summary of all Hosea had to say to Israel. For the moment we note but his name and that of his father. Hosea the son of Beeri:

Beeri:	expounder.
Hosea:	Jah is help; salvation.

What a significant thought is brought to our minds from these two names! The help of Jehovah, salvation is the 'offspring' of exposition. If only our 'Christian' leaders would learn that lesson!

Unlike some of those men God called, with Hosea we know without doubt when he was first called.

> "The beginning of the word of the Lord by Hosea. And the Lord said to Hosea, Go, take unto thee a wife of whoredoms and children of whoredoms" (Hosea i. 2).

From verse 3 it seems clear that the children of whoredoms means something other than appears on the face of it, and all the children mentioned are those born to Hosea. This fact also helps us toward an understanding of what 'a wife of whoredoms' really means. For, although the prophets were often called upon to perform rather strange acts, it is highly improbable that God should ask one of his servants to take a wife who was actually an adulteress. Frequently in the O.T., and once at least in the New, adultery, whoredoms, etc., are used of departure from the worship of Jehovah, of idolatry. "Take unto thee a wife of idolatry"? Perhaps if anything this sounds even more unlikely than that the prophet should marry an adulteress, for nothing is more abominable in the sight of God than idolatry, or anything which denies His Deity: in this He is a Jealous God. Hence the seriousness of those who deny the deity of the Lord Jesus Christ, for to deny the Son is to deny the Father also (I John ii. 22, 23). The Companion Bible suggests the expression is a symbol, and as all the names are symbolic in the book, this is probably the case, and "a wife of whoredoms" signifies "a wife from the northern kingdom". This does not necessarily mean that Gomer (whom Hosea married) was herself an idolatress, any more than when we say "Russians are communists", for we know that not all of them are communists. Hosea was to take a wife out of the idolatrous northern kingdom.

"So he went and took Gomer the daughter of Diblaim." Again the meaning of the names has great significance in the light of all that Hosea has to say:

Gomer:	completion, that is to say, Israel's wickedness was complete, her cup of iniquity was full.
Diblaim:	a double cake of figs, The Companion Bible suggests this signifies "sensual pleasure", or perhaps what we would call a materialistic society.

In due course their first child was born to Hosea and Gomer, and the Lord told them to call his name "Jezreel":

> "for yet a little while, and I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu, and will cause to cease the kingdom of the house of Israel" (i. 4).

Jehu had executed God's judgment upon the house of Ahab, but his motives had not been pure: it had suited his own purpose and ambition, and he had been as idolatrous as Ahab. The nation as a whole had concurred with Jehu's actions and ambitions and were thus equally guilty with him. As result the "blood of Jezreel" would be avenged in the scattering of the nation.

A second child was born, a daughter, and her name was to be Lo-ruhamah "for I will not more have mercy upon the house of Israel; but I will utterly take them away" (i. 6). In Rom. ix. 25 Paul interprets this as "not beloved", and Peter as "not having obtained mercy" (I Pet. ii. 10). The third child born to the couple was named Lo-ammi: not my people. So, through the names of the people involved in the history of Hosea, the prophecy with which he was entrusted is progressively made known. The northern kingdom had forsaken their God, they had sought pleasure and material things rather than Jehovah, and through their idolatry their cup of iniquity was full. Now they were to be scattered among the nations, God had withdrawn His mercy from them, and they were to be disowned of Him. Then came a message of hope (i. 10 - ii. 1), the nation would be re-gathered, would again experience the mercy of God and be owned of Him, and, moreover, "the children of Judah and the children of Israel (shall) be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head" (i. 11).

Chapter iii. introduces us to what might be referred to as Hosea's second call. He is to:

> "Go yet, love a woman beloved of her friend, yet an adulteress, according to the love of the Lord toward the children of Israel, who look to other gods, and love flagons of wine" (iii. 1).

This is usually taken to mean either that Gomer had "reverted to type", or if she was not originally an adulteress she had become one. The Companion Bible says: "Not Gomer again, but another; hence we must believe that Gomer had died; and that this was a second marriage with its own special significance". The notes also state that it is "referring to Israel's present condition in this present dispensation", and "an adulteress: an idolatress: and denotes only a woman of the northern tribes". However, this view hardly seems in accord with the statement in chapter ii. 2:

> "Plead with your mother, plead: for she is not my wife, neither am I her husband: let her therefore put away her whoredoms out of her sight . . . . .".
> "For their mother hath played the harlot . . . . ." (ii. 5).

The woman Hosea is now told to love, is one "beloved of her friend". The word translated "love" and "beloved" is, in both cases aheb: love a woman loved of her friend. Hosea was told to express the love he already had "according to the love of the Lord toward the children of Israel". The theme of Hosea's prophecy is that although the nation of Israel has been unfaithful to Jehovah, He will yet take her back. The words of Hosea to this woman are significant:

> "Thou shalt abide for me many days; thou shalt not play the harlot, and thou shalt not be for another man: so will I also be for thee" (iii. 3).

Immediately Hosea continues "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, etc.". If therefore, Hosea is 'acting out' in his personal life the love of Jehovah for Israel, it would seem most likely that the "woman beloved of her friend" is in fact Gomer. Or are we to understand from this acted prophecy that Israel having turned from Jehovah to other gods, is to be rejected by Him, and replaced by Him by another nation equally idolatrous? Hosea's action is to be "according to the love of the Lord toward the children of Israel". Whether this interpretation of the facts is correct or not, it is clear from the whole of this book, as well as from other Scriptures that the adulterous nation of Israel is to be punished by Jehovah for her sins, and "after many days" will be restored, and will "fear the Lord and His goodness in the latter days" (iii. 5).

Hosea says of the 'woman beloved of her friend', 'so I bought her', and the price he paid was that of a slave. Gomer, if it is she, had not only fallen into adultery, but had also become a slave needing redemption. How perfectly the picture fits Israel! But we must not be side-tracked whether the 'woman' was Gomer, or some other. The message of the lived-out lesson is that in spite of all Israel's unfaithfulness, Jehovah still loved them, and when they have been for 'many days' without king, prince, priest, asherah or idol, then when they return and seek Jehovah they shall become once more "My people", and 'beloved' or pitied. The importance of the message is underlined in that it was enacted in the life of the prophet, stressed in the symbolism of the names of the characters involved, and put to them plainly in the clearest of verbal terms. No one had any excuse for failing to understand the message of Hosea.

Hosea:	salvation.
Gomer:	the measure of iniquity was full.
Jezreel:	the consequent scattering.
Lo-ruhamah:	Israel had forfeited Jehovah's mercy.
Lo-ammi:	Israel's present condition..

But when they seek the Lord:

Ammi:	their future position.
Ruhamah:	pitied, perhaps we may say this is the new Christian name, for God's mercy will be once more fully extended to them when they accept their Messiah, the Lord, Jesus Christ.

Hosea, the man with a curious call! but a call which outlined and emphasized God's dealings with faithless Israel, until the time when "all Israel shall be saved". How great is God's faithfulness; "He cannot deny Himself", "if we are unbelieving, yet He abideth faithful".

pp. 226 - 230

Very little is known of this prophet, Amos. The whole of his known history is to be found in the book which bears his name. He was "among the herdmen of Tekoa" (i. 1). Tekoa was in Judah, and while Amos prophesied against Judah and the surrounding nations, the main thrust of his ministry was against Israel, the northern kingdom. It is clear that some of his prophecies were delivered in Israel itself, as is plain from Amaziah's words to him, "O thou seer, go, flee thee away into the land of Judah, and there eat thy bread, and prophesy there" (Amos vii. 12).

Who, or what, was Amos? Chapter i. 1 tells us he was a herdman. The Companion Bible note tells us this means "shepherd", the word being derived from a particular breed of sheep. In response to Amaziah, Amos says, "I was an herdman, and a gatherer of sycomore fruit" (vii. 14). Here the word translated "herdman" derives from a word for "ox", and hence could be rendered "cattleman". He was a preparer of sycomore fruit rather than a "gatherer": in order for the fruit to ripen properly, it had to be pinched at a certain stage of its growth, and this was part of the work undertaken by Amos. Amos, then was a shepherd, cattleman, and possibly also a ploughman and a tender of fruit. The inference is that he was what today might be termed a general farm labourer. He had no claim to high birth, as Isaiah and Jeremiah; he had no special preparation as Moses or Paul, nor was he marked out as specially righteous as Noah. In this case we are not even told the name of his father. We know where he was working when the Lord took him: "and the Lord took me as I followed the flock" (vii. 15). We know nothing of his birth, and we know nothing of his death. Did Amaziah succeed in driving him back to Judah where he died in obscurity? or did he remain in Israel and die in the earthquake he foretold? We simply do not know.

Amos was a 'nobody': yet the Lord took him, and used him. Yet by reason of his occupation the illustrations he uses are particularly vivid, and are taken from his country life. He speaks of the 'habitations (or better pastures) of the shepherd', and of threshing "Gilead with threshing instruments of iron" (i. 2, 3). In chapter ii. 13 he uses the picture of a heavily laden cart; "as the shepherd taketh out of the mouth of the lion two legs, or a piece of an ear" (iii. 12). Perhaps the best known of his illustrations is "the basket of summer fruit" (viii. 1, 2): ripe the fruit, ripe the time. As a countryman he would have been well acquainted with "that which may be known of God" in nature, "even His eternal power and Godhead". Examples of this are to be found in chapter v. 8, "the seven stars and Orion . . . . . that calleth for the waters of the sea . . . . .", and in the same chapter:

> "Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord! to what end is it to you? the day of the Lord is darkness, and not light; As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him; or went into the house, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a serpent bit him" (v. 18, 19).

Again, "will a lion roar in the forest, when he hath no prey? will a young lion cry out of his den, if he hath taken nothing?" (iii. 4), and verse 5 and 8 of the same chapter draw on the power of God in nature as illustrations, and there are other similar pictures from the same source. Chapter ix. 1-4 speak of Jehovah's Godhead and holiness.

On the surface Amos was nothing, and had nothing to offer God by way of service; but God took him as he followed the flock. He was simply watching over them as they fed, not leading them. Perhaps in this is a hint of his character and personality. He was no leader of men; a humble, insignificant nobody.

Yet this man had the audacity, not only to prophesy against the king of Israel, but to do so at "the king's chapel" or sanctuary (viii. 13). But if it was a genuine place of worship, was it "the king's chapel"? There was a time when the temple at Jerusalem was known as "the House of the Lord", but when the Jews turned from their God it became "your" house. This sanctuary was one of those established by Jeroboam, forever branded as "Jeroboam the son of Nebat, which caused Israel to sin" (the Jeroboam against whom Amos prophesied was a much later king, who reigned about the same time as Uzziah king of Judah).

In these studies we have taken into account the historical background, and the background to the ministry of Amos is summarized for us in II Kings xiv. 23-29. Jeroboam the son of Joash "did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord: he departed not from all the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin" (xiv. 24). But for all that he was a king of 'might' (28) and he 'restored the coast of Israel' (25). He was, therefore, in all probability, a very popular king. What hope of success was there then, for a nobody like Amos?

One can imagine the scorn with which Amaziah (the priest of Bethel, the king's chapel) viewed Amos: "O thou seer, go, flee thee away into the land of Judah, and there eat thy bread, and prophesy there" (vii. 12). Some have suggested that the force of "thou seer" is "thou visionary", for it seems unlikely that Amaziah recognized in Amos a true prophet: Amos was too insignificant for that according to Amaziah's reckoning! To modernize this priest's words, 'clear off to Judah'. Did he also wish to imply that Amos was a mere mercenary, paid by the king of Israel to prophesy against Jeroboam? It seems a likely inference from "there eat thy bread", with the suggestion "prophesy there" that Amos should devote his attention to his own peoples' failings.

> "Then answered Amos, and said to Amaziah, I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was an herdman, and a gatherer of sycomore fruit: and the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and the Lord said unto me, God, prophesy unto My people Israel" (vii. 14, 15).

Amos admits his lowly origin, but the Lord called him, and he could do no other than obey. He was one of those of whom it might be said:

> "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are" (I Cor. i. 26-28).

But God took Amos and used the lowly experience of the countryman to provide simple but telling illustrations of His dealings with men. Amos prophesied for only a brief period: probably not more than two years (cf. i. 1), possibly for less. For a brief moment he shines in the purpose of God: and is gone. God took him; God used him; God used the knowledge of Himself Amos had gained in his daily life; God took him as he worked.

Whether high born, whether low born, whether well known or unknown, whether for a long or short period, the only thing that matters is that a man, or a woman, can say "the Lord took me as I followed my daily task". In our own calling, most of us are called to go, not from our daily task, but in it. Most of our calling are just ordinary people, doing ordinary jobs. Someone has said "in our calling God has taken the lowest, and raised them to the highest". It is well for us to remember this: Amos did! In effect he said "I was a nobody, I am a nobody: but the Lord called me: I could only obey".

Perhaps one of the dangers of our calling, because it is so high and wonderful, is that we may, unconsciously, think God has chosen us and called us because we are somebody: if anything of this sort is true, it is more likely that He has chosen us because we are nobodies. The wise, the powerful, the nobly born are often too wise, too strong, too noble for the Lord to use them. The more clearly we recognize this, the more clearly we shall recognize our total dependence on the Lord Jesus Christ; and the more we recognize our total dependence on Him, the more He will be able to use us in His way, for His time, for His glory.

Our part, as we rejoice in the wonder of our high calling (which is His), is to get to know Him. As we get to know Him, in the fullness of His glory, and the fullness of His nature, so that in practice He becomes for us "All in all", that will "keep us in our place", and make us more usable in His service.

I was a nobody, I am a nobody; but God in the greatness of His great grace has chosen, called and accepted me in His Son, the Beloved.

The First Epistle of PETER

pp. 153 - 159

> "Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia" (I Peter i. 1).

An apostle is one sent away by another. In the gospels we find the Lord Jesus instructing Peter for his role after Calvary. In Luke's gospel our Lord Jesus tells Simon He has prayed for him that he might not fall to the attack of Satan:

> "And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he might sift you as wheat: But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren" (Luke xxii. 31, 32).

What does it mean, "when thou art converted?" The phrase reminds us of God's prophecy to Israel through Isaiah:

> "Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed" (Isa. vi. 10).

The warning to Israel although repeated in Matt. xiii. 15 finally found fulfillment in spiritual blindness for most at the end of Acts. This spiritual blindness will be lifted as foretold in Jer. xxxi. 33 "I will put My law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts".

Peter and the elect remnant of Israel in Acts enjoyed a foretaste of the yet future days of Jer. xxxi. 31, in as much as their minds were opened to the truth. Thus we find Peter failing to believe or understand many of the statements of Christ and even denying Him, and all this before Pentecost, but after Pentecost he is prepared to brave the Sanhedrin and is a changed man:

> "Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, said unto them, Ye rulers of the people . . . . . by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, Whom ye crucified, Whom God raised from the dead, even by Him doth this man stand before you whole . . . . . now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John . . . . . they marveled" (Acts iv. 8-13).

It appears then that Peter has experienced the conversion referred to by our Lord in Luke xxii. and now in these two epistles to the dispersed Jews of Asia Minor he is writing to strengthen his brethren, having now wisdom and spiritual understanding supplied by the promised additional Comforter or Holy Spirit.

In the last chapter of John's gospel the risen Lord appears to Peter and the following dialogue is recorded:

> "Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me more than these? He saith unto Him, Yea, Lord: Thou knowest that I love Thee. He saith unto him, Feed (provide pasture for) My lambs (the immature flock). He saith to him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me? He saith unto Him, Yea, Lord; Thou knowest that I love Thee. He saith unto him, Feed (shepherd) My sheep (the adult flock). He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me? . . . . . Jesus saith unto him, Feed My sheep (pasture)" (John xxi. 15-17).

Here is a second appointment to apostleship. Peter was to care for the young and old in the faith, giving them pasture. How else can we interpret this figure of pasture other than to let it represent the Word of God. The figure of sheep and a shepherd for those days was so apposite. The sheep knew the voice of their shepherd and trusted him. He led them every day to where they would find the food for their well being and growth. He was at hand at all times to protect them from enemies.

The figure of pasture for sheep, finding its antitype in the Word of God for Christians, cannot be stressed enough. Our Lord repulsing Satan by the O.T. stated "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matthew iv. 4). How long should we live without physical food, and yet many Christians starve their spiritual life by inadequate feeding on the Word.

We shall find therefore in Peter's epistles a strong plea for the Word of God.

> "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father" (i. 2-).

Before we examine this statement let us state what is the foreknowledge of God. This appears to be a supernatural ability of God to see into the future, how His creation will behave and respond to His love, grace, discipline, etc. Heaven's created spirits including Satan, and mankind have been given a freedom of choice for thought and action. Adam and Eve were not puppets but were left free agents in the garden of Eden. The tree of knowledge of good and evil they were commanded not to touch [(???) EAT!] but nevertheless were left to obey or disobey. Their progeny, subject to their consciences have been left with the same freedom. Where the eternal purpose of God has been endangered God has overruled this freedom.

Coming back to our text, what God has done with certain people or nations is to elect or choose those for His purposes who He foreknew would respond and implement His plans for the ages. In the case of Peter he was elected or chosen by God for the ministry to the people of Israel:

> "When they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me (Paul) as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter: [For He that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was might in me (Paul) towards the Gentiles]" (Gal. ii. 7, 8).

In every mention of Peter in the Gospels we can see the preparation of this man for the leading post he was to hold among the Israelites. Especially is this to be seen in Matt. xvi.:

> "When Jesus came into the coasts of Caesarea Philippi, He asked His disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: Some Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build My church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shalt be loosed in heaven" (Matt. xvi. 13-19).

It might be safe to say here that the kingdom of heaven is that future administration when the Lord Jesus will return and reign during the millennium from Jerusalem, the actual kingdom will extend to a limited surrounding area. The nations of the world will be subject to Christ. If Israel had accepted their King at the first advent of Christ the kingdom would have been established then. Now it is postponed to the not too distant future. Peter was put in charge of his brethren during what would have been a short waiting period for the return of their King (see Acts iii. 19-21).

Notice Christ emphasizing that God Himself had opened Peter's eyes to Christ's Messiahship to which God's Son adds "I also say unto thee . . . . .". Now what Christ says to Peter is an amplification of Peter's confession. Christ was going to make entry into His church of whatever calling, a confession of faith in Himself as He instructed Paul to write in Rom. x. 9:

> "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."

When the Greek grammar is applied to Christ's words quoted from Matt. xvi. it is this confession and not on Peter that Christ's church would be founded. Christ may well have made play on petros a stone, moveable, but which had once been part of petra an unmoveable rock which had always symbolized Christ.

Here then was an important position that Peter was to occupy and one that God had ordained, knowing that he would respond and fill the part to which he was elected.

> "Elect . . . . . through sanctification of the Spirit" (still i. 2-).

Sanctification has a primary sense of being made holy by being separated unto God through His Son, His Word and His Holy Spirit. Only God is Holy but we can become so by God's ordained way of manifesting Himself by these three, His Son, His Word and His Holy Spirit.

Our blessed Lord prayed to His Father in John xvii. 17-21:

> "Sanctify them through Thy truth: Thy word is truth. As Thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. And for their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on Me through their word; that they all may > be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me."

Here is the basis for a powerful unity for service and ministry and it was under these measures of grace that Peter was elected to serve his brethren. It is under the same terms of powerful enabling that God calls us to preach and manifest the riches of His Word, leading to such fullness of knowledge of God. His ways and purposes that we are prepared for a reality of unity with Him and the knowledge to praise Him in sincerity.

> "Unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ" (i. -2-).

The only occurrence in the New Testament of the phrase "sprinkling of the blood" is in Heb. xii. 24:

> "Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better things than that of Abel."

This quotation links the task of Peter, to which he was to be obedient, with preparing his people for the establishment of the new covenant which as we have previously said was foretold in Jer. xxxi. 33.

> "Grace unto you, and peace, be multiplied" (i. -2).

Those who heard Peter's words and accepted them had grace or free undeserved favour added to them indeed. The picture in Acts is exciting.

> "And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all. Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold and laid them down at the apostles' feet! and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need" (Acts iv. 33-35).

Coming now to verse 3 Peter commences his epistle to his flock with the same phrase as Paul does to his calling in Eph. i. 3:

> "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The word blessed in both cases is eulogetos (our eulogy) "let us speak well of". Here is an exhortation to praise God and speak well of Him to the world for the peculiar grace He had accorded to us in Christ. For Peter's brethren it was being born again to the hope of living again in resurrection, the thought of which is repeated in verse 23:

> "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever."

For us all it is the acceptance and merging by us of the written and living Word that our rebirth is accomplished as was also expressed in John i. 14, 15.

The living hope mentioned in verse 4 is now described more particularly:

> "To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time" (i. 4, 5).

We know that during the first century A.D. the Jewish Christians underwent great trials and opposition from many quarters. Peter, true to instructions from Christ offers encouragement and hope to his flock. "Kept" in verse 5 has the sense of security by a garrison. God would be at their back at all times:

> "When they bring you unto the synagogues, and unto magistrates and powers, take ye no thought now or what thing ye shall answer, or what ye shall say: for the Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say" (Luke xii. 11, 12).

Whenever the millennial kingdom would be established they could rely on God to watch over them and establish them in their inheritance on earth. The power and administration of the kingdom is reserved in heaven in the person of the King but His kingdom then will be on earth. It is not to be confused with the Heavenly Jerusalem which is reserved in heaven and will descend on the new earth at the end of the millennium. Peter makes another reference to this inheritance at the end of his letter:

> "An when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away" (I Pet. v. 4).

pp. 176 - 180

Verses 6 and 7 make reference to the trials and sufferings that beset his flock with a view to strengthening them to endure. A brief consideration of such suffering and why it was necessary might be helpful for there are many references to suffering preceding glory. The word 'suffer' from its parts means to bear under or endure under some adversity. When we view the Bible as a whole and the basic purpose of so much of its teaching we find that its goal is that ultimately we might find a unity of outlook with God, complete trust in Him, with conviction of His righteousness, that He knows best in everything, and because knowledge of Him has taught us this, we willingly obey Him in everything and willingly give Him all the glory.

The book of Revelation testifies that the overcomers will glorify God in the knowledge of the truth:

> "And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire: and them that had gotten the victory over the beast . . . . . sing . . . . . Great and marvelous are Thy works, Lord God Almighty, just and true are Thy ways Thou King of saints. Who shall not fear Thee O Lord, and glorify Thy name?" (Rev. xv. 2, 3).

With this goal in view God ordained and found it necessary that those who were to obtain in resurrection positions of glory and responsibility in His eternal purpose, He permitted such to be exposed to trials and testing of their own flesh, the opposition of rebellious men and the attacks of Satan and his agents. God elected or chose such men because with His supernatural foreknowledge He knew they would make the required response being tempered and prepared by their sufferings to be overcomers.

That man might be assured that this path to glory was the will of God He ordained that His Son should be the first to tread that way:

> "Who (Christ) in the days of His flesh, when He had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto Him that was able to save Him from death, and was heard in that He feared; though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things He suffered. And being made perfect (having been brought to the consummate goal of His earthly life), He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him" (Heb. v. 7-9).
> "For it became Him, for Whom are all things, and by Whom are all things, in bringing many sons to glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through suffering" (Heb. ii. 10).

We have given a paraphrase of 'being made perfect'. Perfect is an easy word to misunderstand. Its parts mean "thoroughly to do". Complete for the purpose might be a good alternative. All the adjectives in the contexts concerned, have to do with the mind. Consider the saying of Christ:

> "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" (Matt. v. 48).

We should have the same attitude to the world as God, a loving concern for others for their true good in harmony with the will of God.

All this may seem a long digression from verses 6 and 7 but many may still be where Peter was before he was converted, who, when our Lord foretold His sufferings and rejection rebuked his Lord and said "Be it far from Thee Lord, this shall not be unto Thee" (Matt. xvi. 22). What has been written is an attempt to show that God finds a severe training of the mind necessary for a place in His presence. We shall have the cloak of Christ's righteousness but the knowledge of God is also necessary.

We pass on now to verses 8 and 9.

> "Whom having not seen, ye love; in Whom, though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls" (i. 8, 9).

Before we consider their goal and end of their faith "the salvation of your soul" let us look at the remarkable superlative words that Peter uses "ye rejoice with joy unspeakable". Would that our worship and praise of God today could be described in these terms. They were believers mostly in Asia Minor and outside Palestine who had never met Christ. Their great advantage over us was in the first case nearness of time to the actual life and sacrifice of our Saviour but also that they had the gifts of the Holy Spirit to buttress their faith. These included gifts of healing, tongues and most of all knowledge, that is they needed not any to teach them the hidden riches of the O.T. with all its prophecies and law pointing to Christ.

With such an aid to their faith and no hurdle of imperfect translations, it was no wonder they could respond so effectively, and even with the warning by Peter of tribulations and trials to be endured for the gospel, they could still rejoice with ecstatic joy knowing that their God would reward their good response to such testing.

Soul is a word very often misunderstood. The general usage implies the whole of a man including his character and mind. It is the complete me. Our physical body has been described as the tabernacle or covering of the identity of each man. We shall find this phrase waiting for us in II Pet. i. 13, 14:

> "Knowing that I must shortly put off this my tabernacle."

The alternative meanings for soteria (salvation, i. 9) given in a concordance are safety and soundness. They indicate the quality of physical and spiritual life of a believer. The forgiveness of sins and being saved thereby from death is not involved in the word. Paul in Philippians is helpful:

> "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in (energizes) you both to will and to do of His good pleasure" (Phil. ii. 12, 13).

The course of wholesome growth of our soul (the complete 'me') in every respect will be directed and energized by God in Christ. In contrast we could not by works secure the forgiveness of our sins.

As Peter recommends God's gospel of salvation to His brethren he is impelled to glorify its origin and importance both in earth and in heaven:

> "The prophets who prophesied of the grace that was to be yours searched and enquired about this salvation: they enquired what person or time was indicated by the Spirit of Christ within them when predicting the sufferings of Christ (Messiah) and the subsequent glory. It was revealed to them that they were serving not themselves but you, in the things which have now been announced to you by those who preached the good news to you through the gifts of the Holy Spirit sent from heaven, things in which angels long to look" (I Pet. i. 10-12, R.S.V.).

Paul in writing to the Romans also stresses the work of the O.T. prophets:

> ". . . . . the gospel of God, which He promised afore by His prophets in the holy Scriptures" (Rom. i. 2, 3).

Christ also stressed this to His disciples this foundation of the gospel:

> "And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself" (Luke xxiv. 27).

Over and above this evidence of the importance of the O.T. as preparing the world for the Saviour and the One Mediator between it and God, the reference to the actual writers of the prophecies studying what they had written proves they did not write these things out of their own imagination but were directly inspired by God through His Holy Spirit. Peter is going to say as much in his second epistle:

> "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (II Pet. i. 20, 21).

The surprising statement by Peter that the angels desired to "stoop down or peer into" these prophecies is another indication of their origin in God. When one is aware of the grievous attacks on the inerrancy of the O.T. today both in and out of Christendom one can see how God foresaw it would be necessary to give a rational backing to the truth of His Word to those who in faith gave it an honest examination.

> "Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ" (I Pet. i. 13).

Rehearse in your memory, be clear in your understanding of all the things you have learnt in arriving at your faith. Then be watchful (sober), (an insistent and repeated exhortation to those expecting the personal arrival on earth of the Lord Jesus Christ as King), and have an expectation with the conviction of faith (hope) to the end, for the grace you will receive at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

This grace is the first of several references to rewards awaiting those overcomers, 'suffering, then glory' being a recurring theme.

> "As obedient children (children of obedience), not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts (desires) in your ignorance" (i. 14).

Paul at the commencement of his letter to the Romans refers to the same theme, "obedience to the faith among all nations" (Rom. i. 5). The great thought in both ministries is: having been rescued from the power of Satan and this world; and been brought into the Kingdom of God; they should live lives in harmony with, and in obedience to the object of their new faith. For our own calling there is a similar need to let the knowledge we receive by the Holy Spirit find an acknowledgment in our daily living: both actions, thoughts and words.

> "But as He which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation, because it is written. Be ye holy: for I am holy" (i. 15, 16).

Here is another injunction to take on a character that will prepare for unity and harmony with God. In Lev. xi. 44 Israel were told to avoid certain beasts and birds for food so that all Israel would be separate or sanctified from the other nations. Israel were being prepared to be a kingdom of priests to disciple the world and because of this there was to be an element of difference and distinction in that nation. Peter quotes the conclusion of Lev. xi. 4:

> "Be ye holy as I am holy."

The same principle was taught by our Lord to those He was to send into the world:

> "I have given them Thy Word: and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world as I am not of the world, I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them through Thy truth: Thy Word is truth. As Thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. And for their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they also might be sanctified through the Truth" (John xvii. 14-19).

Peter calls to his brethren to let their conversation (an inclusive word for life and habits) be in harmony with their message to the world which was to be obviously distinct and separate from the ways of the world. In the world but not of the world was the key note.

> "And if ye call on the Father, Who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear" (i. 17).

Fear here is indeed the emotion of terror such as the disciples experienced when they thought they saw a spirit. The law is a terror to the criminal not the innocent. Even so for believers in those days with supernatural gifts there was a greater responsibility on them than on us in these days of grace. Ananias and Sapphira perished at the word of Peter for thinking they could deceive the Holy Spirit. "And great fear came upon all the church" (Acts v. 11). Notice in I Pet. i. 17 it is the work of men that will be judged for reward, their salvation is assured. The word sojourning would remind them of their time in the wilderness when God tested them to find out their response to His call.

> "For as much as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot" (i. 18, 19).

The firstborn males of Israel were still typically redeemed when they were 12 years old by the payment of 5 shekels (Christ fulfilled the law in Matt. ii. 42). This redemption looks back to their redemption from the bondage of Egypt by the typical Passover lamb, which was examined for any blemish before being sacrificed on the night of the first Passover. Peter reminds his brethren that Christ the antitype had fulfilled this rite by the outpouring of His precious blood.

Peter emphasizes to his brethren the great cost to the Father and His beloved Son of His plan of salvation. Paul in Hebrews utters a similar warning to those who sinned willfully after receiving knowledge of the truth:

> "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses. Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith He was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?" (Heb. x. 28, 39).

> "Who only was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last days" (I Pet. i. 20).

Here is another reminder that God's blueprint for the salvation and reconciliation of man was amazingly prepared before He had created Adam and his environment! The Son of God appeared on earth in the body that had been prepared for Him for the role of Saviour and Redeemer at the absolute moment in time that God by the O.T. through the prophets had testified.

> "Who by Him do believe in God, that raised Him up from the dead, and gave Him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God" (i. 21).

The resurrection of Christ is the touchstone God has used to prove to man the truth of His Word. God sent His Son. The Son spoke and claimed He spoke the Words of the Father. Christ's fully witnessed resurrection by God must be sufficient endorsement to many by God of the words of His Son. The endorsement by God of His Son's words glorified the Son quite apart from His reassumption of glory at the Father's right hand at ascension. Thus the whole tenor of verse 21 is to remind his brethren that by the witness of Christ's resurrection, their foundation for the hope of eternal life and a robe of righteousness had been extended from Christ Who they had seen, to God the Father Who they had not seen.

> "Seeing you have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit into unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever" (i. 22, 23).

By hearing the word of God preached, Peter's brethren to whom he was writing, had believed the message of salvation and had been born again. John in his first epistles writes:

> "Whoever is born of God doth not commit sin: for His seed remaineth (abideth) in him: and he cannot sin because he is born of God" (I John iii. 9).

Peter is exhorting his followers to let the abiding Spirit of Christ have full rein in their lives, to let no part of the old nature regain a hold which would bring again impurity into their souls. Where the Spirit of Christ rules their lives, their love towards their brethren will be in harmony with the will of God. There will be no element of mixed or selfish intentions in that love, neither will it be lukewarm.

> "For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you" (i. 24, 25).

We have come to the end of the first chapter of Peter's first epistle, not that there was any break here in the original. What a deep and powerful letter it is. When we think Peter after the crucifixion turning back to his old trade saying "I go a fishing" (John.xxi.3), and yet here carrying out the words of his Master "feed My sheep!" Peter was almost following in the steps of the prophet Isaiah who he quotes in verse 24. Isaiah (chapter xl.) writes "Comfort ye comfort My people". Then in verses 3-5 the coming of the glory of the Lord is announced. "The voice said Cry." The words Isaiah was to cry were to the effect that while the days of man passed quickly as the grass of the field the word of the Lord endured for ever. Peter catches up these mighty words of the prophet Isaiah adding for his readers "the fulfillment of them" "And this is the word which the gospel is preached unto you".

No.4. Chapter ii.

> "Wherefore laying aside all malice, and all guile and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speaking, as newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby: if so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious" (I Pet. ii. 1-3).

Peter now emphasizes the need to grow and the kind of food that these new believers required. Peter refers to them as newborn babes having in mind their being born of God. Our Lord stressed the need of a believer coming to the kingdom of heaven having cast aside the accretion and guile of the world and having again the pure innocent mind of a child ready to receive and embrace the attitudes and virtues of the gospel. Peter lists some of the likely evils that they needed to discard: malice (a vicious disposition); guile ("subtle" from a Latin word, sub = under and tela = a web. This is a device much used by Satan and his dupes to trap and deceive. It can assume the form of misuse of the Word to teach error to the ignorant and unwary).

In contrast to the list of evil qualities they were to turn to the basic and foundation truths of the Word of God as a proper response to the gracious Pentecostal gift or gifts they had received as believers, referred to by Peter as a foretaste of greater blessings. Paul in his epistle to the Hebrews also uses the figure of milk (Heb. v. 13) but his exhortation is not to stay on a milk diet but proceed to meat and solids. So many evangelist efforts today provide the milk but either fail to see the need to pass on to meat and solids or more often are not equipped with knowledge of the Word to give out anything deeper.

> "Coming to the Lord, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, yet also as lively (living) stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ" (ii. 4, 5).

Here is envisaged a unity of ministry, with Christ as the foundation, a corner stone to which every part of the house depends for its position and support. Even as this corner stone is precious in the eyes of God the Father so they were precious to the Father (verse.7). It is strange how the ministries of Peter and Paul find close resemblance in their different callings. "In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord" (Eph. ii. 21).

> "Wherefore also it is contained in the Scripture, Behold I lay in Sion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on Him shall not be confounded" (ii. 6).

Where someone proves to us to our dismay that our actions or judgments are wrong we are confounded and ashamed. If all our trust and obedience is in the Son of God and His Word, we are assured we shall never be confounded or ashamed. In contrast to God's support for His believer He has taken a different line with those who rely on their own intelligence and wisdom. God has said through Paul "He will have no flesh to glory in His presence" (I Cor. i. 29). Thus we find:

> "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty . . . . ." (I.Cor.i. 27,28), and in regard to the Jewish leaders who were not of the elect remnant, God blinded their eyes so that being disobedient to the Word, Christ was not seen as the corner stone and to them acted as a stumbling stone (the first stone marking the position and orientation of a building may often for days be left in isolation in the grass over which the unwary may trip) or rock of offence.

> "Unto you therefore which believe He is precious: but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the Word, being disobedient: where unto also they were appointed" (I Pet. ii. 7, 8).

There are one or two points which need to be remembered when thinking about these verses. Some may wonder at the blinding by God of so many of Israel and especially their leaders. Here one must remember the gross wickedness of their forefathers, the obsession of those at that time with the letter rather than the spirit of the law, their own righteousness rather than the righteousness of God. Furthermore Paul disclosed that God desired the Gentiles to have a period of time to respond to the gospel and His grace in their own right independent of Israel (see Rom. xi. 32). Again Peter's readers needed some explanation for the way events were shaping. What is clear to us today may have been found puzzling at that time. Obedience to the Word of God crops up here and in many contexts and we today need continually knowledge and then practical acknowledgment.

> "But ye are a chosen generation (race), a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people: that ye should show forth the praises of Him Who hath called you out of darkness into His marvelous light: which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy" (ii. 9, 10).

The word generation is better translated race, the nation of Israel, Hebrews. This takes the descriptive context back to Jacob and Egypt. They were a holy nation, separated unto God by laws concerning food, behaviour and above all worship of the one God. The word peculiar from Latin means private possession though today the meaning has changed. The old meaning however well describes Israel. God had special regard for Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and He chose Jacob's progeny to bring the praise and knowledge of Himself to the world. Peter rehearses for his brethren their privilege and honour in being called out by God from other nations, and by laws, giving them a distinctive national character all with a view to world service for God.

> "Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul" (ii. 11).

Strangers and pilgrims harks back to their time as strangers in Egypt and pilgrims in the wilderness seeking the promised land. When we are on a journey and the important and urgent thing is to get from A to B we cut the fripperies with which we dally on a pleasure cruise. Fleshly lusts or desires inhibit the free working of the Holy Spirit with us. As Paul wrote "They that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh: but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit" (Rom. viii. 5). Allowing an undue intrusion of questionable reading or viewing will lead to barrenness of prayer and unprofitable Bible study. The two do not mix. So also for other pursuits that give undue attention to the flesh. There is a legitimate area for necessary recreation which can take many forms to keep the mind and body fit. The new life in Christ has by no means a 'kill joy' element, quite the reverse.

The Use and Abuse of Joel's Prophecy.

No.1. Background.

pp. 186 - 191

Introduction.

In these writings we shall assume that the reader has no knowledge of Joel's prophecy and little, if any knowledge of the rest of the O.T. Thus we crave the patience of our more knowledgeable readers but in this day and age, when so few are acquainted with God's Word, this must be the right approach.

One may ask why deal with the prophecy of Joel? Is it a book of such great importance for the new Christian? Are there not other, more important, parts of the Bible that deserve people's time and attention? Answers to these questions may vary but Peter's quotation on the Day of Pentecost (Acts ii. 16-21) from Joel has thrown this prophecy into the limelight. Sadly, however, few know the context of Peter's quotation and this writing is an endeavour to look at Joel's prophecy as a whole and in its O.T. setting. When we have done that then we will look at Peter's usage of the prophecy.

Towards the end of the O.T. is a group of relatively small books called the Minor Prophets. These start with Hosea and then comes Joel, Amos, Obadiah . . . . . and so on till we get to the last book of the O.T., Malachi. In all, there are twelve Minor Prophets and they make interesting reading. Now -- before studying Joel we will need to read it and this will not take long. There are only 73 verses and these are split into three chapters and to read the whole book takes less than ten minutes.

Most of the book of Joel is written in Hebrew poetry and if you have read the King James Authorized Version (A.V.) or the Revised Version (R.V.) or J. N. Darby's translation (J.N.D.) this will have escaped you for these do not attempt to put the English into any type of poetry or verse form. However The Revised Standard Version (R.S.V.), Moffatt (Mft.), the New English Bible (N.E.B.) & the New International Version (N.I.V.) do their best to translate the Hebrew poetry into some equivalent English form.

It is probably a good idea to read Joel's prophecy in two different translations and the A.V. & the N.I.V. go well together. When you first read this prophecy the meaning of some of the verses will be obvious—others will be perplexing! In certain cases it is clear that the words should be taken literally and in others figuratively but in some cases . . . . . it is hard to tell. However before studying any book of the Bible it is a good idea to read it through—if possible two or three times. Thus before proceeding please read Joel's prophecy through two or three times. This will take about twenty minutes.

Who was Joel?

Before starting on a detailed study of the book it may be useful to know something about the person God inspired to write it. Also it may be useful to know where he wrote it, when he wrote it and what was the situation (political, economic, sociological as well as religious) at the time he wrote. Also it may help to know why God inspired the book to be written. If any of these (Who? When? Where? What? Why?) are important and if any are essential to our understanding of the book then the relevant details will be abundantly clear, but if any are of no importance then the details of such will be lacking.

So! Who was Joel? Well -- nothing is known of him other than what is contained in this prophecy. Some think he might have been a priest but in Joel i. 13 the expression "ye priests" implies he is not one of them. Thus all we know is that he is the son of Pethuel, Joel i. 1, and we know nothing more about this Pethuel. In fact Pethuel is a very unusual name and this name occurs nowhere else in the Bible. The Greek translation of the O.T., the Septuagint, puts the name as Bethuel.

Joel was relatively a common name, there are twelve different Joels in the O.T., and "son of Pethuel" is added to the name so as to distinguish this Joel from any other. Thus the people of his day would know which Joel it was who had given out this "word of the Lord" but it is not important for us to know this. For us to understand what is written we need know nothing about the inspired writer but we have been given his name.

The name Joel is an interesting name and like most Hebrew names it has a meaning. We shall see that it is a most apt name for the prophet.

To try and describe fully the great God Who surpasses our comprehension is impossible but in an attempt to let us have a glimpse of His magnificence He uses different names, titles and descriptions of Himself. Two of the most common in the O.T. are Elohim and Jehovah.

Elohim is the word used for God with respect to creation and Jehovah is the word used for God with respect to the covenants He made with His people. Elohim is the great, all powerful Creator in covenant relation with mankind, His creatures. Now El, the almighty God, is a contraction of Elohim, and Jah is a contraction of Jehovah and is used to depict Jehovah with respect to the special covenant of salvation.

Thus the name Joel is a mixture of these two names of God and means "Jehovah is God". Another interesting name is Elijah which has these two names in reverse order and means "My God is Jehovah". Two most appropriate names for two of God's prophets.

When was the Prophecy of Joel written?

Of the twelve Minor Prophets six are dated and six are not dated. Joel's prophecy is undated but a clue to the date can be obtained by "internal evidence", that is noting what is contained in the book and comparing it with what is written elsewhere in the O.T. However this can never be accurate and different opinions are possible.

Joel's prophecy may be undated because when the prophecy was written and the situation at that time might not have been important. It may be undated because the burden of the book is in the future, the time of the end, "the Day of the Lord". Thus the prophecy took the people of Joel's day out of their present time and situation and focused their mind on future events.

We could go into a lot of detail dealing with the different interpretations of the internal evidence for the dating of the book but this does not seem profitable at this point. It is perhaps worth noting that there are three main ideas:

(1) Some think it was written very early either:
  (a) in the days of Athaliah's usurpation (B.C.787-782), or
  (b) in the days of King Jehoash (B.C.781-744), or
  (c) in the days of King Uzziah (B.C.701-649).
(2) Some think it was written in the last days of the kingdom of Judah, just before the Temple was destroyed and the nation taken to Babylon (B.C.488-477).
(3) Some think it was written in the days after the nation returned to the land following the Babylonian captivity (B.C.444-345, probably B.C.400).

If the dating was important it would have been recorded for us (see Hosea i. 1 and Amos i. 1) but as it was not we will say no more at this point. The above just demonstrates that when there is not clear guidance from God men soon disagree!

With respect to the above dates we have followed the chronology given by Dr. E. W. Bullinger in The Companion Bible. The dating of the kings and the prophets is not easy and scholars do disagree but this is not the subject before us now and the dating in The Companion Bible is more than sufficient for our study of Joel.

Where was Joel?

The nation of the Jews were united under their first three kings for most of the 120 years. Saul, David and Solomon each reigned for 40 years but at Solomon's death the nation split into two. The northern kingdom of ten tribes was called Israel and its capital was Samaria. The southern kingdom of two tribes was called Judah and Jerusalem was its capital. From chapter iii. and verses 1, 6, 8, 18, 19, 20 we are left in no doubt that Joel was concerned with Judah and, from ii. 32 and iii. 1, 6, 16, 17, 20, Jerusalem. In chapter i. 9 and 13, and in chapter ii. 17 the priesthood is indicated and in i. 9, 13 and ii. 4 the offerings are mentioned. Thus Joel seems to be right in the centre of things dealing with events at the Temple of Jerusalem, the capital of Judah.

Although Israel was originally the name of the northern kingdom only, the term came to be used of both parts. Similarly, the expression "the people of Israel" could refer to either those of the northern kingdom or both kingdoms. The context would decide the precise meaning and Joel iii. 2, 16 uses the expression the "people of Israel" to refer to both.

What was the situation?

Being unable to give an exact date of writing means we are unable to give, with certainty, the exact situation but we will at this state narrow the dating down.

We feel that the early datings are unlikely to be correct as neither Israel nor Judah were in captivity or under the threat of captivity. If they had been then Joel iii. 1 would be inappropriate. If Joel completed his prophecy in those early days "there is no historical background for Joel's burning words concerning Judah and the great 'Day of the Lord'." (The Companion Bible, p.1224).

Two possible datings are now left—either just before Judah was taken into captivity by Nebuchadnezzar or after their return from that captivity. Bearing in mind the great plea to "repent" the former of these seems the most probable. Thus the occasion of Joel's prophecy was an exceptionally severe plague of locusts possibly preceded by a drought and followed by a bush fire in the days just prior to Judah being taken into captivity. The case for this view will be strengthened when we look at the book in detail but whatever different views we may hold we will all agree that this prophecy was given to the people of Judah when they were low; drought, locusts and fire had destroyed their crops and the thought of captivity, either pending or just finished, was in their mind.

Why was it written?

The prophet Hosea was sent to the guilty Israel, the northern kingdom. The prophet Joel was sent to Judah, the guilty southern kingdom and his words relate to the end of the kingdom of Judah and impending captivity. It contains several calls for the nation to change their ways (i. 13, 14 & ii. 12) and exhorts them to turn to the Lord. If they would do this then God would not only be merciful (ii. 12-14) but He would also bestow upon them gifts and give signs (ii. 18-32). He would also judge the nations (iii. 12). Thus Joel's prophecy was given to encourage Judah to repent of their wicked ways.

If we are correct in placing this book in the years just prior to the Babylonian captivity (B.C.488-487) then the books of the Kings and Chronicles will be a help. These are the 'history' books of the O.T. and II Kings xxiv. & xxv. and II Chron. xxxvi. cover the closing years of the nation of Judah and if you read these three chapters you will see that the kingdom of Judah was displeasing the Lord and the kings of Judah did "that which was evil". No doubt many were caught up in this evil and so Joel was sent to call them to repent and to change their ways saying that, if they would do so and turn to the Lord, He would be merciful and bestow great blessings upon them. This is the burden of Joel's prophecy. Did the people respond? Sadly history tells us that they did not and judgment resulted in a period of captivity in Babylon. Why didn't the people respond? Didn't Joel put the case thoroughly enough? Was not his message clear enough? Well, we will find out the answers to these later but before proceeding, read Joel again and the following outline of Joel's Prophecy may be of help.

i. 1	"The Word of the Lord"
i. 2, 3	Call to hear
i. 4-13	Judgments	inflicted on Judah
	i. 4-7	New wine cut off

On page 1224 of The Companion Bible Dr. E. W. Bullinger gives his structure for this book:

i. 1. The Title.
A | i. 2, 3. Call to hear.
B | i. 4-13. Judgments. Inflicted.
A | i. 14 - ii. 17. Call to repent.
B | ii. 18 - iii. 21. Judgments. Removed.

On page 262 of volume XXV of The Berean Expositor Mr. C. H. Welch suggests that the following may of help to the reader:

A | a | i. 1-7. New wine cut off.
b | i. 8-13. Israel's harvest spoiled.
B | i. 14 - ii. 14. Israel a desolation.
C | ii. 15-20. The gathering of Israel.
D | ii. 21 - iii. 1. I will restore.
C | iii. 2. The gathering of nations.
D | iii. 2-8. I will plead.
A | b | iii. 9-17. Gentiles harvest.
a | iii. 18. New wine restored.
B | iii. 19-21. Egypt and Edom a desolation.

The chapter divisions in our Bibles, and indeed the verses were put in by man and they do make study and reference much, much easier. However there were no such divisions in the original inspired writings and there are places where the break is inappropriate and spoils the flow of the message. In order to compare similar sentiments and to contrast differing ones the use of structures is a great aid—breaking down and cutting across the rigidity of chapters and verses. Different writers often present different structures and we will produce a detailed one at the end of our study of Joel but in the meantime the reader may care to note for himself passages which repeat and emphasize similar thoughts and ideas and those which directly contrast with one another.

Whichever of the above two structures we choose to follow we see that there is a change at the end of verse 13. Thus in this study it would seem to be appropriate to consider the first thirteen verses of the opening chapter of Joel's prophecy.

Joel i. 1. The Title. The Word of the Lord.

"The Word of the Lord (Jehovah) that came to Joel the son of Pethuel."

This opening verse show that what Joel is about to say is not his word but the Lord's. Joel can be described as one of those holy men of God who "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (II Pet. i. 21). This then fixes our attitude. What we have before us is a message from the Lord and so we must treat it as such. Being respectful and studious—and exercising humility over those parts which we cannot understand will be far more profitable than dismissing such as 'impossible' or 'fantastic' or . . . . .

The Hebrew for 'word' in Joel i. 1 is dabar and does not necessarily mean a spoken word. It can mean 'matter' or 'subject' in a more general sense. Thus although nearly all translations open with the expression "The word of the Lord' Moffatt has "The message of the Eternal" (Moffatt always has Eternal to translate Jehovah). Here Joel is stressing that the source of his message, his revelation is not himself but the Lord and this is reinforced in Joel ii. 12 with "saith the Lord" (A.V.); "declares the Lord" (N.I. V.).

"The word of the Lord" is also the opening of other prophecies. See, for example, the first verses of Hosea, Micah and Zephaniah. Their message, too, was also a message from the Lord and expressions like "thus saith the Lord" must occur well over four hundred times throughout the O.T. clearly indicating and emphasizing, time and time again, that what is contained therein is "The word of the Lord", "The message of the Eternal".

Joel i. 2, 3. The Call to Hear.

Joel, having received a revelation from the Lord, promptly tells others about it but he does not stop there. He encourages and exhorts them not only to tell their children the message but also wants them to ensure that their children will tell their children and that they will, in their turn, tell their children. Thus the importance of the message is emphasized by telling the old to ensure that, as well as their children and grandchildren knowing it, their great grandchildren should hear it also.

With an appeal to the old men and the past, "Has such a thing happened in your days, or in the days of your father?" (R.S.V.). Joel now emphasizes the seriousness of the events. This swarm of locusts, and its effect, may have brought into the minds of the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem the words of Exod. x. 3-15 when the land of Egypt had been infested by such a plague because Pharaoh would not allow Moses and the people to worship the Lord. Then Pharaoh was sinning against the Lord, disobeying His commands and so . . . . . judgment. Was this plague, the one which preceded this message of Joel, the result of the people of Judah sinning against and disobeying the Lord? Certainly if it is written in the days just prior to the Babylonian exile various verses in II Kings xxiv. & xxv. and II Chron. xxxvi. record that the kings "did evil in the sight of the Lord".

The word for old men (verse 2) is zaqen which is translated elders in i. 14 and ii. 16. Apparently either is a possible translation but here, in verses 2 and 3, Joel is encouraging the people to look as far into the future as they can and as far back into the past as is possible. Thus "old men", rather than "elders", seems more appropriate. Mind you! the majority of the "elders" would be "old men" so perhaps we are splitting hairs!!!

Joel i. 4 - 13. Judgments. Inflicted.

Joel i. 4.

Earlier we mentioned that nearly all of this prophecy is in Hebrew poetry so Joel, having made the claim that his message is from the Lord and having exhorted his people to listen, now launches into that message and he opens with a very short but very sharp punch which would certainly make his listeners sit up. The English of Joel i. 4 in the A.V. is very graphic but in the Hebrew there are but twelve words and Dr. Bullinger suggests the following translation of this opening of Joel's message:

> "Gnawer's remnant, Swarmer eats:
> Swarmer's remnant, Devourer eats:
> Devourer's remnant, Consumer eats."

Such a terrible overwhelming destruction would certainly gain the attention of any listener and reader but how difficult it is to translate such expressions into easily understood English. The A.V. has:

> "That which the palmerworm hath left > hath the locust eaten:
> and that which the locust hast left > hath the cankerworm eaten:
> and that which the cankerworm has left > hath the caterpillar eaten."

As there are over 90 types of locust and as there are ten different Hebrew words used for locust the exact interpretation of this verse is difficult. The Companion Bible points out that palmerworm is gazam, the gnawer and is the first of four different stages of the locust. In England we might describe this as the hairy caterpillar. Next, Joel i. 4, is locust = 'arbeth; the swarmer. This is the imago or adult stage. Cankerworm is yehek, the devourer, and caterpillar is hasil, the consumer and possibly the larva stage.

J. N. Darby has the same translation as the A.V. but adds notes: "probably different species of locusts or different stages in growth, as 'grub', 'creeper', 'feeder'." He goes on to suggest that the cankerworm, literally "the feeder", may be a species of locust in the stage just before it arrives in the perfect, imago state and in which it devours much vegetation.

Thankfully not living in a land affected by these creatures one is at a loss to unravel the details of this verse but so too, or so it appears, are the translators of the N.I.V.:

> the great locusts have eaten:
> What the great locusts have left > the young locusts have eaten:
> What the young locusts have left > other locusts have eaten."

The translators, however, add a note saying "the precise meaning of the four Hebrew words used here for locusts is uncertain", but what is certain is that everything has been eaten! There is nothing left! That is Joel's point and although we might have problems fully appreciating the finer details of this verse we can most surely "get the message". In poetic style Joel brings home the fact that the plague of locusts has destroyed everything!

"What the cutting locust left, the swarming locust has eaten. What the swarming locust left, the hopping locust has eaten. What the hopping locust left, the destroying locust has eaten" (R.S.V.).	"What the lopping locust left, the swarming locust ate. What the swarming locust left, the leaping locust ate. and what the leaping locust left, the devouring locust ate." (Moffatt).

We have spent some time on this verse because Joel reveals the main purpose of his prophecy through a double reference to locusts. The first, in Joel i. 4, would cause further depression to his already dejected listeners who already knew the consequences of the plague and would not welcome being reminded. His next reference, however, should gladden their hearts and lift the clouds of despondency:

> "And I will restore to you the years that the locust have eaten, the cankerworm, and the caterpillar, and the palmerworm, My great army which I sent among you" (Joel ii. 25, A.V.)

Thus the theme of Joel, as it is in all the other prophets, is the restoration of the peoples of Israel and Judah into one kingdom under the Kingship of the Lord.

Joel i. 5 - 13.

Having dealt with the cause of the destruction in verse 4, Joel now proceeds to describe that destruction, picking out several particular items. The structure of this section enables us to high-light these.

i. 5a. PEOPLE. Call to awake and howl.
i. 5b-7. REASON. Vine laid waste. Fig made bare.
i. 8. LAND. Call to lament.
i. 9, 10. REASON. Offerings are cut off.
i. 11a. PEOPLE. Call to be ashamed and howl.
i. 11b, 12. REASON. Harvest perished. Trees withered.
i. 13a. LAND. Call to lament.
i. 13b. REASON. Offerings withheld.

Joel i. 5. The drunkards are told to awake and "all ye drinkers of wine" are told to howl. In those days "all ye drinkers of wine" would include nearly everyone—the only general exception being those who chose to be Nazarites (Numb. vi. 2-21). Apart from fresh milk there was little else to drink. The water could not always be relied upon to be free of infection and it could not be stored for long. The fermentation process necessary for the production of wine does allow the product to be stored for quite some time afterwards. The apparent conflict between "new wine" (A.V.) and "sweet wine" (R.S.V.) is only apparent. New wine would always be sweet for the longer the fermentation lasts, the less sweet the wine and the greater its alcoholic content. Thus sweet, low alcoholic wines would be popular and one can be sure that Joel is addressing practically the whole of the population. Also, sadly, some who took the Nazarite vow, which involved abstention from wine, did not keep it, Amos ii. 11, 12. So we can safely say that this somewhat derisory description.

> "Wake up you tipplers and weep, > wail, every swiller of wine" (Moffatt), is embracing the whole of Judah and is apt for a people exhorted to repent of their wrong and turn again to God. These people are told to awake and howl because of "the new wine: for it is cut off from your mouth". This would indicate that the plague had arrived just before the grape harvest! What a bitter blow! Just when they were thinking of picking the grapes . . . . . destruction!

Joel i. 6. Next the people are told to awake and howl because a nation has come upon God's land—note the "My land". The word for nation is goy and here it seems that the locusts are called a nation just as ants are called a "people" in Prov. xxx. 25. However some assert that this word goy, which is translated nation or Gentiles, cannot refer to locusts and thus interpret the four descriptions of Joel i. 4 as the four Gentile superpowers which were to rule over this land until our Lord Jesus Christ's time on earth, and beyond. That Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream (Dan. ii. 27-45) refers to these nations of Babylon, Persia, Greece and Rome is agreed but to read these nations into Joel i. 4 is perhaps forcing a prophetic and allegorical interpretation onto a past and literal event. Certainly this opening chapter is a very "agricultural" section and the natural interpretation of both verses 4 and 6 allows them to stay in their obvious context of events of that day.

Again some may say that the description given in this verse is not fitting for locusts but "teeth of a lion" and "fangs of a lioness" (N.I.V.) are most appropriate for creatures that are so destructive. R. A. Cole mentions that an Arab saying credits the locust with the "chest of a lion" maybe because of its appearance but possibly because of its destructiveness. Thus although Joel is a prophecy which undoubtedly deals with apocalyptic and allegorical symbols in its later passages, we are perhaps wiser in not reading such into the opening verses.

Joel i. 7. Verses 6 and 7 are vivid, poetic descriptions of the ravagings of a swarm of locusts. Thus there is much reason for the people to howl. When the creatures have eaten all the leaves then they attack the bark. Everything that the people of Judah relied upon for sustenance . . . . . gone! The vine was laid waste and stripped of its bark. The fig tree likewise. The corn or grain was destroyed and the olive tree mutilated and unable to produce its oil (verse 10). Throughout the whole of this section again note the Lord referring to My land, My vine, My fig tree. He is the Creator of all things (John i. 3) and as such all belong to Him.

Joel i. 8. In the third line of the structure for Joel i. 5-13 there is the call for the land to lament. This, according to The Companion Bible, is because the word for lament in verse 8 is feminine and agrees with and qualifies the word for land in verse 6 and how that land is to lament! Think of the havoc these creatures have rent on it! It is terrible and certainly it would be hard for Joel to find a stronger figure to describe this lamentation than the one he has used. "A virgin girded with sackcloth" is perhaps the supreme symbol of grief depicting, as it does, a girl whose fiancé has been killed just before their wedding. In Joel's day, in the land of Judah, an engagement was as binding as a wedding and this was still the case during N.T. times as we see from Joseph's predicament over Mary (Matt. i. 18, 19). Thus for a young girl to lose her fiancé . . . . . well, I am sure we can all appreciate the situation. It was to guard against such terrible grief as this the Lord, through Moses and the law, did not allow engaged men to serve in the military (see Deut. xx. 7 and xxiv. 5).

Joel i. 9. The land is called to lament because it has been unable to yield the "meat offering" and the "drink offering". The "meat" offering is better called the meal offering or gift offering for it does not require blood, that is the killing of an animal. Animal sacrifices were to secure admittance into God's presence but the meal offering was a gift to secure favour. It is fully described in Lev. ii. which mentions fine flour and oil as the main ingredients but green ears of corn can be used. Bearing in mind Joel i. 10 we see that such offerings were now impossible.

The drink offering is mentioned in conjunction with the meal offering in Lev.xxiii.13 and in Exod. xxix. 40 it is linked with the sacrifice of the lamb. Numb. xv. 3-10 connects it with several different offerings. Thus it was quite important. In Hebrew the drink offering is neseh which is derived from nasah which means to pour out and this, literally, was what was done with the drink offering. It was poured out onto the ground (Gen. xxxv. 14). Again, bearing in mind that this drink offering was either wine or a mixture of wine & oil and bearing in mind that both of these ingredients had been destroyed by the locusts (Joel i. 7), we see that it was impossible for these people to offer these sacrifices. At such times of drought and plague the people could easily have offered the animal sacrifices. At such times when there was no vegetation to feed the flocks they would probably have gladly offered them, but often the animal sacrifices needed to be accompanied by the meal and drink offerings and that was now impossible (Exod. xxix. 40, 41).

The priests, the Lord's ministers, are told to mourn and when one appreciates fully their connection with the offerings then the absence of such would cause them great concern. Those who claim that the expression "The Lord's ministers" indicates that Joel was written after the Babylonian exile because it is a "late" expression, fail to note that similar expressions occur elsewhere in the books known to have been written before that exile (Jer. xxxiii. 21). Also the sentiments of ministering go back much earlier and are found in such passages as Exod. xxx. 20 and Numb. iii. 6.

Joel i. 10. The priests are told to mourn and the land lament because of the absence of the offerings. The land was unable to provide the oil and flour and corn but its predicament was worse than that. "The field is wasted, the land mourneth: for the corn is wasted: the new wine is dried up, the oil languisheth" (A.V.).

The word land in verse 10 is adamah and is elsewhere translated soil or ground. It is not the word used in verses 2, 6 and 14 which is eretz and which means land or country. Thus the N.I.V.'s translation of this verse is more enlightening:

> "The fields are ruined, the ground is dried up;
> the grain is destroyed,
> the new wine is dried up, > the oil fails."

Such is the lament of the land!

Joel i. 11. Now certain of the people are called to be ashamed and to howl and, bearing in mind an agricultural community, those described in this verse would be most of the population.

"Be ye ashamed, O ye husbandmen" (A.V.) is not the clearest rendering.

> "Despair you farmers—wail, you vine growers" (N.I.V.).
> "The farmer is downcast—the vinedressers wails" (Moffatt), are perhaps better. Certainly the farmers have much to despair about, the vine growers much to wail about. The rest of verse 11 and verse 12 give the sad story.

Joel i. 12. Verses 10 to 12 are indeed serious and to ensure that the listener's and reader's attention is fully grasped they are full of assonance, that is the words used have a similar sound or they may rhyme. In this passage there is the repetition of words similar in sound but different in meaning. This can be termed paronomasia! Thus the opening words of verse 10 are, in English, "The field is wasted". In Hebrew field is sadeh and wasted is shadad. Thus our readers may get the picture and will, at the same time, appreciate the impossibility of translating such a passage and keeping that figure of speech. However the following two translations of Joel i. 10-12 make moving reading:

"The fields are ruined, the ground dried up: the grain is destroyed the new wine is dried up, the oil fails. Despair, you farmers, wail, you vine growers; grieve for the wheat and the barley, because the harvest of the field is destroyed. The vine is dried up and the fig tree withered; the pomegranate, the palm and the apple tree-- all the trees of the field-- are dried up. Surely the joy of the people is withered away" (N.I.V.)	"The fields are blasted, the land woe begone, for the corn is wasted, the wine crop fails, the fresh oil dries up. The farmer is downcast, the vine-dresser wails, for the wheat and the barley, the harvest of the field is ruined, the vines are languishing, the fig trees wither, pomegranate, palm and apple, every tree of the field is a-drooping, and joy fades from men" (Moffatt.)

In these verses we see why the offering cannot be brought to the priests and the conclusion of verse 12 is indeed touching—"joy fades from men".

Joel i. 13. It is now the priest's turn and they are called to lament. These ministers of the altar (Exod. xxx. 20) are called to howl. These ministers of God are called to lie in sackcloth all night, maybe to exemplify David in II Sam. xii. 16, but sackcloth was a standard symbol of mourning (Joel i. 8). Here the priests are told to lament and howl because they can no longer perform their duties. They can no longer serve the Lord in the way He had instructed. They cannot accept the people's offerings to God because there is nothing to offer. The land gives to the people the offerings and the priests accept from the people the offerings. Thus, in the structure, the land's call to lament and the priest's call to lament are paralleled. They are interlinked. Both priests and land lament because there are no offerings.

With this sorry state of affairs we finish this section. It has been a long one and a somewhat depressing one but throughout it all one can sense that the Lord is in control. Its His land that is called to lament. It is His vine which is laid waste, His fig tree laid bare and the offerings which He instituted have been cut off but,

> "who knoweth if He will return and repent and leave a blessing behind Him, even a meat (meal) offering and a drink offering unto the Lord your God" (Joel ii. 14, A.V.).

In our next study we shall consider the next section which starts with the call for Judah to repent.

Reflections on ISAIAH.

No.8. (xlix. 13 - lii. 12).
The call to hearken and to awake leading to Israel's restoration (li. & lii.).
pp. 6 - 11

We have seen in Isa. l. that the Messiah is spoken of as having the awakened ear, and now we are to consider an extension of this essential feature of true discipleship as it is applied to Israel. Chapters li. and lii. are occupied with this theme, as may be seen at a glance:

li. 1. Hearken unto Me	li. 9. Awake, awake
li. 4. Hearken unto Me	li. 17. Awake, awake
li. 7. Hearken unto Me	lii. 1. Awake, awake;

but it will take more than a glance to acquaint ourselves with the argument that develops. Let us endeavour to follow these great exhortations. The first call to hearken is addressed to "Ye that follow after righteousness" (Isa. li. 1). While the last is addressed to "Ye that know righteousness" (Isa. li. 7). In the first passage, the people are 'followers' and 'seekers' and they are directed to the great covenant basis of all their hopes:

> "Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn . . . . . look unto Abraham your father . . . . . I called him alone" (Isa. li. 1, 2).

The word translated 'alone' echad signifies 'oneness' or 'unity'. There was a 'oneness' about Abraham that was sadly lacking in his descendants, but which must be emulated as they 'hearken' as Abraham did and 'believed in the Lord' and so was counted 'righteous'.

Israel's restoration hinges upon this:

> "For the Lord shall comfort Zion . . . He will make her wilderness like Eden" (Isa. li. 3).

The second call to 'hearken' is addressed by the Lord to "My people" and "My nation"; and there He declares "My righteousness is near; My salvation is gone forth", and in contrast with the very heaven that shall 'vanish away like smoke' and the earth itself that shall 'wax old like a garment' this salvation shall be 'for ever', and this righteousness shall 'not be abolished' (Isa. li. 4-6).

Similar teaching is found in the third section (Isa. li. 7, 8) where they that "know righteousness" are called upon to 'fear not the reproach of men' by reason of this same eternal quality of righteousness and salvation.

The intimate association of 'righteousness' with 'salvation' is a blessed anticipation of the full presentation of that doctrine which is the glory of the epistle to the Romans.

We now turn to the threefold call to ‘awake’. The first, Isa. li. 9 is addressed to the Lord, the second and third are addressed to Israel (Isa. li. 17; lii. 1).

The call to Awake (li. 9, li. 17, lii. 1, 2).

A1 | li. 9. Awake, awake. Call to the Lord.
Remembrance of “ancient days”.
A2 | li. 17. Awake, awake. Call to the people.
(different form of the word than that used in li. 9 and lii. 1).
Israel’s present position.
A3 | lii. 1. Awake, awake. Call to Israel.
Reference to “henceforth”.

In the first of these calls, there is a very definite reference to the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, and it must be kept in mind by the reader that the whole story of the exodus is to be re-enacted on a grander scale. The plagues that fell upon Pharaoh, his people and his land find their complement in the plagues that are recorded in the book of the Revelation. The two witnesses, Moses and Aaron, are represented at the time of the end (Rev. xi.) and the song of Moses is mingled with the song of the Lamb (Rev. xv. 3).

Consequently, we find Israel fortifying its faith, by saying:

> “Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord; awake as in the ancient days, in the generations of old. Art thou not it that hath cut Rahab, and wounded the dragon? Art thou not it which hath dried the sea, the waters of the great deep; that hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over?” (Isa. li. 9, 10).

Egypt is mentioned by name so many times in the prophecy of Isaiah that the use of “Rahab” and “the dragon” here in the passage before us must have some fuller significance. Rahab is taken, in Psa. lxxxvii. 4 to represent Egypt. The dragon also could well represent Egypt, the word so translated referring in all probability to the crocodile. But he who sees no further than Egypt in this opening call of Isa. li., considers but ‘things that are seen’. The word Rahab occurs in the proverb quoted of the Egyptians in Isa. xxx. 7 “Their strength is to sit still”, “The insolent they sit still”, as it may be rendered and in Job ix. 13 and xxvi. 12 the word signifies the ‘proud’. The opposition of a Pharaoh, a Sennacherib, a Nebuchadnezzar are but recurring symbols of the great antagonist named in the Scripture “That ancient serpent who is called the Devil and Satan”.

The final deliverance of Israel is shadowed forth by the exodus from Egypt in the burden of the prophecy of Isaiah, and fills the Apocalypse with song. This section of Isaiah may be set before the eyes as follows:

Isaiah li. 9 - 16.

A | 9. | a | Awake
b | put on strength
a | Awake
b | as in ancient days
B | 10-16. Ancient days and their prophecy of the future. |
D | 10, 11. | c | "dried the sea?" ref. to Egypt
d | Future restoration
"shall return"
E | 12. I even I am HE
D | 15, 16. | c | "divided the sea"
d | Future restoration
"Thou art My people"

The words of verse 11 are similar to those found in Isa. xxxv. 10 showing most clearly the prophetic intention to link Israel's deliverance from Egypt with their future restoration.

The believer is now directed to consider another reason for confidence in the Lord. Not only is there the blessed history of the exodus, there is behind it all the overwhelming creative record of Genesis:

> "I even I am HE (the pronouns are emphatic here) that comforteth you" (Isa. li. 12), and the corollary is therefore:

(1) Fear not a man that shall die.
(2) Forget not the Lord thy Maker.

Isaiah enlarges upon the mighty power of Israel's Deliverer by drawing attention to the wonder of creation:

> "That hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth" (Isa. li. 13).

We have too much regard for the inspired Scriptures to think that the many references they contain to this wonderful 'stretching forth' of the heavens is merely a piece of oratory, and the following scheme may be useful as a guide to the interested student:

A | Isa. xli. 22. Idolatry.
B | Isa. xlii. 5; xliv. 24; xlv. 12; li. 13. Israel's deliverance.
A | Jer. x. 12. Idolatry (note verse 9 is in Chaldee not Hebrew).
B | Jer. xl. 15. Babylon's overthrow.

The reader will remember that both Isaiah (xxxiv. 11) and Jeremiah (iv. 23) make direct reference to Gen. i. 2 when the earth was "without form and void". The "stretched out heavens" of these same prophecies refer to the 'firmament' of Gen. i. 6, where the margin instructs the reader that the Hebrew word used means 'expansion'. We already have been taken back to primeval rebellion, in the reference to Rahab and the Dragon, and the accumulative testimony of these passages teaches us that behind or beneath all the movement of man both in his fall and restoration, is the greater conflict and ultimate victory of Divine right over Satanic wrong. Neither the fall and redemption of man, the deliverance and restoration of Israel, nor the high glory of the Church are ends in themselves, they are links in a chain, factors in a scheme, means to a greater and more glorious end than has yet been perceived by man.

The same Hebrew word is used in each of the three calls to 'awake' that we are considering, but the form of the verb in Isa. li. 17 differs from that used in the other two passages. The Companion Bible suggests the words 'rouse thee' for this form of the verb. Here Israel is called upon to consider her ways. They had drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of fury, desolation and destruction had come upon them, and their comforters were few. To such the Lord now returns in mercy saying:

> "Behold I have taken out of thine hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of My fury; thou shalt no more drink it again: but I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee" (Isa. li. 22, 23).

To this the prophet Jeremiah referred, when he said:

> "For thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me; Take the wine cup of this fury at My hand, and cause all the nations, to whom I send thee, to drink it . . . . . and the king of Sheshach shall drink after them" (Jer. xxv. 15-26).

This prophecy relates to the period following the end of the seventy years of Israel's desolation (Jer. xxv. 11, 12), after which Babylon was to be punished.

"Sheshach" is a cryptic reference to Babel. "B" is the second letter of the Hebrew alphabet, and "Sh" is the second letter from the end of the same alphabet. The name of this system of cryptic writing is athbash, a name which is made up of the first and last letters "A" and "Th", and the second and last but one letters "B" and "Sh".

In Jer. li. 41 Sheshach and Babylon are named together. There is more in this curious method of naming the enemy than mere human artifice. Just as Rahab and the Dragon represented Egypt, but more than Egypt, just as the references to the exodus refer to a greater than Pharaoh and a greater deliverance, so the fall of the visible Babylon and its king is but a faint picture of the greater fall of Satan and his evil system.

The third call to awake (Isa. lii. 1) is addressed to Zion, delivered, cleansed, clothed and ready for her espousals, and for interest this call is placed in juxtaposition with that of Isa. xlvii. 1.

To Israel the prophet cried:

> "Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city; from henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean. Shake thyself from the dust; arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem: loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion" (Isa. lii. 1, 2).

To Babylon the prophet cried:

> "Come down, and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon, sit on the ground: there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans; for thou shalt no more be called tender and delicate . . . . . thou shalt no more be called, The lady of kingdoms" (Isa. xlvii. 1-5).

No.9. (xlix. 13 - lii. 12).
The "good tidings" of lii. 7 completes the section opened by the "good tidings" of xl. 9.
pp. 26 - 31

On either side of that section of Isaiah which deals with 'waking' and 'hearing' we have a reference to the fact that Israel had been 'sold', thus:

A | Isa. xlix. 13; l. 1. Sing . . . sold
A | Isa. lii. 3-9. Sold . . . sing

Coming to Isa. lii. 3-12 we find it is associated with that which goes before by the recurring word 'comfort':

A1 | li. 9, 10. Awake, awake
B1 | li. 11-16. I, even I, am He that comforteth you.
A2 | li. 17-19-. Awake, awake
B2 | li. -19-23. By whom shall I comfort thee?
A3 | lii. 1, 2. Awake, awake
B3 | lii. 3-12. The Lord hath comforteth His people.

In Isa. l. 1 the Lord asked "which of My creditors is it to whom I have sold you?" as though He had been reduced to selling His children by bankruptcy. This however was not the case. No 'creditor' had paid money at the sale of Israel. "Behold, for your iniquities ye have sold yourselves." This being the case, redeeming love can now interpose:

> "Ye have sold yourselves for nought: and ye shall be redeemed without money"! (lii. 3).

To be sold is to become a captive, a slave, consequently when the Lord said to Israel "Loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion" He referred to this deliverance "without money".

The prophet follows this reference to deliverance from a bondage into which Israel had been as it were 'sold', by speaking of Egypt and the Assyrian:

> "My people went down aforetime into Egypt to sojourn there; and the Assyrian oppressed them without cause" (Isa. lii. 4).

The Companion Bible has a note here which reads:

> The Assyrian. This was "another king" (Acts vii. 18), the first of a new dynasty, the "new king" of Exod. i. 8, who (of course) "knew not Joseph", "oppressed them". This refers to Exod. i., and has nothing to do with the later Assyrian carrying away.

If we were certain of the Pharaoh of the oppression, we could be certain that the above note was correct or incorrect. If we turn however to Appendix No.37 of The Companion Bible, we shall find cause to suspend judgment here:

> "It was intended to include a list of the Pharaohs mentioned in Genesis and Exodus, and an elaborate table had been drawn up. But, as the data are still incomplete, and scholars and explorers are not fully agreed, it is felt to be wisest to postpone a subject which is still a subject of controversy."

Consequently, we too, must be wise and refrain from committing the Bible to an historical inexactitude. The oppressing Pharaoh may have been an Assyrian but again he may not. Isaiah may have referred to the ancient bondage of Egypt, or to the more recent captivity of Israel under the Assyrians, mentioned for example in II Kings xvii. 6. This captivity is dated in the year 611 by The Companion Bible, and the fifty second chapter of Isaiah is dated 603-588 in the same work. This captivity then was of recent date, and the shadow of the Assyrian is thrown across the book as we have already seen. In the light of this fact the balance is in favour of interpreting this passage as of two oppressors—Pharaoh, and the more recent Assyrian.

The Lord looked at His captive people and said:

> "What have I here? saith the Lord, that My people are taken away for nought?" (lii. 5).

One of the saddest results of Israel's affliction and captivity was not the effect it had upon themselves merely, but the way in which the name of the Lord their God was blasphemed:

> "They that rule over them make them to howl, saith the Lord; and My name continually every day is blasphemed" (lii. 5).

This concern for the name of the Lord, is uppermost in the hearts of such men as Daniel as they thought and prayed for their captive brethren, as a reading of Dan. ix. will show.

We must not pass on to other parts of this prophecy however, without a further reference to Isa. lii. 3:

> "For thus saith the Lord, Ye have sold yourselves for nought: and ye shall be redeemed without money."

There is an evident allusion here to the law concerning the redemption of "land" (Lev. xxv. 23-27) or of a "person" (Lev. xxv. 35-42), and the reader is doubtless sufficiently instructed in the law of the Kinsman Redeemer not to necessitate long dissertation here. We refer to the relation of 'money' with 'redemption' for another purpose. Solomon, in Ecclesiastes says "Money answereth all things" (x. 19). Gesenius points out that in this passage we have 'the accusative of the thing' "Money answers with all things". As a participle, the Hebrew translated "answer" denotes "respect, relation, answering or corresponding". While in some ways the introduction of money to take the place of payment in kind or service became a snare to the avaricious and an instrument of oppression to the strong, yet of itself it made life easier and enlarged man's borders considerably. An official disc of metal, or an official piece of paper today "answereth all things". The pound passed over the counter at the railway booking office is in lieu of so much work done, or so much material exchanged. If the subscription to The Berean Expositor had to be paid in kind, then its issue would automatically cease, for such a method would be unworkable.

Now this is an important fact to keep in mind when contemplating the underlying principle of the Atonement.

> "His owner shall be put to death, If there be laid on him a sum of money, then he shall give for the ransom of his life whatsoever is laid upon him" (Exod. xxi. 29, 30).

Here "money answereth" to the penalty of death, revealing the important principle of the Atonement, namely the acceptance of an equivalent. Both the words "a sum of money" and "ransom" are the Hebrew kopher derived from the verb kaphar "to make an atonement". So, in Exod. xxx. we find "atonement" made upon the horns of the altar with the blood of the sin offering (Exod. xxx. 10) and in the same chapter a 'ransom' or 'atonement' effected by the payment of half a shekel (Exod. xxx. 12-16). In Numb. xxxv. 31, 32 the same word kopher is translated 'satisfaction', "Ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer . . . . . he shall be surely put to death". Here the law of Moses allowed no 'equivalent'. The Lord Jesus Christ has offered a "corresponding price" for so the word anti-lutron is rendered by Dr. Young: "He gave Himself a ransom (antilutron) for all" (I Tim. ii. 6). We have, indeed, been 'bought with a price'. Peter, who knew the law of Moses better than many of his critics, had these thoughts in mind when he said:

> "Ye were not redeemed with . . . . . silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ" (I Pet. i. 18, 19).

So, the prophet Isaiah, leading our thoughts onward and upward to the fifty-third chapter, said to Israel: "Ye shall be redeemed without money", for he was to reveal that the Messiah was to make His soul an offering for sin, an offering beyond the estimate of mortal man.

This great redemption was the subject of 'good tidings', then, in the days of Isaiah, as it will be when the deliverance is accomplished in the days to come:

> "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth" (lii. 7).

Here we have the alternation of 'good tidings' with peace and salvation in the first grouping, and the correspondence of this good tidings with the proclamation "Thy God reigneth". Here therefore we have "The gospel of the kingdom" in essence. There can be no question as to the fact that the Hebrew word basar "To announce good tidings" means "to preach the gospel", for it occurs for the last time in Isaiah, in the sixty first chapter:

> "He hath anointed Me to preach good tidings unto the meek . . . . . to proclaim liberty to the captives" (lxi. 1), and is quoted by the Saviour of Himself in His synagogue witness at Nazareth (Luke.iv.18). When it can be said to Israel "Thy God reigneth" then will have come "the acceptable year of the Lord", the "Jubile", and then also will be finished the "mystery of God" as He hath declared to His servants the prophets (Rev. x. 7; xi. 15).

The word translated "to bring good tidings" was we have said is the Hebrew basar, and as this word occurs seven times in this prophecy, we will give the references:

A | xl. 9. "O thou that tellest good tidings to Zion."
"O thou that tellest good tidings to Jerusalem."
"Behold your God."
B | xli. 27. "From the first I have said to Zion."
God infinitely above all gods.
A | lii. 7. "Him that bringeth good tidings."
"That brought good tidings of good."
"Thy God reigneth."
B | lxi. 1. "Anointed . . . to preach good tidings to the meek."
(quotes from A.V., R.V. and others).

This accounts for six of the references. The seventh is the answer to the good tidings brought to Israel, "They shall show forth the praises of the Lord" (Isa. lx. 6). Here is a reminder that preaching is twofold. It brings good tidings of grace to the sinner, but it also announces the good tidings of the glory of the Lord. "The gospel of the glory" (II.Cor.iv.4) is sometimes obscured by the presentation of grace to the sinner. As shown in the reference found in Isaiah this aspect completes the publication of God's good tidings.

The association in Isa. lii. 7 and 8 of messengers on the mountains, and watchmen who lift up their voices is best understood by a people who have suffered the threat of invasion, and whose method of signaling the approach of either the enemy or the deliverer is much the same as that used in this land at the approach of the Spanish Armada.

> "High on St. Michael's Mount it shone: it shone on Beachy Head. Far on the deep, the Spaniard saw, along each southern shire, Cape beyond cape, in endless range, those twinkling points of fire."

The words "They shall see eye to eye" found in Isa. lii. 8 do not carry the meaning of agreement which the figurative use of the phrase has in English.

> "The last verse is a picture of the thronging of the city of the prophets by the prophets again—so close, that they shall look each other in the face . . . . . The exile had scattered the prophets and driven them into hiding. They had been only voices to one another, like Jeremiah and Ezekiel with the desert between the two of them" (Geo. A. Smith).

And so, with a call to the people to come out of their captivity to leave the unclean behind, with the assurance that this great exodus would not be with haste or flight, the great section of Isaiah's prophecy which has been before us comes to an end.

We have already seen that the opening words of comfort and assurance with which Isa. xl. introduces the theme of restoration, are in measure repeated in the closing portion just studied. In Isa. xl. the glorious restoration was not to be accomplished by any power of man who was as 'grass' but by the Word of the Lord that endured for ever. This restoration can have but one unquestioned basis, the Atonement; for Israel, like all men, have sinned and come short of the glory of God. To this, the prophecy of Isaiah has steadily pointed from the opening chapter, and we now arrive at its mightiest exposition. Isa. liii. is worthy of all the sanctified energy of our being in order that its blessed truth may be appraised at its true worth. But who is sufficient for this? Only the grace of God in unstinted measure can equip either writer or reader for the task. Our prayer is that He Who shall see the travail of His soul and be satisfied in the great issues of His mighty work, may in some degree be satisfied with the effort put forth in these pages to understand and appreciate what it means when we read:

> "It pleased the Lord to bruise Him."

Editor: As we indicated in the first of this series of nine studies on Isaiah, these manuscripts of the late Mr. Welch turned up unexpectedly amongst old papers. It would seem that much that Mr. Welch was anticipating at the end of this article has been included in volumes XXXIV and XXXV of The Berean Expositor, but to what extent other material has been lost we cannot say.

Safeguards and Correctives.

No.1. "Endeavouring to keep the Unity of the Spirit" (Eph. iv. 3).

pp. 110 - 115

We have seen that in the epistles to Timothy Paul gives a warning concerning the departure from the faith that will characterize the 'last days'. To leave the matter there would be to present a negative aspect of truth. The same Apostle gives positive teaching which is intended to be a corrective and a safeguard, and these are indicated by a series of injunctions, exhortations and examples which fall into four main groups:

(1) "To keep" (Eph. iv. 3; II Tim. i. 12, 14; iv. 7).
(2) "To hold" (Phil. ii. 16; Col. ii. 19; I Tim. i. 19; iii. 9; vi. 12, 19; II Tim. i. 13; Titus i. 9).
(3) "To stand" (Eph. vi. 11, 13, 14; Phil. i. 27; iv. 1; Col. iv. 12; II Tim. iv. 17).
(4) "To watch" (Col. iv. 2; II Tim. iv. 5).

In the course of our expositions we shall probably come across other injunctions, but for all practical purposes the references listed under these four headings will provide the necessary correctives and safeguards against the infection of apostasy, and against the plague of 'the itching ear'.

It is not without significance that, though these four exhortations and examples range throughout the Prison Epistles, finding illustrations in Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, I Timothy and Titus, a reference is found under each heading from Paul's last epistle. It is important enough to justify a demonstration:

Correctives to apostasy.

"Keep",	Eph. iv. 3	and	II Tim. iv. 7.
"Hold",	Phil. ii. 16	and	II Tim. i. 13.
"Stand",	Eph. vi. 11	and	II Tim. iv. 17.
"Watch",	Col. iv. 2	and	II Tim. iv. 5.

This fact emphasizes the place which the second epistle to Timothy occupies in relation to the departure from the truth that will characterize the last days and impresses every true Berean with the imperative need for its study and assimilation.

Most readers of The Berean Expositor are aware that the pivot of the epistle to the Ephesians is the word 'worthy' of Eph. iv. 1, the first three chapters containing the great doctrinal revelation of the Mystery, the second three containing the corresponding practice that is required. This practice is not limited to the church and its ministry, but to daily life in home and business. It provides complete armour against the evil day, and calls upon the believer to put on the new man, put off the old, and to repudiate the lie.

Yet none of these things occupies the first place. The first exhortation in the practical section after the opening admonition 'to walk worthy', reveals the fact that the believer is first and foremost a custodian, a keeper, before he is a preacher or a teacher.

His first endeavour is directed to the safeguarding of a treasure, to keeping the unity of the Spirit. To neglect this, to put other service in its place, is to surrender the citadel and expose the whole revelation to betrayal. The admonition opens with the word of urgency 'endeavour' spoudazo. The root of this word, speudo, means 'to hasten', but the word must not be interpreted as the English 'haste' often is, namely a 'hasty' action, implying rashness or precipitate unreflection. The only association of spoudazo with 'haste' is its diligence and zeal that cannot tolerate waste of precious time. Spoudazo has no element of 'haste' in it when employed by the Apostle in II Tim. ii. 15, where it is translated 'study'. The R.V. in both Eph. iv. 3 and II Tim. ii. 15 reads "give diligence".

Ephesians iv. 3 opens with an exhortation to diligent endeavour, and endeavour that is intolerant of delay, that will not yield to the claims of other things as of "more practical importance", and endeavour that puts first things first. Every believer is not necessarily a preacher or a teacher, he is however, a keeper. This responsibility can neither be shelved nor transferred. We can no more evade the responsibility of being a keeper, than we can avoid being members of the Body if Eph. i. 4 is true of us. If we are lax here, we give the enemy of truth a foothold.

Enotes 'unity' occurs but twice in the N.T., in Eph. iv. 3 and 13, "The unity of the Spirit" which we are enjoined to keep, and "the unity of the faith" unto which we are to attain. It is possible that the words "the unity of the Spirit" can mean "the unity of which the Spirit is the author", or it can mean "the spiritual unity, which is composed of the seven items that follow". The words "the unity of the faith" however, can hardly mean "the unity of which Faith is the author" but rather that unity which is composed of the items that follow. In both cases the 'unity' is expanded. Thus:

"The unity of the faith"
(1) The acknowledgment of the Son of God
(2) The perfect (mature) man
(3) The measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

"The unity of the Spirit"
(1) One body
(2) One Spirit
(3) One Hope
(4) One Lord
(5) One Faith
(6) One Baptism
(7) One God and Father.

This sevenfold unity constitutes the treasure of which we are the custodians. Some of the items are the cause of much controversy. The distinctive constitution of the church which is His Body is indicated in Eph. iii. 6, sussoma. This word is extremely difficult to translate into English. It is one of three terms, which have been rendered joint-heirs, joint-body and joint-partakers, and the idea seems to be that of a new kind of body, in which every member is on perfect equality with every other member, and one unknown in the physical world. This conception of the church it is our duty and joy to 'keep'. Now as the body without the spirit is dead, being alone, so we need to remember that this joint-Body is no formal lifeless uniformity, but a company actuated by one Spirit (see Phil. i. 27 for its outworking). The hope that we must safeguard is not the hope of Israel (Acts xxviii. 20), nor the hope that is focused upon the reign of the Son of Jesse (Romans xv. 12, 13), nor the hope that is vitally linked with Israel's prince, the Archangel (I Thess. iv.), but the one hope of our calling.

Perhaps the most fruitful source of controversy and one that requires great watchfulness is the "one baptism". Baptism can be considered under seven heads:

(1) The "divers washings" (Heb. ix. 10); and the "doctrine of baptism" (Heb. vi. 2) which the Hebrews were enjoined to leave as they pressed on to that which was 'better' and 'perfect' ('mature').
(2) The ceremonious 'washings' of cups, pots and vessels which the Pharisees substituted for the true worship of God and love of man (Mark vii. 1-13).
(3) The baptism of John, which was in water, unto repentance, and intended to reveal who was the Messiah (Matt. iii. 11; Luke iii. 3; John i. 25, 26).
(4) The baptism with the Holy Ghost and with fire (Matt. iii. 11).
(5) The partial fulfillment of this (Acts i. 5), the "fire" in its full sense reserved unto the Day of the Lord.
(6) The baptism in water which set forth in symbol the believer's union with the Lord in His death, burial and resurrection (I Cor. i. 13).
(7) The baptism of suffering to which the Lord referred in Matt. xx. 22, 23. This baptism was spoken of after the baptism at Jordan, and could not be therefore a baptism of either 'water' or 'Spirit' for that had already been observed. The baptism of Matt. xx. 22, 23 was the reality of which all the earlier baptisms were types and shadows.

There is one further typical baptism which is seldom mentioned but which is of extreme importance here. Long before the 'baptisms' and other carnal ordinances were 'imposed' upon the people until the time of reformation, and which signified that the way into the holiest of all was not then made manifest (Heb. ix. 8-10), there had taken place a baptism which had united the whole of Israel unto Moses as their leader, a baptism where 'water' was excluded by miracle. This took place at the crossing of the Red Sea.

> "Moreover, brethren, I would not that you should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the Sea, and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the Sea" (I Cor. x. 1, 2).

Here is baptism that followed immediately upon the exodus from Egypt; it made the people one, it joined them to Moses, but it was not a carnal ordinance. The people neither did nor observed anything, they just went over dry shod. The church of the One Body has had its exodus (Eph. i. 7) and 'upon believing' it was sealed (Eph. i. 13). Every member of the one Body has been united unto Christ in His death, burial and resurrection by the only effective baptism that Scripture knows. Not typical or ceremonial, but an actual identification. The baptism of Col. ii. 12 can only be literal if the circumcision of verse 11 is literal. The one baptism of Eph. iv. 5 is balanced by the one Spirit of iv. 4. This blessed unity we are to keep. The other members of the sevenfold unity are not so controversial. The One Lord takes His place as the central and unifying member of the seven. On either side is ranged the one hope and the one faith.

This unity of the Spirit is kept in the bond of peace. We observe that the article is used with the word 'peace'. It is not peace in general but some aspect of peace in particular that is before us 'the bond of the peace'. To thus speak raises the question in the mind 'what peace?' The answer is supplied by referring back to the second chapter of Ephesians. We can only truly understand what aspect of peace is in the writer's mind if we know the kind of 'enmity' with which it is contrasted. So, the 'peace' of Rom. v. 1 is associated with justification, and the enmity is indicated in verse 10, and so the nature of the 'peace' of Col. i. 20 is explained by the enmity of verse 21. Now the enmity of Eph. ii. 15, 16 existed between two parties named 'the both' or 'the twain'. It arose out of 'the decrees' (Acts xv. - xvi. 4), or as the same word is translated in Eph. ii. 15, 'ordinances', and was symbolized by the middle wall of partition that kept the Jew and the Gentile apart in the Temple at Jerusalem, and kept believing Jew and Gentile apart during the Acts of the Apostles. That has all gone now. The middle wall of partition has been broken down, and of the twain He has 'created' (ktizo) "one new man, so making peace". It is this peace, connected with this unity that the Apostle has in mind in Ephesians iv. 3.

> "For He is our peace, Who hath made the both one . . . . . that He might reconcile the both unto God in one body . . . . . for through Him, we, the both have access by one Spirit unto the Father" (Eph. ii. 14-18).

It will be seen that this touches the very core of the calling of the church of the Mystery. The differences that were resident in the dispensation of the Acts cannot be brought over into the dispensation of the Mystery. The 'both' and the 'twain' are gone; in their place stands a 'new' thing, newly 'created'. This new man has his own standing, hope, faith and calling. The believer who is a member of this Body is called upon to 'keep' inviolate the peculiar distinctiveness of this calling. He must be prepared to be called hard names, because 'compromise' is not found in his vocabulary. He will be accused of bigotry because he refuses, as a sentinel, to parley. It is surprising what arguments believers will employ which, if applied to a mere monetary trust would be rejected with scorn. The writer of these words holds a sum of money in trust, which can be used for one purpose only, namely the reprinting in book form articles published in The Berean Expositor, which would otherwise be lost when bound volumes go out of print. No one has charged us with bigotry because we have not dipped into this fund to help other worthy causes. No one has pleaded 'christian charity' and hoped to receive help from this fund. The mere suggestion of either parleying or conceding is monstrous and unthinkable. Yet what is the trusteeship of keeping the unity of the Spirit? We can make no concessions, for the truth is not our property; we cannot reduce the terms or alter the constitution, for we have no authority to do so. It is required in stewards, not that they should be generous with other people's money, but that they should be faithful.

It is this spirit that alone can stem the tide that leads to apostasy; any other attitude is of itself an incipient 'departure'.

Quoting from a letter recently received, the writer says it is impossible to introduce the truth of the Mystery without giving offence as it is to preach the cross and avoid its 'offence' and all attempts so to do are foredoomed. The attitude of The Berean Expositor from its first year of publication is that of uncompromising witness to the full truth of the Mystery, and a readiness by grace to take the consequences.

No.2. The Form of Sound Words (II Tim. i. 13).
pp. 131 - 135

Taking the epistle to the Ephesians as the first epistle of this dispensation and the second epistle to Timothy as the last, we find that the opening exhortation is to keep the unity of the spirit, and the closing example is that of the Apostle at the end of his course who could say "I have kept the faith" (II Tim. iv. 7).

We now turn our attention to another Greek word and the exhortation which it is employed to give, namely the word phulasso, translated 'keep' in II Tim. i. 12 and 14. Before examining this passage, we observe that phulasso can be used of keeping sheep, keeping the law, and being kept from falling, but we also note that phulake is translated 'prison' some 36 times, so we are not surprised to see that while phulasso can be used of keeping sheep, or commandments, it is used of 'the strong man armed' who keeps his house, of four quarternions of soldiers who kept ward over Peter; of Paul being kept by a soldier in Acts xxviii. 16; or that the same word that is rendered 'keep' in II Tim. i. 12, 14, is translated 'beware' (II Tim. iv. 15), 'watch' (Mark vi. 48), & 'ward' (Acts xii. 10). Sleepless vigilance is implied in this idea of 'keeping' that we are now about to consider.

Let us turn to the second epistle to Timothy and acquaint ourselves with both the Apostle's example and his exhortation to his son in the faith. The passage, II.Tim.i.12-14 is a complete section, and the following structure reveals its scope:

A | 12. He is able to guard.
B | 12. The deposit.
C | 13. Have a form of sound words.
A | 14. Do thou guard.
B | 14. The good deposit.

We will leave the examination of 'the form of sound words' until later, and concentrate our attention on that which was the object of such watchful care "the deposit". The reader of the Authorized Version will look in vain for the word 'deposit' in either verse 12 or 14, and as this is a matter of great importance we must give it our immediate attention.

Paratheke. This word means something entrusted or deposited with another, generally for safekeeping. The verb form paratithemi is found in II Tim. ii. 2 "The things which thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also". A reference to the R.V. of II Tim. i. 12 will reveal the fact that the translation "I am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him" is not the only possible rendering. The R.V. margin reads "Or that which He hath committed unto me", and adds "Gr. my deposit". There is therefore, no actual word that can be translated either 'unto Him' or 'unto me' in this verse, neither is there a verb that can be translated "He hath committed" or "I have committed". Let us set out a word for word translation of this passage.

Dunatos	estin	ten	paratheken	mou	phulaxai
Able	He is	the	deposit	of me	to guard

Further light can be gathered from verse 14 "That good thing which was committed unto thee keep" Ten kalen paratheken phulaxon. Here again "Thing which was committed unto thee" is the rendering of both the A.V. and the R.V. for the two words "kalen paratheken", "good deposit".

In the light of the second reference where something had been most definitely 'entrusted' to Timothy by the Lord, and which he was enjoined 'to keep or guard', we can return to Paul's initial statement in verse 12.

Arising out of the Gospel of which Paul was the appointed preacher, are his words recorded in verse 12:

> "For the which cause I also suffer these things; nevertheless I am not ashamed: for I know Whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to guard the deposit entrusted, unto that day."

To Paul (II Tim. i. 12) to Timothy (II Tim. i. 14) and to faithful men, able to teach others also has this sacred trust been committed. This entrusted deposit of truth they are to guard, to watch over, to keep. Now this can be done in a variety of ways, but one special safeguard is brought before us in the exhortation that is placed between verses 12 and 14 namely, the advisability to possess a form of sound words, which Timothy had heard from the Apostle.

The word 'form' is singular, the relative pronoun 'which' is plural, therefore Paul in not reminding Timothy that he had received a 'form' from Paul, he had heard "sound words" from him which it would be well to bring together as a unit of reference.

NOTE: At this point in this series of 5 articles, the late Mr. Welch intended to insert a brief account of the 'deposit' or 'form of sound words' that the articles exhort us to hold, keep, stand (fast for), watch (for apostasy), and teach. For some reason Mr. Welch did not do this. The reader is referred to that author's full exposition appearing under the title The Form of Sound Words obtainable from the usual distribution agents. In the meantime the rest of this article gives the gist of what is included in the 'deposit'.

Saul of Tarsus was chosen by the risen Lord Jesus Christ to be the Apostle Paul, instructing and entrusting to him two commissions. During Paul's time of ministry there was to be a change of administration by God. God's purpose to use the Jewish nation to disciple the world was suspended and the gospel was to go out to the Gentiles. The believer in Christ was to be accepted by God without regard to Israel.

> "For as many as have been baptized in Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ" (Gal. iii. 27, 28).

We today can never appreciate the astonishment with which this news was received by the Jews who for centuries had been the dispensers of the oracles of God. In Eph. iv. 12 Paul describes the work of his disciples as being "For the perfecting (or better, the readjusting) of the saints" (which work was to explain and teach the carry over from one divine administration (or dispensation) to another. The calling of the church of the One Body was a further exclusive administration depending on revelation, knowledge and understanding of that calling with the required response in faith and acknowledgment in daily living. The R.V. (Eph. iii. 9) expresses it "to make all men see what is the dispensation of the Mystery which from all ages has been (until then) hid in God".

The fact revealed by Paul in his letters included the being and nature of God; God manifest in the flesh; the full interpretation of Christ's sacrifice on the cross, death, burial, resurrection and ascension; the all-sufficiency of His sacrifice; the full inspiration of the Scriptures; the essential work of the Holy Spirit illuminating the Word to the believer; the right division of the Word; the hope of those believing in the Name of the Son of God and the hope of those elected to the church of the One Body; the hope of the overcomers of Israel.

It is this body of truth revealed to him that Paul was vehemently insistent on being kept and defended, for he knew that his death was imminent and that afterwards his message would be attacked on all sides as indeed it was. Today sees a rescue and revival of these truths amongst, alas, so very few people. To those privileged to hear, receive and understand Paul's ministry there are unimaginable riches in heavenly places awaiting, but which carry with them the responsibility to obey the commands of these basic doctrines, and to spread their good news.

The Scriptures are the only source to give us the knowledge of God and His purposes for us. How important do we think is the acquisition of this knowledge? The woman of Samaria wanted to discuss with our Lord where those in her day should worship God. Christ's reply was:

> "God is Spirit: and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth" (John iv. 24), again He says:

> "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ Whom Thou hast sent" (John xvii. 3).

The knowledge of God through Christ and the Scriptures illuminated by the Holy Spirit embraced by the believer and acknowledged by the believer in his life, establishes the unity with the Godhead which is the whole eternal purpose of God. The worship of God in singing psalms and hymns; making intercessions for and serving others have their place, but only by the knowledge of Him and His righteousness can true unity and power and wisdom to serve be found. It is for this reason Paul's closing letter to Timothy pleaded for the defence and spread of this precious gospel.

No.3. Holding the Truth against all comers.
"To whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour" (Gal. ii. 5).
pp. 150 - 153

The foreshadowed apostasy that we have considered, and which is set out in some measure of detail in I Tim. iv. and II Tim. iii. & iv., is not included in Holy Scripture to cause us to slacken our witness or to conclude that nothing we can do is of any use. That attitude will but hasten the departure. The self-same epistles that foretell the apostasy encourage the believer to stand. "Give attendance to the reading." "Preach the Word." Accordingly we have reviewed the exhortations found in Paul's later epistles "to keep"; "to hold"; "to stand" and "to watch". In our last article we gave our attention to Paul's admonition to Timothy to "Hold fast the form of sound words". In Philippians, Colossians and the Pastoral Epistles there are exhortations that sound like the challenging of error by the Champions of truth, and to these we now give our attention.

"Holding forth the word of life" (Phil. ii. 16).
"Holding fast the Head" (Col. ii. 19 R.V.).
"Holding faith and a good conscience" (I Tim. i. 19).
"Holding the mystery of faith in a pure conscience" (I Tim. iii. 9).
"Holding fast the faithful Word" (Titus i. 9).

Different words are employed in the original to give the idea of "holding forth", "holding fast", etc., which may be examined as the passages come before us. It will be observed that in some cases the exhortation looks to public manifestation of the truth, in others to a private hold upon the truth. In one case it is the Word of Life, in others Life itself. In most cases it is the Word, but in two it is either the Head, Christ Himself, or the mystery of the faith which reveals His present glory. In two instances the holding of the truth is linked with a pure or a good conscience.

"Holding forth the word of life" (Phil. ii. 16).

The Philippians were exhorted to avoid murmurings and disputings, that they might be blameless and harmless, the sons of God without rebuke. No abstention from murmuring or disputing will make a believer a "son of God" but a believer can become a son of God

"without rebuke", even as the Sermon on the Mount exhorts the disciples so to act that they "may be the children" of their Father which is in heaven, and a little earlier in the same chapter, the Lord had said "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matt. v. 16).

The Philippians were to comfort themselves in like manner in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation. The A.V. reads "Among whom ye shine as lights in the world", with a marginal note "Or, shine ye". The R.V. reads "Among whom ye are seen as lights in the world" with the marginal note "Or, luminaries". Phainesthe "ye appear" not "ye shine" (phainete) as the A.V. The same error is made in Matt. xxiv. 27, Rev. xviii. 23.

On the other hand in Matt. ii. 7 Tou phainomenou asteros, is correctly rendered 'appeared' (Bishop Lightfoot). The word translated 'lights' may refer to the heavenly bodies (Gen. i. 14) but the context of Phil. ii. 15 may indicate that the figure "carrying torches to guide passengers along dark and narrow streets in ancient cities" as the figure is used by Aristophanes, may well be the intention of the Apostle. Whether as luminaries in the sky, or humble torches in the streets, the believer should "Hold forth the Word of Life". This is one of the ways in which the departures from the truth can be arrested. To hold forth the Word, however, involves something more than ability to speak, or an understanding of what is truth, it necessitates a very close relationship with the Lord Himself. This the Apostle brings forward in the great passage headed "Beware" in Colossians ii.

It is important to note how a portion of Col. ii. is parallel with I Tim. iv. 1-3. The warning opens with the words "Beware lest any man spoil you", and the corrective against the deception of a vain philosophy is found in the words:

> "After the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ" (Col. ii. 8).

In like manner the second warning "Let no man beguile you" finds its corrective in the words:

> "Worshiping of angels, intruding into those things which he hath not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind, and not holding the Head" (Col. ii. 18, 19).

The apostasy is a departure from "the mystery of godliness", the doctrine of demons is an attack upon Christ as the One Mediator. The great corrective is to hold fast the Head. Where the pre-eminence of Christ is the doctrine of both heart and head, there will be found one whose title might well be borrowed from the O.T. "the repairer of the breach" (Isa. lxviii. 12).

> "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him" (Isa. lix. 19).

What other standard can we lift up against the enemy of truth than the standard of Christ and the Scriptures? ("Hold fast the form of sound words"; "Holding forth the word of life"; "Hold the Head").

The last reference in our list is that of Titus i. 9:

> "Holding fast the faithful word, as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers" (Titus i. 9).

The word translated 'holding fast' is antechomenon, a compound of anti and echo, and is used in the Middle voce of the verb "To hold before one against something, hold on by, cling to" is the explanation given in Dr. Bullinger's Lexicon.

The word is somewhat difficult to translate. It occurs but four times in the N.T. In Matthew vi. 24 and in Luke xvi. 13 it is used of one "holding to" one of two masters. In I Thess. v. 14 it is used 'supporting' the weak. "Holding fast by anything, in opposition to (anti) one who would wrest it away" (Bloomfield).

The Septuagint of Neh. iv. 16 uses antecho in the phrase "half of them kept guard; and there were spears, etc.", with a footnote to 'keep guard' that reads "or, resisted". In Job xxxiii. 24 the word is used in the opening of the verse "Then He is gracious unto him", by reading "He will support him".

The context of Titus i. 9 is intensely practical, the bishop must be blameless, "as the steward of God". The soundness of his doctrine will not convince gainsayers if his life denies the truth he teaches.

The 'faithful word' suggests the 'faithful sayings' of the Pastoral Epistles, and in accordance with them the Apostolic doctrine. This approximates to the holding of the form of sound words, urged upon Timothy.

We should link with this holding of the faithful Word and its contextual link with wholesome practice, the two references given in the list namely I Tim. i. 19 and iii. 9, where "the faith" and "the mystery of the faith" are to be held with a good and pure conscience.

The departure deplored in I Tim. iv. was implemented by those whose 'consciences' were seared. While conscience is no infallible guide to truth, no one can hope to understand error unless the doctrine he holds is held conscientiously.

As we hold the Head, hold the faith, hold fast the faithful Word, and then hold it forth as a torch in the dark, can we hope to be of any influence in leading the Lord's people in the way of truth as the end of the age approaches. Let us not slacken our hold because our efforts may seem to be so small; the flickering light of a candle has often lighted the way from death and wreck to life and light.

No.4. The call to stand, withstand and standfast.
pp. 166 - 169

The corrective against the apostasy of the last days is fourfold; the believer is exhorted to 'keep', 'hold', 'stand' and 'watch'. We have given some consideration to the first two, let us now examine the teaching of the epistles regarding the exhortation and encouragement to 'stand'. The references in Ephesians, Colossians and II Timothy use the word histemi, the references in Philippians the word steko; but the difference between these two words will be examined after we have considered the opening passage Eph. vi. 11, 13, 14.

The injunction 'to stand' in Eph. vi. is introduced by the word 'finally'. Doctrine and corresponding practice have occupied the bulk of the epistle, and now the concluding section is brought into correspondence with the opening section. "Spiritual blessings" find an echo in "spiritual wickednesses". The choice that took place "before the foundation of the World" is set over against the "darkness of this world". "The word of truth" finds a correspondence in "the girdle of truth"; "The gospel of salvation" with "the helmet of salvation", the exceeding greatness of the "power" "working" and "mighty power" which was wrought in Christ, is repeated in the exhortation to be 'strong' in the Lord and in the 'power' of His 'might'. Where our blessings are there will be conflict. Just as Israel were bidden not to meddle with other nations, but to fight with the Canaanites that barred their way to the land of promise, so we wrestle not with flesh and blood, our foes are 'spiritual' and are "the world rulers of darkness", spiritual Canaanites. Against these spiritual enemies the church of the Mystery is exhorted to stand.

It is of supreme importance that we should heed the accompanying commands. The exhortation is not simply to stand, it is accompanied by other equally important injunctions.

Put on the whole armour of God
That ye may be able to stand against (pros).
Take unto you the whole armour of God
That ye may be able to withstand (anti) Having done all
To stand.

Then follows the repeated exhortation to stand together with a detailed description of the whole armour of God. This armour is sixfold, and is rendered effective by prayer. This we can see if set out as follows:

A | The GIRDLE. Truth or faithfulness. \
B | The BREASTPLATE. Righteousness. \ Praying
C | The SHOES. Firm footing of peace. \ with
A | The SHIELD. Faith or faithfulness. / all
B | The HELMET. Salvation. / prayer
C | The SWORD. The Word of God. /

The word ‘stand’ is in the original (1) histemi; (2) histemi pros; and (3) anthistemi. The preposition pros when used with the accusative indicates “the literal or mental direction, as an end, marking the ultimate purpose” (Dr. Bullinger’s Lexicon).

The ‘mental direction’ and ‘ultimate purpose’ of this armour is directed against “the wiles of the Devil”. These ‘wiles’ have been spoken of before in Ephesians. The word is contained in Eph. iv. 14 “cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive”.

> “Instead of remaining immature, blown from our course and swayed by every wind of doctrine, by the adroitness of men who are dextrous in devising error; we are to hold by the truth” (Eph. iv. 14, 15, Moffatt).

Under the law of Moses, no one took up arms until reaching the age of twenty (Numbers i. 45), consequently the spiritual equivalent is ‘the perfect (mature) man’, not ‘babes’ or the immature that are exhorted to put on the armour and withstand the wiles of the Devil. His experimental acquaintance with the great doctrines of the faith, symbolized by the whole armour of God, “put on” and “taken” are to be directed against these Satanic attacks upon the truth. No other armour will avail, and but one weapon is provided, “the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God”. Anthistemi also means to withstand or stand against, and is well translated ‘resist’ as it is in James iv. 7 “Resist the Devil” or as in I Pet. v. 9 “whom resist stedfast in the faith”.

Strong emphasis is laid upon this conception of ‘standing’ and ‘withstanding’. Practically nothing is said to encourage a campaign or an active invasion of the enemy’s territory. That may await us when ‘the evil day’ arrives, but we should be wise not to attempt to run before the Lord commands. He has said ‘stand’; to ‘march’ may appear bolder and even wise, but will ever be disastrous. He knows the enemy better than we do, He knows His plan and has control of both time and place. It is enough that we obey.

The word used in Phil. i. 27 is steko a form derived from histemi. It is difficult to assign a reason for the choice of this form except that it lends itself (being derived from the perfect tense), to the emphatic form “stand fast or firm”. The word occurs but once in the Gospels, the remaining seven occurrences being found in Paul’s epistles. These seven passages are the following:

> “Stand fast in the faith; quit you like men; be strong” (I Cor. xvi. 13).
> “Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free” (Gal. v. 1).
> “Stand fast in one spirit” (Phil. i. 27).
> “Stand fast in the Lord” (Phil. iv. 1).
> “Stand fast in the Lord” (I Thess. iii. 8).
> “Stand fast and hold the traditions . . . . . taught” (II Thess. ii. 15).

The armour provided in Eph. vi. is useless unless “put on”, even as mere doctrine is of no avail unless it be translated into practice by experience, so the exhortation in Philippians i. 27 “stand fast” is not without its experimental context. “Conversation” (manner of life) that becomes the gospel, “your affairs” as well as your creed, and a unity of both spirit and mind are the setting of this attitude.

Where Phil. i. 17 says "stand fast in one spirit" the next reference says "stand fast in the Lord" (Phil. iv. 1). Once again the words are set in a practical context. Two sisters in Christ are entreated by the Apostle to be of the same mind in the Lord (Phil. iv. 2). It is therefore very evident that the greatest single condition for this firm stand for the truth is found in unity. First, in defending and treasuring "the Unity of the Spirit" as we have seen in Eph. iv., then in the twofold practical unity of these passages in Phil. i. and iv. Unity can be attacked from without, but it can also be ruined from within.

Let us weigh our own motives, our plans, our desires in the balances of the sanctuary. Do they 'become' the gospel of Christ? Do they strengthen or weaken the 'oneness' of mind and spirit that should be characteristic of those who are by grace equal members of "one" Body, holding "one" faith, looking for "one" hope and acknowledging "one" Lord?

Many a plan that has been evolved by believing men and women, has had at the very commencement the seeds of its own undoing by reason of failure in these essential features.

We believe that there is a clarion call to all who rejoice in the truth of the Mystery, to stand fast in one mind and in one spirit in this blessed endeavour both to further the truth and to withstand the threatened apostasy, and only as each step conforms to the basic requirements we have seen, can any such movement prosper with the good success that comes from the Lord. This we covet above all else, not that in our stewardship we should be found successful, but found faithful. The rest is with Him.

No.5. "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith" (I Cor. xvi. 13).

pp. 170 - 175

The exhortations 'to stand' that are found in Paul's later epistles are incorporated in the prayer of Epaphras, who prayed on the behalf of the Colossians that they should 'stand perfect and complete in all the will of God' (Col. iv. 12).

In the structure of the epistle to the Colossians, this prayer of Epaphras is in correspondence with the preaching and warning of the Apostle; the one rounding off the other.

E | i. 28 - ii. 1. Preaching to present perfect.

E | iv. 12, 13. Prayer to stand perfect.

The words 'present' and 'stand' are both derived from the same root paristemi "to present" which is literally "to stand or cause to stand beside", while the word 'stand' in the prayer of Epaphras is the simpler word histemi.

The great lesson for us all at the moment is the intentional interrelationship of 'preaching' and 'praying'. Paul's preaching and Epaphras's praying are both marked by the same intensity. In both passages the word agonizomai 'to agonize' or to be in great conflict is used: "striving" (Col. i. 29); "Great conflict" agona (Col. ii. 1); "Epaphras who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saluteth you, always labouring fervently (agonizomai) for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect (mature) and complete in all the will of God" (Col. iv. 12).

If we are to use the armour provided, we must not only take the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God, but we must sanctify all that has been provided by the grace of 'all prayer' (Eph. vi. 10-18).

If some are to stand in the breach and successfully withstand the onslaught of the Evil one, others must as earnestly kneel in the presence of God in upholding prayer. We are dependent upon one another, and no member of the Body of Christ, is superfluous.

There is however one thought more that Truth demands before we can feel that we have presented this matter in all its aspects. We have closed the list of references under the heading 'stand' with II Tim. iv. 17.

Here we are no longer in an atmosphere of active and united fellowship; we have arrived at the conditions and characteristics of "the last days",—isolation, rejection, misunderstanding. The actions of those like Demas who could not endure the limitations set by the exclusive truth of the Mystery, and who go back unto those conditions from which in the first flush of their acceptance, they had withdrawn. Paul was not absolutely bereft of human fellowship, he could still write "Luke is with me"; that was blessed, but he had to write "only Luke is with me" which was sad (II Tim. iv. 11).

> "At my first answer no man stood with me . . . . . Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me . . . . ." (II Tim. iv. 16, 17).

The words translated 'stand with' in these two passages are not the same in the original. The first means "to come in at the same time" the other means "to stand beside" a word already brought to our notice in the transitive form "to place one beside", "to present" (Col. i. 28).

While therefore the active fellowship of the Lord's redeemed children is everywhere stressed as a vital factor in this great stand for the faith, it is nevertheless made very clear by this closing experience of the Apostle, that even though all men forsake us and none stand with us, "He hath said I will never leave thee nor forsake thee", and consequently though at the last we have to experience the bitterness of solitude and rejection, we shall nevertheless have the joy of knowing that He will remain with us to the very end.

We earnestly desire the active cooperation and fellowship of all like minded believers in our stand for the truth entrusted to us, but we seek all sufficient grace, to be prepared to stand alone, if need be, in the blessed fellowship of a rejected Apostle, a rejected revelation, and alas a rejected Christ.

"To watch."

The fourth and closing exhortation of those listed by us in the opening of this series is the exhortation to "watch". Two passages are before us:

> "Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving" (Col. iv. 2).
> "But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry" (II Tim. iv. 5).

Two different Greek words are employed by Paul in these passages. (1) gregoreo, and (2) nepho. While both words are translated "watch", they have distinct origins that must be investigated.

The first word is derived from egeiro 'to awake' as from sleep, and which is used not only to speak of actual wakefulness, but of resurrection from the dead.

> To awake from sleep. Matt. ii. 13, 14, 20, 21; viii. 25, 26.
> To arise from the dead. Matt. x. 8; xxviii. 6; Rom. iv. 24.

Watchfulness that demands the word gregoreo therefore, is a watchfulness that is wakeful, has aroused itself, is anticipating the resurrection of the dead in its alertness in a world that sleeps the sleep of death.

In the Gospels the word is used of two calls for vigilance 'watching' because the day and the hour of the Lord's return is unknown, and 'watching' with the Lord in the garden of Gethsemane.

When Paul warned the Ephesian church concerning the grievous wolves that would enter in among them, not sparing the flock, drawing away disciples after them, he said "Therefore watch, and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn everyone night and day with tears" (Acts xx. 31).

To the Corinthians who were divided among themselves, and whose doctrine and practice had been invaded by false teaching and false ideas, he said:

> "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong" (I Cor. xvi. 13).

To the Thessalonians the Apostle wrote:

> "Therefore let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober" (I Thess. v. 6).

Here Paul introduces the second word nepho 'be sober' indicating most clearly that while there is a watchfulness that rises above the claims of natural sleep, there is a watchfulness that can be impaired by insobriety.

> "For they that sleep, sleep in the night; and they that be drunken are drunken in the night. But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation" (I Thess. v. 7, 8).

Here, moreover is a link with Eph. vi., and there will be observed that those who put on the armour of God are called upon to wrestle "with the world-holders of this darkness" (Eph. vi. 12).

To Timothy and all those faithful men who are able to teach others also (II Tim. ii. 2) the Apostle says in the day of declension "Watch thou in all things".

Nepho and nephalios are mostly translated 'sober' (I Thess. v. 6, 8; I Pet. i. 13; iv. 7; v. 8; I Tim. iii. 11; Titus ii. 2). In two passages nepho is translated 'watch' namely in II Tim. iv. 5 and I Pet. iv. 7; and nephalios 'vigilant' in I Tim. iii. 2.

Nepho in its primary meaning refers to abstinence from drink, and while it is obvious that no man who was addicted to drink could serve as an evangelist with Paul's approval it can hardly be held in seriousness that he actually counseled Timothy "do not get drunk" in II Tim. iv. 5. The word had already moved from its primitive reference to drink. We shall discover the significance of the Apostle's choice if we turn to another reference in the same epistle, this time a compound, ananepho translated in the A.V. "recover themselves" the margin reads "Greek, awake" and the R.V. margin reads "Greek, return to soberness" and Moffatt "come to their senses". The whole passage is of supreme importance in view of the subject that is before us, namely, withstanding the drift that is now setting in toward the foretold departure from the faith.

> "Shut your mind against foolish, popular controversy; be sure that only breeds strife. And the Lord's servant must not be a man of strife; he must be kind to everybody, a skilled teacher, a man who will not resent injuries; he must be gentle in his admonitions to the opposition—God may perhaps let them change their minds and admit the Truth; they may come to their senses again and escape the snare of the Devil, as they are brought back to life by God to do His will" (II Tim. ii. 23-26, Moffatt).

In the opening article of this series, we observed that the four key words "keep", "hold", "stand", "watch" while found in several of the Prison Epistles, are all found in the last epistle that Paul wrote, namely the second epistle to Timothy. One or two elements of instruction emerge from this fact.

(1) The epistles to Timothy were primarily addressed to a workman, a teacher, an evangelist, and the approved successor of the Apostle. No believer today stands exactly in the unique position that was occupied by Timothy. However, Timothy himself was instructed how to ensure a succession, and this is found in II Tim. ii. 2 and in various exhortations regarding service that run through the epistle.

(2) The fact that the complete set of words are all found in II Timothy indicates the great importance of that epistle to us all, who find ourselves living near the end of the dispensation. We believe the importance is sufficient warrant for a restatement as we draw to a conclusion.

KEEP. II Tim. iv. 7. Here we have the example of the Apostle Paul. He sums up his life's witness under three heads:

(1) "A good contest." In this he says he has put up a good fight.
(2) "A course finished." The race set before him has been covered.
(3) "The faith I have kept." This is his last word.

KEEP. II Tim. i. 12, 14. Paul was unmoved and unswayed by the intense and persistent opposition he had experienced, being persuaded that the Lord was fully able to keep that which had been entrusted against that day. As he comes to the end of his course he passes 'the good deposit' over to the safeguarding of Timothy.

> "That good thing which was committed unto thee keep by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us" (II Tim. i. 14).

HOLD. II Tim. i. 13. In direct connection with this good deposit and sacred trust Timothy is exhorted to have and to hold "a pattern of sound words" which he had heard of the Apostle and to hold such a pattern in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.

STAND. II Tim. iv. 17. After the exhortation "to stand" that he had given in earlier epistles, the Apostle encourages us all who are in any sense in true succession with his despised yet glorious ministry to remember that even if 'no man' will stand with us, the Lord will, even as He stood by Paul until his work was done.

WATCH. II Tim. iv. 5. This we have been considering in this article and this one word gathers up within itself the other three. We can neither "keep", "hold" or "stand" if we do not watch, if we are not conscious that we are surrounded by a world lulled to sleep in a drunkenness, not brought about by wine or strong drink, but by the false doctrines that have been imbibed and which have been circulated by the Father of lies.

We have seen something of the "Signs of the Times" and have been forewarned concerning the character of the apostasy from the faith that shall darken the closing days of this dispensation and we have seen the fourfold corrective given in Paul's later epistles, which if heeded will not only keep us ourselves from complicity with this sad departure, but enable us to hold aloft the Word as in a dark place with the glad consciousness that some at least will be led to change their minds, come to their senses, and be delivered from the snare that is spread for their feet.

Thoughts on John's Gospel

No.14. Chapter xiv.
pp. 32 - 35

Our Lord Jesus Christ is about to leave His beloved disciples and to face death, and for us a terrible ordeal of death on a cross. This was made even worse by the intense heartaches of seeing His own people doing this to Him, and the sorrow that they "knew not the time of their visitation" (Luke xix. 44). "He beheld the city, and wept over it" (Luke xix. 41). Our Lord's urgent desire was to comfort and assure them and to show them that He Himself was the true and living way:

> "Jesus saith . . . . . I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me" (xiv. 5, 6).

Do note that that way leads us via resurrection to the Father. Do we realize what a wonderful thought this is? Consider how Peter grasped this exclusive way of access at the beginning of his ministry:

> "Be it known unto you all . . . . . that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth . . . . . does this man stand here before you whole . . . . . Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts iv. 10-12).

With what gracious assuring words our Lord announces His plans to receive His followers after their journey through death's portals:

> "In My Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto Myself" (xiv. 2, 3).

These words are so lovingly chosen, "If it were not so, I would have told you".

The unity of the Godhead is a great mystery but one which has to be accepted by us in the terms used by the Holy Spirit in the Word of God. We have in this chapter, besides God the Father, the Spirit of Truth; another Comforter; the Holy Ghost; and the Son of God Himself. Consider the overlapping texts that describe the blessed union that can be possible between these and the believer, and this in terms of "dwelling with"; "abiding with"; and "being in":

> ". . . He (God) shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever: even the Spirit of Truth . . . for He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you" (xiv. 16, 17).
> ". . . . . I will come to you . . . . . at that day ye shall know that I am in My Father, and ye in Me, and I in you" (xiv. 18, 20).
> "If a man love Me, he will keep My words: and My Father will love him, and We will come unto him, and make our abode with him" (xiv. 23).

The coming separation, betrayal and crucifixion of our Lord was going to put a great strain on the faith of the disciples, so that Christ gives them words of encouragement and assurance that His Father had all things under His power and control:

> "Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father: for My Father is greater than I. And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe" (xiv. 28, 29).

Christ announces that He was going away to the Father and coming again to them and mentions this prior knowledge as proof of His authority so that due fulfillment would support their faith. This is the way God works to set the seal of truth on His words. A similar example is found in chapter xiii. 19: where the Lord Jesus foretells His betrayal by one of His disciples:

> "Now I tell you before it come, that, when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am He."

Judas (not Iscariot) asks our Lord how He would manifest Himself to them and yet not to the world (xiv. 22). The answer lies in verses 23-26. The Holy Ghost would teach them and bring all things to their remembrance that the Lord had taught them. Looking at the negative side:

> ". . . . . the Spirit of Truth: Whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him" (xiv. 17).

The world barred by unbelief cannot find the Saviour nor receive the spiritual riches the Holy Spirit is ready to minister to our minds. Paul's mighty doctrinal letter to the Romans develops the conclusion that the flesh cannot achieve the required righteous standards of God and further that while the Jewish law was in itself righteous, it too, failed because of the weakness of human flesh, but nevertheless, it prepared the way for the righteousness of the spirit that rests in the finished work of Christ. In the verse now quoted we see the place accorded by God to faith in His plans for mankind:

> "For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him Who hath subjected the same in hope" (Rom. viii. 20).

God has ordained that our lives in themselves have no continuing purpose (vanity—uselessness) for they end in death. But these lives are subjected to hope or channeled into faith in the Son of God whereby we have an entrance in to a new and eternal state and age.

It is so necessary for us to pause and meditate on the references to the Comforter, the Spirit of Truth presented to us in this wonderful Gospel of John:

> "Howbeit when He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth: for He shall not speak of Himself; but whosoever He shall hear, that shall He speak: and He will show you things to come. He shall glorify Me: for He shall receive of Mine, and shall show it unto you" (John xvi. 13, 14).

This same Spirit of Truth can be active in our lives today, illuminating the difficult passages of Scripture, bringing to our remembrance other more distant texts that complement the truth we are studying, and over all, bringing us into closer knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ and the work of His Father.

> ". . . . . the ruler of this world is coming. He has no power over Me; but I do as the Father has commanded Me, so that the world may know that I love the Father" (xiv. 30, 31, R.V.).

Satan had no power over our Lord for at all times He was completely sinless. These verses imply the added reason (for Christ's ascendancy over Satan), that Christ loved and obeyed the commands of His Father. Look at our Lord's three temptations in the wilderness. In each case Christ recited the commands of His Father recorded in the Scriptures. Such steadfast loyalty and response demonstrated the love of the Son for the Father, upholding His commands and seeking the glory of God by declaring and conforming to the wisdom and righteousness of God.

The influence and machinations of the Devil in the world today are inextricably intermingled with our own sinful nature with its snares of the flesh. Our steadfast love to God and obedience towards His commands will, through the work of the Lord Jesus Christ, deliver us from these twin dangers.

Turning to another of the many references to love in this chapter:

> "If ye loved Me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father: for the Father is greater than I" (xiv. 28).

Why should the disciples have rejoiced? Surely some of the characteristics of love (charity) of I Cor. xiii. should supply the answer, "seeketh not her own"; "hopeth all things". The thought that their beloved Saviour would shortly be released from all this sufferings and would be reunited with His Father should even at that hour, have made their hearts rejoice. Even so, as we approach the last days of our earthly life, we should equate the attendant burdens and ills of old age with the untold blessings that will be ours in Christ and, holding fast to our hope, rejoice.

It is strange that all the Scriptures contain, like hidden gold, instruction in the ways of God and these are His commands to us. We can use all Scripture, for as we have seen, God has set 'prophecy' and has ordained 'events' to fulfil that prophecy right through the platform of history out into the future. This way of God of prophecy and fulfillment is like the warp and weft of a piece of cloth. While it is in one piece we see with the eye of faith the pattern or autograph of the Designer. If we pull it apart, the warp from the weft, in unbelief and skeptical criticism, we are left with a bundles of confused threads. May we find joy and satisfaction in His presence by obedience to our faith.

No.15. Chapter xv.

"I am the true vine, and My Father is the husbandman" (xv. 1).

Our Lord is going to use the figure of a vine to describe the work of God the Father preparing mankind for eternal life and all that will be required in that future state. In this opening sentence it is impressed on us that God the Father is the Husbandman, the one in charge of the operation. The Lord Jesus Christ is the "True Vine" from which all the branches must come and upon which they all depend for life and sustenance. Finally the purpose of the branches is to bear fruit.

The Greek word for 'true' here is alethinos. The Companion Bible says of this word "that which has truth for its base". Compare a similar usage of the word in John vi. 32, "I am the true bread". While the emphasis is "true" as distinct from "fictitious", the usage has a close affinity with 'truth' itself. We mention this detail to underline the fact that this chapter, in common with so much of John's message, has the channel of knowledge and power as coming to us from God the Father—through His Son—through His Word—and finally through the Spirit of Truth.

The nourishment that is fed to the branches by Christ, the True Vine, has all been taught in earlier chapters. Living Water (John iv. 10); True Bread (vi. 32); flesh and blood (vi. 56), and remember Christ added to this last reference "the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life" to which again He adds "thereby the Spirit quickeneth (our spirit) but our flesh profiteth nothing" (vi. 63).

The branches must be "in Christ" and they must receive nourishment by the Word and the Spirit of Truth. John knows the value of stating opposites to enforce the positive:

". . . . . the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except abide in Me" (xv. 4).
". . . . . without Me ye can do nothing" (xv. 5).
"If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned" (xv. 6).

There are two aspects of "fruit". (1) There is the fruit of the Spirit in our own lives and which we should at all times display:

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance (self-control)" (Gal. v. 22, 23).
". . . . . walk as children of light: (for the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth); proving what is acceptable unto the Lord" (Eph. v. 8-10).

(2) The believer should be ready as he is called, to witness to the world by teaching from the Word of God or assisting others in this ministry through the spoken, written, printed or tape recorded word. Those who as a result of our service have been brought into a knowledge of the Truth are referred to by Paul as fruit and this is the purpose of the vine:

> ". . . that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established: . . . that I might have some fruit among you also" (Rom. i. 11, 13).

These two aspects of fruit run very parallel. We are unlikely to yield fruit in the second if we have not already displayed fruit in the first:

> "Thou therefore endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please Him Who hath chosen him to be a soldier. And if a man also strive for masteries, yet he is not crowned, except he strive lawfully. The husbandman that laboureth must be first partaker of the fruits" (II Tim. ii. 3-6).

Verse 6 in this context is not teaching we should pay our vicar an adequate stipend but rather that when we take on the responsibility of teaching we should be prepared to exhibit a blameless life. II Timothy is a priceless manual of instruction for the novice seeking to pass on to others the message of salvation and in iii. 10 the Apostle Paul declares:

> "But thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, longsuffering, charity, patience."

Why should we not be able to boldly stand up and repeat this verse to those to whom we minister? At least our conscience should be clear to permit us to do so if it were necessary.

> "Be ye therefore perfect (having unbiased mature responsible concern for others without any element by us of judgment) even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" (Matt. v. 48).

Consider John xv. 3:

> "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you."

There is utter joy in discovering that every single thing connected with the Lord is so perfect for its ordained purpose, whether it be the physical body of man, the plan of redemption, the Word of God or indeed any other work or creation of His. The word "clean" in the text above is katharos and is translated 'pure' as well as 'clean'. The thought behind this word is that of being purged of all ideas that were contrary to the teaching of Christ; corrected from all the misunderstandings of false tradition. Psa. xii. compares the words of man with those of God, saying of the latter:

> "The words of the Lord are pure words: as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times" (Psa. xii. 6).

This verse reflects the idea that although God inspires man to record His words in the Bible He sees that they are so purged of all the dross associated with man that they stand out in perfection of purpose.

Following on this theme we find that Paul had so faithfully discharged his responsibility of ministry and witness that even though many refused his words, Paul could declare he was pure or blameless from the judgment that would fall on his rebellious hearers:

> "And when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, he shook his raiment, and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles" (Acts xviii. 6).
> "Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men" (Acts xx. 26).

Paul's ministry had been correct and complete to that dispensation. Paul had passed on all he had received. In like manner in John xv. 3 Christ is saying His disciples were correctly and completely equipped for their ministry through the words He had taught and their acknowledged faith in Him as the Saviour of the world. Much of course had to follow and the Spirit of Truth had to come to call these things to their remembrance and to work with them. Before we leave the subject of cleansing, John xv. 2 says of God the Father:

> "Every branch in Me that beareth not fruit He taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit."

The word 'purgeth' is allied to the word 'clean' in Greek and emphasizes the work of the Father in making the believer more prepared and conformed to His service. The words 'taketh away' are better translated 'lifted up' just as we stake up the leaves and branches of plants so that they have light and air and are freed from the smothering effect of the earth.

As we might expect in the second part of chapter xv. our Lord again refers to love; the love of the Father, the Son and the disciples one to another. Love is based on the wise sympathy for others together with the clear understanding of their needs and the best way in the sight of God to supply them. Where man is concerned that service of love must come from a heart emptied of self which when it is operating replaces the pride of man by the intention to glorify God. Christ warns His disciples that they can expect the same cruel opposition from the world as He had had and was to receive.

We have mentioned joy in the knowledge of the perfect ways of God. Our Lord pointedly pronounces that His parable of the vineyard and all His words that precede and surround it can bring them a sublime joy of which no man can rob them:

> "These things have I spoken unto you, that My joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full" (xv. 11).

No.16. Chapter xvi.
pp. 95 - 99

"These things have I spoken unto you, that ye should not be offended" (John xvi. 1).

The Greek word, skandalizo for 'offended' has the alternative meaning in a concordance of 'cause to stumble'. In our dictionaries the English counterpart is 'scandalize' stated to mean "offend moral feelings, sense of propriety, or ideas of etiquette". Our Lord knew the course that the closing days of His ministry were to take, crucifixion and the dispersal and persecution of His followers. Our Lord knew too, the immediate world's verdict on these events:

> "For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom: But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block (skand), and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them that are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God" (I Cor. i. 22-24).

The Jews expected a Messiah Who would release them from subservience to the Romans and maintain their place and authority in their nation's affairs (John xi. 48). All the aspects of our Lord's humble entry into the world and His witness as His Father's Servant (Phil. ii. 7; Isa. xlii. 1) were so different from the Jew's expectation that it 'scandalized' them.

It was to prepare His disciples for the imminent confusing events that He repeated His forecast of what they could expect. Christ's words in chapter xv. dwelt on these matters too. Here was assurance to His disciples that the Father had all things under His control.

> "These things have I told you, that when the time shall come, ye may remember that I told you of them" (xvi. 4).

What greater comfort and assurance could He have given them than His announcement of the coming of the Comforter, the Spirit of Truth?

> "When He, the Spirit of Truth is come, He will guide you into all truth: for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak: and He will show you things to come" (xvi. 13).

If only Christians would more fully realize it, the whole spiritual life of the believer to maturity is bound up with having the indwelling Spirit of Truth opening the Scriptures to him and 'bringing to his remembrance' the things he has read in the Word of God and making them illumine every facet of life to which they have relevance.

Here is God's appointed way whereby we may progressively get to know Him and His Son:

> "He shall glorify Me: for He shall receive of Mine, and shall show it unto you. All things that the Father hath are Mine: therefore said I, that He shall take of Mine, and shall show it unto you" (xvi. 14, 15).

If we observe the things possessed, governed by the possessive pronoun "My" (emos) used in John's Gospel we find they are: meat (to do the Father's will); judgment; word; commandments; peace; love; joy; glory; kingdom. All these are aspects of the Father's doctrine Christ came to pass on to us. They all contribute to our knowledge of Him.

In contrast to this essential knowledge of God and His Son, Christ specifically says that all the dreadful deeds that His countrymen were to perpetrate on Himself and His disciples were because of this lack of such knowledge.

> "And these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor Me" (xvi. 3).

All through the history of the church dreadful things have been done in the name of the Christian religion because they have not fully understood God's Word. Even today they have their counterpart with those who would separate families and follow many erroneous doctrines because of misunderstood passages of Scripture. If the Lord Jesus Christ had been truly known, His Spirit of Truth would have corrected the error. If in humility we patiently seek guidance from the Holy Spirit we cannot miss the way.

Returning to the word 'offend' we find it used once more in this Gospel in chapter vi. The whole channel of the knowledge of the Father and the Son is in prospect under the figures of bread, flesh and blood. Man by food and drink digests their constituents and they become part of his body. By figure of speech to eat the flesh of the Son of God and to drink His blood is to absorb into our spiritual life (in no sense our physical body) the life giving properties of the Holy Spirit operating through and by the Word of God. For to accept the truth of the Bible and to walk in the Spirit according to its teaching is to partake of God's plan for the forgiveness of our sins and the redemption that God Himself has imparted to the shed blood of the Saviour. It was the failure of our Lord's audience to understand the figurative language that caused the majority of those who heard Him to 'be offended' and to turn away. To Peter and the others our Lord asks "Will ye also go away?" (vi. 67), to which Peter blessedly answers:

> "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. And we believe and are sure Thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God" (vi. 68, 69).

Let us be quite clear as to what our Lord was teaching. The whole Bible and that is the Word of God, was necessary for the spiritual growth of the 'new man'. Moreover the birth of the new nature in man was equally dependent on the meaning God had deliberately given to the cross in all its prophetic implications and fulfillments.

The Jews and Greeks for different reasons found such doctrine unacceptable as we have seen. Today man has so much pride in intellectual accomplishments, examining and criticizing the original texts of Scripture that he is blind to the supernatural surveillance and overruling of God Who could direct His servant Paul to write:

> "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works" (II Tim. iii. 16).

Many today are 'offended' by the Scriptures for, for them much of the O.T. seems "contrary to their moral feeling" and the necessity even today of "the shedding of blood for forgiveness" (even if this took place 2000 years ago) does not agree with their "sense of propriety".

Our Lord's gracious concern for His disciples leads Him to refer again to His withdrawal from the world:

> "A little while, and ye shall not see Me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see Me, because I go to the Father" (xvi. 16).

In even plainer language He repeats the message:

> "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father" (xvi. 28).

The whole of this life culminates in the miracle of passing from the state of corruptible flesh to incorruptible spirit: "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption" (I Cor. xv. 42). God has come all the way to meet us, to help our unbelief by (1) setting His Own Son to be the "firstborn from the dead" (Col.i.18); (2) appointing twelve apostles who had been with Christ from the start to the finish of His ministry to witness to His resurrection; and (3) by the mass of prophetic utterances in His Word and their precise fulfillment concerning this historic event confirm their divine origin and truth.

God imposed a measure of discipline on Adam and Eve and their progeny when sin entered the world. Man was tried by the discipline of thorns and weeds (symbolic of adversity), while woman faced pain in the accomplishment of her role in life of childbirth. Our Lord now uses the picture of a woman enduring the ordeal of bringing a new life into the world to reflect the immediate days ahead. They would be in anguish and sorrow for their blessed Lord but this would be followed by that wonderful resurrection and all the powers and hopes it would unleash, both for them and all the world to which they would begin to minister. Truly at that time, with the delivered mother, they would forget all that was past in the wonderful joy and possibilities that lay in the future:

> "A woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come: but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world. And ye now therefore have sorrow: but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you" (xvi. 21, 22).

May the God-appointed adversities of this life be willingly accepted so that they temper and prepare our character for the glorious future in the world to come.

pp. 116 - 120

The sacred prayer of our Lord in this chapter summarizes the work of Christ from before the foundation of the world to His re-entry into His glory. The Son desired that the disciples His Father had given Him might be with Him there and behold His glory (xvii. 24). We have here plain statements concerning God manifest in Christ in glory before the foundation of the world; God manifest in Christ as the Son of His Heavenly Father on earth; and finally God manifest in Christ in the glory again. There is only One God but for our human limitations such separate manifestations were evidently necessary and we do well not to spoil such a holy demonstration by attempting to explain or define spiritual margins:

> ". . . . . the glory which I had with Thee before the world was" (xvii. 5).
> ". . . . . now I am no more in the world . . . . . and I come to Thee" (xvii. 11).
> "I have glorified Thee on the earth; I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do" (xvii. 4).

The last words of the previous text "the work which Thou gavest Me to do" are highlighted by a brief study of the phrase "before the foundation of the world" in verse 24. Katabole, the Greek word for 'foundation' occurs 10 times in the N.T. and illustrates the supernatural power of God from the beginning to see how His creation will react and live in the future. While leaving mankind with their free choice (and not controlling them as puppets) God overrules where necessary so that His ordained goal will be reached. God foresaw the effect of the flesh on man and the misuse by Satan of the power and the authority given to him over the world. Right from Gen. iii. 15 to the end of Revelation, God enshrined in His Word His declared plans to redeem His people, to establish them as His children and as the Apostle Paul sketches the goal:

> "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may also glorified together" (Rom. viii. 16, 17).

So the following texts centering round katabole demonstrate complete knowledge of God and His wonderful provision for us:

(1) "I will open my mouth in parables; I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world" (Matt. xiii. 35). This was quoted from Psa. lxxviii. 2 where the Holy Spirit recorded by the psalmist all those years ago God's intention to reveal in parable to His elect some of His future plans.

(2) "When the Son of man shall come in His glory . . . . . then shall the King say . . . . . Come ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. xxv. 34). Here for our comfort is the announcement of God's provision for His elect so long ago and will He not have done this for all His companies of believers?

(3) Jesus Said . . . . . woe unto you, scribes and pharisees . . . . . ye build the sepulchers of the prophets, and your fathers killed them . . . . . ye bear witness that ye allow the deeds of your fathers. Therefore also said the wisdom of God, I will send them prophets and apostles, and some of them they shall slay and persecute: that the blood of all the prophets, which was shed from the foundation of the world, may be required of this generation" (Luke xi. 47-50). The witness of God's prophets, silenced by murder or persecuted will be used by God to condemn the offenders across the world's history. Man will have no excuses at the day of judgment.

(4) "Father . . . . . Thou lovedst Me before the foundation of the world" (John xvii. 24). The span of the love of God for Christ is seen for Christ's participation in His plans for the redemption of the world. This love was twice witnessed to the world by the Father's voice from heaven: "This is My beloved Son in Whom I am well pleased" (Matt. iii. 17 and xvii. 5).

(5) "According as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love" (Eph. i. 4). The calling of the church of the One Body is in view over the span of the ages.

(6) Read Heb. iv., the word "foundation" occurs in verse 3. God's rest from creation (works in verse 3) typifies the millennial kingdom where a company of elect believers will find a place. Again we have links in a long term plan.

(7) "For then must He often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the end of the world hath He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself" (Heb. ix. 26). Here is the culminating work of Christ, the key to all the Father's plans. In verse 24 we also read "Now to appear in the presence of God for us". This supreme work of Christ was so important in God's sight that hundreds of years passed with the O.T. laws and Temple ritual committed to Israel prefiguring the work of the Lamb of God and our Saviour.

(8) "Redeemed . . . . . with the precious blood of Christ . . . . . foreordained before the foundation of the world" (I Pet. i. 20). Peter's added testimony that Christ as the Redeemer of mankind was ordained from the very beginning.

(9) ". . . . . and all who dwell on earth will worship it, everyone whose name has not been written before the foundation of the world in the book of life of the Lamb that was slain" (Rev. xiii. 8 R.S.V.). God foreknew the names of those who would worship the beast of Rev. xiii.! These would not be written in the book of life.

(10) ". . . . . they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and shall be present" (Rev. xvii. 8 R.V. margin). Those faithful believers and overcomers at the time of the end will not be deceived by the deceptions of the beast: God's overruling love and provision will over His elect to the end.

When we stand back considering the span of God's plans set forth in these texts we can see how the Lord's prayer we are studying epitomizes the fruit of these plans coming on Christ's beloved disciples. Christ has shown He has come from the Father, that the Father sent Him. Christ has given to His disciples the Father's words and now He looks forward to having these same men see and share His future glory. This same prayer covers us as 'the other sheep' in John x. 16.

Another wonderful aspect of this prayer is that the believer is shown as a possession of the Father that He gives to His Son. Do we realize what a wonderful thought that is? We remember that while the Son gives the believer in Him power to become a child of God, it is in the Father's province that he is born of the Spirit:

". . . . . as many as received Him, to them gave He (Christ) power to become the sons (children) of God, even to them that believe on His Name: which were born . . . of God" (John i. 12, 13).

Here in this chapter xvii. Christ continually refers to this gift:

"I have manifested Thy name unto the men which Thou gavest Me out of the world: Thine they were, and Thou gavest them Me" (xvii. 6).

"As Thou (God) hast given Him power over all flesh, that He should give eternal life to as many as Thou hast given Him" (xvii. 2).

"I pray . . . . . for them which Thou hast given Me; for they are Thine" (xvii. 9).

". . . . . keep through Thine own name those whom Thou hast given Me" (xvii. 11).

". . . . . those that Thou gavest Me I have kept" (xvii. 12).

"Father, I will that they also, whom Thou has given Me, be with Me where I am" (xvii. 24).

All these comfortable verses bespeak a unity with the Father and the Son and a close sharing in the goal of that holy purpose.

Another repetitive word well worth study is "kept". The believer has kept the words the Father gave the Son to proclaim and now the Son prays the Father to keep these disciples:

"I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil" (xvii. 15).

This prayer is to counter the expected attacks of Satan. Man can be expected to fall down on all the deceptions of the flesh: pride, lust for power and other selfish pursuits. But it is Satan who is at the back of false teaching in the churches, political ploys that undermine the character of the people, sapping their independence and their personal responsibility for the good of their home and children. It is Satan who is at the back of world politics that seek to channel all power into central units conveniently available for his representative at the right time. On the other hand Satan will especially attack those who are mature in the truth and who are proving useful to the Lord if they have failed to 'put on the whole armour of God' of Eph. vi. 11-17. It is especially this latter group for whom our Lord prays.

"I have manifested Thy Name" (xvii. 6).

Time was when a person's name indicated some aspects of his or her character and Biblical names of people and places find their appropriate connotation in a concordance. The Lord Jesus Christ in His earthly ministry had concentrated on conveying to His hearers both the character and the work of His Father. So much is embraced in this text. How can folk sometimes say the Bible is difficult when on basic themes John summarizes it so simply and in such a telling way:

"I have manifested Thy name unto the men which Thou gavest Me out of the world: Thine they were, and Thou gavest them Me: and they have kept Thy Word. Now they have known that all things whatsoever Thou hast given Me are of Thee. For I have given unto them the words which Thou gavest Me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from Thee, and they have believed that Thou didst send Me" (xvii. 6-8).

These words insist on the authority of the Scriptures and we dare not ignore them if our lives are not to be wasted.

Finally let us consider verses 16-19:

"They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them through Thy truth: Thy Word is truth. As Thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. And for their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth" (xvii. 16-19).

Sanctification implies a division, a being separate from and being separated to. If we are to have the help of the Spirit of Truth then we have got to examine all our priorities, thoughts and as the Scriptures describe it, our 'daily conversation'. We have to see that all these conform to the Lord's spiritual standards. Something of this is sketched in Philippians iv. 8.

We have to earn our living and move through many sordid avenues of life. We have to let the light of Christ reflect in our words, life and habits. The Holy Spirit through prayer will show us the personal application of sanctification to our individual lives. What we need to remember is that our spiritual growth and understanding of the Bible will be retarded just as much as we allow into our lives aspects that we know too well are unacceptable to the Spirit of Christ within us.

". . . . . from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works" (II Tim. iii. 15-17).

If we honour the Word of God, as we should, we shall always seek what is the purpose of a chapter or verse, what message it has to teach and how much of it can apply to ourselves. This indeed is the substance of the above exhortation. There is however another purpose of God, and that is to establish this record of His Word from the time of Adam's creation to the close of the canon of Scripture. God has given us an authoritative account of world history that impinges on His eternal purpose. Man will be judged in resurrection as to how he has accepted or refused this record and how he has directed his life accordingly.

In the chapter (xviii.) of John's Gospel at which we are now looking we have the historical record of the trial of the Lord Jesus. There have been those with a legal bent who have pointed out the many undoubted irregularities of His trial. Let us look however at the reactions of some of those involved. Judas Iscariot, whether spurred by avarice or a mistaken thought to push our Lord into vindicating His claims, was nevertheless deceived by Satan. We need at all times to test our more important plans in quiet prayer with the question "does this meet the will of God or is it likely to offend?". Peter for all his vehement brave intentions failed our Lord on that occasion. It is significant that the action of our Lord healing the ear of Malchus and the request in verse 8 to let His disciples go, saved them physically at that time, but the advent later of the Holy Spirit sealed the work of 'keeping' those the Father had given Him. We too can be protected and transformed like Peter if we allow the Spirit of Truth free rein in our minds and then in our lives. To read Peter's epistles and in Acts, his stand against the Jewish rulers, is to make one astonished that this was the same supine man that stood in the court of the high priest. The priests Annas and Caiaphas appear to us to be all too reprehensible but the Apostle Paul graciously says:

> ". . . . . I bear them (Israel) record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God. for Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to everyone that believeth" (Rom. x. 2-4).

Our Lord charges them with the offence of not listening to and receiving His words that he had daily proclaimed in their buildings. These leaders were satiated with all their law and especially what their own colleagues, the rabbis had had to say about the law. They had had endless discussions on how to fulfil the law in all the intricacies they had loaded upon it. They had failed to see the purpose and righteousness of God behind the letter of the law. The tendency to rely on the dicta of past presumed authorities for Scriptural interpretation is evidenced in theological treatises from the early centuries onwards and even to today strangely enough. Let such ancient expressions of opinion be read with care. We have the Spirit of Truth at our side and with patience, faith and prayer we shall find that this is God's planned way to teach us.

Pilate was unencumbered by the Jewish laws. He could no doubt see through the illegality and trickery of the priests. Pilate could find no fault in our Lord. The kingdom of which Christ came to be King, Pilate could see was of a kind and extent that did not touch his temporal responsibilities to Rome. We wonder how sincere was his question "What is truth?" (xviii. 38).

We do well to weigh up the words of Christ to Pilate:

> "Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Everyone that is of the truth heareth My voice" (xviii. 37).

Christ could at that solemn moment specify two vital purposes of His human birth and advent. (1) To be King of the Jews, and all those that could then, and will in the future, be involved in world discipleship and teaching. (2) To be a witness to the Truth. Those who "are of the truth" hear His voice. Faithful practice and inspired tuition seem to run in tandem. Number (1) will have its time and great importance in the future (having failed at Christ's first advent). Number (2) is a witness we have to embrace and enter into in all its fullness. We do not need to turn away in hopelessness like Pilate saying "what is Truth?". We know that truth is the full and accurate knowledge about any subject. Only God Who created us, our minds and all the universe, can supply this knowledge. He alone knows all sides of a question. He alone knows the incidence of His spiritual creation on this material creation. He alone knows our thoughts and the necessary optimum way of bringing creation to its perfect goal. How we should bless God for the faithful witness of His Son to the Truth. How we should use and be thankful for this truth presented to us at such a price.

The arrest, trial and crucifixion of our Lord from the world's standpoint appears as a ministry with an ignoble failure at its close. We know that, by the foreknowledge of God and despite the work of the enemy, God overruled all the events so that they presented the precise, complete and righteous transaction that was the prophesied basis of salvation and redemption for the human race. Note we say basis, for we have to examine Paul's doctrinal epistle to the Romans to find all the implications of this transaction and to whom the transaction applies.

With this vital interpretation of Calvary in mind we note that God underlines His controlling part in these events to counter any talk of failure. The following words were recorded to emphasize this fact:

> "Therefore doth My Father love Me, because I lay down My life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of My Father" (John x. 17, 18).

The chapter of John we are studying also makes its contribution to this theme:

> "As soon then as He had said unto them, I am He, they went backward and fell to the ground" (xviii. 6).

When previously in His ministry He was threatened with death, they had no power over Him—He walked away through the midst of them (see John viii. 59). Here in chapter xviii. He voluntarily lays down His life. At all times we can see how the Bible specifically records God's control over the world's events and especially over those which have a doctrinal significance in relation to His eternal purposes. This is seen particularly in the happenings during the 24 hours of the day of Calvary. Stuart Allen in his The Unfolding Purpose of God on pages 10 to 13 lists 14 prophecies from the O.T. written some 1,000 to 500 years before the events occurred and literally fulfilled on that day. Our next study covers the scene where our Lord takes the cup that the Father had given Him to drink (xviii. 11).

The title of these articles indicates that no attempt is made to give an exposition in depth that the Gospel deserves. Rather the author seeks to extract what to him seems the main burden of each chapter. Much has been written on the gross irregularities of the trial of the Lord Jesus, both in past years but also continuing up to the present time. There have been books and U.K. television seeking to remove some of the guilt from the Jewish race and to discredit the accuracy of the Biblical record. Accordingly one comes to realize how important are the Scriptures to present us today God's own miraculously preserved account of all that has happened in the world from the day He created it. When we say this we acknowledge that this historical account is strictly selective, touching only on events relative to God's eternal purpose.

Paul found it necessary to take the major part of the O.T. ("the law of Moses and the prophets") to do justice to the message of salvation in the Lord Jesus.

The first words recorded of Christ are "How is it that ye sought Me? Wist ye not that I must be about My Father's business"? (Luke ii. 49). Our Lord's last recorded words before He died were "It is finished" (John xix. 30). Thus it seems these words form the focus of this chapter.

When we studied chapter xvii. we saw that this work of the Father was conceived and started before the foundation or overthrow of the world in Gen. i. 1. The vital central act of the Son of God takes place in this chapter before us. The earthly life of the Lord Jesus led up to this point:

> "Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me, and to finish His work" (John iv. 34).
> "But I have a greater witness than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given Me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of Me, that the Father hath sent Me" (John v. 36).
> "I have glorified Thee on the earth: I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do" (John xvii. 4).

Our Lord with His complete knowledge of the O.T. could see in His life one prophecy after another being fulfilled, and now as He hung on the cross, suffering, He saw them offering Him vinegar, the final prophecy concerning Him (while He was alive on earth) fulfilled:

> ". . . . . And in My thirst they gave Me vinegar to drink" (Psa. lxix. 21).

Tasting, He did not drink, but said "It is finished".

To recapitulate, we see God using His written Word and His prophecies literally fulfilled, to bear witness before mankind of His existence, works, will and purpose. All these are centred in His Son, the Lord Jesus Christ. The visible earthly life of Christ and His witnessed resurrection are His eternal seal of truth to the record of the Bible.

When the Apostle Paul for two whole days went through with his compatriots the law of Moses and the prophets (Acts xxviii. 23) he would have shown prophecy after prophecy fulfilled. Paul would have shown to them, all the Temple ritual, furnishings and commandments prefiguring Christ as the great antitype. Paul's Master had already followed the same course of instruction with those two on the road to Emmaus:

> "And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself" (Luke xxiv. 27).

While from one point of view, Christ could say "it is finished", it is as well to consider what was finished and what resulted from this finished work: (1) The transaction on the cross was a foundation on which God could righteously cancel the sentence of death passed on all mankind by the sin of Adam. (2) Redemption (loosing us from the result of our sins) and atonement (making reconciliation and access to the Father) for those who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and all that the Scriptures declare concerning His role of Saviour of mankind.

These two results are by no means all. They themselves are only a foundation if we dare to use the word 'only'. We have constantly to review what we are building on this precious foundation. The epistle describing our calling to the church of the One Body delineates this foundation:

> "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone; in Whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord; In Whom ye are also builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit" (Eph. ii. 19-22).

Notice here again the reference to "apostles and prophets".

The plans of God for the earth that went astray in the garden of Eden had already found rebellion in heaven. The work of Christ covered by (1) and (2) above is found to have additional and extended future results leading to the reinstatement of God's original desires and goal. View the hints of such in John's wonderful visions:

> "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. xi. 15).
> "And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of His Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night" (Rev. xii. 7-10).

> "And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; (the sphere of Satanic dominion); and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, it is done" (Rev. xvi. 17).

Note the echo "It is done" of that cry of our Saviour "It is finished".

So we can begin to see how the events of John xix. cradle the most far reaching results affecting the universe and not merely our own world. It is on this wonderful and glorious foundation that God our heavenly Father has prepared the way for us to enter in spirit the household of God, concerning which our charter declares:

> "And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: That in the ages to come He might show the exceeding riches of His grace in His kindness toward us through Christ Jesus" (Eph. ii. 6, 7).

What a God is ours Who has cast His Word in such an irrefutable form for the believer, but a stumbling block to those who deliberately choose to turn away from the truth in disobedience. Faith in anything comes by the persuasion of another. Why should we not let God persuade us out of His Word to that faith in Christ that is the key to all the unimaginable spiritual blessings that the Scriptures envisage for us.

pp. 196 - 200

This penultimate chapter (xx.) of John's Gospel records the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, a supernatural event and one of more importance to the human race than any other event in the past or the future. Solomon was a man greatly blessed by God not only with wisdom but with possessions and power. Solomon had the time, inclination and endowment of mental faculties surpassing anyone before his time or since to pronounce on what man can do with this present life. Read Solomon's report in Ecclesiastes. We quote three thought provoking verses:

> "I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before Him" (Ecclesiastes iii. 14).
> "Then I beheld all the work of God, that a man cannot find out the work that is done under the sun; because though a man labour to seek it out, yet he shall not find it; yea further; though a wise man think to know it, yet shall he not be able to find it" (Ecclesiastes viii. 17).
> "For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten" (Eccles. ix. 5).

The last verse must echo the conclusions of those who believe not on the resurrection of the Lord Jesus and the record God the Father gave to the apostles to herald to the world.

The history of Israel in the wilderness is one of supernatural demonstrations by the hand of Moses of God's existence and power and purpose. Yet the people repeatedly ignored or forgot this supernatural testimony and rebelled. Paul writes ". . . . . these things happened unto them for ensamples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come" (I Cor. x. 11). Let us not therefore think lightly on the resurrection of Christ but carefully ponder all the witness of the event and then all the implications that follow.

The witnesses of the Resurrection.

Paul is doing this very thing in I Cor. xv. where he gives a list of witnesses:

> ". . . . . He rose again according to the Scriptures: and that He was seen of Cephas (Peter), then of the twelve: after that, He was seen of above five hundred at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present but some are fallen asleep. After that, He was seen of James; then of all the apostles. And last of all He was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time" (I Cor. xv. 4-8).

One of the functions of the twelve apostles, including Matthias, was to witness to the resurrection. Their qualification was to have been with Him throughout His ministry so that they could testify that it was really He Who had risen. Christ says "Behold My hands and My feet that it is I Myself" (Luke xxiv. 39). Mary Magdalene coming from seeing the empty tomb recognizes His voice in the garden and exclaims Raboni—Master. John (that other disciple) sees the grave clothes in the tomb in the position that they would have been, wrapped round the body and separately round the head begins to perceive the miracle and reality of Christ's resurrection, emphasizing his witness he records ". . . . . he saw, and believed" (John xx. 6-8). The chief priests and Pharisees suspecting trickery by the apostles had the tomb sealed and their own watchmen set, but all to no avail. Their failure merely highlights another aspect of witness to the event. The history of those times is silent as to any claims denying the event. Such denial is left to some in the present time who dare to confront all this testimony.

We have already referred to John's discovery of what can only be described as a process of vanishing from human eyesight in rising from the dead. A similar process is evidence in verse 19 ". . . . . the doors were shut . . . . . came Jesus and stood in their midst". Again in verse 26 ". . . . . the doors being shut, and stood in the midst". "Two went to Emmaus . . . . . And their eyes were opened, and they knew Him; and He vanished out of their sight" (Luke xxiv. 13-21).

Yet though He had the power of appearing and disappearing, He Himself reassures His disciples when they were affrighted at His sudden appearance: "Behold My hands and My feet, that it is I Myself: handle Me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see Me have" (Luke xxiv. 37-40). Again in John xxi. 9 the Lord Jesus has a meal prepared for Peter in which presumably, our Lord was going to share.

It would seem we have a preview of the sort of resurrection body that awaits some at the return of our Lord at His second coming and which was foretold by Paul in I.Cor.xv.52: "We shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye". Even as in that same chapter Paul reveals that there is more than one kind of resurrection body so we know that the Lord Jesus Christ had the power to first experience the resurrection hope of all His followers, of whatever dispensation or form it will take.

The raising of Lazarus has also an important bearing on the miracle of our Lord's resurrection. In that incident there are all the elements of a demonstration of God's power that excludes doubt or denial. Many witnesses knew that Lazarus had been dead four days and that, long after corruption in a hot climate had set in. Before the eyes of a crowd the sealing stone of the tomb is rolled away and at the voice only of the Son of God the dead one walks forth.

What are today's scoffers of miracles to say to this? What are some in the churches today to say when they think to make the Bible acceptable by putting forward suggested natural explanations of miracles? Christ walking on the water only looked like it, there were hidden shallows! It was probably eczema not leprosy that Christ cured! If the miracle of the raising of Lazarus took place and if God raised His Son as described in the Word then surely we can accept the rest of the Bible with thankfulness. But if these two miracles are a fabrication, what is left to man? Is it as Solomon suggested "There is nothing better for a man, than he should eat and drink, and that he should make his soul enjoy good in his labour" (Eccles. ii. 24). Paul adds "If Christ be not raised . . . . . we are of all men most miserable" (I Cor. xv. 17-19).

If the non-scientific person finds dematerialization difficult to conceive let him be comforted by the fact that scientists exploring the composition of matter begin to find it consists of electrical charges in a constant state of motion. We may well reconsider Paul's words:

> "God has chosen . . . . . things which are not, to bring to nought things that are" (I.Cor.i.27,28).

We stress the feature of resurrection for we all eventually come face to face with the thought "Is it all really true?" either in thinking of our own decease but more often that of a loved one we long to meet again and perhaps a cremation service confronts us. No wonder our great God in His love towards us provided such irrefutable proof for our comfort and assurance. This proof is undermined and destroyed by those who attack the inerrancy of the Bible. We cannot pick and choose what we shall accept as true. If we dishonour God's Word by doubting it we cannot expect His Holy Spirit to guide us into all truth and the inexpressible joy of His presence.

The implications of the Resurrection.

The historic events leading up to the cross and after have no meaning to us today unless the Bible's record is true and accepted. The transaction was planned and foretold by God through the O.T. prophets. The recording of its happening was overruled by the Holy Spirit. Its meaning, interpretation and effect were committed to the N.T. apostles and especially to the Apostle Paul for us Gentiles. We do not need to speculate, His Word is clear. God has identified the events of Calvary with the believer:

> "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized (identified by faith—nothing to do with water) into Jesus Christ were baptized into His death? Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection: . . . . . Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with Him: knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more" (Rom. vi. 3-9).

Resurrection is the key to the approach from this life towards the presence of the Lord. God has planned and proclaimed that man's faith and acceptance of this fact shall be the password to His presence:

> "If thou shalt confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved" (Rom. x. 9).

The Scriptures indicate three or more different hopes for believers according to their respective callings, even as there are three or more equivalent resurrections mentioned. The task to differentiate these in this article we will not attempt. The one sure thing to which we can all cling is that Christ by His death and resurrection has secured for all the true seed of Adam a resurrection, and if we have believed in the Saviour's Name and His words, eternal life awaits us.

Israel in Numb. xiv. had all the evidence of the fruit and blessings of the promised land but refused the testimony of the "grapes of Eshcol" and God's words of assurance and promise through Moses. All the rebellious and doubting adults were denied entrance to the promised land but their innocent children arrived there forty years later. Their rebellious parents changed their minds and decided to attack the enemy only to be heavily defeated, for the Lord was not with them. We have to learn to believe and accept God's plans and in His time not just when we think we will. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" (Heb. ii. 3).

Praise be to God the Father and His blessed Son that our future is so secured.

pp. 230 - 234

We have come to the end of a most wonderful record of the earthly life of the Son of God. John in modesty withholds his name in this narrative, calling himself "the disciple whom Jesus loved" (xxi. 20 and elsewhere). To this man was entrusted the book of the Revelation, a record to which the people of God will turn and anxiously consult for guidance and comfort in the terrible days ahead. To John also was entrusted this record of the earthly ministry of Christ having special reference to His being "God manifest in the flesh".

The selection of incidents was made by the Holy Spirit, being given to John to record. In a similar way John in Rev. i. 10 speaks as being "in the spirit" and Paul in Heb. i. 2 speaks of God speaking "in Son". The Word of God is the same miraculous testimony of God to man, as all the flowers, insects and especially his own body are a witness to man of the miraculous design of each for its purpose in life. So in this Gospel we find testimony to the power of God. In John xx. we considered the miracle of resurrection and we linked it with that of the raising of Lazarus. If we study the word 'miracle', the dictionary gives 'a supernatural event'. In turn, 'supernatural' is "above or beyond nature", and 'nature' is "the power that creates and regulates the world"! How reluctant is man to commit any praise or acknowledgment to God. Surely God has used forces He has created to produce results that further His purpose of the ages. Man however clever he is, has not yet discovered these forces and how they work and so he wriggles with these definitions, shying from equating nature with God.

John in his narrative was inspired to select eight miracles or signs to demonstrate the power of God through His Son. We quote them from page 77 of Life Through His Name by Mr. C. H. Welch.

A | ii. 1-11. THE MARRIAGE IN CANA. The third day.
No wine. Glory manifested.
B | iv. 43-52. THE NOBLEMAN'S SON.
After two days. At the point of death.
C | v. 1-15. THE IMPOTENT MAN. Pool Bethesda. 38 years.
Sabbath. Sin.
D | vi. 1-14. THE FEEDING OF THE FIVE THOUSAND.
The only sign (with D) recorded in other gospels.
D | vi. 15-21. THE WALKING ON THE SEA.
The only sign (with D) recorded in other gospels.
C | ix. 1-44. THE MAN BORN BLIND. Pool Siloam. From birth.
Sabbath. Sin.
B | xi. 1-46. THE SISTERS' BROTHER.
Two days. Lazarus is dead.
A | xxi. 1-14. THE DRAUGHT OF FISHES. The third time.
No meat. The Lord manifested.

The arrangement of leaves on a plant's stalk; the pattern on the opposite wings of a butterfly display parallel design. The above structure and the more detailed analysis that follows in the book quoted exhibit similar parallel design. We believe God the overruling Architect of these His works purposely incorporated these literary parallels throughout His Word to prove to us their divine authorship.

What in this chapter has the Lord now in mind? None other than to see that His disciples carry His words to the world. So we find in John xxi. 16, 17 Christ appealing to Peter to feed the sheep—the mature, the lambs—the young in faith, and to shepherd -- or organize and supervise the church generally. The Lord says "feed My lambs . . . . . feed My sheep", and we know so many times in this Gospel our Lord uses the figure of bread, water, His flesh, His blood to represent His doctrine and His very presence in the heart of the believer. This is the specific work entrusted to Peter.

When Peter was converted or endowed with both the Holy Spirit and His gifts we discovered an entirely new Peter. Not one to hide behind lies but one who, utterly fearless, stood before the formidable Sanhedrin and testified to the risen Saviour. At Peter's first miracle, the lame man begging at the gate Beautiful, Peter declares:

> "And His Name through faith in His Name hath made this man strong, whom ye see and know: yea, the faith which is by Him hath given Him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all" (Acts iii. 16).

When we turn to Peter's second epistle we find a wonderful testimony to the Word of God:

> "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of His majesty" (II Pet. i. 16).
> "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place . . . . . knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (II Pet. i. 19-21).

Our Lord made use of three outstanding witnesses to His words, Peter, John and Paul. To Paul was entrusted the ministry of reconciliation between Jew and Gentile consequent upon the change of dispensation, and finally the gospel relative to the new calling, the church of the One Body.

What is the impact of the words of Christ on the world today? God has done His part supervising its original commitment to parchment and preserving it from attack for thousands of years, guiding the scribes of His people in making true copies. What have the churches done with it? From the time of Christ there have been faithful groups and individuals who have kept alive a faith and understanding of its message but speaking in general terms today there are sadly two features which are prevalent.

Firstly there are many evangelical movements who do such good work bringing a knowledge of the Saviour to men and then acknowledgment in their lives. But is the new born babe in Christ supplied with suitable nourishment from the Word that Peter was exhorted to supply in John xxi. 15? Have the sheep any qualified shepherds to feed the flock with the meat of the Word as Paul describes in I Cor. iii. 2? Secondly, in the list of church services how many are devoted to Bible Study? This duty of the church and all Christians is often neglected because the Old Testament accounts of the Flood and the Six days creation cannot be accepted in the light of the generally accepted statements of the origin of the universe.

The knowledge of the Bible is imperative in order to know God and His Salvation. The whole purpose of God is to receive worship from His creatures as our Lord told the woman at the well. "The true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship Him" (John iv. 23).

Can we really believe that God Who took such trouble to build a chain of communication with us would allow into His record stories of basic importance to be mere myths and legends? The critics of the Bible write as if it was Moses or Paul who were writing rather than that they were only the amanuenses for God. Because they have no satisfactory rational explanation of how God supervised His works of prophecy and history they are ready to discount much of the record, denying the divine authorship.

We have often heard it said and seen it written that in the O.T. men were feeling after God as if it was Moses and David etc. who were self inspired warriors carving out a conquered inheritance by their own imagination, design and power. It was God Himself Who spoke to these men, directing and encouraging them in their fight against the Canaanites and other nations of the evil seed of Satan. Consider an example of the awful practices of these nations which alas Israel and Judah so often copied.

> "They (Judah) have built also the high places of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt offerings unto Baal, which I commanded not, nor spake it, neither came it into My heart" (Jer. xix. 5).

God planned and overruled the events making up the history of His people in the O.T. Needless to say this did not include their rebellion and constant disobedience and unfaithfulness towards His love and goodly provision for them. Every step taken by Abraham and his progeny we find taken by the specific instruction of God either directly to the individual or to His chosen prophet. Far from the people feeling after God, they repeatedly went against His commands, corrupting themselves in every way until at the end of their history we read:

> "But they mocked the messengers of God, and despised His words, and misused His prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against His people, till there was no remedy" (II Chron. xxxvi. 16).

In the Old Testament as well as the New, God was a long suffering and patient God of love. Let those who think differently take the trouble to read all the O.T. and test the truth of these words. If a surgeon is forced to amputate a gangrenous limb to save the life of the patient or the remainder of his body do we call him a blood thirsty butcher? The righteousness of God is a very precious thing to us. We should carefully examine every passage of Scripture that makes us doubt this very essential character of our heavenly Father.

Finally let us remember the Word of God all points to His desire that we should now and in resurrection live to willingly praise and acknowledge His righteous, holy and wise Headship that will call forth our eternal praise of Father, Son and Holy Spirit and that out of a full knowledge and experience.

Dear Fellow-members,

Once more, in the mercy of God, we are able to issue another volume of The Berean Expositor.

The last two years have been significant by reason of the fact that our circulation has increased and we have, in addition, been able to produce more volumes in the study of the Word of God.

These we commend to the Lord to use and "give the increase" which will be to His glory and the lasting blessing of all those who read them.

We give our heartfelt thanks to all those who support our witness financially and prayerfully so that we can continue to "redeem the time" as long as the age of grace lasts.

Archaic and Obsolete Words of the Authorized Version.

WANT. At the marriage at Cana in Galilee described in John ii. 1-11, we read "And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus saith unto Him, They have no wine". The A.V. is ambiguous judged by modern usage of this word. Did they desire wine or did they lack wine? The latter is true. The bridegroom who had supplied the wine according to Jewish custom, had evidently miscalculated and not provided enough. "And when the wine failed" or "ran short" is the correct meaning. The verb "want" did not begin to have the meaning of desire until almost a hundred years later than 1611.

WARD. As a suffix, "ward" means in the direction of, occurring in words like inward, outward, upward, downward, etc. In middle English it was optional whether –ward was put as a prefix or a suffix. "And such trust have we . . . . . to God-ward" (II.Cor.iii.4) or towards God. "His works have been to thee-ward very good" (I.Sam.xix.4). Likewise we have "Thy thoughts which are to us-ward" (Psa. xl. 5). "His power to us-ward who believe" (Ephesians i. 19). "More abundantly to you-ward" (II.Cor.i.12) means "still more toward you". "Which to you-ward is not weak" (II.Cor.xiii.3). Most of these now archaic phrases were derived by the A.V. translators from the Bishops' Bible and from Tyndale. We have pointed out before how greatly the translators of the A.V. were indebted to him.

WAX. This is quite a common word in our English Bible and simply means to grow. It only seems to be used today of the moon, waxing and waning. In modern English it sometimes means "become". The mustard seed in Luke xiii. 19 "grew and waxed a great tree", meaning it "became a great tree". "Wax old" is equivalent to growing old. "Is the Lord's hand waxed short?" (Numb. xi. 23) today would be rendered "is the Lord's hand shortened?".

WEALTH. In I Cor. x. 24 we read, "Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth". On the surface this appears to countenance theft in thought or action, but in 1611 wealth meant more than money. It denoted well-being or welfare and so the N.I.V. renders the verse, "Nobody should seek his own good, but the good of others".

WIT, WIST, WOT. These are old English words meaning to know or discover. In Gen. xxiv. 21 we have Abraham's servant and his attitude to Rebekah "wondering at her held his peace, to wit whether the Lord had made his journey prosperous or not", that is to learn or know whether the Lord had prospered his journey or not. Later on, when Moses as a baby was put in a basket by the river's bank, "his sister stood afar off, to wit what would be done to him" (Exod. ii. 4). She wanted to know what the result of this action would be.

There is a well-known verse in Luke ii. 49 giving the Lord's reply to His parents' reproach, "Wist ye not that I must be about My Father's business?". The N.I.V. renders it "Didn't you know I had to be in My Father's house?". There is no word for "business" in the Greek. In II Cor. viii. 1 the A.V. rendering is, "Moreover, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God . . . . .", which means we cause you to know. Sixteen times the A.V. translators insert to wit, without any corresponding Hebrew or Greek word or words. This was done in 1611 for clarity. One well-known verse is Rom. viii. 23 ". . . waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body". Wit, wist, and wot are quite obsolete today.

WITCH. Twice this word appears in the A.V. (Exod. xxii. 18 and Deut. xviii. 10). In the second occurrence the word is masculine and it is difficult to know why the translators used the word "witch" here, specially as they have rendered it "sorcerers" where it occurs in Exod. vii. 11, Dan. ii. 2 and Mal. iii. 5. These people were equivalent to spiritist mediums in touch with the demonic world under Satan's domination. The great danger of this and the possibility of it affecting the Lord's people accounts for the extreme penalty that God prescribed.

WITHAL. This preposition is an archaic form of "with" which found its place at the end of a clause or question. "To overlay the walls of the houses withal" (I.Chron.xxix.4) is typical. In the majority of cases, it can be omitted as the sense is perfectly clear without it. The A.V. uses it 24 times.

WITHS. Delilah, we are told, bound Samson with "seven green withs" (Judges xvi. 7-9). These were seven bow-strings such as we have in Psa. xi. 2 "For, lo, the wicked bend their bow, they make ready their arrow upon the string . . . . .". In these texts "withs" and "string" are the same Hebrew word yether.

WOE WORTH. Once only does this archaic expression appear in the Bible, namely in Ezek. xxx. 2 "Son of man, prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Howl ye, Woe worth the day". This means "alas, for the day". "Worth" is an obsolete verb meaning become or happen. "Woe betide the day" is less archaic and would be understood at the present time.

WORSHIP. Up to the 17th century, this word meant to give due honour or respect to human beings as well as to God. "Then thou shalt have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee" (Luke xiv. 10) just means "you will be honoured". In the parable of the king and his servants recorded in Matt. xviii. 23-35 we have "the servant therefore fell down, and worshipped him (the king), saying . . . . .". This is equivalent to the servant falling on his knees and imploring the king. Wyclif's version of John xii. 26 sounds strange today: "If any man serve Me, My Fadir schal worschip hym". The idea of God worshipping a man is impossible in the modern meaning of the word. "My Father will honour him" is what is really means.

In the N.T. proskuneo means to kneel in supplication to a human being in asking for a favour, or to do this in worship of God. When referring to man it can be rendered "kneel before" or "do obeisance". When used of God or the Lord Jesus Christ "worship" is the normal translation. The context alone should decide. The older meaning is still retained in such titles as "your worship" applied to mayors or magistrates.

WORTHY. Not only does this word express worth or excellence, it is also used in the A.V. in the sense of "deserving". "If the wicked man be worthy to be beaten" (Deuteronomy xxv. 2) means "deserves to be beaten". "Did commit things worthy of stripes" (Luke xii. 48) would be rendered today "did what deserved a beating". When Solomon said to Abiathar (I Kings ii. 26) ". . . . . thou art worthy of death", he meant, "you deserve death". In Rev. xvi. 6 in connection with the judgments of God on the followers of the Beast, we read "For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and Thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy". This means "they have their due" or "as they deserve".

WREST. This verb means to twist or pervert. "Thou shalt not wrest judgment" means "you shall not pervert justice". Peter likewise talks of the opposers who "wrest" or twist (the Scriptures) "to their own destruction" (II Pet. iii. 16). This is surely a solemn warning to any who tamper with the Word of God.

YESTERNIGHT meaning last night occurs in Gen. xix. 34 and xxxi. 29. We still retain "yesterday" but have dropped yestermorn, yesternoon and yesterweek.

In this series we have pointed out scores of English words used in our A.V. which are obsolete or have completely changed their meaning since 1611. This is inevitable with language which is always in a state of flux or change. Some words or expressions have altered so much that they have now come to mean exactly the opposite to their usage in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. "By and by" is an example of this which today means later on or presently. In 1611 it meant immediately, or at once.

There is therefore a real need for a version in modern English which faithfully reflects the original languages. In recent years we have had quite a number of new translations of the Scriptures and in our opinion, there have been too many of them. Some are only loose paraphrases hardly fit for the designation of translations and are useless to the serious student of the Word of God.

We should avoid two extremes. (1) Accepting every version that comes along, however highly publicized. (2) Rejecting all modern translations and treating the A.V. as though it was as fully inspired by God as much as the original autographs. Our old English Version is an excellent version on the whole and will never be superseded. Its matchless prose and general reliability are too well known to need advertising. However, it has marks of human frailty on it, as all translations have, and we do not further the truth by ignoring this. One of its most stalwart defenders, Archbishop French (Trench?), who was one of the foremost scholars of his day, wrote On the Authorized Version of the New Testament and discussed some of its weaknesses, and this book, together with others, can still be obtained second-hand. A parallel Bible, with the A.V. and R.V. side by side, together with one of the more reliable modern versions, will prove helpful to those lovers of the Word of God who have no access to the original languages.

Let us constantly thank God for all those lovers of His Word who down the centuries have laboured to give us a reliable original text and translations in our own language.

Christian Attitudes

No.1. Relaxation.

pp. 131 - 133

"Be still and know that I am God" (Psa. xlvi. 10).

In his series in The Berean Expositor on the Psalms, Stuart Allen drew attention to many interesting features of this Psalm (B.E. volume L., p.164). He points out that Psalms xlvi.-xlviii. form a trilogy and he comments on the prophetical aspect, as the Psalmist looks forward to the time when war will cease, and this must relate to the second coming of our Lord.

The Companion Bible gives the following outline:

1. God our refuge
   2, 3. Danger defied (earth moved, waters roar)
      4, 5. Zion defended
   6. Danger defied (heathen raged, earth melted)
7. God our refuge
   8. Works seen (Behold God's works, earth desolate)
   9. Wars ended
   10. Himself known (know God—His exaltation—earth)
11. God our refuge

The Psalm commences with "God is our refuge and strength" and in verses 7 and 11, we have the refrain, "The Lord of hosts is with us: the God of Jacob is our refuge".

The refuge in verse 1 is a place of refuge, a place to which one flees. A different word is used in verses 7 and 11, which means a high place, a tower, or an impregnable place.

The Psalmist describes a scene of great trouble, the removing of the earth, the roaring of the waters, but he contrasts this with the peaceful scene in the holy city, where streams of the river bring joy and gladness. God is there. The city will not be moved.

Then a different scene is set. The heathen rage, the kingdoms are moved. He utters His voice and the earth melted. The Lord of hosts is with us. The God of Jacob is our refuge.

A description of a peaceful scene follows. He maketh wars to cease, the bow is broken, the spear is cut asunder, the chariot is burnt. Then comes the words which we wish to consider "Be still and know that I am God".

We live in difficult days, and there is trouble all over the world. The pressures of life affect us all and there are times when we need a word of comfort. In the business world, the strain is enormous and many are caught up in what is called the "rat race". How do these conditions affect us? What is our attitude of mind? When the businessman goes home, does he take his worries with him? If we have an hour to spare in the evening, can we relax, or are we still troubled by the strains of this life? It may be easy to advise the troubled to "Be still" and relax. But how can the anxious mind be set at rest?

The Hebrew word translated "Be still" is only translated once in this way. There are at least 20 occurrences of this word, and it is rendered cease, fail, forsake, let alone, let go, stay, etc. The basic meaning is to "let go". The translation "Be still and know that I am God" reads much better than "Let go and know that I am God". Yet, as we meditate upon it, we can see that the rendering "let go" is a valuable aid to our understanding. We carry our troubles always, and we do not let them go. How can we relax if we do not let our troubles go? Psa. lv. 22 reads "Cast thy burden upon the Lord and He shall sustain thee . . . . .". But if we cast our burdens on the Lord and then pick them up again or fail to let go, are we relieved of our burdens? To cast our burdens on the Lord means that we must let them go. And if we let go, then we become "still" and know that the Lord of hosts is with us. We enter the refuge.

Certainly there is a need to "hold fast" and to be steadfast in the things of God. But we need to let go those things concerning this world which constitute a burden.

We need to rightly divide, to distinguish between those things which we should hold firmly and those things which we should hold very loosely, things which we should let go when we need to relax.

When we wish to relax, and "let go" may we remind ourselves of Phil. iv. 6, 7:

> "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God, and the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

Yes, that peace will help us to "let go" and relax. Then shall we "Be still and know, that I am God".

So then, let us learn to set our affection on things above, not on things on the earth (Col. iii. 2).

No.2. Quietness.
pp. 149 - 151

"Rest in the Lord and wait . . . . ." (Psa. xxxvii. 7).

Our peace of mind may be disturbed as we hear of continual violence in so many parts of the world; even in Northern Ireland and in this country we see lawlessness and the loss of innocent lives. In his second epistle to Timothy, Paul warned him that perilous times would come and the long list given in chapter iii. includes trucebreakers, false accusers, fierce, traitors, etc.

The Companion Bible indicates an outline of Psa. xxxvii. as follows:

A1 | 1-11. Admonitions and reasons
B1 | 12-26. Contrasts. Lawless and righteous
A2 | 27-29. Admonition and reason
B2 | 30-33. Contrasts. Righteous and lawless
A3 | 34. Admonition and reason
B3 | 35-40. Contrasts. Lawless and righteous.

The text that we wish to consider comes in the first section A1 and so we give the outline of that section:--

A | 1. Trust. Fret not
B | 2. Reason. "For"
A | 3-8. Trust. Delight. Commit
B | 9-11. Reason. "For"

Apart from the work of those who are violent, we may be vexed by the work of evildoers, who seem to prosper while those who try to live honestly suffer. Indeed, there is a real danger that a Christian may become jealous of the prosperity of those who are caught up with solely material ambitions. If this material attitude is allowed to develop, may there not be the possibility that a Christian may be tempted to lower his standards and achieve a higher "standard of living"? The Psalmist warns us of this.

Verse 1, ". . . . . neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity."
Verse 7, "fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass."
Verse 8, "Cease from anger, and forsake wrath: fret not thyself in any wise to do evil."

"Fret not" means "heat not thyself with vexation". Do not allow yourself to be emotionally upset when you see the activities of the evildoer. But how can this mental attitude be avoided? Let us look at the Psalm again.

Verse 3, "Trust in the Lord and do good"
Verse 4, "Delight thyself also in the Lord"
Verse 5, "Commit thy way unto the Lord"
Verse 7, "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."

"Rest" means "be still or keep silent". When we are upset, how often a torrent of words can flow from our lips! How hard to keep silent! But the Psalmist advises us when we are vexed and upset, often by circumstances beyond our control, to be still, be quiet, be silent. Then we can turn to the Lord in prayer, to commit our way unto the Lord and trust in Him. Then we begin once again to delight in the knowledge and in our experience of the presence of the Lord. We can accept those adverse circumstances, knowing that He can give us the strength to endure suffering.

Verse 18 reminds us that "the Lord knoweth the days of the upright" and we are also reminded of Job who said, "But He knoweth the way that I take: when He hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold" (Job xxiii. 10).

When we have to endure any kind of affliction or suffering, let us remember Psa.xxxvii. and rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him . May we not fret or become vexed, but rather learn to wait in patience before the Lord. Our prayer may indeed be a silent prayer, just resting in His presence, look upward to Him for courage and strength. As gold is refined by fire, so the fire of affliction may remove the dross and enable us to come through our experience in a state of greater spiritual maturity, and with greater faith in our Lord, our Saviour and Head.

No.3. Thankfulness.

pp. 171 - 173

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto Thy name, O most High" (Psa. xcii. 1).

There are over 100 references in the O.T. and more than 50 in the N.T. to thanksgiving. To try to summarize them in a short article is not an easy task.

If we turn to Nehemiah, and read of the tremendous opposition to the work of rebuilding the wall of Jerusalem, we can understand the great pleasure of Nehemiah when that difficult task was completed. Chapter viii. tells us how Ezra read the book of the law of Moses to the people and in chapters xi. and xii., we read of those who were to dwell in Jerusalem and about the thanksgiving that was rendered. Mattaniah was given a special office in regard to the giving of thanks (see Neh. xii. 8). In chapter xi. 17 we read that he should begin the thanksgiving with prayer. In chapter xii. 27, we find that the dedication was to be made with gladness, both with thanksgiving and with singing, with cymbals, psalteries, and with harps. In justification of the inclusion of songs of praise, verse 46 explains,

> "For in the days of David and Asaph of old there were chief of the singers, and songs of praise and thanksgiving unto God."

Paul also links songs of praise with thanksgiving:

> "Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord, giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Eph. v. 19, 20).

On some special occasions, Psalms were written to give thanks. In II Sam. xxii., there is a song of thanksgiving by David as he thanked God for deliverance from his enemies. Another special Psalm is recorded in I Chron. xvi., to give thanks for the transfer of the ark of God to Jerusalem.

Psalms cv., cvi. and cvii. exhort Israel to remember the marvelous works of the Lord. The deliverance of Israel from Egypt and an account of the experiences of Israel in the wilderness are recited and in Psa. cvii. there is the refrain:

> "Oh that men would praise the Lord for His goodness, and for His wonderful works to the children of men!"

Many Psalms give thanks to the Lord. Some give thanks for deliverance from the enemy (e.g. Psa. xxxv.). In Psa. lxxv. thanks is given to God the judge. In Psa. lxxix., there is a prayer for help as Jerusalem is invaded, which ends with praise and thanksgiving. Another Psalm is prophetic in character and ends with rejoicing and thanksgiving (Psa. xcvii.).

Coming to the N.T. it is remarkable how many times Paul gives thanks for the saints to whom he is writing. For example, ". . . . . cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers" (Eph. i. 16). See also Rom. i. 8; I Cor. i. 4; Phil. i. 3, 4; Col. i. 3.

Prayer should always be made with thanksgiving.

> "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus" (Phil. iv. 6, 7).

We should abound in the faith, and this should be accompanied with thanksgiving.

> "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus our Lord, so walk ye in Him: rooted and built up in Him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving" (Col. ii. 6, 7).

And there is the need for constant prayer with watchfulness.

> "Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving" (Col. iv. 2).

Paul exhorted Timothy to pray for all men, and prayer and intercession should be made with thanksgiving (I Tim. ii. 1).

Sometimes we find difficulty in saying "thank you" and yet it is possible to convey thanks without actually using those words. Read Phil. iv. 10-20. Paul had received a gift which mean so much to him, and he did express his deep appreciation. In his special way, he says he was glad to receive the things, which were "an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice well pleasing to God" but he adds that they would receive an even greater benefit because "my God shall supply all your need according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus".

So then, let our Christian attitude be one of thanksgiving to God for all His goodness to us, blessings both spiritual and material, and let us praise Him for the fellowship we enjoy with those of like precious faith.

While it is right that we should constantly thank the Lord for all His gifts, let us not forget to thank those who help us in any way. A word of thanks may give joy and gladness as appreciation of kindness is so expressed. Let us not take things for granted but remember to say "thank you".

No.4. Joyfulness.

pp. 192 - 195

"Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice" (Phil. iv. 4).

Walking down a crowded street, do you notice the expression on the faces of the people who pass by? How many appear cheerful? The successful businessmen, those who own a car and a fair salary, and even younger folk, often look worried or perplexed.

How many people who attend church give the impression of being really happy? Surely the Christian should be an example and radiate joy and gladness.

The wise man says in Prov. xvii. 22:

"A merry heart doeth good like medicine: but a broken spirit drieth the bones."

If we are cheerful, there may be a benefit to health, for a healthy mind does affect the body. One would expect those who suffer from ill health or some major disability to be sad, but how often do we find such people relatively happy. We may know people who have indifferent health who are an example to us.

If we refer to II Cor. xi. 24-28 we shall find a list of the trials and sufferings of the Apostle Paul. The last epistles written from prison do not contain any complaint, although in prison, Paul must have suffered much. He writes about the revelation he received and he blesses God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, "who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ" (Eph. i. 3).

As there are so many references in both the O.T. and the N.T. to rejoicing, gladness and joy, we will limit our comments to the letter to the Philippians. In chapter i., he explains that what happened to him had furthered the gospel. Because of his bonds, and his witness, others became more confident to speak the Word without fear; but Paul might have been upset as some preached a Christ of contention, not sincerely, but trying to add affliction to his bonds (Phil. i. 16). However, others preached the gospel in the spirit of love, and supported him. How did Paul react to this confusion? The answer in verse 18 is given:

> "What then? notwithstanding, every way, whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice."

In the same chapter, he discusses the way Christ would be magnified in his body, whether by life or death. But he realizes how much his life meant to the brethren at Philippi, and he expressed his confidence that he would abide and continue with them for their furtherance and joy of faith. He adds:

> "That your rejoicing may be more abundant in Jesus Christ for me by my coming to you again" (Phil. i. 26).

Notice his concern and desire for their joy. In verse 25 he refers to joy and it is interesting that the word used for rejoicing in verse 26 is a stronger word indicating boasting. See how he encourages the saints so that they with Paul may rejoice.

In chapter ii. 17, 18 he expresses the possibility that he might die for his faith and his death would be like the drink offering which was poured over the sacrifice:

> "Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy, and rejoice with you all. For the same cause also do ye joy, and rejoice with me."

This was a mutual rejoicing; I joy and rejoice together with you and you joy and rejoice together with me. So in what we would call adversity, Paul was rejoicing and asking the saints to rejoice with him.

Read what Paul wrote about Epaphroditus, who nearly lost his life in his willing service (Phil. ii. 25-29). When you see him, rejoice (verse 28). Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladness (29). What a welcome he ought to receive and what joy at his coming! How Paul seeks to radiate joy and gladness and encourages others to share that joy with him.

Chapter iii. begins "Finally, my brethren, rejoice in the Lord" and then he seems to deviate, as he often does in his letters. He writes about his seven losses in the flesh and the seven gains he wishes to obtain in the spirit. He presses towards the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus (verse 14), and he advises the saints:

> "Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded . . . . ." (iii. 15).

And so we reach chapter iv. Here he describes the brethren as his "joy and crown". He urges them to stand fast in the Lord. After asking Euodias and Syntyche to settle their differences, and to be of the same mind, he reverts once more to rejoicing.

> "Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice" (Phil. iv. 4).

And later in the chapter he rejoices in the gift sent by the saints and he expresses his confidence for the future.

> "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me" (Phil. iv. 13).

Surely our Christian attitude should be one of joyfulness. Let us follow the Apostle Paul who rejoiced at all times. Whatever our circumstances may be, let us rely on the enabling power of Christ and rejoice in Him.

No.5. Patience.
pp. 211 - 214

"Let patience have her perfect work" (James i. 4).

James writing to the dispersion, begins by exhorting them to count it all joy when temptations (trials) are encountered,

> "Knowing this, that the trying (or proving) of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire (complete), wanting nothing."

He continues by adding the advice,

> "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God . . . . .".

Most of us will admit that we do not have as much patience as we should, and when our faith is tested by trial or temptation, we need to turn to God in prayer that our faith may be strong. So tribulation and faith are linked with patience, and in some Scriptures, there is the link with hope.

Both Paul and Peter show how spiritual growth goes through various stages.

If we turn to Rom. v. we have the following steps:

> verse 3, "We glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience, > verse 4, and patience, experience; and experience hope:
> verse 5, and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us."

Romans viii. 24, 25 says that,

"we are saved by hope: but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it."

Romans xv. 4 tells us that the Scriptures,

"were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope."

"Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be likeminded one toward another according to Christ Jesus: that ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" (xv. 5, 6).

Turning to II Pet. i. 5-7 we have the following steps:

Add to your faith virtue – knowledge – temperance – patience – godliness and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity.

"For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ" (i. 8).

The Apostle Paul is our example. In writing to Timothy he remind him of the persecutions and afflictions he suffered, but despite all the adversity, his faith and patience remained firm.

"But thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, longsuffering, charity, patience, persecutions, afflictions, ... but out of them all the Lord delivered me" (II Tim. iii. 10, 11).

He warns Timothy that those who would live godly in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution.

As we read of all the things that Paul suffered, and remember his experience in prison, we realize how much patience Paul needed. Yet he endured, and wrote those wonderful epistles which contain the revelation of the mystery and the hope that awaits us.

Is it not wonderful that in Rom. xv., we have the reference to the God of patience and consolation? (verse 5). This is followed by the title the God of hope in verse 13 and in verse 33, the God of peace.

Have we ever thought of the tremendous amount of patience that has been shown by God over so many years? How patient was God with Israel, His chosen people! And when in the fullness of time, God sent His Son, He was rejected and crucified. Yet, God is patient still. He is the God of patience awaiting the time when His purposes will be fulfilled. And if God is so patient and if Paul our example was patient too, should we not also be patient?

The parable of the sower (Luke viii. 15) refers to the seed that was sown on good ground which brought forth fruit with patience. If we sow seed, whether in our gardens, or on the spiritual level, in ministry or in our personal witness, do we expect "results" at once? Surely we should await the harvest with patience.

If we suffer affliction, or if our faith is tested in any way, should we not hold on in faith and endure with patience?

Let us conclude with two references:

> I Tim. vi. 11, 12: "Be thou, O man of God, flee these things; follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses".
> Col. i. 10-12: "That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God; strengthened with all might, according to His gracious power, unto all patience and longsuffering with joyfulness; giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints (holiest) in light . . . . .".

Is it hard to be patient? Yes, most of us would reply. But if we are strengthened with all might, according to His glorious power, surely we shall be enabled to be patient and so glorify God in our lives.

No.6. Humility.
pp. 230 - 232

"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (Phil. ii. 5).

How often do we wish to have our own way? It is natural to have desires and ambitions and to seek to achieve them. As Christians we need to have a balanced outlook and to remember that even "Christ pleased not Himself" (Rom. xv. 3). The danger is that if we are self-willed, we may become proud. Pride goes before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall (Prov. xvi. 18). The fall of Satan was due to iniquity that was found in him. The King of Tyrus is described in Ezek. xxviii. 12-15. He was in Eden (he was the anointed cherub) and so it is reasonable to assume that the account of the King of Tyrus relates to Satan. Verse 17 of that chapter says "Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty . . . . .". If pride was the cause of Satan's fall, should this not be a warning to us, lest we think of ourselves "more highly than we ought to think" (Rom. xii. 3).

The children of Israel were exhorted to "remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart . . . . ." (Deut. viii. 2. See also verse 3).

Micah vi. 8 reads:

> "He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

As we come to the Gospels, we find many references to the need for humility. The disciples wanted to know who would be the greatest in the kingdom of Heaven, and our Lord set a little child before them. "Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is the greatest in the kingdom of Heaven" (Matt. xviii. 4). Our Lord spoke of the scribes and Pharisees who were proud and liked to be called "Rabbi" and have the best seats at civil functions. Christ said that "he that is greatest among you shall be your servant" (Matt. xxiii. 11). He washed the feet of the disciples as an example of true humility (John xiii. 4-16). Christ quoted the words "he that humbleth himself shall be exalted" in Mat. xxiii. 12 (also Luke xiv. 11 and xviii. 14).

An example was the wedding feast, when he advised guests not to take the best seats, lest they be asked to step down in favour of a more important person. Better to be asked to "come up higher". The quotation in Luke xviii. 14 relates to the publican and the Pharisee who went into the temple to pray; it was the humble prayer of the publican that was commended by our Lord.

So in His teaching, our Lord often spoke about the need for true humility. It was in His life, His death and the cruel suffering on the cross that our Lord showed how His teaching was put into practice.

He was in the form of God, but did not consider that He should grasp at His "rights" as being equal with God. He gave up His "rights" and emptied Himself, taking upon Himself the form of a servant, and He was made in the likeness of men. Then, He humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross (Philippians ii. 5-11).

His sevenfold humility is to be followed by a sevenfold exaltation, and the time will come when at the name of Jesus, every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

And so, Paul says, "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus". Let us reflect on what our Lord has done for us, what a tremendous sacrifice He made, giving up His "rights" and suffering such a dreadful death for our sakes.

May we remember verse 3, "Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves". This is true humility, and the reverse of pride. It is the spirit of Christ, who took our sins and carried them to the tree.

James writes,

> "Humble yourself in the sight of the Lord and He shall lift you up" (James iv. 10).

Let us conclude with a quotation from Col. iii. 12, 13:

> “Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even Christ forgave you, so also do ye.”

Let this mind be in you.

The Epistle to the GALATIANS.

No.2. i. 4 - 13.
pp. 10 - 15

The reason given for the tremendous gift of the Lord Jesus Christ is stated in verse 4:

> "that He might deliver us from this present evil age (world A.V.) according to the will of God and our Father."

Exaireo (deliver) means to pluck or tear out and then rescue, set free. It is translated "rescue" in Acts xxiii. 27. Every believer in Christ has been rescued from infinite danger, for this present age is controlled by the usurper, Satan and he is its god (II.Cor.iv.4) and runs the system behind it. Some may think Paul has exaggerated in calling it evil. Have we not made wonderful scientific advances in this age which had made life easier in many respects? While this may be so, from God's standpoint it is evil, because it rejects Him and His Truth. All man's increased knowledge of the universe brings him not one whit nearer God; in fact it seems to be the reverse, he gets further and further away from Him.

The wonderful deliverance by redemption causes the Apostle to pause and praise the Lord for it, "to Whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen", and we should do the same. Usually Paul commences his epistles by some kind of commendation before he introduces his subject and the reason for his writing, but it is not so here. He is too deeply moved for that. He says:

> "I am astonished that you are so quickly deserting the one who called you by the grace of Christ and are turning to a different gospel—which is really no gospel at all" (i. 6, N.I.V.).

It was incomprehensible to the Apostle that believers who had been so gloriously freed from bondage, could act in this way and put themselves back into slavery again. The word "turning away" is in the present tense which showed that it was still going on as Paul wrote. Not only this, but they were doing it "quickly", so soon after receiving the gospel, or it might mean so soon after the arrival of the false teachers from Jerusalem. In any case the Galatians had made no long stand for the truth. They had soon capitulated and even become enthusiastic for this new so-called gospel. In doing this they were not just turning away from Paul, but from God "Who had called them".

This was a terrible thing and the Apostle does not mince his words:

> ". . . . . there be some that trouble you and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed" (i. 7-9).

These were strong words indeed, but they were absolutely necessary. Fundamental truth was at stake and there could be no compromise. What "we preached" and what "ye received" was the criteria and it still is. In religious circles there is scarcely a word that is more misused than the word "gospel". It is on everyone's lips whatever their persuasion, and from this one would think that its meaning was clear and evident to all. However, like the word "democracy" it can be made to mean anything the user wishes. All the professing churches assert that they are preaching the "gospel", but so often this so-called gospel bears no relationship to the true one revealed in the Word of God.

There is a constant need for everyone who professes to be a true believer in the Lord Jesus Christ to test every "gospel" that he reads or hears by the one so clearly expressed in God's Word. That gospel originates solely from God and was made known by His revelation to the Apostle Paul and delivered through him as the channel.

> "For I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man, for I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it but by the revelation of Jesus Christ" (i. 10, 11).

Just what this gospel of God consisted of, Paul does not state, but it had been very clearly made known to the Galatians by his ministry. He had "placarded" (literally) Christ before them (iii. 1) and so magnified Him that they could have been in no doubt whatsoever that the good news centred in the Lord Jesus, and what He had accomplished for them on the cross and by His resurrection.

That gospel is clearly expressed in I Corinthians:

> "For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried, and that He rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures" (I Cor. xv. 3, 4).

This death was an atoning death; it was "for our sins" as Peter expressed it:

> "Who His own self bear our sins in His own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness, by Whose stripes we were healed" (I Pet. ii. 24).

The work on the cross, then, touches the root cause of all man's troubles, namely sin and its consequence, death, and any gospel that does not do this is fraudulent, deceiving and completely empty of any virtue or power.

Here is the acid test for all gospel preaching, past, present and future. Does it present a Christ crucified for the sins of His people and risen again as the conqueror of death? If it does not do so then the two greatest enemies of mankind, sin and death, are left dominating us for ever and we are as utter slaves without hope. This is what the Galatian Christian failed to realize. No wonder Paul was stirred to the depths of his being. He even put himself under God's curse if he failed to deliver faithfully the good news of redemption committed to him by the Lord and worked out by Christ alone. Any mingling of "good works", human merit or religious ordinances as a necessary part of the true gospel was heresy, even if an angel from heaven preached it.

Who were these troublers? There is little doubt that they were Jewish Christians from Jerusalem who were zealous for the law. We read of them in Acts xv.:

> "And certain men which came down from Judea taught the brethren and said, except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved."

A remarkable thing is that the problem of circumcision for Gentile believers is not dealt with in Galatians which strongly suggests it was written before Acts xv., when the Jerusalem Council settled this question, otherwise Paul would surely have referred to it as it would greatly have helped his stand on this point. He dismisses it by saying "If ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing" (v. 2, 3). It looks as though the Apostle feared that the Galatians had not appreciated the seriousness of their fall from the truth of the gospel, for he repeats himself saying "if any man preach any other gospel unto you than ye have received let him be accursed". He then follows it with a protest:

> "Am I now trying to win the approval of men, or of God? Or am I trying to please men? If I were still trying to please men, I would not be a servant of Christ" (i. 10, N.I.V.).

Why should he say this unless he had been accused of acting so as to get human approval and thus winning adherents, by suiting his message to his hearers? Whatever faults Paul may have had, a man-pleaser was certainly not one. So much so he now proceeds to give details of his past life showing that such a charge was completely false. He had long ago realized that trying to combine pleasing the Lord and pleasing man was impossible. Peter and the apostles associated with him had publicly declared the same truth for in Acts v. 29 we read:

> "Then Peter and the other apostles answered and said, We ought to obey God rather than men."

We need to remember constantly the same truth. All service and witness must be done as unto the Lord and not to man. To carry out the Lord's work with one eye on man and his approval is to court failure. Sometimes faithfulness to the Lord means that we have to say or do things that are unpopular and will not please. The temptation is then either to soften or avoid this in some way because we are afraid to offend others. Many a church minister is at the mercy of his congregation. He knows that if he tells them the truth there will be trouble and perhaps his job will be in jeopardy. This is specially true, Paul warns, of the last days when "men will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turn unto myths (fables)" (II Tim. iv. 3, 4). Thus it is that these hearers get what they want rather than what they need, and in doing this, swerve from the truth and get embedded in error.

Paul intends to leave the Galatian Christians in no doubt of his faithfulness to God's truth committed to him, so he now outlines the steps that led to his conversion and the experiences that followed:

> "For ye have heard of my conversation (manner of life) in time past in the Jews' religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God and wasted it and > profited in the Jews' religion above many my equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers" (i. 13, 14).

In dealing with his past history the Apostle was honest and does not attempt to excuse his conduct. He shows how in his ignorance and darkness he treated the early church as heretics and did his level best to stamp them out. Dioko, the word for persecute is used in Acts ix. 4 "Saul, Saul, why do ye persecute Me?". Little did he realize that in touching the Lord's people he touched the Lord Himself, which only goes to show the wonderful unity made between the Lord Jesus Christ and His people.

As he looked back on this episode in his life, he felt nothing but shame, although, as he said later, "I did it ignorantly in unbelief" (I Tim. i. 12, 13). Nevertheless he describes himself at this time as a "blasphemer and a persecuter and a violent man" (I Tim. i. 13, N.I.V.). Surely then it was obvious that such a man could not have invented the gospel that he preached which was the direct opposite of all his thoughts and actions before his conversion. Let his critics bear this in mind, specially when they accused him of inventing the gospel that he preached.

No.3. i. 15 - ii. 3.

It is evident from Paul's reference to the "Jews' religion" in Gal. i. 13, 14 that he regarded Judaism as a different religion from Christianity. As regards the former he made great strides and forged ahead, outstripping many of his contemporaries. He was a man who never did things by halves. The Laodicean spirit was absolutely foreign to his nature. He tells the Galatians that he was exceeding zealous (zelotes, a zealot) for the traditions of his fathers (i. 14) and he was well aware of the bondage of the law, just as Peter was when he described it as a "yoke" which "neither our fathers nor we were able to bear" (Acts xv. 10).

What he was so concerned about was the attempt of the enemy, through the Judaizers, to fasten the heavy weight of the Mosaic law upon the Galatian converts and so render their liberty in Christ null and void. Paul was the Apostle of freedom as the clarion call of Gal. v. 1 makes clear. He who had been so wonderfully freed by the Lord took the greatest care that the yoke of the law would never be placed upon the Gentile converts that were under his charge no matter where it came from. He sums up his conversion by saying:

> "But when it pleased God Who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by His grace, to reveal His Son in me that I might preach Him among the heathen (Gentiles) . . . . ." (i. 15).

It was the risen Christ Whom he met on the Damascus road causing him to make an immediate turn-around and place himself entirely at the Lord's disposal by saying "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" (Acts ix. 6). This the Lord made abundantly clear to him and he expresses it by saying "that I might preach HIM among the Gentiles".

What an example this is to all would be preachers whatever persuasion they are! The Lord Jesus Christ, His Person and Work should be the continual subject for all preachers, but how many sermons pass this test? So many consist of anything but this, yet they are all supposed to be Gospel preaching! No wonder there is a falling away in many a church today.

Paul now goes on to record his movements after his conversion, and it is not easy to identify these with those recorded in the Acts. There are differences of opinions among expositors and a lot of space could be taken up with discussing these. The Apostle states:

> ". . . . . Neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus. Then after three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter and abode with him fifteen days . . . . ." (Gal. i. 17, 18).

Where do the "three years" start from, his conversion or after his return to Damascus? We are inclined to say, from his conversion, but some do not take this view. In trying to solve problems of chronology it is easy to miss the purport of this portion of the epistle to the Galatians and that is Paul's independence of the twelve and any other human source for his ministry. Had we a fuller and more detailed chronology of this period in the Acts of the Apostles, doubtless chronological difficulties would vanish. Our exposition will therefore concentrate on the above main reason, which the epistle demonstrates, namely Paul's unique Gentile ministry and the gospel associated with it.

But before this took effect, he tells us that he made no attempt to get help from local believers or from the leaders at Jerusalem, but he went for a protracted period into Arabia, which presumably means the country around Damascus. In the quietude of this region apart from any other Christians, he could think things over under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, getting to know the Lord's will and deciding the next steps to take in his witness for Him (i. 15-17). This period ended by his return to Damascus (17). Paul continues his epistle by saying:

> "Then after three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter and abode with him fifteen days. But other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother" (i. 18, 19).

Again we are faced with chronological difficulties. From what point do we date the three years, from Paul's conversion or from his return from Arabia to Damascus? And is this the visit recorded in Acts ix. 27 (after "many days" had passed and this might cover three years Acts ix. 23), or was it the "famine relief" visit of Acts xi. 30? It would seem that the former is indicated, for the second visit was apparently paid from Antioch, not Damascus. What is clear is that for the first crucial years, the Apostle had not re-visited Jerusalem and by this time his gospel ministry as fully developed, so it was evident that he did not owe his gospel to the Jerusalem church and when he visited Peter (Cephas) it was to get to know him personally, and not to receive further details concerning the gospel which the risen Christ had communicated to him, though doubtless Paul would have been vitally interested to learn from Peter all he could reveal concerning the earthly life and ministry of the Lord Jesus.

In addition to this, Paul met James, the Lord's brother, who was able to add further details concerning the Lord's home life, but apart from these two, "other of the apostles saw I none" Paul declared, even though he was in Jerusalem (Gal. i. 19). In other words he had no prolonged contact with the leaders of the Jerusalem church before his own gospel was formed, and this gospel therefore owed nothing to them, but was entirely "by revelation of Jesus Christ" independent of all human contacts.

So much was depending upon this, that he makes a solemn assertion, "now the things that I write unto you, behold, before God, I lie not" (i. 20)—the independence of his ministry from the Twelve was crucial, so there must be no misunderstanding and misinterpretation of the facts. He goes on to state:

> "Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia and was unknown by face unto the churches of Judaea which were in Christ" (i. 21, 22).

If the visit to Jerusalem just described was the one recorded in Acts ix. 26-30 then the Apostle, omitting the brief stay at Caesarea, is now referring to his return to Tarsus, where we find him in Acts xi. 25, for Tarsus was situated in the province of Syria and Cilicia. Paul preached in this area quite independently of the mother church at Jerusalem, for he owed nothing to them as regards the gospel that he ministered. Not only this, but he was unknown personally to the churches of Judaea, that is the country churches as distinct from Jerusalem (i. 22). Yet they recognized the gospel that he preached as being the truth, even though it came from its one time bitterest enemy, and "they glorified God in me" (i. 24).

When we come to chapter ii. of Galatians we have another dating problem:

> "Then fourteen years after I went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas, and took Titus with me also" (ii. 1).

Does the Apostle mean fourteen years after this conversion or fourteen years after the first visit to Jerusalem? The most natural way to read his words is that he has the latter in mind and if this is so, and the first visit is that of Acts ix. 26, then this one must be either the visit of Acts xi. 30 (the "famine relief" one) or the council of Jerusalem visit of Acts xv. 2. In any case this represents a considerable lapse of time during which Paul was engaged in his Jewish and Gentile mission and there could not have been any doubts as to the gospel he preached during this period.

Why did he go to Jerusalem again? The Apostle is quick to tell us. It was "by revelation" (ii. 2). The Lord had made it quite clear to him that this was in His will and right throughout his life, the Apostle had one dominant purpose, namely to carry out the will of Christ whatever the cost; for it was His approval that he coveted above all else. We give the structure of this section of the epistle which has been exhibited by Charles H. Welch in The Apostle of the Reconciliation, for he vividly sets out the essential points of this most important visit and its bearing on the truth:

Galatians ii. 1 - 14.

A | 1, 2. | a | PAUL goes to Jerusalem for the faith.
b | BARNABAS stands fast with him.
B | 3-5. | c | Titus a Greek not compelled to be circumcised.
d | Paul's stand for THE TRUTH OF THE GOSPEL.
C | 6-10. | e | Those who seemed to be somewhat.
f | Nothing added to me.
g | Gospel of the Circumcision.—PETER.
g | Gospel of the Uncircumcision.—PAUL.
e | Those who seemed to be pillars.
f | Only . . . Remember the poor.
A | 11-13. | a | PETER comes to Antioch; overthrows the faith.
b | Even BARNABAS carried away.
B | 14. | d | Peter's walk against THE TRUTH OF THE GOSPEL.
c | Compelled Gentiles to Judaize.

In this analysis, Paul's absolute equality with the Twelve is made perfectly clear. The words of C. H. Welch are to the point here:

> "Notice how the structure brings into severe contrast the two chief actors. Paul's name is associated with a supreme fight for freedom and for the truth of the gospel. Peter's name is associated with blame, dissimulation, and with a walk contrary to the truth of the gospel. With the champion of reconciliation (Paul) Barnabas stands firm, but with the vacillating minister of the circumcision (Peter) Barnabas wavers and falls. Titus a Greek is brought forward as Paul's great object lesson. There, in the very citadel and shrine of the circumcision (Jerusalem), Titus, the Greek, was not compelled to be circumcised. Peter on the other hand, by his withdrawal from the table of the Gentiles, by the re-erection of the barrier broken down by God in Acts x. . . . . compelled these Gentiles to Judaize . . . . . Paul declares that at this most critical conference, when the whole subject of his ministry to the Gentiles was discussed 'they added nothing' to him, 'only that he should remember the poor'!".

No.4. ii. 4 - 16.
pp. 41 - 46

In the visit to Jerusalem described in the second chapter of the epistle Paul found disturbing elements. After stating that Titus, a Gentile was not compelled to be circumcised*, the apostle refers to:

> ". . . . . false brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, that they might bring us into bondage:" (ii. 4).

> [* - Some may be disturbed by a footnote in the N.E.B. where it is stated that "some witnesses", omitting hois oude at the beginning of verse 5 make the sense to mean that Paul did yield to the circumcision of Titus. The witnesses are not given, but full information is found in the critical notes of The Greek New Testament edited by Kurt Aland, Matthew Black, Bruce Metzger and Allen Wikgren. Most, if not all the modern translations ignore this reading as does the Nestle text. Bearing Paul's character in mind and the crucial struggle for the truth of the gospel in the context, we can ignore it too.]

The words in the Greek suggest that these false brethren had been deliberately 'planted' on the church and been brought in secretly to spy out their liberty in Christ and if possible to bring them back into bondage again. We cannot be sure whether the Jerusalem church or the Galatian church is meant, but it makes little difference. The main thing is that here was a Satanic onslaught on the gospel of the grace of God which the Apostle of liberty resisted to the utmost, so that its purity and its very existence might be preserved for the future:

> "To whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour; that the truth of the gospel might continue with you" (ii. 5).

We little realize what we owe to the courageous stand of this man, so that the gospel might not be blotted out, but continue, not only with the believers of the time, but also right through to us today. At Jerusalem, in spite of the "somebodies" and "somewhats" and the insidious infiltration of the enemy, one man, by the grace of God, in the face of all odds, stands resolutely for the truth and refuses to yield. All the Jewish leaders could do was to ask him "to remember the poor!". They could add nothing to him (ii. 6). At a crucial time like this, personalities pale into insignificance. Truth must have first place. Let us always remember this fact. We little know what practical effects a faithful stand can have on others. Paul had been called and fully qualified by the risen Christ and this had been abundantly vindicated by the Lord in the saving response of many to the Christ-given gospel of grace, apart from works or merit, that he had faithfully preached. How many times such a situation has occurred in past history, only the Lord knows. It surely is perfectly clear, that today, with its increasing darkness, there is a need to exhibit such an unyielding response as that given by Paul at the beginning, even though we have to stand by ourselves, humanly speaking.

In his later letters, the Apostle gives practical evidence that he had not forgotten the material needs of believers who were poor, for he raised a substantial fund among the Gentile churches for them which he and others took to Jerusalem on the occasion of his last visit (I Cor. xvi. 1-4). In Gal. ii. 10 he asserts "which very thing I was eager to do" (R.S.V.).

Another very important thing that resulted from this visit to Jerusalem was the complete acceptance of Paul's apostleship to the Gentiles by the Jewish leaders and recognition of the fact that there was perfect equality between him and the Twelve. This was sealed by giving the right hands of fellowship and was a sign of friendship and trust. What a blow all this must have been to the Judaizers! Not only was Paul's gospel recognized by the leaders of the mother church at Jerusalem, but his apostleship as well. Thus, in a wonderful way, the Lord vindicated His servant.

But what did Paul mean by "the gospel of the circumcision"? and "the gospel of the uncircumcision"? This should not be read as the gospel to the circumcision (Jew) and uncircumcision (Gentile). At the same time we must recognize that there are not two different ways in which God saves sinners. This would be foreign to the whole Bible. The Lord Jesus as sin-bearer on the cross, in His death and resurrection forms the one all-sufficient basis for the salvation of the sinner, whether Jew or Gentile. In spite of this, there were differences in the presentation of the Gospel owing to the utter contrasting backgrounds of the Jew in covenant relationship with God and the pagan Gentile, in all his darkness and ignorance of God and His Word. One has only to read Eph. ii. 11, 12 to see this:

> "Wherefore remember that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh who are called the uncircumcision by that which is called circumcision in the flesh made by hands: that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world:", added to which desperate condition they had no written revelation from God to make Him known to themselves. This was Israel's prerogative, for to them had been committed the 'oracles' (words) of God, i.e. the Old Testament Scriptures. This is why the Apostle Paul, when confronted with the pagans at Athens, makes no attempt to quote these Scriptures for they would have meant nothing to them. On the other hand in his contacts with the Jewish synagogues on his missionary travels he reasoned with them out of the Scriptures (Acts xvii. 1, 2); likewise the Apostle Peter in Acts iii. 19-26. This context is a good illustration of the "gospel of the circumcision". Peter addresses his hearers as "ye men of Israel" (Acts iii 12) and bluntly accuses them of murdering the Lord Jesus Christ (verses 13-15). In spite of the magnitude of this sin, he proclaims to them (the circumcision) the good news (gospel) of forgiveness. He urges them to repent (change their attitude of mind) and turn back to God (be converted). The result of this would be that their sins would be blotted out (19), Christ would return to them, and the earthly kingdom purpose of God which had been the theme of all the O.T. prophets, would then be fulfilled and the kingdom restored. He reminded them that they were the children of Abraham to whom the Lord had made wonderful unconditional and eternal promises concerning the seed and the land.

If this was not good news in the fullest sense to sinning and backsliding Israel, then words have no meaning. But it rested squarely upon the redeeming work of Christ on the cross, just as Paul's gospel did.

The leaders of the Jerusalem church, James, Peter and John fully admitted this and therefore sealed the matter by giving the "right hands of fellowship" (Gal. ii. 9), thereby showing that there was no rivalry between them even though they went to the circumcision (Israel), while Paul's sphere was the "heathen" (the Gentiles). In other words, it was recognized that his was a Christ-directed ministry independent of the Twelve and the mother church at Jerusalem.

It was only possibly a little while later that the incident recorded in verses 11-16 took place. It is always lamentable when violent disagreement occurs between believers over the Word of God and its practice, and even worse when it is in public with the possibility of unbelievers being present. Doubtless Paul would rather have dealt privately with Peter's inconsistent walk, but danger was not past, even though the result of the meeting with the Jewish leaders had proved satisfactory. By his actions, Peter was denying the reconciliation that commenced in Acts x. There God had showed him that it was now His will that the barrier between Jew and Gentile should be removed, so that Gentiles could be saved and be grafted in to the stock of Israel and share their covenant blessings (Rom. xi. 16-18) and also act as a spur to the nation "to provoke them to jealousy" (Rom. x. 19; xi. 11).

It was logical therefore that Peter could now have close fellowship with Gentile believers and even share his meals with them. Before Acts x. Peter's attitude would have been entirely different. As he said to Cornelius:

> "Ye know how it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company or come unto one of another nation, but God hath showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean" (Acts x. 28).

The divine reversal Peter had obeyed until "certain came from James . . . . ., but when they were come, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision" (Gal. ii. 11, 12). Those who came were obviously Judaizers, hence Peter's fear, though we need not assume that they were sent from James with his authority. In fact Acts xv. 24 denies this. Peter probably remembered the rebuke the Jerusalem believers had given him for eating with the Gentiles (Acts xi. 1-18). The fear of man that bringeth a snare has been at the root of many an action that has resulted in backsliding. Fear can make cowards of us all. It was not only the lapse of a prominent leader that was to be regretted but the bad effect that this action had on others and even Barnabas:

> "The other Jews joined him (Peter) in his hypocrisy, so that by their hypocrisy even Barnabas was led astray" (Gal. ii. 13, N.I.V.).

Both courage and fear can be contagious. We can radiate both by our actions. Here at Antioch Paul had to act quickly before the rot spread any further and as a consequence he had to face Peter publicly and rebuke him, regrettable though this was, and once more make a public declaration of the truth of the gospel.

From verse 15 to the end of the chapter, there follows a passage of close theological argument, anticipating chapters iii. and iv. We have a problem like that which meets us often in John's gospel, in deciding where Paul's words to Peter end and his argument relating to the truth for the benefit of the Galatian begins.

Probably the whole section was delivered to Peter and the believers present, for all of it related to the pressing problem of the moment. Paul remonstrates with Peter by reminding him, that although he was a Jew by birth and hedged in by the food restrictions of the law, yet now, under God's instruction, he fully shared meals with Gentile believers. Then, through fear he withdraws and puts up the barrier again:

> "When I saw that they were not acting in line with the truth of the gospel, I said to Peter in front of them all, you are a Jew, yet you live like a Gentile and not like a Jew. How is it, then, that you force Gentiles to follow Jewish customs?" (Gal. ii. 14, N.I.V.).
> "For if I build again the things which I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor" (ii. 18).

Not only was Peter's action undoing what God had taught him in Acts x., but it could be construed that works and law-keeping were necessary for acceptance with God. But the Lord Jesus, in His earthly ministry had made it clear that He had not come for people who thought themselves to be righteous, but for sinners who needed repentance (Matt.ix.13). And later on, Paul, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, was going to declare that "there is none righteous, no, not one", and that "all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. iii. 11, 23). Consequently he continued by saying to Peter:

> "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ and not by the works of the law; for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified" (ii. 16).

Justification by faith in Christ was at the heart of the gospel which had been committed to the Apostle Paul. In English we can express "justification" by the word "righteousness", but it is important to remember that there is no such distinction in the Greek word or its derivatives. "Just" and "righteous" are similar in thought. A righteous being, as God uses the term, is one that has never sinned once in thought, word or deed and is therefore perfect inside as well as outside. It should be obvious that no such being has walked this earth since the fall of Adam (Psa. cxliii. 2), with the exception of One, Who is God manifest in the flesh.

All this and more is developed in Romans written later. What is the meaning of "the faith of Christ"? This could be construed as an objective genitive and be rendered "faith in Christ" as the R.V. and many modern translations. On the other hand faith is often used as the equivalent of faithfulness, and then the constant faithfulness and unchangeability of the redeeming work of the Lord Jesus would be the basis of justification rather than the believers' faith in Him. Both are of course true and can be looked on as two aspects of the great work of redemption which has been worked out by God alone in Christ Jesus our Lord.

No.5. ii. 20 - iii. 9.
pp. 72 - 77

The Apostle Paul finishes his address to Peter publicly in the well-known words of Gal. ii. 20, 21:

> "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me, and gave Himself for me. I do not frustrate the grace of God: for if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain."

These words are really a concise summary of the teaching he later gives in the epistle to the Romans, specially in chapters vi. and vii. Saul the zealous Pharisee, had to learn the real place of the law of God as it affects mankind as sinners. What meant so much to him in his pre-Christian life, he found to be useless in conquering the great problem of sin. Once he could say that "touching the righteousness in the law he was blameless" (Phil. iii. 6). That is to say, as far as external observance of the law was concerned, he was correct in all details. What he had never realized to this point was that the law touches the mind first of all. He said:

> ". . . . . I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet" (Rom. vii. 7).

Now lust originates in the mind, and the law of God shows this up remorselessly, but gives no power to conquer or eradicate it. The result for Paul was

> "For sin, taking occasion by the commandment (the law) deceived me, and by it slew me" (Rom. vii. 11).

This painful experience proved to be the death knell to all the Apostle's hopes for complete personal righteousness by his own efforts. The next move, if there was to be one, must come from God. And it did, by the same means, namely death followed by resurrection life, for the Lord unfolded to Paul the great truth of identification with Christ, in His crucifixion, death, burial and resurrection (Rom. vi. 1-11), and it is noteworthy that this doctrine is only found in Paul's writings.

When we understand this, we are able to plumb the depths of Gal. ii. 20. "I have been crucified with Christ" declares the Apostle. The verb is in the perfect tense in the Greek, expressing past action issuing in abiding results. Nevertheless he is abundantly alive, for the power and life of the risen Christ now indwells him and takes complete control from this moment onwards.

Paul gladly yielded to all this, for it was the complete answer to all his personal problems. He did not attempt to frustrate the grace of God that had worked in this marvelous way. He now realized that "righteousness inside and out" could never come by law-keeping. If it could then the sacrificial death of Christ with all its agony and darkness was a waste of time and of no value whatsoever (verse 21) to deal with the overwhelming problem of sin.

All these words he addressed publicly to Peter and those with him, doubtless hoping and praying they would recognize the great mistake Peter had made by re-erecting the barriers of the law. This matter was so basic and important that the next chapter takes it further, and what Paul had argued from his own spiritual experience, he now shows to be grounded upon the Scriptures themselves. And for this, he finds the example of Abraham a perfect illustration.

When we study the record of this patriarch, we find that all the basic truths of Christianity are reflected in his life. Consequently we find him also brought forward as an example in the epistle to the Hebrews and the epistle of James. Abraham was a Gentile, not a Jew, though he became their ancestor. He knew nothing of Moses' law with its ritual, its types and shadows, nor of the temple that followed. The Judaizers quoted Moses, but Paul quotes Abraham with the promises of grace granted him by God. If they refer to centuries of tradition and practice, he will appeal to the great covenant based on grace that was older still.

But before he does this, he makes a personal appeal to the Galatians:

> "You foolish Galatians: Who has bewitched you? Before your eyes Jesus Christ was clearly portrayed as crucified. I would like to learn one thing from you; did you receive the Spirit by observing the law, or by believing what you heard? Are you so foolish? After beginning with the Spirit, are you trying to attain perfection by human effort?" (Gal. iii. 1-3, N.I.V.).

Their stupidity amazed Paul. Had they been bewitched by someone? The word "bewitched" has links with the English "fascinated". They had listened to the glib tongues from Jerusalem and doubtless these had presented their case very persuasively so that the Galatians had become fascinated by their arguments. And yet Paul, in his initial ministry to them, had so truthfully and vividly brought before them a crucified Christ as the only answer to their needs, that it was as though the Lord Jesus had been "placarded" before them. This is the sense of the Greek proegraphe. The large hoardings that carry advertisements by road sides would be a modern example. A crucified Messiah, so presented, cut the ground from under the Judaizers feet with all their talk about the law of Moses.

The Apostle now asks them a simple question, how did their Christian life begin? Did it begin by their own efforts, by their own faulty attempts to obey the law? Or did it begin in simple faith in that crucified One which was ministered to them by the Spirit? That is, they received the Truth by hearing the Word of God as spoken by Paul and believing it without any works of merit on their part.

Furthermore, their belief had been followed by persecution from their fellow countrymen. Had this been to no purpose and been utterly valueless? (iii. 4). In verse 3 we have "spirit" and "flesh" put in antithesis. When Paul does this the normal meaning is the new nature given by the Holy Spirit at the new birth as opposed to the sinful old nature inherited from fallen Adam. The ensuing conflict from these two opposites is described by Paul from his own experience in Rom. vii. Here the Galatian believers are forcibly reminded that their salvation commenced with the Holy Spirit's work, and did they imagine that further spiritual progress could be made by something as utterly imperfect as the sinful old nature?

The Acts period was one of evidential miracles which accompanied the ministry of the earthly kingdom in the days of the Lord Jesus and with the renewed offer of mercy to Israel as revealed during the Acts of the Apostles. These special kingdom gifts are referred to in verse 5:

> "He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?"

To clinch his argument the Apostle immediately cites the example of Abraham, for he did exactly what Paul was urging the Galatian believers to do, namely to believe God, apart from any works of his own, and thereby it was accounted to him by God for righteousness. Abraham realized he could do nothing himself, but throwing himself on God, he reckoned that the Lord could do what he could not. Accepting this humble position of utter dependence, he was 'justified' or accounted righteous. It should have been obvious to the Galatians that any other attitude would have been stubborn pride and self-satisfaction:

> "Even as Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness, know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen (i.e. Gentiles) through faith, preached before the gospel to Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham" (iii. 6-9).

It is striking how Scripture is personified as "seeing beforehand" and "preaching" to Abraham. The written Word is indissolubly linked with the Living Word, and is given the attributes of God, in this instance, foreknowledge. God's choice by grace of the pagan Abram had one great object in view to produce a race that He would redeem and spiritually educate so that they as His representatives could take the knowledge of Himself and His salvation to the ends of the earth. This redemption and justification could only be along the same lines as their progenitor, Abraham, that is by complete trust in the salvation which God alone can provide. If they did not know in their experience this salvation by faith alone, how could they preach it to the world? They had to go through the long discipline of being under the law given through Moses not to save them but to prove the opposite, that this law with its great standard of absolute righteousness can only condemn sinners; it can never save or justify them.

All this and more the Apostle Paul under the guidance of the Holy Spirit is going to argue from the O.T. Scriptures, which was the Bible of believers living at this time.

In what sense could the Gospel be preached before the earthly coming of the Saviour and the sacrificial offering of Himself on the cross? This was possibly because in the divine foreview, the seed of Abraham had Christ in view as the seed as well as the nation of Israel (Matt. i. 1). This explains the rather perplexing argument in chapter iii. 16 which we shall deal with in its place.

Paul can no firmly assert that "They which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham" (iii. 9). These men of faith are one with Abraham in their firm trust in God and His provision by grace of that all-needed righteousness which they could never produce themselves.

It is the same today. Mankind can be divided into two classes, or at least those who have come under the sound of the gospel of Christ. Either like Abraham of old, they have realized their sin and failing and their utter inability to eradicate it and its consequence, death, or they persuade themselves that, given time, they will one day be able to work out their own salvation and make themselves perfect. None seem to agree as to how this is going to be accomplished, but they all delude themselves by wishful thinking that it can be realized if they work hard enough. The epistles to the Galatians and Romans show the utter falsity of such ideas. God's good news about His Son and what has been accomplished by Him for sinners is the only answer, and this is the glorious gospel that we have to proclaim "in season and out of season" (II Tim. iv. 2-4) while opportunity lasts and this is what the Apostle Paul was urging on the believers in Galatia.

No.6. iii. 10 - 18.

Having cited Abraham as an excellent example of the faith that takes God at His Word without trying to add human works or merit, the Apostle Paul passes on to the law of God given through Moses. Doubtless the Judaizers would deem the reference to Abraham to be irrelevant. The main point to them was the law and the necessity for practicing it in order to be saved and it was this fundamental error they were pressing on the Galatians.

Paul goes to the heart of the matter straight away by stressing that this law was not just a string of precepts to be talked about and admired. It was a rigid code to be obeyed to the letter continuously without one flaw, and the failure to do this brought the offender under nothing less than the curse of God. To prove this point he quotes Deut. xxvii. 26:

> "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse, for it is written Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of the law to do them . . . . .", and this is followed by the first verse of the next chapter "and it shall come to pass, if thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe and do all

His commandments which I command thee this day . . . . ." (Deut. xxviii. 1). It must never be forgotten that only one people of the earth received the law of God and that was the people of Israel and they undertook by solemn covenant to keep it in all its details. After reciting the law to the people, we are told that Moses confirmed the covenant by the sprinkling of blood on the altar and the people themselves:

> "And he took the book of the covenant (the law) and read it in the audience of the people; and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do and be obedient. And Moses took the blood and sprinkled it on the people and said, Behold, the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words" (Exod.xxiv.8).

There is a lot of loose thinking today about the law of Moses. Too often it is forgotten that this was a solemn covenant made between Jehovah and His earthly people Israel alone. It was never given as a covenant to any Gentile nation. Therefore when the question is asked, who comes under the curse of God? the Scriptural answer is perfectly clear, the Jewish nation.

> "Now we know what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law" (Rom. iii. 19).

Consequently the Jew as a sinner was under a double disability. He was not only under the dominion of sin and death as the whole human race has been since the fall of Adam, but was in addition a breaker of the covenant of the law, the penalty of which was God's curse. Contrary to popular opinion, Adam as a sinner was not cursed by God. It was the serpent and the ground that was cursed for Adam's sake (Gen. iii. 14, 17). While it is true to say that the whole human race as sinners have broken God's law for we are "all under sin" (Rom. iii. 9) yet it was only one section of them (the nation of Israel) who have covenanted with God to keep this law, knowing at the same time what would be the consequence of breaking that covenant, namely coming under the terrible curse of God. It is noteworthy that God refers to the law as the old covenant which Israel 'broke' (Jer. xxxi. 32).

It was in this sense that the Jew was not only under sin but "under the law" as Paul expresses it in Romans and Galatians and "as many as are under the works of the law are under the curse, for it is written, Cursed is everyone that continueth not in all things which are in the book of the law to do them" (Gal. iii. 10), and this was clearly recited to Israel and not to any other nation. The conditions of this divine code had been made abundantly clear to this people. It consisted of commandments, all of which had to be kept in practice not theory, and this meant that not one slips in thought, word or deed could be tolerated during the span of human life. Ninety nine percent obedience was not sufficient; it must be one hundred percent. Nothing less than this would be counted as "keeping the law".

It should have been obvious that no failing creature could ever approximate to such a standard. As we have before pointed out, the law set out the high standards of God but gave no power or ability to keep them. All it could do was to show up the sinfulness of sin, and condemn it, bringing in the verdict of guilty (Rom. iii. 9-19) and finally shutting us all up to one remedy and only one, namely Christ and His redemptive work for us. This is going to be the argument of Gal. iii. 24:

> "Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ that we might be justified by faith."

The Apostle therefore proceeds in his argument:

> "But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident for, the just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith, but the man that doeth them shall live in them" (Gal. iii. 11, 12).

Here we come to a key-text which forms the Scriptural basis of Paul's gospel ministry, "the just shall live by faith", quoted from Hab. ii. 4 and is also used in Rom. i. 17 and Heb. x. 38. The Hebrew emunah translated 'faith' in Habakkuk means steadfastness and fidelity and is accompanied by the pronoun 'his', whereas the Septuagint (the Greek translation of the O.T.) supplies the pronoun "My" and reads "the righteous one will live by My faithfulness". Paul omits the pronouns but there can be no doubt that, taking the whole of this teaching on justification into account he means that the righteous one will live (in future resurrection life) because of his faith in the Lord's faithfulness; quite apart from any works of effort on this part.

Both Old and New Testaments regard righteousness in legal terms. We quote Charles H. Welch (Just and the Justifier, p.18) here:

1. God is looked upon as a Judge (Isa. i. 7, 8; Rom. viii. 33).
2. The person to be justified is guilty. He is looked upon as exposed to the judgment of God (Rom. i. 32), and whose mouth is shut (Rom. iii. 19).
3. There are three accusers: (i.) The law (John v. 45); (ii.) Conscience (Rom. ii. 15); (iii.) Satan (Zech. iii. 2 and Rev. xii. 10).
4. The charge is drawn up in legal handwriting (Col. ii. 14).
5. The gospel provides the guilty person with a plea (Rom. iii. 23-25).
6. The Lord Himself is the Advocate (I John ii. 1, 2).
7. The sentence for believers is one of complete forgiveness, justification, acceptance, and title to life and to inheritance (Rom. viii. 1, 33, 34; II Cor. v. 21).

Thus it is that justification by faith in the teaching expounded by Paul and inspired by the Spirit of God, means that righteousness or complete rightness which is reckoned by God to the believer in Christ, in this way leaving him accepted and assured in Christ forever.

It is important to realize that the three quotations of Hab. ii. 4 found in the N.T. stress a different word each time. In Romans the emphasis is in the word 'just' or 'righteous', the two English words referring to the one word used in the Greek (dikaios). In Galatians 'faith' is the important word as opposed to works and human merit; whereas in Hebrews the stress is on the word 'live' for here we have the personal response in spite of discouragement and difficulty, and the need to "go on to maturity (perfection)".

The Apostle Paul, in the context we are studying, makes it quite clear that the law of God is certainly not "through or by faith", that is, it has nothing to do with the thought of receiving a right standing with God as a gracious gift through faith in Christ. Rather it stresses that if works are to be the basis of forgiveness and life eternal, then such obedience to the law must be absolutely complete (Gal. iii. 12) and that is utterly impossible for any human being because all the world is guilty before a righteous God. There is "none righteous, no, not one" (Rom. iii. 10, 19). Thus the emptiness and deceitfulness of the Judaizers' contention that the law must be introduced into the gospel is made manifest.

Paul goes on to deal with the fact that, in breaking the covenant of the law the Jew came under its curse which was the terrible penalty imposed by the Old Testament upon law-breakers. Hence the need for their Messiah to bear that curse so that they could be for ever freed from it:

> "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us; for it is written cursed is everyone that hangeth on a tree" (Gal. iii. 13).

The Apostle here quotes Deut. xxi. 23 "a hanged man is accursed by God". This does not mean that he was cursed because he hung from a tree, but rather that this was the outward sign that he had broken the covenant of law and brought the curse and punishment upon himself.

This was a death of degradation and shame and into this terrible experience the Lord Jesus willingly entered so that those under the curse might be freed from it for ever. He Himself became the accursed one to free those under the curse! (see also II Cor. v. 21). Perhaps it was at this point on calvary's cross that the Father had to turn away His gaze from His beloved Son, which wrung those words of agony from Christ "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" (Matt. xxvii. 46). During those hours of physical darkness we shall never know what bearing the penalty for our sins cost the Saviour. Keeping this in mind, may God constantly deliver us from a light estimate of sin.

Verse 14 which follows shows that the deliverance of Israel from the curse of a broken covenant of law was utterly essential if the earthly kingdom purpose of God was to be fulfilled, the Gentile world reached and the unconditional promise to Abraham realized, that in his seed all families of the earth should be blessed (Gen. xii.). Paul expresses it in this way:

> ". . . . . that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith" (Gal. iii. 14).

And now, lest anyone should argue that the law nullified these earlier promises of God to Abraham, the Apostle shows that this was impossible. In order to make this clear he gives as an example a man's last will and testament. The Greek diatheke can mean covenant or testament. In order to understand this passage we must remove from our minds the modern conception of making a will, as the legal requirements were different in N.T. days. For instance Paul says "though it be a man's covenant (or will), yet if it be confirmed no man disannulleth or added thereto". Adding to a confirmed will was illegal, whereas today a codicil can always be added to a will provided it is properly witnessed.

We are greatly indebted in many respects to the researches of Sir William Ramsay in Asia Minor and in his Historical Commentary on St. Paul's epistle to the Galatians he deals with the process of adoption and will-making. He writes:

> "The idea that they who follow the principle of faith are sons of Abraham, whatever family they belong to by nature, would certainly be understood by the Galatians as referring to the legal process called adoption, huiothesia.
> Adoption was a kind of embryo will; the adopted son became the owner of the property, and the property could pass to a person that was naturally outside the family only through his being adopted. The adoption was a sort of will-making; and this ancient form of will was irrevocable and public. The terms 'son' and 'heir' are interchangeable.
>
> An illustration from the ordinary fact of society, as it existed in the Galatian cities, is here stated: 'I speak after the manner of men'. The will (diatheke) of a human being is irrevocable when once duly executed. But, if Paul is speaking about a will, how can he say, after it is once made, it is irrevocable?
> Such irrevocability was a characteristic feature of Greek law, according to which an heir outside the family must be adopted into the family; and the adoption was the will-making. The testator, after adopting his heir, could not subsequently take away from him his share of the inheritance or impose new conditions on his succession. The Roman-Syrian Law Book will illustrate this passage of the Epistle. It actually lays down the principle that a man can never put away an adopted son, and that he cannot put away a real son without good ground. It is remarkable that the adopted son should have a stronger position than the son by birth; yet it is so. The expression in Gal. iii. 15, 'when it hath been confirmed' must also be observed. Every will had to be passed through the Record Office of the city. It was not regarded in the Greek law as a purely private document. It must be deposited in the Record Office."

From this extract it will be seen that a man's will made at this period of history gave the Apostle Paul a splendid illustration to show that the law of Moses given 430 years later could not abrogate God's unconditional promise to Abraham. Just as a human testament once made and completed could never be altered in early N.T. days, so the Lord's promises of grace to Abraham could not be changed or rendered null and void by Moses' law or by anything else:

> "And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise, but God gave it to Abraham by promise" (iii. 17, 18).

Some may have a difficulty with verse 16:

> "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one and to thy seed which is Christ."

This verse is beloved of amillennialists who want to spiritualize everything connected with the kingdom of God even if it relates to the earth. They reject the idea that Abraham's seed can refer to the literal people of Israel and this is the verse they frequently quote. But if they would only look down the chapter and read the last verse this is what they would find:

> "And if ye (the Galatian believers) be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise."

So Abraham has a literal seed after all! Is Paul contradicting himself? No, not when one faces all the Scriptural facts. In verse 16 Paul is alluding to Gen. xxi. 12:

> ". . . . . for in Isaac shall thy seed be called."

The Hebrew zera is a collective noun and is used here as a singular with a singular verb. But if we turn to Gen. xvii. 7 we read:

> "And I will establish My covenant between Me and thee and thy seed (zera) after thee in their generations, for an everlasting covenant . . . . .".

Here zera is obviously treated as a plural (generations) and the truth of the matter is that the Seed, Christ and the seed (Abraham's posterity) is looked on as a unity in the kingdom purposes of God and both are necessary in the divine plan. The Lord Jesus Christ is the one foundation for the whole redemptive purpose of God which embraces both heaven and earth. In this way the Apostle was able to dispose of objections that might be made by any Judaistic opposer, that the law of Moses cancelled the promises of grace made to Abraham four centuries before.

No.7. iii. 19 - iv. 12.
pp. 133 - 138

The Apostle now goes on to ask the question "What, then, was the purpose of the law?" (Gal. iii. 19, N.I.V.) and we do well to pause and consider what the Scripture says the law of Moses can or cannot do, lest we start interposing our own ideas. We commence with the fact that it was "holy, just and good" (Rom. vii. 12, 14, 16). It was God's law and therefore perfect. Its main aim was to show up sin in its true colours, as the next verse in Galatians shows:

> "It was added because of transgressions till the Seed should come to whom the promise was made" (Gal. iii. 19).
> "I had not known sin, but by the law; for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet" (Rom. vii. 7).

It is well that we note what the Word of God tells us what the law can and cannot do:

(1) It cannot give eternal life (Gal. iii. 21). In O.T. days it could give as a blessing lengthened human life. In referring to the law relating to the obedience of children to parents, Paul could add in Ephesians "that it may be well with thee and thou mayest live long on the earth" (Eph. vi. 2, 3).

(2) The law could not give all-needed righteousness (Gal. ii. 21).

(3) It could not give a divine inheritance either now or in the future (Gal. iii. 18).
(4) The law cannot perfect or lead to spiritual maturity (Heb. vii. 19).
(5) It was only a "shadow" of good things to come (Heb. x. 1).
(6) It was "weak on account of the flesh", that is sinful human nature could not attain to its high standard (Rom. viii. 3).
(7) Its final purpose was to lead to Christ—to shut the sinner up to Christ as the only complete remedy for his sinful condition (Gal. iii. 24).

It was summed up in one word "love", but God's standard of love not man's. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart", "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself". "He that loveth another hath fulfilled the law . . . . . love worketh no ill to his neighbour, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law" (Rom. xiii. 8-10).

But it is this very thing that failing man cannot do. Love in terms of human conception must be banished from the mind. This is a poor sordid thing by comparison. But for the believer, God's love has been "shed abroad" (poured out) in our hearts (Romans v. 5). However the Apostle did not seek to minimize in any way the law of God given through Moses. It was given in awe-inspiring majesty through the mediation of angels and Moses (Acts vii. 53). It was "ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator" (Gal. iii. 19). This shows there must be two contracting parties, God on the one hand and Israel on the other. When God dealt with Abraham, no such mediation was needed and Abraham was even put to sleep, that all might be of God's doing (Gen. xv. 12) for this was all of grace.

This is so much better than law which, in spite of its standards, cannot annul the promises of God.

Are these two in opposition? "Is the law against the promises of God?" (Gal. iii. 21). This is impossible for it would imply that there is inner conflict in the mind of God. Promise and law come equally from God but need to be related to the place the Scriptures reveal that they occupy in His purpose. The law shuts up (concludes) all under sin, leaving one way out and that is solely through Christ Jesus by grace and received on the principle of faith (iii. 22).

Paul illustrates what he means by being "shut up under sin" by giving the duties of a guardian slave, translated "schoolmaster" in the A.V.

> "Among the Greeks and Romans the name was applied to trustworthy slaves who were charged with the duty of supervising the life and morals of the boys belonging to the better class. The boys were not allowed so much as to step out of the house without them before arriving at the age of manhood" (Thayer).

The time in the experience of the Galatians that this illustrated was likened to bondage, but now they are all "the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus" (iii. 26) and the bondage is cancelled and in its place is sonship with divine inheritance in view. Not only this, but by the redemptive work of Christ which has completely liberated them, they are welded together as an entity in Christ Jesus. They are one in Him and all earthly labels and divisions have vanished.

> ". . . . . there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus" (iii. 28).

"In Christ Jesus" gives their standing in Christ and they join the spiritual ranks of faithful Abraham and those who walked in his footsteps.

The Apostle now contrasts the conditions under the sphere of the law with this new and wonderful position "in Christ" as being an heir with freedom and goes back to the illustration of the pedagogue:

> "What I am saying is that as long as the heir is a child, he is no different from a slave, although he owns the whole estate. He is subject to guardians and trustees until the time set by the father. So also, when we were children, we were in slavery under the basic principles of the world. But when the time had fully come, God sent His Son, born of a woman, born under the law to redeem those under the law, that we might receive the full rights of sons. Because you are sons, God sent the Spirit of His Son into our hearts, the Spirit Who calls out Abba, Father. So you are no longer a slave, but a son, and since you are a son, God made you also an heir" (Gal. iv. 1-7, N.I.V.).

There is only one word that can describe the condition of those who are under the dominion of the law and the principles of the world, that is slavery. The heir, while he is a minor, knows nothing of freedom but is hedged around with restraints and prohibitions until he attains his majority (maturity?). The Apostle now applies this to the time before redemption when all were in bondage. Stoicheia means "elementary principles" or stages of religious experience (whether Jewish or Gentile) which they have gone through in the past, but are now outdated and abolished by Christ. If the Galatians had been Gentile pagans before they were saved, they could scarcely have been said to be in slavery to Jewish law from any angle. The margin of the New English Bible translates Gal. iv. 3 "elementary ideas belonging to the world".

However some modern translators render stoicheia "elemental spirits of the world" which in popular belief were often linked in men's minds with spiritual forces. These were thought to control the world as in astrology today. This was the ground from which the later Jewish gnosticism was to grow.

Paul describes these "elements" in verse 9 as "weak and beggarly" or poor, and marvels that the Galatians prepared to go back to the slavery from which they had been redeemed. And the basis of this deliverance is given in verses 4 and 5:

> "But when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons" (iv. 4, 5).

Scripture asserts that there is a time and season to every purpose under heaven. The purpose or plan of God is called "the purpose of the ages" (literally Eph. iii. 11). Nations had been permitted to grope in darkness and these times are called "the times of this ignorance" Acts xvii. 30. Many forms of government had been tried and found wanting, Jewish religion, Greek wisdom and Roman power all stood self-confessed failures. The time had come for the Redeemer to be born, thus stressing His full humanity as well as His deity. Here at last is the promised Seed of the woman Who will crush the serpent's head.

Not only this but He was born "under law" and as a Jew, this could only mean the law of Moses. Thus He might ransom and deliver those who were under the law with the penalty of God's curse if it was broken. We are told that Christ, the sinless One, completely kept the law and was therefore in the position of rescuing those who were enslaved by it in order that they might receive the status of sons with a divine inheritance in view. To such God sent forth the Spirit of His Son in their hearts (iv. 6). Exactly the same word exapesteilen is used of God's action as has already been used in verse 4 of His sending the Son. It is not strange therefore that the Spirit is described as "the Spirit of His Son". The result of this is the intimate words "Abba" which is Aramaic meaning "my Father". The two words Abba and Father come together in Mark xiv. 36 and Romans viii. 15. Romans viii. is the chapter of sonship, expressing a precious truth and priceless privilege. Those redeemed in this way leave slavery behind for ever.

Having established this, the Apostle turns back to the problem of the Galatians slipping back to bondage "How turn ye again . . . . . ye desire again". It was inexplicable to him that they were willing to step down from the high and wonderful position into which free grace had placed them to the rudimentary things of the law, with its ceremonies, its rites, it days and observances. If they were not returning to idolatry, they were going back to childhood with its lack of freedom.

Paul venerated the law; it was "holy, just and good" to him (Rom. vii. 12) yet because of man's sinful nature, it was "weak on account of the flesh" (Rom. viii. 3) and he does not hesitate to place it on a parallel with the elements of paganism when such a misuse of the law becomes a competitor with, or a perfector of the gospel of grace (verses 7-11).

> "I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed on you labour in vain" (Gal. iv. 11).

No one worked harder than the Apostle, but he strongly objected to wasting his time and strength. In no sense was Paul "afraid of" the Galatians. Rather he means "I am fearful for you" (see Gal. ii. 2; Phil. ii. 16; I Thess. ii. 1; iii. 5).

Paul now sums up by saying:

> "Brethren, I beseech you, be as I am; for I am as you are; ye have not injured me at all" (iv. 12).

To put it more plainly "put yourself in my place . . . . . for I have put myself in yours". Is Paul saying in effect "let us be friends" or does he mean that he, a Hebrew and a Pharisee, had already become like a Gentile so far as the law was concerned and he appeals to the Galatians to take their stand with him? Moffatt's translation is very free:

> "Do take my line, brothers, just as I once took yours."

We feel that the second interpretation is correct and fits in with the tone of the epistle.

No.8. iv. 12 - v. 6.
pp. 151 - 156

The Apostle Paul now gives a personal appeal to the Galatian believers, referring to their past love, their present zeal and the evil influence of the Judaizers which was taking them back from freedom to bondage.

The Apostle assures them that, rather than feeling they had injured him at all, he entertained the warmest recollection of the way they had received him:

> ". . . . . ye have not injured me at all. Ye know how through infirmity of the flesh I preached the gospel unto you at the first" (Gal. iv. 12, 13).

There is the possibility that this illness is synonymous with Paul's thorn in the flesh (II Cor. xii. 7). On the other hand it could read "the trial that you endured through the condition of my body". Whatever the ailment was, it was not only incapacitating, but also unsightly yet they resisted any temptation to show disgust with his appearance.

> "And my temptation (trial) which was in my flesh ye despised not nor rejected; but received me as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus" (iv. 14).

The word translated "reject" is ekptuo, literally "to spit out", suggesting that the sickness which had fallen on Paul rendered him objectionable to look at.

> "What happened to all your joy? I can testify that, if you could have done so, you would have torn out your eyes and given them to me" (iv. 15, N.I.V.).

What was the illness which was afflicting Paul? There have been scores of guesses by expositors, but surely the Apostle has given us a clue here. Why should the Galatians have been ready to hand over their eyes to him, could they have done so, if his eyesight had been normal? There would have been no point in using such a phrase. There can be little doubt that Paul suffered from some form of eye disease that possibly was prevalent in the East, and occurred through the weakness left by the overwhelming vision he had received on the road to Damascus which occasioned blindness with such a disease, accompanied by a constant discharge, he would have been very conscious of the spectacle he presented. Yet this had not affected the Galatians. Rather they had joyfully received him as though he was an angel sent by God or even Christ Himself. With this in mind he adds:

> "Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?" (iv. 16).

Verses 17 and 18 deal with the troublers who were upsetting believers. The A.V. is certainly not clear and we give the N.I.V. rendering:

> "These people are zealous to win you over, but for no good. What they want is to alienate you (from us), so that you may be zealous for them. It is fine to be zealous, providing the purpose is good, and to be so always and not just when I am with you."

From these words it is clear that the false teachers, being moved with envy, had attempted to exclude Paul from the Galatians. After this, the "allegorizing"* of the story of Hagar and Ishmael, Sarah and Isaac is a further attempt to show the foolishness of the backward movement of these believers who were so dear to the Apostle. He says:

> "My dear children, for whom I am again in the pains of childbirth, until Christ is formed in you, how I wish I could be with you now and change my tone, because I am perplexed about you" (iv. 19, N.I.V.).

> [* - "The modern and common usage of the word allegoria is quite different from this Scriptural definition. According to the modern sense it is taken to mean a fictitious narrative which has another and deeper meaning than that which is expressed. Allegory is always stated in the past tense and never in the future. Allegory is thus distinguished from prophecy. The allegory brings other teaching out of past events, while prophecy tells us of events that are yet to come" (Figures of Speech in the Bible, E. W. Bullinger, D.D.).]

When Paul talks about an allegory, we must not conclude that he doubted the historical basis of the story in the O.T. It was sober fact to him but it illustrated the profound difference that existed between the two covenants, one of law and the other of grace and the impossibility of mixing the two together.

> "Tell me, you who want to be under the law, are you not aware of what the law says? For it is written that Abraham had two sons, one by the slave woman and the other by the free woman. His son by the slave woman was born in the ordinary way; but his son by the free woman was born as a result of a promise. These things may be taken figuratively, for the women represent two covenants. One covenant is from Mount Sinai and bears children who are to be slaves. This is Hagar. Now Hagar stands for Mount Sinai in Arabia and corresponds to the present city of Jerusalem, because she is in slavery with her children. But the Jerusalem which is above is free and she is our mother . . . . . Now you, brothers, like Isaac, are children of promise . . . . . But what does the Scripture say? Get rid of the slave woman and her son, for the slave woman's son will never share in the inheritance with the free woman's son. Therefore, brothers, we are not children of the slave woman, but of the free woman" (iv. 21-31, N.I.V.).

The story bears out in picture form the condition of one under the dominion of the law and in contrast one who has been freed from it by redemption. The two Jerusalems, earthly and heavenly bear this out too. The earthly one was still in slavery and subject to a Gentile power. The heavenly one was in a different sphere from earth and was in no sense in bondage. This is described in all its artistry and beauty by the Apostle John in the Revelation. But we must remember that this revelation is not confined to John and his writings. Hebrews xi. and xii. make quite clear that Abraham saw it in a vision, although the O.T. does not reveal this, and we believe that all the faithful who followed by overcoming faith, treading the same path as Abraham embraced, saw its wonders too. For them it was the "better country", better than anything on this earth and worth going without a lasting home here and now, where they were only strangers and pilgrims.

The teaching that is implicit in this story is the contrast between freedom and bondage, between the law of Moses with its slavery and the glorious freedom resulting from saving grace. The Galatians had to decide which they wanted; they could not have both. So the Apostle uses every legitimate means to bring home to these Christians the intense seriousness of their choice and the results that would surely follow. His conclusion is:

> "So then brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman but of the free" (iv. 31).

But what if those who are free choose to go back to slavery? The context that follows makes this perfectly clear, "Christ shall profit you nothing . . . . . Christ is become of none effect unto you whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace" (v. 2-4). The freedom that comes from Christ's saving grace is the great key-note of Paul's ministry. Yet thousand have never learnt this, some who even take the name of Christ. They still substitute their own imperfect doing for Christ's perfect work of redemption and hope that somehow by mixing these two things they can gain favour with God.

The words of Gal. v. 1 are a clarion call today for all who call themselves Christians:

> "It is for freedom that Christ has set us free. Stand firm then, and do not let yourselves be burdened again by a yoke of slavery" (N.I.V.).

"Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free" (John viii. 32), promised the Lord. Let us see to it that we never spoil this freedom, provided at such terrific cost.

The Apostle Paul has used two great lines of argument. First he has argued from history in chapters i. and ii. from his own experience and the experience of the Galatians. Secondly he has argued in chapters iii. and iv. from Scripture, showing that the teaching of the Judaizers is absolutely contrary to the Word of God.

He is now going to use another powerful argument namely the moral change which has been brought by the freedom of the gospel which all the prohibitions of the law of Moses had utterly failed to produce. But these were obligations as fruits of the gospel. God's freedom does not mean licence, as so many have misinterpreted the gospel as preached by Paul. And so with all the earnestness at his command he says to the Galatian believers (and we paraphrase here), "Look, I Paul tell you this, if you now accept circumcision, Christ will be useless to you. I say solemnly that every man who accepts circumcision is accepting an obligation to carry out the whole of the law. In trying to obtain a right standing with God in this way you have broken the bond that united you to Christ (the bond of faith in Him). You have slipped from the sphere where grace operates . . . . . Once faith is placed in Christ, neither circumcision nor uncircumcision is any good. The only thing that counts is faith in Christ which works out in love".

We give the passage in the N.I.V.:

> "Mark my words! I, Paul, tell you that if you let yourself be circumcised, Christ will be of no value to you at all. Again I declare to every man who lets himself be > circumcised that he is obligated to obey the whole law. You who are trying to be justified by the law have been alienated from Christ; you have fallen away from grace. But by faith we eagerly await through the Spirit the righteousness for which we hope. For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision nor uncircumcision has any value, the only thing that counts is faith expressing itself through love" (v. 1-6).

The tenses are important in this passage "If you let yourself be circumcised". The verb is present subjunctive and does not refer to the past. Paul does not say "If you have been circumcised" for that would have excluded himself and every man who was a Jew. It was the contemplation of this rite and the attitude of mind that saw it as necessary to salvation. And in doing this the person concerned put himself in the position of not only being circumcised, but obeying the whole law, which had already been proved impossible for man who is a sinner and therefore constantly failing to reach the law's perfect standard.

No.9. v. 5 - vi. 8.
pp. 173 - 178

Paul is now about to introduce a pointed contrast with those who, by their defection and legalism, were falling from grace:

> "For we through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith" (Gal. v. 5).

"By faith" is opposed to "by law" of verse 4. The Spirit can refer to the work of the Holy Spirit or the sphere in which He works through the believer, that is the "spirit", the new nature as opposed to the "flesh", the old sinful nature. "To wait for" (apekdechomai) means "to eagerly expect". The Judaizer expected to attain to righteousness by keeping the law, whereas the instructed believer looked for justification in the sphere of spirit through faith in Christ.

As a summary the Apostle now states:

> "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision nor uncircumcision has any value. The only thing that counts is faith expressing itself through love" (v. 6, N.I.V.).

Paul is not one-sided. He does not allow the Gentile to boast of his uncircumcised state, any more than he will allow the Jew to boast in his circumcision. Both are now unnecessary and irrelevant "in Christ". He has stated the same thing in Gal. vi. 15 and I Cor. vii. 19. At the same time the Apostle does not say "faith only" for this could be an empty lifeless faith. Rather it is faith expressed by a practical love which is constantly concerned for others.

He continues in expostulation:

> "You were running a good race. Who cut in on you and kept you from obeying the truth? That kind of persuasion does not come from the One Who calls you. A little yeast works through the whole batch of dough" (v. 7-9, N.I.V.).

The figure of a race, with its possibilities of defeat as well as the glorious possibility of a prize is a favourite one with Paul. Those who were being ensnared by law-keeping as their hope, were certainly not pressing forward, rather the opposite, they were turning backwards. Some in the Galatian churches may have replied by saying that this was only being done by a few. But Paul reminds them that only a little yeast is required to permeate a whole batch of dough, and yeast, in Scripture, is always used in a bad sense figuratively. Those who talk about the "leaven of the gospel" are most certainly confusing Bible metaphors. The Apostle is quoting a proverbial saying that was evidently well-known. Once again he stresses his amazement that any of the Galatian believers should fall out of the race by being ensnared in this way.

> "The one who is throwing you into confusion will pay the penalty, whoever he may be. Brethren, if I am still preaching circumcision, why am I still being persecuted? In that case the offence of the cross has been abolished. As for those agitators, I wish they would go the whole way and emasculate themselves!" (v. 10-12, N.I.V.).

Two different types of person come before us in this section of the epistle, "the troubler" and "the restorer" of vi. 1. The agitators, whatever their number, were being led by someone who was possibly from the Jerusalem church. Paul warns them that such would have to answer to the Lord. Those who teach have an increased responsibility as James iii. 1 stresses and would have to bear the Lord's judgment when "every man's work will be tested by the fire of God's holiness" (I Cor. iii. 13).

Did anyone seriously claim that Paul advocated circumcision? If they did, it could only have been true of his pre-Christian days, when he would have advocated the law with all his might. It was certainly never true since his conversion. If he had done so there was certainly no reason to persecute him, rather the opposite! Some ancient witnesses omit the word eti, 'still' and that would make the sentence run "if I am a circumcision preacher, then . . . . .". In any case the word may be taken in a weak sense meaning "at the present moment", with no contrast with a past period.

Some have felt that verse 12 is vindictive but the A.V. does not recognize that the verb "cut off" is in the middle voice in the Greek and means "cut themselves off". The language is strong, but we must remember that their disruptive work amongst the Galatian believers was serious and could not be regarded lightly by anyone who valued the truth of God.

The Apostle now begins to contrast the two opposites in the believer, the old sinful nature—flesh, the new nature—spirit:

> "You, my brothers, were called to be free. But do not use your freedom to indulge your sinful nature, rather serve one another in love. The entire law is summed up in a single command, Love your neighbour as yourself. If you keep on biting and devouring each other, watch out or you will be destroyed by each other" (v. 13-15, N.I.V.).

Paul returns for a moment to the glorious gift of divine freedom stressed in verse 1 of the chapter, but this freedom must not be abused. This freedom never means that a believer is at liberty to do whatever he likes. As we have stated before, he is now free to do what the Lord likes and to fulfil His will. The real Christian has to decide which of the two natures he is going to follow and he is reminded in verse 16:

> "This I say then, Walk in the spirit (the new nature) and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh (the old nature)."

These two opposite natures with their practical effects are now going to be described by the Apostle so there could be no doubt as to what they involved in practice:

> "For the sinful nature desires what is contrary to the spirit, and the spirit what is contrary to the sinful nature. They are in conflict with each other, so that you do not do what you want. But if you are led by the spirit, you are not under the law. The acts of the sinful nature are obvious: sexual immorality, impurity and debauchery; idolatry and witchcraft; hatred, discord, jealousy, fits of rage, selfish ambition, dissensions, factions, and envy; drunkenness, orgies, and the like. I warn you, as I did before, that those who live like this will not inherit The kingdom of God. But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness and self-control. Against such things there is no law" (v. 16-23, N.I.V.).

The N.I.V. here consistently uses a capital "S" in "spirit", making it refer to the Holy Spirit, but it is better to use a small "s", thus referring to the new nature, for it is these two opposing natures in the believer that form this section of the epistle. At the same time we do not forget that the Holy Spirit is the giver of the new nature implanted in the believer and this is the sphere through which He works.*

> [* - Dr. E. W. Bullinger's book The Two Natures in the Child of God can be profitably considered here. It can be obtained from The Berean Publishing Trust.]

The Apostle Paul does not make an exhaustive list of the works of the flesh and this is shown by the words "and the like" in verse 21. They seemed to be grouped in four sections: (1) sensual passions, (2) superstitions, (3) disruptive movements, and (4) excesses. All of them were rampant in the pagan world of the Apostle's day and have become typical of the present time. The works of the flesh under the third heading are, alas, never long absent from Christian circles:

"Hatred, variance, emulation, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings", and Satan does not have much difficulty in ruining the testimony of any Christian movement where these sins are permitted.

It is so refreshing to leave the uncleanness of the flesh, for the fruit of the spirit with its wonderful cluster of graces. One list starts with hatred; the other with love and love expands into a ninefold group that springs from the Spirit of Christ.

Chapter v. of Galatians concludes with the words:

> "Those who belong to Christ Jesus have crucified their sinful nature with its passions and desires. Since we live by the spirit, let us keep in step with the spirit" (v. 24, 25, N.I.V.).

What does Paul mean by believers crucifying their sinful nature? In his experience this had been achieved, not by his own efforts, but by the work of Christ.

> "I have been crucified with Christ", he says in ii. 20 and we should refer to his later epistle to the Romans, especially the inner section of chapters v.-viii. that unfold the great doctrine of identification of the believer with Christ in crucifixion, death, burial and resurrection as unfolded in chapters v. and vi. This is entirely God's work, not the believer's, but he is exhorted to count on it or to "reckon himself dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. vi. 11). Thus he is delivered from the constant bondage of trying to overcome the flesh in his own strength and by his own efforts.

In chapter vi., in constant to the "troubler", Paul deals with the "restorer". The word in Greek as a broken net (Matt. iv. 21) is found in medical works for the resetting of a fractured limb. Instead of the overbearing spirit of the troubler the Apostle speaks of "the spirit of meekness" which seeks to restore one overtaken by a fault, considering himself lest he be likewise tempted:

> "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted" (vi. 1, A.V.).

The Apostle goes on to deal with burden bearing and there seems to be a contradiction. In verse 2 he exhorts believers to "bear one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ". Yet in verse 5 he says "for every man shall bear his own burden". Two words are used for burden here and two aspects of truth are presented. In verse 2 baros refers to pressure or weight and the believer is enjoined to assist another who is overloaded. But in verse 5 the Greek phortion refers to the equipment of a soldier which can be shared with none. There are responsibilities both in life and in the Lord's service which are personal and cannot be passed on to someone else. Wisdom is needed here to discriminate between the two. The "spirit of meekness" will avoid any ideas of pride or aggrandizement, for "if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceives himself" and needs the warning of verse 7, "do not be deceived; God is not mocked". A man reaps what he sows. "The one who sows to please his sinful nature will reap destruction; the one who sows to please the spirit, from the spirit will reap eternal life" (vi. 8 N.I.V.)

No.10. vi. 6 - 18.

When we come to verse 6 of chapter vi., we have to ask ourselves whether this verse is linked with what has gone before or does it start a new subject? The former seems to be true, for the Apostle is saying that, because every man must bear his own responsibility, this does not exempt him from sharing in the general welfare of the church as a whole, or of those whose calling may be dependent on their liberality. The N.I.V. translates verse 6:

> "Anyone who receives instruction in the Word must share all good things with his instructor."

This reminds us of Heb. xiii. 16:

> "But to do good and communicate (share) forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased", and Paul thankfully remembers the Philippian church when he departed from Macedonia "No church communicated (shared)" with him "as concerning giving and receiving" but this church only (Phil. iv. 15).

The Apostle goes on to expand his thought under the figure of sowing and reaping. Charles H. Welch has some helpful observations here:

> "Under this figure of sowing and reaping is included the whole of life's activities, and without using one word of philosophical jargon, nevertheless brings before us the whole philosophy of cause and effect. Every action may be likened to 'sowing'. Reward and punishment alike may be compared with 'reaping', and just as men do not gather figs from thorns, nor grapes from a bramble bush (Luke vi. 44), so any action that has the flesh as its goal must assuredly reap corruption; every action that has the spirit as its goal must assuredly reap life everlasting."

The Scriptures add: "And let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not" (Gal. vi. 9).

This should apply in our relationship to all as well as fellow-believers (vi. 10). At this point it appears that Paul takes the pen from the amanuensis and writes himself. This was his usual habit since some had been forging epistles purporting to come from himself (II Thess. iii. 17, 18) and in each case there is a reference to grace.

> "See what large letters I use as I write to you with my own hand" (vi. 11, N.I.V.).

There have been different opinions as to the meaning of this. Some think Paul wrote the whole epistle and did not employ an amanuensis. Others feel he took the pen at this point (and we take this attitude). It does not affect doctrine either way. Whether the large letters were for emphasis or the result of his eye trouble we cannot say for certain, but in any case we have an emphatic personal summary here dealing with circumcision, the cross of Christ, the crucifixion of self, the new creation and canon (rule).

> "Those who want to make a good impression outwardly are trying to compel you to be circumcised. The only reason they do this is to avoid being persecuted for the cross of Christ. Not even those who are circumcised obey the law, yet they want you to be circumcised that they may boast about your flesh. May I never boast except in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, through which the world has been crucified to me, and I to the world" (vi. 12-16, N.I.V.).

The Judaizers chief object in stressing the rite of circumcision was to make a good showing before men. Numbers of converts were what they were after to give an impression of success and in doing this they avoided all persecution for the cross of Christ. The very thing they wanted to avoid, was the truth that the Apostle Paul gloried in proclaiming, namely the fullness that was in Christ through the cross and resurrection which made all such distinctions meaningless. This broke the connection with the outward world system with its empty show and Satanic domination. As he wrote to the Corinthian church:

> "Therefore if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation; the old has gone, the new has come" (II Cor. v. 17, N.I.V.).

There was no possibility of blending these two opposites. God's answer to all the problems made by man's sin and fall from grace is His new creation, a completely fresh start in Christ. This was the rule or guide that all who rejoiced solely in Christ Jesus walked by as day succeeded day. Upon them was peace and mercy:

> "Peace and mercy to all who follow this rule, even to the Israel of God" (Gal. vi. 16, N.I.V.).

Is the "Israel of God" a covering title for all those who were saved during the period covered by the Acts of the Apostles? To judge by the way some use this title, one would judge that it was a frequent occurrence in the N.T. epistles to describe the church. The fact is that this is the only occurrence of the phrase in the N.T. There is no need here to render the Greek kai as "even". Its normal meaning of "and" is sufficient.

Bishop Ellicott's comment on this verse is:

> "It is doubtful whether kai is explicative, namely, upon the Israel of God . . . . . it is doubtful whether kai is ever used by St. Paul in so marked an explicative force . . . . . and it seems still more doubtful whether Christians generally could be called 'the Israel of God'. St. Paul includes all in his blessing, of whatever stock or kindred; and then, with his thoughts turning (as they ever did) to his own brethren after the flesh (Rom. ix. 3), he pauses to specify those who were once Israelites according to the flesh, but now are the 'Israel of God', true spiritual children of Abraham."

This we believe to be correct. There is no clear Scriptural foundation for using this title as a general title for the church of God today. The stigmata or brand marks which Paul bore in his body, from the lashes of the Roman whip and the gashes from stoning, were definitely associated with fellowship with the sufferings of Christ, and for ever separated him from those who, to avoid the offence of the cross, adulterated the gospel of grace with the dregs of Jewish ritual.

All slaves were branded. As the slave of Christ these were His brand marks. Could his enemies show such practical evidences of their devotion and faithfulness to Christ?

He ends the epistle, as he always does with a reference to grace:

> "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit, brothers, Amen" (vi. 18, N.I.V.).

The word at the very end of the sentence, apart from Amen is "brethren", a blessed word to end his epistle where so much feeling has been manifested and so much error exposed and condemned.

We trust we have seen that the truth presented in this glorious epistle lies at the very centre of the gospel of grace. Its importance cannot be overrated and all who have the responsibility of preaching and teaching must give this epistle a prominent place in their witness. It is a wonderful companion to the epistle to the Romans and was one of the main instruments, through Luther's ministry of promoting the Reformation and all who wish to be faithful to the truth which is centred in a risen and glorified Christ must give constant heed to its message.

The Gospel according to MATTHEW.

pp. 214 - 220

From the many attempts that must have been made in the early centuries to record the life, words and works of the Lord Jesus Christ (Luke i. 1, 2), four have been inspired by the Spirit of God and preserved by Him to the present time. When these are examined carefully and reverently they disclose different aspects of the earthly life and ministry of Christ. It is of great importance to recognize these differences, for they show the divine purpose behind each Gospel and this keeps the student from wandering away from the theme or importing wrong ideas into each book.

Four verses from O.T. Scripture can be used to set out these four distinctive aspects of Truth, namely:

Matthew	--	"Behold thy King" (Zech. ix. 9).
Mark	--	"Behold my Servant" (Isa. xlii. 1).
Luke	--	"Behold the Man" (Zech. vi. 12).
John	--	"Behold your God" (Isa. xl. 9).

The Gospel according to Matthew presents the Lord Jesus as the Messiah and King of Israel and traces His genealogy back through David the king. It was evidently written for Hebrew believers. Mark presents the Saviour as the perfect Servant, hence there is no genealogy, for this is not necessary for a servant. His Gospel commences with immediate service and this is stressed right through to the resurrection. Even then it is not forgotten, for it closes with the words "the Lord working with them, and confirming the Word with signs following" (Mark xvi. 20). Mark has the Roman world in view.

Luke sets forth the Lord as the perfect Man and traces His genealogy back to Adam. He has the Gentiles in view and the Greeks in particular. John's Gospel is severed off from the other three in time of writing, although the modern tendency is to give it an earlier date than it usually receives. He wrote to present Christ as the Son of God, the One who was both God and Man and he had the whole world in view for the word "world" is one of his key words and occurs some 78 times and this cannot be ignored by any one who desires to expound correctly the fourth Gospel.

Thus we see that the needs of the Hebrews, the Romans, and the Greeks who were the three great representative peoples of the world, are covered by the first three Gospels, and John writes and addresses them all, in fact the world at large, for, as we have seen, the word "world" is one of his key-words.

From the early centuries there has been an attempt to link the four Gospels with the fourfold cherubim with their four faces of a man, a lion, an ox and an eagle, as designated in Ezek i. 6-10. The trouble was that it could not be agreed as to which face was to be linked with which Gospel. The early fathers differed among themselves. Irenaeus assigned the eagle to Mark and the lion to John. Augustine assigned the lion to Matthew, the man to Mark, the ox to Luke and the eagle to John. Ambrose kept to the order of enumeration in Ezekiel. If there is any link with the cherubim (and they embody important doctrine) then the most satisfactory is:

Matthew	--	the Lion, the King
Mark	--	the Ox, the Servant
Luke	--	the Man, the last Adam
John	--	the Eagle, the Word made flesh Who was God.

The Gospel of Matthew comes first in the N.T. in many manuscripts and this is fitting, for it is closely linked with the O.T. Scriptures. In the four Gospels there are many quotations and allusions to the O.T. Absolute accuracy is not possible because some of these are fused and separation is difficult. In Mark there are 63; in Luke 96; in John 43; but in Matthew 126. There are some 37 direct quotations by Matthew which is more than occur in the other Gospels. The quotations are introduced by formulas which are more or less fixed such as "that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Lord through the prophet", or "then was fulfilled that which was spoken" (such as Matt. i. 22; ii. 15, 17; iii. 3; iv. 14, etc.). "It is written" (Matt. ii. 5; iv. 4, 7, 10; xi. 10, etc.), "it was said" or "it hath been said" (Matt. v. 21, 31, 33, 38, 43). This does not give all the variations, but they illustrate the way O.T. passages are introduced by the Evangelist.

Matthew presents the Lord as the Messiah and Priest-King of Israel and gives witness to the Messianic Kingdom of the O.T. prophets; hence his close link with the O.T. Scriptures.

Before we go any further it will be as well to consider the break between the Old and New Testaments. We must realize that when we turn from Malachi to Matthew, some 400 years have passed and that in this period great changes have occurred. At the close of the O.T., the empire which controlled Palestine was that of Persia. Persia was displaced by Alexander the Great, and the Grecian empire arose and dominated the scene from B.C.330 to B.C.167. At Alexander's death in B.C.323, his empire was divided between four of his generals. Two of these were Ptolemy and Seleucus and each one inaugurated a dynasty, Ptolemy in Egypt and Seleucus in Syria. There was continual contention between them for rule over Palestine, and sometimes one was victorious and sometimes the other.

The struggle under the Maccabees for Israel's national independence followed (B.C.167-141), and then a family of Jewish priest-kings, descendants of the Maccabees, arose and ruled in Palestine. They were known as the Hasmonaeans and they held power for 78 years, until Pompey conquered the land in B.C.63. This was the beginning of Rome's domination of the Jewish people. The Herods were of Idumaean descent and after Caesar Augustus overthrew Mark Antony, the first of the Herods sought and received from Augustus the governorship of Judaea, Samaria, Galilee, Peraea and Idumaea and he was ruling when the Lord Jesus Christ was born. Thus Rome was in the ascendancy over Israel when the story of the Gospels commenced.

At this time there were various sects in Palestine which come into the Gospel records and a short word on each may be helpful.

The Scribes.

These were the students and teachers of the O.T. and were highly esteemed by the people. They opposed Christ and were denounced by Him as traditionalists who emptied the Word of God of its meaning (Matt. xvi. 21; xxi. 25; xxiii. 2). They also called Lawyers (Matt. xxii. 35).

The Priests.

The priesthood was ordained by God in the time of Moses and consisted of the tribe of Levi. From the time of Ezra and Nehemiah the civil power passed into the hands of the priests so that they became princes of the realm as well as ministers of religion and their head was the High Priest. Again this sect persistently antagonized the Lord Jesus and finally delivered Him to Pilate to be crucified (John xviii. 3, 35).

The Rulers.

Differing official duties are indicated by this title. Thus we have them as members of the Sanhedrin (the chief Jewish Council); "chief ruler" (John xii. 42) and "magistrate" (Luke xii. 58) and ten times as "ruler".

The Pharisees.

The word means separated and was given them at the time of the Maccabees in mockery by their enemies, because they separated themselves from the political party in the nation. They expounded and guarded the written and oral law and were conservatives in distinction from the Sadducees who were the modernists.

The Sadducees.

They were the political and aristocratic party among the Jews and were the rivals of the Pharisees. They denied the existence of spirits and the resurrection and, like the other parties, opposed Christ and were condemned by Him (Matt. xvi. 1-12; xxii. 23-33).

The Herodians.

These were a political party rather than a religious one. They took their name from Herod's family and regarded Christ as a revolutionary character and came under His condemnation (Mark iii. 6; viii. 15).

The Galilaeans.

This party came from northern Palestine and followed one named Judas of Galilee, who led a rebellion against all foreign domination. They were fanatics who clashed with Pilate (Luke xiii. 1-3).

The Samaritans.

These were a mixed race living in Samaria who were descendants of the northern kingdom who were taken captive by Assyria in B.C.722. They offered help to build the second Temple but this was refused (Ezra iv. 1-3) and was the cause of the enmity between them and the Jews which was evident in the Lord's time (Matt. x. 5) and gives point to the parable of the Good Samaritan (Luke x. 30-37).

The Synagogue.

This refers to the place where the Jews assembled and its institutions dates from the captivity in Babylon. The Jews were then forced to meet in small groups when they could no longer attend the Temple.

Wherever Israel was scattered, synagogues were built where they could gather for worship and instruction. The Lord commenced His ministry in the one at Nazareth (Luke iv. 14-30). He was obviously familiar with the synagogue service and the Jews' attendance at the synagogue is still maintained today.

The Sanhedrin.

This was the chief Council of the Jews. It consisted of (1) chief priests or heads of the 24 priestly courses; (2) the Scribes or lawyers; and (3) the Elders, who represented the laity. The Council had 70 or 72 members, the High Priest being the President and they held their office for years if not for life. The Sanhedrin could pass the sentence of death, but could not execute it without Roman permission. This was the body before whom the Lord was brought, in the palace of the High Priest. Peter, John and Stephen also were brought before them (Acts iv. 1-7; vi. 12 - vii. 1).

Authorship of the Gospel of Matthew.

The earliest form of this Gospel was simply "according to Matthew" which neither affirms or denies that the author was Matthew the Apostle. Modern scholarship is practically unanimous that this Gospel was not written by the Apostle Matthew, whereas antiquity is unanimous that the Apostle was the author.

Dr. A. Plummer states:

> "Ancient testimony in favour of Matthew being the author is very strong. It begins with Papias and Irenaeus in the Second century, and is confirmed by Origen in the third and Eusebius in the fourth, not to mention a number of other early writers whose > evidence repeats, or is in harmony with these four" (Introduction, the Gospel according to Matthew).

In the first book of his Commentary on the Gospel, Origen (born about 185A.D.), says:

> "I have learned from uniform testimony concerning the Gospels (the four namely which are unchallenged, and are alone unchallenged throughout the universal church of God), that the first was written by Matthew, formerly a tax-gatherer, but afterwards an apostle of Jesus Christ."

Dr. J. Morison states in his Introduction to the Gospel:

> "There is indeed no evidence that, within the circle of the early Christian church, it was ever doubted that Matthew's Gospel was really Matthew's. There is still no more reason to doubt it, than there is to doubt that Virgil's Aeneid was written by Virgil, or that Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress was composed by the tinker of Elstow."

Dr. A. T. Robertson says in his Introduction to Matthew:

> "We know quite too little of the origin of the Synoptic Gospels to say dogmatically that the Apostle Matthew was not in any real sense the author."

In these studies therefore we shall assume that Matthew the Apostle is the human author under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

Date of the Gospel.

The actual year cannot be decided with certainty. The modern tendency is to give an earlier date to most books of the N.T. We shall not go far wrong if we say 60A.D. This, incidently, is the opinion of Dr. A. T Robertson.

We have stated that the four Gospels give different aspects of the earthly life and ministry of Christ, just as four great offerings in the O.T. are required to set forth all the aspects of His atoning death. No one Gospel can completely set forth this perfect life and service of the Lord any more than one view or aspect of a building can give a true idea of it as a whole. The unity and diversity of the Gospels must be recognized, to be in line with the divine purpose behind each one.

Many attempts have been made to create a harmony of the four. Scarcely two agree and none are completely satisfactory. If one Gospel had been the best way of presenting the truth of the earthly life and witness of the Lord Jesus, we may be sure this would have come to pass under God's guidance. It is much more profitable to try to discover the divine purpose behind each of the Gospels than to attempt to merge them all in one.

pp. 232 - 237

This Gospel contains a large proportion of discourses in contrast to Mark's which stresses the actions of Christ, those of the perfect Servant. Mark begins and ends with action. Chapter i. starts with immediate service and ends with the words "the Lord working with them and confirming the word with signs following" (Mark xvi. 20). It is clear that Matthew gives prominence to the sayings of Christ, as Mark does to His doings.

In the first Gospel there are six great discourses, five of which are closed with the same words: "it came to pass when Jesus had finished" (vii. 28; xi. 1; xiii. 53; xix. 1; xxvi. 1). The other one has likewise a formal ending (xxiii. 37-39) with different words. These addresses are as follows:

(1)	Chapters v.-viii.	The Sermon on the Mount
(2)	Chapter x.	The charge to the Twelve
(3)	Chapter xiii.	The Parables and Mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven
(4)	Chapter xviii.	Teaching on Greatness and Forgiveness
(5)	Chapter xxiii.	Denunciation of the Pharisees
(6)	Chapters xxiv.-xxv.	The Ending of the Age and the Second Advent of Christ

It is important to recognize that Matthew arranges his Gospel on a grouping plan, not a chronological one. He evidently had the instruction of Jewish converts in mind, such as met in study circles. It was important therefore that the teaching of the Gospel should be presented in such way that it would be easily remembered. Many of the Lord's sayings which Matthew has grouped together, regardless of chronological sequence, He must have given at different times, for it would be foolish to presume that the Lord Jesus in teaching deep and essential truths, would only mention them once.

The Evangelist arranges incidents and sayings into numerical groups of three, five and seven.

Three.

The are 3 divisions in the genealogy (i. 17).
3 messages to Joseph by angels in dreams (i. 20; ii. 13, 19).
3 incidents in the Lord's childhood: the Magi, the flight into Egypt, and the return (ii.).
3 temptations (iv. 1-11).
3 fold description of the Messiah's witness (iv. 23).
3 fold illustration (v. 22).
There are 9 Beatitudes (3*3).
3 occurrences of "your" (v. 16).
3 examples of righteousness: alms, prayer, fasting (vi. 1-18).
3 prohibitions (vi. 19 - vii. 6).

3 degrees of earnestness in prayer (vii. 7).
3 commands: ask, enter, beware (vii. 7-20).
3 pairs of contrasts: broad and narrow way, good and bad trees, wise and foolish builders (vii. 13, 16, 24-27).
3 fold "in Thy Name" (vii. 22).
3 miracles of healing: leprosy, palsy, fever (viii. 1-15).
3 miracles of power: storm, demoniac, sin (viii. 23 - ix. 8).
3 miracles of restoration: health, life, sight (ix. 8-34).
3 fold "fear not" (x. 26, 28, 31).
3 fold answer to question about fasting (ix. 14-17).
3 fold "is not worthy of Me" (x. 37, 38).
3 complaints of the Pharisees (ix. 1-17).
3 fold "what went ye out to see?" (xi. 7-9).
3 cities: Chorazin, Bethsaida, Capernaum (xi. 20-23).
3 occurrences "at that time" (xi. 25; xii. 1; xiv. 1).
3 fold description of the Jews: empty, swept, garnished (xii. 44).
3 fold "verily" (xviii. 3, 13, 18).
3 classes of eunuchs (xix. 12).
3 parables of warning (xxi. 28 - xxiv. 14).
3 questioners: Pharisees, Sadducees, Lawyer (xxii. 15, 23, 35).
3 faculties of love: heart, soul, mind (xxii. 37).
3 sayings about "little ones" (xviii. 6, 10, 14).
3 questions (xxii. 15-40).
In chapter xxiii. there are a number of triplets:
teacher, father, master (8-10).
temple and gold, altar and gift, heaven and throne (14-22).
mint, dill, cumin, judgment, mercy, faith (23).
prophets, wise men, scribes (34).
3 fold reference to "blood" (xxiii. 35).
3 parables against negligence: faithful and unfaithful servants, the Virgins, the Talents (xxiv. 45 - xxv. 30).
3 men entrusted with talents (xxv. 15).
3 denials of Peter (xxvi. 69-75).
3 prayers at Gethsemane (xxvi. 30-44).
3 questions of Pilate (xxvii. 17, 21-23).
3 incidents which vexed the Pharisees (xii. 1-24)
6 (2*3) great discourses as mentioned before.

And this may not exhaust the groups of three in Matthew's Gospel, but they are truly remarkable and could only occur by design.

Five.

For examples of groupings of five we have five illustrations of the fulfillment of the law (v. 21-48); five wise and five foolish virgins; five talents which gained other five (xxv. 2, 20). In chapters xxi. and xxii. there are five questions about authority, tribute, resurrection, commandments and the Son of David. There are five references to the Kingdom of God (vi. 33; xii. 28; xix. 24; xxi. 31, 43).

Groupings of Seven.

Seven demons (xii. 45); forgiveness seven times (xviii. 22); seven brethren (xxii. 25); seven loaves (xv. 34) and seven baskets (xv. 37); seven petitions in the Lord's prayers, etc.

The faithful student will take heed to these numerical groupings which help to impress their truth on the mind and memory.

Matthew's Gospel, with its constant reference to the O.T., presents the Lord Jesus in His relationship to Israel as their Messiah and Priest-King, as foretold by the O.T. prophets and makes known the great Messianic Kingdom which is the burden of them all. Peter's message to the nation in Acts ii., after their rejection and crucifixion of Christ, refers to the sending back of the Messiah upon their repentance and turning back to God (Acts iii. 19-21), when the restoration of "all things spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets" since the beginning of time, "all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after" (verse 24) had foretold these times and revealed the glories of this kingdom. Israel were "the children of these prophets" (25); they were right in the centre of God's earthly kingdom purposes and are reminded that this was only so because God had in view "all the families of the earth" and thus they (Israel) had the first place, in order to be the channel of blessing to all mankind. Thus the knowledge of God would finally "cover the earth as the waters cover the sea" (Isa. xi. 9) and so His kingdom on earth would become a glorious reality.

This will explain why Israel had such a prominent place at the Lord's first Coming and why Matthew's Gospel stresses this most important truth. Thus we have the commission of the Twelve recorded in chapter x. and the Lord's limitation of their ministry to Israel (Matt. x. 5, 6). And the Lord limits His own earthly ministry to Israel likewise, "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (xv. 24). He promises the Twelve that they should sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel (xix. 28).

This explains why the Lord's genealogy in this Gospel is traced through David to Abraham emphasizing the throne of David and the land promised unconditionally to Abraham and his seed (Gen. xv. 18), showing that the Lord Jesus was the rightful Heir to both. Matthew's other references to Christ as the Son of David are found in xii. 23; xxi. 9, 15; xxii. 42. He is Israel's King (ii. 2; xxi. 5; xxvii. 11, 29, 37, 42). Palestine is "the land of Israel" (ii. 20, 21); Israel are its inhabitants (viii. 10; x. 6; xv. 34); its cities are "the cities of Israel" (x. 23) and God is "the God of Israel" (xv. 31).

It is important to recognize the place of Israel in the divine plan of the earthly phase of the kingdom of God. In no sense was this plan finally limited to Israel and this is where the nation made a profound mistake in thinking that this was so, and looking with contempt on the Gentile world. The Gospel of Matthew ends with the commission "to make disciples of all the nations" (xxviii. 19, 20), thus fulfilling God's plan to reach "all families of the earth". It is a mistake to bring the Body of Christ in here, for its calling and destiny is a heavenly one and at this time was still "hid in God" (Eph. iii. 8, 9) being vitally connected with the heavenly phase of the kingdom of God.

What is peculiar to Matthew is important. The incidents and teaching that are found only in this Gospel are the following: the genealogy traced through David to Abraham; the coming of the wise men; the slaughter of the innocents; the flight into and return from Egypt; the extended report of the Sermon on the Mount; Peter's walking on the sea; Christ's reply to Peter's confession; Christ's woes against the Pharisees; the judgment of the nations at the Second Advent; Christ's betrayal by Judas for 30 pieces of silver; his remorse and suicide; the watch at the sepulcher; the bribing of the soldiers; the opening of the graves; the parables of the Tares, the hid treasure, the goodly Pearl, the fish net and the unmerciful servant, the labourers in the vineyard, the two sons, the marriage of the King's son, the ten virgins, the talents, the coin in the fish's mouth, the wonderful words, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light" (Matt. xi. 28-30).

What a loss we should have sustained if Matthew had not recorded these wonderful facts!

We now give the outline of the Gospel. We have used the structure of C. H. Welch, but extended it to include the six great discourses around which the Gospel revolves:

A | i. 1 - iii. 16. From Birth to Baptism.
The Ministry of John the Baptist.
"Born King of the Jews."
B | iii. 17 - xvi. 20. Son of David the King. |
a | iii. 17. The Voice from heaven.
b | iv. 1-16. The Threefold Temptation of the King.
c | iv. 17. Time. "From that time . . . began".
d | Three Discourses:
v.-vii. The Sermon on the Mount.
x. The Charge to the Twelve.
xiii. The Parables and Mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven.
e | xvi. 16-18. Confession: "The Christ".
B | xvi. 21 - xxvi. 75. Son of Abraham (Isaac) The Priest and Offering. |

This outline shows the balance of the various sections of the Gospel. It is essential that, from the standpoint of true interpretation, we keep within the scope of these sections.

Application of the truths therein can only be safely made after the interpretation has been settled. The question is what was it meant to mean to those for whom Matthew wrote? These, as we have seen, were undoubtedly Jewish converts, hence the important place that Israel takes in this Gospel which stresses Christ as Messiah and King of Israel and the earthly kingdom of which Israel and Jerusalem are the centre.

Men God Called

Jonah! The man popularly supposed to have been swallowed by a whale; a suggestion deemed so impossible that the higher critics (and others) tells us that this book is only a story, although one with a message for its time. Was he swallowed by a whale, or was he not? The A.V. tells us "Now the Lord had prepared a great fish . . . . ." (i. 17): where the Lord Jesus Christ refers to this incident in Matt. xii. 40 the same version translates "whale" for the Greek ketos which means "any sea-monster or huge fish". In Jonah the Hebrew tells us that the Lord had prepared a "great dag", dag meaning simply "fish". It simply tradition based on a faulty translation of the word used in Matthew that has given rise to the idea that Jonah was swallowed by a whale. However, as the old lady said, when she was told Jonah could not possibly have been swallowed by a whale "I believe that if the Lord had wanted Jonah to swallow the whale, he could have done it!".

Did this actually take place, or is it a 'myth' with a meaning? For the believer it is surely sufficient that his Lord refers to this event as a type and sign of His Death and Resurrection. That there was indeed such a prophet is confirmed by a reference to him in II Kings xiv. 25, where he is identified as "Jonah, the son of Amittai"; precisely the same identification as is given in the book of Jonah. He is therefore an historical person, and given the omnipotence of God there is no logical reason why the events recorded of this prophet could not be true.

There had been a succession of evil kings over Israel: we read of Jehoahaz the son of Jehu, who "did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord" (II Kings xiii. 1, 2). Although this king "besought the Lord, and the Lord hearkened unto him", the people "departed not from the sins of the house of Jeroboam" (II Kings xiii. 3-5). He was followed by his son, Jehoash, "and he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord" (verse 11). On his death he was succeeded by his son Jeroboam, and the same sad verdict is given on his reign: "he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord" (II Kings xiv. 23, 24). Nevertheless the following two verses tell us that he was used by the Lord "which He spake by the hand of His servant Jonah". For even evil rulers are overruled by the Lord for His purposes.

Against such a background was Jonah called to prophesy. Clearly sooner or later God would bring some form of judgment upon Israel. It seems probable he was called to his work before the commission to Nineveh:

"Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it; for their wickedness is come up before me" (Jonah i. 2).

Nineveh was the capital of Assyria, and was noted for its violence and cruelty, and their wickedness was "full", "their wickedness is come up before Me". Jonah was to "cry against it". The word 'cry' has the sense of making a general proclamation: some one has suggested he was told to "thunder forth". He was to make his message widely known. We discover the content of his proclamation, when he eventually reached Nineveh, from chapter iii. 4, "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown". It is not recorded that his message included the need to repent, although in the event this was the result. It may be that his prejudice prevented him from appealing to the Ninevites to repent, and that while he was pleased to pronounce God's judgment upon his people's enemies, he did not look favourably on God showing them any mercy. Whether so or not, the thought itself is a sufficient warning to those who have the responsibility of preaching, to beware of letting their own ideas and prejudices influence their message.

Arise, go to Nineveh: but Jonah rose up to flee . . . . . from the presence of the Lord. It is clear, however, that he realized he could never escape from God from his words to the sailors:

"I am a Hebrew; and I fear the Lord, the God of heaven, which hath made the sea and the dry land" (i. 9).

He reverenced Jehovah, yet he was fleeing from the presence of the Lord. He was fleeing from Jerusalem and the Temple, for it is clear, for example, from Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the Temple he had built, that, although it was recognized Jehovah did not dwell in the Temple, it was nevertheless His Presence Chamber. In Jonah's psalm, after his deliverance from the belly of the great fish, he says:

"I am cast out of Thy sight; yet I will look again toward Thy holy temple" (ii. 4).

It was the meeting place, the place of fellowship with God. In fleeing he knew he was doing wrong, and he could not "face" fellowship with Jehovah as a result.

But why did Jonah wish to avoid the fulfillment of his commission? He knew that Assyria was to be the "rod" of Jehovah's anger against Israel (Isa. x. 5). Yet he had himself prophesied to the effect that the Lord had said he would not blot out the name of Israel from under heaven (II Kings xiv. 25, 27). How could Jonah reconcile the two prophecies? How could he act in a way which would invalidate his own prophecy? How could he, a true patriot, do anything to bring about the downfall of his own nation? So he rose up to flee from the presence of the Lord. He prophesied about B.C.690, but it was not for about a further 60 years before Isaiah confirmed the judgment of God upon Israel through Assyria. Meanwhile it was a day of salvation for both Israel and Assyria. But Jonah did not realize this, and in the vain hope of averting the judgment of God upon Israel, he hoped for God's judgment upon Nineveh, and, from the human viewpoint understandably, he did not wish to be the means of preserving the nation destined to be "the rod of mine anger". Neither of the two nations availed themselves permanently of the time for repentance. We need to heed the lesson presented to us by Jonah, and to avoid trying to bring our own ideas of what God ought, or will do into our own life and witness.

Israel did not repent: Nineveh (in spite of Jonah) did: but Nineveh's repentance was only transitory. Was the repentance of Nineveh intended by God to be a demonstration to Israel: to Israel who knew God was gracious and merciful? If God spared Nineveh that great and wicked city, how much more would He be ready to spare the nation He had chosen to be His People!

But Jonah rose up to flee from the presence of Jehovah. He was prepared to sacrifice anything and everything for the sake of his people: even his God!

"Then were the men exceedingly afraid, and said unto him, Why hast thou done this? For the men knew that he fled from the presence of the Lord, because he had told them" (i. 10).

We know that no loyalty should take precedence over our loyalty to God. We know it, but do we always put it into practice? In Jonah's case, at least, it meant a lot of unnecessary suffering for him.

So Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish, and took passage in a ship going to that destination.

"But the Lord sent out a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken" (i. 4).

It was a storm of such intensity that even the seasoned mariners were afraid: the expression translated "mariners" has something of the significance of our "old salt". Even the "old salts" were afraid of this storm. But Jonah "Was gone down into the sides of the ship; and he lay, and was fast asleep". Asleep in such a storm? It must have been the sleep and peace of resignation. For a little later he had no hesitation in condemning himself to death:

"Take me up, and cast me forth into the sea; so shall the sea be calm unto you: for I know that for my sake this great tempest is upon you" (i. 12).

He was prepared to sacrifice life itself to save his people, and perhaps it is in this point that Jonah begins to assume the role of a type of Christ. All honour to the seamen that they did their best to save him, and rowed hard to bring the ship to land, and only when they were unsuccessful did they cast Jonah into the sea. They were unsuccessful because the "sea wrought, an was tempestuous against them", and into such a sea was Jonah cast. What happens to a man in such a raging sea? He drowns, and that, surely, must have been what happened to Jonah. Then the Lord prepared the great fish, and for three days and three nights Jonah was there in the belly of the fish. Then he was given life again, and "Jonah prayed unto the Lord his God out of the fish's belly" (ii. 1). Resurrected in the bowels of the sea creature! It is worth noting the tense of the verbs he used in his prayer: they are all in the past. "Thou didst cast me into the deep", "the waters compassed me about", and so on. It was not a prayer he uttered whilst he was in the water, in response to which the Lord prepared the great fish: the words are those of a man looking back to an experience in the past, and he has been brought back "from corruption", or the pit or grace. This is in full accord with the words of the Lord Jesus Christ in Matt. xii. 40,

"For as Jonas as three days and nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."

For just as, in the same way as Jonah was in the belly of the fish: in this manner, in this way the Son of man shall be in the heart of the earth. If Jonah was not three days and three nights dead in the bowels of the sea creature, he was no type of what was to happen to the Lord.

For our purpose in this article there are two points in the prayer of particular interest. "Then I said, I am cast out of Thy sight": Jonah was quite prepared to flee from the presence of the Lord, but it was quite a different matter when he thought Jehovah had cast him off! But he continued "Yet will I look again toward Thy holy temple", and in the context of Solomon's prayer this strongly suggests repentance on the part of the prophet. Verse 8 would indicate that he had learned his lesson: "They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy". This perhaps becomes clearer if put thus: "They that regard idols do not heed their chastisement". Jonah reverenced Jehovah, and so gave heed to the chastisement he had undergone.

Now, when the word of the Lord came the second time, Jonah obeyed; perhaps not whole-heartedly, for he made no call to repentance, and when Nineveh did repent he was clearly displeased with the result of his message. He was an unwilling man whom God called, yet he became a type of Christ. Nothing and nobody can or will frustrate the will of God, not even for what we may consider to be the best of reasons. How much unnecessary trouble and suffering Jonah brought upon himself as he rather reluctantly fulfilled his calling.

No.16. Joseph the Carpenter.

Such scant attention is paid to Joseph normally, that some may wonder why he should be the subject of this study. Yet it may be there is more said concerning him than we sometimes think, and, indeed, his role is as important as any "man God called".

The historical background to his story is of particular importance, for it was a time of very great Messianic expectation. The reasons for this are twofold: on the one hand the Jews' religion was as pure as it had even been, and on the other and contributing to the former, their land was occupied by the Roman conquerors. Yet the very desire for purity in religion had resulted in a dead formality. The Pharisees, the leaders in seeking purity, had become over sensitive and exaggerated comparatively unimportant details, yet at the same time left undone the more weighty matters of the law. The Lord had to say to them in this connection, "these ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone" (Matt. xxiii. 23). Yet their religio national awareness coupled with the presence of the conqueror in their land cultivated in them a great yearning for the coming of their Deliverer, the Messiah.

Into this scene Joseph is born and clearly born for a purpose in God's plan for His people. He was a humble man, obedient and faithful. What we know about him suggests he was rather slow, ponderous. But when given a clear lead, he acted without hesitation. He was a very human man, yet "just", and like many of his contemporaries, desirous of keeping the law: the law, both of God, and of man. This is made clear in passages such as Matt. i. 19,

> "Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily."
>
> "And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Caesar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed . . . . . And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city . . . . . And Joseph also went up . . . . . unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem" (Luke ii. 1-5).
>
> "And when the days of her purification according to the law of Moses were accomplished, they brought Him to Jerusalem, to present Him to the Lord: . . . . . and to offer a sacrifice according to that which is said in the law of the Lord, A pair of turtledoves, or two young pigeons" (Luke ii. 22-24).

Similar stress is also found in Luke ii. 39, 41, 43. Joseph: kind, just and law abiding.

The circumstances of his call must have been rather traumatic. Matthew records the call in chapter i. 18-25. Joseph had learned that Mary was with child, and Mary was his betrothed wife. In those days, and in that society, betrothal was treated as binding as was marriage, and the consequences of disloyalty were literally fatal (Deut. xxii. 23, 24). The fact that Mary "was found with child of the Holy Ghost" was unknown to Joseph at that point, and he was as troubled and concerned as any man of his day and race would have been. Matthew tells us Joseph "thought on these things". Bullinger's Critical Lexicon defines the word "thought": "thought, as being the result of a commotion of the mind". Joseph's mind was in a turmoil. He eventually made up his mind what to do: He would "put her away privily". He would quietly divorced her, and so avoid the degrading publicity any other course would entail. He wanted to obey the law, yet he did not wish to expose Mary to all the shame of "taking her to law".

It was at this point the angel appeared to him while he slept, with this message for him:

> "Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. And she shall bring forth a Son, and thou shalt call His name Jesus: for He shall save His people from their sins" (Matt. i. 20, 21).

On hearing this Joseph obeyed, and evidently without question; he "did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife" (verse 24).

Why did not God spare Joseph all the worry and concern? Why did not the angel appear to him immediately he had found that Mary was expecting? It may be difficult for us to find a satisfactory answer to such questions; yet an answer is given: "now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet" (22). Literally it is "the whole of this", which strongly suggests that even the worry and concern experienced by Joseph had some place in the fulfillment of prophecy. How often we tend to think that if we are doing the Lord's will, and are well pleasing to Him there will be no worry or concern, but even such experiences have a place in God's purpose for His own.

Luke records the events attendant upon the birth of the Lord Jesus at Bethlehem, and all the way through, Joseph is there beside Mary. Luke tells in chapter ii. 4, 5, how Joseph was there on the journey to Bethlehem, and after the account of the revelation to the shepherds, and of their visit to Bethlehem, faithful Joseph is still there (verse 16).

Throughout the childhood of the Lord, Joseph is present. He was told by the angel to name the Child "Jesus", and in Luke ii. 21, it is clear that Joseph faithfully carried out this part of his commission. Joseph ensured that He who was to fulfil the law kept the law during His infancy (verses 22-24). What would have happened, had Joseph not been faithful in this? How could the Lord Jesus have fulfilled all the law, had Joseph been neglectful at this stage?

When the wise men from the east came to do homage to the young child, Joseph only comes into the account when Herod presents a threat to the life of the Lord Jesus. And Joseph becomes His protector. Again Joseph obeys the angel of the Lord when Herod has died, and the time has come for the young Child to return to the Holy Land, and to Nazareth, and again Joseph's part is to ensure that prophesy is fulfilled (Matt. ii. 23).

Once more Joseph appears on the scene recorded by Luke ii. 40-52. His task on this occasion being once more to ensure that his charge fulfilled the law:

> "And when He was twelve years old, they went up to Jerusalem after the custom of the feast" (Luke ii. 42).

At twelve years old, a Jewish boy becomes a "son of the law". If, as seems to be implied in the words "after the custom of the feast", all things were done according to the law, Joseph paid the redemption money of five shekels (Numb. iii. 46, 47), again ensuring that the law was fulfilled for "the Child Jesus". Religiously He was now an adult, responsible for His own actions, hence His freedom in remaining behind at Jerusalem: He was now free to do His Father's business:

> "And His mother said unto Him, 'Son, why hast Thou thus dealt with us? Thy father and I have sought Thee sorrowing'. And He said unto them, How is it that ye sought Me? wist ye not that I must be about My Father's business?" (Luke ii. 48, 49).

However, in spite of His freedom to do His Father's business, He respected their failure to understand, and returned with them to Nazareth "and was subject unto them" (verses 50, 51). From this point Joseph's work was done, his commission fulfilled.

Joseph was a just man, concerned to fulfil the law: He was a kind man not wishing to make Mary a public example: He was obedient and faithful to all that God required of him. His call was for the protection of God's purpose in Christ in the early part of the Lord's life on earth when He was most vulnerable; it was to ensure that Christ, Who came to fulfil the law, fulfilled the law as a child until He became a "son of the law"; it was to ensure the fulfillment of prophecy. The whole of this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord.

Just, kind, obedient, faithful, protector of the Living Word: Mary was "highly favoured", was not Joseph highly privileged?

pp. 54 - 58

Why, in a series devoted to "Men God called", introduce a woman? In the last study we considered the part Joseph had to play in the early days of the Lord Jesus Christ: yet his part is hardly complete without that of Mary, and no man could possibly have fulfilled the commission given to her. Her calling is unique.

From the reformed point of view, there is no question that in some quarters far too much is made of Mary, the mother of Jesus. Perhaps, in reaction against this, there is a tendency to ignore the part she played in God's purpose of redemption.

The background to her history is the same as for Joseph, her husband. It was a time of great "religiosity", the Jews were under the dominance of the conquering Romans, and as a result of these two factors, there was a great Messianic expectation. Indeed, there was at least one in Israel who knew the Messiah was about to appear:

> "It was revealed unto (Simeon) by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ" (Luke ii. 26).

Mary, like Joseph, was "of the house and lineage of David". Her age is unknown. She is described as "a virgin" (parthenos), a word meaning a maiden, virgin; when used as an adjective it signifies virgin, pure, chaste. She was, then, a young unmarried woman who was pure. More than this concerning Mary we do not know. It seems probable that the genealogy given in Luke iii. is that of Mary, and if this is so we know that her father's name was Heli. Of her mother nothing is known at all from Scripture; her name may have been Anna, but was the Word of God has nothing to say about it, it is clearly unimportant. Neither is there anything to indicate that she was born sinless, a theory which only complicates even more the problem it is supposed to solve. For then there is not only the "difficulty" of accounting for the Lord's sinlessness, but also of Mary's! It is surely sufficient for us that the birth of the Lord Jesus Christ was the activity of God, and that the "power of the Highest" which "overshadowed" her preserved Him from the contamination of sin. The word power (dunamis) has the significance of "ability". In this power was all the ability to perform everything necessary: both the conception and the sinlessness.

When Gabriel appeared to Mary he said:

> "Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among woman" (Luke i. 28).

Of this greeting it might be said, all is of grace, although it is not apparent in translation. Rejoice! was a normal everyday salutation, but one, like our "goodbye" which derives from 'God be with you', had the deeper significance of 'Rejoice! Be glad!' It is a word (chaire) which derives from grace (charis), for all true gladness and rejoicing has its roots in the grace of God. "Thou that art highly favoured" is also "full of grace". It is literally "having been graced", and is the same word used in Eph. i. 6 where the A.V. translates it "accepted in the Beloved". The believer who is a member of the church which is Christ's Body is "highly favoured" having "been graced", and like Mary, for a special purpose. Mary was uniquely "united" to the Lord Jesus Christ as His human mother in a way no other human being can possibly be united to Him: it is surely significant that this same word is applied to those who are united to Him as members of His Body, God had made Mary acceptable for His purpose: no natural qualification, nor human attribute could do so. Similarly those who comprise the Body of Christ have no quality or attribute to make them acceptable to God for this great privilege, it comes to them only as they are united to the Beloved.

The blessing which concludes the greeting is doubtful, and is omitted from a number of the critical Greek texts. The Companion Bible note says "Probably brought here from Luke i. 42, where it is unquestioned". Even if it is correctly placed here, the expression has not quite the force given to it by some. For the word translated "blessed" (eulogeo) simply means "to speak well of", and nothing more. It can have the sense of "blessing" to the extent that in a blessing one is "well spoken of".

"She was troubled at his saying" (verse 29). Gabriel's saying threw her into great confusion, she was confounded by it. The result was "She cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be". This might be expressed as "she argued with herself" about it. Yet at this point she had not been told of the great privilege which was to be hers. Many extraordinary things were to happen to Mary before her commission was fulfilled; things which would be confusing to her, and always she considered them carefully. Following the birth of Christ, and the visit of the shepherds, Luke tells us:

> "But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart" (Luke ii. 19).

Mary kept all these things: the primary meaning of "kept" is "to watch closely", or, as Bullinger's Critical Lexicon puts it "to have one's eye upon in conjunction . . . . .". She viewed all that befell her, not as separate incidents, but as a part of the whole, and "kept her eye open" not to miss anything. Then she pondered them in her heart: she brought them together. Both words are compounds, both beginning with sun which bears the thought of being united. Although the various incidents were mysterious, inexplicable, extraordinary, she looked upon them as a part of a united whole and sought to see how each fitted in to God's purpose for her. Following the visit to the temple when the Lord became a son of the law, Luke records she "kept all these sayings in her heart". Here the word is slightly different, meaning "to have one's eye upon throughout": not one item escaped her notice. How good it would be for us to pay such close attention to the events in our lives, carefully looking in every detail for the hand of God!

"Fear not Mary: for thou hast found favour with God" (Luke i. 30). This is Gabriel's response to Mary's confusion. Fear (phobeo) while having the usual significance of "fear, terror, dismay", can also mean "put to flight". Perhaps, in the circumstances, it conveyed to Mary something of "Do not run away from this". There are circumstances in the life of every believer, at times, from which he would like to "run away", and it is just at such times we need to look very carefully to ensure that what we do is in accord with the will of God. "Thou hast found favour with God", is, literally, "thou hast found grace with God". Grace is favour to the unworthy, and however good Mary may have been, for the great task to which she was called neither she, nor any other woman, would have been "worthy". All, for Mary, was of grace. It might well be said of Mary that she was called "to the praise of the glory of His grace", as it is said in Ephesians of those, who, united to Christ, comprise the church which is His Body.

The message the angel brought to Mary was of such a tremendous character, that, but for Gabriel's reassurance, she might well have wished to "run away from it". Chosen to be the means whereby God Himself entered into the history of man, to redeem man! But with the reassurance of God's grace and enablement, Mary's response was "Behold the handmaid (bond servant) of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word". How often we forget "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me" (Phil. iv. 13).

In her call Mary received the Gospel in miniature:

(1) Thou shalt bring forth a Son: corresponding to Luke's Gospel, behold the Man. For He came the second Man and last Adam, to be the beginning of a new, redeemed human race.

(2) His Name shall be called Jesus: the Saviour and Servant, corresponding to Mark's Gospel, behold the Man. For He came as Jehovah's Servant, becoming obedient even unto death.

(3) He shall be great . . . . . the Son of the Highest: corresponding to John's Gospel, behold your God. For He came to be the source of the new eternal life.

(4) He shall reign: corresponding to Matthew's behold your King. For He came to be the One in Whom is fulfilled God's purpose that man should have dominion over the earth, and to be the King of the chosen people.

It is not surprising that Mary's question was "How shall this be?" (Luke i. 34). Gabriel told her "Holy Spirit (power from on high) shall come upon thee, and the ability of the Highest shall overshadow thee" (verse 35). "For with God nothing shall be impossible" (verse 37).

It would seem that Mary having kept all these things and pondered them in her heart, had learned that with God all things are possible. For in John's account of the wedding at Cana, Mary points out to her Son that there is a shortage of wine, and it is worth noting that she makes no suggestion to Him concerning what might be done. A lesson we would do well to learn! Often, when we see a need, we think we see the answer, and tend to pester God for our solution. Mary presented Him with the need, and left it with Him. Her last recorded words, her instructions to the servants on that occasion sum up all her experiences: "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it" (John ii. 5). It is the only safe way for all who are "highly favoured", "accepted in the Beloved":

"Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it."

pp. 77 - 80

We hear of Nathanael only twice, at the beginning, and again at the end of the Lord's earthly ministry (John i. 15-51 and xxi. 2). Nathanael is not mentioned in either of the other Gospels; but the other Gospel do mention one Bartholomew, while John never mentions him. In John i. "Philip findeth Nathanael", which suggests, perhaps, a somewhat closer link between them: in the other Gospels Bartholomew and Philip are always "paired", with the result that Nathanael and Bartholomew are usually identified as the same man. However, for the purpose of this study it is perhaps not very important as all the references to Bartholomew are in lists of names, where Bartholomew always occurs second to Philip.

The immediate background to Nathanael's call is the testimony of John the Baptist to the Lord Jesus Christ, as "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world" (John i. 28, 36). There was, it seems a little group from Bethsaida, consisting of Peter, Andrew, James, John, Philip and Nathanael. These men were keenly looking for the coming of the Messiah. Two of this group who heard John's testimony, followed the One the prophet had pointed out: one was Andrew, and possibly the other was John (John i. 36-40). Andrew found his brother, Peter, saying to him "we have found the Messias", and brought him to the Lord. The following day the Lord went into Galilee and found Philip and said to him, "Follow Me". Philip then finds Nathanael telling him:

> "We have found Him, of Whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph" (i. 45).

This little group of men were concerned with the Word of God, they were searching for the Truth, and for the Messiah. Philip identifies the Messiah as "Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph". Evidently Joseph was well known in the district from which they came: Cana was roughly ten miles from Nazareth in the south, and also from Bethsaida in the east. If Joseph was known, it is highly probable that his "son" would also be known in the district, and, in part, accounts for Nathanael's rather less than enthusiastic response! "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" he asked. Nazareth was looked upon, as some one has put it, as a "sink of iniquity". Certainly there are statements which suggest Nazareth was not all it might have been:

> "And He marveled because of their unbelief" (Mark vi. 6).
> "And all they in the synagogue . . . . . rose up, and thrust Him out of the city, and led Him unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast Him down headlong" (Luke iv. 28, 29).

To Nathanael, Nazareth was a most unlikely place of origin for the Messiah. However, Philip was not to be put off by the pessimism of Nathanael, and said to him "Come and see".

As Philip and Nathanael approached, the Lord said of Nathanael, "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!" Literally "Behold a true Israelite". Frequently in Scripture a distinction is made between "Israel" and "Jacob", the former representing the spiritual seed, and "Jacob" the seed "according to the flesh". If the distinction is maintained here, the Lord marked out Nathanael as a man of the Spirit, one in whom was no guile, deceit, cunning, or treachery. There was no subtlety about Nathanael as his replies, both to Philip, and to the Lord show. "Whence knowest Thou me?, said Nathanael. "Know" (ginosko) get to know. To this the Lord replied "Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig tree I saw thee". The word for "saw" being eidon, to see and perceive. "When did you get to know me?", "When you were under the fig tree I saw and perceived you". This convinced Nathanael, for no mere man, could, not only have seen him under the fig tree, but also have perceived the kind of man he was. Being one who was acquainted with Moses and the law, and the prophets, Nathanael would know "I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings" (Jer. xvii. 10). So Nathanael's reaction was in accord with the revelation given to him:

> "Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God; Thou art the King of Israel" (John i. 49).

It is an emphatic statement, with slightly more emphasis on the first clause than the second.

It may be questioned just how much did Nathanael mean and understand by this affirmation, and it is difficult to be quite certain. What did Philip really understand by his affirmation in verse 45? It seems clear that Nathanael went further than that. There are other similar affirmations of faith by others of the apostles: Peter's "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God", yet very shortly after, the Lord referred to Peter as a satan. How far did Thomas go in understanding his great statement "My Lord, and my God"? It would seem, and experience seems to confirm it, that it is possible intuitively to grasp some great fact of revelation, and yet fail to grasp the full implication of it. Yet Nathanael said it! THOU art the Son of God! THOU art KING of Israel!

Often the Lord's reply is taken as a rebuke. Yet it is quite possible to translate it: "Because I said unto thee, I saw thee under the fig tree, thou believest. Thou shalt see greater things than these". To existing faith, greater things are revealed. It is not clear to what “these” refers: does it mean that Nathanael will receive revelations greater than that the One Who spoke to him is the Son of God, and the King of Israel, or that he will receive greater revelations than the others who were with him? Having made this statement to Nathanael, the Lord then turns to the others and says to them all:

> “Verily, verily, I say unto you, Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man” (verse 51).

This might be an indication that they all would see this, yet Nathanael even more. Whether this is so or not, it is clear that the exercise of faith leads on to the apprehension of yet greater truths.

Those who seek the Truth, will find. Genuine doubt is no real hindrance, and it has been said with some truth, that the one who has never doubted, has never really believed. At the commencement of the Lord’s earthly ministry it was the one who began by doubting who made the greatest statement of faith: at the close of His ministry it was the one who has become known as “doubting Thomas” who made the declaration of faith: “My Lord and my God”. The Lord never despises honest doubt, indeed it would seem that to those who are “without guile”, who are anxious not to be deceived, are given the greater insights to the “deep things of God”.

The Miracles of the Apostles

pp. 145 - 149

In this series we intend, D.V., to look at each of the miracles of the apostles in detail. In modern Christendom much is heard about miracles but it seems to be based on the principle of "picking and choosing". If, and admittedly it is a very big "if", the miracles of the apostles are in evidence today then all of those miracles should be seen, not just two or three! Also, close scrutiny of the twentieth century phenomena and a comparison of them with those spectacular events described in the Acts of the Apostles show that something is amiss . . . . . but we are getting ahead of ourselves. What exactly is a miracle? In the King James version (A.V.) two Greek words are translated miracle:

(1) Dunamis
= power, inherent ability, is used of works of a supernatural origin and character, such as could not be produced by natural agents and means (Vine).
= power, in the singular, power in the abstract; but in the plural it means mighty works, i.e. the manifestations of power (Bullinger).

This word comes into English language in such words as dynamo, dynamite and dynamic, and it occurs some 119 times in the N.T. (10 in Acts) where it is translated: ability, abundance, meaning, might, mightily, mighty, mighty deed, worker of miracle, power, strength, violence, mighty work and wonderful work (Strong). A typical usage of the word is found in Acts x. 38 where it is translated power.

> "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power . . . . .".

(2) Semeion
= a sign, mark, token (akin to semaino, to give a sign; sema, a sign), is used of miracles and wonders as signs of divine authority (Vine).
= a sign. This word has regard to the significance of the work wrought, whether in itself, or in reason, object, design, and teaching intended to be conveyed by it (Bullinger).

This word, used chiefly by John, occurs some 77 times in the N.T. (13 in Acts) and is translated: miracle, sign, token and wonder (Strong). A typical usage of the word is found in Acts ii. 19 where it is translated signs:

> "And I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath: blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke."

The English word miracle, however, comes from the Latin miraculum which means "a wonder", from the verb mirror, to wonder at. Thus the word miracle should be used, strictly speaking, to translate the Greek word teras.

(3) teras = something strange, causing the beholder to marvel, is always used in the plural, always rendered "wonders" (Vine).
= a wonder. This word has regard to the effect produced on those who witnessed the mighty work. It is always translated "wonders" (Bullinger).

This word occurs 16 times in the N.T. (9 in Acts) and a typical usage of it is found in Acts ii. 19, quoted above.

Thus in the N.T. three aspects of miracles are presented by the inspired writers. Miracles are signs; they are the results of great power and they are wonderful. We should never forget this. Although the displays of great power were wonderful, they also signified something. So often, nowadays, that aspect is forgotten.

These three words come together in at least two verses of the N.T.

> "God also bearing them witness, both with signs (semeion) and wonders (teras), and divers miracles (dunamis), and gifts of the Holy Ghost" (Heb. ii. 4).

Thus the miracles of the apostles, those signs, wonders and displays of power were a witness, to testify that God was working with those who exhibited the phenomena. This was also true of The Apostle, the Lord Jesus Christ.

> "Ye men of Israel, hear the words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles (dunamis) and wonders (teras) and signs (semeion), which God did by Him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know" (Acts ii. 22).

But to whom were these signs a witness? To whom were the displays of power a testimony? Are all wonders a proof that God is working through the performer? Do all miracles prove that God is behind the miracle-worker? These are questions we shall have to deal with later but for now we should note that the Acts of the Apostles is "full" of miracles; signs, wonders and displays of power. The words dunamis, semeion and teras occur over 30 times in its 28 chapters and there are accounts of many marvelous events, even though miraculous, which do not include one of these words. If we look at these events in more detail we shall see great diversity.

Now this list of over 45 miracles is not exhaustive but it is more than sufficient to show the wide variety of miracles recorded in the book of Acts. However, to the above we must add such general statements as:

> "Many wonders and miracles were done by the apostles" (ii. 43).
>
> "By the hands of the apostles were many miracles, signs and wonders wrought among the people" (v. 12).
>
> "And Stephen, full of grace and power, wrought great wonders and signs among the people" (vi. 8, A.S.V.).
>
> "The Lord . . . . . granted signs and wonders to be done by their (Paul and Barnabas) hands" (xiv. 3).
> "Then all the multitude kept silence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them" (xv. 12).

Having seen the above list of over 45 mighty miracles we may be perplexed over what would constitute the "great wonders and signs" of Stephen (Acts vi. 8), or the "special miracles" of Paul (Acts xix. 11)! However, in the 28 chapters of the book of Acts there are well over 30 references to wonders, signs and displays of power. Also we have been able to list over 45 references to specific miracles and a further 5 general references have been given—and no doubt we have missed some! So—miracles, miracles, everywhere! Why were there so many? To answer that question we need to locate the Acts of the Apostles in its context in the great plan of God. However, we should just note that teras, wonder, which occurs 16 times in the N.T., including 9 in Acts does not occur once in those seven epistles written after Acts xxviii. 28 (viz., Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, I and II Timothy, Titus, Philemon). The word semeion, sign, with 77 occurrences in the N.T. including 13 in Acts, again does not occur once in those seven epistles written after Acts xxviii. 28. The word dunamis, power, however does. It comes 119 times in the N.T. and 11 of them fall in the post Acts epistles. The references are as follows: Eph. i. 19, 21; iii. 7, 16, 20; Phil. iii. 10; Col. i. 11, 29; II Tim. i. 7, 8; iii. 5. We would recommend our readers to look up each of these and note that in none of the contexts is there any hint of evidential miracles, signs and wonders or the displays of power as seen in the Acts of the Apostles.

No.2. Hast God cast away His people Israel?
pp. 165 - 171

Last time we asked such questions as: to whom were the signs a witness? To whom were the displays of power a testimony? And we also asked why were there so many wonders exhibited during the Acts period? We can answer such questions as these only if the Acts of the Apostles is seen in its proper context in God's plan and purpose.

The theme of the book is summed up in the question recorded in Acts i. 6:

> "When they therefore were come together, they asked Him, saying, Lord wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?".

Readers who think that the Jew was set aside by God at the cross may find this question perplexing. A careful reading of the book of Acts reveals that the Jew had not been set aside but was still there, right in the centre of events. In God's sight, that nation was still very much alive.

The word Israel or Israelite occurs some 21 times in the Acts of the Apostles and a further 21 in the epistles written during the Acts period but it occurs only twice in those seven written after the close of the Acts dispensation—(namely Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, I and II Timothy, Titus, Philemon). These two references are:

> Eph. ii. 12—where the Gentiles are reminded that in times past they were "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel".
> Phil. iii. 5—where Paul describes himself as "of the stock of Israel".

The last reference, Phil. iii. 5, also contains the only occurrence of the word Hebrew in the seven epistles written after Acts xxviii. 28. There Paul describes himself as "a Hebrew of the Hebrews".

We see a similar pattern with the words Jew, Jews, Jewish, etc. These occur some 81 times in Acts, 29 times in the epistles of the Acts period but again, only twice in those seven post Acts period epistles. The two references are:

> Col. iii. 11—where the Colossians are reminded that "there is neither Greek nor Jew".
> Titus i. 14—where Titus is warned against "giving heed to Jewish fables".

Thus the book of the Acts is full of the Jews, the people of Israel—as well as being full of mercies! This people had crucified their Messiah and they were held responsible for that deed. Peter, speaking to the Jews, said:

> "The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, Whom ye (the Jews) slew and hanged on a tree" (Acts v. 30).

Again, in Acts x. 39, Peter said:

> "And we are witnesses of all things which He did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem, Whom they (the Jews) slew and hanged on a tree."

We are not trying to absolve the Gentile world from the blame they deserve for their part in crucifying our Lord. Indeed, we cannot do that because Acts iv. 27 states:

> "For a truth against Thy holy child Jesus, Whom Thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together."

Certainly they all played their part in the rejection of the Son of God but Scripture records that Pilate was "willing to release Jesus" (Luke xxiii. 20). It was the Jews who "cried, saying, Crucify Him, crucify Him" (Luke xxiii. 21). But more than that! Worse than that, they also said:

> "His blood be on us, and on our children" (Matt. xxvii. 25).

Did they know what they were saying? Did they know what they were doing? No! Acts iii. 17 tells us that they did it in ignorance and from the cross, as His garments were being parted, the ever-gracious One, the ever-forgiving One prayed:

> "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do" (Luke xxiii. 24).

They didn't know what they were doing so He prayed for their forgiveness and that prayer was answered. The all-powerful, resurrected Christ told the disciples:

> "That repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem" (Luke xxiv. 27).

As a corporate body, for their corporate sin, the nation had been forgiven. Now repentance and remission of sins were available to the individual members of Israel but did the disciples obey Christ's command of Luke xxiv. 47? Yes! Acts iii. 19 records Peter's plea to the "men of Israel" (verse 12):

> "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out" (Acts iii. 19).

On the day of Pentecost, Peter had said:

> "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins" (Acts ii. 38).

But to whom was Peter speaking?

> "They were dwelling at Jerusalem, Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven" (Acts ii. 5).

Acts ii. 9, 10, 11 lists the nations from where the Jews had come. These are lists not of Gentiles but of "Jews and Proselytes" (Acts ii. 10). The occasion was the feast of Pentecost which would not have attracted Gentiles to Jerusalem . . . . . but Jews would have been there in their thousands. Thus the book of Acts opens with Jews in abundance and the first Gentile, Cornelius, does not appear until chapter x. and the next Gentile converts are not mentioned until Acts xiii. 42. But why were these Gentiles brought in then? Had the Jews then been set aside?

A close reading of Acts x. reveals Peter's reluctance to go to the first Gentile believer and when he met Cornelius he didn't seem to know why he had been sent!

> "Therefore came I unto you without gainsaying, as soon as I was sent for: I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me?" (Acts x. 29).

Before the ascension the Lord Jesus Christ had told the disciples that they should be witnesses of Him "in Jerusalem, in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (Acts i. 8). Peter knew this, he knew Jerusalem was the starting point (Luke xxiv. 47) and then all Judea. After that, when the nation had repented, they, as a kingdom of priests, were to take the message of the Messiah to Samaria and then to the uttermost parts of the earth. That was God's revealed plan but . . . . . the Jewish nation was not committed to Christ. The vast majority had still not repented. There was still opposition so . . . . . why go to a Gentile? The answer to that question is, of course, found in the writings of the one who is called the Apostle to the Gentiles, namely Paul. Romans was one of the last epistles written during the Acts period and Rom. xi. 1, 2 makes it very clear that, even then, the nation of Israel had not been cast away.

> ". . . . . Hath God cast away His people? God forbid . . . . . God has not cast away His people" (Rom. xi. 1, 2).

In Rom. xi. 11-25 Paul explains the position of the Gentiles and the reason for their being brought in during the Acts period, before the nation of Israel had repented:

> ". . . . . but through their (Jews) fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them (Jews) to jealousy (emulation or fruitfulness is a better rendering of the word 'jealousy')" (Rom. xi. 11).

This chapter of Roman goes on to explain that some of the natural branches (the Jews) had been broken off and some branches of a wild olive (the Gentiles) had been grafted in (Rom. xi. 17). This was done to stimulate the cultivated olive tree (the Jews) to bear fruit and the very use of this illustration shows that the olive tree of Israel had not, at that time, been cut down. The metaphorical application of this horticultural practice is exactly what we see in the Acts. For instance, at Antioch Paul went to the synagogue of the Jews, (Acts xiii. 14), and afterwards to the Gentiles. What was the effect on the Jews when they saw the multitude of Gentiles?

> ". . . . . they were filled with envy . . . . . then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourself unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles" (Acts xiii. 45, 46).

The Jews were provoked but sadly not to fruitfulness nor emulation, but to envy. Thus this group of Jews were cast away, this unfruitful branch broken off. This event must be seen in the context of Rom. xi. It was not at Acts xiii. that the Jewish nation was set aside. Here just one of the branches had been replaced. This is obvious from the next chapter which opens with:

> "And it came to pass in Iconium that they went into the synagogue of the Jews" (Acts xiv. 1).

But note the next verse:

> "But the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles."

The great council of apostles and elders at Jerusalem, recorded in Acts xv., clearly indicates that Israel are still dominant and they maintain that position throughout the whole period covered by the Acts of the Apostles. Acts xviii. 19 records that Paul "entered into the synagogue and reasoned with the Jews". In Acts xxviii. 20 Paul states "that for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain". In that chapter he "called the chief of the Jews together" (Acts xxviii. 17) but having listened to Paul's exposition of the kingdom of God, some believed and some believed not, and "they agreed not among themselves" (Acts xxviii. 23-25). Only after that, after the third pronouncement in the N.T. of Isa. vi. 9, 10 (found in Acts xxviii. 26, 27) do we read:

> "Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it" (Acts xxviii. 28).

At that time, at the end of the books of Acts, the Jewish nation was set aside. From that time was salvation sent to the Gentiles independently of the Jews. From then on things changed. Not only do we see a sudden decrease in the use of "Israel", "Israelite", "Jew" and "Jewish" in those seven epistles written after this time but there is a complete absence of the type of miracles which fill the Acts period. More than that there are three clear testimonies to the gift of healing having ceased:

> "For he (Epaphroditus) longed after you all, and was full of heaviness, because ye had heard that he had been sick. For indeed he was sick nigh unto death: but God had mercy on him; and not on him only, but on me also, lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow" (Phil. ii. 26, 27).
> "Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities" (I Tim. v. 23).
> "Erastus abode at Corinth: but Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick" (II Tim. iv. 20).

In the Acts period a handkerchief or apron from Paul cured diseases (Acts xix. 12) but all that was sent after Acts xxviii. 28 was good advice! In the Acts period Paul healed all who came to him. On Malta, all who came to him were healed (Acts xxviii. 9). He left none ill but after Acts xxviii. 28 he could not cure Trophimus and he left him at Miletum sick. In the Acts period Paul could easily have healed Epaphroditus and if he still possessed the gift after Acts xxviii. 28 there was no need for Paul to have sorrow, but he no longer could heal. Thus, like us, Paul could but pray and wait on the Lord. In the case of Epaphroditus he was, eventually, restored but not until he had been "sick nigh unto death".

Thus the book of Acts is dominated by the Jews and contains an abundance of miracles. At Acts xxviii. 26-28 that people as a nation before God are set on one side and the miracles cease. Is this surprising? No! Next time we shall look at the way in which God has dealt with the people of Israel right from the birth of the nation. We shall see that signs, wonders and displays of power have always had a prominent place for this people.

No.3. Setting the scene --- The Old Testament: "Then believed they His words".

pp. 186 - 192

We have seen how miracles—signs, wonders and displays of power—and how the Jews, the people of Israel, dominate the book of Act. If we know the O.T., we should not be surprised to see the close association of these two. Neither should we be surprised to find that when the Jewish nation was set aside by God at the end of the book of Acts (see Acts xxvii. 26-28), the evidential miracles, the external signs, wonders and displays of power, also ceased.

The first occurrence, in English, of the word miracles in the O.T. comes in Exod.vii.9:

> "And when Pharaoh shall speak unto you, saying Show a miracle for you, then thou shalt say unto Aaron, Take thy rod, and cast it before Pharaoh, and it shall become a serpent."

Here, the Hebrew for miracles is mopheth of which there are two occurrences earlier in the Bible. In Exod. iv. 21 and vii. 3 where it is translated wonders:

> "And the Lord said unto Moses, When thou goest to return into Egypt, see that thou do all these wonders before Pharaoh" (Exod. iv. 21).
> "I will . . . . . multiply My signs and wonders in the land of Egypt" (Exod. vii. 3).

The first occurrence, in English, of the word sign is not in Exod. vii. 3, quoted above, but in Exod. iv. 8. Please read Exod. iv. 1-9 and note:

> "And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe thee, neither hearken to the voice of the first sign, that they will believe the voice of the latter sign" (Exod. iv. 8).

The Hebrew word for sign is oth and occurs several times previous to Exod. iv. 8, being translated signs (Gen. i. 14), mark (Gen. iv. 15) and token (Gen. ix. 12, 13, 17 and xvii. 11 and Exod. iii. 12). Please read each of these references.

The first occurrence, in English, of the word wonder in the O.T. is found in Exod.iii.20:

> "And I will stretch out My hand, and smite Egypt with all My wonders which I will do in the midst thereof: and after that he will let you go."

The Hebrew word for wonder in this verse is pala which occurs but once previously in Gen. xviii. 14. There it is translated too hard and the context of the first occurrence of this word is significant:

"And they said unto him, Where is Sarah thy wife? And he said, Behold, in the tent. And he said, I will certainly return unto thee according to the time of life; and lo, Sarah thy wife shall have a son. And Sarah heard it in the tent door, which was behind him. Now Sarah and Abraham were old and well stricken in age; and it ceased to be with Sarah after the manner of women. Therefore Sarah laughed within herself, saying, After I am waxed old shall I have pleasure, my lord being old also? And the Lord said unto Abraham, Wherefore did Sarah laugh, saying, Shall I of a surety bear a child, which am old? Is anything too hard for the Lord?" (Gen. xviii. 9-14).

Thus the very existence of the seed of Abraham depended on a miracle. The origin of the Jewish nation, the people of Israel, was a miracle. When that nation had grown, their deliverance from Egypt, so vividly described in the opening chapters of Exodus, was accompanied by a multiplicity of miracles. (The words mopheth, oth and pala occur some twenty times in the first thirteen chapters of Exodus).

Throughout the whole of the O.T. we see miracle after miracle, sign after sign and wonder after wonder associated with this people. We see God guiding them, protecting them, teaching them and disciplining them by using signs, wonders and external displays of His power. It would be impossible to give them all but we list some of the main ones.

(1) The Beginning of the Nation.

Now please note that we do not claim that the above list of nearly 100 miracles is anywhere near complete. To the above could be added the many visions and visitations, the many dreams together with their interpretations, the many prophecies and their fulfillments. If we read the context of these diverse miracles we shall see that throughout the Lord is guiding, protecting, teaching and disciplining His chosen people, the Jews. Miracles were for the people of Israel and, generally speaking, the only time Gentiles benefited from miracles were when they came into direct contact with the Jews and were involved, in some way, with God's plan for that people. For example, in Gen. xx. 3-8, God came to the Gentile king of Gerar, Abimelech, "in a dream by night". This was to warn Abimelech and to protect Abraham's wife, Sarah, and the purity of the promised seed.

Again in Gen. xl., the Egyptian baker and butler had dreams which Joseph interpreted. Gen. xli. records Pharaoh's two dreams and, following the butler's testimony, Joseph was brought from prison to interpret. This resulted in Joseph being promoted to second-in-command in the kingdom, sufficient food being stored for the seven year famine and Jacob and his family coming to Egypt to be fed and protected from that famine. Thus the seed of Israel was preserved thanks to the dreams of Gentiles.

Similar features can be seen in the case of the Babylonian king, Nebuchadnezzar, and Daniel who interpreted his dreams. There again Jews were promoted to high positions among the Gentile rulers, and thus, even in exile, the chosen people were protected.

I Kings xvii. 10-24 records how Elijah went to a Gentile, the widow of Sarepta. There he made her supply of meal and oil inexhaustible and raised her son to life. II.Kings.v.1-19 records how Elisha cured the captain of the Syrian army, Naaman, of leprosy. It is significant that the Lord Jesus Christ refers to these two miracles on His first day of ministry. Luke iv. 16-19 records how the Lord Jesus went into the synagogue at Nazareth and read from Isa. lxi. 1, 2. When he finished He closed the book and said:

> "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears" (Luke iv. 21).

But although they wondered at what He said and asked "Is not this Joseph's son? He knew exactly what they were thinking. Luke iv. 23, 24 implies that they will not accept Him and the Lord then says:

> "But I tell you of a truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land; but unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow. And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleaned, saving Naaman the Syrian" (Luke iv. 25-27).

How did the people react to being reminded of these miracles which had been bestowed upon the Gentiles by the two Jewish prophets?

> "And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things were filled with wrath" (Luke iv. 28).

The Jewish people came to expect, even to demand and require signs from those who claimed to speak on behalf of God. They guarded such miracles jealously for they considered them to belong exclusively to their nation. Thus we can understand why the Lord allowed the gifts and blessings of the Acts period to fall upon some Gentiles—"for to provoke them (the Jews) to jealously (i.e. fruitfulness or emulation)" (Rom. xi. 11).

Sadly this did not happen during the Acts period, as we saw in the previous article, and neither did it work in Luke iv. where verse 29 records that the people wanted to throw the Lord Jesus from the brow of the hill. Thankfully they did not succeed but regretfully it was a shame that they, unlike a previous generation, did not take notice of the speaker's credentials.

> "And Moses told Aaron all the words of the Lord Who had sent him, and all the signs which He had commanded him. And Moses and Aaron went and gathered together all the elders of the children of Israel. And Aaron spake all the words which the Lord had spoken unto Moses, and did the signs in the sight of the people. And the people believed" (Exod. iv. 28-31).

> "Our fathers understood not Thy wonders in Egypt; they remembered not the multitude of Thy mercies; but provoked Him at the sea, even at the Red Sea. Nevertheless He saved them for His name's sake, that He might make His mighty power to be known. He rebuked the Red Sea also, and it was dried up: so He led them through the depths, as through the wilderness. And He saved them from the hand of him that hated them, and redeemed them from the hand of the enemy. And the waters covered their enemies: there was not one of them left. THEN believed they His words" (Psalm cvi. 7-12).
> "And Israel saw the great work which the Lord did upon the Egyptians: and the people feared the Lord, and believed the Lord, and His servant Moses" (Exod. xiv. 31).

Thus to the Jews the miracles of the O.T. were not merely wonders or empty displays of power, they were signs. They were evidence not only of God's existence and His will but were also a witness to the Jews that God was with the miracle-worker. The people of Israel could be expected to listen only to those who had the signs but was that still the case in the Gospels and in the Acts?

No.4. Setting the scene --- The Gospels: "Many believed when they saw the Miracles".

We have seen in previous articles that miracles abound in the book of Acts and that the book is dominated by the Jews. We saw in our last study how in the O.T. God had taught, disciplined, protected and guided the people of Israel by using miracles, signs, wonders and displays of power. The Jew looked for, even demanded, miracles and could not be expected to believe that anyone spoke on behalf of God unless he had the accredited signs and wonders.

One night, a Pharisee, a ruler of the Jews named Nicodemus came to the Lord Jesus and said:

> "Rabbi, we know that Thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do those miracles that Thou doest, except God be with Him" (John iii. 2).

Nicodemus, being a master and teacher of Israel, would know his Scriptures, the O.T., and would know what the prophets had foretold.

On another occasion, when John the Baptist was in prison, he sent two of his disciples to the Lord Jesus Christ to ask:

> "Art Thou He that should come? or look we for another? And in that same hour He cured many of their infirmities and plagues and of evil spirits; and unto many that were blind He gave sight. Then Jesus answering said unto them, Go your way and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached" (Luke vii. 19-22).

John the Baptist would then know that Christ was the Messiah for this was exactly what the prophets had foretold; see, for example, Isa.xxix.18; xxxv.5,6; xlii.7; lxi.1,2. In fact, at the very start of His ministry the Lord Jesus Christ quoted from Isa. lxi. 1, 2:

> "And He came to Nazareth, where He had been brought up: and, as His custom was, He went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read. And there was delivered unto Him the book of the prophet Esaias (Isaiah). And when He had opened the book He found the place where it is written, the Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me to preach the gospel to the poor, to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. And He closed the book, and He gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on Him. And He began to say unto them, This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears" (Luke iv. 16-21).

The first recorded miracle of Christ is found in Matt. iv. 23, 24 and there we can see the close association between miracles and teaching:

> "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease among the people. And His fame went throughout all Syria, and they brought unto Him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with demons, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and He healed them" (Matt. iv. 23, 24).

The result of these miracles of healing was that:

> "There followed Him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan" (Matt. iv. 25).

These miracles were not mere exhibitions of pointless power. They attracted people from all parts of the country and were a complement to the teaching and preaching. Again, as in the O.T., God was using miracles to help the people, to guide them, and to teach them. This is so throughout the Gospels. For example, in Matt. x. 7, 8 we find the same principle demonstrated in the Lord's words to the twelve:

> "As ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils" (Matt. x. 7, 8).

Even the last reference in the Gospels, to miracles states exactly the same thing. Here the risen Christ instructed the disciples and . . . . .:

> "They went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following" (Mark xvi. 20).

Throughout His ministry on earth, the Lord Jesus appealed to the miracles—signs, wonders and displays of power—that He performed. For instance:

> "But I have greater witness than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given Me to finish, the same works bear witness of Me that the Father sent Me" (John.v.36).

Here again, we see that the miracles were a witness. Similarly, when He met opposition, He said:

> "If I do not the works of My Father, believe Me not. But if I do, though ye believe not Me, believe the works: that ye may know, and believe that the Father is in Me, and I in Him" (John x. 37, 38).

Sadly, however, the majority would not "believe the works". They would not accept the signs as a witness or testimony that He was the One.

> "Then He began to upbraid the cities wherein most of His mighty works were done, because they repented not" (Matt. xi. 20).

Others were more than glad to accept the benefit of the signs but not the consequences.

> "Verily, verily I say unto you, ye seek Me not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves and were filled" (John vi. 26).

We may well be puzzled as to why the Jews did not accept the evidential miracles performed by the Lord Jesus Christ as a testimony to His Messiahship. The prophets had foretold what He would do and, after all, He did perform so many miracles. For example, in Matthew's Gospel alone we read of the following miracles:

viii. 2-4	The leper cleansed	viii. 5-13	Centurion's servant healed
viii. 14, 15	Peter's mother-in-law cured	viii. 23-27	The storm stilled
viii. 28-34	Demonics cured in Gergesenes	ix. 2-7	Paralytic cured
ix. 18-20	Ruler's daughter raised	ix. 20-22	Issue of blood cured
ix. 27-31	Two blind men cured	ix. 32, 33	Dumb spirit cast out
xii. 10-13	Withered hand cured	xii. 22	Blind and demonics cured
xiv. 14	Many healed	xiv. 15-21	Five thousand fed
xiv. 22-33	Walking on the sea	xiv. 36	Many made perfectly whole
xv. 21-28	Woman of Canaan cured	xv. 29, 30	Many healed
xv. 31-39	Four thousand fed	xvii. 14-21	Lunatic boy cured
xxi. 1-7	The ass and colt	xxi. 14	Blind and lame cured
xxi. 18-22	Fig tree withered	xxvii. 52-xxviii. 8	The resurrection

There are, at least, another two miracles in Mark's gospel, not mentioned in Matthew:

vii. 31-37	Deaf and dumb man cured	viii. 22-26	Blind man cured

And there are, at least, another six in Luke, not recorded in either Matthew or Mark:

v. 1-11	Draught of fishes	vii. 11-17	Widow's son raised
xiii. 11-17	Woman loosed from infirmity	xiv. 1-6	Dropsy cured
xvii. 11-19	Ten lepers cleansed	xxii. 50, 51	Malchus' ear healed

John records just eight miracles, or signs as he calls them, and six of these are unique to his gospel:

ii. 1-11	Water into wine	iv. 46-54	Healing the ruler's son
v. 1-9	Healing the impotent man	ix. 1-7	Healing the man born blind
xi. 38-44	Raising of Lazarus	xxi. 1-14	Draught of 153 fishes

After such display of power and with such an array of signs before them, we are left even more perplexed as to why the Jews did not accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their Messiah.

> "But though He had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on Him" (John xii. 37).

We may never know the true reason for their unbelief but a possible explanation is that, in Jewish terms, there were two pictures of the Messiah in the Old Testament; The Messiah-ben-David, the all powerful One, the great King and the Messiah-ben-Joseph, the holy and humble One, the suffering One. Some schools of Jewish theology taught that the Messiah-ben-Joseph was not a picture of the Messiah Himself but of His people, the Jews, because the Messiah and His people were so close, were so united. The people of Israel had suffered much under the Babylonians, Medo-Persians, Greeks and Romans so the picture fitted and, not only that, they could not see how it was possible for the Messiah to suffer. They looked only for the Messiah-ben-David, the mighty One whom they desired to see so much; He would free them from the Roman oppression. But when Jesus came "lowly, and riding upon an ass" (Zech. ix. 9), the vast majority of them did not see His signs as a testimony to His Messiahship simply because they were not looking for the lowly One. They wanted the mighty One. However, not all of that generation were like that. As the miracles in the O.T. had led some of those living at the time to believe in Jehovah and to listen to the servants who did the miracles, so in the gospels we read:

> "This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana in Galilee, and manifested forth His glory: and His disciples believed on Him" (John ii. 11).
> "Now when He was in Jerusalem at the Passover, in the feast day, many believed in His name, when they saw the miracles which He did" (ii. 23).
>
> "And when He thus had spoken He cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth. And he that was dead came forth bound hand and foot with graveclothes: and his face was bound about with a napkin . . . . . Then many of the Jews which came to Mary, and had seen the things which Jesus did, believed on Him" (xi. 43-45).
> "And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of His disciples, which are not written in this book. But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through His name" (xx. 30, 31).

Thus John recorded his eight signs to show that Jesus is the Christ, the Messiah! The miracles and wonders performed by the Lord Jesus were signs to the people of Israel to encourage them to believe. They testified to the Jews that the One Who performed them was their Messiah but were these wonders a witness to every nation? No! They could be a blessing to a Gentile but they could not be a witness to him of the Lord Jesus' Messiahship. They could only be a testimony to the nation that held the key to them. That key was the Scriptures and that nation was Israel.

> "What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there in circumcision? Much everyway: chiefly, because unto them were committed the oracles of God" (Rom.iii.1,2).

> [NOTE: For those who are interested, the 26 Miracles of Matthew and the signs of John are dealt with fully on pages 152-214 of Charles H. Welch's Parable, Miracle and Sign.]

No.5. Setting the scene --- The Acts: "Jews require a Sign".
pp. 225 - 229

In our previous studies we have seen the close relationship between the people of Israel and God's use of miracles in dealing with them. Thus we should not be surprised to read in an Acts period epistle:

> "The Jews require a sign" (I Cor. i. 22).

The resurrected Christ, just before His ascension, had told the disciples that they were to be . . . . .:

> ". . . . . witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (Acts i. 8).

He had told them that . . . . .:

> ". . . . . repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem" (Luke xxiv. 47).

If the disciples were to start in Jerusalem, if they were to go throughout Judea, they needed credentials. If they were to go to the Jews, they had to have confirmation of their ministry: "the Jews require a sign". The Lord Jesus Christ knew this and for this very reason had told them . . . . .:

> "And these signs shall follow them that believe; In My name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover . . . . . And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them and confirming the word with signs following" (Mark xvi. 17-20).

If we read the Acts of the Apostles, and the epistles written during the Acts period (viz. all except Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, I & II Timothy, Titus, Philemon which were written afterwards) we shall find records of all these miracles, except the drinking of poison, taking place. The signs of Mark xvi. were an important feature of the Acts period.

> "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation; which at first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard Him; God also bearing them witness both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to His will?" (Heb. ii. 34).

Thus these signs, wonders, diverse miracles and gifts were a witness and testimony to back up the ministry of those who spoke about that "great salvation". In many ways, such outward displays of God's power provided confirmation to those Jews who did believe.

> "Even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you: so that ye come behind in no gift . . . . ." (I Cor. i. 6, 7).

But to the Jew who did not believe, they signified that God was at work. The miracles were a divine testimony and a wonderful witness to the unbelieving Jew, especially the gift of tongues.

> "In the law it is written, With men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that will they not hear Me, saith the Lord. Wherefore tongues are a sign, not to them that believe; but to them that believe not" (I Cor. xiv. 21, 22).

Notice the words, "In the law it is written". These words would mean little to a Gentile of that time. Tongues were a sign to the unbelieving Jew of his unbelief and the above reference would bring to his mind such passages as Isa. xxviii. 11, 12; xxxiii. 19 as well as, possibly, Deut. xxviii. 49, Unto the Jew "were committed the oracles of God" (Rom. iii. 2) and so only they could understand the significance of the signs. How did the Israel of the Acts period react to these miracles of God? Initially the response was good.

> ". . . and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls" (Acts ii. 41).
> "Howbeit many of them which heard the word believed, and the numbers of the men was about five thousand" (Acts iv. 4).
> ". . . and believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes of both men and women" (Acts v. 14).

Sadly, however, just as they had refused to accept the miraculous credentials of Christ, the Jewish leadership refused to be satisfied with the signs of the disciples. After Peter and John had healed the man at the Beautiful Gate, the Jewish council conferred, saying:

> "What shall we do to these men? For that a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem: and we cannot deny it" (Acts iv. 16).

They could not deny the mighty miracle and asked "What shall we do to these men?" What did they do? Do they accept the sign? Did they believe? No! They called in Peter and John,

> ". . . . . and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus" (iv. 18).

What hardness of heart! What hypocrisy! They could not deny the miracle, yet they would not accept it. They refused the miraculous testimonials of the divine authority of the disciples just as they had refused the witness of the Lord's work of His Messiahship.

As we progress through the book of Acts the unbelieving Jewish leaders actively oppose the disciples first with imprisonments (Acts v. 18), next with beatings (Acts v. 40) and then with the stoning of Stephen (Acts vii. 59). But that was just a start.

> "And at that time there was great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem, and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles" (Acts viii. 1).
> "And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went into the high priest, and desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether he might bring them bound to Jerusalem" (Acts ix. 1, 2).

The result of the opposition, instigated by the Jewish leadership, was that the bulk of believers were scattered abroad. Even though the miracles continued, they failed to convert large numbers to the truth of Christ. They continued, however, to have some success.

> "And he gave her his hand, and lifted her up, and when he had called the saints and widows, presented her alive. And it was known throughout all Joppa, and many believed in the Lord" (Acts ix. 41, 42).

"Many believed" but the days of several thousands or, occasionally multitudes of converts were over. There was "a great number" (Acts xi. 21) at Antioch and "much people were added" (Acts xi. 24) but the persecution increased:

> "Now about this time Herod the king stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church. And he killed James the brother of John with the sword. And because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also" (Acts xii. 1-3).

Even the outstanding conversion of Saul on the road to Damascus did not stop the persecution. He suffered it himself.

> "But the Jews stirred up the devout and honourable women and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas" (Acts xiii. 50).
> "And there came thither certain Jews . . . . . who persuaded the people, and having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead" (Acts xiv. 19).

If God had not already cut off the Jewish nation for rejecting and crucifying the Messiah, surely He would finish with them now! But, "Thou art a God ready to pardon, gracious and merciful, slow to anger and of great kindness" (Neh. ix. 17) "The Lord . . . is long suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (II Pet. iii. 9). Thus in an attempt to stimulate the olive tree of Israel into bearing fruit (Rom. xi. 11) some of its branches were broken off and parts of the wild olive (the Gentiles) were grafted in.

> "And if some of the branches be broken off, and thou, being a wild olive tree, wert grafted in among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive tree, boast not against the branches" (Rom. xi. 17, 18).

Thus the Gentiles who were to stimulate Israel were to partake of "the root and fatness of the olive tree", part of which consisted of the miracles of that period. The second half of the book of Acts sees the Gentiles participating in the wondrous blessings of Israel but did that stimulate the Jewish nation to bear fruit? Did it provoke them to emulation? No! Sadly they were provoked to envy, as in, for example, Acts xiii. 45, 50 and xiv. 19.

With the unbelief of the Jewish leadership in Rome, God's patience with them came to an end. The third reference to Isa. vi. 9, 10 in Acts xxviii. 26, 27 saw the temporary end of the Jews as a nation before God, and they will remain so throughout this present dispensation. At the end of the Acts period Israel was set on one side and the miracles, wonders and displays of power which were a sign to them ceased.

We have now considered the background. We have set the scene and have looked at the Acts in its context in relation to the O.T. and the Gospels. We have seen that throughout the O.T., the Gospels and the Acts, the Jew is dominant and miracles abound. We have seen the close relationship between the Jewish people and these miraculous sings and we have seen how God used the wonders and displays of His power to guide, protect, teach and discipline His chosen people, the people of Israel.

In future studies we shall look in great details at each miracle done by the apostles. Next time, D.V., we shall look at the casting of lots, after that Holy Spirit baptism, after that tongues, then healing and so on.

The First Epistle of PETER

No.4b. ii. 12 - 17.
pp. 39, 40

> "Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles that whereas they speak against you as evildoers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation" (I Pet. ii. 12).

Visitation comes from episkope a bishop or overseer, one who visits and keeps an eye on his flock. In the text it would refer to the moment we come under scrutiny from the outside world and are then a recommendation to the gospel and Christ or the reverse.

The Ephesian calling has special reference to us as an advertising medium for the grace and wisdom of God influencing us, setting us (we hope) as a good example to principalities and powers in heavenly places (Eph. iii. 10). Honest conversation (manner of life), implies a livelihood and day to day dealings with others that are just, fair and have no appearance of evil or double dealing. Paul writes "recompense to no man evil for evil. Provide things honest in the sight of all men" (Rom. xii. 17).

> "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well. For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men: as free and not using your liberty for a cloke of maliciousness, but as the servants of God" (verses 13-16).

Our Lord also showed the involvement of God in the affairs of men in the matter of government. Christ quotes from Psa. lxxxii. 6 in John x. 35. In verse 1 we read:

> "God standeth in the congregation of the mighty; He judgeth among the gods."

Here gods although elohim, is used of earthly judges as representatives of God. It is significant of the divine inspiration given to Peter that he can write with assurance "for so is the will of God". "As free" was misunderstood by many even as they were when Christ said "the truth shall make you free" (John viii. 33). Even though the believers had come under the law of the Spirit from the law of Moses and man, yet their perfect conduct gave their critical onlookers (who were ignorant of this new position of the believer) no excuse for pointing the finger of judgment and condemnation. Their behaviour, obedient to and consistent with, their faith would redound to the glory of God. We should remember that the law is for those that know not God.

> "Honour all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honour the king" (ii. 17).

"Honour all men" is an injunction much emphasized in Philippians. God alone knows the opportunities, handicaps, circumstances of each man; the tasks allotted to them by their Maker. We therefore in our ignorance must accord them respect whoever they are and in humility reflect the love of God in our dealings with them. "Love the brotherhood" Paul echoes the sentiment when he writes:

> "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto men who are of the household of faith" (Gal. vi. 10).

When one thinks of the love of God for all those who are His children there must be even greater overshadowing concern for some who are faithful under special difficulties. We may be ministering to or alas failing to support unknowingly such a chosen vessel. "Fear God", the proverb (ix. 10) says "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom". note that fear is allied to reverence and it is only the beginning of wisdom. The degree of awe and respect we offer God may well be in proportion to our faith, for at the other extreme it is written "The fool has said in his heart there is no God" (Psalms xiv. 1 and liii. 1).

No.5. ii. 18 - iii. 2.
pp. 59, 60

The remaining verses of this chapter touch on the sublime behaviour expected by the Father from His children, namely the patient endurance of undeserved evil of varying degrees from others and moreover loving concern offered to the offender rather than evil for evil. This is a hard lesson to learn yet our blessed Lord gave us an outstanding example to emulate and follow:

> "When He was reviled He did not revile in return; when He suffered He did not threaten; but He trusted to Him Who judges justly. He Himself bore our sins in His body on the tree, that we might die to sin and live to righteousness" (ii. 23-25, R.S.V.).

This quotation is from Isa. liii. 5. This chapter of Isaiah has only 12 verses and it would be a good thing if we often read it and pondered on all the hurtful things He had to endure from His own people, quite apart from the physical torment of His last hours. Despised, rejected, esteemed or thought to be smitten by God, oppressed, yet with all this it is recorded "He opened not His mouth in rebuke". Was there ever such an example to us? Paul also declared how God has demonstrated His love towards us:

> "God commended His love towards us in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. v. 13).

It is in this spirit we are to meet all the unfair buffets of the world and being on the alert for such a moment of testing we may witness to the quality of our life in Christ, causing, we trust, our offender to pause and consider our unworldly response. See the gospels where Christ taught this lesson and gave the new spiritual recipe for the O.T. law 'an eye for an eye'. When we really consider the amazing example our Lord set us on the cross, shall we hesitate to make a little gracious gesture when we think we are ill-used?

Chapter iii.

> "Likewise you wives, be submissive to your husbands; so that some though they do not obey the word, may be won without a word by the behaviour of their wives" (iii. 1, 2, R.S.V.).

The relationship of men and women as well as between husbands and wives has varied from nation to nation and from century to century. Many view Paul was wanting to lower the position of women in society. Peter perhaps escapes this criticism: Patient examination of the words and times for which these men of God wrote will illuminate the fact that their leading was God-given and did not originate from their own ideas. God in His love and concern for us has in His word given commands and advice for every conceivable human problem of relations, attitudes and behaviour. In Gen. iii. when Eve was the one who was deceived by the wiles of Satan God decreed ". . . . . thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee" (verse 16). There is then this decreed relation laid down by God. It will work perfectly all the while both parties act with respect and true love for each other. The word "likewise", the first word in this chapter links the expected behaviour of wives to their husbands to follow the faithful obedience of Christ to the will of His Father, and by their daily behaviour in so doing follow the example of Christ in patient endurance. Here let it be said we are pointing to the Scripture. How each reader applies this to his or her day to day circumstances is a personal matter. It is not kind to spoil or indulge a selfish child, neither is it kind or profitable to ignore thoughtlessness or selfishness in an adult. It is the way the correction is attempted that is the test. The faultless and patient example of the good partner should always help to win the other to a true life in Christ.

No.6. iii. 3 - 18.

> "Let not yours be the outward adorning with braiding of hair, decoration of gold, and wearing of robes, but let it be the hidden person of the heart with the unperishable jewels of a gentle and quiet spirit, which in God's sight is very precious. So once the holy women who hoped in God used to adorn themselves and were submissive to their husbands, as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him Lord. And you are now her children if you do right and let nothing terrify you" (iii. 3-6, R.S.V.).

Again dress and adornment has varied from nation to nation, century to century and occasion to occasion so that specific suggestions cannot be made. What is constant and necessary is that for all, the dress, appearance, adornment should express the mind and character of the person. Thus adornment will be appropriate for the occasion expressing a unity and sympathy with the expected company. Cleanliness, neatness and tidiness will exhibit and reflect a well ordered mind and habits. If this is done there should be no envy or jealousy or a slip into lazy habits. At all times our appearance should back up our verbal witness and thus glorify the Lord.

> "Likewise you husbands, live considerately with your wives, bestowing honour on the woman as the weaker sex, since you are joint heirs of the grace of life, in order that your prayers may not be hindered" (iii. 7, R.S.V.).

The A.V. gives "husbands dwell with them according to knowledge" which means in harmony with the life you experience with your wife, the giving and allowances being made when necessary as the wife is the one God has put in the man's care. When I asked my father-in-law if I could marry his daughter, he said with a twinkle, "don't forget to bear and forbear". We have often laughed about the bears but what good advice it was.

> "Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one for another, love as brethren, be pitiful (tender hearted), be courteous: not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing (injurious speaking): but contrariwise (rather) blessing (speaking well of); knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing" (iii. 8, 9).

The calling of Ephesians specifically states that the response in their lives would redound to the glory of the grace that God had bestowed upon them. In the words "ye should inherit a blessing" (be well spoken of in resurrection) it would seem that those who followed this ideal attitude to others, whether friends or enemies, would have their share in glorifying our wonderful God of grace and love and justifying to others the patient long suffering and mercy He had extended to Peter's brethren even as He does to us today. Paul's injunction to the Ephesian in iv. 2 has a similar appeal "Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace". Harmony and love towards each other is a training ground for that future unity with God the Father in whose presence all discord and enmity is banished.

> "For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile: Let him eschew (turn from, refrain from) evil, and do good, let him seek peace, and ensue it. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and His ears are open to their prayers: but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil" (iii. 10-12).

As we have traced our way through this letter of Peter we see him continually pointing his brethren to the Father, His Son and His Word, feeding the sheep as his Lord asked. These three verses he has quoted from Psa. xxxiv. 12-16. The Psalmist introduces these verses by saying:

> "Come ye children, hearken unto me, I will teach you the fear of the Lord."

How appropriate for Peter to extract these verses from David's psalm. In Peter's day as in David's day God had His people continually in view, chastening, succouring and rewarding. James had much to say as to how the tongue could offend (iii. 5). It is salutary that God thought it wise to repeat these three verses after 1000 years had elapsed from David's day. We might ask too how appropriate they would be today. As we look out of our window on the world through our daily newspaper, we read into every headline the lack of peace and understanding between all sorts and classes of people. Political views and economic panaceas are mostly not truthfully expressed and are not without bias. There is often no desire to understand those with whom we disagree.

If we want to love life and see good days for ourselves and others (and who doesn't)? we shall listen to the Lord's words through David and Peter seeking peace which is unity and concord. Endeavour by knowledge to find understanding and sympathy with others and so still the lips of ill-advised comment. If our heart is right the Holy Spirit will put the words into our prayers that will purify our desires and give a new direction to the day before us. Sadly where the heart is not right our prayers feel dead and God seems far away.

> "And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? But and if ye suffer for righteousness sake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be ye troubled" (iii. 13, 14).

Paul in his letter to the Romans echoed these sentiments in the closing chapters on this triumphant note:

> "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. viii. 38, 39).

Persecution and martyrdom became progressively more rife in those days and words of comfort and encouragement were very necessary. What sort of opposition do we meet today? I think perhaps it is more insidious. The preacher at my church had in passing, sought to rationalize miracles saying they were not unique, leprosy might have been eczema! etc. I discussed it with the parish clerk who said "What did it matter, it happened so long ago". The fact that the miracles had to be supernatural as proof of Christ's Messiahship was unknown to this official but the preacher, who was a qualified schoolmaster should have known better. Defence of the truth often brings ostracism but let our defence of the truth await an appropriate opening lest the word be out of season and we close a door both to ourselves and others in Christ who may follow us.

> "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness (gentle of temper) and fear: having a good conscience" (iii. 15, 16).

To sanctify the Lord God in our hearts is to so let the Holy Spirit have free run in our hearts that we are separated from the world unto Him and His purposes for us in Christ. This separation from the world only refers to those aspects of our daily experience of life that are not in harmony with God as judged by our conscience. It is one thing for me from retirement in old age to write these things, it is another to those caught up in the process of earning a living and perforce meeting people often of questionable and amoral character. But this is the test of our faith and trust in Him for guidance and strength. We cannot and are not intended to withdraw ourselves. Rather as our text says prepare ourselves to give an answer to every man as to the hope we hold. And this is to be as opportunity allows. This whole concept can be epitomized as "set apart Christ as Lord in your hearts".

This witness to the Lord and His Word is most important. There is not one believer who should say as Moses did at first "I am not eloquent . . . . . and the Lord said unto him, Who hath made man's mouth?" (Exod. iv.10, 11). Get a pad of paper and practice writing articles on basic themes like "redemption", "salvation". It will give you practice in self-expression. It will aid your memory and reveal the gaps in your knowledge. The precious Word of God deserves this close attention and the Holy Spirit will reward your efforts.

The good conscience that opens verse 16 suggests that if we offer ointment we should not show spots on our own skin.

> "Having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation (manner of living) in Christ. For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing. For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit (made alive in Spirit)" (iii. 16-18).

No.7. iii. 19 - iv. 4.

Peter returns to the example our Lord set in His trial and crucifixion, the innocent suffering for the guilty in meekness and silence. Peter's brethren were to follow this example meeting every unjust accusation with patient endurance, putting their opponents to shame inasmuch as believers in Christ, they exhibited no evil, neither any appearance of the same.

The transition of the Saviour from the flesh through death into the life of the spirit was the assurance to His followers that they too would follow the same path to God. Moreover even as the Lord had ascended to glory they too if they suffered for His sake would reign with Him. Verse 19 gives a further aspect of the Lord's glory in His spiritual resurrection body.

> "By which (in which condition) He went and preached (heralded the victory over sin and death) unto the spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing, wherein a few, that is, eight souls were saved by water" (iii. 19, 20).

Of the 'spirits in prison' there is an interesting explanation in The Companion Bible, appendix 194. Spirits here are angels (created not born) of whom Jude writes:

> "And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, He hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day" (Jude 6).

These angels assuming human flesh had intercourse with women producing giants in some instances, polluting the line from Adam to such an extent that it is recorded that only Noah and his family were perfect in their generations. It was to these spirits awaiting judgment that Christ came and heralded His victory. Those to whom Peter wrote who would prove overcomers could look forward to, for them, an appropriate glory and justification for their victory over persecution and trial.

> "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God), by the resurrection of Jesus Christ" (iii. 21).

Verse 21 presents difficulties inasmuch as we have the waters of the flood and the mention of the word baptism. In the days of Peter there was a baptism in water which was undergone by one who have turned from his previous way of life (repented=changed his mind) wished to be identified with the Lord Jesus Christ and His salvation. Christ was baptized in water to complete the identification of His adherents with Himself. There is no question of washing away sins but identification with Christ. Having cleared the ground, we hope, of what is not connected with verse 21 let us put it in structure form to see the parallels more clearly.

Waters of the flood. 8 (number of resurrection) souls left, and were saved from corruption (by the fallen angels) in the world. Saved from death by the ark (which was pitched "kopher" inside and out) brought to a new start.

Water of (John's) baptism. Repentance from dead works. (Putting away the filth of the flesh).

The believer ransomed (Kopher) by Christ.

> "Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject to Him" (iii. 22).

Here is one of those statements of fact revealed by the Holy Spirit to Peter. It was a statement very necessary in those days. As we have previously noted during the Acts period, but not afterwards, believers received various gifts of the Spirit such as knowledge, prophecy and tongues. Satan, always ready to attack where truth might gain ground, had sown false prophets.

> "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out . . . . . every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God" (I John iv. 1-3).

The statement by Peter effectively established the earthly advent and heavenly environment of the Christ, a written authority to confront the heresies of false prophets.

Chapter iv.

> "For as much then as Christ hath suffered (for us – text omits) in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind; for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin; that no longer he should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God" (iv. 1 and 2).

These words of Peter are written to those who had or were already suffering for their faith and looked for the early return of our Lord. During air-raids in the war we all concentrated on keeping alive and the country surviving. The pleasures and fripperies of peace days were willingly given up and ignored. The mind was set on victory. Something of this nature was urged in those days of crisis. Having suffered so much for their faith they were not to look back and indulge again in all the excesses that once had been their wont.

The word 'mind' in verse 1 has the sense of intent or purpose and is linked to Heb. iv. where it occurs in verse 12. It is in a similar context. Paul is pressing Jewish believers, now that the moment of their rest was so near, not to fail at the last moment for:

> "The Word of God (here viewed as synonymous with Christ) is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, ... a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart" (Heb. iv. 12).

Their hearts were an open book to the One Who was now at God's right hand and so the appeal for faithfulness to the end of the road. Again the 'two-edged sword' in the last reference looks forward to John's message from Christ in Revelation.

> "And He had in His right hand seven stars (seven angels): and out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword . . . . ." (Rev. i. 16).

The message to each of the seven churches in Asia at the time of the end was one of correcting certain faults and sins before it was too late and the coming of Christ was upon them. Peter's exhortation was: they were never to return to their excesses, of which they were guilty before conversion.

> "Wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you" (iv. 4).

The sanctification or separation of the believers' lives was apparent to their old cronies and the latter did not like it. There is always the tendency for the unbeliever to impute hypocrisy to the followers of Christ, often seeing no fault in their own moral standards. Paul wrote "Christ crucified . . . . . unto the Greeks foolishness" (I Cor. i. 23) and this opinion must have activated the minds of the past friends of Peter's readers for Peter to use the word 'strange'. There must also have been much Satanic opposition in those days seeking to claw back those who had been saved.

No.8. iv. 5 - 11.

> "Who shall give account to Him that is ready to judge the quick (those living at that time) and the dead. For this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit" (iv. 5 and 6).

These words of Peter are solemn words. They are addressed to those who looked for the kingdom of heaven, that is to those who had heard the ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ and to those later in the dispersion who had heard the same gospel from the lips of the twelve apostles and their disciples. There was in those days the imminent return of Christ to set up His Millennial Kingdom prior to which there would be a judgment of men for, amongst other things, qualification to enter this Kingdom. For this particular resurrection those who had heard the gospel would be raised and judged whilst those who were alive at the time (the quick) would also be judged and changed in the twinkling of an eye (I Cor. xv. 52). The point is made in verse 6 that although both quick and dead would be judged as men under conditions of the flesh in those days, yet judgment by Christ would have in mind their future life as spirits, that is in changed conditions unknown to us today. We now know that this moment is postponed to the not too distant future.

> "But the end of all things is at hand, be ye therefore sober (of a sound mind, balanced), and watch unto prayer" (iv. 7).

Even as Peter repeats his warnings so we say again that at the time this epistle was written every attempt by Satan was being made to deceive and confuse, and that by many in the church at that time (even as today). Hence we find the injunction to keep a clear head, a balanced judgment, to watch for deception, and with all pray to the One Who had the power to garrison their hearts for the truth.

> "Above all hold unfailing your love for one another, since love covers a multitude of sins. Practice hospitality ungrudgingly to one another" (iv. 8, 9, R.S.V.).

There is no suggestion we balance out our sins with love. The love here is that shown to the sinner. Peter was no doubt quoting from Prov. x. 12:

> "Hate stirreth up strifes: but love covereth all sins."

Where we are out of sympathy with others or have even stronger antipathy, we shall have difficulty in being pleasant or helpful to them and if they are discussed with third parties the danger of slander in some degree is always present. On the other hand if we have a mature love towards an offender remembering our own wretched past, we shall seek to direct to that one an understanding and constructive advice that will lead to his or her change of heart.

Hospitality is a marvelous opportunity to recommend the life in Christ to others. If they come into your home and find tranquility and open handedness without ostentatiousness it will always be noted and remembered.

> "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God. If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to Whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen" (iv. 10, 11).

Peter and his disciples were in that dispensation blessed with special gifts of the Spirit. Some had prophecy, some tongues and some healing and it would seem all had knowledge of the Word. They were to exercise these gifts to the full and at all times were to acknowledge the Giver. Peter at the very threshold of his ministry, having performed a miracle with the lame man, said to the crowd:

> "Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness, we had made this man to walk . . . . . His name (the Lord Jesus) hath made this man strong" (Acts iii. 12-16).

No.9. iv. 11 - v. 7.
pp. 156 - 160

In our own day the Holy Spirit illuminates the Word to us as we honour it in faith and diligence of study. We are still called to exercise and acknowledge in living the truth revealed to us. The channel of truth received and given out should always thrill our hearts and lead us to voice often the eulogies of Peter and Paul, as Peter does here:

> ". . . . . that God may be glorified through Jesus Christ, To Whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever, Amen."

There have been many saints of God in the Bible story who in the face of severe adversity have been bewildered at the turn of events. We think of Job, Jeremiah, John the Baptist in prison, and here persecution already striking this new church. Peter knowing that Satan was already busy going round as a roaring lion encouraged his followers to endure, telling them that these trials were to be expected:

> "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened to you: but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when His glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy" (iv. 12, 13).

There will be no one who suffers on behalf of God or for the witness to His truth who will not be overwhelmingly rewarded. God will be in no man's debt. "The Lord blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning" (Job xlii. 12). Paul adds his contribution to this theme:

> "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" (II Cor. iv. 17).

Peter make several references in this letter to the Jews being evil spoken of and we may wonder at this when we think of their gospel of love, unity and peace. Yet we know there has been unreasonable blame or reproaches put on the Jewish nation from blame for the fire of Rome to the troubles of Germany before Hitler took over. History sees them repeatedly blamed without a cause throughout the years since Calvary.

> "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: on their part He is evil spoken of, on your part He is glorified" (iv. 14).

What comfort it must have been to those beleaguered saints to be assured by Peter that God knew and had His reward in hand.

Peter now turns again to his followers with warning of judgment relative to the kingdom of heaven being very close. Already in those days punishment for wrong doing amongst the saints was swift, as for example Ananias and Sapphira in Acts v. Peter is to write, if you are going to suffer for Christ, rejoice but see you do not suffer in the role of a sinner. They had to be above reproach or any appearance of evil. God was turning His attention to those about to be given positions of authority in the earthly kingdom of His Son.

> "But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil doer, or as a busybody in other men's matters. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf. For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" (iv. 15-18).

Verse 18 is a quotation from the Septuagint version of Prov. xi. 31 "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth: much more the wicked and the sinner". It is in a context of works producing rewards and punishments. "Scarcely be saved" is not the life of the believer but rather his reward. Something of the trial they were enduring can be imagined by Mark xiii. 22:

> "For false Christs and false prophets shall rise, and shall show signs and wonders, to seduce if it were possible, even the elect."

No wonder we find so many texts of this period stressing "watch and pray". We may well find ourselves entering into a time when even more attacks on the truth will abound. Already many political laws and arrangements lead to the breakdown of family and parental responsibility. What should be the duty of the individual is pushed on to the teacher and state. The attitude of the press, literature, schools and organized religion, to the place, truth, and daily use of the Bible, is again a matter of watchfulness and prayer. These are the evils that are destroying our wonderful nation and heritage.

> "Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of your souls to Him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator" (iv. 19).

If you can see it, this verse is altogether lovely. It is one of those that impress one that it was God the Holy Spirit feeding these words to Peter's hand. Those who were enduring and patiently suffering for their faith, seeing the pattern of events falling as the guiding words of Peter had warned; for them Peter now says, relax, trust and commit your souls to God. The word 'commit' is paratithemi the very same word their Lord uttered from the cross as He died: "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit". Those that were suffering and persisted in well doing were setting their lives along the will of God even as did their Saviour. God, the Creator Who had all these things in mind before this particular world (that is its furnishings, its plant and animal life) was formed, would keep their souls so that they would find their appointed place in the fulfillment of the Father's eternal purpose. Like so much Scripture that is not addressed to us, yet it has a strong message of comfort to us today for we indeed have a most important place in God's plan as Paul's letter to the Ephesians indicates. Let us commit our lives to Him in obedience, trust and full assurance of His knowledge of us and His backing to our service for Him.

Chapter v.

> "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed" (v. 1).

Elder is a general term for one in authority either for church or business or preaching. We find it in the O.T. and in the N.T. applied to members of the Sanhedrin and to the Christian churches. It is to these overseers of the flock that Peter makes his final appeal basing it on his mutual position with them of having the responsibility of authority and spiritual equipment for the task before them.

With the words our Lord commissioned him, he now addresses these elders: "Feed the flock". For them the O.T. was waiting as it was for Christ and Paul to declare the position, message and sacrificial role of God the Father's Son.

> "Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind (readily)" (v. 2).

In these early days of the church there was evidently no organized ordination or choice of these overseers but as today in churches in the home, it is convenient for one person to be the leader, to pray, convene and be the one to encourage others to speak and express themselves and above all to study the Word. Again the person who does this leading may find himself in the position quite fortuitously. Peter is stressing that this responsibility be taken on willingly and not of grudging necessity. Peter in his second epistle has much to say on false teachers being amongst other things, covetous and making merchandise out of the saints. It was to this danger that he made reference to "filthy lucre". He makes many references to money and he must have experienced in his day the evil that comes from, not money, but "the love of money". How up-to-date is this evil in an age of industrial strikes!

> "Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock. And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away" (v. 3, 4).

How Christ from glory must have loved Peter who had learnt so well the lesson of his Lord washing his feet (John xiii. 1-17). The picture used by our Lord of the eastern shepherd leading his flock by the knowledge of his voice rather than the brandishing of his crook was so apposite for the gospel teacher.

> "Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder, Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time" (v. 5, 6).

Humility is a hard lesson to learn and to hold. It is bad enough in commercial life when we have to deal with a "know all" who is not so clever. But when it comes to knowledge of the Word, we have always to remember that we should know nothing if it was not for the gracious mercy of the Lord. The same applies if we think we are morally or spiritually better than another. We know not the heart or handicaps of any man neither the specific role, however high or low to which God has called him. We have been plucked from death and given the opportunity of a most glorious hope. Failure to rehearse these facts will often cloud our judgments in the service of God.

> "Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you" (v. 7).

This is a most precious recipe for the troubled mind. John wrote the words of the Lord Jesus:

> "If a man love Me, he will keep My words: and My Father will love him, and We will come unto him, and make Our abode with him" (John xv. 23).

No.10. v. 8 - 14.
pp. 178, 179

Peter now gives a last warning to be watchful for the attacks of Satan and to hold fast to their faith for it was their faith and teaching that Satan would assail by contrary deceptive counterfeits. Men, the dupes of Satan were already operating, preaching heresies and showing false signs.

> "Be sober (watchful), be vigilant, because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour; whom resist, steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished (experienced by) in your brethren that are in the world" (v. 8, 9).

Paul had also to give the same warning to the Corinthians:

> "For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light" (II Cor. xi. 13, 14).

Make no mistake, that lion is still very much alive and hungry for the weak in faith, the one unlearned and unprepared by the Word. The Scriptures understood and taught by the Holy Spirit to the faithful seeker will be the only weapon to resist this lion and we need only to stand steadfast in our faith in the One Who has already overcome the enemy. The Word alone can put new heart and direction into our nation. Fellowship and hymns have their place but they will not on their own lead us to a knowledge of God, His will, and the all sufficient means He has supplied for us to accomplish it.

> "But the God of all grace, Who hath called us unto His eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you" (I.Pet.v.10).

Peter makes a final summary of his letter a prayer to God (the Dispenser of unmerited favour) Who had called them to a place in that millennial age in which Jesus as the glorified Christ will reign. Peter's prayer is:

(1) They may be made perfect—completely fitted for a purpose. Other usage of katartizo 'perfect' by the Holy Spirit will help our understanding: Matt.xxi.16 "Out of the mouths of babes . . . . . Thou hast perfected praise" single minded sincerity; Luke. vi. 40 "Everyone that is perfect shall be as his master" (an idea of identity of purpose and character).

(2) They may be stablished—made firm, confirmed. They were to be unmoved by all the deceptive false prophets, false Christs, and false doctrines that were then prevalent.

(3) Strengthen you.

(4) Settle you. The idea of being fixed on the right foundation. Contrast is shown by Col. i. 23 "Be not moved away from the hope of the gospel".

As with much of this valuable epistle we can find pertinent application of this prayer to us today, having in mind however our goal set forth in the letter to the Ephesians or that set forth by John in his gospel.

The closing verses of postscript end on a note of brotherhood and love in the gospel.

The Second Epistle to Peter.

No.1. i. 1, 2.
pp. 179, 180

This epistle was written to the same people as his first epistle namely Christian Jews of the dispersion (see iii. 1). As with all the Word of God whilst it is essential to note to whom a letter is addressed, yet all Scripture is useful and necessary for us. God's dealing with and treatment of Israel provides a wealth of knowledge of God, His wisdom, love, righteousness and longsuffering amongst many other attributes. It is fitting and profitable therefore that we come to this short letter from Peter to his compatriots expecting to find much that has relevance to today's conditions and needs.

Some of the words that we find in Scripture fail to convey all their meaning if by frequent everyday use they carry only a fleeting and shallow impression to our minds. If however when we find them in the Scriptures we give them a patient and quiet consideration with a concordance and a dictionary they will yield much richer knowledge and help to us.

> "Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (II Pet. i. 1).

Peter opens his letter by acknowledging and recognizing on behalf of himself for those believers to whom he writes the righteousness of God's salvation of mankind through the work of His Son on the cross. Paul could write of this event ". . . . . Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness". This was a reaction of misunderstanding by two large groups then. Today many fail to see the need or understand what took place at that time. Peter had been brought to see God's plan as correct, needful, and all-sufficient, or by God's standards, utterly righteous. We shall see that man's willing recognition and acceptance of the righteousness of all God's acts and dealings with men is a necessary concomitant of unity and harmony with the Father. The Greek's summary of the Cross as being foolishness finds its counterpart in the minds of many today who see no need for the shed blood or the life poured out.

> "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord" (i. 2).

Knowledge here is the word meaning precise, mature or acquired knowledge. The Word and commands of God, understood and acknowledged by the believer in his way of life bring in their turn blessing and inward comfort and confidence, for we are aware that we have the backing and guidance of God through His Son.

No.2. i. 3 - 9.

After his introduction in verses 1 and 2, the Apostle now continues by saying:

> "According as His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust" (i. 3, 4).

These verses are difficult to paraphrase or clarify their meaning. Peter and the eleven and the elect believers to whom these words were addressed had in varying degrees been blessed by the gifts of the Holy Spirit and these for rapid dissemination of the gospel. Their divine power had its birth in the knowledge of Christ and His words from the Father, and was the subject of our Lord's prayer in John xvii. In Luke xxiv. 49 our Lord refers to the promise of the Father's gifts of the Holy Spirit, giving enabling power to the ministry to which they were directed.

Paul in I Cor. xii. gives a useful summary and analysis of these spiritual gifts, which we remember spread to some Gentile converts in order to spur the Jewish faction to greater Christian zeal and participation. It is interesting to note that these gifts to that early church were not only supernatural powers such as healing, but men called of God for special functions of ministry such as prophecy and teaching (two separate functions remembering prophecy is not necessarily speaking of future things but speaking for God). The desires of the world and their fulfillment have no enduring profit, savouring of the corruption of death, while in contrast the life of the spirit with its goal—the knowledge of Christ and the Father, bespeaks true life in all its aspects.

We have to recall that Paul's ministry to the Jewish dispersion (supplementary to Peter's ministry in the land) closed at Rome (Acts xxviii. 28), where nationally the Jews failed to assume their destined role as a kingdom of priests to the world, (but taking up that role some time in the still distant future at the Lord's Second Coming). With the postponement of that role the attendant miraculous acts of the Holy Spirit ceased, namely tongues, untaught (by men) knowledge, prophecy, healing. This is a truth that so many today cannot or will not perceive and point to evidences of the same gifts being in use today. What are we to say to this apparent witness to their continued part in the purpose of God? There are two answers. If they are in truth being practiced by believing Christians they are not being used by God as divine witness to a new revelation of truth as happened in the first days of the apostolic ministry to Israel. Secondly Satan attacks in a religious context by signs and wonders to deceive, especially at times imminent to our Lord's return. Read II Thess. ii. for the warning Paul gave them and which we need to keep before us.

> "And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience > godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity (love)" (i. 5-7).

Peter specifies a spiritual ladder of experience for the believer, each characteristic or attitude building up the child of God to the bearing of good works and most precious of all the developing knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. To savour each step and examine each word as we suggested before would be profitable and would honour God's Word.

Faith. A personal conviction of the truth of an unproveable statement. Our personal agreement with a way of life we believe is in harmony with the will of God as understood from the Scriptures. From another angle we could say faith is belief in acceptance of the standards of the righteousness of God and hence the intention and aim of such a believer to let his life be in harmony with those standards. This should lead to:

Virtue. Moral strength and excellence. The moral refinement and loyalty to established good principles leads to acquisition of even more mature spiritual knowledge.

Knowledge. The retained memory of facts and experience having for the believer special reference to the Bible and truth revealed by the Holy Spirit. Knowledge will always carry with it a secondary yet more important feature which can only be described as a closeness or awareness of God the Father through His Son. This can vary from day to day but is a precious experience that cannot be shown or proved to others.

Temperance is moderation with an element of personal restraint. The believer will reflect the love of God and remember the frailty of man and his own sinful background in facing the problems of others and his own personal witness.

Patience is the quality of being able to endure calmly: suffering, affliction, frustration; the weakness, failings and obtuseness of others. Practice and success with these qualities leads to:

Godliness. This is the ultimate character of one who seeks to conform to or be in harmony with the character of God, the which he has discovered from the Scriptures.

Brotherly kindness and charity. These are the final outward fruits of applied Christian knowledge and experience by the believer to the world. Such exhibit love in its highest aspect and fulfillment—a reflection of God's attitude to His creation, of which the gift of His Son was the supreme proof and example of His love towards us.

> "For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins" (i. 8, 9).

The whole emphasis of God's plan of salvation is that it is unto good works. The parable of the talents in Matt. xxv. shows we are expected to exercise and make profitable the freedom from bondage, with the access to spiritual power that salvation in Christ supplies. There is no place for equilibrium or inertia, either we go forward in fulfillment or retreat into that area of waste and blindness that verse 9 envisages.

No.3. i. 10 - ii. 2.
pp. 238 - 240

> "Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (i. 10, 11).

The Jews here had a hope and a calling to which they were exhorted to be diligent and make their election sure. The world about us is a constant snare, whispering there is plenty of time later on for things of the spirit, giving a false urgency to the affairs of the world. Martha (Luke x.) was gently corrected by our Lord for this tendency to make the wrong choice. An athlete disciplines his life for months and perhaps years before the event which is his goal. It is today and every day we should go into training for the Lord's use.

> "Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me. Moreover I will endeavour that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance" (i. 12-15).

Peter was exceedingly anxious that his ministry should bear fruit. He was fearful that the seed might not fall on good ground and that the birds of the air (those of the evil one) would snatch it away. Paul had the same tragic premonitions before his departure:

> "Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an ensample. (For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are enemies of the cross of Christ . . . . .)" (Phil. iii. 17, 18).

We need a constant rehearsal of the tenets of our faith, a fresh examination of the Word of truth for in this way the Holy Spirit can speak to us of some element lacking in our lives, some doctrine He would have us emphasize to others. When this is done how often we find things we have forgotten or misunderstood.

Peter is now going to turn his attention to the Word of God itself which, for Peter, was in those days the Lord Jesus Christ, His words and also the O.T. A ministry that has as its aim to lead men to know and worship God, must teach from, and accept, that the Bible is the Word of God and therefore truth. Peter is going to witness to the origin of this record of truth.

> "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of His majesty.

> For He received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to Him from the excellent glory, This is My beloved Son, in Whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with Him in the holy mount" (i. 16-18).

Here was one of the twelve witnesses who had been with our Lord during His 3½ years public ministry. They had seen His miracles, they had heard His words and moreover Peter with two others had seen the Lord Jesus in a glorified form talking with Moses and Elijah. They had heard the voice of God the Father witnessing to His beloved Son and confirming His pleasure in the work of the Christ of God. What greater witness do men require as to this divine personal link between God and men? Our Lord when He was leaving this realm said that He would send the Holy Spirit to lead us into all truth. The N.T. writers were all led in this way to record the words and deeds of the Son of God. Others, especially the Apostle Paul were inspired to reveal to us God's interpretation of these events and how they were intended to condition our lives and determine our future in resurrection.

> "We have also a more sure (firmly established) word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the Day Star arise in your hearts: Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (i. 19-21).

Peter beautifully describes the record as a light placed in the darkness of the world's thoughts, beliefs and superstitions. Even as the written Word so is the Living Word "Jesus said I am the light of the world: he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life" (John viii. 12). Peter uses our Lord's title "Day Star" in his imagery. The Greek for Day Star is phosphorus a name given to the "morning star" of the heavens and also to a chemical that glows in the dark. What happy and apt associations!

So much could be written in support of the inerrancy of the Bible but let us confine ourselves like Peter as to the aspect of how it originated. Verse 20 makes the negative point—it did not originate in the mind of man. Popular comment on the Scriptures both in and out of church circles refers to the record "according to the writer of", sometimes they even hedge and doubt even the name of the stated amanuensis. Seldom do they imply that it was God speaking. Peter points to the Holy Spirit as the driving force behind the writers of the O.T. A prophet is a spokesman for deity and may not necessarily be speaking of the future. The word 'moved' in verse 21 is from the same Greek word as 'driven' in Acts xxvii. 17 the involuntary movement of Paul's ship that was wrecked at Malta. We do not know how each prophet was activated but we are asked to accept that they were controlled by God. All communication by God to us depends on faith and we have to recognize that nothing of this can be proved by human senses. If however we let the Day Star arise in our hearts the brilliance of truth will also shine there and illumine every dark corner of our earthly path.

Peter now deals with the results that come from the neglect and then departure from the words and commands of God. Here is demonstrated the great value of the O.T. The example of Israel's backsliding is a lesson to us today. Their sins find a counterpart in today's supposed progress in evolution of the species and rationalistic Bible Textual criticism. Some textual criticism is good and scholarly, but to write off the O.T. as myths and legends is to brush aside the warning and guiding hand of God.

> "But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that brought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of" (ii. 1, 2).

The Epistle to the ROMANS.

No.1. i. 1 - 5.
pp. 81 - 85

If there is one part of the N.T. that is essentially basic to Christianity, it is the epistle to the Romans. While other portions deal with the gospel of God's grace, it is in this great epistle that the profound need of failing man and God's saving remedy for his condition is brought forward and expounded in depth and detail with inescapable logic. Great leaders of former generations such as Augustine, Luther, Calvin and Wesley, have been irresistibly drawn to this letter and have given their exposition to it.

We should remind ourselves that the risen Christ specially made known His gospel to the Apostle Paul in what was probably Paul's first epistle, namely Galatians, and it was presented by the Apostle in no uncertain language:

> "But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ" (Gal. i. 11, 12).
> "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed" (Gal. i. 8).

But here there is no reasoned exposition of the good news except where the question of keeping the law was concerned. The atmosphere is tense, for the challenge of Paul's apostleship was in the forefront and this burning question had to be settled first and the opposition of the Judaizers defeated.

When we come to Romans the condition is entirely different. These problems have been resolved and there is a calm in the later epistle which is absent in Galatians, although in some respects they are covering the same ground from a doctrinal standpoint.

Authorship. There never has been any serious problem over this. The stamp of Paul is on it from the beginning to the end. As to the church at Rome, we have few details to help us. Certainly Paul did not found it. Neither the Acts or his other epistles form any basis for this, and we can say the same about Peter in spite of Roman Catholic doctrine.

The Apostle Paul declared that he did not build on another man's foundation (Rom.xv.20), yet he regards the church at Rome as within the sphere of his commission. We know for certain that Peter was still in Jerusalem at the time of the council (c.50A.D.) whereas it is almost certain that a church existed in Rome before this. There is no reference to Peter in the Roman epistle and it is difficult to imagine that Paul wrote as he did if Peter had founded the church there. Moreover Acts xviii. 2, 3 shows that Aquila and Priscilla were already believers when they arrived at Corinth from Rome and there they became Paul's companions. This means the church existed before 40A.D., since they were banished under the edict of Claudius and this date is before Peter moved from Jerusalem.

There is evidence that in later years both Peter and Paul were martyred at Rome, but even if this is true, it tells us nothing about the origin of the church in this city. In Acts ii. 10 we read of visiting Jews and proselytes from Rome and some could have been numbered amongst those who were saved on the day of Pentecost. In which case they would have taken the message of the gospel back to Rome. In any event, all roads led to the metropolis, and when we remember the rapid spread of the gospel in the Acts, the message of Christianity must soon have reached the capital where there had been a contingent of Jews for a considerable period.

As to the date of the comparison of the Roman epistle, it seems evident that it was written towards the close of Paul's third missionary journey when he was in Corinth, or possibly Corinth's port, Cenchrea, where there was a church and Phoebe was one of its servants (Rom. xvi. 1). The year could be between 57-59A.D., though Prof. C. K. Barrett gives reasons for 55A.D. What is important is that this epistle was the last one which the Apostle wrote during the Acts period, and its middle section (chapters ix.-xi.) gives a most valuable divine commentary on the momentous things that were happening during that time, specially as they affected the people of Israel and their spiritual condition.

Broadly speaking the epistle is divided into three sections:

(1)	Chapters i.-viii.	Basic, dealing with justification by faith and the gospel of grace.
(2)	Chapters ix.-xi.	The attitude of Israel to the gospel. Their failure and final restoration.
(3)	Chapters xii.-xvi.	Practice. The daily Christian walk and witness.

A more detailed structure is as follows:

A | i. 1-17. The Gospel promised before, for obedience of faith among all nations.
B | i. 18 - iii. 20. Jews equally with Gentiles guilty before God.
C | iii. 21-31. Come short of the glory of God.
D | iv. 1-25. Abraham's body now dead.
E | v. 1-11. Reconciliation—basic.
F | v. 12-21. Condemnation in Adam. The secret (mystery) of Rom. xvi. 25-26.
G | vi., vii. Question, repudiation and answer.
F | viii. No condemnation in Christ.
E | ix.-xi. Reconciliation—dispensational.
D | xii., xiii. Present your bodies a living sacrifice.
C | xiv. 1 - xv. 7. Received to the glory of God.
B | xv. 8 - xvi. 23. Gentiles equally with Jews acceptable before God.
A | xvi. 24-27. A mystery (secret) silenced before.
For obedience of faith unto all nations.

The balance between the sections is fairly clear and will become more apparent as we study the epistle closely.

Salutation and Introduction.

The letter to the Romans commences with a prologue of 15 verses. The salutation at the opening is similar to Greek letters as a whole, but Paul expands it to give fuller details of himself than he usually does. In fact it is the weightiest of all his introductions:

> "Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God, (which He had promised afore by His prophets in the holy Scriptures), concerning His Son Jesus Christ our Lord, Which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh; and declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection of the dead" (i. 1-4).

The Apostle describes himself as a slave (doulos), a seeming paradox coming from one who was the apostle of liberty! (Gal. v. 1). Yet this description was profound truth, for just as a human slave was the property of his owner in every respect, and completely at his master's disposal, so Paul by redemption belonged to Christ. He was 'not his own', but "bought with a price" which was nothing less than the life and sacrificial death and resurrection of the Son of God (I Cor. vi. 19, 20). Such a condition is likewise true of every believer in Christ and these tremendous practical implications the Apostle sought to impress upon all the members of the churches.

He was a "called apostle". There is no need for the extra words "to be" supplied by the A.V. He had been set apart by God at his birth (Gal. i. 5), even as Jeremiah (Jer. i. 5) and the risen Lord's words recorded in Acts ix. 15 confirmed this, "he (Paul) is a chosen vessel unto Me, to bear My name before the Gentiles". In the earlier letter to the Galatians, Paul had made it quite clear that his ministry was centred in the gospel of God's grace, which the risen Christ had revealed to him quite independently of any human source. It was not "after man" declared the Apostle, "I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ" (Gal. i. 11, 12). Not only this, but it was the divine standard for all gospel preaching and still is, so much so that if even an angel from heaven preached any other gospel, God's curse would be on him (Gal. i. 8, 9). This good news is explained in I Cor. xv. 1-4:

> "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you . . . . . for I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received (i.e. from the risen Saviour), how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried, and that He rose again on the third day according to the Scriptures."

The Scriptures here, refer to the O.T. and such passages as Isa. liii. 12 dealing with Christ's sacrificial death, Psa. xvi. 10 (quoted in Acts ii. 23-32), Jonah i. 17 (referred to in Matt. xii. 40), setting forth His resurrection make this clear. Moreover the epistle to the Romans revolves round a verse in the prophet Habakkuk, "the just shall live by his faith" (ii. 4), and the tremendous implications of this verse are brought forth and elaborated all through this letter.

This "good news" is "concerning His Son, Jesus Christ out Lord" (Rom. i. 3). The Lord Jesus Christ is central in this gospel and without Him it would be no gospel at all, but just an empty shell. The word "gospel" is one of the commonest words used in Christian circles today, but in what sense is it used? Too often the One Whom it is all about seldom get mentioned, the word merely describing the acts of men with a religious veneer to improve things. We need to be on our guard against these sort of ideas which are widespread, and in view of the verses of Holy Writ quoted above, are sheer deception.

The Apostle states that the Lord Jesus Christ "was made (or better 'was born') of the seed of David according to the flesh" (i. 3). This does not mean that He was so, merely by human judgment, but rather as regards His humanity. He was a true descendant of David. There are two spheres in this context. "In the flesh", He was born of the family of David. "In the Spirit" (the Holy Spirit), a divine sphere, He was declared to be the Son of God with power. The verb horizo rendered "declared" also has the force of "defined" or "appointed". This is its meaning in Acts xvii. 31 where it is stated that a day of judgment for the world has been appointed by God. At Bethlehem the Lord Jesus was born and appointed to be the Son of God. But this was in weakness and lowliness. In resurrection the same appointed Son of God was with power—"all power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth" (Matt. xxviii. 18) and His exaltation was "far above all" (Eph. i. 18-23; Phil. ii. 8-11). This was "according to the spirit of holiness". The latter phrase is a Hebraism for the Holy Spirit. The stupendous miracle of the resurrection is based upon the activity of the whole Godhead, Father (Gal. i. 1), Son (John x. 17, 18) and Holy Spirit (Rom. i. 4; I Pet. iii. 18).

Paul proceeds to state:

> "By Whom we have received grace and apostleship, for (or 'to' margin) obedience to the faith among all nations, for His name" (i. 5).

His apostleship was a gift of grace as he declares in chapter xv. 15, 16 "because of the grace that is given to me of God. That I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles", hence the words "among all nations" of chapter i. 5. The object of his witness was with a view to believing obedience, that is to bring about the obedience that is based on faith in Christ. Belief without such obedience is barren and does not accord with the teaching of the N.T.

No.2. i. 6 - 17.
pp. 113 - 117

The Apostle Paul, having stated the divine origin of his apostleship, declares that "faith obedience" of the gospel was to the Gentiles. The Greek ethne (like the Hebrew equivalent goyim) can be rendered Gentiles, nations, or heathen; the context must decide. Some rightly attempt to render it "nations" in all its occurrences but this restriction only leads to difficulties and errors in interpretation. The Apostle here is confirming the fact that he was the Christ-directed apostle to the Gentiles, whereas Peter, James and John were primarily Christ's representatives to Israel. The fact that Paul goes on to state, "among whom are ye also the called of Jesus Christ", seems to clearly indicate that the majority of the Roman church were Gentiles, but the word cannot obviously mean 'nations' as a whole. Such were the "called of God" and designated 'saints' or holy ones, that is, called to be God's holy people separated for Himself. The word 'saint' looks back to the O.T. Exodus xix. 6 describes Israel's call by God to be, amongst other things, "a holy nation", a nation chosen by Himself to carry out His earthly purpose for them. The Roman believers were likewise called to fulfil God's will.

To them was given the greeting:

> "Grace to you and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ" (i. 7).

This united the Greek and Jewish modes of salutation. The Greek would say chaire, rejoice, and the Jew shalom, peace.

The reader should note the weighty points contained in this introduction to the epistle:

(1) Paul was the apostle to the Gentiles.
(2) The gospel as it relates to Christ.
(3) Christ considered according to the flesh and according to the spirit.
(4) The sphere of Paul's ministry, "all nations".
(5) The nature of his testimony "faith obedience".
(6) The incentive, both for him and the believers to whom he wrote, "for the sake of His Name".

These opening verses speak directly to every minister of the Word of God. Charles H. Welch's words to modern readers are to the point.

> "You are not your own master, nor your congregation's servant. You like Paul are the bond-slave of Christ. Whether you labour with your hands in the work-a-day world, or whether your whole time is devoted to the ministry, you are separated unto the gospel of God. You cannot preach that Gospel and doubt the O.T. Scriptures. Neither can you preach that Gospel and fail to preach Christ. Even though you preach Christ, you will not preach a full Gospel without Christ risen. Your own obedience and the obedience enjoined by you upon others is not a legal obedience, but an obedience of faith. Grace and peace be with all such" (Just and the Justifier, p.9).

Paul now goes on to explain to the Roman believers the reason for his writing to them. Like the Thessalonian saints (I Thess. i. 8), those at Rome had given such a fine witness that their faith was "spoken of throughout the whole world" (Rom. i. 8). For this the Apostle gave deep thanksgiving and assured them of his continued intercession for them:

> "For God is my witness, Whom I serve with my spirit in the gospel of His Son, that without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers . . . . ." (i. 9).

Paul's service for Christ made continual searching demands on him day and night. Yet the great ministry of prayer for others was not neglected. Over and over again he records the fact that he never ceased from interceding for fellow believers (Eph. i. 15, 16; Col. i. 3, 9; Phil. i. 4; I Thess. i. 2; Philemon 4; II Tim. i. 3). Prayerless Christian service is fruitless Christian service. The Bible is full of the records of those who were outstanding men of prayer and what that constant prayer accomplished when it was based on the will of God.

The Apostle Paul sought God's will always and he seeks to relate that will to visit them that they may both receive benefits:

> "Making request, if by any means now at length I might have a prosperous journey by the will of God to come unto you. For I long to see you, that I may impart some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established; that is, that I may be comforted together with you (or encouraged) by the mutual faith both of you and me" (i. 10-12).

It is well to note that the Apostle did not expect to be a benefactor only, but also to receive some help from the Roman Christians himself. For some while Paul had wanted to visit them but had been hindered from doing so (verse 13). He does not say whether this was due to the activity of Satan or to restraint by the Lord. The old English "let" used in the A.V. in this sense is quite archaic and survives only in the semi-legal phrase "without let or hindrance". We know from what he tells us later on in the epistle that the visit to Rome was part of a longer journey that he had in mind which would involve Spain (Rom. xv. 24, 28).

His aim was for lasting spiritual results from his Roman visit:

> ". . . . . that I might have some fruit among you also, even as among other Gentiles" (i. 13), and this again (see verses 5, 6) confirms the probability that the church at Rome was for the most part Gentile.

Not only did the Apostle desire to make personal contact with the Roman saints but above all he longed to preach the gospel of God's grace, and one reason that he gives for this is that he is a debtor:

> "I am a debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians (this term was used of all who were not Greeks); both to the wise, an to the unwise. So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also" (i. 14, 15).

In saying this he stresses his responsibility, for the knowledge of the truth always brings such responsibility. It is a perversion to regard grace as a release from all obligation, giving a liberty which is nothing more than veiled licence. Later in the epistle he reminds the Roman saints that they were debtors too (Rom. xv. 27). When we realize what grace really means, we shall be glad of such responsibility, for it is a profound privilege to seek to "work out" in practice what God has graciously "worked in" us. So Paul goes on to say:

> "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek" (i. 16).

Here Paul uses a figure of speech which seems to lessen his real feelings towards the gospel. Actually he means that he glories in it, because in the gospel the very power and righteousness of God is revealed savingly to those who do not deserve it, that is, to sinners, and he goes on to show later that there is not one person who does not come under this heading (iii. 9-18, 23).

If we are ever going to understand this great epistle in any measure, we must have the conception of righteousness revealed in the O.T., for upon this the Apostle Paul, guided by the Holy Spirit, bases his argument and links it with a verse from the prophet Habakkuk (ii. 4). This is the dominating theme of this letter, which is more or less an exposition of the prophet's words.

> "The ideas of right and wrong among the Hebrews are forensic ideas, that is, the Hebrew always thinks of the right and the wrong as if they were to be settled before a judge. Righteousness is to the Hebrew not so much a moral quality as a legal status. The word 'righteous' (saddiq) means simply 'in the right', and the word 'wicked' (rasha) means 'in the wrong'. 'I have sinned this time' says Pharaoh, 'Jehovah is in the right (A.V. righteous), and I and my people are wrong (A.V. wicked, Exod. 9:27)'. Jehovah is always in the right, for He is not only sovereign, but self-consistent. He is the fountain of righteousness . . . . . the consistent will of Jehovah is the law of Israel" (W. R. Smith, "The Prophets of Israel", p.71).

God is the personification of righteousness or rightness in thought, word and deed, human beings can only be called righteous, when, in His sight, they can be accounted absolutely and consistently right in these three respects. It should be obvious that no such person exists with such a standard of conduct.

> "The gospel tells us first how men and women, sinners as they are, can come to be 'in the right' with God; and second how God's personal righteousness is vindicated in the very act of declaring sinful men and women 'righteous' . . . . . the principle on which God brings people into the right with Himself is the principle of faith, and for this statement the O.T. authority is adduced in the words of Hab. 2:4 'the just shall live by his faith'." (F. F. Bruce, Romans, p.78).

A word of equal importance to righteousness is the word "faith". This can mean in English, faith, belief or trust in anything, but the faith of the Old and New Testaments is something deeper than an intellectual nod. The Greek words pistis, faith, and pisteuo, meaning, I believe, are profound words indicating more than just credence. In addition to this, they mean personal commitment to the extent of handing over one's self to another person. Thus it is not mere intellectual assent, but rather wholehearted involvement in the truth believed. To believe in Christ is not only to accept what He says as being true, but to commit one's self to Him and to become totally involved in the truths that are revealed in the N.T. concerning Him.

What does the Apostle Paul mean by the phrase "from faith to faith"? (Rom. i. 17)—literally "by or out of faith, unto faith". Various ideas have been put forward by expositors, but it would seem, judging by Paul's usage of the word faith, to express the fact that in order to personally experience the eternal benefits of salvation, it is on the basis of faith and trust in Christ from start to finish, apart from any works or merit on the recipient's part.

No.3. i. 18 - ii. 11.

God's righteousness then, is revealed on the basis of nothing but faith or complete trust in Him. This faith is like a three-fold cord; it is (1) a conviction, that is, it rests upon the truthfulness and faithfulness of God; (2) it is a cleaving to Him, its outcome being love and hope, and (3) it is a confidence which controls the walk and manner of life.

Before he goes any further Paul is constrained to relate the gospel to the need of the pagan world around him. If God is a God of righteousness, then he was bound to take account of its terrible condition. The ugly picture which the Apostle draws is more than confirmed by contemporary pagan literature. It merited nothing less than the wrath of God:

> "For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness; because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath showed it unto them. For the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse" (i. 18-20).

Many do not like associating "wrath" with God, probably because they think of Him only as love, and anger as it exists in human life, sinful spite and uncontrolled passion. But this is not so with God; His anger is the response of His holiness to deliberate wickedness and rebellion. It is a principle of retribution that must operate in a moral universe.

Moreover if we study carefully the wrath of God as it is revealed in the Bible we shall find that it is not poured out on sinners indiscriminately, but rather reserved for the Satanic system called "the lie" summed up in Babel of the O.T. and Babylon in the N.T. In the book of the Revelation this Satanic system is seen at the end time in all its naked horror and it is in this book that God's wrath and the day of wrath figure so prominently.

Can it be that men have no responsibility, and that they are drawn by a force which they cannot resist into this terrible system of darkness and corruption? The answer is "no", this is not true. Some may object and say that the Gentile world was in ignorance of God and therefore they could not be held responsible, but Paul proceed to make it quite clear that the opposite was the truth. Men could have known God in a measure, for God had manifested Himself in creation as Rom. i. 19 and 20 clearly shows.

Moreover the knowledge that they possessed, they deliberately suppressed, they held the truth in unrighteousness. Katechein, to hold, means to hold fast (vii. 6), and then to suppress. God had manifested Himself as Creator, but rebellious man deliberately suppressed and ignored this revelation. As long as there has been a created universe the invisible attributes of God can be clearly seen, so that as the Apostle says, "they are without excuse" (i. 20).

This revolt against the truth of God resulted in idolatry and then men plunged deeper and deeper into darkness and the moral depravity that goes with it. When they failed to honour God as Creator, their minds became infected and debased till at last they were not capable of truly rational thought about Him:

> "Because that, when they knew God, they glorified Him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, and changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beasts and creeping things" (i. 21-23).

Idolatry touches the realm of worship and there is only One Who has the right to receive worship from created beings and that is God. Directly He is dethroned His place is quickly taken by Satan and the powers of darkness, demon spirits under his control. The Apostle Paul showed that behind all idolatry is demonism (I Cor. x. 20 where "devils" should be rendered "demons") and this gives Satan what he longs for, namely God's position and the worship of mankind.

Three times we read that men deliberately took a terrible downward step, by changing what was truth, into a lie, in order to gratify their lusts (verses 23, 25 and 26) and because of these actions three times we read that God "gave them up" (verses 24, 26, 28). In other words they were left by God to experience to the full the terrible consequences of their backsliding. Israel too, in the past, had been temporarily "given up" by God, as Acts vii. 42 reveals, and for precisely the same reason, namely idolatry. The result for the Gentile world was a reprobate or depraved mind (i. 28). It is significant that the same list of vices which follow, are repeated in Paul's last epistle, in the context which deals with the end of this age (II Tim. iii. 2-5).

On the surface it seems impossible that, after nearly 2000 years of Christianity, mankind will sink into such a state once more, but God's Word is truth and never exaggerates. As we look at the conditions of the world around us we cannot help but notice how standards are constantly being debased and the slide downward quickens as men get further and further away from God. The conclusion of the Apostle is found in verse 32:

> "Who (the backsliders of the context) knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them."

Such was the terrible condition of the pagan world in Paul's day.

The Apostle now turns to the Jew and examines his condition. There was no doubt that the people of Israel had been placed by God in a position of great favour. They had been chosen by Him to be the premier nation of the earth, the channel through which the knowledge of God and His gospel could spread to all mankind. This will explain why both the gospel and divine judgment for its rejection was "to the Jew first" (i.16; ii.8-10). It was recognition of Israel's highly favoured position, and explains the custom of the Apostle Paul on his missionary journeys recorded in the Acts, always going first to the synagogue [Acts xiii. 14 (and note verses 46, 47); xiv. 1; xvii. 1, 2, 10; xviii. 1, 4; xix. 1, 8; xxviii. 16-28]. The importance of Israel's place in the earthly purpose of God can scarcely be over-estimated and it becomes the central theme in the middle chapters of Roman, namely ix.-xi. A fuller consideration will be given to this when those chapters are reached.

In proceeding to deal with the Jew, Paul bases his argument on the most important fact, that greater knowledge of God leads to deeper responsibility. And it is impossible for it to be otherwise. This is a fact that we should always bear in mind, for it is just as true today as it was in the Apostle's lifetime. The Jewish moralist found ample scope in criticizing the pagan world. But what was his own life and environment like? He had forgotten such a verse as Amos iii. 2:

> "You (Israel) only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities."

The first half of the verse he would revel in, but what about the other half? The Apostle now adopts the so-called diatribe style, used by philosophical teachers of the time. He imagines a critic intervening in the argument and is given replies which are searching in the extreme:

> "Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things . . . . . and thinkest thou this, O man, that judgest them which do such things, and doest the same, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God?" (Rom. ii. 1-3).

In other words the critic and judge is involved in the same acts as the man he condemns. As we have seen, behind all the sin and failure of chapter i. lies idolatry, which results in man putting himself in the place of God, and in this, as past history had shown, the Jew had been equally guilty with the Gentile.

The human critic by his condemnation of his fellows, not only abrogates to himself God's position but sets a standard for his own conduct. If he can see wrong in the actions of others, then he has no excuse if he indulges in the same things himself.

He may belong to the privileged people of God, but fails to realize that because of this, God demands a higher standard of conduct from him than from the darkened Gentile world. In ignoring this, declares the Apostle, he is only storing up for himself wrath in the future day of judgment, instead of the goodness and long-suffering of God leading him to humility and repentance now:

> "And thinkest thou this, O man, that judgest them which do such things, and doest the same, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God? Or despisest thou the riches of His goodness and forbearance and long-suffering; not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?" (ii. 3 and 4).

One thing that cannot be questioned is the righteousness of God's judgment. It is absolutely impartial and fair; it is "according to truth" (verse 2). There are no favourites with God where sin and failing are concerned. To the sinning Jew Paul asks, do you think that you, one of the favoured people, will escape? Especially when you despise the riches of His kindness, forbearance and long-suffering (4). The answer is definitely "no". In fact, the Apostle says, with your impenitence and false judgment you are storing up for yourself God's wrath which will be made known in the future day of wrath:

> ". . . . . after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up (stores up) unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God" (ii. 5).

This righteous judgment will take into account a man's environment, the limit of his responsibility and his works:

> "Who will render to every man according to his deeds: to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life; but unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile; but glory, honour and peace, to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile; for there is no respect of persons with God" (Rom. ii. 6-11).

The Apostle does not quote any passages of Scripture, for the O.T. is perfectly clear on this point. He doubtless had in mind such passages as Psa. lxii. 11, 12; Prov.xxiv.12; Jer. xvii. 10; xxxii. 19. The N.T. emphasize the same truth (Matt.xvi.27; II Cor. v. 10; Rev. ii. 23; xx. 12; xxii. 12), although most of these Scriptures have the believer in view primarily.

The emphasis on human works here may raise a problem. On the surface it looks as though Paul is teaching salvation by works. If he was doing this, then it runs contrary to the consistent testimony of his witness as well as this epistle itself, namely that salvation is by grace and not works or merit. The Apostle was not the sort of man to indulge in such contradictions. The Apostle here is stressing the impartiality of God as between Jew and Gentile. The continuance in well doing of the genuine seeker is but the outward expression of his inward desire for the eternal things (glory, immortality, eternal life) which are resident only in God and not in man.

Did not the Lord say "By their fruits ye shall know them"? The "fruits" are the external evidence of persistent inward longing and appreciation of the truth of God.

Taken by themselves and not as a result of internal desire they prove nothing. This explains a similar passage relating to the Apostle Peter (Acts x. 34). The sincere seekers that Paul is referring to, do not trust in their works alone, but in God Who is the only source of glory, honour and eternal life. Their continual seeking in action is only the practical outward expression of their inward sincerity.

But in it all, as we have seen, God is no "respecter of persons", that is, He never indulges in partiality or favouritism. Above all He is absolutely righteous and fair whether dealing with the believer or unbeliever, Jew or Gentile.

No.4. ii. 12 - 29.
pp. 141 - 145

The absolute righteousness or fairness that the Apostle Paul is stressing in the context we are considering, is now shown in God's dealing with those who have never had a written revelation from Him, or for that matter a preacher to make known the gospel of salvation by grace through the Lord Jesus Christ:

> "For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law; and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law; (For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified. For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves; which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing or else excusing one another); in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel" (Rom. ii. 12-16).

What this passage makes clear is that the Gentile who never had the standard of the law of God given through Moses, will not be judged by that standard. Nevertheless he is not without law entirely, for inwardly, he has a law which should be the regulator of his thoughts and actions, and this is his conscience. This is the moral law in miniature as it were. Conscience either condemns his wrong doing (accuses him) or witnesses that he is right (excuses him), and all this is open to God Who, unlike man, knows the thoughts and the intents of the heart in every person and in every particular.

Furthermore we are assured in Scripture that the righteous Judge of all is able to do what no human judge can, that is, He assesses what an individual would have done if his circumstances had been different. God's judgment is dependent upon the amount of light a person has had and what the circumstances surrounding him were like. In other words guilt is proportionate, and God is able to make a righteous comparison with the favoured and those who were not so favoured.

In the O.T. God's earthly people, Israel, were compared with Sodom, which, on the surface, is surprising to say the least:

> "As I live, saith the Lord God, Sodom thy sister hath not done, she nor her daughters, as thou hast done, thou and thy daughters . . . . . they (Sodom and her daughters) are more righteous than thou" (Ezek. xvi. 48-52).

It would be difficult to make any valid comparison between the Israelite and the inhabitants of Sodom, except to say that, with all the revelation and light contained in the law of Moses, the Jew was in a vastly more favourable position than the people of this city. This being so, their responsibility was much greater. Added light inevitably brings added responsibility in God's sight. Would that this was continually impressed upon the minds of all believers.

The same principle is expressed by the Lord Jesus in Matt. x. 14, 15:

> "And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet. Verily I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city."

In the next chapter of Matthew, the Lord continues:

> "Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. But I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you" (Matt. xi. 21, 22).

In addition the Lord refers to "the men of Nineveh" and "the queen of the south" in Matt. xii. 41, 42. Tyre and Sidon did not repent. This is an historic fact. Tyre and Sidon would have repented if . . . . .! That is the verdict of One Who will judge the secrets of men, the One Who "tries the heart and the reins", Who therefore can righteously evaluate inner desire and outward performance. He may see triumph where others see disaster, and failure where others see success. It is in the light of these revelations concerning the principles of future judgment that we must read Rom. ii. 4-16.

Nor must we forget that nothing that is written in this passage or elsewhere in the Scripture can alter the privilege of hearing the gospel and the heavy responsibility resting on those who, having heard, do not believe.

On the other hand this passage does help in the great problem of dealing with the destiny of the unsaved in lands that are far removed from Christian revelation. When one thinks of the millions that have been born in past thousands of years in vast countries like China and Africa who have never had the privilege of hearing the good news of salvation, one is staggered. In addition to this we should remember that they had no responsibility for inheriting a sinful nature from fallen Adam, nor for being born in a place where it was impossible to hear the gospel. Does not Rom. x. 14 recognize the limits of their responsibility?

> "How then shall they call on Him in Whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in Him of Whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?".

The clear answer is they cannot do any of these things and a righteous God will recognize this. A crude orthodoxy may consign them to hell for eternity, but the teaching of the passage we are considering in Romans does nothing of the kind. It deals with them along the lines of conscience and the circumstances that surround them and states that they are a "law unto themselves" (ii. 14). They are a special case in other words, and the "faith obedience" to the gospel to which chapter i. refers, cannot apply to them.

However, the Apostle goes on to deal with the Jew who did have a knowledge of God and His truth. He points out to them that it was useless for such to rest in the fact that they were the custodians of God's law. This law was only of use if it was obeyed. Apart from this it could only condemn him. A Jew who breaks the law is no better than a Gentile. In fact a Gentile who carries out the spirit of the law will condemn a Jew who breaks it, no matter how well versed he may be in the O.T. Scriptures, or how much he rests upon the law revealed therein.

He imagined that this provided him with a sure standing before God as did the fact that he was born one of the chosen people. The Apostle proceeds to strip from the Jew these false props:

> "Now you, if you call yourself a Jew; if you rely on the law and brag about your relationship to God; if you know His will and approve of what is superior because you are instructed by the law; if you are convinced that you are a guide for the blind, a light for those who are in the dark, an instructor of the foolish, a teacher of infants, because you have in the law the embodiment of knowledge and truth—you, then, who teach others, do you not teach yourself? You who preach against stealing, do you steal?
> You who say that people should not commit adultery, do you commit adultery? You who abhor idols, do you rob temples? You who brag about the law, do you dishonour God by breaking the law? As it is written: God's name is blasphemed among the Gentiles because of you" (Rom. ii. 17-24, N.I.V.).

The law of God was only profitable if it was obeyed and carried out in practice, otherwise it could only condemn and render guilty. So Paul continues "Circumcision has value if you observe the law, but if you break the law, you have become as though you had not been circumcised" (ii. 25 N.I.V.).

It was futile for a Jew to look on circumcision as though it was a passport to salvation. It had an internal meaning without which it was an empty rite. The putting off of the flesh stood for the abandonment of human effort and merit, and in its place was put a complete reliance (faith) in God and His provision of righteousness. Regarding the law, Galatians reinforces the argument of Romans, "every man that is circumcised . . . . . is a debtor to do the whole law" (Gal. v. 3). Without this, the law became man's enemy, not his friend, for a broken law could only lead to God's curse (Gal. iii. 10), and moreover it made the sacrifice of Christ valueless:

> "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified the law; ye are fallen from grace" (Gal. v. 4).

But what of the Gentile who, though uncircumcised, pleased God? He would certainly show up the shortcomings of the disobedient Jew and judge him even though he had kept the letter of the law (Rom. ii. 27). Now the Apostle gives a description of the true Jew which was more than just outward conformity to ritual:

> "A man is not a Jew if he is only one outwardly, nor is circumcision merely outward and physical. No, a man is a Jew if he is one inwardly; and circumcision is circumcision of the heart, by the Spirit, not by the written code. Such a man's praise is not from men, but from God" (ii. 28, 29, N.I.V.).

There was an internal attitude of mind, which was essential if one wished to be recognized by God as the true seed of Abraham. Circumcision of the heart is an O.T. doctrine as much as the fleshly rite (Deut. x. 16; Jer. iv. 4) where it means man's humble response to God's gracious love and the absence of boasting and indulgence in some supposed superiority over others. On the other hand one cannot rule out the physical side altogether, for later on in the Roman epistle the Apostle Paul is going to state that the true seed came only through Isaac, and not through any other child of Abraham (Rom. ix. 7, 8)—"In Isaac shall thy seed be called". In other words there is an internal as well as an external side to the real seed of Abraham and both are essential to the purpose of God.

No.5. iii. 1 - 9.
pp. 161 - 165

When we come to chapter iii. of the epistle, the presentation of the Apostle's theme in the form of an argument still continues. We can imagine someone reading his conclusion of chapter ii. and saying: "if it is being a Jew inwardly that really matters, is there any real advantage in belonging to the Jewish nation and being circumcised?" Paul's reply to the question, "what advantage has the Jew?" (Rom. iii. 1) is definite:

> "Much every way; chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God" (iii. 2).

Among the many privileges bestowed by God upon Israel was the fact that He had made them the custodians of His written Word. This was an honour indeed, such as no other nation had received. Later on the Apostle gives an imposing list of Israel's privileges in Rom. ix.:

> ". . . . . my kinsmen according to the flesh: who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption (sonship), and the glory (the external symbol of God's presence with them), and the covenants (every covenant in the Bible pertains originally to Israel except the covenant with Noah), and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers (Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and his twelve sons to whom so many divine promises were made), and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, Who is over all, God blessed for ever, Amen" (ix. 3-5).

We shall have to consider this list of high privileges in detail when we reach chap. ix., but when we take them all together, the answer to the query as to whether there was any advantage in being an Israelite is overwhelming. The evidence of the O.T. makes it clear that God planned the Jewish people to be the premier nation of the earth through whom this truth was to reach to the ends of the world (Exod. xix. 3-6; Deut. xxviii. 1), and for this reason the Psalmist concludes Psa. cxlvii. by saying:

> "He sheweth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation: and as for His judgment, they have not known them. Praise ye the Lord" (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20).

At the same time Israel should have remembered what has already been stressed, namely that God's light and truth bring great responsibility, and even though they were unfaithful yet this did not alter or make void the faithfulness of God:

> "What if some did not have faith? Will their lack of faith nullify God's faithfulness? Not at all! Let God be true, and every man a liar" (iii. 3, 4-, N.I.V.).

The untruth or the failure of man only sets into relief God's absolute faithfulness and reliability. In a court of law God will always prove to be in the right.

> "As Scripture says, That Thou mayest be proved right when Thou speakest and be victorious when Thou enterest into judgment" (iii. -4, C. K. Barrett).

Another objection now follows. Someone may argue: "If my failure shows up God's faithfulness, why should He find fault with me, because if this is true He is the gainer by my sin? So, is God just in exacting retribution for sin?". The Apostle apologizes for bringing in such a human argument. The sentence in Greek is so worded as to expect the answer, No. If this accusation was true it would be impossible for God, as the moral Governor of the universe, to execute judgment upon mankind. "For then how shall God judge the world?" (verse 6). And it is quite clear from Scripture that this is precisely what He will do (Acts xvii. 30, 31; Rom. ii. 14-16), and the fact that man has been created a moral being in the image of God brings responsibility and demands it. The only alternative is to regard man as a puppet with no responsibility for his actions, which is unscriptural and completely untrue.

The objector however persists:

> "If my falsehood enhances God's truthfulness and so increases His glory, why am I still condemned as a sinner?" (iii. 7, N.I.V.).

As a matter of fact this argument was certainly made by Paul's enemies against the gospel which he preached. If human works do not enter into the scheme of salvation, if it is just by faith only, then one can live just as one likes and forget about sin and failing. But this was complete falsification of the truth. In a later epistle, the Apostle expresses the good news of salvation in this way:

> "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that (salvation by faith) not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained (margin: before prepared) that we should walk in them" (Eph. ii. 8-10).

Thus Paul did not teach antinomianism, and this is reinforced by the first two verses of Rom. vi.

> "What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin (after salvation), that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" (Rom. vi. 1).

This being so, those who slandered the Apostle and misrepresented the gospel that he preached, came under God's condemnation (damnation A.V.) and this condemnation was just. They said in effect that Paul taught that doing evil was permissible if good came from it (iii. 8). This is a highly dangerous and deceptive statement that still creeps into human affairs, and even into the religious world. How often do we hear that wrong doing is allowable if some good springs from it? And there are some who do not hesitate to say that even God can take this attitude in His purposes, that He wills evil in order to show up His love and kindness in forgiveness!

Such slander comes perilously near blasphemy. We can be assured of one thing: a thrice-holy God does not need to bring sin into His plans in order to further them and bring them to a glorious conclusion. God may and does permit sin. The very fact that He has made man a moral being allows this. He can also over-rule sin, but this is something entirely different. God's permissive will must not be confused with His direct will.

Chapter iii. continues with another argument from the foregoing. If it is a great advantage to belong to the nation of Israel, then surely Jews are superior to Gentiles? The Apostle's answer is clear. Jews are sinners equally with Gentiles and in some respects worse than them because of their greater enlightenment and failure, so from the standpoint of sin and failing there is no difference:

> "What then? are we (Jews) better than they (Gentiles)? No, in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin" (iii. 9).

This contrast with the opening verses of the chapter may be set out in this way:

A | iii. 1. What advantage and profit has Israel?
B | 2. Much every way—chiefly because God had given them the revelation of the Word.
A | 9. Are we (Israel) then better than they Gentiles?
B | iii. 9. No, because Israel together with the Gentiles are sinners and guilty before God.

This guilt, says the Apostle, is the verdict of Scripture and he goes on to cite six passages to prove the point:

"We have already made the charge that Jews and Gentiles alike are all under sin. As it is written,

'There is no-one righteous, not even one; there is no-one who understands, no-one who seeks God. All have turned away, they have together become worthless; there is no-one who does good, not even one' (Psa. liii. 1-3).

'Their throats are open graves; their tongues practice deceit' (Psa. v. 9).

'The poison of vipers is on their lips' (Psa. cxl. 3).

'Their mouths are full of cursing and bitterness' (Psa. x. 7).

'Their feet are swift to shed blood; ruin and misery mark their ways, and the way of peace they do not know' (Isa. lix. 7, 8).

'There is no fear of God before their eyes' (Psa. xxxvi. 1).

Now we know that whatever the law says, it says to those who are under the law, so that every mouth may be silenced and the whole world held accountable to God. Therefore no-one will be declared righteous in His sight by observing the law; rather through the law we become conscious of sin" (Rom. iii. 9-20, N.I.V.).

The 'law' here means the O.T. Scriptures as a whole.

Having now dealt with all mankind in the two-fold division of Jew and Gentile, and shown that all are sinners and are therefore guilty in the sight of God—the Judge of all the earth, the Apostle Paul returns to the implications of the wonderful gospel of grace which he stated in i. 17. Man is not only a sinner but is unable to rescue or save himself from this condition, no matter how much he tries. Since the fall, men have been struggling to do this very thing, but have never attained to it, and as Scripture reveals, never will. Max Muller, as he considered the many religions in the world, observed the fact that although they differed in many respects, in one thing they were all united, that man must do something to achieve salvation. He must make his contribution or work it out for himself, in other words. The idea of salvation as a free gift, perfect and complete, being brought before men and received personally by faith or trust never enters their conceptions, but this is the heart of the gospel made known to Paul by revelation of the risen Christ (Gal. i. 8-12).

We have reached a point in Romans where God now steps in to meet the deepest needs of man and provides with that righteousness or absolute rightness which completely nullifies his guilty condition, so much so, that if he accepts it by simple faith, in God's court of law he now can be pronounced "not guilty" by the Judge of all the earth, the very opposite of the "guilty" verdict declared in Rom. iii. 19:

"But now a righteousness from God, apart from law, has been made known, to which the Law and the Prophets testify. This righteousness from God comes through faith in Jesus Christ to all who believe. There is no difference, for all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God, and are justified freely by His grace through the redemption that came by Christ Jesus" (Rom. iii. 21-24, N.I.V.).

No.6. iii. 10 - 31.
pp. 181 - 186

In the section we are studying we have seen that God's answer to man's sin is the provision of His own righteousness, resting on the basis of Christ's redemptive work on the cross and received personally by the sinner on the ground of faith or trust in Him. There can be no doubt that 'righteousness' & the verb 'to make righteous' are key words in this great epistle, and they run right throughout like a golden thread as the following summary shows:

God's righteousness revealed in the gospel	i. 17
God's righteousness required and found wanting in human attainment	i. 18-iii. 20
God's righteousness provided through faith in Christ	iii. 21-31
A concrete illustration of this—Abraham.
How God reckons righteousness to a sinner	iv. and v.
God's righteousness and the freedom it brings to serve Him	vi. and viii.
Israel's attitude to this righteousness and their failure through not receiving it	ix.-xi.
God's righteousness in practice in the daily life	xii.-xvi.

As stated before, the terms "righteousness" and "make righteous" are terms of the law-court. These words do not mean "to make virtuous" or "to make sinless", as is evidenced by the fact that the redeemed sinner is still capable of sin and does not attain absolute perfection until resurrection glory when he is then presented "holy and unblameable and unreproveable in His (God's) sight" (Col. i. 21, 22). In the exposition of Galatians we pointed out that the process of justification is expressed in terms of law in the Old and New Testaments. We repeat it here:

1. God is set forth as the Judge of all the earth (Genesis xviii. 25; Isaiah i. 7, 8; Romans viii. 33).
2. The person to be justified is guilty. He is looked upon as exposed to the righteous judgment of God (Rom. i. 32). The sinner's mouth is shut (Rom. iii. 19).
3. There are three accusers: (i.) the law of God (John v. 45); (ii.) Conscience (Rom.ii.15); (iii.) Satan (Zech. iii. 2; Rev. xii. 10).
4. The charge is drawn up in legal handwriting (Col. ii. 14).
5. The gospel provides the guilty person with a plea (Rom. iii. 23-25).
6. The Lord Himself is the Advocate (I John ii. 1, 2).
7. The sentence for all believers is one of complete forgiveness, justification, and acceptance by God, and title to eternal life and inheritance (Rom. viii. 1, 33, 34; II Cor. v. 21).

Such are completely cleared and acquitted by God, Whose righteousness is beyond question. This is done on the principle of grace, since men, being sinners, cannot be acquitted on the grounds of any merit of their own. It is God's gracious favour that meets all their needs, at the same time satisfying the demands of justice, His holiness not being compromised in any way, and this is all because of the sacrificial death of the Lord Jesus Christ Who bore the penalty for the sins of all His people.

The Apostle Paul says more about grace, God's favour to the unworthy, than any other N.T. writer. This wonderful redemption and justification is based upon the "riches of His (Christ's) grace" (Eph. i. 6, 7), leading to "exceeding riches of His grace" in the ages to come which will be experienced in resurrection glory. The Apostle knew in his own experience what it was to be the recipient of the grace and mercy of God, as he looked back on his pre-conversion days and described himself as the "chief of sinners" (I Tim. i. 12, 13, 15). And this can be true of every sinner who puts his trust in the redemptive work of Christ alone. It matters not of what race, nationality, class or colour he belongs to, this infinite grace and mercy can be his on the grounds of trust in Christ Jesus:

> ". . . . . this righteousness from God comes through faith in Jesus Christ to all who believe. There is no difference, for all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God, and are justified freely by His grace through the redemption that came by Christ Jesus. God presented Him as a sacrifice of atonement, through faith in His blood. He did this to demonstrate His justice, because in His forbearance He had left the sins committed beforehand unpunished—He did it to demonstrate His justice at the present time, so as to be just and the One Who justifies the man who has faith in Jesus" (Rom. iii. 22-26, N.I.V.).

It is clear from the foregoing wonderful facts which stress that justification and forgiveness are God's acts alone, and achieved solely through the sacrificial work of the Lord Jesus on the sinner's behalf, that human boasting must be excluded. What has any sinner, thus forgiven, to boast about? If he boasts at all, it must be in the Saviour Who has given His life on the cross on his behalf and borne the penalty of his sins.

It is this perfect offering "once for all" (Heb. x. 9, 10, 12), that God continually looks at where sin is concerned and it is because of this that He could overlook the sin of previous generations and be forbearing, holding back His hand in punishment. Christ's redemptive work can be retrospective as well as looking to the future. Compare Paul's proclamation to the Athenians ". . . . . the times of ignorance God overlooked; but now commandeth . . . . ." (Acts xvii. 30 R.V.). Yet at the same time, in forgiving the sins of His people, God's holiness was not compromised in doing this. "He was just" and at the same time "the Justifier of him who believeth in Jesus" (Rom. iii. 26).

Sin had not been ignored by Him or swept under the carpet so to speak. It had been fully borne by God Himself in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ "For He hath made Him (the Lord Jesus) to be sin (or a sin offering) for us, Who knew no sin (He was sinless Himself); that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (II Cor. v. 21).

How wonderful that the God Who pronounced the penalty for sin to Adam, namely death (Gen. ii. 17), bore it Himself so that His creature should not have to bear it for eternity! This is surely love beyond our comprehension. No wonder in the N.T. the love of God is so often described in terms of the giving of Himself in the person of Christ for us (John iii. 16; Gal. ii. 20; Eph. v. 25). Even in the human realm the Lord said "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends" (John.xv.13). It is all beautifully expressed in the children's hymn:

> "It is a thing most wonderful,
> Almost too wonderful to be,
> That God's own Son should come from heaven,
> And die to save a child like me" (Bishop W. W. HOW).

Some have judged from verse 25 that we have the pagan idea that God needed to be appeased. The word 'propitiation' hilasterion is related to the verb hilaskomai which in pagan Greek did mean "to placate". In the Septuagint the word is parallel to the Hebrew kipper ("Make atonement") and among cognate words we find kapporeth, "mercy seat". These words acquired a new meaning from their Biblical context. We should note carefully in Romans, it is not man who is trying to placate God, for Paul insists that it is God, not sinful man Who has provided this mercy seat (verse 25), as He did typically in the O.T.

Some modern translations seek to avoid the word "propitiation" and substitute "expiation" and "the means of expiating sin" (R.S.V. and N.E.B.) which means to wipe it out. This is certainly true of Christ's redemptive work. God has so dealt with His peoples' sin and removed it, so that it can be said with truth, "their sins and iniquities I will remember no more" (Jer. xxxi. 34); "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us" (Psa. ciii. 12); "Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea" (Micah vii. 19).

On the other hand we cannot Scripturally remove the wrath of God from the problem of sin. Has not Paul already said that "the wrath of God is reveled from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men?" (Rom. i. 18). How then is this wrath to be removed? It can only come through the hilasterion, "propitiation" that God has provided whereby through Christ men's sins can be righteously cancelled, in which case retribution (the wrath of God) does not arise. The wrath of God is not a popular theme in modern theology but it is inevitable in a moral universe and is one of the revelations of Holy Writ.

The Apostle sums up this section of the epistle by saying:

> "Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law. Is He the God of the Jews only? Is He not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also: seeing it is one God, which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith. Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid; yea, we establish the law" (iii. 28-31).

Is any distinction to be made in the prepositions 'by' (ek) and 'through' (dia) faith? It appears that the Apostle uses them interchangeably. Ek is used in Rom. i. 17, ek & dia in connection with law in iii. 20: and dia in iii. 22, 25 joined with faith & in Gal.ii.16. Likewise in English the words 'by' and 'through' can have the same meaning.

One thing is certain, and that is, from the Apostle's argument, there is only one way to justification for Jew and Gentile, namely the way of faith in Christ's work of redemption.

He asks, do we do away with the law if we stress faith? Paul uses the word law in more than one sense; sometimes with the definite article and sometimes without it. But in every sense that he uses it the declaration that law is established, not made void by faith, is true. If it means the O.T. as a whole, it is true, for justification by faith contradicts not one of its statements nor is inconsistent with its doctrines or promises. If it refers to the O.T. typology then these were but shadows of which Christ was the substance (Heb. x. 1) and they were fulfilled in Christ, not proved spurious. If it means the moral law then again this is not weakened by the law of faith, for by it no moral obligation was weakened or penal sanction disregarded. No, the law is established by faith, for the O.T. teaches that both Abraham and David were justified gratuitously by faith and without works on their part.

Having come to this point, the Apostle is now going to give a concrete illustration of what justification by faith means, and he found in Abraham an excellent example of this truth. Several N.T. writers refer to Abraham to prove their points of doctrine for the very good reason that in this man's life all the basic truths of Christianity are illustrated. We find justification, sanctification, the power of prayer, fellowship with God, consecration, and the goal of maturity all exhibited in his walk before God. To the Jew, Abraham was their father and their supreme human example. No more telling practical setting forth of the foundational doctrine of justification by faith could be made to an Israelite. Thus it is that the fourth chapter of Romans which follows, shows how faith in God and His promises forms the very basis of Abraham's life and witness.

No.7. iv. 1 - 11.
pp. 201 - 206

The Apostle Paul now proceeds to set forth the case of Abraham and he continues to use the style of question and answer. If ever there was a man whom the people of Israel revered it was Abraham, for not only was he their human father, but his character was such that even God Himself could say:

> "Abraham obeyed My voice, and kept My charge, My commandments, My statutes, and My laws" (Gen. xxvi. 5).

This was high commendation indeed, and if a man's works could justify him in God's sight, then Abraham could go further than most. But Paul has clearly shown that even the best of human beings cannot reach God's standard of perfection by their own efforts:

> "What then shall we say about Abraham, our forefather according to the flesh? For if Abraham was justified by work, he has something to boast about, but not before God. For what does the Scripture say? Abraham believed God and it was reckoned to him as righteousness" (Rom. iv. 1-3, R.S.V.).

It will be well to pause here and consider the word translated 'count' in this context as it is vital to the argument. The word in the Greek is the verb logizomai which occurs no less than eleven times in this chapter. It is translated 'count' in verses 3 and 5, 'reckon' (verses 4, 9, 10), 'impute' (verses 6, 8, 11, 22, 23, 24). Looking carefully at the context we note that it is used in two different ways (1) of imputing something, (2) imputing one thing for another. The former sense occurs in verses 6, 8, 10, 11, 23, 24. In these passages one thing is not imputed for another, wages, righteousness and sin are actualities. But in verses 3, 5 and 22 faith is imputed for righteousness. We have the same thought in ii. 26, "therefore if the uncircumcision keep the righteousness of the law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision?".

The principle of faith is of extreme importance, but we must not go to the length of making it another "work". If we do, then we empty the gospel of the grace of God of all its meaning. Faith is not a work, although it leads to works, but this is another matter. We have a comparatively modern example of these two expressions. There was a time in the history of our country when the standard coin of the realm was the golden sovereign. One could never have said with truth that the golden sovereign was reckoned for twenty shillings for it actually was worth twenty shillings. Whatever happened to it! Today we have a pound note. Its purchasing power is exactly the same as that of a golden sovereign, but it would be very unwise to conclude that the note itself was actually of the same value as the gold; it was and is merely "reckoned for" £1. The intrinsic value of each would be evident if both were dropped into the fire. The sovereign would survive, but the note would quickly be reduced to ash. On the other hand we must not think that the value of the £1 note is fictional, for behind it are the resources of Great Britain.

So it is with faith or trust. Faith is not righteousness; but is reckoned by God for righteousness. The real righteousness is found only in the Lord. Nevertheless faith is precious and is the one thing necessary to please God (Heb. xi. 6), but we must not magnify it into a procuring cause or a work of merit on our part. As Charles H. Welch expresses it so aptly, "there, in the great capital Bank of Heaven, is the genuine gold of perfect righteousness, wrought by Another (the Lord Jesus) on our behalf, that alone makes our faith of any value" (Just and the Justifier, p.77).

The section of the epistle we are now dealing with stresses three things:

(1) The relation of circumcision to the argument;
(2) The nullifying of God's promises if the law and human works are introduced; and
(3) The supreme example of Abraham and the way he was justified by God.

Romans iv. 3 reads:

> "For what saith the Scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness."

The Apostle is clearly quoting Gen. xv. 6, but we have a problem here because in the Genesis record we are assured that Abraham believed God some time before this. Hebrews xi. 8 states that "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out unto a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went", and this takes us back to Gen. xii. 1, so why is this passed over? The answer is found by considering the background of Gen. xv. At this point Abraham had come to an end of himself. He said "I go childless" (Gen. xv. 2). Yet God assured him that, in spite of this seeming impossibility, he would nevertheless have a son: "He that shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir" (Gen. xv. 4). Abraham was then told to look towards heaven and attempt to number the stars. This command was followed by the promise, "so shall thy seed be" (Gen. xv. 5). Next we have the statement of the sixth verse "And he believed in the Lord; and He counted it to him for righteousness". The remaining verses in Rom. iv. stresses that Abraham did not believe God in a general way, but that he believed the God of resurrection. He was the "God Who quickeneth the dead" (Rom. iv. 17). This aspect of Abraham's faith is seen further in connection with the offering of Isaac "Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure" (Heb. xi. 19). That the great basic doctrine of resurrection is linked with justification is clear from the conclusion of Rom. iv.:

> "Now it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him; But for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on Him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead; Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for (because of) our justification" (iv. 23, 25).

The debt incurred by our sins was paid by the Lord's death. Our acquittal was received in resurrection and it is for this reason that Gen. xv. 6 is the place where Abraham's justification is revealed. He most assuredly believed in a God Who was able to give life to dead people when he believed the promise of a literal seed, at a time when both he and his wife were physically unable to have children owing to their old age (Rom. iv. 17-22).

Looking more closely at the section of the epistle before us we find the Apostle Paul commenting on the fact that Abraham's works were not the basis of his justification:

> "Now when a man works, his wages are not credited to him as a gift, but as an obligation. However, to the man who does not work but trusts God Who justifies the wicked, his faith is credited as righteousness" (iv. 4, 5, N.I.V.).

The argument is obvious; a workman earns his wages by his works. His pay is not a gracious gift! If Abraham could earn his justification before God by his own efforts then faith was not necessary. But it has been made abundantly clear that neither Abraham nor any other human being has the capability of doing this (though alas, thousands imagine that they have). Justification or acquittal must come from God Himself. All human sources or attempts are useless. It is God alone Who can justify the sinner! The phrase that God "justifies the ungodly" is surely startling, for it is in direct contradiction to the O.T. Scriptures:

> ". . . . . I (God) will not justify the wicked" (Exod. xxiii. 7).
> "He that justifieth the wicked and he that condemneth the righteous, both of them alike are an abomination unto the Lord" (Prov. xvii. 15, R.S.V.).

So here, in Romans apparently, we find God doing what He absolutely prohibited! Yet God's way of justifying a sinner is such that His own holy character is untarnished. He can be "just" and yet the "justifier of him who believeth in Jesus" (Rom. iii. 23-26), for, as we have seen, He, in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ, has paid the penalty for the sins of the believer. For He was made sin for us Who Himself had no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him (II Cor. v. 20, 21).

The force of the verses quoted above from the O.T. clearly indicate that "to justify" is a forensic term, a term from the law-court, which does not mean to make perfect or holy, but "to acquit" as innocent.

The Apostle now introduces David as a further example:

> "Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works, saying, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin" (iv. 6-8).

The conclusion to be drawn from this is, "the counting of righteousness" is equivalent to "the not-counting of sin". What a joy and relief this was to David as the Psalm which he wrote testifies and from which this quotation is made (Psa. xxxii.). David had grievously sinned, but he was dealing with a merciful God Who would cover and put away his sins on the basis of the future sacrifice of Christ (Rom. iii. 24, 25). No wonder he finished that Psalm by saying:

> "Be glad in the Lord, and rejoice, ye righteous, and shout for joy, all ye that are upright in heart" (Psa. xxxii. 11).

Paul now deals with the question as to whether this glorious forgiveness and acquittal was the privilege of the Jew only. Could it extend to the Gentile?

> "Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision (Jew) only, or upon the uncircumcision (Gentile) also? for we say that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness. How was it then reckoned? When he was in circumcision or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision" (Rom. iv. 9, 10).

The answer to the query of verse 9 is settled by noting Abraham's condition when he was justified by faith. Was he circumcised then or uncircumcised? Again the answer is clear. The circumcision of Abraham does not take place until Gen. xvii., at least fourteen years later, and then it was only an external seal of that righteous status which God had given him long before, by virtue of his faith. Abraham was a Gentile when he was justified by faith! Thus it is that he could be the true father of all, whether Jew or Gentile, who trust God and take Him at His Word.

The rite of circumcision or its absence is irrelevant to a man's status before God as a Judge:

> "And he (Abraham) received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised: that he might be the father of all them > that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also" (iv. 11).

If circumcision had nothing to do with the justification of Abraham before God, then the law had even less to do with it; for in Galatians Paul had already pointed out that the law was given 430 years later than God's promise to Abraham and could not either contradict it or set it aside (Gal. iii. 17). Thus it is that God's dealings with Abraham on the principle of grace is an illustration of what He can do for anyone, Jew or Gentile, who exhibits the same trust in God that Abraham showed. It was because of this that God changed his name from Abram as he was formerly called to Abraham, and said "I have made thee a father of many nations" (Gen. xvii. 4, 5) and this must therefore include the Gentile.

No.8. iv. 12 - v. 5.

Thus it is that chapter iv. of Romans, dealing with Abraham show that his case is a practical example of justification by faith on the principle of grace, whichever way it is looked at, either from the standpoint of circumcision, or any kind of law; whether given later through Moses or otherwise:

> "For the promise, that he (Abraham) should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through (the) law, but through the righteousness of faith. For if they which are of (the) law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect: because the law worketh wrath; for where no law is, there is no transgression. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all, (as it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations), before Him Who he believed, even God, Who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were" (iv. 13-17).

Sometimes Paul drops the definite article before 'the law' and possibly from this he is referring to law generally.

These verses extend the argument set forth in verses 1-12, namely that God's dealings with Abraham were not on the basis of law but of promise, and this was given by grace and received by faith. The title, "the heir of the world", is an interpretation of the promises which refer to "all families of the earth" (Gen. xii. 3) and "all nations of the earth" (Gen. xviii. 18; xxii. 18). The Apostle argues that if these are received by law keeping, then faith is ruled out, and owing to men's inability to keep the law, these divine promises can never be fulfilled.

> "For if those who rely on the law are heirs, then faith has been emptied of meaning, and the promise has been brought to nothing" (iv. 14, C. K. Barrett).

In addition to this is the fact that the law produces wrath, for it inevitably imposes penalties for failure to keep it. Where no law is there is no transgression. Here the Apostle is anticipating what he expands in chapter v. 12-14. All the law can do is to show up sin in its true colours. It can never save or justify the sinner. Because of this, God's way is the principle of grace which is appropriated by men only through faith in Him and what He has accomplished through Christ on their behalf. Only in this way can God's promise be secure to all the seed (whether Jew or Gentile). If it rests on sinful men it can never be sure and certain, but if it rests on God alone then there can be absolute assurance.

In Abraham's case, as we have seen before, all this was worked out in spite of the fact that both he and his wife, around the age of a hundred years, were beyond the capability of having a son. Abraham looked to and completely trusted the God of resurrection to keep His promise and give him an heir from which a posterity would spring. Verses 18-21 record this. Some Greek manuscripts omit the negative in verse 19 and read "he considered his body now dead", but the sense is not altered. Even if he did consider his aged body, he did not allow this to affect his faith in the promise of God, but looked to the One, Who can overcome death and quicken the dead, to keep His Word:

> ". . . . . before God, in Whom he believed, God, Who quickens the dead and calls into being the things which do not exist. This, Abraham believed, hoping against hope, so as to become the father of many Gentiles (according to the Scriptures), So shall thy seed be. He considered without weakening in his faith that his own body was as good as dead (since he was about a hundred years old), and also the dead state of Sarah's womb. Looking rather to God's promise, he did not waver in unbelief, but gave God the glory, was fully convinced that what God had promised He had the power to do, and grew strong in faith, that is why it was accounted to him for righteousness" (iv. 17-22).

We give Dr. C. K. Barrett's translation here as it makes the sense of the passage more clear than the A.V. The Apostle brings all this to bear on the believers of his day and for those who would follow after. Our justification as believers in the Lord Jesus Christ is the same as Abraham's, for it is based and rooted in the free grace of God Who counts faith in Himself as righteousness and this is possible because the Lord Jesus was "delivered up because of the sins we had committed and raised up because of the justification that was to be granted to us" (iv. 25 C. K. Barrett).

Having made clear how it is possible for a holy God to justify sinners, chapter v. starts by enumerating the rich blessings that follow:

> "Therefore, since we have been justified through faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, through Whom we have gained access by faith into this grace in which we now stand. And we rejoice in the hope of the glory of God. Not only so, but we also rejoice in our sufferings, because we know that suffering produces perseverance; perseverance, character; and character, hope. And hope does not disappoint us, because God has poured out His love into our hearts by the Holy Spirit, Whom He has given us" (Rom. v. 1-5, N.I.V.).

Some translations (A.V., R.V. margin, R.S.V.) read "We have peace with God". The R.V., and R.S.V. margin, read "let us have peace with God". Some Greek texts read the indicative of the verb, echomen; others the subjunctive, echomen. One has the short 'o', the other the long ‘o’ and both were practically identical in pronunciation. Both readings were attested. However there is no conflict in doctrine. One says we have peace because we are justified; the other, we have peace through justification and let us continue in it and enjoy it. This blessed peace comes from the sin question being completely settled and put away. It is not merely a cessation of hostilities as it is so often in human affairs. Once as sinners we were ‘alienated and enemies’ to God (Col. i. 20-22). Now, God’s justifying work has completely removed the barrier between us. This leads to quietness and assurance and free access to Him. We are brought now into a special place of favour, “this grace wherein we stand” (v. 2). The believer’s “standing” is no longer in Adam with its condemnation, but in Christ, and the righteousness provided by His great sacrifice is the procuring cause of this “access”. Because of this, we (both Jew and Gentile believers) have access by one Spirit unto the Father” (Eph. ii. 17, 18), and this gives us “boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus” (Heb. x. 19, 20) or as Heb. iv. 16 states, “let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need”. The standing of the believer in Christ is perfect, for he now stands clothed in God’s righteousness. All rests upon this glorious fact and in no sense depends upon the believer or his attainments. He can now have “boldness and access with confidence by the faith of Him” (Eph. iii. 12).

The distinction must therefore be made with the grace wherein the believer stands, and his state apart from this. As such he is still a failing creature, but his position in Christ now gives him strength and encouragement, so that his daily life and walk can begin to approximate to the perfect ‘standing’ he has been given by God. This glorious position leads to rejoicing “in hope of the glory of God” (v. 2). As a sinner he “comes short of the glory of God” (iii. 23). The glory of God will be the great characteristic of the resurrection life to come, and now the believer has it as a sure and certain hope that can never fail. In all its fullness, those in Christ will enjoy it for evermore in this unending future life.

> “And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also” (v. 3).

This last word ‘also’ is important, for no sane person boasts in tribulations for their own sake. As Rom. xii. 12 expresses it, we can be “patient in tribulation”, because we “rejoice in (this) hope”. Afflictions, tribulations, difficulties, are viewed as the normal experience of the Christian in the N.T. Did not the Lord Jesus say “In Me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation” (John xvi. 33). And can the servant expect to have different treatment from his Master?

One of the reasons that God permits tribulations to be experienced by His children is because of its salutary effect on their spiritual development. The difficulties of life cause the believer to lean more and more upon the Lord and His gracious promises. They give his faith exercise, so that “little faith” grows into “great faith”. Heb. xii. declares that chastening and discipline are the necessary accompaniments of true sonship in Christ and although this is not pleasant but grievous, afterwards it yields the “peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby” (Heb. xii. 6-12).

Thus we see that such experience are not the result of God's displeasure, but rather the wisdom of a heavenly Father Who is concerned about the spiritual development and character of His children and therefore leads them into experiences that will achieve this goal. Once this is realized, the sting is taken out of many of the disappointments of life. When we realize this, we can better understand the words of Peter to Christians who were undergoing severe tests, teaching them, "the trial of your faith, being much more precious than gold that perisheth . . . . . might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ" (I Pet. i. 4-7).

Such words remind us of Job, who though sorely afflicted could say:

> "When He hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold" (Job xxiii. 10).

Romans v. 4 leads on to "patience", or better "endurance" and in turn this results in "steadfastness of character" (experience A.V.), both of these traits being most necessary in the Christian life, so that the believer does not capitulate under the difficulties that come his way, but, strengthened by the Lord, is able to press on looking to the future glory, knowing that:

> "For our light and momentary troubles are achieving for us an eternal glory that far outweighs them all. So we fix our eyes not on what is seen, but on what is unseen. For what is seen is temporary, but what is unseen is eternal" (II Cor. iv. 17, 18, N.I.V.).

The Use and Abuse of Joel's Prophecy.

No.3. i. 14 - ii. 11.
pp. 1 - 10

Joel i. 14 - iii. 21 can come under the heading of "call to repent" and as such its structure is as follows:

i. 14. Call to fast
  i. 15. Reason
    i. 16-20. Consequences
      ii. 1a. Call to blow the trumpet \
        ii. 1b. Reason } PEOPLE
          ii. 2-11. Consequences /
ii. 12, 13a. Call to fast
  ii. 13b. Reason
    ii. 14. Consequences
      ii. 15-17a. Call to blow the trumpet \
        ii. 17b. Reason } PRIESTS
          ii. 18 - iii. 21. Consequences /

In this study we shall look in detail at the first half of this structure; that is at Joel i. 14 - ii. 11.

Joel i. 14. The call by Joel for a solemn assembly should remind the people of Judah of such events recorded in the law of Moses (Lev. xxiii. 36; Num. xxix. 35; Deut. xvi. 8). At these, the people were told to do no servile work but to bring sacrifices and so there would be food. Here Joel precedes the call for a solemn assembly with the call for a fast probably because the people were unable to supply certain of the offerings (Joel i. 9, 13) but fasting was associated with the forgiveness of sin and the Day of Atonement (Lev.xvi.29) was a day of fasting. Thus forgiveness may have been behind the call, for Joel does later call the people to repent. Also, bearing in mind that in the past the people had abused the solemn assemblies to such an extent that the Lord had said "it is an iniquity, even the solemn assembly" (Isa. i. 13) and that King Jehu had set up a solemn assembly for the worship of Baal (II Kings x. 19-21), it may be that Joel wanted to emphasize that such an assembly was of no value unless the heart of the people was penitent. Thus a solemn assembly is called and the people told to fast. All the elders and all the inhabitants of the land are gathered into the house of God and told to "cry unto the Lord". Why?

> "Cry unto the Lord,
> Alas for the day!
> for the Day of the Lord is at hand, > and as a destruction from the Almighty it shall come."

Now however little we may know of this time called "the Day of the Lord" from this verse alone we can see that it is a time to be feared. This "Day of the Lord" is the theme from here on in Joel's prophecy and it occurs in i. 15; ii. 1, 11, 31 and iii. 14. From these verses alone we can see that the people are told to tremble on this terrible day. We cannot go into the vast detail of this great subject here (most of Revelation is about the "Day of the Lord", Rev. i. 10), but suffice it to say that it is characterized by God's judgment upon the earth when He will again break into the world system and vindicate Himself and His people. The expression first occurs in Scripture in Isa. ii. 10-19 and a good description of it is given there. In the Day of the Lord man will be abased and the Lord exalted, whereas today self exaltation in man is common and God has been almost pushed out of the world He has created. This may be the reason that this age is termed "man's day"—an alternative reading of I Cor. iv. 3—and demonstrates that the time period for the Day of the Lord need not be 24 hours. Still however bad that day will be for mankind we should note that God's mercy will always be extended to the humble and repentant sinner (Joel ii. 11-13).

Joel i. 16. Having drawn people's attention to the Day of the Lord, Joel now returns to describe the consequences of this plague of locusts. What he saw left a vivid picture in his mind which formed the basis of his description of the total destructive effect of the army of people portrayed in chapter ii.

In verse 16 the word 'meat' (A.V.) is translated 'food' elsewhere (R.S.V.; N.I.V.; J.N.D.; Moffatt). Not only has the wine been snatched from their lips (i. 5) but their food has disappeared from before their eyes! There would be no harvest! Thus they could not keep the Feast of Weeks, elsewhere called Pentecost, which was related to the harvest and which was always a time of great rejoicing (Deut. xv. 9-12). Similarly the Feast of Tabernacles (Deut. xv. 13-15) was a time of immense celebration which took place after the gathering in of the corn and grapes. This must surely have been in Joel's mind!

Joel i. 17. It is hard to see in verse 17 why the seeds should be 'rotten' (A.V.). The R.S.V. and the N.I.V. have 'shrivels' and 'shriveled' respectively and that does seem more appropriate. Seeds may rot in times of excess water but never in a time of drought followed by a locust plague followed by a bush fire (i. 19).

"The seeds are shriveled beneath the clods. The storehouses are in ruins. The granaries have been broken down, for the grain has dried up" (N.I.V.).	"Below the clod crumbles the seed, the granaries are standing bare, barns are in disrepair, for what have we to store up there, now that the grain has withered" (Moffatt).

Joel i. 18. However bad man's plight might be at such a time as this we must never forget that God is the God of all creation and feels for all His creatures. Thus Joel is inspired to draw the people's attention to the animals. Moffatt's "The herds of cattle huddle together" and the N.I.V.'s "The herds mill about" both paint pictures of the behaviour of these poor creatures and this thought is uppermost in Joel's mind when he cries out unto the Lord.

Joel i. 19. Also perhaps, Joel had in mind the words of Asaph in Psa. l. 15:

> "Call upon Me in the day of trouble:
> I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me."

This exhortation was to those who:

> "Offer unto God thanksgiving:
> And pay thy vows unto the Most High" (Psa. l. 14).

Later Joel is to call the people to turn to their God but in i. 19 he is again concerned with the plight of the animals because "fire has devoured the open pastures" (N.I.V.). "Open pastures" is better than "wilderness" (A.V.) for the latter tends to conjure up in our minds poor and somewhat barren land. No! This was the "common pasture" and it had been devoured together with the trees. To see the vegetation ravaged by locusts is bad enough but to see what remains destroyed by fire is totally despairing.

Some commentators think that the fire of verse 19 is another description of the plague. Some locusts are a reddish brown and when the swarm moves over the land it moves just like a fire and what remains is bare and barkless—just as if there had been a fire.

Joel i. 20. Joel again reminds the people of the animals and draws attention to the fact that the rivers of water had dried up. These 'rivers of water', aphikim, were the 'water courses' (Moffatt) constructed from rocks and pipes and channels and used throughout the land. Aphikim occurs some 15 times in the O.T. and is translated by various words such as channels, brooks, rivers. In mentioning the drying up of these courses Joel may have had in mind Psa. cvii. 33, 34:

> "He turneth rivers into a wilderness,
> And the watersprings into dry ground:
> A fruitful land into barrenness,
> For the wickedness of them that dwell therein."

We have mentioned before that if Joel was written just prior to the Babylonian exile then such words as the last line above are easily appreciated. Many kings did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord and the implication of Joel's writing is that the calamity which has come upon them is because of the sinfulness of this people and there is now the need to repent.

Joel ii. 1. This chapter opens with a call to blow the trumpet in Zion which is another name for Jerusalem, the city of David (II Sam. v. 6, 7). It is accompanied with an order to "sound an alarm in My holy mountain". Again note the "My", and the "holy mountain" is another name for this same city (Joel iii. 17; Psa. xlviii. 1-2). Don't misunderstand this word holy, kodesh. It means something or someone separated for or set apart for God. It does not necessarily mean that that which is holy is sinless or perfect. In Exod. iii. 5 Moses stood on "holy ground" and it may well have contained thistles and thorns but it was "holy" because it had been "set apart" for God.

The blowing of the trumpet and the sounding of the alarm are fully described in Numb. x. 1-9 where the context is preparation for war and the conclusion is "ye shall be remembered before the Lord your God, and ye shall be saved from your enemies". The blowing of the trumpet has also to do with convocations (assemblies) and such is described in Lev. xxiii. 23-25. At these, the people came together to "offer an offering made by fire" and are described more fully in Exod. xxix. 18 and its context.

It is perhaps unlikely that the trumpet was blown to gather the people for the "offering made by fire" because of their inability to supply the meal offering and drink offering which often accompanied such. More probably it was sounded to prepare them for the news of the future and its impending battle. They had just been decimated by the enemies drought, plague and fire, what worse enemy could lay ahead of them? Have they much left to fear for? Could anything now cause them greater harm? Well, Joel says:

> "Let all the inhabitants of the land tremble", and he gives the reason for such fear:

> "for the Day of the Lord cometh, it is nigh at hand."

Joel ii. 2-11. Joel now moves into the future. Having painted the past in vivid terms and being able to draw analogies from it he now focuses his attention on events which take place during the "Day of the Lord".

From now on we shall not find these writings so easy to understand and it will be impossible to write with much precision about many of the verses. Viewing fulfilled prophecy in retrospect is relatively easy but to say exactly how unfulfilled prophecy will come true, how all the different prophecies will be drawn together and completed is above the capabilities of us all. Having just reread Joel ii. 2-11 again, the writer wonders what can he say!?!

Moffatt	N.I.V.
[2] "a dark day in a shroud, a day of fog and cloud here comes a huge vast power, blackening the hills; the like of it never has been, the like of it never shall be, for years upon years to come; [3] before them fire devouring, behind them flames a blazing: before them the land lies like an Eden paradise, behind them it is a desolate desert-- for nothing escapes them. [4] They look like horses, they run like war horses.	[2] "a day of darkness and gloom, a day of clouds and blackness Like dawn spreading across the mountains, a large and mighty army comes, such as never was of old nor ever will be in ages to come; [3] Before them fire devours, behind them a flame blazes. before them the land is like the garden of Eden, behind them, a desert waste-- nothing escapes them. [4] They have the appearances of horses; they gallop along like cavalry.

[5] as chariots rattle, they leap on the hill tops, like flames that crackle, consuming the straw, like a vast army in battle array. [6] Hearts are in anguish before them, all faces turn pale. [7] They charge like warriors, they advance like fighters, each on his own track-- no tangling of path-- [8] None pushes his fellow, each follows his own line; they burst through weapons unbroken, [9] they rush on the city, run over the walls, climb into houses and enter the windows like thieves. [10] At their advance the land is quaking, the heavens are shaking, sun and moon are dark, the stars have ceased to shine. [11] and the Eternal thunders in front of His army a mighty host is His, and strong are those who execute His orders. For the Eternal's day is great and awful: who can face it?"	[5] with a noise like that of chariots they leap over the mountain tops, like crackling fire consuming stubble, like a mighty army drawn up for battle. [6] At the sight of them, nations are in anguish: every face turn pale. [7] They charge like warriors: they scale walls like soldiers, They all march in line, not swerving from their course. [8] They do not jostle each other: each marches straight ahead. They plunge through defences without breaking ranks. [9] they rush upon the city, they run along the walls. They climb into the houses; Like thieves they enter through the windows. [10] Before them the earth shakes, the sky trembles, The sun and moon are darkened and the stars no longer shine. [11] The Lord thunders at the head of His army His forces are beyond number, and mighty are those who obey His commands. The Day of the Lord is great, it is dreadful who can endure it?"

Thank goodness for verse 11!!! However we may interpret the details of verses 2-10 it certainly strikes fear into the heart of the reader and one can easily imagine that at this time, during this Day of the Lord "every face turns pale" (ii. 6)! So, without getting bogged down with the detail, what is described here? Joel gives us a picture of the greatest army of all time (ii. 2) and very good (!) at its job (ii. 7-9). This army is also totally destructive (ii. 3) and those attacked by it are pale and in anguish (ii. 6)—but who and what does it attack? Joel ii. 9 tells us it is the city. The city in which Joel has gathered all the inhabitants of the land. Thus Joel ii. 1-10 is describing an attack by a mighty army upon the city of Jerusalem and the Jews who live in it and the surrounding land.

Verse 10 should bring us up with a jolt for it shows that the power of this army is much greater than can be imagined and, as we shall see, behind this army is the great adversary of God, Satan.

Here in Joel ii. 1-10 is perhaps his greatest attempt to wipe the Jew off the face of the earth and so make God break promises He had made to various people. There are many, many passages to which we could now turn but the following two will be sufficient to demonstrate the point.

> "Thus saith the Lord, which gives the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the seas when the waves thereof roar; the Lord of hosts is His name: If those ordinances depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever" (Jer. xxxi. 35, 36).

However, in Gen. xiii. 14-18 Abraham and his seed were promised a land:

> "For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever" (15).

Thus the land and the seed are going to endure for ever. In the light of this we can see what a tremendous challenge Jer. xxxi. 35, 36 is! If the God Who cannot lie (Titus i. 2) and the God Whose gifts and callings are without repentance (Rom. xi. 29) is made to be a liar and a breaker of promises . . . . . then Satan has victory! Thus in attacking the Jew in his land and in his city Satan is attempting to wipe the Jew off the face of the earth—so making God break His promise. It seems also that he and his army may try and affect the sun, moon and stars in an attempt to make God invoke the promise of Jer. xxxi. 35, 36. This is the battle of the ages, God v. Satan! During the Day of the Lord this battle comes to a head and this future period of time is mainly about that great enemy and his defeat.

When dealing with Satan we must not think of horns, tails and 'pitchfork' but should realize that he was, and in some senses still is, the greatest creature of God's creation. He was, so to speak, God's number two—His right hand man, but he wanted more. He was not satisfied. He wanted to be number one but thankfully that will never be and he has also been deposed from his previous position which God now occupies Himself in he person of Christ Jesus our Lord.

We could spend much time in describing Satan but will mention just a few points. He held such titles as the "anointed cherub that covereth" (Ezek. xxviii. 12-19). He is called the "angel of light" and his workers are called "ministers of righteousness" (II Cor. xi. 14, 15) (a title indicating their false façade which sadly deceives men). His main desire appears to be to usurp God's position and steal worship from Him! Does he succeed? Well . . . . . we shall wait and see but although the people of Israel will be no match for his vast army Joel tells us in ii. 11 that there is another army which is mighty and beyond number and at the head of that army is the Lord!

Having got the gist and the flow of this passage we will now have a look at one or two details. The first half of Joel ii. 2 described the Day of the Lord. Amos v. 18-20 expands this:

> ". . . . . the Day of the Lord is darkness, and not light. As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him: or went into the house, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a serpent bit him. Shall not the Day of the Lord be darkness, and not light? even very dark, and no brightness in it?"

The second half of Joel ii. 2 emphasizes the uniqueness of this still future army with which Satan will pursue the Jew. Rev. xii. is perhaps another description of this battle and related events and now we are better able to appreciate the Lord's words in Matt.xxiv.16. Referring to this time He says “Let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains”. When there is war, the mountains are safer than the cities.

The word for weapons in Joel ii. 8 is shelack and some commentators maintain this is a ‘late’ word and thus Joel must have been written after the Babylonian exile. However the word is found in Job xxxiii. 18 and xxxvi. 12 and Job is one of the earliest of O.T. writings. Thus we see no reason to move Joel’s prophecy from the days prior to the Babylonian captivity.

Some commentators hold the view that the army described in Joel ii. 2-10 is the same as that described in Rev. ix. 2-11 but a close reading of both passages shows that this cannot be. Whatever is described in Rev. ix. is commanded to “not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree” (Rev. ix. 4). This directly contradicts Joel ii. 3 and thus what are described in the two passages must be different.

Other commentators claim that the army described in Joel ii. 2-10 is the army of the Lord mentioned in verse 11. Knowing how God is to guard and protect this people and feed them as well (Rev. xii. 6, 14) during this Day of the Lord this view seems unlikely. Also in the light of such passages as Isa. li. 3 and Ezek. xxxvi. 35 where we are told “this land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden”, we cannot see Joel ii. 3 being the work of God’s army. Thus we continually come to the conclusion that in Joel ii. 2-10 we have a vivid and graphic description of a great attacking force that is to come against Jerusalem and its inhabitants. All seems lost for those people. Their case seems a hopeless one but then . . . . . , we are told simply but firmly and clearly (verse 11) that the Lord has His army and His camp is great for He is strong. The Day of the Lord is great and terrible. Who can endure it? Will any of the people of Israel? Will any of the attacking army?

No.4. ii. 12 - 20.
pp. 29 - 38

We now come to the second half of the structure given for Joel i. 14 - iii. 21:

ii. 12, 13a. Call to fast
ii. 13b. Reason
ii. 14. Consequences
ii. 15-17a. Call to blow the trumpet \
ii. 17b. Reason } PRIESTS
ii. 18 - iii. 21. Consequences /

Joel ii. 12. Having painted the picture of the future vast, disciplined and totally destructive army of Satan on the one hand and numberless, great and powerful army of the Lord on the other; having shown the people that whatever will confront them the Lord, Jehovah, is able to protect them—Joel then returns to his time. He focuses his people's mind on their present predicament with the call:

> "Even now, declares the Lord, > return to Me with all your heart, > with fasting and weeping and mourning" (N.I.V.).

Don't wait for such a disaster before you turn to God—do it now! EVEN NOW! With such words, with a jolt, Joel brings the people back to their present time and he wants a 100% commitment from them. "With all your heart" is but an echo of the Mosaic law (Deut. vi. 5 and xi. 13). The thought which is always behind this phrase is the totality of the response. When the Bible uses heart it means man's thinking power, his mind. It does not mean his emotions. Thus Joel is demanding a complete change of mind and an active decision to be totally committed.

Joel ii. 13. The next verse emphasizes this further with "rend your hearts and not your garments". This repentance must be inward and not merely outward. Such external shows mean nothing. Mere outward display, not accompanied by an inward change, was the condition of this people when Isaiah began to prophecy, and what the Lord thought of that situation is adequately described in Isa. i. 2-32.

Joel further encourages repentance by reminding the people of God's character:

> ". . . . . for He is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth Him of the evil" (A.V.).
> ". . . . . for He is gracious and compassionate, slow to anger and abounding in love, and He relents from sending calamity" (N.I.V.).

Descriptions of God as gracious and merciful come from His own words to Moses in Exod. xxxiv. 5, 6. The A.V. "great kindness" is perhaps too meek an expression. "Abounding in love" (N.I.V.), "Rich in love" (Moffatt) are better but the R.S.V. is the strongest, "Abounding in steadfast love". This was the love He had for His people. It was this love which gave and maintained the covenants which culminated in the New Covenant (Jer. xxxi. 31-34). It was this type of love He looked for in the people of Israel but too often He found nothing more than empty ritualistic worship (see again Isa. i. 2-32 and Hosea vi. 6).

The expression "repenteth Him of evil" is perhaps perplexing. How can God do evil in the first place, let alone repent of it? Well the expression is but a figure of speech and when used of God simply means that He will not carry out a threatened judgment either because of intercessory prayer (see Amos vii. 5) or because of a change of heart in the people involved—as possible here. The N.I.V., "relents from sending a calamity", makes this clear.

Joel ii. 14. So the people are called to fast and turn to the Lord because of His grace and mercy and steadfast love. In verse 14 Joel seems to pose a rhetorical question about the possible consequences if such an action was taken. Again the idea of God 'repenting' comes up and here we may learn much from Amos vii. 1-6. Amos received a vision of what God was thinking of doing but his prayers (Amos vii. 2 and 4) persuaded God to 'repent' (vii. 3, 6) and not follow that course of action. Thus Joel implies that God's immediate actions depended upon what the people did. The balance between God's sovereignty and man's free will is indeed difficult and not the subject of these writings. Let it be said that God is working to a predetermined plan and purpose which nothing can thwart but because His is almighty He is able to get from most points in His plan to the next by an infinity of pathways. Man or Satan may try and block some of these but they cannot block them all. Thus Joel states that if these people will turn to God and rend their hearts then He will "turn and have pity" (N.I.V.).

In Jonah iii. 8, 9 the people there "turned from their evil ways" and God did not cause the proposed judgment to fall. Would these people, the ones to whom Joel was sent, would these repent and turn to God? To encourage them even further Joel develops his rhetorical hypothesis with:

> "Who knoweth if He will . . . . . leave a blessing behind Him; even a meal offering and a drink offering . . . . .?" (Joel ii. 14).

The reference to the Lord leaving a blessing would suggest that Joel was thinking that the Lord would miraculously step in and provide a new harvest. "Blessings" and "harvest" would be linked in the minds of these people as indicated in Isa. lxv. 8. If another harvest did come about then the people would again be able to go to the priest with their offerings—including the meal and drink offerings. Thus if the people did repent, turn and rend their hearts the subsequent blessing is not only likened to the restoration of the land from drought, locusts and fire but also to the restoration of the people's access to God through their acceptable worship, part of which was the meal and drink offerings.

Joel ii. 15. Once again, in verse 15, there is the call to blow the trumpet. Thos who know how much this instrument figures in the book of Revelation will not be surprised if it isn't long before Joel is again dealing with future issues but before he does that we should note that Joel is calling everyone. No one is to be left out.

Joel ii. 16. Here Joel seems to become more urgent perhaps realizing the importance of what he is about to say. One can sense this from the short, sharp statements of this verse:

> "Gather the people, > sanctify the congregation, > assemble the elder,

Short, snappy orders. This urgency is however, most exhorted by the call for the bride and the groom. If the trumpet was sounded because of the presence of an 'ordinary' enemy and for a 'normal' war, the groom would not be 'called up' for a year (Deut.xxiv.5). Also the references to the chamber and closet and bridal canopy suggest even 'newly weds'; even those on their wedding day. Such is Joel's urgency for here he has in mind, once again, the Day of the Lord. Matt. xxiv. 15-22 helpfully describes some of the problems of that time.

"Sanctify a fast", verse 15; "sanctify the congregation", verse 16 are both open to misunderstanding. Like the word "holy" the word "sanctify" is often incorrectly understood. In fact these two words are closely connected. Holy is kodesh and to sanctify is kadesh. Holy means set apart for God and to sanctify means to set aside for sacred purposes, that is to consecrate. Exod. xix. 10, 22 is helpful where we can see it means to make ceremonially clean with respect to the law and this, perhaps, is its most common usage in the O.T.

Joel ii. 17. The priests and ministers of the Lord are told to "weep between the porch and the altar". We include a little sketch of the Temple to show where this would be:

- - - I l l u s t r a t i o n - - -
(BE-LI.33).

These priests are told not only to weep but also to pray and they are told what to pray:

> "Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them: wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God?".

"Thine heritage" (A.V.), "Your inheritance" (N.I.V.) is a reference to the people of Israel (Deut. xxxii. 9) and the great concern is that "the heathen should rule over them". In most translations this is replaced by the expression "a byword among the nations" (J.N.D.; N.I.V.; Moffatt; R.S.V.) and a byword is a proverb about a place or a person which is taken as a type usually for something bad.

> "Do not make your inheritance . . . . . a byword among the nations" (N.I.V.).

So there is the call to blow the trumpets and the priests are called to weep and pray because Joel is concerned about the nations mocking Israel and doubting the existence of their God. "Why should the nations sneer Where is their God?" is Moffatt's effective translation.

Joel ii. 18 - iii. 21.

Well, what are to be the consequences of such a sneer? We live in the dispensation of the fullness of God's grace and nowadays many sneer at our gracious God but at this future time, during this Day of the Lord, when Israel's very existence is threatened and God's promises to them are in jeopardy . . . . . what will He do?

> "Then will the Lord be jealous for His land, and pity His people" (Joel ii. 18).

The land which is referred to here is Jerusalem and the surrounding countryside. That land is in much dispute today and will continue to be so right up to and through this Day of the Lord. It is salutary to appreciate that "the heavens are Thine" but so too is the earth (Psa. lxxxix. 11) and if He has decided to give a certain part of it to Abraham's seed (Gen. xv. 18), then none can object and to fulfil that promise the people of Israel must, one day in the future, receive it all and dwell in it.

Sooner or later one would expect the sneering challenge "Where is their God?" to be loudly and clearly answered by the Lord. The consequences of this derisory remark fill the rest of this prophecy, that is Joel ii. 18 - iii. 21, and make up the last member of the structure given at the start of this study. However, to help us deal with what follows we construct a structure for this remaining section:

ii. 18, 19.	Good bestowed; land and people
ii. 20.	Evil removed. Enemy cut off
ii. 21-32.	Good bestowed; land and people
iii. 1-16a.	Evil removed. Enemy cut off
iii. 16b-18.	Good bestowed; land and people
iii. 19.	Evil removed. Enemy cut off
iii. 20, 21.	Good bestowed; land and people

Joel ii. 18. The word jealous, qanna, is better translated zealous and when applied to God it is intended to show that He is not abstract, neither impersonal, nor cold, but that He is a living, personal, loving God Whose love is intense and exclusive in the sense that it does not tolerate rival gods (Exod. xx. 5). It is because He is the living personal God Who is zealous that Prov. iii. 11, 12 records that "whom the Lord loveth, He correcteth". Every father knows that his children need discipline administered in love.

Joel ii. 19. The Lord speaks and promises that there will be a time when He will send the corn and the wine and the people shall be "satisfied". The N.I.V. puts it more strongly saying He will send "enough to satisfy you fully", and Moffatt has "till you have ample". These show that the Lord will indeed be bountiful and how He accomplishes this is explained more fully in Joel ii. 21-27 which we shall consider in our next study.

However as well as restoring the corn, the wine and the oil to such an extent that the people will be more than satisfied the Lord tells them that they shall no longer "be taunted by the pagans" (Moffatt); they shall never again be "an object of scorn to the nations" (N.I.V.). In such passages as Jer. ix. 13-16 and xiii. 22-24 the Lord had promised that if they forsook Him He would scatter them amongst the nations but Ezekiel xi. 17 looks to the same time as Joel ii. 19 when God promised that He would gather them and give them the land of Israel.

Joel ii. 20. How will God set about achieving these promises? First by removing the evil and, in particular, the enemy described in Joel ii. 20. In the A.V. you will note that the word army is in italics. This signifies that in the original the Hebrew word of army was not there but the translators felt a word needed to be supplied for the English to be clear. Certainly it would be a good idea if all translations followed this practice and then everyone could see what the translators have needed to add.

The R.S.V. translates without having to supply an extra word; "I will remove the northerner far from you". Other translations are:

> "The foe from the north I will drive out" (Moffatt).
> "I will remove the northern peril far away from you" (N.E.B.).
> "I will drive the northern army far away from you" (N.I.V.).

Perhaps the most significant translation of this verse is supplied by J. N. Darby:

> "I will remove far from you him that cometh from the north" (J.N.D.).

With reference to 'drive him', 'his face', 'his hinder par', 'his stink', 'his ill savour' and 'he hath done' a singular noun, rather than a collective one, would best fit the context and the translator's need.

Who is this northern army? Who is this northerner? The army has been described in Joel ii. 2-10 but who is its leader? Some claim that Joel ii. 2-10 and verse 20 refer to nothing more than a plague of locusts but not only do such verses as ii. 7 and 8 make this highly unlikely, verse 20 makes it impossible. Locusts do not attack the land of Israel from the north. Thus who is this northerner? Who is he "that cometh from the north?".

Daniel xi. is a difficult chapter and at verse 21 there is a distinct break. The first 20 verses may now be history but "in his estate shall stand up a vile person" (Dan. xi. 21) heralds in the still future "king of the north". The whole of Dan. xi. 21-45 is about the exploits of this king of the north and a future king of the south—with the people of Israel stuck in the middle. It helps in understanding these passages to remember that north and south are with respect to Jerusalem and the land surrounding it. All nations entering Israel 'on foot' must enter either from the north or from the south. Who is this king of the north? Who is this king of the south? That was, and still is, only one nation near Israel to the south and that is Egypt. Thus many agree that the king of the south is Egypt but . . . . . The king of the north? which is that? To answer would require another book! Suffice it to say that there are several nations near to the land of Israel which would have to use the northern route. It is one of these but which one is not clearly revealed in Scripture. A detailed study will narrow down the possibilities but those alive at that day, during that Day of the Lord, will know.

Note that Dan. xi. 36 says that this king of the north "shall do according to his will; and he shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every God, and shall speak marvelous things against the God of gods and shall prosper . . . . .".

In Joel ii. 20 the expression "he hath done great things" can be translated "he magnified himself to do great things". This expression occurs also in Dan. viii. where his same being is termed the 'little horn' but he doesn't stay little for long!

> ". . . . . a little horn which waxed exceeding great, towards the south, and towards the east and towards the pleasant land. And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven, and it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground and stamped upon them. Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of His sanctuary was cast down" (Dan. viii. 9-11, A.V.).

Our studies so far in Joel allow us to appreciate, but not savour, those words in Daniel viii. and xi., but let us be thankful that we stopped in the middle of a sentence in Dan. xi. 36.

> ". . . . . and shall prosper TILL the indignation be accomplished: for that that is determined shall be done."

He shall prosper for a time but then he shall be defeated and Joel reveals the extent of that defeat.

> ". . . . . I will drive him into a land barren and desolate, with his face toward the east sea (that is the Dead Sea) and his hinder parts towards the utmost sea (that is the Mediterranean Sea), and his stink shall come up, and his ill savour shall come up . . . . ." (Joel ii. 20, A.V.).

How will this defeat of the king of the north, this 'little horn' who is backed by Satan (Dan. xi. 38, 39; Rev. xiii. 4) be accomplished? It is interesting to note that just as Satan has many names (e.g. The dragon, the serpent, the devil, etc.) so too has this puppet of his. Paul describes him as:

> "The man of sin, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is worshipped: so that he as God sitteth in the Temple of God, showing himself that he is God" (II Thess. ii. 3, 4, A.V.).

So this army of Joel ii. 2-10 manages to overrun the land of Israel, take Jerusalem and occupy the Temple! Satan manages to acquire, via this being of his, the worship he so badly wants.

> ". . . . . and they worshipped the dragon (Satan) which gave power unto the beast (another name for this king of the north) and they worshipped the beast" (Rev. xiii. 4, A.V.).

The extent of that worship is "all them that dwell on the earth shall worship him" (Rev. xiii. 8) and this is accomplished with the help of another being, "another beast" (Rev. xiii. 11) who is usually termed the "false prophet". His exploits are fully described in Rev. xiii. 11-18 and he "deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by means of those miracles he had power to do" (Rev. xiii. 14).

Will God tolerate this for long? Thankfully not. For at most 3½ years Satan, his beast and his false prophet will enjoy success but then . . . . .:

> "Then shall the wicked be revealed whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of His mouth and shall destroy with the brightness of His coming; even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders" (II Thess. ii. 8, 9, A.V.).

Many passages of Scripture can throw light upon this tremendous event. Zech.xiv.1-11 is well worth reading and states that "then shall the Lord go forth and fight". Matt. xxiv. 1-31 is another valuable passage showing that "except those days be shortened, there should no flesh be saved" (verse 22). In this crazy attempt to wipe out the Jew it appears Satan is prepared to wipe out humanity but God steps in. What a tremendous day that will be when God, in the person of Christ, breaks into the world. Rev. xix. 11-21 tries to describe that day but it is far from easy to understand. We could go on for much longer but perhaps we have thrown enough light on to what is behind Joel ii. 20 and what is behind the expression:

> "I will remove from you him that cometh from the north" (Joel ii. 20, J.N.D.).

No.5. ii. 21 - 32.
pp. 47 - 54

We now come to the central part of Joel's prophecy and will, in this study, deal with the longest section of the ones entitled "Good bestowed; land and people". To help us we set out the following structure:

ii. 21-27. Temporal gifts and signs
- ii. 21a. Words to the soil
- ii. 21b. Reason
- ii. 22a. Words to the beasts
- ii. 22b. Reason
- ii. 23a. Words to the people
- ii. 23b-27. Reason

ii. 28-32. Spiritual gifts and signs
- ii. 28, 29. Pour out My spirit
- ii. 30, 31. Wonders in heaven
- ii. 32. Deliverance

The return of Christ, merely alluded to in Joel ii. 20, heralds in a time when "The Lord shall be King over the earth" (Zech. xiv. 9). However we must remember that His Kingship will not be immediately acknowledged. Initially He is to rule with a rod of iron (Psa. ii. 5) and this is understandable if we appreciate what the world would have just gone through. Rev. xiii. gives us that sad picture, from one point of view, and Matt.xxiv.21 describes that time as "a great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be".

Joel ii. 21. After the great battle, swiftly passed over by Joel in ii. 20, there will be the need for food for the animals and the people. It is not surprising, therefore, that the first words of the Lord are addressed to the soil (adamah) which is told not to fear because He, the Lord, will do great things. What exactly—we are not immediately told.

Joel ii. 22. Then the animals are told not to be afraid for the land will soon recover.

Joel ii. 23. Then the people of Israel, the children of Zion are told to rejoice in the Lord their God. They have just been saved from destruction at the hand of the king of the north and the One Who saved them was the One their forefathers crucified! On that day they shall "look on Him Whom they pierced" and the realization would understandably lead to that great period of mourning (Zech. xii. 9-10) but after that the people would turn their attention to the land and see it desolate. However they are told to rejoice in the Lord their God! How will He cure this land? How will it recover? How will He cause it to flourish during His reign on earth? The answer may lie in Lev. xxvi. 3, 4 where the people of Israel are told:

> "If we walk in My statutes, and keep My commandments and do them: then I will give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit."

When is this "due season" for the land of Israel? Deut. xi. 13, 14 supplies the answer:

> "If you shall hearken diligently unto My commandments . . . . . I will give you the rain of your land in her due season, the first rain and the latter rain that thou mayest gather in thy corn and thy wine and thy oil."

Such passages as these, and also Hosea vi. 3 and Jer. v. 24, may have been in Joel's mind. This first or early rain falls during October and November and enables the ground to be prepared for the seeds. The normal rainy season is December to February but the latter rain is to fall in March and April, bringing on the harvest. Without such latter rain the harvest is poor. At present it is this restoration of this latter rain that the land of Israel so desperately needs if it is to be bountiful. The many irrigation schemes now undertaken in that part of the world will not be necessary when the latter rain is restored by the Lord after His Second Coming. This kingdom which He is to set up on earth is to last for 1,000 years (Rev. xx. 2), during which time Satan is to be bound and will be prevented from interfering with mankind. Some think that this will be a time of perfection and sinlessness but this is not so. Not all of man's sin are due to Satan (Matt. xv. 19) and we have read that at the start of this kingdom the Lord is to rule with a rod of iron and Isa.lxv.20 indicates sin is still present! However it is to be the most blessed time on earth and it is often called the Millennial Kingdom or simply, the Millennium—which is the Latin word for 1,000.

Before moving on—just one trivial point. In Joel ii. 23 "the former rain moderately" might suggest that the Lord is not giving as much as He could do. J.N.D. has "the early rain in due measure". The Lord is to give the due measure, the correct proportion for the abundant fertility of the seeds; not too much—not too little.

Joel ii. 24. Thus all is set up in the kingdom in which "the wolf and the lamb shall feed together and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock" (Isa. lxv. 25). The reference in this verse of Isaiah to the serpent eating dust is an allegorical representation of Satan being bound for the 1,000 year duration of that kingdom (Rev. xx. 2).

Joel ii. 25. In Joel ii. 23-25 the people are told to be glad and they certainly have much to be glad about. Verse 24 states that "the (threshing) floors shall be full of wheat (corn) and the fats (vats) shall overflow with wine and oil". No problem now with the meal and drink offerings! Not only are the offerings restored but verse 25 sees the restoration of everything to Israel. Everything that was lost to the locusts is restored! Everything that was lost to that great army is restored! No wonder they are told to rejoice and be glad.

Some people have a problem with the words "My great army which I sent among you". Did God directly cause this catastrophe? No! But because He is the omnipotent, all powerful One Who can do anything and Who can stop anything, He could have stopped the ravaging locusts and He could have stopped that great army of Joel ii. 2-10 even before it had embarked upon its mission—but He chose not to. Thus because He didn't, because He allowed it; He takes the responsibility and so calls the plague of locusts My "great army". Thus any catastrophe He allows His people to go through is fully noted by Him and He the righteous One, more than compensates them for their suffering with blessings either in this life or after resurrection (Rom. viii. 18 and II.Cor.iv.17 show Paul appreciated this point). Another example of this is found in the opening chapters of Job where Satan wishes to inflict hardship onto Job and his family (Job i. 1-11). The Lord allows Satan to do this (i. 12) but later in Job ii. 3 He takes the responsibility for these sufferings upon His own shoulders. The last chapter of Job then shows how the Lord more than compensated Job for what He permitted Job to undergo.

Joel ii. 26, 27. This section of the structure closes with verses 26 and 27. The people are told that they "will praise the name of the Lord" and that they will know that He is in the midst of them. There are also two references, one in verse 26 and one in verse 27, to:

> "My people shall never be ashamed" (A.V.).
> ". . . . . never again shall My people be put to shame" (N.I.V.).
> ". . . . . never again shall My people be derided" (Moffatt).

This even sees the fulfillment of the promise of Deut. xxviii. 13:

> "And the Lord shall make thee the head and not the tail, and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath; if thou hearken unto the commandments of the Lord thy God."

Many of the promises to the people of Israel are conditional upon the behaviour of that people. Deut. xxviii. 13, above, has "if thou hearken unto My commandment". Similar conditions are found in such passages as Lev. xxvi. 3, 4 and Deut. xi. 13, 14. However there is a time coming when this people will hearken and will obey. It will be after those days when they shall "look on Him Whom they pierced". It shall be in those days after the return of Christ. Jer. xxxi. 33, 34 records that:

> "After those days, saith the Lord, I will put My law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and will be their God, and they shall be My people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, every man his brother, saying Know the Lord, for they shall all know Me, from the least of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity. I will remember their sin no more."

Such is the hope of the house of Israel and the house of Judah (Jer. xxxi. 31). Ezekiel xi. 19, 20 adds further light:

> "I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh: that they may walk in My statutes, and keep My ordinances, and do them, and they shall be My people, and I will be their God."

This comes after the gathering of the people to the land the Lord has given them (Ezek. xi. 17-20) and Ezek. xxxvii. 1-14 shows that the two nations, the northern kingdom of Israel and the southern kingdom of Judah, these two become one. This gathering takes place after the return of the Lord to the earth (Matt. xxiv. 29-31; Zechariah xii. 9-14).

Joel ii. 28, 29. Ezekiel xi. 17-20 covers, only more briefly, what is written about in Joel ii. 21-29 and makes clear one point which has perplexed some people. The passage from Ezekiel makes it clear that "I will put a new spirit within you" (verse 19) comes after the gathering of the people of Israel into the land (verse 17)—and this gathering we have seen comes after the Lord's return.

> "And it shall come to pass afterward that I will pour out My spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your old men shall dream dreams, and your young men shall see visions. And also upon the servants and upon the handmaidens in those days will I pour out My spirit" (Joel ii. 28, 29, A.V.).

From these verses alone we may be left asking "afterward"? After what? After the ravaging of Satan's army in Joel ii. 2-10? After the northern enemy had been destroyed by the Lord's coming (Joel ii. 20)? After the good bestowed upon the land, the animals and the people (Joel ii. 21-27)? Yes! After all these had taken place. After the Lord's return; after the nation had been gathered into the land; after the land had been blessed with the latter rain; after the good bestowed had begun to be enjoyed—then . . . . . then "I will pour out My spirit on all flesh" (Joel ii. 28). "In those days will I pour out my spirit" (Joel ii. 29). Other passages, such as Ezek xxxvii. 1-14 and Zech. xii. 9-14, add details but from all such passages it is clear that the pouring out of the spirit upon these people comes after the Lord's return.

Passages such as Joel ii. 28, 29 and Jer. xxxi. 31-34 etc. bring us to one of the high water marks of the O.T. God had desired that all the people of Israel would be mouthpieces and prophets for Him (Numb. xi. 29). His wish was that they would be a kingdom of Priests (Exod. xix. 26) and as such take the message of His plan and purpose for mankind to all nations of the world. This desire, this wish shall be realized in the Millennium when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea" (Isa. xi. 9). The knowledge He gives to Israel and Judah (Jer. xxxi. 31-34), they pass on to all nations so fulfilling their role as a kingdom of priests.

One point in Joel ii. 28, 29 which we might easily pass over is that the spirit was to be poured out on all flesh. This would be very important to those in the O.T. times. It is difficult for us who have been sealed with the Holy Spirit until the day of redemption

(Eph. i. 13 and iv. 30), and who have been strengthened by His Spirit in the inner man (Eph. iii. 11), and who are filled by the Spirit (Eph. v. 18), to appreciate that the Comforter has not always been available to all people for all the time. The work of the Holy Spirit is another massive subject and those who wish to look further into it may care to read The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit by Stuart Allen, published by the Berean Publishing Trust. However suffice it to say that in those O.T. times the Holy Spirit was generally given to only a few people and then for only a short time. It was to enable them to carry out God's will—whatever that may have been.

During the building of the Temple some craftsmen were endowed with special skills and abilities thus producing extremely beautiful work but . . . . . whatever that work was, when it had been completed, the Holy Spirit left them. Again God could remove His Holy Spirit if the person sinned badly and He did this to Saul, and David was afraid God might do the same to him. Hence David's great plea in Psa. li. 11 "Take not Thy Holy Spirit from me!" Thus the promise that God's Holy Spirit was to be poured out "upon all flesh" was of great significance to those alive in Joel's time.

There is little more to say on these two verses other than to point out that to prophecy does not necessarily mean to foretell the future. To prophesy means to speak things about God—His character, His being, His past activities, His present purpose and, if necessary, His future plans.

Joel ii. 30, 31. Joel ii. 28-31 contain two groups of seven items and it may be profitable to display them:

"It shall come to pass AFTERWARD that I will pour out My spirit upon { all flesh your sons shall prophesy your daughters shall prophesy your old men shall dream dreams your young men shall see visions your servants your handmaidens and I will show wonders { in the heavens in the earth blood fire pillars of smoke sun into darkness
moon into blood
BEFORE the great and terrible day of the Lord."

To miss the "before" in verse 31 can cause much confusion. Some seem to think that the wonders in heaven etc. come after the pouring out of the Spirit but that is to misread Joel. The pouring out of the Spirit comes "afterwards" and although it may not be clear to us exactly how long "after" the Lord's return that pouring out will be, none the less we do know it is "after" that great event. Similarly we may not know for how long "before" the Lord's return this Day of the Lord will last but we do know that that age is brought to a close by His return. Thus Joel ii. 30-32 takes us back in time to before Joel ii. 28, 29; to before the events described in Joel ii. 21-27. It takes us back to those days described in Joel ii. 2-11 and possibly ii. 20.

Reading again Joel ii. 30, 31, and other passages like Matt. xxiv. 29, one wonders how can these things be? How is it possible? How will it happen? What will be the mechanics? We don't know! We are not told! Even if we were told we probably wouldn't (couldn't) understand! Also, as we read such passages again, we may well ask "what exactly is described in Joel ii. 30, 31?". Again we cannot be definite but those people who will be alive at this future time will have no trouble at all in seeing exactly what these words depict. Matt. xxiv. 21 describes those days as a "great tribulation such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be". Joel's prophecy, to such as know it, will be a great comfort to those who are alive during that time.

Joel ii. 32.

> "And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered: for in mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call" (Joel ii. 32, A.V.).

Remembering that we are now back into "the great and terrible Day of the Lord" we ask what is this deliverance which will be provided in Jerusalem and the surrounding country? Deliverance is peletah which is translate elsewhere "escape". Remnant is not the usual word (sheeriyth) but is sariyd, a derivative of sarad which means a "survivor". Thus sariyd means "those left" or "that which remains". Matt. xxiv. 15-21 exhorts those who are alive in Judea to flee into the mountains and Rev. xii. states that there they shall be fed (verses 6 and 14) and protected (verse 16) by God. This is the deliverance of Joel ii. 32.

No.6. iii. 1 - 21.
pp. 61 - 72

In Joel ii. 15-17 there is recorded the call to blow the trumpet and there is the exhortation for the priests to pray to the Lord so that the heathen would not rule over Israel and the nations would not sneer "where is their God?". The rest, Joel ii. 18-iii. 21, deals with the consequences of this action and its structure is:

ii. 18, 19.	Good bestowed; land and people
ii. 20.	Evil removed. Enemy cut off
ii. 21-32.	Good bestowed; land and people
iii. 1-16a.	Evil removed. Enemy cut off
iii. 16b-18.	Good bestowed; land and people
iii. 19.	Evil removed. Enemy cut off
iii. 20, 21.	Good bestowed; land and people

In our last study we dealt with the third member of the above structure; the longest one dealing with the "Good bestowed". Now we turn to the fourth member, the longest dealing with the "evil removed". Its structure is as follows:

iii. 1, 2a.		Gathering
iii. 2b.		Place and Act. "I will judge."
iii. 3-8.		Judgment threatened
iii. 9-12a.		Gathering
iii. 12b.		Place and Act. "I will judge."
iii. 13.		Judgment executed
iii. 14a.		Gathering
iii. 14b.		Place and Act. Valley of judgment.
iii. 15, 16a.		Judgment threatened.

Joel iii. 1. The opening words of chapter iii. "For behold, in those days, and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem", should make us stop and ask which point in time is Joel referring to? Is it those days of Joel ii. 30-32 or some other time? When is the time that "I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem?" Before we can answer that question we need to look at the expression "bring again the captivity". Surprisingly we find it means to "restore the fortunes" or "relieve from trouble". This is clear from Amos ix. 14, 15:

> "And I will bring again the captivity of My people Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them: and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof: they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God."

Jeremiah xxx. 3 is another passage which shows the meaning of this expression to be the gathering and restoring of the people of Israel to their land. Thus these words are translated as "When I restore the fortunes of Judah and Jerusalem" by the N.I.V., Moffatt and R.S.V. The N.E.B. has "when I reverse the fortunes of Judah and Jerusalem". We know this reversal takes place at the Lord's Second Coming.

Joel iii. 2. So, at that time, in those days, about the time of the return of Christ "I will gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat". This is again mentioned in Zechariah xiv. 2 and the ensuing battle has been fully described in Joel ii. 2-10. The second half of Zech.xiv.2 describes explicitly the events of Joel ii. 9.

Again care must be exercised over the expression "I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle" (Zech. xiv. 2). Here God, once more, is taking responsibility for events which He allows. Rev. xix. 19 makes it clear that behind this great battle is the beast, the king of the north, that 'little horn' and behind him is Satan!

The mention of Jehoshaphat has led some to want to date Joel's prophecy in the reign of that king (B.C.819-794) but this is not logical. If a valley bears a king's name we can be certain that the prophecy was not written before that king ruled but it could have been written any time during or after.

The name Jehoshaphat means "Jehovah has judged" and so the valley of Jehoshaphat is a most appropriate place for this battle. Elsewhere this valley is called the Kidron valley and it is situated between the Mount of Olives and Jerusalem. Here judgment is dispensed and to here Christ returns!

> "And His feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east" (Zech. xiv. 4, A.V.).

What an event that will be! How the nations will be amazed! How they will be judged! We may not always understand God's judgments but we would do well to always keep in mind that He is a God of love; He is a righteous God and He is the righteous judge (II Tim. iv. 8).

"I will plead with them for My people" (Joel iii. 2) may be a little misleading. The R.S.V. has "I will enter into judgment with them on account of My people and My heritage Israel". Moffatt, as usual, is more vivid. "I shall assign them their doom for the treatment of Israel, My heritage". Here the promise of Gen. xii. 3 is to be fulfilled. There Abraham was told that:

> "I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee."

Matthew xxv. 31-46 also deals with the judgment of these nations, again showing the future fulfillment of Gen. xii. 3 in verses 40 and 45. How had the nations treated "These My brethren"? One aspect of this treatment is the scattering of the people of Israel. Here again we meet with the problem of one verse saying the nations scattered Israel and another verse with God saying He scattered Israel. The problem is not difficult for God allowed the nations to scatter His people because of their sin and unbelief. He permitted a nation to teach Israel a lesson, to show them that He was their true God but . . . . . how did that nation treat the people of Israel? That is the issue! That is what is to be judged. Even today, some country's treatment of the exiled Jews leaves much to be desired and that country's leaders would do well to read Gen. xii. 3.

Joel iii. 2-3. In verses 2-6, possibly to demonstrate how badly Israel had been treated by the nations, Joel gives historical examples of maltreatment. A more comprehensive list of such treatments is found in Amos i. 1 - ii. 3, a prophecy which had been written many years before Joel.

> "for they have scattered My people throughout their own countries, have taken each a portion of My land and shared out My people by lot, bartered a boy for a whore and sold a girl for wine and drunk it down" (Joel iii. 2, 3. N.E.B.).

The reference to 'parted My land" (A.V. and J.N.D.) or 'divided up My land' (N.I.V.; Moffatt; R.S.V.) is very significant and very applicable to today. The present day partitioning of Palestine may well not meet with God's approval but . . . . .!!!

Joel iii. 4-8. Moving on we come to verse 4 where a severe challenge is issued.

> "Now what have you got against Me, O Tyre and Sidon and all you regions of Philistia? Are you repaying Me for something I have done? If you are paying My back, I will swiftly and speedily return on your heads what you have done. For you took My silver and My gold and carried off My finest treasures to your temples. You sold the people of Judah and Jerusalem to the Greeks, that you might send them far from your homeland.
> See, I am going to rouse them out of the places to which you sold them, and I will return on your own heads what you have done. I will sell your sons and daughters to the people of Judah, and they will sell them to the Sabeans, a nation far away, the Lord has spoken" (Joel iii. 4-8, N.I.V.).

The region termed Palestine in the A.V. of Joel iii. 4 must not be confused with modern day Palestine. Most translations, like the N.I.V. above, have Philistia and this was a coastal strip of land west of Jerusalem. Tyre and Sidon were two sea ports some 100 miles or so north of that region. The following map may be of some use. It shows some of the principal places and divisions of the land which took place during the reigns of the kings of Israel and Judah.

Why Tyre and Sidon and the regions of Philistia should be singled out for mentioning is not obvious. Earlier Amos (i. 10-12) had accused Tyre of not remembering the brotherly covenant, which may be a reference to II Sam. v. 11 and II Kings v. 1 and ix. 11-14. Ezekiel xxviii. 24 had described Sidon as a pricking brier and a grievous thorn but doesn't give clear indication of what he had in mind. It could be that Tyre and Sidon together with parts of Philistia, were the haven of the wealthy slave traders. Amos i. 6-9 mentions Gaza, a port of Philistia, and links it with the slave trade. This would be in agreement with Joel iii. 6.

Some think that the reference to slavery shows that Joel was written after the return to the land from the Babylonian exile because Nehemiah mentions it in v. 5 and xiii. 16. This practice, however, had taken place on many occasions and, as we have read, Amos mentions it in i. 6-9 and that prophecy was written before the exile. The reference to temple robbery would also be more appropriate if placed before the exile. On returning to their homeland the people wanted to build a temple but Ezra and Nehemiah clearly indicate that it was a humble place with none of the splendour of Solomon's temple.

Joel iii. 4 finishes by stating the obvious. If they, or anyone else come to that, attempts to "get their own back" on God then He will swiftly and speedily return on their heads what they have done. In this age of grace in which we live, God is silent and stands back and takes man's abuse but then . . . . . in that day . . . . . in that great and terrible Day of the Lord things will be different. This dispensation will have closed.

After the selling and scattering of the children of Judah and Jerusalem (verse 6) we get the gathering of them (verse 7). In an age of law, where the rule is an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, He would exercise that justice. Thus those who have mistreated the people in this way will be treated likewise and will be sent to a people far off. It is not certain who the Sabeans were but it is certain that the children of Judah will then be free from those who have persecuted and mistreated them.

Before moving on some may care to know that these verses, Joel iii. 4-8 are the only ones which do not appear in poetic form in any of the translations which have been consulted.

Joel iii. 9-13. In Joel iii. 9-12a we have the other side of verse 2. There God said "I will also gather all nations" but from this section it is clear that they gather without Him forcing them. Here in Joel iii. 9-12a, Joel ii. 2-10 is described again and God is calling on the might of the Gentile armies and challenging them to come up and do battle, and attack His people in the valley of Jehoshaphat.

Moffatt	N.I.V.
[9] "Proclaim this to the nations: Let it be war! Rouse up your warriors, Muster your fighting men, march! [10] Hammer your ploughshares into swords, your pruning-hooks into lances. Let your weaklings think them warriors Let your coward think them heroes! [11] Let the nations rouse themselves and march to Judgment valley."	[9] "Proclaim this among the nations: Prepare for war! Rouse the warriors, Let all the fighting men draw near and attack. [10] Beat your ploughshares into swords and your pruning hooks into spears. Let the weakly say, I am strong! [11] Come quickly all you nations from every side, and assemble there."

What a challenge! Come! Come with everything and everybody! Come and attack! Come and attack Jerusalem! But then . . . . . then . . . . . when the people of Israel are on the very point of extinction they will learn that "If God be for us who can be against us?" (Rom. viii. 31).

> "Bring down your warriors, O Lord!
> Let the nations be roused;
> Let them advance into the valley of Jehoshaphat, > for there will I sit > to judge all the nations on every side" (Joel iii. 11, 12, N.I.V.).

"I will sit in judgment there, on all the nations round" is how Moffatt puts those last words. What will be God's judgment on those nations? How will it be executed? That which was threatened in Joel iii. 3-8 is now carried out and the figurative language of verse 13 does not hide the severity of the judgment.

[13] In with the sickle-- the harvest is ripe! Come, tread the winepress, tread it, it is full: the troughs are overflowing with their wickedness" (Moffatt).	[13] Swing the sickle, for the harvest is ripe. Come, trample the grapes, for the winepress is full and the vats overflow-- so great is their wickedness" (N.I.V.)

In Gen. xv. 12-21 Abraham and his seed were promised a land which they could not immediately occupy because the iniquity of those who then possessed it, the Amorites, was "not yet full" (Gen. xv. 16). The Amorites had not become bad enough for God to step in and judge them, but when that Amorite cup was full . . . . . then judgment! The same is true of this future time Joel is describing. When the cup of iniquity of the nations is full and overflowing then God will step in and act. How large that cup is one cannot say but it becomes full during that great and terrible Day of the Lord and Joel iii. 13 implies that it is full and overflowing.

The parable of the tares in the field (Matt. xiii. 24-30) and its interpretation (36-43) may be of some help here. The "reapers are the angels" (39) and the time is "the end of the age" (verse 40, "age" is better than "world"). Thus the 'mighty ones' of Joel iii. 11 are the angels who are told to put in the sickle (Joel iii. 13).

Joel iii. 14-16. In Joel iii. 14-16 there is repetition of much which has gone before. There are multitudes in the valley of decision (judgment) encamped around Jerusalem. Tension is high. The climax of their battle is nigh! The sun, moon and stars are darkened and . . . . .

> "The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter His voice from Jerusalem: and the heavens and the earth shall shake" (Joel iii. 16, A.V.).
>
> "And His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west and there shall be a very great valley; and half the mountain shall remove toward the north and half toward the south" (Zech. xiv. 4, A.V.).

No wonder Joel says "the earth shall shake". No wonder Joel says:

> "The Lord will be the hope (refuge) of His people, and the strength (stronghold) of the children of Israel" (Joel iii. 16, A.V.).

Just try and picture the situation! What will those armies think? There they are . . . . . encamped about Jerusalem . . . . . waiting for the final order to attack and annihilate the inhabitants . . . . . that order comes . . . . . they attack . . . . . they advance . . . . . they gain entry into the city . . . . . into the Temple . . . . . victory is-- then:

> "The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter His voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall quake" (Joel iii. 16, A.V.).

Can we paint an adequate picture of this incredible scene in our poor writings? Alas, no!

Before we consider Joel iii. 17-21 we must devote the next two facing pages to a detailed structure to Joel's Prophecy.

- - - I l l u s t r a t i o n - - -
(BE-LI.70,71).

Joel. iii. 17-21. Having given this longest section on the removal of evil, Joel now returns to the good which is to be bestowed. Verses 17 and 18 describe a peaceful, agricultural paradise and here again is the start of the Millennium. The Lord is dwelling in Zion, Jerusalem, which shall be holy and "never shall aliens invade her again" (Moffatt). This is better than "no strangers pass through her again".

Waters and fountains in Joel iii. 18 are also mentioned in Zech xiv. 8 but the passage which deals with much in detail is Ezek xlvii. 1-12. Verse 19 again mentions the removal of evil with reference to Egypt and Edom, two past enemies of the people of Israel, and to the wrongs which they committed, but Joel's conclusion is . . . . .

> "Judah will be inhabited for ever > and Jerusalem through all generations
> Their blood guilt, which I have not pardoned,
> I will pardon" (Joel iii. 21, N.I.V.).
>
> "They shall all know, from the least of them unto > the greatest of them, saith the Lord.
> For I will forgive their iniquity, > and I will remember their sin no more" (Jer. xxxi. 34, A.V.).

Thus the millennial kingdom is set up. Thus:

> "The Lord dwelleth in Zion" (Joel iii. 21).

JEHOVAIT SHAMMAH

No.7. Joel and the Day of Pentecost.
pp. 101 - 112

We now turn to one of the most well known passages of the N.T., Acts ii. 1-21. It was on the day of the Jewish feast of Pentecost that the Holy Spirit descended upon those present and they spoke "with other tongues . . . . . the wonderful works of God" (verses 4 and 11). There can be little doubt that this is one of the most misunderstood and misapplied passages of Scripture and ignorance of the original setting from which Peter quoted has been a contributory factor. Thus it was necessary for us to have first studied the whole of the book of Joel before turning our attention to Peter's speech on that great day. However, before a detailed consideration it may be an idea to look at one or two points about prophecy in general.

In Isa. lxi. 1-3 we read:

> "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; He hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn; to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that He might be glorified."

If we put ourselves back into the O.T. times and blot out our knowledge of the N.T. then trying to see how this prophecy would be fulfilled would cause us problems. We might rejoice that "the day of vengeance" is shorter than the "acceptable year" but . . . . . well how can both come true at the same time? How can all that which is contained in these verses come about at one time?

Fortunately we have a completed Bible and our problem is solved in Luke iv. 16-21. There the Lord Jesus Christ opened the book of the prophet Isaiah and started to read at the beginning of chapter lxi. He read as far as . . . . .:

> ". . . . . to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. And He closed the book . . . . . and He began to say unto them, This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears" (Luke iv. 19-21, A.V.).

The first verse and a half of Isa. lxi. were fulfilled at our Lord's first coming. The second half of verse 2, "the day of vengeance" will be fulfilled at His Second Coming and much of what we have studied in Joel relates to that time. Isa. lxi. 1-3 is an example of a "two-half" prophecy. In such prophecies one half is fulfilled at one time and the other half is fulfilled at a different time. Is Joel ii. 28-32 a "two-half" prophecy? Some would maintain that Joel ii. 28, 29 was fulfilled during the Acts period and that verses 30-32 were not. They await fulfillment in the days of the Second Coming of Christ. Is this view correct?

* * * * * * *

A different type of prophecy is found in Isa. vii. 10-16 where King Ahaz is told:

> ". . . . . the Lord Himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel. Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil, and choose the good. For before the child shall know to refuse the evil, and choose the good, the land that thou abhorrest shall be forsaken of both her kings."

The word translated virgin in Isa. vii. 14 is almah and can be translated maiden or young woman. Behtulah is the Hebrew for virgin. In Isa. vii. 14, however, we have ha-almah, the maiden, that is some specific maiden known to Ahaz, and The Companion Bible suggests:

> "Behold the maiden is pregnant and beareth a son . . . . ."

Ahaz is told that before this son shall know right and wrong the kingdom of Judah shall be relieved of the two kings who oppress it (Isa. vii. 1, 16).

This event, however does not exhaust this prophecy which is taken up by the Holy Spirit in Matt. i. 23 and used of the miraculous birth of our Lord Jesus Christ. There the Greek word parthenos does mean virgin and the Holy Spirit can take Isa. vii. and use it in this way because every bethulah is an almah. Thus we have here an example of a 'double' fulfillment of a prophecy. In such the first may be a partial fulfillment and the second total or the first may be total and the second a repeat. Is Joel ii. 28, 29 an example of a prophecy which is to have a "double" fulfillment? Some would maintain that the Acts period was only a partial fulfillment and that there is to be a future total fulfillment. Is that view correct?

* * * * * * *

A very common view is that held by many Pentecostalists and Charismatics who, like Mrs. McPherson, claim that these movements are the fulfillments of the latter rain of Joel's prophecy. The assertion here is that Joel's prophecy of ii. 28, 29 has a double fulfillment because of the mention of former rain and latter rain in Joel ii. 23. The former rain was the fulfillment during the Acts period and the latter rain is the phenomena now seen in many parts of the world. Is this a valid interpretation of Joel.ii.23, 28 and 29?

From our study of Joel we have seen that the verse which deals with the former and latter rain comes in the section dealing with temporal blessings bestowed upon the land, the animals and the people, Joel ii. 21-27. The setting is very agricultural and, as we have seen, the former rain and the latter rain are just that! It is exactly what it says it is! It is the literal rain. The former rain falls in October and November and the latter rain is to fall in March and April. Is it right to take part of a verse out of its setting and context and "spiritualize" it as Mrs. McPherson and company have done? Is this rightly dividing the Word of Truth? Is this correctly handling the Word of God? We think not but . . . . .

Let us assume that we are wrong on this point and that such an 'interpretation' of the former rain and latter rain is valid. In that case we ask where is this latter rain to fall? The answer must be in the same place as the former rain—Jerusalem and the surrounding countryside. The whole idea of former and latter rain is applicable to that land only and we cannot escape that fact. If there were to be such a latter rain fulfillment of Joel.ii.28,29 it would take place in Palestine and we have to face this fact. Some will wiggle. Some will wrest the Scriptures (II Pet. iii. 16) and make this latter rain apply to anywhere in the world but this just cannot be. However . . . . .

Let us assume that we can allow this 'interpretation' of latter and allow it to fall anywhere and everywhere in the world. In that case we would ask when is this latter rain to fall? This question shows that views such as Mrs. McPherson's are at great odds with the Bible. From our study of Joel ii. 21-27 we have seen that all the events described there, including the restoration of the literal latter rain, take place after the northerner of Joel ii. 20 has been destroyed and that takes place on the return of Christ.

Thus the latter rain is literal rain which is to fall on the land of Palestine after the return of Christ. It is not a second outpouring of the Spirit anywhere in the world sometime before His Second Coming.

Returning to our deliberations as to whether or not Joel's prophecy is a "two-half" prophecy or one subject to a "double" fulfillment; to help us in our search we should consult other parts of the Scripture. Joel ii. 30-31 deals with "wonders in heaven and in the earth, blood, fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness and the moon into blood". Thus if we consider other parts of the Scripture which contain references to these events and search the context we will be able to see if there is any mention of the outpouring of the Spirit or of miracles similar to those of the Acts period. Initially we shall look to see if such an outpouring or miracles take place before the Lord's return. Mrs. McPherson's views may be justified from other Scriptures.

Matthew xxiv. 29, 30 has wonders and signs in heaven and verse 7 has signs on the earth (famine, pestilence, earthquakes). However we search the whole chapter in vain looking for any outpouring of the Spirit and there is no mention of any miracles from God. We do note the many references to 'deceit' or 'deceive' (verses 4, 5, 11 and 24). There are also references to false prophets and false Christs (verses 11 and 24) and these shall deceive by using "great signs and wonders". Thus the only miracles mentioned here prior to our Lord's return are miracles of deceit!

Mark xiii. is very similar. Again there are signs in heaven and earth, false Christs and false prophets showing "signs and wonders to seduce" (Mark xiii. 22).

Luke xxi. is different. There are signs in heaven (verses 25 and 27) and on the earth (verse 11) but there is no mention of miracles from God.

What about Revelation? This is the book that has many references to the phenomena we are considering. Rev. vi. 12, 13 has signs in heaven and earth but we again search the context in vain for any outpouring of the Spirit or for any Acts period miracle or for any evidential miracle from God. The same is true of Rev. viii. 5, 7-11, also xi. 13, 19, also xvi. 17-21. In fact in all passages which describe signs in heaven and earth there is no mention of the outpouring of the Spirit nor of miracles from God in the days prior to the return of Christ. It is only Joel ii. 28-32 which links them but the outpouring of the Spirit is "afterwards", that is after the return of Christ, and the signs in heaven are "before the great and terrible Day of the Lord" that is before the return of Christ.

If we search Revelation what do we find?

> "And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and he deceiveth them that dwell on the earth in the sight of men, and he deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had the power to do . . . . ." (Rev. xiii. 11-14, A.V.).

Here we see "deadly wound was healed"—the ability to raise the dead! "Fire from heaven"—the miracle God used with Elijah to prove His existence. Here we see Satan's beast, the false prophet, copying God. Here Satan is pretending to be God and is thus causing deceit. Unless those miracles done in Satan's power are replicas of God's miracles recorded in Scripture they will not have the desired effect. They will not deceive anyone. They must be copies for II Thess. ii. 9, 10 describes them as "signs and lying wonders, and in all deceivableness". These are strong words and people who dabble in miracles in days prior to Christ's return, and that includes these days in which we live, be warned . . . . . Matt. vii. 21-23 is salutary!

Some may say that the passages from Revelation, Thessalonians and Matthew refer to a time after the church which is the Body of Christ has been taken to Glory. This is true but Paul's epistles to Timothy relate directly to the Body of Christ and this present dispensation. In I Tim. iv. 1-3 we read of 'seducing spirits' and 'doctrines of devils' and II Tim. iii. 8 states that just "as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these resist the truth".

Jannes and Jambres were the magicians of Pharaoh in Exod. vii. 11. How did they withstand Moses? They copied the miracles that Moses performed. Thus we cannot escape the fact that those who dabble with miracles in this age of full grace open themselves to the deceit of Satan. Some may ask—are there no evidential miracles of God promised for those days prior to Christ's return? There are two!

Revelation xi. 3-12 records that God is to miraculously support the two witnesses He shall have in Jerusalem for the 3½ years prior to His return. Rev. xii. 6, 14, and 16 records that God is to feed and protect the people of Israel in the wilderness during the same period. There are not other miracles recorded which relate to these times and note that these two miracles are centred at Jerusalem and the surrounding countryside. Thus we come to the conclusion that there is no second fulfillment of Joel's prophecy—neither in this dispensation nor in the days just prior to the Lord's return. Such a position cannot be justified from Scripture.

Some may now be thinking that Joel's prophecy was thus totally fulfilled in the Acts period but that cannot be. Joel ii. 28 has "it shall come to pass afterward that I will pour out My Spirit upon all flesh". Certainly this was not the case in the Acts. Only some enjoyed the benefits of the Spirit and the "afterwards" shows us that it is to be fulfilled after many events—the most significant of which is the return of Christ. If this is the case we may well ask why did Peter quote from Joel on the day of Pentecost? How is Pentecost related to Joel's prophecy? What really happened on that day? First let us look at the events leading up to Acts ii.

The Lord Jesus Christ, Emmanuel, had been born. His death was for the world but His life was kept, in the main, to the people of Israel. He was their Prophet, Priest and King but . . . . . they crucified Him. Scripture put the responsibility upon the shoulders of the Jewish people (Matt. xxvii. 24, 25; Acts v. 21; x. 39). Was that the end of that nation? Was that the end of their hopes for their kingdom? No! The ever gracious One even as He was suffering prayed "Father forgive them for they know not what they do" (Luke xxiii. 34). That was not a prayer for the Romans for they were not held responsible. That was a prayer for His earthly people and that prayer was obviously answered. They were not cut off at the cross. After His resurrection He taught them all things from the Scripture (Luke xxiv. 44-48) and their first question was . . . . .

> "Wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts i. 6).

The Acts period, the book of the Acts and the epistle written during it are all about the possible restoration of the kingdom to Israel and to deny this and to imply that the disciples "got it wrong" or "misunderstood" is a gross insult to their Teacher. Would Israel be restore? They wanted to know but He declined to answer. From Acts iii. 19-21 we see that the return of Christ and thus the restoration, was dependent upon the repentance of the people of Israel. This call to repent was a feature of Joel (ii. 12, 13) and his prophecy was about the setting up of this kingdom. No doubt in His post resurrection teaching the Lord had given Peter and company perfect understanding of this prophecy. Would this nation now respond? Would they repent? Would Christ return? God in all His graciousness, having forgiven them the iniquity of crucifying Christ, leaned over backwards in an attempt to put things clearly before this people. Heb. vi. 5 describes them as those:

> "who have tasted the goodness of the Word of God and the powers of the coming age" (N.I.V.).

To those Acts period Jews, God had given a taste of "the powers of the coming age". What is the "coming age" to which Hebrews refers? It can only be the Millennium and the powers must refer to the outpouring of the Spirit and the ensuing miracles. Thus God was allowing the Jews of the Acts period a foretaste of the great blessings of the Millennium. He was imploring them, so to speak, to repent and accept Christ as their Messiah. Isaiah had shown that this Millennial kingdom age would be a time of great blessing "He who dies at a hundred will be thought a mere child" (Isa. lxv. 20 N.I.V.). Thus raising of the dead during the Acts period would have had special significance for the Jew. Those raised, if the nation repented, would see the return of Christ and live a much lengthened life in the Millennium but note the last part of Isa. lxv. 20:

> "But the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed."

Sadly Ananias and Sapphira had a foretaste of that in Acts v. 1-11 so without going into greater detail we can appreciate that for the Jew the Acts period was a foretaste of the miracles or powers of the age which was to come, the Millennium. Thus the Acts period is not a fulfillment of Joel's prophecy but a foretaste of it.

In the N.T., when an O.T. prophecy is fulfilled, it is common to read words such as "as it is written . . . . ." or "Then it was fulfilled . . . . ." but no such words are found in Acts ii. Thus Peter is not claiming that the events on the day of Pentecost are a fulfillment of Joel ii. 28, 29. This is not surprising. The main feature of the day of Pentecost was the gift of tongues but this is not mentioned in Joel ii. 28, 29.

The gift of tongues, according to I Cor. xiv. 21-22, was "a sign not to them that believe, but to them that believe not". Verse 21 is a reference back to Isa. xxviii. 11, 12; xxxiii. 19 and Deut. xxviii. 49. Thus to the Jews, the use of the tongues was a sign to them of their unbelief. In O.T. times it was unbelief in Jehovah, God, but in the Acts period it was unbelief in Jehovah manifest in the flesh, Emmanuel. Thus as well as leaning over backwards with a foretaste of the foretold Millennial miracles, God adds the miracle of tongues to indicate to the Jew their unbelief. Did this produce the desire effect?

Sadly the Jews did not respond and the Gentiles were allowed, in the Acts period, to share in the miracles and blessings and hope of Israel. According to Rom. xi. they were like a wild olive grafted into a cultivated one (verse 17), in an attempt to provoke Israel to emulation (which is better translation than jealousy, verse 11). Would the olive tree of Israel now bear fruit? They had had a foretaste of the Millennial miracles; they had the special gift of tongues to point out their unbelief; they had the stimulus of the wild olive; would Israel now repent of the unbelief and rejection of Christ?

Sadly—no! In Acts xxviii. 17 Paul debated with the Jewish leaders but they failed to reach agreement. Verses 26 and 27 indicate that the nation of Israel was then laid on one side by God and He, in verse 28, then turned to the Gentile who was now to be blessed independently of the Jew. God then revealed His great plan for the heavenly places so magnificently described in the first three chapters of Ephesians.

It appears that the evidential miracles, so closely linked with the people of Israel and the earthly kingdom, ceased at this point. In the books written after the end of Acts.xxviii. there is no mention of them (see Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Philemon, Titus, I & II Timothy). Certainly Phil. ii. 26, 27; I Tim. v. 23; II Tim. iv. 20 show that the days of instant, complete, universal healing were over. The evidential miracles from God ceased at the end of the Acts period and will not return until after the return of the Lord Jesus Christ. Those which do appear at the close of this dispensation and in those years just prior to His Second Coming will be replicas of God's miracles but the power behind them is Satan's.

* * * * * * *

Drawing all the ends together we can make the following deductions:

(1) Joel ii. 28-32 is not a "two-half" prophecy. Verses 28 and 29 were not totally and completely fulfilled in the Acts period.

During that time the Spirit was not poured out upon all Israel but only upon some.

Also the context of the whole of Joel ii. 21-29 is after the northerner had been destroyed (verse 20) which takes place at the return of Christ. Thus total fulfillment could not have taken place in the Acts period. However if the people of Israel had repented, then the Lord would have returned (Acts iii. 19-21) the kingdom would have been set up and the outpouring of the Spirit upon all flesh would have taken place. Pentecost could be described as a bud which could have blossomed into a full bloom—but sadly it didn't.

(2) To say whether or not Joel ii. 28, 29 is a prophecy that is subject to a "double" fulfillment may involve one in the splitting of hairs.

Nowhere does Peter claim the Acts period or the day of Pentecost to be such. Nowhere is it said "then it was fulfilled . . . . ." or "as it is written . . . . .". Instead Peter says "this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel". However Heb. vi. 5 indicates that the Jews of the Acts period were given a foretaste of the Millennial miracles spoken of by Joel, and the gift of tongues, not mentioned by Joel, was added for good measure. Thus Pentecost and the Acts period is complicated but we would say that a foretaste, however small, is a partial fulfillment and that Joel ii. 28, 29 waits for its total fulfillment not in the days in which we live but in the days following the return of our Lord Jesus Christ.

We could say much more but conclude by reproducing Appendix 183 of The Companion Bible.

1. "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel." There is nothing in the words to tell us what is "this" and what is "that". The word "this" is emphatic and the word "But", with which Peter's argument begins, sets what follows in contrast. This shows that the quotation was used to rebut the charge of drunkenness (verse 13).

So far from these signs and wonders being a proof that "these men" were drunken, "this", said the apostle is "that" (same kind of thing) which Joel prophesied would take place "in the last days". Peter does not say these were the last days, but this (that follows) is what Joel says of those days. He does not say "then was fulfilled", nor "as it is written", but merely calls attention to what the prophet said of similar scenes yet future.

Therefore to understand what Peter really meant by "this is that", we must turn to the prophecy of Joel. And in order to understand that prophecy, we must see exactly what it is about.

Is it about the Christian Dispensation? or
The Dispensation of judgment which is to follow it? or Is it about the Jew and the Gentile? or
Is it about the church of God?

2. Structure on page 1224 (in The Companion Bible) gives the scope of Joel as a whole, while that on page 1227 (in The Companion Bible) gives that of the last member B (page 1224 in The Companion Bible) in which occur the "signs" to which Peter points in connection with "this is that". From this it will be seen that the prophecy of Joel links up with the last clause of the "song of Moses" in Deut. xxxii. 43 (see Rev. xv. 3), which ends:

"And (He) will be merciful unto His Land and to His People."

So Joel ii. 18 begins:

"Then will Jehovah be jealous for His Land, and pity His People."

“THIS”, therefore is "THAT". It is the subject-matter and remote context of Acts.ii.16. It concerns Jehovah's Land and Jehovah's People, and has consequently nothing to do with the church of this Dispensation. Peter calls "the house of Israel" (verse 36) to the very repentance spoken of in the call to repentance of Joel (i. 14 - ii. 17; see A, Structure, page 1224 in The Companion Bible).

3. But the key to the correct understanding of Peter's quotation lies in the word "afterward" of Joel ii. 28. The question is, after what? This we can learn only from Joel himself. Peter does not explain it, nor can we understand it from Peter's words alone.

The Structure (page 1227 in The Companion Bible) shows us that the whole subject of ii. 18 - iii. 21 is,—evil removed from the Land and the People, and blessing bestowed on both; and these are set forth alternately. In ii. 28, 29 we have spiritual blessings connected with the temporal of the previous verses, introduced thus:

"And it shall come to pass AFTERWARD, that I will pour out My spirit upon all flesh," etc.

After what? The answer is AFTER the temporal blessings of verses 23-27. It is important to note that the temporal precede the spiritual blessings. The holy spirit was not poured out on all flesh at Pentecost: only on some of those present. None of the great signs in the heavens and on the earth had been shown. No deliverance took place in Jerusalem: both Land and People were still under the Roman yoke.

4. Thus, from a careful study of the two passages, it will be seen that there is a wide divergence between the statements of apostle and prophet on the one hand, and the general belief of Christendom, which the majority hold so tenaciously, not to say acrimoniously, that "the church" was formed at Pentecost (see Appendix 181 and Appendix 186), on the other.

(a) There can be no mistake about the meaning of Joel's word "afterward". It is not the simple Hebrew word 'ahar = after (compare Gen, v. 4, etc.), but the compound 'aharey-ken = after that (as Gen. vi. 4, etc.).
(b) It is therefore certain that the word "this" in Acts ii. 16 refers to what follows, and not to what precedes; to the future events predicted by Joel, and not to those then taking place in Jerusalem.
(c) As Joel speaks of no gift of tongues, "this" cannot refer to these Pentecostal tongues, the outstanding cause of all the wonder and excitement.
(d) None of the things detailed in verses 17, 19 came to pass. "This" therefore could not be the fulfillment of Joel's prediction, as the "pouring out" was only on the apostles and those associated with them.

5. To sum up: As we have seen, there is in Acts ii. 16 no fulfillment of Joel's prophecy either expressed or implied, and Peter's argument narrows down to this, videlicet (viz.), that a charge of drunkenness can no more be sustained against "these" than it can be against those in the yet future scenes spoken of by Joel, when the wondrous spiritual blessings will be poured out on all flesh AFTER THAT, that is to say, after all the temporal blessings spoken of have been bestowed upon Israel's Land and Israel's People.

No.8. The Day of the Lord is at hand.
pp. 126 - 131

One of the most difficult problems in Joel's prophecy is found in chapter i. 15:

> "Alas for the day! for the Day of the Lord is at hand and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come."

Well over 2,000 years have passed and the Day of the Lord still has not come! This nearness is again mentioned in Joel ii. 1:

> "for the Day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand."

This problem will not go away. Joel iii. 14:

> "for the Day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision."

How could Joel write that the Day of the Lord 'is at hand', 'is nigh at hand', 'is near'? This is indeed a problem and one which some expositors fail to face. We may not be able to fully understand what is meant here but prayerfully and in all humility we should consider it.

First this is not a problem of translation.

	Joel i. 15	Joel ii. 1	Joel iii. 14
A.V.	is at hand	is nigh at hand	is near
R.V.	is at hand	is nigh at hand	is near
R.S.V.	is near	is near	is near
J.N.D.	is at hand	is at hand	is at hand
Moffatt	is near	near it is	is near
N.E.B.	is near	is upon us	is near
N.I.V.	is near	is close at hand	is near

"Is close at hand"! "Is upon us"! We search the book of Joel in vain for an answer but I Cor. ii. 13 exhorts us to compare "spiritual with spiritual" and if we can find the same or similar expression in Scripture and see how that is used we can get a clue to help solve the problem in Joel.

Matthew iii. opens with John the Baptist preaching . . . . .:

> "Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. iii. 2).

He is not alone in this call. In Matt. iv. 17 the Lord Jesus Christ says:

> "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

Mark i. 14, 15 has similar words and if we understand that the kingdom referred to and the repentance required are the same as those referred to and required by the O.T. prophets then we can appreciate that we are again dealing with the repentance of Israel and the restoration of their kingdom by their Messiah from heaven. But although this kingdom was at hand, it wasn't set up! Instead of solving the problem of Joel we seem to have added to it. Let's add more!

In Matt. xvi. 28 the Lord says:

> "Verily I say unto thee, there be some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in His kingdom."

This is repeated in Mark ix. 1 and Luke ix. 27. Some claim that this was fulfilled at the transfiguration which took place soon after (Matt. xvii. 1-9), but that does not seem to be correct especially as Mark ix. 1 has:

> "shall not taste of death till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power."

Matthew xxiv. 34 and Luke xxi. 32 have:

> "Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away till all these things be fulfilled."

But that generation did pass away! There are explanations which state that these verses mean that all the events described in the context will take place within the lifetime of some future generation but that is not totally satisfying.

Matthew x. 23 provides a worse problem:

> "Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of man be come."

What? The Second Coming of Christ with power and great glory before they had gone over the cities of Israel? Well . . . . . it never happened! All these and more, are problem passages and the solution to the difficulty is found in the notes of The Companion Bible. We quote some of them:

Matt. xvi. 28	till = the particle an and the subjunctive mood gives this a hypothetical force.
Mark ix. 1	till = Greek eos an. The particle an makes this clause conditional: the condition being the repentance of the nation of Israel at the call of Peter. Acts iii. 19-26. cp. xxviii. 25, 26.
Matt. xxiv. 34	till = here with the Greek an and the subjunctive mood, marking the uncertainty which was conditional on the repentance of the nation.
Luke xxi. 32	till all be fulfilled = till (Greek eos an) all may possibly come to pass (not the same word as fulfilled in verse 24). Had the nation repented at Peter's call in Acts ii. 38; iii. 19-26 "all that the prophets had spoken" would have come to pass.
Matt. x. 23	till = see the four x. 23; xvi. 28; xxiii. 39; xxiv. 34.

This makes interesting and enlightening reading and there is further support for the above. On pages 143 an 144 of volume XX of The Berean Expositor Mr. C. H. Welch writes on these verses:

> "There is in each of these verses an untranslatable (untranslated) particle an, the effect of which is to make the sentence contingent upon something expressed or implied. We can gather from other scriptures, e.g., Acts iii. 19-21, that the Second Coming of the Lord would not take place while Israel remained unrepentant.
>
> Matthew xvi. 27, 28 refers to the same coming and kingdom. That coming would takes place either within the lifetime of some who heard the words, or, failing that, would possibly be deferred. This is implied by the particle "an", "if". Israel did not repent; though granted nearly forty years in which to fulfil the implication of the "if". They failed to do so, and when the longsuffering of God reached this limit, they were set aside, and the possibility of the Lord's return during the lifetime of any of His early disciples ceased to be practical truth."

Thus we have solved one great problem and so doing have solved another. There are some who think that the disciples were wrong to expect the return of the Lord Jesus Christ in their lifetime. These think that the apostle misunderstood but the Lord Himself taught them! Those who hold such a view must be wrong and they are because they fail to believe that when Peter said:

he meant:

> "Repent . . . . . and He shall send Jesus Christ."

This is recorded in Acts iii. 19-21 and Peter, whilst delivering that speech, was full of the Holy Spirit. He, Peter, could not have been wrong. This whole section of Acts.iii.19-26 is the foundation of the Acts period and to fail to grasp it will cause many problems in other passages of Scripture. For example:

> "The night is far spent, the day is at hand" (Rom. xiii. 12).
> "The time is short" (I Cor. vii. 29).
> "for yet a little while, and He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry" (Heb. x. 37).
> "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" (James v. 8).
> "the end of all things is at hand" (I Pet. iv. 7).
> "It is the last time" (I John ii. 18).

And there are others. These all point to the fact that the return of the Lord Jesus Christ was possible then and there. All that was required was for Israel to repent but that was not forthcoming. The nations was laid aside by God at Acts xxviii. 25-28 and the epistles written after that time (Eph., Phil., Col., Philemon, Titus, I & II Tim.) makes no mention of His parousia, His coming. The hope of the people of Israel was, and still is, His parousia—His coming to the Mount of Olives—but the church, which is the Body of Christ, looks for His manifestation, His appearing in glory (Col. iii. 4; Titus ii. 13).

Thus the Acts period epistles state that "The day is at hand", "It is the last time", "the end of all is at hand".

This may be why Peter changed:

> "And it shall come to pass afterward that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh . . ." (Joel ii. 28), to:

> "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out My Spirit upon all flesh . . . . ." (Acts ii. 17).

This indicates another difference between Joel's prophecy and Peter's use of it on the day of Pentecost and shows again that he did not view the events of that time as the fulfillment of Joel ii. 28,29. For Peter, and for those alive during the Acts period, these could so easily have been the last days—if only that nation had accepted Christ, they would have been. The Acts period epistles say "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" and what draws near can withdraw.

This is also the case with the pronouncement of John the Baptist and the Lord Jesus Christ in Matt. iii. 1 and iv. 17 where the words "is at hand" are translated by the Englishman's Greek New Testament "has drawn near". Again what draws near can withdraw and this happened. They rejected Christ, they did not repent and the kingdom did not come in (Matt. xxi. 42-44).

Returning to Joel, we see there a call to repent and turn to the Lord (Joel ii. 12, 13). Also in Joel we are told that the Day of the Lord was at hand, it had drawn near. It seems that always these two have been related. Did the people respond to Joel's message? Did they repent and turn to the Lord? If Joel was written during the last days of the kings of Judah then we know that they did not. They continued in their wicked ways and remained in their apostasy. The nation was exiled to Babylon and the Day of the Lord, which had drawn near, ... withdrew. What would have happened if that people had repented . . . . . well, using the expression correctly and reverently, only God knows!

Dear Fellow-members,

When Paul wrote the second letter to the Corinthian church, he stressed above all things the glory of Christ, which Satan does his best to veil. To this end he blinds the minds of unbelievers and keeps them occupied with an hundred and one things of little importance (II Cor. iv. 3, 4). But as believers we have "The light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ". No wonder Paul proceeds to call it "treasure" (verse 7) and this treasure is at the heart of the revelation of the Mystery (Ephesians and Colossians).

However, to balance this, we are reminded that we have this treasure "in earthen vessels", and pottery is notoriously frail and brittle. This represents ourselves and gives God's purpose in so working, in order that "the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of ourselves".

Our witness is continuing its work and has been sustained by the Lord without elaborate organization. We give all the glory to Him, at the same time, thanking our fellow workers for all their loyal support.

Meditations in the Word

"All Our Righteousness are as filthy rags" (Isa. lxiv. 6).

p. 160

Here we have the contrasted confession of every sinner in whose heart the Lord begins His work. The word righteousness is in the plural, meaning in Hebrew, all the very best and holiest of thoughts and deeds. The words "filthy rags" more literally, are "fading coverings". Look further on, "we all do fade as a leaf" not the same word, but a similar meaning.

The allusion to Gen. iii. seems very clear. There, the guilty man and woman sought to make a covering of fig leaves, fading coverings, but the Lord made them coats of skin, a coat which involved the sacrifice of the animal first. This is the lesson, our good works will not stand, they fade; we ourselves are similar, we fade, unless we are covered with the robe of righteousness (Isa. liii. 10, 11), we shall perish. Isa. lxiv. is primarily the heart confession of the elect remnant of Israel, who are beginning to realize their sin and that they are without hope; to such the Lord Jesus comes when He comes again, they look on Him Whom they pierced and mourn for Him (Zech. xii. 10) and are converted. Rom. x. 1-3 shows their boast; Rom. x. 4 shows their righteousness.

On The Threshold

"Nevertheless afterwards, it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of Righteousness" (Heb. xii. 11).

p. 200

This chapter continues on from chapter xi. where we have the list of those examples who walked by faith. Sonship here in this world of sin, and in our present condition, entails not only that our Heavenly Father supplies our need, but that also we are corrected and checked, else we shall become spiritually unruly and undisciplined. No chastisement seems pleasant here and now, but we are directed to see beyond, to the fruit, Righteousness and Peace, these are their practical outcome. "The wicked are not in trouble as other men are" yet when we, like Asaph, "go into the sanctuary" we can understand their end. How contrasted with the end of the children of God it is, instead of Peace and Righteousness there is nothing but darkness and death. May we count it a mark of love when we feel the Father's hand.

The Basics of the Berean Trusts

No.1. Why the Name?
pp. 121, 122

"The What Expositor?" is the frequent response to the question, "Would you like to read a copy of The Berean Expositor?". Few have heard the word Berean, even less know that it is a place mentioned in the Bible and less still are aware of its significance (Acts xvii. 10, 13 and xx. 4).

Berea was a town in Greece, towards the south of the Roman province of Macedonia. It was situated on the eastern slope of the Olympian mountain range, about 35 miles west of Thessalonica. The town is still in existence today, with the name Veroia, and is on the main road linking Athens, in the south of Greece, and Thessaloniki in the north.

When we read the Acts of the Apostles the journeys of Paul seem so familiar and yet we can so easily miss one outstanding feature, the opposition of Paul's own people, the Jews. At the beginning of his first missionary journey, at Paphos, he met opposition from a Jew named Elymas (Acts xiii. 6-12). From there he went to Antioch, via Perga, and as was his custom he went first to the synagogue of the Jews but "on the next Sabbath almost the whole city gathered . . . . . when the Jews saw the crowds, they were filled with jealousy and talked abusively against what Paul was saying" (Acts xiii. 44, 45). "They stirred up persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them from their region" (verse 50).

From there they journeyed to Iconium "but the Jews who refused to believe stirred up the Gentiles and poisoned their minds" (xiv. 2). This led to a plot to ill-treat and stone Paul and Barnabas (verse 5), who fled to Lystra but even there "some Jews came from Antioch and Iconium and won the crowd over. They stoned Paul and dragged him outside the city, thinking he was dead" (verse 19).

It seemed as if things were to be no different on Paul's second journey. At Thessalonica "the Jews were jealous; so they rounded up some of the bad characters from the market-place, formed a mob and started a riot in the city. They rushed to Jason's house in search of Paul and Silas in order to bring them out to the crowd" (xvii.5). But, "as soon as it was night, the brothers sent Paul and Silas away to Berea" (xvii.10). However, here we find a different story:

> "On arriving there, they went to the Jewish synagogue. Now the Bereans were of more noble character than the Thessalonians, for they received the message with great eagerness and examined the Scriptures every day to see if what Paul said was true. Many of the Jews believed, as did also a number of prominent Greek women and many Greek men" (Acts xvii. 10-12).

How encouraged Paul must have been. At Berea he found Jews who "received the message with great eagerness", Jews who "examined the Scriptures every day to see if what he said was true", Jews who believed.

Do we read the Acts of the Apostles and note how Paul testified to the Jews that Jesus was the Messiah, the Christ. He based his arguments upon the Law of Moses and the Prophets (e.g. xxvi. 22 and xxviii. 23). The foundation of his case was the Scriptures, and the Jews knew their Scriptures, but note how frequently they opposed him. Only of the Bereans was it said that "they received the message with great eagerness and examined the Scriptures every day to see if what Paul said was true".

So it is that this Bible study magazine is called The BEREAN Expositor. It is hoped that all who read it do receive the message "with great eagerness", with all readiness of mind. It is hoped that every reader will examine the Scriptures regularly to see if what is written in The Berean Expositor is correct. No writer can claim to have the apostolic authority of Paul and so human error can creep in. The Bereans were highly commended for searching and checking on Paul, the Apostle. How much more, then, should people today examine the Scriptures to search and see if what we say is true.

All quotations in this article are taken from the New International Version (N.I.V.).

No.2. What! No Membership?
pp. 141, 142

Most Christian organizations have both a statement of faith and a membership. It is often the case that anyone wishing to join has to sign a statement agreeing with the beliefs of the organization. There is no membership roll for either of the Berean Trusts. Anyone can join the mailing list to receive The Berean Expositor and we hope that they will search the Scriptures to see if the published expositions are in agreement with all that the Bible teaches on the particular subjects under discussion.

But some will ask, have the Berean Trusts no statement of faith? After all a creed is of value, allowing people to see, at a glance, the main doctrines of an organization. It enables others to identify the organization's priorities. Both The Berean Forward Movement Trust and The Berean Publishing Trust are registered charities which have to report to the Charities Commission. As such each has to have a Trust Deed and embodied in each deed are the following four basic tenets of faith:--

(1) The full inspiration of the Scriptures (II Tim. iii. 16).
(2) The Right Division of the Scriptures (II Tim. ii. 15).
(3) The Deity of the Lord Jesus Christ (Matt. xvi. 16; John vi. 69; xx. 28).
(4) The all sufficiency of His One Sacrifice (Acts iv. 12; Heb. x. 14).

From these it will be seen that the Berean Trusts are evangelical (teaching that salvation is by grace through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ's offering for sin on Calvary's cross), and fundamental (teaching that the Bible is God's inspired Word). These are the basics of the Trusts.

Now some claim that one purpose of a statement of faith and membership is to ensure that the original aims and doctrines of the organization are not altered or ignored. In this way, they claim, truth is preserved. Would to God that this was true! Without being critical one has only to look at the Thirty-Nine Articles of the Church of England and ask how many of its clergy and laity fully support all thirty-nine to realize that both a statement of faith and a membership can be powerless. In fact the longer the statement the sooner, and more likely, the organization will run into difficulties in maintaining it. Thus the basic tenets of faith of the Berean Trusts were kept to a minimum, yet none are imposed upon the readership or supporters. If this is the case, how are the tenets upheld? The Trust deeds of both Berean Trusts state:

> "The statutory power of appointing new Trustees shall be applicable to the Trust provided that no person shall be eligible to be appointed a Trustee unless he shall satisfy the persons in whom the statutory power is vested that he is a person whose beliefs and practice conform to the said basis tenets."
> "The Trustees shall have power to appoint a principal or minister . . . . . councils and committees to assist in their work . . . . . provided that every principal or minister and every member of any council or committee so appointed shall satisfy the Trustees that he is a person whose beliefs and practice conform to the said basic tenets."
>
> "The Trustees shall also have power to appoint a treasurer and if thought fit a secretary . . . . . provided any treasuree or secretary so appointed shall satisfy the Trustees that he is a person whose beliefs and practice conform to the said basic tenets."

The safeguard of the original aims and doctrine rests first and foremost within the Trust Deeds themselves and with the Trustees, who would be in breach of the law if they failed to act in accordance with the Deeds. Thus any new Trustee must not only state that he believes and accepts the four basic tenets but his life must also conform to them. In practice he must reflect them. The same is true of anyone appointed as a principal or a minister, or of anyone appointed as a treasurer or secretary, or of anyone asked to serve on any council or committee. In this way the original aims and doctrines are preserved and the Berean Trusts have never wavered in their teaching of salvation by grace through faith, the deity of the Lord Jesus Christ, the inspiration of the Scriptures and the right division of the Scriptures.

No.3. What Must I do to be Saved?
pp. 161, 162

To be saved! Saved from what? What does it mean, to be saved? When the Scriptures use this expression it is referring to being saved from the consequences of sin, that is separation from God through death.

What must I do to be saved, saved from sin and separation? That surely must be the most important issue confronting every individual and yet so many refuse to face it. Some think that a person's life should consist in an abundance of material possessions. They are concerned about obtaining plenty of good things and saving money for the future so that they can take life easy and eat, drink and be merry. But what if God says to them at this very moment, "You fool! This very night your life will be demanded from you" (Luke xii. 16-21). Their material possessions or their position in a secular society will be of no value after death. They go no way towards gaining eternal life.

If possessions and position do not secure life after death, can a person obtain eternal security through self-sacrifice and the good works performed in this life? Paul was a Pharisee who had kept the law and from that point of view he was faultless. He had suffered the loss of everything. Surely here was a man who had worked his way into heaven—but no! He wanted to be found in Christ, not having a righteousness of his own, one that comes from obeying the law, but wanting that righteousness which comes from God (Phil. iii. 5-9).

Every human being has a righteousness of his own, for he does show some good works and tries to keep most of the law most of the time. If we compare ourselves with others we may assess ourselves better than our neighbours, better than our workmates, better than our brothers and sisters. But when we compare ourselves with God, His eternal existence and His righteousness, then man's life is but a breadth and man's glory is as insignificant as the flower of grass. If we are to be saved then we need to be linked with God's immortality and His righteousness, but how can man achieve this? How can he get immortality and righteousness? He gets them by accepting them from God.

> "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. vi. 23).

All a person needs to receive this gift is faith; faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. He needs to believe that:

> "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, that He was buried, that He was raised on the third day according to the Scriptures" (I Cor. xv. 3, 4).

Do you believe that Christ died for your sins? Do you believe that He received the punishment for your sins? If you do, you are saved. You have the gift of eternal life—and more. All believers can say, with Paul, that we do not have a righteousness of our own,

> "but that which is through faith in Christ—the righteousness that comes from God and is by faith" (Phil. iii. 9).

We have this because "God made Him Who had no sin to be sin for us, so that in him we might become the righteousness of God" (II Cor. v. 21). Notice the 'so that'. This is how we get eternal life and righteousness. God made the Lord Jesus Christ a sin offering for you and for me and if we believe it, God will credit us with His righteousness. A person who has faith in Christ's offering for sin is credited with righteousness . . . . . by God! This must be one of the most amazing gifts of all time; truly amazing grace. Our good works have a place after salvation, but not before. The Lord Jesus Christ's sacrifice for sin is all sufficient. Nothing can be added to it. No amount of good works will do in its place. No rites or ceremonies can be a substitute and "salvation is found in no-one else, for there is no other name under heaven given to men by which we must be saved" (Acts iv. 12).

So human works, human merit, human achievement play no part in salvation. In fact it is the very opposite for the first step is the admission of personal inabilities and inadequacies. It is recognizing that no matter how hard we try and no matter how much we improve our lives, we will never be completely righteous. Even if we gain some measure of control over our words and works, our thoughts still let us down. The first step recognizes that "all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God" (Rom. iii. 23). So what must I do to be saved from the consequences of sin? "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and you will be saved" (Acts xvi. 31). The all sufficiency of His one sacrifice for sin is one of the four basic tenets of the Berean Trusts and is arguably the most important one for it deals with questions concerning life and death, sin and salvation.

The Book of RUTH

No.1. i. 1 - 13.
pp. 195 - 200

Tucked away in the O.T. Scriptures between Judges and the First Book of Samuel is this tiny Book of Ruth. The Books of the O.T. in the Hebrew Canon of Scripture, you will remember, are divided into three—the Law, the Prophets and the Psalms or Writings. In the Jewish Scriptures Ruth is placed among the Psalms, and together with the Song of Solomon, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes and Esther, form the Megillath or Scrolls. These Books were and are today always read in the synagogues at feast days. The Book of Ruth placed second is always read at Pentecost, the period of harvesting in Israel, the reason being that it is concerned with reaping and gleaning.

In the O.T. there are two Books with the names of women, Ruth and Esther. Ruth, a Gentile, married a Hebrew husband. Esther, a Jewess, married a Gentile.

In the Greek translation of the Hebrew O.T. Scriptures, the Septuagint, Ruth is placed after the Book of Judges, as we have it in our Bibles today. It would seem to be the right place for it, as in chapter i. 1 we read:

> "Now it came to pass in the days when the judges ruled . . . . .".

This Book of Ruth therefore describes events which took place during the period covered by the Book of Judges. In the last verse of the last chapter of Judges, the Book ended on a tragic note indeed:

> "In those days there was no king in Israel: every man did that which was right in his own eyes" (Judges xxi. 25).

It would be difficult to exaggerate the deplorable condition of the nation of Israel during the intervening periods not covered by the men God raised up to lift the people from their unbelief and idolatry as recorded in the Book of Judges.

On the other hand, while one of these judges ruled over the nation, the events recorded in the Book of Ruth took place. In fact, they must have taken place during the early period, because we read that the mighty Boaz was the son of Salmon and Rahab. There can be no reasonable grounds for NOT supposing her to be the Rahab of Jericho who so greatly helped the men Joshua sent to spy out the land, before his conquest of Canaan. Rahab also is recorded in Heb. xi., where only two women are included in the list of those who lived in O.T. times, whose outstanding faith in the Word of God receives such honourable mention. Sarah, of course was the other noble lady. What a truly great woman Rahab must have become in Israel.

The Book of Ruth fulfills several purposes, including:

(1) It reveals that even during the dark days of the Judges, there were some who lived their simple lives in the fear of the Lord.

(2) The example of utter faithfulness presented by the story of Ruth the Moabitess, stands out boldly against the dark background of the times, and gives encouragement to us in our own day of darkness and apostasy.

(3) The Book supplies an important link in the genealogy of Christ as the Son of David.

(4) The introduction into that genealogy of a Moabitess illuminates the character of the God of all grace, prefiguring the acceptance of the Gentile, and indication something of the gracious work of the Saviour.

(5) Most important of all though this tiny Book reveals to us more clearly than any other that most important typical figure, the Kinsman-Redeemer.

> "In Whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of His grace" (Eph. i. 7).

Here we have the Greek word "aphesis" which is translated forgiveness meaning "setting free from bondage", "setting at liberty".

In verse 14 however, sin and bondage are not in view:

> "Which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of His glory" (Eph. i. 14).

The figure here is an earnest, or a pledge, now, in view of a possession then, and as the possession has been forfeited, redemption is essential.

In verse 7 is revealed redemption from bondage. In verse 14, redemption of a possession. It is this second aspect of redemption that finds so beautiful an illustration in the Book of Ruth, and makes its study so profitable.

The central and longest portion of the Book revolves around the figure of Boaz as the kinsman-redeemer. The Hebrew word used here is "goel". Its derivatives are variously translated by "redeem", "right to redeem", and "kinsman", and occur no less than twenty times in these central chapters.

So we find in this Book that aspect of the work accomplished by the Lord Jesus Christ when He came in the flesh to redeem His people from the bondage of sin and death, to make them a purchased possession with a most glorious inheritance.

In the opening verse of the first chapter we read there was a famine in the land. This was Canaan, the land when the Children of Israel came in to possess it which was flowing with milk and honey. Here was one of the judgments God had threatened to bring upon this people before they entered, should they forsake Him and His law.

> "And if ye will not yet for all this hearken unto me, then I will punish you seven times more for your sins. And I will break the pride of your power; and I will make your > heaven as iron, and your earth as brass: and your strength shall be spent in vain: for your land shall not yield her increase, neither shall the trees of the land yield their fruits" (Leviticus xxvi. 18-20).

How well He knew their hearts, as indeed He knows ours.

During the period covered by the Book of Judges how many times the nation as a whole, except for a faithful few, turned away from the God Who had so faithfully watched over them and blessed them. So He punished them by allowing the heathen tribes they had allowed to remain around them to over-run their land, and reduce them for a time to become terror-stricken serfs. For a total period of 93 years God withdrew Himself from His rebellious people, they became "lo-ammi", not my people, as indeed they are today, and have been for nearly two thousand years.

Here, "a certain man of Bethlehem in Judah went to live in the land of Moab, he and his wife and his two sons" (Ruth i. 1). Bethlehem, which signifies the "House of Bread" had none! A fruitful land was turned into barrenness to correct and restrain the materialism, wantonness, idolatry and unbelief among the nation God had made His own.

> "And the name of the man was Elimelech, and the name of his wife Naomi and the name of his two sons Mahlon and Chilion, Ephrathites of Bethlehem-judah. And they came into the country of Moab, and continued there" (i. 2).

Elimelech meaning "my God is King", was a splendid name to bear during the dark days of the Book of Judges, when there was no king in Israel. It balances the end of the Book of Ruth, where in the last verse we read of David, the first king of God's choice.

Naomi means sweetness, and from the record, as we shall see, that was exactly what she must have been.

The two sons were most probably the reason for the move, for there must have been many families similarly stricken by the famine, yet who remained in Bethlehem and managed to live through it somehow. The names of both sons indicate that they were very delicate, for Mahlon means "sickly", and Chilion "pining", one commentator says "consumption". They were evidently physically ailing, and there could not have been any dearth of famine in Moab. This temporary move could well have been done, therefore, for the sake of the boys' health. Whether it was the right thing to do is another question. Some would doubt this, especially as we find they stayed on for some considerable time in this country. Then the husband Elimelech died.

> "And Elimelech Naomi's husband died; and she was left, and her two sons. And they took them wives of the women of Moab; the name of the one was Orpah, and the name of the other Ruth: and they dwelled there about ten years" (i. 3, 4).

Who were the Moabites? They were the descendants of Moab, who was the son of Lot and his elder daughter. Despite their sinful origin, the Lord did not forbid inter-marriage with the Moabites as He did with the nations of Canaan. He does however lay down instructions regarding children of such a marriage, where the father was a Moabite and the mother a Jewess.

So Mahlon and Chilion marry two local girls, Orpah and Ruth, Ruth signifying "beauty" and Orpah a "hind or fawn".

Then both young men are stricken and die. In both cases the marriages were childless, and now the three widows were faced with a serious problem. The inheritance of Elimelech which passed on to Mahlon and Chilion would die too, a dire tragedy to every family of Israel.

Naomi now takes the decision to return to her own land. This would involve hardship, and possibly danger, but the famine was over, and doubtless she felt alone in a foreign country. Her kith and kin were in Israel, and that was the obvious place for her to go.

> "Then she arose with her daughters-in-law, that she might return from the country of Moab: for she had heard in the country of Moab how that the Lord had visited His people in giving them bread. Wherefore she went forth out of the place where she was, and her two daughters-in-law with her, and they went on the way to return unto the land of Judah" (i. 6, 7).

A number of commentators point out that the plight of Naomi was God's judgment on her for being the one mainly responsible for her husband emigrating from Bethlehem during the famine. On the other hand it could have been the leading of the Lord in view of what happened later.

Evidently they all three started the journey together, both daughters-in-law clearly ready to go all the way, and not merely to escort Naomi a short distance. She had won their deep affection, and there was no question of either staying behind. Naomi must have been a most loveable character, for it is most evident that both girls were completely devoted to her. Unselfishness and courage were two traits she must have possessed in plenty, and above all complete trust in the Lord. These things are revealed in the narrative.

> "And Naomi said unto her two daughters-in-law, Go, return each to her mother's house: the Lord deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with the dead, and with me. The Lord grant you that ye may find rest, each of you in the house of her husband. Then she kissed them; and they lifted up their voice, and wept. And they said unto her, Surely we will return with thee unto thy people" (i. 8-10).

What a help those two young women would have been to Naomi on the long trek back to Judah, and yet she now urged them to leave her and return to their own homes. How noble was her complete unselfishness and self denial. She dismisses them both with generous commendation and her blessing. Her faith had remained firm and unswerving to the Lord despite the long period of absence from her people. In her twofold blessing she twice used the sacred name of Jehovah.

Her words thus far however, are insufficient to shake the affectionate love and resolve of either of the two girls. Who would carry the few belongings and keep and protect her along the way? "Surely we will return with thee unto thy people".

> "And Naomi said, Turn again, my daughters: why will ye go with me? are there yet any more sons in my womb, that they may be your husbands? Turn again, my daughters, go your way; for I am too old to have an husband. If I should say, I have hope, if I should have an husband also to night, and should also bear sons; Would ye tarry for them till they were grown? would ye stay for them from having husbands? nay, my daughters; for it grieveth me much for your sakes that the hand of the Lord is gone out against me" (i. 11-13).

In a final effort to really prove them, Naomi now painted the loneliness of her lot. She had no more sons, and was not likely to have any. This may seem a strange argument in our ears, but it is not far-fetched at all in the light of the law of Moses concerning the perpetuation of a family's inheritance in Israel. We remember how the Sadducees in Matt. xxii. 23-33, who did not believe in the resurrection as the Pharisees did, came to the Lord in an effort to trap Him and they quoted the passage in Deut. xxv. 5-10 where the Lord's command concerning this matter is clearly written. Moses said, "If a man die, having no children, his brother shall marry his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother".

No.2. i. 14 - ii. 23.
pp. 213 - 220

We see therefore the reason for Naomi's words to her daughters-in-law. They were still young, and would be able to find husbands for themselves from among their own people. Why emigrate to a foreign land where they knew no one, and leave their own kith and kin, especially in view of the fact that Naomi said "the hand of the Lord is gone out against me".

> "And they lifted up their voice, and wept again: and Orpah kissed her mother-in-law; but Ruth clave unto her" (i. 14).

Who can blame Orpah in returning home to her mother and family? Having considered Naomi's arguments and thinking of her own future, there was logically only one course of action to take. The hardships of the journey contrasted with the comforts of her father's home, also living among foreigners with strange customs and ways. Her love for her mother-in-law was not strong enough to enable her to make this supreme sacrifice. Warmly attached to this gracious woman whom she respected and admired so much, and who had given her so much kindness and love during her married life, she could not go all the way. Her heart and her loyalties were divided. In those days the lot of an unmarried woman, or a widow with no children, was such that marriage with almost anyone however unsuitable was preferable. Undoubtedly the best course for Orpah was to stay. Naomi must make her own way back as best she could. So Orpah kissed her mother-in-law and returned to her home. She had allowed herself to be persuaded and yielded her heart to follow the easier, less dangerous, but more selfish way back. What a contrast now we find in the decision of the other daughter-in-law, Ruth. Naomi, now armed with a fresh argument, urged Ruth to follow her sister-in-law's example.

> "And she said, Behold, thy sister-in-law is gone back unto her people, and unto her gods: return thou after they sister-in-law. And Ruth said, Intreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God: where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if ought but death part thee and me" (i. 15-17).

These simple words of Ruth have come down the centuries and express the love for one person to another that has never been excelled. They are without peer in any language. Love is a word that has become cheapened and clouded in our day. The love here revealed is pure, noble and inspired. It is utterly sincere because it comes from devotion. The beauty of Ruth's words will move the heart so long as the world endures. They are comparable with the lowly acts of love which the Saviour said should be remembered wheresoever the gospel was preached.

All the relationships of life demand faith and love, patience, forbearance, good sense, good temper, good taste and good feeling. Yet perhaps above all the other relationships of life that of a mother-in-law and a daughter-in-law demands all those gifts and graces. Every language I believe has its own stock of cruel proverbs and satires that lampoon the mother-in-law. Naomi and Ruth redeem that relationship, and the beauty in the nature of the one brought out and expanded the beauty in the nature of the other. This alone is the love that is Christ-like, for when we turn to Eph. v. 2 we shall see that the love of Christ was that He gave His life, His all for sinful mankind. In the same way Ruth gave up everything she held dear in her own country. Her kith and kin, her home, her friends, her all, to go out into the unknown with her mother-in-law. She held nothing back and willingly went all the way, clinching her resolution with a solemn oath that revealed the intensity of her feeling, and the irrevocability of her decision. She pledged herself always to remain at Naomi's side till death parted them. She pledged herself in the name of the God of Israel, Jehovah, the one true God, Whom Ruth had come to know and believe in because of the teaching and manner of life of Naomi. "Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God . . . . .".

It was the shining life of this woman that converted the Moabitess from darkness and the ignorance of idol worship and idolatry in which she had been brought up. We should not be far wrong in tracing a great part of Ruth's courage, devotion, extraordinary loyalty and exquisite love not so much to what Naomi said, but what she did. Her manner of life, the way she lived, her walk and witness, age and experience, have their responsibilities, and she used both wisely and well and so there grew a bond between these two that caused Ruth to put into words the deep feelings of her heart. "Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried. The Lord do so to me and more also, if ought but death part thee and me.".

So Naomi yields. After so solemn a protestation of love, she can urge no more.

> "When she saw that she (Ruth) was stedfastly minded to go with her, then she left speaking unto her" (i. 18).

How does our love for the Lord Jesus Christ compare to the love of Ruth for Naomi? Are we willing to sacrifice anything for Him? Are we willing to go all the way?

We have considered together the Book of Ruth as a whole and the opening chapter. How that in this very lovely story the hero Boaz reveals to us in type that most important aspect of the relationship between the Lord Jesus Christ and His Children—our Kinsman-Redeemer. The importance of this little Book is also that it supplies an essential link in the genealogy of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Son of David.

Also that it opens up to us that wonderful aspect of redemption which is not that of forgiveness, i.e. setting free from bondage, but the possession of an inheritance and that inheritance is to be enjoyed for eternity.

The journey that Naomi and Ruth made from the land of Moab to Bethlehem in Judah was a long and toilsome one and not free from danger. Two rivers had to be crossed, the Arnon and the Jordan. The distance of actual journeying cannot be less than 50 miles. A weary haul needing tremendous resolution and courage on the part of both women.

At last tired out and travel stained, they arrived at their destination. Naomi must have been well known in Bethlehem before leaving for Moab, for we read there was no small stir among the local inhabitants, when it became known she had returned. The strain of the journey must have greatly taxed her strength, and added to that the grief she had sustained by the loss of both husband and sons had doubtless made her look aged and worn in appearance. Despite these things and after many years of absence, many in Bethlehem recognized her when at last she arrived back in her native town. The women would have enquired as to how she had fare in far off Moab? How poignant are the words she used in her reply:

> "And she said unto them, Call me not Naomi, call me Mara: for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me. I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home again empty: why then call ye me Naomi, seeing the Lord hath testified against me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me?" (i. 20-21).

Here is no passionate outburst against the providence of God, but a calm reasoned explanation of the facts. She had gone out with husband and sons, and come back having left them buried in a foreign land. Yet there was no hysterical railing against the hand of the Lord, on the contrary, we find a gentle acceptance of this judgment. She went out a wife and a mother and returned a widow with no sons. Yet despite this we read of no murmuring or complaints, but a calm resignation to the will of God. The actual title Naomi used was "Shaddai", our translation, "the Almighty". This is not the title of Creator, which is "Elohim", but His title as the "Giver", the all-bountiful One. The One Who supplies all the needs of His children, the God of grace. It was first used in Gen.xvii.1 where it is put to show Abraham that He Who called him out to walk alone before Him could supply all his need. Call me not Naomi 'sweetness', call me Mara 'bitterness'; see the play upon the word here—"for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me". She said in effect—"It is He Who gives, it is He Who takes back". This word 'mara' is vividly brought before us in Exod. xv. The Lord had brought His people out from the bondage of Egypt. He had destroyed the army that Pharoah had sent after them to fetch them back. Yet after this miraculous delivery, and after only three days in the wilderness without water, they reached the water-hole at Marah only to find the water not fit to drink because it was bitter. Immediately they murmured against Moses. Why have you brought us out? To die in this wilderness? They threatened his life and to return to their slavery. The Lord was testing their trust in Him. He was proving their faith. There is an important lesson here for us all. It is that unless our faith is tested, it will never be strong. Unless it knows the winds of adversity, it will never weather the onslaught of Satan to dislodge it from our hearts.

In this time of testing Naomi's faith remained unshaken, nay strengthened even as we shall see from the events that follow:

> "So Naomi returned, and Ruth the Moabitess, her daughter-in-law, with her, which returned out of the country of Moab: and they came to Bethlehem in the beginning of barley harvest" (i. 22).

The barley harvest came before the wheat. This would be the time of the Passover, about the end of April.

Chapter ii.

We now take up the great theme of the Kinsman-Redeemer as it is unfolded in the central section of this little Book. From ii. 1 - iv. 14, we have the teaching of Scripture concerning this important office:

> "And Naomi had a kinsman of her husband's, a mighty man of wealth, of the family of Elimelech; and his name was Boaz" (ii. 1).

Boaz was the grandson of Nahshon, who was prince of the tribe of Judah during the wanderings in the wilderness. He was the son of Salmon and Rahab of Jericho, the younger son, as we know he had an elder brother. He carried might in his name for the meaning of Boaz is "in him is strength". Evidently he was a wealthy man; and it is an interesting side-light on the character of Naomi, that no effort was made by her to contact this rich relation on her return to Bethlehem. Despite her distress, she would not be burdensome nor expect any help from other members of her family.

> "And Ruth the Moabitess said unto Naomi, let me now go to the field, and glean ears of corn after him in whose sight I shall find grace. And she said unto her, Go, my daughter" (ii. 2).

The character of Ruth comes out strongly here. She does not hesitate to face the hard work necessary both for her mother-in-law and herself nor is she too proud to condescend to a work which might perhaps seem humiliating. Neither does she hanker after her old home in the land of Moab and the plenty there. In order to keep from starving, she willingly assumed the role of bread-winner. She revealed the virtues of energy, honesty of purpose and true loyalty which evidently were inherent in her nature.

Doubtless Naomi would have explained to Ruth away back in Moab of the wonderful provision the God of Israel had made for those who were poor and needy in the land of Canaan. She would have told her of the loving concern and the tender mercy as well as the mighty power of the One Who led her people out of Egypt, through the wilderness and into the promised land. She would have told her the words recorded in Lev.xix.9,10 and in chapter xxiii. 22, and in Deut. xxiv. 19.

There was indeed in Israel a way for widows and foreigners to obtain bread.

> "And she went, and came, and gleaned in the field after the reapers: and her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Boaz, who was of the kindred of Elimelech" (ii. 3).

"Her hap was . . . . .", "it happened that . . . . .". No instructions were given her by Naomi. She did not know whose field it was to which she went. She had no reason for going to that particular farm more than any other. It was by chance she chose the one she did to all intents and purposes. Yet a clear shaping of her course was undertaken for her by unseen Hands. Her steps were divinely guided so that God's purposes should be fulfilled.

So it was that Ruth came to glean in the field that belonged to Boaz who was of the kindred of Elimelech.

> "And, behold, Boaz came from Bethlehem, and said unto the reapers, The Lord be with you. And they answered him, The Lord bless thee" (ii. 4).

Harvest time is always a busy time on the farm, many hands must then be at work. Boaz who had great wealth and therefore much land, must have employed a great number of labourers. The greetings between master and men showed there was much good feeling between the two. There was true courtesy and friendliness, and Boaz is surely presented to us as a man of the highest integrity, who is held in high regard by those who worked for him.

> "Then said Boaz unto his servant that was set over the reapers, Whose damsel is this? And the servant that was set over the reapers answered and said, It is the Moabitish damsel that came back with Naomi out of the country of Moab: And she said, I pray you, let me glean and gather after the reapers among the sheaves: so she came, and hath continued even from the morning until now, that she tarried a little in the house" (ii. 5-7).

The servant that was set over the reapers, the steward, or overseer, or as we should say the foreman, gave to Boaz a detailed account of who Ruth was. That she was a foreigner from Moab, with family connections to Boaz himself. That she was modest and had not commenced to glean until she had obtained leave. That she was very industrious and worked hard. This honest report, and doubtless the fact that Ruth was a very beautiful young woman, stirred Boaz to speak most kindly to her.

> "Then said Boaz unto Ruth, Hearest thou not, my daughter? Go not to glean in another field, neither go from hence, but abide here fast by my maidens: Let thine eyes be on the field that they do reap, and go thou after them: have I not charged the young men that they shall not touch thee? and when thou art athirst, go unto the vessels, and drink of that which the young men have drawn" (ii. 8-9).

This was a handsome offer indeed, and Ruth was overwhelmed at his generosity to her.

> "Then she fell on her face, and bowed herself to the ground, and said unto him, Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldest take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger? And Boaz answered and said unto her, It hath fully been shewed me, all that thou hast done unto thy mother-in-law since the death of thine husband: and how thou hast left thy father and thy mother, and the land of thy nativity, and art come unto a people which thou knewest not therefore. The Lord recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Israel, under Whose wings thou art come to trust. Then she said, Let me find favour in thy sight, my lord; for that thou hast comforted me, and for that thou hast spoken friendly unto thine handmaid, though I be not like unto one of thine handmaidens. And Boaz said unto her, At mealtime come thou hither, and eat of the bread, and dip thy morsel in the vinegar. And she sat beside the reapers: and he reached her parched corn, and she did eat, and was sufficed, and left" (ii. 10-14).

Boaz is revealed here as a man of God. He was not only rich in worldly possessions, he was rich in faith. This is shown by his words commending her to the Lord: "The Lord recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Israel, under Whose wings thou art come to trust, or flee for refuge". This implies a genuine expression of admiration for the generous courage and loyalty shown by Ruth in being willing to leave her people and bring Naomi safely home. Also to be willing to toil in the hot sun all day to provide for her. He also invited her to join his work force for lunch, which apparently he provided. Not only that, but he took a special interest in her by serving her himself. This showed his more than passing interest, but Ruth, immediately she had finished the meal, left to get on with her work. She took no advantage of his favour but quietly slipped away, considerably heartened no doubt by the unexpected kindness of the great man.

> "And when she was risen up to glean, Boaz commanded his young men, saying, Let her glean even among the sheaves, and reproach her not: And let fall also some of the handfuls of purpose for her, and leave them, that she may glean them, and rebuke her not. So she gleaned in the field until even, and beat out that she had gleaned: and it was about an ephah of barley. And she took it up, and went into the city: and her mother-in-law saw what she had gleaned: and she brought forth, and gave to her that she had reserved after she was sufficed" (ii. 15-18).

Boaz makes sure Ruth takes back plenty of barley. An ephah is the equivalent of just under our English bushel, so she would have gleaned about 20 lbs of grain after it had been beaten out. Quite a weight for her to carry. We can imagine Naomi's amazement when she saw the result of Ruth's day.

> "And her mother-in-law said unto her, Where hast thou gleaned to day? and where wroughtest thou? blessed be he that did take knowledge of thee. And she shewed her mother-in-law with whom she had wrought, and said, The man's name with whom I wrought to day is Boaz. And Naomi said unto her daughter-in-law, Blesseed be he of the Lord, who hath not left off his kindness to the living and to the dead. And Naomi said unto her, The man is near of kin unto us, one of our next kinsmen. And Ruth the Moabitess said, He said unto me also, Thou shalt keep fast by my young men, until they have ended all my harvest. And Naomi said unto Ruth her daughter-in-law, It is good, my daughter, that thou go out with his maidens, that they meet thee not in any other field.

> So she kept fast by the maidens of Boaz to glean unto the end of barley harvest and of wheat harvest; and dwelt with her mother-in-law" (ii. 19-23).

Ruth gives an account of the events of her day, and doubtless with quiet satisfaction of the especial attention the great man Boaz had paid to her. We can only wonder at Naomi's feelings when she heard that Ruth had, quite by chance, happened to have asked to glean in one of the fields belonging to her husband's nearest relative. Boaz must have been considerably younger than Elimelech, having been born to his parents very late in their lives.

As Naomi puts it "one of our next kinsman", and the margin reads "one that hath right to redeem". Here is the word "GOEL" or "Kinsman-Redeemer" which so beautifully illustrates the work of Christ as our Redeemer. It also explains the reason why it was necessary for God to take upon Himself the form of a man, i.e. flesh and blood, in order to make salvation possible for the sinful human race. Here in this tiny Book of Ruth, the Moabitess, we find the type revealed of the One Who was to come: God our Saviour.

The "Kinsman-Redeemer" played an important part in the Hebrew economy. It is referred to in Lev. xxv. 23-28. Here we find the first statement of the law concerning the redemption of land, i.e. an inheritance. Under the law of Moses it was not possible for a man to sell the land that formed part of his true possession "in perpetuity". In every transaction with regard to the sale of land it was compulsory to grant a redemption. If a man had sold away any part of his inheritance on account of poverty or debt, his "next of kin" had the right to redeem it. In addition to this a special provision was made for the safe-guarding of the inheritance to the rightful family, which is set out in Deut.xxv.5-10.

All this is implied in Naomi's words "The man is near of kin unto us, one of our next of kin". "One who has the right to redeem".

When Naomi heard that Boaz had instructed Ruth to continue to glean in his fields to the end of the barley and the wheat harvesting, and not to go anywhere else, she realized that Boaz was very much more than a little interested in her daughter-in-law.

The position was that Elimelech when he had taken his family into the land of Moab, had sold his possessions. The only way to get this inheritance back was by another member of the family being willing to buy it back from the person who had bought it, and at the same time be willing and able to take Ruth for his wife.

No.3. iii. 1 - iv. 22.
pp. 232 - 240

Chapter iii.

> "Then Naomi her mother-in-law said unto her, My daughter, shall I not seek rest for thee, that it may be well with thee?" (iii. 1).

When we compare this verse with verse 9 of chapter i., "The Lord grant you that ye may find rest, each of you in the house of her husband", we understand that Naomi had Ruth's future provision, and the preserving of her family name in Israel, very much in her mind.

She felt it her duty to endeavour to find a home for her daughter-in-law who had given up so much on her account, and who now was so lovingly providing for her. In the gracious generosity of Boaz towards Ruth, she saw the leading of the Lord, so she says in verse 2, "Is not Boaz of our kindred?". She would be aware that he was not the nearest of her husband's kin, but she knew that if he so desired he could become so.

> "And now is not Boaz of our kindred, with whose maidens thou wast? Behold, he winnoweth barley to night in the threshing floor. Wash thyself therefore and anoint thee, and put thy raiment upon thee, and get thee down to the floor: but make not thyself known unto the man, until he shall have done eating and drinking. And it shall be, when he lieth down, that thou shalt mark the place where he shall lie, and thou shalt go in, and uncover his feet, and lay thee down; and he will tell thee what thou shalt do. And she said unto her, All that thou sayest unto me I will do" (iii. 2-5).

It was the custom at threshing time for the owner to remain all night on the threshing floor until the harvest was safely garnered. It was a time for rejoicing. So Naomi instructs Ruth how to act.

To our ears her plan seems, to say the least highly suspect. Judged by some standards of morality it appears to us offensive. However we know that both Naomi and Ruth were virtuous women who believed sincerely in Jehovah and observed His law most carefully. We also know that Boaz was a man of faith and fine character. Therefore Naomi's plan could not in any way have been of evil intent. Rachel's plan for Jacob was one of deception, but not this one. The plan was without doubt watered by much prayer that the over-ruling of the hand of the Lord would continue, and receive His blessing.

The words in verse 4 "uncover his feet", "lift up the cover over his feet", these men would simply lie down on the threshing floor with their clothes on, their feet covered with a mantle or coat.

Ruth's obedience is an intelligent obedience. She knew in what relation Boaz stood to her family, and the responsibilities attached to that relationship. It was with quiet confidence that she risked the dangers involved.

> "And she went down unto the floor, and did according to all that her mother-in-law bade her. And when Boaz had eaten and drunk, and his heart was merry, he went to lie down at the end of the heap of corn: and she came softly, and uncovered his feet, and laid her down. And it came to pass at midnight, that the man was afraid, and turned himself: and, behold, a woman lay at his feet. And he said, Who art thou? And she answered, I am Ruth thine handmaid: spread therefore thy skirt over thine handmaid; for thou art a near kinsman" (iii. 6-9).

In verse 8 for 'afraid', the word is "startled", and in verse 9 'skirt' should be translated "wing", as in chapter ii. 12, implying his protective care, in view of the fact that he was her kinsman-redeemer! Ruth is not trying to seduce Boaz. He would understand that she was asking him to redeem Elimelech's inheritance, the land that had become lost. Also, as that would mean his marrying her in order to save the name of the dead man from being blotted out in Israel, that she would be willing to keep her part of the transaction.

How many times in Scripture do we read of the covering protection of the wings of the Lord. In Matt. xxiii., the Lord Jesus Christ denounces the unbelief and the hostility of the religious leaders of His time. He upbraids them for their omission from and their adding to the Word of God, their intentional misinterpretation as to His worship. He whips them with His words for their infidelity, their self-exhortation, their hypocrisy, and denounces them as a generation of vipers, children of them that killed the prophets, closing His words to them in verses 37-39.

> "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" (Matt. xxiii. 37).

David loved to sing of the safety and protection of the divine wings. Psa. xvii. 8, "Keep me as the apple of the eye, hide me under the shadow of Thy wings". Psa.xxxvi.7, "How excellent is Thy loving kindness O God. Therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of Thy wings". Psa. lvii. 1, when he fled from Saul to the cave, "Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto me. For my soul trusteth in Thee; yea, in the shadow of Thy wings will I make my refuge, until these calamities be overpast". Psa. lxi. 1-4, "I will trust in the covert of Thy wings".

What a wonderful thing it is that you and I today can echo the words of David and find refuge, aye, and courage and strength beneath the shelter of those wings. Whenever we have doubts or fears; whenever we have failed; whenever we are depressed or overwhelmed, what a source of strength it is to be able to shelter beneath His wings.

Isaiah's words in chapter xl. leap to our mind in this connection:

> "Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? there is no searching of His understanding. He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might He increaseth strength. Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall: But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint" (Isa. xl. 28-31).

> "And he said, Who art Thou? And she answered, I am Ruth thine handmaid: spread therefore thy skirt over thine handmaid; for thou art a near kinsman. And he said, Blessed be thou of the Lord, my daughter: for thou hast shewed more kindness in the latter end than at the beginning, inasmuch as thou followedst not young men, whether poor or rich. And now, my daughter, fear not; I will do to thee all that thou requirest: for all the city of my people doth know that thou art a virtuous woman" (Ruth iii. 9-11).

This answer of Boaz to Ruth's request is in itself sufficient proof of the view he took of her conduct, and of the integrity of his own. Naomi had perceived aright, his feelings of respect and admiration had grown into a sincere and genuine affection, but it could well have been that because of the difference in their ages, he would never have declared his love. His words show how closely he had been watching her, and he warmly commends her for the way she had behaved during the harvesting. Evidently Boaz had been keenly interested in finding out all he could about Ruth. Everyone who knew her had a good word to say about her. Only recently arrived in Bethlehem as a foreigner, she would be closely watched, yet she was known as a virtuous woman. This gives us quite clearly the sort of person Ruth was. Boaz knowing the strength of her character, her willingness to toil in the heat and the sun, the sweetness of her disposition, and the courage and loyalty of her heart, was quite willing to perform the kinsman-redeemer's part: "I will do to thee all that thou requirest . . . . .".

> "And now it is true that I am thy near kinsman: howbeit there is a kinsman nearer than I. Tarry this night, and it shall be in the morning, that if he will perform unto thee the part of a kinsman, well; let him do the kinsman's part: but if he will not do the part of a kinsman to thee, then will I do the part of a kinsman to thee, as the Lord liveth: lie down until the morning" (iii. 12-13).

There was one difficulty however relating to his elder brother. "There is a kinsman that is nearer than I". According to the Law, the redemption of land in Israel, and the raising up of children, had to be done by the eldest son in the family. Redemption could only be effected by the next of kin. However Boaz probably knew perfectly well that the question of marrying a Moabitess would be a stumbling block in his brother's way. He therefore promises to perform the office of the kinsman-redeemer himself should his brother fail to do so.

So in the early morning Ruth returns to Naomi, taking with her a generous supply of grain. Needless to say Naomi is anxious to know how she had got on. Ruth tells her, and is obviously not a little anxious as to how the matter will be settled. Naomi comforts her with the words in verse 18:

> "Then said she, Sit still, my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall: for the man will not be in rest, until he have finished the thing this day."

How wise this mother-in-law is and how well she knows the human heart. Boaz was in love and therefore would brook no delay. That very day Ruth would have the answer.

Chapter iv.

> "Then went Boaz up to the gate, and sat him down there: and, behold, the kinsman of whom Boaz spake came by; unto whom he said, Ho, such a one! turn aside, sit down here. And he turned aside, and sat down" (iv. 1).

The gate of a city was the meeting place where the councilors sat and where all public transactions were carried out. We read in Job xxix. 7-9:

> "When to the city's gate I made my way, and in the open place prepared my seat; the young men saw me, and withdrew themselves; yea, all the elders (or aldermen) would rise up, and stand. The rulers, too, from talking would refrain, and lay their hand, for silence, on their mouth . . . . ." (see the Companion Bible).

That was Job's exalted position among the alderman and princes of the city before his affliction.

Boaz too without doubt would hold an important position among the councilors of Bethlehem, for he was a mighty man of wealth, and grandson to Nahshon, a former prince of Judah.

Boaz knew where he would find his brother. We do not read of this brother's name, but he had the opportunity of being able to redeem Elimelech's inheritance, and although he did not know it, to be knit into the lineage of the Lord Jesus Christ.

So Boaz contacted his brother at this meeting place, and obtained the services of ten other councilors to act as witnesses in order to make the transaction legal. In Lev. xxv. and Deut. xxv. 5-10 there is clearly set out God's law given to Moses before the nation entered Canaan concerning the selling of land in Israel:

> "If brethren dwell together, and one of them die, and have no child, the wife of the dead shall not marry without unto a stranger: her husband's brother shall go in unto her, and take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of an husband's brother unto her. And it shall be, that the firstborn which she beareth shall succeed in the name of his brother which is dead, that his name be not put out of Israel. And if the man like not to take his brother's wife, then let his brother's wife go up to the gate unto the elders, and say, My husband's brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel, he will not perform the duty of my husband's brother. Then the elders of his city shall call him, and speak unto him: and if he stand to it, and say, I like not to take her; then shall his brother's wife come unto him in the presence of the elders, and loose his shoe from off his foot, and spit in his face, and shall answer and say, So shall it be done unto that man that will not build up his brother's house. And his name shall be called in Israel, The house of him that hath his shoe loosed" (Deut. xxv. 5-10).

Each family in each of the tribes were given a portion of land, and the law commanded that no man could sell that possession in perpetuity (see Lev. xxv. 8-19, 23-28). In the year of Jubile, every fiftieth year, all land that had been sold reverted back to the original owner. Land however could be redeemed by the kinsman-redeemer at any time.

Now Naomi was not thinking so much of the land she had lost, as for the happiness and future security of her daughter-in-law, who had done, and was doing so much for her. She recognized the splendid match that Ruth would make if Boaz would marry her.

Now things were really moving. Boaz was anxious to get the matter settled immediately.

> "And he said unto the kinsman, Naomi, that is come again out of the country of Moab, selleth a parcel of land, which was our brother Elimelech's: and I thought to advertise thee, saying, Buy it before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people. If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it: but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me, that I may know: for there is none to redeem it beside thee; and I am after thee. And he said, I will redeem it" (iv. 3-4).

The present tense in verse 3 suggests that the sale is taking place at that time, that Naomi was selling the land perhaps in order to obtain money to live on. It seems more logical to suggest that Elimelech had disposed of his land before he took his family away to Moab during the famine. Over ten years had gone by before Naomi came back. Had it not been sold imagine the condition of it, if it had been left neglected all that time. Boaz is saying "the portion of land which belonged to our brother Elimelech and was sold, it must now be redeemed because Naomi had returned to Bethlehem". The word 'advertise' in verse 4 rings strangely in our ears, the literal translation reads "I will reveal in your ear". The word is stronger than merely 'to tell', "bring to your notice" perhaps.

The elder brother was the next of kin, the kinsman-redeemer, and as such he was the one who had the right to redeem the inheritance. Therefore he had to be given the opportunity. He immediately agrees to do so. It would be a first-class investment. He had plenty of men to clear the land and prune the vines and olives. Nothing would suit him better.

> "Then said Boaz, What day thou buyest the field of the hand of Naomi, thou must buy it also of Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of the dead, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance" (iv. 5).

Here was the problem. When the person who had bought the land from Elimelech had been paid off, it would be necessary to meet Naomi's daughter-in-law's claim on the inheritance. She as the widow of Elimelech's son Mahlon must be married so that a son might be born to carry on the dead man's name in Israel.

> "And the kinsman said, I cannot redeem it for myself, lest I mar mine own inheritance: redeem thou my right to thyself; for I cannot redeem it" (iv. 6).

What did he mean "lest I mar my inheritance"? In the three other occurrences where this word is used, the sense is "to corrupt". Josephus explains by saying that he already had a wife and feared the discord that may arise should he take a woman of Moab into his household. On the other hand the redemption of the land would involve withdrawing money from the kinsman's own estate, but the possession thus acquired would not belong to him or his present family, but to Ruth's son, should she have one. In the eyes of the law the son of Mahlon would inherit the land. It would therefore be like mortgaging one's own estate for the benefit of another. So the brother relinquishes all claim as the next of kin with the words "redeem thou my right to thyself".

Boaz and his elder brother then follow a custom that was even then ancient in Israel, whenever the redemption of land was to be confirmed. "A man plucked off his shoe and gave it to his neighbour, and this was a testimony in Israel." (God gave this command to Moses in Deut. xxv. 9). To place one's shoe upon anything was a symbol of possession. To take off one's shoe and pass it to another was a symbol of transference, of transferred authority. The idea behind the act is that the man resigns the right of walking on the land as master, in favour of him to whom he gives the shoe.

> "Therefore the kinsman said unto Boaz, Buy it for thee. So he drew off his shoe. And Boaz said unto the elders, and unto all the people, Ye are witnesses this day, that I have bought all that was Elimelech's, and all that was Chilion's and Mahlon's, of the hand of Naomi. Moreover Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of Mahlon, have I purchased to be my wife, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance, that the name of the dead be not cut off from among his brethren, and from the gate of his place: ye are witnesses this day. And all the people that were in the gate, and the elders, said, We are witnesses. The Lord make the woman that is come into thine house like Rachel and Leah, which two did build the house of Israel: and do thou worthily in Ephratah, and be famous in Bethlehem: and let thy house be like the house of Pharez, whom Tamar bare unto Judah, of the seed which the Lord shall give thee of this young woman" (iv. 8-12).

So Boaz swears to undertake the part of kinsman-redeemer and to purchase Ruth to be his wife, and to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance. So Boaz married Ruth, and fulfilled the obligation required by the law by redeeming the land, the inheritance owned by her family.

> "So Boaz took Ruth, and she was his wife: and when he went in unto her, the Lord gave her conception, and she bare a son. And the women said unto Naomi, Blessed be the Lord which hath not left thee this day without a kinsman, that his name may be famous in Israel. And he shall be unto thee a restorer of thy life, and a nourisher of thine old age: for thy daughter-in-law which loveth thee which is better to thee than seven sons, hath born him" (iv. 13-15).

In course of time a son was born, given Ruth in accordance with the plan and purpose of God. His hand was making sure of this union. For this son was to take his place in the lineage of David, and so of David's great Son. The women congratulated Naomi because it was the family of her husband that was being sustained and built up in Israel. How handsomely they speak of Ruth—recalling the courage, loyalty, faithfulness and love shown by her when she left her own people and brought Naomi safely home from Moab. Recalling also the unselfish way she had worked and provided for her aged mother-in-law ". . . . . who loveth thee, and is better to thee than seven sons". Here is fulsome praise indeed for the devotion and love displayed by Ruth. She and Rahab, Gentiles both, bravely take their places among the distinguished line of Jewish women chosen by God through whom should come His promised Messiah.

> "And Naomi took the child, and laid it in her bosom, and became nurse into it. And the women her neighbours gave it a name, saying, There is a son born to Naomi, and they called his name Obed: he is the father of Jesse, the father of David" (iv. 16-17).

It was the women who chose the name of the baby boy—they called him "Obed"—the meaning of which is "serving" or "a servant". The Prince of Wales has a motto which has a similar meaning, "Ich Dien"—I serve. The most wonderful thing this world has to offer is the coming of the desire in our hearts to serve our Heavenly Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. This desire does not come until we realize something of the love of God, Who in the Person and Work of the Lord Jesus Christ gave Himself, an offering for sin, the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.

Only when we understand a little of the cost of that sacrifice, and that it vitally affects us, does the desire to serve Him become the burden of our heart, our mind, our will.

So when faith in His faithfulness, and belief in His Work lead us to acknowledge Him as our Saviour, the Holy Spirit seals us as a child of God, and the desire to serve Him is born. The Lord Jesus Christ performed the lowly and menial task of washing the disciples feet. This act of service was to be something they would remember with awe when He ascended up out of their sight. It is a mighty good thing for us to remember, and to continually reflect upon, the condescension of the almighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace.

Just as the Gospel of Matthew presents the Lord Jesus Christ as King, whose symbol is the Lion, Luke presents Him as the Man, John as God and Mark presents Him as the Servant. The lion, the man, the eagle and the ox were the four faces of the four "living creatures" of Ezek. i., the cherubim of Gen. iii., which speaks to us of paradise lost, and in the Book of Revelation where they speak of paradise regained.

There are four other Obeds mentioned in Scripture. The father of Jehu was one. Another was one of David's valiant men. Another was son of Shemaiah, a Kohathite, a gate keeper of the Tabernacle in the days of David. Another was the father of Ahaziah, a captain, who helped Jehoiada the priest to make Joash king of Judah. All were good men who were loyal servants of God and the people.

Obed the son of Ruth and Boaz takes his place as the father of Jesse, who was the father of David.

He was indeed fortunate, for he was without doubt brought up in the fear of the Lord and in a family atmosphere of love and understanding.

> "Now these are the generations of Pharez: Pharez begat Hezron, and Hezron begat Ram, and Ram begat Amminadab, and Amminadab begat Nahshon, and Nahshon begat Salmon, and Salmon begat Boaz, and Boaz begat Obed, and Obed begat Jesse, and Jesse begat David" (iv. 18-22).

Pharez was the son of Judah and Tamar. Amminadab was a name of note. It was his daughter Elisheba who became the wife of Aaron and the mother of Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar. So this delightful Book links up the days of the Judges to the times of Samuel. It is an interlude where faith and love shine out in the midst of failure and apostasy. Surely here the God of Israel points to the faith of the young woman from Moab—in much the same way as when in the flesh He drew attention to the faith of the centurion. That Roman officer came to the Lord and appealed for His help to heal his servant who had been afflicted by paralysis. The Lord offered to go and heal him, but the centurion replied that he was not a fit person for the Lord to enter his house. He could not have meant socially, so could this refer to his manner of life? Did this foreigner recognize in the Healer the Son of the One True God? We read that the Lord marveled, and said to those who followed Him, "Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel" (Matt. viii. 10).

So the Book of Ruth ends with the generations from Pharez to David. We have found in its pages the incredible fact that God would have to take upon Himself flesh and blood in order to redeem mankind. There was no other way for either Jew or Gentile to enter into possession of their inheritance. We know that He came as our Kinsman-Redeemer, laid down His Life, rose from the dead, ascended, and is now seated in the glory. May the faithfulness of Ruth be an inspiration to each one of us in these days when so many seem to do that which is right in their own eyes.

> ". . . . . the Father which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light: Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of His dear Son: in Whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins" (Col. i. 12-14).

Christian Attitudes

No.7. Prayerfulness.
pp. 13 - 15

"Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving" (Col. iv. 2).

Stuart Allen, in the Editorial of the May 1981 issue of the Berean Expositor quoted this text and point out that intercession was a vital part of Paul's ministry. Several times Paul writes that he prayed "without ceasing" for others. The Editorial continues:

> "When one thinks of the immense burden he carried, can it be that he is exaggerating? No, for he had learned that prayer is the lifting up of the mind through Christ to the Father and this can be done at any time and in all circumstances."

In other words, while it is good to set aside time for prayer, we can only pray continually if we have the attitude of mind that lifts itself up to God in prayer at all times.

Nehemiah was the king's cupbearer. He stood before the king, took up the wine and gave it to him. But he was sad and the king noticed it. When the king asked, "Why is thy countenance sad, seeing that thou art not sick?" Nehemiah was afraid (Neh. ii. 2). He told the king of the desolation of the city of Jerusalem and the king replied "For what dost thou make request?". And we read, "So I prayed to the God of heaven, and I said unto the king . . . . ." (Neh. ii. 4, 5). There was no time to kneel down and pray. Only a moment in which to lift up the mind to God in prayer and then to reply to the king. This is an excellent example of the attitude of mind which we should endeavour to maintain.

There are several words for prayer conveying different aspects.

> "I will exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men" (I Tim. ii. 1).

The word for supplication indicates a beseeching prayer, while prayer means the pouring out of prayer. Intercession is when we pray for others and intercede for them.

In several passages we find that prayer and supplications are linked:

> "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication" (Acts i. 14).
> "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints, and for me . . . . ." (Eph. vi. 18, 19).
> "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God" (Phil. iv. 6).

While it is important that we should pray (or intercede) for one another, even as Paul prayed for the saints (and asked them to pray for him) we often feel our inadequacy. "We know not what we should pray for as we ought" (Rom. viii. 26). Let us be comforted by the fact that the Spirit makes intercession for us (Rom. viii. 26, 27). Furthermore, Romans viii. 34 tells us that the risen Christ also makes intercession for us.

In the very early issues of Joints and Bands (numbers 2-17) there are brief articles by Stuart Allen on prayer which are worthy of reprinting. The following points have been taken from those articles:

> "Continue in prayer" means to persevere, to concentrate, and regard prayer as a matter of urgency.
>
> "Epaphras . . . . . labouring fervently for you in prayers" (Col. iv. 12). The intense prayers of Epaphras are indicated by the literal translation of 'labouring fervently'—which is 'agonizing'. He agonized in prayer.
>
> The word to 'watch' means to be on the alert, to refrain from sleep. The reverse of watching is given in Acts xii. 5-16 where we read of Peter being in prison and prayer was made without ceasing for him. But when he was released from prison and knocked at the door, he had to wait because they did not believe that their prayers had been answered.

When should we pray? Pray without ceasing! Be in constant communion with the Lord under all circumstances. Stuart Allen writes:

> "Effective prayer puts God first, others second, self last."
> "Effective prayer is based on the Word of God."

When David prayed to the Lord, after he was told that Solomon would build the house of the Lord, and that the house of David would be established for ever, David prayed "Do as thou hast said" (II Sam. vii. 25). As David based his prayer on the promise he had received of the Lord, so let us base our prayers on the promises that the Lord has made to us and pray with thanksgiving.

Our Lord Jesus Christ often prayed to His Father and we have many examples of His prayers. He prayed "Thy will be done". As we pray, may we always pray, not that we should have our own way, but that the will of the Lord may be done.

Paul also is an example for us as he prayed and submitted his life to the will of the Lord. May we ever rejoice that we have access to the Father:

> "For through Him we have both access by one Spirit unto the Father" (Eph. ii. 18).
> "No man cometh unto the Father, but by me" (John xiv. 6).

So it is very important that one of our Christian attitudes should be prayerfulness. How often we fail in this! Let us remember that prayer is an essential part of our spiritual life. May we lift up our hearts and minds to God in prayer and realize His presence with us throughout the day.

> "Continue (as a matter of urgency) in prayer and watch (be on the alert) in the same with thanksgiving" (Col. iv. 2).

No.8. Confidence.
pp. 30 - 32

"In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence" (Prov. xiv. 26).

Some people by nature are shy, timid, reserved and perhaps apprehensive. Others are strong characters and have self confidence. Those who are timid need words of encouragement, while those who are self assured need to consider the basis of their confidence, remembering that it is easy for a strong character to become proud.

In the O.T. references to the faint hearted indicate that they are of little use when the enemy must be faced:

> "And the officers shall speak further unto the people, and they shall say, What man is there that is fearful and fainthearted? Let him go and return unto his house, lest his brethren's heart faint as well as his heart" (Deut. xx. 8).

Gideon was appointed by God to deliver Israel but his army was too large, lest Israel should say "Mine own hand saved me". So Gideon told those who were fearful and afraid to return home, and twenty-two thousand left the field, leaving ten thousand. But God said that even these were too many (Judges vii. 1-7).

When Joshua was appointed to lead Israel, the Lord spoke words of encouragement:--

> "Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed; for the Lord thy God is with thee withersoever thou goest" (Josh. i. 9).

Paul wrote to Timothy "Fight the good fight of faith" (I Tim. vi. 12) and he urged him to be strong:

> "Thou therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus" (II Tim. ii. 1).

Israel had to fight their enemies, but we are engaged in a different kind of warfare. It is a spiritual conflict. For us, we have to run the race that is set out before us. We need confidence; we need strength, but not a confidence that arises from self esteem. Our source of strength must be found through Christ:

> "and such trust have we through Christ to God-ward: not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God" (II.Cor.iii.4,5).

There are two references in Proverbs to confidence:--

> "For the Lord shall be thy confidence . . . . ." (Prov. iii. 26).
> "The fear of the Lord is strong confidence . . . . ." (Prov. xiv. 26).

But there is also a word of warning:--

> "confidence in an unfaithful man in time of trouble is like a broken tooth, and a foot out of joint" (Prov. xxv. 19).

If we are to be confident, our trust must be placed in the Lord Who is worthy of our confidence.

Paul could have had a confidence based on his Jewish birth and faith, but he rejected this:

> "For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh" (Phil. iii. 3).

He counted as loss for Christ all those claims he had in the flesh, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord, that he might gain Christ (Phil. iii. 7, 8).

In his daily life, he relied on the strength that he received from God:--

> ". . . . . all men forsook me . . . . . notwithstanding, the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me . . . . ." (II Tim. iv. 16, 17).

Timothy was a faithful man, but it seems that he needed some words of encouragement. So we find in the letters that Paul wrote to him several messages to urge him onward in his life and ministry. Here are some of those words of exhortation:--

> "Let no man despise thy youth" (I Tim. iv. 12).
> "Neglect not the gift that is in thee" (I Tim. iv. 14).
> "Stir up the gift of God" (II Tim. i. 6).
> "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind" (II Tim. i. 7).
> "Be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus" (II Tim. ii. 1).

So if any are by nature timid and at times suffer from depression, or any kind of fear, consider the advice given to Timothy. God has not given us the spirit of fear, but may we be confident since we have received the gift of grace that is in Christ Jesus. His strength is sufficient for our every need.

Let us rejoice in the wonderful privilege we have which enables us to approach the Father, for we have access by one Spirit unto the Father (Eph. ii. 18).

> "In Whom (Christ Jesus our Lord) we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of Him. Wherefore I desire that ye faint not at my tribulations for you . . . . ." (Eph. iii. 12, 13).

There are several passages in Philippians that speak of confidence and trust, so in conclusion, let us remember these words:--

> "Be confident of this very thing, that He that hath begun a good work in you will perform it (complete it) until the day of Jesus Christ" (Phil. i. 6).

If we are timid, let us not be faint-hearted. Let us rely on the strength that the Lord Jesus Christ will give us, for our sufficiency is in Him. We may feel inadequate as we try to run the race and fight the good fight of faith. But may we remember that He has begun the good work in our hearts, and we rely on His grace. That good work which He initiated will be completed by Him. So then let us be of good courage, let us have confidence, not in ourselves, but in Him.

> "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might" (Eph. vi. 10).

No.9. Discrimination or Discernment.
pp. 51 - 53

"That ye may approve things that are excellent" (Phil. i. 10).

The Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream and said to him "Ask what I shall give thee". His answer is given in I Kings iii. 6-9. Verse 9 reads:

> "Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy so great a people?".

God approved of this reply and gave Solomon a wise and understanding heart.

Although we do not have to shoulder responsibility as great as Solomon, each one of us needs an understanding heart, so that we can discern between good and bad. If our lives are to be in line with God's will, we need guidance and wisdom. And if we are to know the deeper things of God, and His will and purpose for us, to know the hope of His calling, we need the leading of the Holy Spirit and the spirit of wisdom.

In order to make the right choice between good and bad, and to understand deeper things that God will reveal to us, we must learn how to test or try all things.

> "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good" (I Thess. v. 21).
> "And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God" (Rom. xii. 2).

Not only do we need to test or prove all things, we also need to test ourselves:

> "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves" (II Cor. xiii. 5).
> "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself. But let every man prove his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another" (Gal. vi. 2-4).

In Ephesians we read about the worthy walk:

> "For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light; (for the fruit of the Spirit [or light] is in all goodness and righteousness and truth) proving what is acceptable unto the Lord" (Eph. v. 8-10).

So then our Christian attitude should be to prove or test all things, so that we can choose what is good, and what is acceptable to the Lord in our daily lives.

It is right that we should learn what is good, but we read in Hebrews about some things which are better. Here are some examples:--

> "For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God" (Heb. vii. 19).
>
> "By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament" (Heb. vii. 22).
>
> "It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these" (Heb. ix. 23).
>
> ". . . . . took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance" (Heb. x. 34).
>
> ". . . . . others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection" (Heb. xi. 35).

To appreciate the values of spiritual things, we need more than an agile brain. The natural man may be clever, but it is only by the enlightenment of the Holy Spirit that we can assess spiritual things, for they are spiritually discerned:

> "Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (I Cor. ii. 12-14).

The need for the wisdom that we receive from God is emphasized in the prayer that Paul prayed for the Ephesians, so let us refer to Eph. i. 16-23. We will only quote verses 17-19 to save space:--

> "That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him: the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of His calling, and what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of His power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of His mighty power . . . . .".

So if we are to understand what is the hope of His calling, we need enlightenment, we need the spirit of wisdom and revelation. Writing to the Philippians, Paul told them of his prayer that their love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in judgment (intelligence) "that ye may approve things that are excellent . . . . ." (Phil. i. 10). The margin gives the translation "that ye may try the things that differ". In Ephesians we read that we are raised up together and "made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus" (Eph. ii. 6).

As we try the things that differ and so approve things that are excellent, we see that we have a hope at the right hand of God where Christ sits (Col. iii. 1-4).

No.10. Submission.
pp. 86 - 88

"For even Christ pleased not Himself" (Rom. xv. 3).

There is a Sunday School prayer that begins:

> "Lord Jesus, be Thou with us now > as at Thy feet we humbly bow,
> And when we sing and when we pray
> Help us to mean the words we say . . . . .".

In the hymn "Thy way not mine, O Lord" there are prayers such as "Choose out the path for me. Smooth let it be or rough . . . . ." and "Take Thou my cup and it with joy or sorrow fill". But when we sing these words, do we really mean them?

So when we think of submission, and submission to the will of the Lord, we ask whether we are giving an intellectual assent, without really meaning that we are willing to submit ourselves to God's will. Would it be true to say that we make mental reservations when we say "Thy will be done"?

The Greek word hypotasso is translated in various ways, such as to submit, be subject to, be in subject to, be in subjection to, etc. Young's Concordance gives the rendering "to set in array under" and this seems to convey an orderly structure.

The description in I Cor. xv. of the ultimate subjection and submission of all things to God is an example of an orderly structure. All things will be put under the feet of the Lord Jesus Christ, although Heb. ii. 8 points out that we do not yet see all things under Him. Christ must reign until He has put all enemies under His feet. The last enemy to be destroyed is death. When all things are subdued unto Him, then we read "the Son also Himself shall be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all" (I Cor. xv. 24-28). See also Eph. i. 10 and 22.

We are instructed to recognize and be subject to the powers that be and this is another orderly structure. We should render to all their dues, we should pay our taxes, and render honour to whom honour is due (see Rom. xiii. 1-8). Hebrews xiii. 17 repeats this principle, "Obey them that have the rule over you and submit yourselves . . . . .". See also I Pet. ii. 13-14.

The submission of the church to Christ is introduced as an example of the relationship that should exist between husband and wife. Eph. v. 24-25 reads:

> "Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave Himself for it . . . . .".

Some wives do not like the idea of obeying their husbands, but if the husbands give themselves as Christ loved the church and gave Himself for it, wives may be more willing to 'submit' to their husbands. For who could resist a loving husband who followed Christ in such devotion and care?

Let us mention very briefly other examples of submission:

(a) Submission to ministers of the gospel (I Cor. xvi. 15, 16).
(b) Submission to one another (Eph. v. 21).
(c) Submission of the younger to the elder (I Pet. v. 5).

If our Christian attitude is to be in line with the teaching of the Word of God, we need to be humble in mind, and give every possible consideration to others. We cannot insist on our "rights" but be willing to give up and submit as we seek to know the mind and will of God.

As a boy Jesus Christ was subject to His parents (Luke ii. 51) and He was an example to children.

But surely, the finest example of submission is found as we study the life of Christ. He came down, not to do His will, but the will of the Father (read John vi. 38-40). Even Christ pleased not Himself, as we read in Romans:

> "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbour for his good to edification. For even Christ pleased not Himself; but as it is written, 'the reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on Me'." (Rom. xv. 1-3).

Paul wrote to the Corinthians:

> "Give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God: even as I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved" (I Cor. x. 32, 33).

There is of course a danger if our desire is only to please men; Paul made it clear that loyalty to the truth came first and before his desire to please men. We find this corrective in Gal. i. 9, 10:

> "As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed. For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? For if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ."

The carnal mind is enmity against God for it is not subject to the will of God, neither indeed can be (Rom. viii. 7). But we are not "in the flesh" but in the Spirit if the Spirit of God dwells in us.

If our Christian attitude in regard to submission is to be as it should be, we need the help and guidance of the Holy Spirit. Our prayer, like Paul's in Acts ix. 6 should be "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?". If we are to show a spirit of submission to the Lord, to those who minister to us, to those around us, as well as to the powers that be, we certainly need help. Surely we all wish to do the will of the Lord, but have we the strength and the courage?

> "Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure" (Philippians ii. 12, 13).

We need the strength—and we have been promised that God works in us and gives us the strength we need. So let us take courage.

Renew my will from day to day
Blend it with Thine, and take away all that now makes it hard to say,
"Thy will be done".

No.11. Peace.
pp. 106 - 109

"Let the peace of God rule in your hearts . . . . ." (Col. iii. 15).

Some years ago, the writer received a visitor from Israel and during the interview, a telephone call came through for the visitor. Evidently, his wife was speaking to him and at the end of the call, the visitor said "Shalom" and replaced the telephone receiver. So even now, "Peace" is a salutation that is still in use. At the beginning and end of some of the epistles, we find this greeting of "Peace". After the resurrection, our Lord appeared to the disciples and said "Peace be unto you" (John xx. 19, 21, 26).

If there is to be peace, there must be a complete and mutual understanding and if any division or difference has occurred, there must be reconciliation. Sin created a barrier between us and God and so sin had to be dealt with, so that reconciliation could take place. Rom. iii. quotes, "There is none righteous, no, not one" (verse 10). But although all have sinned and come short of the glory of God, we can rejoice that we are justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus.

Romans iv. 25 introduces resurrection. It reads:

> "Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification."

This leads on to Rom. v. 1:

> "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

So our peace comes to us through faith, and as a result of our Lord's victory over sin and death in His resurrection. We can never thank Him enough for all that He has done for us, and for our peace with God. (We do not make our peace with God for He has already done it for us.)

Not only do we have peace with God but we can enjoy the peace of God which keeps and garrisons our hearts and minds:

> "Be careful for nothing . . . . . prayer . . . . . thanksgiving . . . . . requests made known unto God . . . . . And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep (garrison) your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus" (Phil. iv. 6, 7).
> "Let the peace of God rule in your hearts" (Col. iii. 15).

Added to this is the promise that the God of peace shall be with us.

> "Now the God of peace be with you all" (Rom. xv. 33).
> "Those things which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do: and the God of peace shall be with you" (Phil. iv. 9).

There are eleven references to peace in Romans. In Ephesians, we find 8 occurrences and here we find a dispensational aspect. The middle wall of partition separated the Jew and Gentile. But of the two, Christ has made (or created) one new man. "The both" has been reconciled to God in one body by the cross. Mr. Charles H. Welch expounds this in detail in The Berean Expositor Volume X, pages 177-180. We can only touch upon the truth in this article. Here is an outline of the 8 passages where "peace" occurs.

A | i. 2. Grace and peace (salutation).
B | ii. 14. He is our peace (the Head).
C | ii. 15. The twain.—One new man.
D | ii. 17. Preached peace—those far off.
D | ii. 17. Preached peace—those nigh.
C | iv. 3. Unity—the bond of peace.
B | vi. 15. Gospel of peace (feet shod).
A | vi. 23. Peace and love (benediction).

Let us rejoice that He is our Peace. He has created the one new man, but in the practical section, we are enjoined to "endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace". Satan seeks to divide us and we need to be on our guard. Hence Paul says "endeavour" to keep the unity for there may be times when this is not easy.

Now let us revert to Rom. viii. 6, 7 which says:

> "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. The carnal mind is enmity against God . . . . .".

We are all aware of the conflict between the flesh & the spirit and Rom. vii. & viii. contain much about this.

But in our national life, we are faced with many problems, inflation, unemployment, etc., so much so that some people no longer listen to the news or read the papers. Their minds are greatly disturbed by the "news". Voices are raised declaring that this or that is the solution to our national problems. But earthly wisdom is not enough to enable a solution to be found. When Christ returns, He alone will be able to show the right solution. He can heal the differences between the nations and the internal differences too. But even when He returns there will be opposition to His rule until all things are put under His feet.

One of Christ's names is the Prince of Peace.

As we conclude, let us remember the picture of the storm at sea when Christ was asleep on a pillow in the boat (Mark iv. 35-41). The boat was full of water as the waves washed over it.

> "Master, carest Thou not that we perish?" cried the disciples. "And He arose, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still" (Literally, "Silence, be quiet!").

As the storms of life break over us, we too may be afraid or at least, the peace of our minds may be disturbed. The outlook for this material world is indeed grim. We need to hear the reassuring voice of the Lord so that our minds may have peace.

Should we not have that inward peace that only God can give? Whatever the "outward" may be, our peace should remain. Why? Because we have peace with God. Because we should let the peace of God rule in our hearts, and because the God of peace is with us.

> "Let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom . . . . ." (Col. iii. 15, 16).

No.12. Sympathy.
pp. 122 - 125

"So if there is any encouragement in Christ, any incentive of love, any participation in the Spirit, any affection and sympathy, complete my job by being of the same mind . . . . ." (Phil. ii. 1, 2, R.S.V.).

"If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be likeminded . . . . ." (Phil. ii. 1, 2, A.V.).

There are some people who have been given a sympathetic nature; they are good listeners, and inspire others with hope and confidence. It has been said that one cannot sympathize fully unless the experience has been shared. For example, one who has had a nervous breakdown can sympathize with a person suffering from the illness in a way that is impossible for one who has always been strong and healthy. So it may not be easy for everyone to sympathize in depth; yet we should be compassionate to all.

The dictionary gives sympathy – Fellow feeling, compassion.

The A.V. does not seem to contain the word "sympathy" but in the Greek we find the word sumpatheo which occurs twice in Hebrews. So let us begin by looking at these two references:

> "For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin" (Heb. iv. 15).

The literal translation is:

> "We have not a high priest not able to sympathize with our infirmities, but (Who) has been tempted in all things according to (our) likeness, apart from sin" or we may say "sin excepted".

Our Lord has lived on this earth as a man, and experienced all kinds of suffering and deprivation. Surely He could say, "I too have been through it all and I know about your particular experience" and so He fully sympathizes with us.

Paul tells the Hebrews that he knew how they sympathized with him, and had experienced loss similar to his own losses. The literal translation begins "For both with my bonds, ye sympathized . . . . .". The A.V. reads:

> "For ye had compassion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance" (Heb. x. 34).

Then in Peter's epistle, he writes that we should extend compassion to one another:

> "Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous" (I Pet. iii. 8).

The literal translation is:

> "Finally, all being of one mind, sympathizing, loving the brethren, tender hearted, friendly . . . . .".

This then should be our attitude of mind, being sympathetic one to another.

The Greek word sumpascho means to suffer together, and this is an extension of the thought that we should sympathize.

> "And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it" (I Cor. xii. 26).

Paul is writing about the members of a body and shows how each member shares with the experiences of any one member. This word also occurs in Romans where Paul writes about the sharing of the sufferings of Christ. He writes:

> "And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together" (Rom. viii. 17).

Paul writing to the Philippians explains how he counted all things loss for Christ, and he was willing to suffer the loss of all things in order that he might win Christ. He continues:

> "That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto his death" (Phil. iii. 10).

Our Lord has shared in our experiences, and now He asks us to share with Him for we are united with Him. We need strength if we are to suffer with Christ, but first Paul points out that we have the power of His resurrection which is the enabling power, so that we can share with our Lord.

We have seen how the Lord has compassion on the people and on us. Paul received sympathy from those who suffered as he did. We have read how we should have sympathy with one another and how the members of a body share. We have gone further and seen that we may share in the Lord's sufferings.

Let us conclude by the words written by Paul in II Cor. i. 3-7 concerning the God of all comfort:

(1) Who comforts us
(2) and enables us to comfort others.

> "Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort; Who comforteth us in all our tribulations, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God. For as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ. And whether we be afflicted, it is for your consolation and salvation, which is effectual in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer: or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation. And our hope of you is stedfast, knowing, that as ye are partakers of the sufferings, so shall ye be also of the consolation."

No.13. Graciousness.
pp. 142 - 145

"And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you" (Eph. iv. 32).

Paul was an example to us. "Be ye followers together of me" he wrote to the Philippians (Phil. iii. 17). In Eph. v. 1 he wrote "Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children" while in I Cor. xi. 1 he says "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ". It is evident that a high standard of conduct is demanded of us.

In Eph. iv. 32, which we have quoted above, we are enjoined to forgive one another even as God for Christ's sake has forgiven us. The word translated 'forgive' means "to be gracious to" and so the message is that as Christ has shown grace to us, so we should be gracious to others.

This brings us back to the grace by which we are saved, and this basic doctrine has its practical implications.

Paul wrote in Phil. iii. 1, "To write the same things to you is not irksome to me, and it is safe for you" (R.S.V.) so we may not hesitate to go back to elementary things which we surely know, but rather be willing to meditate on what Christ has done for us, knowing that our practice should balance the doctrine.

So let us remind ourselves of the 12 occurrences of the word 'grace' in Ephesians.

The epistle begins and ends with a salutation and benediction of 'grace'. In chap. i., we are reminded that we have been blessed with every blessing that is spiritual in heavenly places. We have been chosen in Him, and blameless before Him, we have been predestinated unto the adoption of children according to the good pleasure of His will, to the praise of the glory of His grace.

We have been accepted in the Beloved, we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of His grace.

Then, passing to chapter ii., we are reminded of God's great love; we have been quickened together with Christ, and have been raised up together, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ, that in the ages to come, He might show us the exceeding riches of His grace toward us through Christ Jesus.

Twice we are told "By grace are ye saved" and our salvation does not depend on our own works, lest we should boast. But we have been created "unto good works" and those good works should be the fruit and not the basis of our salvation.

In chapter iii., Paul speaks of the dispensation of the grace of God given to him for us. Paul was the minister for the truth of the Mystery according to the gift of the grace of God, given to him by the effectual working of His power. Although Paul said he was the least of all saints, this grace was given to him so that he could preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ.

Then in chapter iv., we learn that to every one of us, grace is given according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Each one of us therefore has this gift of grace, whether in small or greater measure, and we have the responsibility to use this grace as we are given the opportunity. In verse 29, we are told that one of the practical outworkings of the grace of God given to us, should be in our speech. No corrupt word should pass our lips. Our words should edify so that we may minister grace to those who hear us. We may not be gifted speakers, we may not be preachers, but surely we do speak! And when we speak, our words should reflect the grace that God has placed in our hearts.

An outline of the 12 references to grace in Ephesians will summarize what we have tried to set out in our meditation and comments.

Charis* (grace).

A | i. 2. Grace to you.—Salutation.
B | i. 6. According as He hath chosen us to the praise of the glory of His grace. | a | i. 7. Accepted, redemption, forgiveness according to the riches of His grace.
b | ii. 5. By grace—saved.
a | ii. 7. Raised, seated together in heavenly places, the exceeding riches of His grace.
b | ii. 8. By grace—saved.
B | iii. 2. The Dispensation of the grace of God. |
a | iii. 7. Paul—minister—according to the gift of grace of God.
b | iii. 8. Grace given to preach.
a | iv. 7. Every one. Given grace according to the gift of Christ.
b | iv. 29. Minister grace to hearers.
A | vi. 24. Grace be with all who love in sincerity.—Benediction.

If our Christian attitude reflects the grace given to us, if we are followers of Paul even as he was of Christ, then this should be evident in our daily lives, in our speech, in our manner of life, and in our relationship with others. In Col. iii. 13, Paul is slightly more explicit. He says:

> ". . . . . longsuffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."

Words cannot adequately express our thanks and gratitude to the Lord Jesus Christ for what He has done for us. How can we reflect such grace in our lives? The last three chapters of Ephesians is a guide but even so, can we live up to this high standard? Ephesians vi. 10 says "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might". We are not in ourselves strong enough to live to this high standard and it is only as we receive the power and strength from Him that we may go on our way and be truly gracious.

No.14. Steadfastness.
pp. 163 - 165

"Be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord" (I Cor. xv. 58).

The Christian life has been likened to a race and the Christian to an athlete. The race is not like the 100 yards sprint but to the 10 miles long run, which is a feat of endurance.

Stedfast (which we now spell steadfast) means to be firm or constant. It means that there must be a continuation of effort and not a series of short bursts of energy. The long runner must not stop on the way to look around and enjoy the beautiful countryside, he must concentrate on running and look towards the end of the race.

We live in days when there are many influences which would cause us to turn aside. As this is written, there is an article in a magazine that discusses the decline in moral values and one reason given is the changing nature of Christian worship and teaching: "The salt has lost its flavour".

Today, we hear much about the social gospel and Christians are advised to participate in politics, with the thought that we are wise enough to be able to bring into being the kingdom of God. No mention is made of the return of Christ Who alone can bring into being the kingdom of God.

Let us see what the Scriptures have to say and what warnings are given to us in these days which are called perilous times.

We quote from the Revised Standard Version (R.S.V.):

> "Preach the word, be urgent in season and out of season, convince, rebuke, and exhort, be unfailing in patience and in teaching. For the time is coming when people will not endure sound teaching, but having itching ears they will accumulate for themselves teachers to suit their own likings, and will turn away from listening to the truth and wander into myths" (II Tim. iv. 2-4).

Paul says that we should not be like children tossed to and fro and carried about by every wind of doctrine. He warns that there are those who are cunning and whose object is to deceive (Eph. iv. 14). Those who are "tossed to and fro" are just the opposite of steadfast, firm and constant believers in Christ. We need to be on the alert as it is possible to handle the Scriptures deceitfully (II Cor. iv. 2), and by failing to rightly divide the Word, those who claim to be teachers might mislead the earnest seeker after truth.

Some of the dangers are expressed in Paul's letter to Timothy and we quote three references:

> "Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned: from which some having swerved have turned aside unto vain jangling; desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm" (I Tim. i. 5-7).
> "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called: which some professing have erred concerning the faith" (I Tim. vi. 20, 21).
> "Hymenaeus and Philetus; who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some" (II Tim. ii. 17, 18).

Seeing that there are so many dangers to the honest seeker after truth, how important it is to prove all things and to hold fast that which is good (I Thess. v. 21). As Paul wrote to Titus, we should hold fast the faithful word (Titus i. 9) and his advice to Timothy is even more appropriate today "Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus" (II Tim. i. 13).

We need to hold fast and to stand fast:

(1) "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong" (I Cor. xvi. 13).
(2) "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage" (Gal. v. 1).
(3) ". . . . . stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel" (Phil. i. 27).
(4) ". . . . . so stand fast in the Lord . . . . ." (Phil. iv. 1).

To be steadfast, we need to hold fast and to stand fast and we need to be established in the faith, for it is through the power of God that we are so established. "Now to Him that is of power to establish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ . . . . ." (Rom. xvi. 25).

The need for stability is expressed in Paul's letter to the Colossians. Again we quote from the R.S.V.: "provided that you continue in the faith, stable and steadfast, not shifting from the hope of the gospel which you heard . . . . ." (Colossians i. 23). See also Stuart Allen's comments on page 132 of Letters from Prison.

We must have a sure foundation and our faith must rest squarely on the Word of God, which leads us to the Living Word, our Lord Jesus Christ. We do need the help of teachers who are sound in the faith and how fortunate are those who have such sound teachers!

Before we conclude, let us remember Eph. vi. 13-18. We need to put on the whole armour of God that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil for we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, powers and other enemies. Three times we are told that we are "to stand". The description of the armour is given in this passage.

We conclude with I Cor. xv. 57, 58:

> "But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

No.15. Bereavement.
pp. 210 - 212

"The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord" (Job i. 21).

When our Lord walked this earth, He showed His love, concern and compassion for mankind. There are a number of remarkable examples, but two come quickly to mind when we think of bereavement. Let us look at them.

The widow of Nain. It is recorded in Luke vii. 11-17 that as Jesus approached the city of Nain, there was a funeral possession, for the only son of a widow had died and was being buried. Many people were expressing their sympathy by attending the funeral. The Lord saw the distress and sorrow of the widow and He had compassion on her. He went up to the widow and said "Weep not". At that stage, the procession halted, and Christ went towards the bier. The Lord Jesus gave an order, "Young man, I say to you, Arise". He who had been dead sat up, and began to speak.

The raising of Lazarus. The second example is even more strange. It is one of the eight signs recorded in the Gospel of John. There were two sisters, Martha and Mary, who had a brother named Lazarus, and Jesus Christ often visited them, for He loved all three. Lazarus fell seriously ill so the sisters sent a message to Jesus Christ. "Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick". Our Lord knew how ill he was, and that he would died within a few days but He did not hurry. He intended to raise him from the dead. In John xi. 4, 15 and 42 we have reasons for the delay. It was for the glory of God. It was to be an experience for the disciples so that they might believe. It was to be a proof that Jesus Christ was sent by the Father.

So when Jesus and the disciples arrived, Lazarus had been dead four days. The scene was one of great mourning and sadness, and our Lord was full of compassion and sympathy. He was deeply touched by the tears shed by Mary. Also the Jews were weeping.

Jesus groaned in the spirit and was troubled. Jesus wept (John xi. 35), "See, how He loved him", said the Jews.

Having shown His love for Lazarus, and His sympathy with the two sisters, He prepared for the next stage to prove that He was the Creator made manifest in the flesh.

He approached the grave and asked that the stone which acted as a door to the cave should be removed. We read in verses 41-42:

> "And Jesus lifted up His eyes, and said, Father, I thank Thee that Thou has heard Me. And I knew that Thou hearest Me always: but because of the people which stand by I said it, that they may believe that Thou hast sent me."

Jesus cried "LAZARUS, come forth". And he that was dead, came forth, bound hand and foot and his face bound with a napkin. "Loose him and let him go" said Jesus.

In these two events, we see the intense love, sympathy and compassion of our Lord. Today we can be assured that in our distress and sorrows, He shares with us and He supports us continually. But today we do not see these remarkable miracles or signs. But they do remind us that the day of resurrection will come and those whom we have lost, and who love the Lord, will arise in His likeness. Then, there will be no more sorrow, or pain or crying.

The bereaved. While one hesitates to refer to one's own experience, the Psalmist exclaims "Let the redeemed of the Lord say so" (Psa. cvii. 2). The writer will take the liberty of giving examples from his experience, recognizing that others may have had quite different circumstances for we are all different by nature and environment.

One who has suffered bereavement needs a strong faith. However much the bereaved grieves and that grief may be most intense, should it not be possible to believe that God is in control, and that what God wills is best? If there is complete faith that God over-rules, may we not remind ourselves of Rom. viii. 28, "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose". The writer lost his wife after 50 years, and before her death she was worried about many things. How could she cope if her husband died first? She feared having to go to hospital: and other worries could be added. But she died suddenly and did not have to enter hospital, and her husband did not die first. So one could give thanks that the writer's wife was spared the worries and she did not have to suffer a long illness. Even while feeling a sense of loss, it is possible to praise the Lord.

The friends of the bereaved. Some people are embarrassed when they have to meet someone who has been bereaved.

In a local Church magazine, it is said that in Britain there are 3,000,000 widows, 800,000 widowers, and 200,000 children under 16 who have lost a parent by death. A comment is made that the clergy realize how inadequate their care of the bereaved can be. There is a National Organization to provide care for Widows and their children called CRUSE as they consider their work consists of, (1) finding the means of providing a suitable person to talk with the bereaved, (2) giving practical help where needed, for example in legal, financial and housing matters, and (3) providing social activities, meetings and outings, establishing friendship groups, etc., etc.

We may not be able to compete with Social Workers in providing for the needs of the bereaved, but in our own way, and according to our circumstances, we may be able to show our sympathy in a practical manner. We may send a letter or sympathy card, or speak on the telephone to show our love and concern. When the writer's wife died, many friends sent cards or short letters which were deeply appreciated.

An important way of helping is to pray for the bereaved, and to mention in a letter or on a card that you are remembering your friend in your prayers. The writer is sure that many friends were supporting him in their prayers, and it was a great help. In our case we stated that no flowers were desired, but gifts to a certain charity could be made if desired. But it so happened that flowers came after the funeral from a few sources, which were displayed around the house and were a means of consolation.

JOB. You know the story of Job? Why not read Job chapter i. again and remind yourself of his great trials. Despite his great losses, he was able to say:

> "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord" (Job i. 21).
>
> "Brothers as an example of patience in the face of suffering, take the prophets who spoke in the name of the Lord. As you know, we consider blessed those who have persevered. You have heard of Job's perseverance and have seen what the Lord finally brought about. The Lord is full of compassion and mercy" (James v. 10, 11, N.I.V.).

No.16. Friendship.
pp. 229 - 231

"A friend loveth at all times" (Prov. xvii. 17).

At Christmas time, it is the custom to send greetings cards to friends, and those of us who are systematic have a list, or a record on cards (in alphabetical order), which at first sight might indicate the number of friends we have. Indeed, this custom has extended to the business world and it is not uncommon for a businessman to have to sign 800 Christmas cards—a time consuming occupation! But if our list is only say 70 people, would it be true to say that they are friends or should we say they are acquaintances? We may have many acquaintances, but how many true friends? An acquaintance is someone who is known, but with whom there is not a close relationship. A friend is one with whom we are more intimate, one for whom we have affection, a high regard or we might say, one who loves us and whom we love.

An example of such a relationship is given in the account of the friendship between David and Jonathan:

> "And it came to pass, when he had made an end of speaking unto Saul, that the soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul" (I Sam. xviii. 1).

This close friendship was followed by a covenant and a gift which was evidence of the loving relationship that had sprung up between David and Jonathan. So we read in I Sam. xviii. 3, 4:

> "Then Jonathan and David made a covenant, because he loved him as his own soul. And Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garments, even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle."

The whole account of this friendship is given in chapters xviii.-xx. and the death of Jonathan is recorded in I Sam. xxxi. 2.

Proverbs xviii. 24 says that if we want friends, we must be friendly to others and there follows the statement "and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother".

A friendship that will last must be based on a two-way co-operation. In the case of David and Jonathan, we notice in I Sam. xx., that Jonathan was willing to be of great assistance to David. "Whatsoever thy soul desireth, I will even do it for thee" in verse 4. But David was under an obligation to Jonathan to show him kindness while he lived, but also David must continue his kindness to Jonathan's house, in the event of Jonathan's death.

Our ability to make friends is hindered if we are selfish, for selfish people do not always show themselves friendly. A friend loveth at all times, but this applies to each of the friends.

When we remember that Abraham was called "the Friend of God", we move to a higher plane. James ii. 21-23 first refers to Abraham being justified by works, when he offered up Isaac his son upon the altar. Perhaps we have thought that Abraham did not offer up his son, because God found a substitute (a ram caught in a thicket by his horns, Gen. xxii. 13), but the Lord said "because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son . . . . ." (see verse 16). We see that Abraham's willingness to obey and trust God was counted for the very act. And James shows how faith was made perfect by his works.

> "And the Scriptures was fulfilled which saith 'Abraham believed God and it was imputed unto him for righteousness'; and he was called the Friend of God" (James ii. 23).

The complete trust of Abraham in his Lord established a bond of friendship which enabled him to be called the Friend of God. The O.T. reference is II Chron. xx. 7.

Is Abraham the only person who can be called "The Friend of God"? Jesus Christ is God manifest in the flesh, so if we can be called friends of Jesus Christ, is this not the same as being friends of God?

If we turn to John xv. 13-15 Jesus spoke of greater love that no man has, than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. And Jesus continued, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you". In the past, He had called His disciples servants but now he calls them His friends as He has made known the will of the Father to them. The disciples had not chosen Jesus Christ but He had chosen them and ordained them, that they might be fruitful.

In Ephesians, we also read that Christ chose us but there is no reference to our being called friends. Eph. v. 30 says we are members of His body. Eph. i. 22, 23 says that Christ is the Head of the church which is His body. As members of the church which is His body, we have a closer relationship than being friends. We are united with Him and with one another. So we can rejoice in the richness of His grace, for we do not deserve such blessings. Yet we have such a wonderful hope, that defies description. We can only bow our heads in prayer and thanksgiving.

But we must revert to a consideration of friendship with others in this present life. All friends are not true and reliable friends. Some people will only remain friends while they benefit from the relationship. They may be attracted to those who have material and plentiful goods which a generous man may be willing to share.

> "Wealth maketh many friends; but the poor is separated from his neighbour" (Proverbs xix. 4).
>
> "The poor is hated even of his own neighbour: but the rich hath many friends" (Proverbs xiv. 20).
> "He that despiseth his neighbour sinneth": but he that hath mercy on the poor, happy is he" (Prov. xiv. 21).

The story of the Prodigal Son in Luke xv. is an example. He had plenty of friends while his money lasted but then he began to be in want. Where were his friends then?

There is also the danger that a friendship may be endangered by gossip or the spreading of rumours:

> ". . . . . a whisperer separateth chief friends" (Prov. xvi. 28).
>
> ". . . . . but he that repeateth a matter separateth very friends" (Prov. xvii. 9).

Even a friend may betray one who has trusted him and the following verse reminds us of the betrayal of our Lord.

> "Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me" (Psa. xli. 9).

So we find many warnings in the Scriptures about those who are supposed to be friends. Many of us may have had some experience which would enable us to say that all friends are not reliable. It is when we have suffered some loss, when we have faced some kind of crisis, or been in need of help, that we discover who our real friends are. In such times, we may have pleasant surprises, although also there may be unpleasant discoveries. But if we are in need, we remember Paul wrote in Phil. iv. 19 ". . . . . But my God shall supply all your need according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus".

A friend loveth at all times. Our Lord Jesus Christ never ceases to love us.

Dispensational and Foundational Truth

pp. 186 - 190

As an introduction to his Alphabetical Analysis of Truth, C. H. Welch divides the subject into three sections, (1) Doctrinal Truth, (2) Dispensational Truth, (3) Practical Truth. He explains each section in this way:

(1) "Doctrinal Truth embraces all that has been revealed concerning the Being and Attributes of God, and all that God has done, commanded, promised or foretold in creation, law and grace." This is truth that time does not alter. It is basic or foundational. "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. iii. 23) is true under whatever dispensation we may be called. "God is just" is as true under grace as it was under law. There is therefore a permanence about foundational truth.

(2) "Dispensational Truth takes note of the purpose of the ages, the changes that have been introduced since creation, such as may be denominated the dispensation of Innocence, Law, Earthly Kingdom, Grace, Church, Mystery, etc., and the office of dispensational truth is to decide whether any particular doctrine—be it command, promise, calling or prophecy—does or does not pertain to any particular individual or individuals." Dispensational truth would lead the believer to distinguish between the blessing that says 'the meek shall inherit the earth' (Psa. xxxvii. 11; Matt. v. 5), and those blessings which are described as all 'spiritual' and to be enjoyed 'in heavenly places' where Christ is enthroned (Eph. i. 3, 19-23; ii. 5, 6). To those who discern 'things that differ' (Phil. i. 10 margin), these two statements cannot mean the same thing if words are allowed to have their normal meaning.

Under the law of God given through Moses sin and its forgiveness was linked with animal sacrifice (Lev. iv. and v.) and this could not be ignored. To do so meant discipline and punishment. Today no Christian who sins is involved with animal sacrifice, for the great Antitype, Christ Himself, the Lamb of God, has made the one necessary sacrifice for sin, namely giving Himself, so doing away with the O.T. types and shadows which are no longer necessary, as the epistle to the Hebrews so clearly shows. Because of this, we now have a dispensation of grace resting on the finished work of the Saviour. The O.T. dispensation of animal sacrifice has passed, having achieved its object. This is no problem when the Scriptural setting of each is realized and distinguished.

(3) Practical Truth. This should be obvious, for it is the practical working out in experience, of the doctrine or instruction given to us in the Word of God.

However, problems will arise if (1) and (2) are not understood and acted on, and some dispensationalists seem to be confused here. It has been pointed out that, in reading the Word of God, we should note "the address on the envelope", that is to say to recognize to whom the passage of Scripture is addressed. This is right, but we must not draw wrong conclusions. The name and address of the person on the envelope decides who is the owner of the letter. But the owner would be foolish, if, before he opened the letter, he decided that every sentence must refer to him and no one else because he is the owner! Statements in the letter might refer to a dozen different people and these would have to be given their place.

We must bear this in mind when we come to the Scriptures. By all means let us note to whom it is addressed. Failure to do this will affect the interpretation. But don't let us assume that every statement in Scripture can only relate to those who are mentioned in the opening verses.

Let us take for instance the prophecy of Isaiah in the O.T. and the epistle of James in the N.T. Isaiah tells us that his prophecy is "concerning Judah and Jerusalem" (i. 1). James addresses his epistle to "the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad" (i. 1). We have heard it said that because these Scriptures are addressed to Israel, they are not "for the Body" and therefore they need not receive careful study by those who belong to the Body of Christ. And this, in spite of the statement by the Apostle Paul, that "all Scripture is profitable for doctrine (teaching), ...that the man of God may be thoroughly equipped for every good work" (II Tim. iii. 16, 17).

Let us turn to Isa. xxvi. 3 where we read:

> "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in Thee", and then compare this with Phil. iv. 7:

> ". . . . . the peace of God which passeth all understanding keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

These two Scriptures are addressed to two different groups of God's children, the people of Israel, and the Body of Christ, but both deal with the same basic truth that peace of mind can be enjoyed to the full through complete trust in the Lord. The previous verse in Philippians mentions prayer and thanksgiving which must include trust in God. This is typical of what we can find right throughout the Word of God and therefore we must be careful to distinguish between what is foundational or basic, with what is dispensational.

The command to "rightly divide" the Word of God (II Tim. ii. 15) goes far beyond making a distinction between Israel and the Church, or recognizing Acts xxviii. as a dispensational division. It means that we must go carefully through every passage of Scripture we are studying and note what is basic and what is the position of the people in the context (dispensational) and their relation to the purpose of God. Foundational truth upon which the purpose of the ages is built is covered by such Bible terms as justification, redemption, atonement, sanctification, propitiation, reconciliation, substitution, identification, forgiveness, pardon, ransom. Dispensational truth on the other hand, notes the differences that God has planned for various sections of His redeemed family. Their placing in glory depends entirely on His elective purpose and in His wisdom, love and grace. He knows just where is the best place for each in the new heaven and earth He will yet create.

Some He purposes to bless on the new earth (Psa. xxxvii. 11; Matt. v. 5); others look forward by faith, like Abraham, to the heavenly Jerusalem which finally descends to the new earth (Heb. xi. 9, 10, 16; xii. 22; Rev. iii. 12; xxi. 10-27). Others will be enthroned with the ascended Christ, "higher than all the heavens" (Eph. iv. 10; ii. 6). The whole of God's vast creation will be peopled with His children.

The Lord's great redemptive plan is much greater and wider than the average Christian appreciates. Certain it is that the glory of God will completely fill this new creation as will His redeemed family as they contemplate for eternity and praise the One Who has done "immeasurably more than all we ask or imagine" (Eph. iii. 30, N.I.V.). Then "all things in heaven and earth" will stand in the Headship and power of Christ (Eph. i. 10).

The need to distinguish what is basic and what is truly dispensational is essential when we are dealing with such an epistle as that by James. It is easy to call this Scripture "Jewish"; but what is meant by this? Do those who use this term mean the passage is predominantly Jewish, or entirely Jewish, that is, every verse is not only addressed to Israel, but concerns Israel and no one else. Unless this term is used with care it can lead to considerable misunderstanding. This can be seen in the interpretation of the Gospels. When we come to the Gospel of John, some assert that this is Jewish. If they mean that it was primarily addressed to the nation, they are right, for it is a history, as all the Gospels are, of the earthly life and ministry of the Lord Jesus and this is looked at from four different angles. If they mean that every statement of the Lord recorded by John is about Israel alone and has no reference to the Gentile, then their viewpoint is sadly wrong.

One of John's key words is the word "world" which occurs no less than 79 times. It means mankind in general and not one nation in particular. No one can give a correct interpretation of this Gospel, unless they study every occurrence of this important word. Obviously it must have taken a prominent place in the Lord's ministry, for we should remember we only have a selection under the Spirit's guidance of the Lord's words spoken during His lifetime. As to why He should stress His relationship to the whole of mankind in a ministry which He Himself said was limited to Israel (Matt. xv. 22, 24) and also that of the Twelve (Matt. x. 5, 6), we have dealt with in a previous article on The Great Commission of Matthew xxviii. But we should carefully note that while Christ's ministry was primarily to Israel, yet He declared "I am come not to judge the world, but to save the world" (John xii. 47), not just to save Israel, and His goal was the belief of the world (John xvii. 21, 23), not just the belief of Israel. The comment of the Evangelist is to the point here "for God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved" (John iii. 17). And the previous verse, which has been the means for the salvation of thousands, gives the way this salvation with eternal life may be realized, namely by faith, belief or trust in the Saviour. "He that heareth My Word and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation but is passed from death unto life" (John v. 24). These verses give the simplest expression of salvation, eternal life and freedom from condemnation in the N.T. It mattered not whether a Gentile or a Jew were listening to the Lord's words, if they responded by faith, then this salvation was theirs. And this is still true today.

Here is a good example of basic or foundational truth which is truth for all time. Sin and death are not dispensational, nor is God's remedy for them dispensational. God has only one way of removing sin and justifying the sinner, namely by the redemptive work of His beloved Son and this is received on the principle of faith and John's Gospel gives a clear witness to these facts.

This being so, we must carefully distinguish what is dispensational in this Gospel from what is basic and unchanging. If we do not do this our exposition is bound to be unbalanced and lop-sided. On the other hand, if we do it, the purpose of God for the heaven and earth becomes clearer and more wonderful. To have an inheritance in any part of these spheres is a tremendous privilege and reveals how great is the love and grace of God which alone makes it possible. Human goodness and merit cannot intrude here.

We are in the hand of One Who is working "all things after the counsel of His own will" (Eph. i. 11), and the design that He has will surely be fulfilled in His time and His own way. Because of this we can go on in "full assurance of faith" and not be moved by anything around us.

Like the Psalmist, we look forward to resurrection glory and can say with him, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with Thy likeness" (Psa. xvii. 15).

The Good Deposit

No.1. pp. 101 - 106

The Apostle Paul's two letters addressed to his son in the faith, Timothy, were written to guide him as a leader of the Church. The first one states:

> "Although I hope to come to you soon, I am writing you these instructions so that, if I am delayed, you will know how people ought to conduct themselves in God's household, which is the church of the living God . . . . ." (I Tim. iii. 14, 15, N.I.V.).

The second one, which was written shortly before his martyrdom, concentrates on the most important truths that Timothy must constantly bear in mind if he was going to be a faithful teacher and friend. Paul urges him to make the effort to visit him in his prison as quickly as possible before winter, when traveling would be difficult. Then the Apostle could give him his last advice, guidance and encouragement personally (II.Tim.iv.9,21).

In both epistles he refers to the truth that the Lord had entrusted to him. This is of great importance for the Apostle declares that this sacred trust had been committed to Timothy, who in turn was charged to commit it to others, "faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also" (II Tim. ii. 2). It is not only termed "that which is committed to thy trust" (I Tim. vi. 20), but also a "form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me (Paul)" (II Tim. i. 13). The translation of the N.I.V. is:

> "What you heard from me, keep as the pattern of sound teaching, with faith and love in Christ Jesus. Guard the good deposit (that which has been committed) that was entrusted to you—guard it with the help of the Holy Spirit Who lives in us" (II.Tim.i.13,14, N.I.V.).

The Greek verb paratithemi and its substantive paratheke means "to deposit with another, give in charge" and the substantive "a deposit or trust" (Abbot-Smith).

We need to get a very clear conception of this deposit of truth, for without this, how can we guard it? One thing we can be assured of, and that is Timothy understood perfectly what the Apostle meant, for Paul wrote:

> "But thou hast fully known my doctrine . . . . ." (II Tim. iii. 9-11).

We can also receive this understanding if we search the N.T. and seek for it, asking for enlightenment, carefully noting the truths that had been committed to Paul by the risen Christ. This will save us from imagining that the Apostle was passing on his own opinions to others. Rather he was the human channel that the Lord Jesus was using to convey special truth to us. He was the Lord's Apostle to the Gentiles, although during the Acts period, he put the covenant people of Israel first, for Luke makes clear in the Acts that Israel had not been cast away, for God in His longsuffering was waiting for their repentance and turning back to Him (Acts iii. 19-26).

In Paul's prison ministry that followed, he was still specially connected with the Gentiles, for he describes himself as "the prisoner of Christ Jesus for the sake of you Gentiles" (Eph. iii. 1, N.I.V.), although this does not mean that faithful Jewish believers could not benefit from the teaching given through him.

The basic truth on which "the good deposit" rests is that of salvation by grace and this, the Apostle states, was given to him by "revelation of Jesus Christ":

> "I want you to know, brothers, that the gospel I preached is not something that man made up. I did not receive it from any man, nor was I taught it; rather, I received it by revelation from Jesus Christ" (Gal. i. 11, 12, N.I.V.).

So important was this that in the previous verses Paul wrote:

> "But even if we or an angel from heaven should preach a gospel other than the one we preached to you, let him be eternally condemned! As we have already said, so now I say again: If anybody is preaching to you a gospel other than what you accepted, let him be eternally condemned!" (Gal. i. 8, 9, N.I.V.).

Forceful words are these, but absolutely necessary, for they were dealing with basic truth, the very foundation of the Christian faith. To be wrong here is to be wrong everywhere.

The Apostle describes this good news in I Cor. xv.:

> "Now, brothers, I want to remind you of the gospel I preached to you, which you have received and on which you have taken your stand. By this gospel you are saved, if you hold firmly to the word I preached to you. Otherwise, you have believed in vain.
> For what I received I passed on to you as of first importance: that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, that He was buried, that He was raised on the third day according to the Scriptures . . . . ." (I Cor. xv. 1-4, N.I.V.).

Here is the essence of the good news for sinners. Christ has paid the penalty for their sins by dying for them and being treated as the guilty one. The Lord has laid on Him the iniquity of us all (Isa. liii. 5, 6). This gospel meets the needs of all mankind. It is perfect, never needs changing, and is the divine standard for all gospel preaching. Any other gospel is no gospel at all and comes under God's condemnation.

The true gospel must be contained in "the good deposit" otherwise Timothy and all who followed after would have no assured foundation and nothing effective to make known to those outside of Christ.

We pass on to the teaching concerning the identification of the believer with Christ and here we have truth that is peculiar to Paul's ministry. It is the epistle to the Romans that reveals what God has done by uniting the believer with Christ. The Apostle states, "I have been crucified with Christ" (Gal. ii. 20). To the Roman believers he wrote, "knowing this, that our old man was crucified with Him" (Rom. vi. 6, R.V.). Crucifixion means death. He continues, "now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with Him" (Rom. vi. 8). After death comes burial, "therefore we are buried with Him by baptism unto death" (Rom. vi. 4). Verse 5 goes on to teach us, "if we have become united with Him by the likeness of His death" (R.V.). The next step must lead to life if there is to be a future for those who are dead, so we read, "but God hath quickened us together with Christ" (made us alive together with Christ, Eph. ii. 5). Thus we have been raised together with Him.

The climax comes in the later epistle to the Ephesians written after Israel had been set aside at Acts xxviii. God has "made us sit together (seated us together) in heavenly places in Christ Jesus" (Eph. ii. 6), and the wonder of this exaltation as far as Christ is concerned is made clear in Eph. i. 18-23 which should be carefully read and pondered.

In the crucifixion, death, burial, quickening, raising and enthroning of Christ at the right hand of the Father, the member of the Body of Christ is now identified, and the glorious conclusion is the final manifesting with Christ in glory (Col. iii. 3, 4). All this is God's work alone, the believer has no part in it except to believe the stupendous facts that God has written and revealed through Paul, the prisoner of the Lord. In God's plan, each individual member of the Body is so linked with the Head that, what happens to Him in these seven great steps, happens to them as well. Do we rejoice in this and reckon as God reckons?

This is the way God removes the great barriers of sin and death which would eternally separate us from Christ, and finally, in resurrection likeness, we shall be conformed to the Image of the Son, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing (Eph. v. 27) but be rather, "holy and unblameable and unreproveable in His sight" (Col. i. 22). Let us constantly praise our heavenly Father for this wonderful closeness of union with the Lord Jesus which is ours now and symbolized by the figure of Head and Body which give us the closest illustration of unity that the Word of God uses.

This revelation of truth must certainly be included in "the good deposit" and it has the effect of making us Christ-centred and enabling us to obey Col. iii. 1, 2 to set our mind on things above where Christ is supremely exalted and enthroned and we are enthroned with Him.

Not only this, but the Apostle Paul declares he had a further revelation from Christ concerning the Body and its calling. In this was revealed a secret which up to that point God had hidden "in Himself" (Eph. iii. 9 and Col. i. 25-28). It is important to realize that the word "mystery" in the A.V. is a transliteration of the Greek word musterion and means, not something puzzling or mysterious, but just a "secret" which is unknown until it is revealed. Paul declares that this secret had been revealed to him by God (Eph. iii. 3) and he was commissioned to make it known to all, that is those who had been elected by the Father in past eternity (Eph. i. 4). The meaning of "all" and "every" in Scripture is always governed by the context.

> "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, and to make all men see what is the dispensation of the mystery (secret) which from all ages hath been hid in God Who created all things . . . . ." (Eph. iii. 8, 9, R.V.).

Colossians i. 25, 26 states that this secret was hid from past ages (time) and generations (people) and in view of this it is unbelief to say that it can be found in the O.T. or in any Scripture previous to the point Christ made it known to Paul.

It cannot therefore refer to the gospel of salvation, for this was never a secret, but had been "promised afore by His prophets in the holy Scriptures (the O.T.)" (Rom. i. 2). Nor can it refer to the fact that the Gentiles were to be blessed with Israel, for this had been made known in Gen. xii. 1-3 and many other passages. Eph. ii. 15 reveals the fact that this sussoma (lit. joint-body) is made up of the "two" (twain, A.V.) i.e. Jewish and Gentile believers and is a creation which God calls "a new man". It is important to know that the word "make" in this verse (A.V.) is the deeper word "create", which shows that this company is not an evolution or development from the Acts period, but a new company, a new man and a new creation.

We do not know whether this is a large company, a medium sized or a small one, for it is not revealed and it is idle to guess. We are on sure ground however, when we start with the Father's elective choice (Eph. i. 4) and this choice was made before creation. It was therefore in the mind of God before He commenced to create, which shows its tremendous importance to Him in His redemptive plan. Even the aristocracy of heaven, principalities and powers, are now learning from it and its association with the manifold wisdom of God (Eph. iii. 9-11).

This great revelation to Paul, the prisoner of the Lord, must certainly be included in "the good deposit" of truth, given by the risen and ascended Christ to him and then deposited by the Apostle to Timothy and the churches. In fact we must include in it all the truth expressed in the epistles that make it known (Ephesians and Colossians) and the epistles of Paul that followed (Philippians, Philemon, Titus, I & II Timothy). Once revealed, the secret was addressed to all the faithful (Eph. i. 1; Col. i. 2) and was not hidden again. It was linked with a dispensation, "the dispensation of the mystery (secret)" (Eph. iii. 9, R.V.). The word "dispensation" is little understood, most people imagining that it means a period of time, an age. This is not so; in Luke xvi. 2 the word is rendered "stewardship", something that is entrusted to a person to look after and guard. And so the word is very near the "deposit" in its meaning. It is God's truth that has been passed on to the redeemed to live out and faithfully make known to others.

Paul was keen to make all the chosen ones see it (Eph. iii. 9) and furthermore, we are told that God wishes "to make known the riches of the glory of this secret among the Gentiles, which is Christ among you (A.V. margin), the hope of glory" (Col. i. 24-27). In the A.V. "would make known" = wishes to make known. In the light of these most important statements, one might assume that every believer has a clear conception of "the good deposit" of truth, but it is not so. The first chapter of Ephesians reveals an essential to this knowledge. Verses 17 and 18 reads, and we give Rotherham's translation:

> "Making mention in my prayers, that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, would give you a spirit of wisdom and understanding in gaining a personal knowledge of Him, the eyes of your heart having been enlightened, that you may know what is the hope of His calling and what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, and what surpassing greatness of His power to us who believe . . . . ."

In other words, their eyes had already been opened so that further understanding might be given of the new calling and its hope. The Apostle had made it abundantly clear that this spiritual perception must be experienced before the Word of God can be understood. It can only be "spiritually discerned" (I Cor. ii. 14). Intellectual attainment is of no avail by itself to gain divine understanding. If it was so then all brainy people should be able to gain an understanding of the Scriptures without the Spirit's enlightenment. To teach that every believer gets this automatically because he is saved is to go beyond what the Word reveals. There was no need for Paul to pray for the Ephesian believers if this was true, nor any need for the Psalmist to ask the Lord, "Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous (marvelous) things out of Thy law" (Psa. cxix. 18).

Moreover without these "opened eyes" how can one "guard the good deposit" (I.Tim.vi.20; II Tim. i. 13, 14)? How can one guard what is not seen and understood? Timothy was warned by the Apostle that this faithful guarding would result in suffering and enduring hardness (II Tim. i. 8; ii. 3). How is it possible to suffer and endure hardness for truth that is not appreciated?

These searching questions need a Scriptural answer and that answer is given clearly in Eph. i. The Apostle Paul could say to the Thessalonian believers, "knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God" (I Thess. i. 4). But how was he able to say this? Had he received some special knowledge of the Lord's elective purposes? No, the following verses make clear that it was their faithful response to the truth which proved this. The Lord Jesus had said, "by their fruits ye shall know them" and this is true for all time. May all who claim to be members of the Body of Christ, the new man, show by their response and actions that they have had "opened eyes" to the heavenly calling that is enshrined in "the good deposit" of truth and by their practical response indicate that they belong to the "saints and faithful in Christ Jesus" (Eph. i. 1; Col. i. 2).

The Gospel according to MATTHEW.

No.3. i. 1 - 25.
pp. 15 - 19

Before we commence the exposition of chapter i. we would advise the reader to have a copy of the Revised Version (R.V.) and a modern version, the New International Version (N.I.V.) and read them side by side with the Authorized Version (A.V.). While we shall attempt a verse by verse exposition, for the sake of space we cannot make long quotations from the text of any version as this would take up too much space.

Matthew i. 1 - 17.

The gospel commences with the genealogy of Christ: "the book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham" (Matt. i. 1, A.V.). "A record of the genealogy of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham" (N.I.V.). This is traced through David back to Abraham, the father of the Jewish race. There is another genealogy in Luke's Gospel which goes back to Adam, the father of the human race. Each of these pedigrees is in line with the object which the writers had in view; the former Jewish and the latter Gentile. Matthew's line is traced to David through Solomon, but Luke's is to David through Nathan (another son of David).

The genealogy in Matthew is divided into three parts of fourteen generations each. In order to do this, in the second part he omits three names, and he does likewise in the third part and counts both David and Jeconias twice. It should be remembered that Matthew's object was not to give a complete succession, but only to make sure there was no break in the line and that no name was included which did not belong to the line.

The important name was David which occurs five times. The letters of proper names had a numerical value, the consonants being D-4, V-6 and D-4 making a total of fourteen (14 = 2X7). This may have influenced the writer to divide the genealogy into three parts of 14 generations each.

There are difficulties when one compares these genealogies. Some go as far to say that they cannot be reconciled. But we must be careful not make difficulties. Omitting names was a common practice among the Jewish genealogists and we should know something about the laws of Moses pertaining to inheritance.

Genealogies occupied an important place in Israel, divided as they were into twelve tribes with inheritances which could become involved by intermarriage. A man's grandson could be called his son, and so could a son-in-law. Also we should remember the provision that was made in the law of Moses for a married man who died childless. The husband's brother was required to raise a family through the widow and the children were to take the name of the deceased man. This guaranteed that the family name was not blotted out, the line extinguished and the inheritance lost (Deut. xxv. 5-10).

Matthew traces the genealogy of Joseph back through Jacob who begat him, to Solomon, David and Abraham. Luke traces Joseph's genealogy back through Heli, his father-in-law, to Nathan, David, Abraham and Adam. Joseph is therefore the begotten son of Jacob, and thus the son of David through Solomon; while Mary, the wife of Joseph and daughter of Heli, was descended equally from David, but through Solomon's brother Nathan, and so Joseph was the son-in-law of Heli.

There is another difficulty which is related to King Jeconiah who, through his wickedness was rejected by the Lord who changed his name to Coniah, removing the letters "Je" which form part of the Lord's name. Jeremiah was authorized to pronounce:

> ". . . . . Write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah" (Jer. xxii. 30).

Yet we know that Coniah was not childless, for I Chron. iii. 17 gives us the names of his sons. Looking carefully at what Jeremiah says, we should note that he is dealing with the throne in saying "no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David and ruling any more in Judah". In other words Jeconiah's children were debarred from the throne and the line through Solomon comes to an end. It is evident that Salathiel (or Shealtiel) whose father is recorded by Luke to have been "Neri . . . . . the son of Nathan, which was the Son of David", had succeeded to the royal title and was therefore looked upon as the son of Jeconiah by legal adoption, the royal line being transferred from the line of Solomon to that of Nathan his brother, at this point, possibly by a marriage between the families.

Matthew gives the genealogy of Joseph; Luke the genealogy of Mary. This was necessary because of that bar that was set up to any of the literal seed of Coniah. As the crown rights were forfeited, Nathan's line succeeds, so that the Saviour Who was born in Bethlehem has the full right to the throne of David.

Another difficulty is the appearance of women in the genealogy. Women do not normally appear in Jewish pedigrees and in Matthew's case they are women of doubtful character, Tamar, Rahab, Bathsheba, and Ruth was a foreigner, a Moabitess. The reason is surely that the One Who declared He had come to call sinners to repentance, does not scorn such a descent. He was a friend of publicans and sinners, and in His infinite grace and love stoops to reach them in their deepest needs.

We do not say that we have the answer to every problem in these genealogies. Many of our difficulties are caused by our differing outlook, laws and customs from those of N.T. days and we should remember that the Bible is not bound to explain every point that we find difficult today. What is absolutely necessary for us to know, God has expressed in His Word and this awaits our faith to grasp and receive the abundant blessing that follows.

We should note that each of the fourteen generations corresponds to a great historical period. The first fourteen comprise the age of the patriarchs and judges; the second comprises the age of the kings, and the third the period of Jewish decadence. The Greek egennesen, begat, which occurs regularly, does not always mean immediate parentage, but direct descent. The section ends with "Joseph the husband of Mary of whom was born Jesus Who is called Christ" (i. 16). The relative pronoun whom (hes) can only refer to Mary, because of its gender (feminine) and number. It cannot refer to Jacob or Joseph.

The Birth of the Messiah (i. 18 - 25).

The word 'birth' here is genesis. Dr. J. Morison writes "the Evangelist is about to describe, not the genesis of the heaven and earth, but the genesis of Him Who made the heaven and the earth, and Who will yet make a new heaven and a new earth". Mary was betrothed to Joseph. Bethrotal was a much more serious thing in Jewish law than an engagement is with us. It was of equal force with marriage itself. It could only be severed by divorce, and faithlessness was treated as adultery and punishable with death (Deut. xxii. 23-27).

Mary was found to be pregnant through the work of the Holy Spirit. Luke gives additional details of this stupendous miracle. The wonderful delicacy of both narratives gives historic reality, so utterly different to the impure legends of heathen mythology. The apocryphal gospels clearly show that they could produce nothing similar. Their inventions are nothing if not distressing. Dr. A. Plummer correctly assesses the situation when he says, "if the two Evangelists had sought material in legends of pagan or Jewish origin we should have had something very different from the narratives which have been the joy and the inspiration of Christendom through countless generations . . . . . nothing in the early Christian literature warrants us in believing that a writer of the first or second century could have imagined such things and described them thus".

Dr. A. T. Robertson's words are also to the point here:

> "Both Matthew and Luke present the birth of Jesus as not according to ordinary human birth. Jesus had no human father . . . . . We see here God, sending His Son into the world to be the world's Saviour, and He gave Him a human mother, but not a human father, so that Jesus Christ is both Son of God and Son of Man, the God Man . . . . . One credits these most wonderful of all birth narratives according as he believes in the love and power of almighty God to do what He wills."

The Lord Jesus was born in the flesh, but not of the flesh.

It is quite amazing to read the different reactions of theologians to the virgin birth. Some openly reject it and others say it is not important and that redemption does not depend on it. The blindness here is nothing less than appalling, for it can be stated most definitely that redemption would have been impossible without it. It was absolutely necessary for Christ to be sinless if He was to be the Saviour of sinners. Had He any sins of His own, He would have needed a Saviour Himself. One sinner cannot save another sinner (Psa. xlix. 6, 7). The Holy One, the Lord Jesus alone could be the ransom for sinners (Matt. xx. 28; I Tim. ii. 6) and pay the price for their deliverance and salvation.

What the critics have not realized is that sin and death are passed on to the next generation through the male seed, not the female. Although in point of time, Eve was the first to sin, Scripture never ascribes the terrible blemish to her but to Adam:

> "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin: and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Rom. v. 12).

So it was absolutely necessary for the Lord Jesus to be born without a human father. No one but God Himself can become the sinner's Saviour:

> "I, even I, am the Lord (Jehovah); and beside me there is no Saviour" (Isa. xliii. 11).

And yet as God, death is impossible, for He is immortal. The only way was to link humanity to His Godhead in order to be able to die and bear the penalty for sin Himself. To fully comprehend what was involved in all this passes human comprehension. Great indeed is the secret of godliness, "God was manifest in the flesh" (I Tim. iii. 16), and the truth is not altered if one reads "He Who was manifest in the flesh", for the pronoun "He" cannot refer to any created being. It can only refer back to God Himself in this context.

So the virgin birth was the work of God in His almightiness, limitless wisdom and love. And it was therefore with truth that the angel said to Mary:

> ". . . . . therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God" (Luke i. 35).

The Infant Christ is the only holy baby that has been born since the fall of man. For a fuller treatment of this theme both Scripturally and scientifically we strongly recommend Dr. A. Custance's fine treatise, The Seed of the Woman.

The Birth of Jesus Christ (cont'd).

Verse 19 of chapter i. shows us the conflicting thoughts of Joseph as he faced up to Mary's condition. We are told that he was a "just man". The word means "law-abiding", that is he was a faithful adherent to the law of God given through Moses. That law, as we have seen, contained the command of death for unfaithfulness. At the same time Joseph was a merciful man, and loving Mary, he wished to spare her embarrassment and suffering. He therefore decided that divorce, kept as private as possible, was the answer to his problem.

However, he received valuable instruction from God which gave him the guidance he needed so much at this most difficult time:

> "But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call His name JESUS: for He shall save His people from their sins. Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call His name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us" (i. 20-23).

What a relief it must have been to Joseph to learn the true facts regarding Mary! She had not been unfaithful after all! A Son was about to be born, the promised Seed of the woman and it was not necessary for him to name this Child, for He had already been divinely named—JESUS. Jesus is the Hebrew Joshua or Jehoshua and Jesus is the Greek equivalent, "Jehovah (is our) Saviour". The Joshua of the O.T. had been a great deliverer and leader into the promised land. But here was the real Joshua, Who alone could remove every obstacle afflicting His people and lead them into the Kingdom of heaven, God's kingdom on earth. "He shall save His people from their sins". Primarily this refers to His earthly people Israel, for it was to them He had been sent (Matt. xv. 24). Salvation from sin means deliverance from the power and penalty of sin and this Israel needed as much as the rest of mankind.

In the purpose of God salvation must finally include His heavenly people, for they too come under the domination of sin and death. Later on, in the ministry of Paul, we are to learn that the same Saviour is now Lord and Head of the Body, the church and has rescued each member from the power of darkness and translated each one into His Kingdom in the glory of heaven's holiest of all (Col. i. 2-14). Thus this salvation of God is basic to all His purposes and accomplishes what men can never do for themselves, that is, abolish sin and death which holds the human race in a vice-like grip and are their greatest enemies.

As we go on to read verses 22 and 23 of Matthew's first chapter, we have to decide whether these verses continue to record the words of the angel to Joseph, or if they are the comments of the Evangelist.

Chrysostom and others take these words as being those of the angel and they may be right, for then they would be an added explanation to Joseph, who certainly needed this divine revelation to relieve his perplexity. It is a pity that the A.V. is not accurate with the prepositions. The word from Isaiah was spoken by (hupo) the Lord, through (dia) the prophet. The Lord was the real speaker, the prophet was His mouthpiece. What was happening was the Lord's work which He had made known centuries before and at last the right time had come for this great Saviour and His salvation to be made known.

The virgin in Isaiah's day was definite and pointed to a particular virgin:

> "The case is singular; it is unparalleled. Whatever scope for doubt there may be regarding the flexibility of the meaning of the word for virgin in Isaiah's Hebrew, there is none doubting regarding the meaning of the Evangelist's term. It most definitely and distinctively means virgin" (Dr. J. Morison, Commentary on Matthew, p.11).

As a result, the infant Christ is given another name, Emmanuel, God with us. The explanation of the Hebrew name was doubtless added by Matthew and not spoken by the Angel to Joseph. This name is coincident with meaning of the name Jesus—"Jehovah—Saviour", and "with us—God" and it should be clear that no created being could ever truthfully bear these two great titles and carry out what they represent.

The angel had told Joseph to take unto him his wife. So when he awoke from sleep, he obeyed the angel and in Moffatt's words, "took his wife home". One can imagine the relief and joy of both Joseph and Mary after all the perplexity they had experienced. Regarding verse 25 Dr. A. T. Robertson writes:

> "Joseph lived in continence with Mary till the birth of Jesus. Matthew does not say that Mary bore no other children than Jesus . . . . . the perpetual virginity of Mary is not taught here. Jesus had brothers and sisters and the natural meaning is that they were younger children of Joseph and Mary and not children of Joseph by a previous marriage. So Joseph 'called His name Jesus' as the angel had directed and the Child was born in wedlock. Joseph showed that he was an upright man in a most difficult situation" (Word Pictures in the New Testament, p.13).

The visit of the Magi.

There is no doubt that Matthew considered what he wrote was historic and really happened. He does not think it necessary to go into much detail concerning the miraculous Birth of the Saviour. As A. B. Bruce says, "the main purpose is to show the reception given by the world to the new-born Messianic King. Homage from afar, hostility at home; foreshadowing the fortunes of the new faith; reception by the Gentiles, rejection by the Jews".

Matthew ii. 1, 2.

Bethlehem is stated to be in Judaea, as there was another Bethlehem in Galilee, seven miles northwest of Nazareth. This Bethlehem of Judaea was the setting of Ruth's life with Boaz (Ruth i. 1). It was the home of David, Ruth's descendant, and he was born here and also anointed King (I Sam. xvii. 12). The word means "house of bread". The Lord Jesus was born in this "house of bread" and Himself was the Bread of Life (John vi. 55), the true Manna from heaven.

The Emperor Augustus decreed an enrolment or census by families, as the papyri show. Matthew tells us that the Infant Christ was born "in the days of Herod the king". Luke's date is more precise (Luke ii. 1-3). Herod died in B.C.4 according to Josephus. He had been king of Judaea since B.C.40 (through Antony and Octavius). Herod the Great as he is sometimes called, was a tyrant of the worst type. Through his jealousy he put to death his wife Marianne and their two sons Aristobulus and Alexander, also another son who was once his heir. He was insanely jealous and would brook no rivalry of any sort. When he heard about Christ, it was as a possible rival that he regarded Him, so we can well understand Matt. ii. 3 telling us "he was troubled" and his one object now was to eliminate this possibility. Behind it all was the power of Satan whose aim was to destroy the Seed of the woman who would "crush his head" (Gen. iii. 15) and God

Who "worketh all things after the counsel of His own will" (Eph. i. 11), now moves His Son to a place of safety in Egypt until Herod dies.

Who were the "wise men from the east" (Matt. ii. 1)? We must first rid ourselves of tradition. The N.T. does not say there were three, nor that they were kings. Some things which are stated and illustrated on Christmas cards are pure fancy. They were called Magi and we cannot be sure of the derivation of this word. There were Magi among the Medians, Persians and Chaldeans. It is the same word as "magician" and is linked with Simon Magus (Acts viii. 9, 11) and of Elymas (Acts xiii. 6, 8). Those who came to Jerusalem were not of this class, but they evidently studied the heavens. It is even possible that they were Jewish proselytes who knew of the Messianic hope and what they had seen in the heavens was so extraordinary as to suggest the birth of some great Person. Herod, thoroughly agitated by the news, demanded from the chief priests and scribes that he be told where this Christ would be born. Epunthaneto (enquire) is the imperfect tense and suggests that Herod enquired repeatedly, showing his disturbance of mind. The Jewish leaders who knew the letter of the O.T. had no difficulty in telling him that this had been revealed in Micah v. 2. Matthew gives a paraphrase of this verse, but there was no doubt that the place of birth was Bethlehem of Judaea, ". . . . . for thus it is written by the prophet, and thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda; for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel (Matt. ii. 5, 6). The word governor means a Ruler or Prince, and the A.V. misses the full meaning of poimenei which means "shepherd" although it puts "feed" in the margin. Israel were the "sheep" of the Lord's pasture (Psa. lxxix. 13) and this figure is constantly used of them in the Old Testament.

The Lord Jesus is the good Shepherd (John x. 11). He is the "great Shepherd" (Hebrews xiii. 20), and the "chief Shepherd" (I Pet. ii. 25). The verbal form is used again in Rev. vii. 17. When He re-commissioned Peter after His resurrection He told him to "shepherd" the lambs (John xxi. 16) and we should not forget that our word "pastor" means shepherd. The One that was born in Bethlehem will most certainly rule His people Israel, but it will not be as it were with an iron rod, but the devotion of a good shepherd caring for and protecting his sheep. The tragedy of the Shepherd's first Coming was that the sheep rejected His loving rule and murdered Him, but the story and its fulfillment will be very different at His Second Coming as this Gospel shows. The earthly people Israel are in the very centre of God's earthly kingdom purposes. Matthew is careful to put them there and not one jot or tittle of the law or the Word which reveals this will fail ultimately.

Herod now calls the wise men, but conceals his murderous motives. He pretends that he will go and worship the young Child, if they will find out accurately where He is. He might have succeeded if God had not intervened, but the redemptive plan of the ages is too great, too wonderful and important to be ruined by the vindictive rage of a Herod under the control of Satan.

The star which had guided the Magi still went before them (again the imperfect tense in the Greek, "kept on in front of them"). Their joy was great when they found the holy Child, and opening their "caskets" (treasures), they give Him gold, frankincense and myrrh. There have been many comments on the mystical meaning of these gifts from the earliest centuries, but doubtless the gold typifies His Deity. The frankincense with its fragrance represents the holiness of His sinless life; the myrrh, used for embalming the dead, suggested His atoning death. The holy God became man for the redemptive purpose of death and the destruction of Satan (Heb. ii. 14) and so the wise men with more wisdom than they knew, set forth the Gospel story of the One Who is our great God and saviour (Titus ii. 13, R.V.). Is it not extraordinary that this greatest event in history, God coming into human experience, should have been met for the most part with indifference and unbelief? There was "no room for Him in the inn" (Luke ii. 7). The greatest palace would really have been unworthy of Him, but He is willing to be born in a cattle shed, what condescension, what humility! The tragedy is that there are still millions, centuries later, who "have no room for Him" in their lives.

No.5. ii. 16 - iii. 12.

We have seen how Matthew groups his narrative in groups of three and in the second chapter we are studying this is evidently so, for we have (1) the visit of the Magi, (2) the flight into Egypt and (3) the return to Palestine, the land of Israel (Matt. ii. 21). When the tyrant Herod had died and the danger temporarily removed from the infant Child, God makes it clear by a dream that it was now safe for Joseph and his family to return home. Matthew ii. 22 tells us that Joseph was afraid when he came into the territory of Archelaus, Herod's son. He was quite the worst of Herod's descendants and Josephus tells us that in order to show he was equal to his father as an autocratic ruler he commenced his reign with a massacre of no less than three thousand people. Thus it was that God directed Joseph to Galilee, "that it might be fulfilled which was spoken through the prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene" (ii. 23).

The last phrase contains a difficulty, for there is nothing in the O.T. which seems to connect the word Nazaraios (Nazarene) with the Messiah. Zahn has pointed out that there is no word "saying, legonton", after "prophets", a word which Matthew usually inserts when he quotes the prophetic utterances of the O.T. The inference is that "He shall be called a Nazarene" is not meant to be a direct quotation, but is the Evangelist's explanation for what has gone before. In the early ages of Christianity Jerome suggested that this statement refers to those passages which predict that Christ would be despised, for John i. 46 and vii. 52 are linked with contempt for Nazareth. One thing is certain, there is no connection with the word Nazarite for the Lord Jesus was not a Nazarite. We should also note that Matthew says prophets not prophet. The reference is not to any one quotation, but the testimony of several O.T prophets such as Psalm xxii. 6-8; Isaiah liii. 2-4 which show Him to be the Nazarene "despised and rejected".

We now come to another section of this Gospel which has three connected events, (1) the preaching of John the Baptist, (2) the baptizing of the Messiah and (3) the temptation in the wilderness.

Chapter iii. commences with the words "in those days". Matthew does not intend any precise date. In fact he is passing over a period of some thirty years. But at last an event had taken place that produced excitement throughout the nation. After the long period of the prophets of the O.T., God had been silent for four long centuries since the time of Malachi. But this silence had been broken and a new prophet had appeared which stirred the interest of many in the nation. Doubtless this brought joy and expectancy, but when he delivered his message, some of this ardour must have cooled, for this prophet did not teach that because they were physically descended from Abraham the kingdom was automatically theirs and belonged to no-one else. He stressed the need for a change of heart, confession of sin and deeds which matched this change of mind (repentance). Every tree that did not produce such good fruit was in peril of being cut down.

This was not what Israel expected or wanted to hear, but the true messenger of God always gives the people what they need, not what they want.

John's name means "gift of Jehovah" and is a shortened form of Johanan. He was indeed a gift from God, giving Israel God's message which exactly suited their condition, preparing the way for the King and His kingdom. His first word was "repent" and here we have a difficulty, for there is no English word which exactly matches the Greek metanoeo. The English word repent means "to be sorry again" from the Latin repoenitet. To make matters worse it gets confused with "penitence" and "penance". The Latin Vulgate has "do penance" which unfortunately Wycliff followed. Dr. A. T. Robertson says that the Greek word has been hopelessly mistranslated. It does not basically mean "to be sorry" for the Greek already has a word for that, namely metamelomai which is used of Judas (Matt. xxvii. 3). The Syriac Version is better, "turn ye" for "turning" was the constant word of the Old Testament for Israel when they wandered away from God (e.g. Zech. i. 3).

John was to be a herald for the coming Messiah and King, and so he called the chosen people Israel to make themselves ready for this supreme event. He is called "the Baptizer" for it was this rite that distinguishes his ministry. This would not have been strange to his hearers who were Israelites, for the ritual of washing and cleansing was firmly entrenched in the law of Moses, both for the priests and also in connection with the offerings. To Israel had been committed the divine types and shadows of spiritual realities and water baptism was intended to signify among other things the need of purification and was accompanied by confession of sins:

> "Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the regions round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins" (iii. 5, 6).

All this was in view of the near coming of the Messiah:

> "His winnowing fork is in His hand, and He will clear His threshing floor, gathering wheat into His barn and burning up the chaff with unquenchable fire" (iii. 12, N.I.V.).

In view of this a change of heart and a change of life was essential. One is reminded of the similar testimony of the O.T. prophets such as Isaiah:

> "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before Mine eyes; cease to do evil" (Isa. i. 16).

Likewise they testified to the fact the early work of the Messiah was cleansing. Zechariah foretells that at that time "a fountain shall be opened for sin and uncleanness" (Zech. xiii. 1).

Ezekiel xxxvi. 25-27 states:

> "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you . . . . .".

The baptism of John links itself of these O.T. Scriptures and combines confession of sin with this outward symbol of washing and cleanliness.

Matt. iii. 7 tells us that many Pharisees and Sadducees mingled with those who had come to John's baptism. The Pharisees on the whole were self-confident, self-satisfied and self-sufficient. Their name means "Separatists" and they separate themselves from the mass of their fellows under the idea that they were holier and more spiritual to those around them. Their chief aim seemed to be to show off themselves as being superior to the rest of mankind.

The Sadducees in many respects differed from the Pharisees. They were the rationalists of the day. They clung to the outward ceremonies of the law, but were prominently worldly and worldy wise. Their religious conceptions were utterly hollow, and while the Baptist knew of the differences of these two sects, they were one in their opposition and appreciation of the truth. Scathingly he says to them:

> "You brood of vipers! Who warned you to flee from the coming wrath? Produce fruit in keeping with repentance" (iii. 7, 8, N.I.V.).

The Lord Jesus likewise called them "snakes" on two occasions (Matthew xii. 34; xxiii. 33). By the power of the Holy Spirit John looked through and through them, and saw real antipathy to the truth and a lack of any conception of sin and failing and the need for repentance and change of action.

He said in effect, what brings you here with the mass of people you despise? There is only one thing that matters, actions, that go hand in hand with a humble state of mind: in other words "fruit meet for repentance".

But this phrase in our English translation puts things the wrong way round and suggests that the fruit of good conduct is a preparation for repentance. The N.I.V. is much better, rendering the phrase "produce fruit in keeping with repentance". John challenges them and makes it clear that if their repentance is worth anything, it will be manifested by appropriate conduct.

Nor must they take refuge behind the idea that because they were the physical descendants of Abraham their future in the coming kingdom was assured. God was able to change the shingle on the banks of the Jordan if He so wished, and raise up children to Abraham (iii. 9). The Baptist continued:

> "The axe is already at the root of the trees, and every tree that does not produce good fruit will be cut down and thrown into the fire" (iii. 10, N.I.V.).

Or like chaff—it will be burned up. In other words there will be a tremendous sorting out by God of those who desire to enter His kingdom. Not one will have a portion there who does not come up to the Divine standard. The Lord Jesus proclaimed the same truth when He said:

> "Every plant that My heavenly Father has not planted will be pulled up by the roots" (Matt. xv. 13, N.I.V.).

And who will do the uprooting? No human being, but God Himself! Before the establishment of the earthly kingdom there would inevitably be judgment and a Divine sorting out. The axe to cut out the false branches already is lying at the root of the tree, declared the Baptist (iii. 10). The present tenses are startling. This is not something that inevitably pertains to the distant future—it was a present reality. Here is no evolution of ages, a gradual development of the new order of things, taking centuries of improvement to work out. Rather the whole series is condensed into a single scene where God is the sole actor.

This is the testimony of many other Scriptures and it makes one wonder how the idea originated that this kingdom would be brought in slowly by the church preaching the gospel—it is so unscriptural. All is bound up with the Lord's doings, either at His first Coming or His second Coming back to this earth.

The prophet goes on to elaborate this refining work of God:

> "I baptize you with water for repentance. But after me will come One Who is more powerful than I, Whose sandals I am not fit to carry. He will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and with fire" (iii. 11, N.I.V.), the object of which is to purge and refine by the fire of His holiness which is unquenchable (iii. 12).

We must take care with the word "unquenchable", for it does not reveal the duration of the punishment. Dr. A. Plummer's comment is:

> "(the word) does not necessarily mean that the fire will burn for ever; still less that it will burn, but never consume, what is in it; but rather that it is so fierce that it cannot be extinguished. Here it is expressly stated that the worthless material will be consumed."

There is no definite article before the words "Holy Spirit" in verse 11. Literally it reads "He shall baptize you with (or in) holy spirit and fire". There is no need to debate whether this primarily refers to the Holy Spirit or His action. What is clear is that this baptism is not one of water, but is the refining, purging and purifying of those in Israel who will then be ready to enter into the kingdom of heaven. It is judgment that is being spoken of by John not grace, and is in line with such O.T. passages as Isa. iv. 4:

> "The Lord will wash away the filth of the women of Zion; He will cleanse the bloodstains from Jerusalem by a spirit of judgment and a spirit of fire" (N.I.V.).

By such judgment the Lord, through the Spirit's work, will "thoroughly purge His floor" (Matt. iii. 12).

The more we consider John's ministry the more we realize how startling it must have been and entirely different to what the Jew was expecting. The Baptizer was truly the forerunner of the King, opening up the way for Him, so fulfilling Isa. xl. 3 which Matthew quotes:

> "The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God."

The word LORD is the great title Jehovah. The One Whose way is being prepared is addressed as "our God", which presents no problem to those who acknowledge His Deity, even if they cannot fully comprehend the fullness and greatness of His Being. In fact no one can; nor are they asked to do so, but faith steps in where reason cannot reach and rests upon the unchanging Word of God which is always true and is the ground for faith to rest on.

The third great item in this section of Matthew's Gospel is the baptism of the Messiah. This may bring problems, because we may be certain of one thing, the Lord Jesus had no need to repent for He had no sin. Of Himself He was "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners" (Heb. vii. 26). Then why did He submit to water baptism by John? We must consider this in our next study.

No.6. iii. 13 - iv. 11.
pp. 73 - 79

Matthew now proceeds to record the baptism of the Messiah:

> "Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. But John forbad Him, saying, I have need to be baptized of Thee, and comest Thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered Him" (Matt. iii. 13-15).

Of one thing we can be perfectly sure, namely that the Lord Jesus had no need of baptism for purification, for, as we have seen, He was the holy One, without sin or taint of any kind. This John recognized, making him most reluctant to carry out this rite. Verse 14 tells us that John "forbad Him". The word means he tried to prevent it, but the Lord countered this by saying "it is proper for us to do this to fulfil all righteousness", that is to fulfil all that was resident in the purpose and will of God. If the Lord had not submitted to baptism, He would have appeared to hold aloof from His forerunner, whereas the ministries of the two are linked together. The baptism was only half the story, for the Messiah had yet to be anointed by the Spirit. It was the beginning of His public career as the Messiah, like the anointing of a king. In the realm of type and shadow, priests, prophets and kings were anointed at the beginning of their ministry and the Son of God was no exception to this:

> "As soon as Jesus was baptized, He went up out of the water. At that moment heaven was opened, and He saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove and lighting on Him. And a voice from heaven said, This is My Son, Whom I love; with Him I am well pleased" (iii. 16, N.I.V.).

It is not certain whether Matthew means that the Spirit of God took the form of a dove and came down or that He descended like a dove does. But in view of Luke's statement that the Holy Spirit descended in a bodily shape like a dove (Luke iii. 22) we take the former is what is meant. Meekness and gentleness are the qualities associated with the dove and the Messiah was the One Who was "meek and lowly of heart" (Matt. xi. 29) and was soon to announce that "the meek shall inherit the earth" (Matt. v. 5). However we must not assume that He Who was conceived of the Spirit should be devoid of Spirit until His baptism. The outward symbol of the dove reminds us that He was unique in this respect. Isa. xi. 2 had foretold that the Spirit of the Lord should rest upon Him and moreover John iii. 34 assures us that the Spirit was not given to Him "by measure". There was no limitation of the Spirit and His enabling for the Messiah.

Contrary to popular teaching, the baptism in water of Christ was not given as an example to follow. In addition to what we have seen, the Apostle John gives us another reason in quoting the words of John the Baptist:

> ". . . . . but (in order) that He should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water" (John i. 31).

This baptism had a direct message for Israel in showing that their Messiah had come and brought them under responsibility in their attitude towards Him. The voice of the Father from heaven richly confirmed His anointings. "This is my beloved Son in Whom I am well pleased." Each manifestation of the Godhead is represented here (Father, Son, and Holy Spirit) as the formal entrance of the Lord upon His Messianic ministry. The Lord Jesus said "I do always those things that please Him" (the Father, John viii. 29), words which could not be uttered with truth by any human being. The Father's declaration is repeated at the Transfiguration (Matt. xvii. 5) and shows the constant unchanging worthiness of the Son of God.

With this account of the Lord's baptism, the Baptizer's witness as a prelude to the Christ's earthly ministry closes. John the Baptist was very much like Elijah of the O.T. and was designated so before his birth by the angel who declared that he would go "in the spirit and power of Elias (Elijah), to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children . . . . ." (Luke i. 17). In appearance he looked like Elijah and dressed like him. He ate frugally and lived a strict, self-controlled life. Like Elijah too he was fearless and without partiality, being ready to denounce kings and rulers when they erred from God's ways, as well as correct and educate the ordinary people. As to whether he actually fulfilled Malachi's prophecy concerning Elijah we shall have to consider as we study this Gospel.

We now come to the third item in this section of Matthew's Gospel and that is the record of the threefold temptation of the Lord Jesus. The word 'tempt' means to test and it is not surprising that the Lord was tested by the devil immediately after His baptism which signaled the beginning of His Messianic work. This is a frequent experience of those who step out into the open for Christ. Satan desires to "sift them" as he did Peter later on to ruin their work if possible.

Matthew iv. tells us that Christ was "led of the Spirit" into the wilderness. Mark's account gives a stronger word (ekballei) "drives" ("sent Him out", N.I.V.). It was a strong compulsion of the Holy Spirit that led Christ to go into the desert to contend with the foe who is designated "the god of this age". This attack by Satan was nothing less than an attempt by him to overthrow the Messiah at the very beginning of His public career and witness, as the agony in the garden was a similar attempt to overthrow Him at the end of His witness and prevent Him reaching the cross and accomplishing His mighty work of redemption.

Satan never gives up nor does he tire. Eph. vi. teaches us concerning the constant warfare with the powers of darkness and the Lord Jesus was not exempt from this.

Matthew tells us that after fasting 40 days and being in a state of hunger, the devil came to Him. He was completely alone with none to help and Mark adds the fact that He was "with the wild beasts" so there was an element of danger as well. The evil one knows the best time to attack is a time of physical weakness. The change of scene here is mental. We need not assume that Satan literally moved the Lord from place to place. From a high mountain only a fraction of the world could be seen, but the glory of all the kingdoms of the world could be suggested to the mind. The tests came from the outside for there was nothing sinful in Christ that could respond to Satan's evil suggestions, as there is in us who have a sinful nature. We now give Matthew's account of the Temptation:

> "After fasting forty days and forty nights, He was hungry. The tempter came to Him and said, If you are the Son of God, tell these stones to become bread. Jesus answered, It is written: Man does not live on bread alone, but on every word that comes from the mouth of God. Then the devil took Him to the holy city and made Him stand on the highest point of the temple. If you are the Son of God, he said, Throw yourself down. For it is written: He will command His angels concerning you, and they will lift you up in their hands, so that you will not strike your foot against a stone. Jesus answered him, It is also written: Do not put the Lord your God to the test. Again, the devil took Him to a very high mountain and showed Him all the kingdoms of the world and their splendour. All this I will give you, he said, If you will bow down and worship me. Jesus said to him, Away from me Satan! For it is written: Worship the Lord your God, and serve Him only. Then the devil left Him, and angels came and attended Him" (Matthew iv. 2-11, N.I.V.).

In the narrative of the Temptation we have the first instance of the Lord quoting Scripture. In this Gospel the Lord quotes thirteen of the books of the O.T. and clearly refers to two other books, besides other allusions. For the student of the Word we give the occurrences—Genesis (xix. 4, 5); Exodus (v. 21, 27, 33, 38; xix. 18, 19) some of these might refer to Deuteronomy; Leviticus (v. 43; xix. 19; xxii. 39); Numbers (v. 33); Deuteronomy (iv. 4, 7, 10; v. 31; xxii. 37; xxiv. 31); Psalms (xxii. 44; xxiii. 39; xxvi.64; xxvii.46); Isaiah (xiii.14,15; xv.8; xxi.13; xxiv.7,10,29,31): Jeremiah (xvi.13); Daniel (xxiv. 15, 21, 30; xxvii. 64); Hosea (ix. 13; xii. 27); Micah (x. 35, 36); Zechariah (xxiv. 30; xxvi. 31); Malachi (xi. 10). The references to I Samuel (xii. 14) and Jonah (xii. 38, 41) are clear. We shall completely miss the point of these temptations unless we realize that the Lord Jesus came to this earth as appointed by the Father, and as the faithful Servant, who was completely dependent and obedient to Him. Christ Himself said "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me, and to finish His work" (John iv. 34). Christ's will, His words, and His work were not His own, but the Father's (John vi. 38; xiv. 10; v. 36; ix. 4). Thus it was that He lived in complete dependence upon the Father, and in doing this, He did not use His own divine power for His own needs. He could have done so, but only at the expense of forsaking the role of the obedient Servant Who was always at the disposal of the Father and dependent on Him for everything.

The devil's first words look back to the declaration of the Father from heaven, "this is My beloved Son". Satan said, "if you are the Son of God . . . . .". The 'if' is not one of doubt, but as Professor A. T. Robertson says this is "a condition of the first class which assumes the condition to be true", so 'if' could be rendered "since". "Since you are the Son of God, change these stones into bread", thus tempting Christ to be unwilling to render to His Father the complete obedience that His position as the Servant demanded. It was when the Father willed, His hunger would be satisfied, and for this He had to wait in order to be faithful.

But Satan in effect said "no, why wait? There is nothing sinful in relieving hunger by eating a meal. You have the power to do it, use it and satisfy your need". This was subtle indeed, for of course there is obviously no sin in eating when one is hungry. But the Lord's answer is clear. He realized that He had been subjected to the discipline of this fast for the same purpose that Israel had been "suffered to hunger" in the wilderness, namely that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Deut. viii. 3). The Father in His own time and way would supply the physical needs of His Son. The duty of the Lord was to be obedient in His dependence and not to decide for Himself either the moment or the manner in which His fast should be ended. And so the Lord so aptly quoted a verse from Deuteronomy which had Israel's physical test in view regarding food, which was so much like His own at this time.

The second temptation revolved around the fact that people are impressed by the spectacular and even the Lord's enemies wanted Him to give them a "sign", something out of the ordinary that might convince them. Consequently the devil suggests that the Lord should throw Himself down from the roof of the Temple in the sight of the crowds. Of course you will be supported and protected from harm by angels! This would certainly impress people. To try to prove his point Satan does not hesitate to quote Scripture, and one must confess he often knows the Bible better than professing Christians. He quotes from Psa. xci. 11 but significantly omits the words "to keep thee in all thy ways". This alters the truth of the original—for God has never promised to keep His children in all their ways, if these ways are contrary to His will. We are not allowed to take unnecessary risks and count on the Lord's protection. What dangers are an essential part of fulfilling the Lord's will, we may be sure we shall be kept safe in going through them. We notice too that Satan took care not to quote the next verse, namely verse 13, which gives the destruction of the adder, s well as the lion. This was getting too near home for the devil who could not have forgotten Gen. iii. 14, 15! The Lord Jesus confounds him by quoting again from Deut. vi. 16, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God". Putting God to the test is not trusting Him. The Saviour is willing to face death when the Father reveals that He should do so and not before this time.

Satan now tries a third temptation and this comes nearer his one constant aim, and that is to attain God's place and receive the worship of creation. Christ is given a panoramic view of the kingdoms of the world and their glory "in a moment of time" (Luke iv. 5). The enemy declares that they are his, "for that is delivered unto me, and to whomsoever I will I give it" (Luke iv. 6). Christ does not contradict him for he is the "usurper" who temporarily is in command of the world system. He is the "prince of this world" and now he suggests that it would be the easiest thing for Christ to gain control of all these kingdoms by the simple act of bowing down and worshipping him! All the difficulty and pain of the future can be avoided if He will only do this! It was a short cut to glory.

Had the Lord done this, He would have subscribed to the diabolical doctrine that the end justifies the means, the observation of which has tripped up thousands. Evil can never be overcome by evil and the reign of God can never be established by Satanic means. "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and Him only shalt thou serve", words which need to be constantly proclaimed today. The carrying out of the devil's plan would have meant the surrender of the Son of God to the world ruler of this darkness.

Its threefold aim was to gain: (1) a temporal, not a spiritual dominion; (2) to gain it at once; and (3) this would have made the Messiah a vice-regent of Satan and not of God.

"Begone" Christ says to the deceiver and Satan is forced to leave Him temporarily. Luke iv. 13 adds that this was only until a good opportunity occurred again. The order of the three temptations vary in the first three Gospels, but this does not cause any difficulty. We can praise the Lord that the victory was won in spite of the physical weakness after a forty days fast and the repeated attacks of the devil. We are told that angels came and ministered to the Lord, evidently strengthening Him and what rejoicing must have filled their hearts as they contemplated the mighty Conqueror, empowered by His heavenly Father.

Before we pass on, let us remember that the Lord Jesus did not triumph because He used the power of His Godhead against Satan. As an example, He used effectively the holy Scriptures which we can all use. This is the mightiest weapon against the evil one. It is the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God (Eph. vi. 17) and is the only weapon which can defeat Satan and all his wiles.

There has to be constant practice in the use of weapons if they are to be effective. To many the Bible is a closed book because it is never used or studied. To such it is not a weapon at all for it rests on the shelf unused. May we all, while we have the opportunity, so read and receive the Word of God that we may have the Word of Christ dwelling in us richly in all wisdom (Col. iii. 16) and so be ready to meet the deceiver with the sword of the Spirit.

No.7. iv. 12 - 25.
pp. 88 - 93

Verse 12 of Matthew chapter iv. begins a new paragraph which gives the commencement of the Galilean ministry. A year had elapsed which is not mentioned by the Evangelist. The reason for Christ's return to Galilee is given here, namely that John had been arrested and imprisoned. This is confirmed by Mark, although Matthew alone records that, leaving Nazareth (where He had been rejected [Luke iv. 16-31]), the Lord came and dwelt in Capernaum in the north-west shore of the Sea Galilee in the district once known as Zebulun and Napthalim, but now incorporated in the larger circular area known as Galilee (Galilee means circle or circuit). This was where the Jewish population was largely mixed with Gentiles, hence "Galilee of the Gentiles". Capernaum became at this point as Matt. ix. 1 says, "His own city".

The Evangelist finds in this the fulfillment of Isa. ix. 1-7, which describes a time when that same region, the northern part of the land of Israel ravaged by the Assyrian invader, would one day experience "a great light" (Matt. iv. 13-16). He Who was the light of the world would remove its darkness. The ministry of the Lord Jesus here continued the Baptist's, which had suddenly come to an end through his arrest ordered by Herod Antipas.

Verse 17 gives the first of the two time periods contained in Matthew's Gospel, "From that time Jesus began to preach and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand". This was identical with the Baptist's message. In xvi. 21 we have the same introductory words, but this time the Lord begins to foretell His rejection and death. In chapter iv. the nearness of the kingdom is announced but there is no explanation of that kingdom. In fact in none of the Gospels do we find a detailed explanation of the kingdom of heaven. It was evident there was no need for such an explanation, for that kingdom had been foretold in all its glory in the O.T. It was the Messianic kingdom which had Israel at its centre. If John the Baptist and Christ were revealing another kingdom, different from the O.T., then it would have been necessary to make this perfectly clear to their hearers who were Jews, raised up and instructed in the O.T. Scriptures.

G. N. Peters in his Theocratic Kingdom observes:

> "The New Testament begins the announcement of the kingdom in terms expressive of its being previously well known . . . . . the preaching of the kingdom, its simple announcement, without the least attempt to explain its meaning and nature, the very language in which it was conveyed to the Jews—all pre-supposed that it was a subject familiar to all. John the Baptist, Jesus and the seventy, all proclaimed the kingdom in a way without definition or explanation that indicated that their hearts were acquainted with its meaning" (1:181).

The nearness of this great kingdom was made real by the coming to earth of the KING. All that it awaited was the repentance and acceptance of the King-Priest, by Israel, hence the call to the nation by the Baptist and the Lord.*

[* -- For further details of this most important fact, see the author's The Kingdom of God in Heaven and on Earth, chapter 5.]

The Kingdom of Heavens and the Kingdom of God.

The phrase, the kingdom of heaven, is found only in Matthew's Gospel where it occurs 32 times and its sphere is defined in the "Lord's prayer", "Thy kingdom comes. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven" (Matt. vi. 10) and further exemplified by the Lord in the Sermon on the Mount in His quotation from Psa. xxxvii. 11, "the meek shall inherit the earth" (Matt. v. 5 and see Psa. xxxvii. 9, 11, 22, 29, 34). Needless to say this is not equivalent to a kingdom in heaven if words mean anything at all. That there is a kingdom in heaven, other Scriptures reveal, but we must not import this into Matthew's Gospel which is most evidently dealing with the Messianic kingdom of the O.T. This kingdom will be like "the days of heaven upon the earth" (Deut. xi. 21), when "the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men" (Dan. iv. 25, 26).

The kingdom of God is wider in scope and is as universal as the sovereignty of God over the whole creation which includes heaven as well as earth and finds its occurrences mainly in the epistles which later develop the heavenly aspect of God's kingdom.

The two phrases are sometimes used interchangeably in the Gospels as the following references show: Matt. iv. 17 and Mark i. 15; Matt. v. 3 and Luke vi. 20; Matt.xix.14 and Mark x. 14; Matt. xix. 23 and Luke xviii. 24; Matt. xi. 11 and Luke vii. 28; Matt. xiii. 11 and Luke viii. 10. There are five passages in Matthew where he departs from the normal and uses the phrase, "the kingdom of God" (Matthew vi. 33; xii. 28; xix. 24; xxi. 31, 43). However, because these two phrases are sometimes used interchangeably in the Gospels, we must not assume that they are always identical in meaning in all their occurrences in the N.T. The kingdom of heaven is the mediatorial kingdom of the O.T. and is related to God's dominion on the earth which is realized at the Second Advent when "the Son of Man comes in His kingdom" (Matt. xvi. 28) and takes control of earthly affairs. The kingdom of God is wider and includes all heaven as well as heavenly beings. The reason why they can be used with a similar meaning in the Gospels is that the lesser aspect (the kingdom of heaven) is included in the greater (the kingdom of God). We can say with truth that London is in England, or that it is in Great Britain, but it would be erroneous to conclude that England and Great Britain are identical terms.

To Israel alone was the kingdom of heaven made known at the beginning, because, as the O.T. makes clear, they should be the centre of it and from them the knowledge of its glories should radiate all over the earth, so that "all families of the earth" might be blessed (Gen. xii. and many other Scriptures). This is why Israel dominates the kingdom purposes revealed in Matthew. It is "to the Jew first", but finally not to the Jew only, and this is what Israel forgot, and in their pride imagined that they alone formed the kingdom of the heavens on earth.

Between the summary of the Lord's preaching given in iv. 17 and the description of His Galilean ministry in verses 23-25, Matthew gives the call of the two pairs of brothers who formed the nucleus of the apostles. They had previously been disciples of John the Baptist and through him had come to know the Messiah in His preliminary ministry in Judaea, as recorded by John, about which both Matthew and Mark are silent. Matthew marks the readiness of both pairs of brothers to obey the call, although it meant leaving their means of livelihood. They do not hesitate, for it is with regal authority that the Lord speaks. They were listening to the voice of the King and His authority is not resented, but immediately obeyed, even to the point of leaving their fishing nets without waiting to draw them in.

Their response meant that the Lord was not surrounded, as formerly, by a crowd of casual and constantly changing hearts, but by a select number of constant followers. It is with these disciples that He traversed Galilee, teaching in the synagogues. In this new experience they were learning how to become fishers of men, as the Lord had willed for them. Three of these men, Peter, James and John, seemed to be more intimate with the Lord than the rest of the Twelve. They were specially privileged to be alone with Him at the raising of Jairus' daughter (Mark.v.37), on the mount of Transfiguration (Matt.xvii.1), and in Gethsemane (Matt. xxvi. 37).

Matthew now goes on to tell us that, unlike the Baptist, who required people to come to him in the wilderness, the Messiah went to them: He "went about in all Galilee teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the good news of the kingdom". The kingdom, so long awaited, was the constant theme, and at last it was near, with the presence of the King in their midst. Not only this, but He healed "all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people" (iv. 23), and the next verse expounds this by saying, "and people brought to Him all who were ill with various diseases, those suffering severe pain, the demon-possessed, the epileptics and the paralytics, and He healed them. Large crowds from Galilee, the Decapolis, Jerusalem, Judea and the region across the Jordan followed Him" (verses 24, 25, N.I.V.). Furthermore His name spread beyond the bounds of Galilee into the Roman province of Syria (verse 24).

Sometimes this great healing ministry is represented by the critics as nothing more than faith healing, "physical methods" or "moral therapeutics", but it is quite incredible that all those who were laid in the streets were no more than neurotics. Can leprosy, dropsy, fever, withered hand, issue of blood, blindness and deafness be cured by emotional methods?

We may pause to ask why this healing ministry takes such an important place in the proclamation of the kingdom? In the O.T. those who faithfully followed the instructions of the law, were guaranteed good health:

> "The Lord will take away from thee all sickness, and will put none of the evil diseases of Egypt . . . . . upon thee . . . . ." (Deut. vii. 15).

Such were to be blessed by the Lord "above all people" (Deut. vii. 14). No one can get the full enjoyment from life if they are constantly ill and it is perfectly clear that, among many features of the kingdom, is good health. It is quite wrong to suppose that the kingdom of God is a spiritual one and nothing more. It is certainly spiritual basically, but its outward effect touches all departments of life (This important point is discussed in the author's The Kingdom of God in Heaven and on Earth). With so much physical, mental and spiritual healing, the Lord Jesus was demonstrating to the people the character and rich blessings of the kingdom He had come to proclaim.

However, there was more than this in the frequent miracles that the Lord Jesus performed. After the resurrection Peter said:

> "Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by Him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know" (Acts ii. 22).

It was not that Christ performed miracles that proved His Messiahship, for Satan can work these to deceive (II Thess. ii. 8, 9). The miracles of the Gospels and Acts were those predicted by the Old Testament as being characteristic of Messiah's coming and ministry, for them "the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing" (Isa. xxxv. 5, 6).

It was by these specific miracles, as Peter declares, God confirmed the Lord's ministry and they were all literally fulfilled day after day before the people of Israel. Nor do they cease at the crucifixion, for the Acts period is full of similar spectacular miracles (see Acts ii. 43; v. 12, 15, 16; vi. 8; viii. 6; xiv. 3; xv. 12; xi. 11, 12; xxviii. 9).

These signs and wonders were God's confirmation of the kingdom message (Heb.ii.3,4) to those of Israel who believed (I Cor. i. 6, 7) and a divine witness against those who believed not (I Cor. xiv. 21, 22). As long as the chosen people exist as a nation in covenant relationship to God, these evidential miracles persist, but when Israel is set aside in unbelief at the end of the Acts, they cease as kingdom signs to Israel. God can and does still work miracles, but they are not evidences of the mediatorial kingdom of God relating to the earth. These were all public and spectacular in character. At least twenty (20) of the Acts miracles were seen by witnesses, sometimes by great multitudes, as on the day of Pentecost. Even the most vehement opposers could not deny their genuineness. They were forced to admit "that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it" (Acts.iv.15,16). At the conclusion of the Acts period these great public miracles came to an end.

It is most important that we should have a Scriptural understanding of these miracles and signs performed by the Lord and the apostles. To take them out of their divine setting can be dangerous, for it gives Satan the opportunity to travesty them and so deceive the unwary. In the Acts period God gave to believers the gift of discerning of spirits, to enable them to sift infallibly the true from the false. Hence the warning in I.John.iv.1-3.

No.8. The Sermon on the Mount (v. 1 - 7).
pp. 114 - 118

We now come to the first of the great address contained in Matthew's Gospel. Before we consider the details, there are one or two observations that must be made. We must not fall into error of imagining that the Lord said a thing once only and never repeated it. How many times did He use the phrase "he that believeth in Me"? He was constantly drawing the attention of His hearers to Himself, for this was fundamental to His ministry and witness. We may be sure that we have only a few occurrences preserved in the Gospels.

With regard to the Sermon on the Mount, it would not be safe to say that this address was given on one occasion and never repeated. We have a shorter version given by Luke. Is he abbreviating Matthew's account or recording another occasion when the Lord repeated some of His teaching? This sermon is presented as one discourse in the first Gospel, whereas, various items from it are spread over Luke's Gospel in at least ten places. The diligent student should compare the following:

Matthew	Luke	Matthew	Luke
v. 3-12	vi. 20-23	vi. 24	xvi. 13
v. 13	xiv. 34, 35	vi. 25-34	xii. 22-31
v. 15	xi. 33	vii. 1-5	vi. 37-42
v. 18	xvi. 17	vii. 7-11	xi. 9-13
v. 25, 26	xii. 57-59	vii. 12	vi. 31
v. 31, 32	xvi. 18	vii. 13, 14	xiii. 23, 24
v. 38-48	vi. 27-30, 32-36	vii. 15-20	vi. 43-45
vi 9-15	xi. 1-4	vii. 23	xiii. 27
vi. 19-21	xii. 33, 34	vii. 24-27	vi. 47-49
vi. 22, 23	xi. 34-36

Matthew may have gathered together in one discourse the various subjects of the Lord's teaching. It is equally possible that Christ Himself presented these subjects in one discourse and Luke records items at different places in his Gospel. We cannot be dogmatic about this, nor is it necessary, for however the Lord's teaching is grouped together, the genuineness, authority and value of it is not affected in any way.

Matthew gives no indication of date, but it would be wrong to assume that this sermon was given at the beginning of the Lord's ministry. We must remember that Matthew only gives us two dates in his Gospel, as we have seen. Moreover he does not attempt to present events in their chronological order. The multitudes in v. 1 clearly refer to the great multitudes of the previous verse (iv. 25), and these did not gather until the Lord had been working and witnessing for some time and the report of Him had spread abroad.

Furthermore the doctrine contained in the Sermon on the Mount is certainly not elementary. It is presented to those who had already believed and been instructed to some degree. In view of the basic teaching given in John iii. to Nicodemus, it must be true that His disciples who were listening, had already responded and put their faith in Him:

> "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John iii. 3).
> "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (verse 5).

These statements definitely exclude unbelievers participating in the kingdom of heaven. The sermon was evidently given about the middle of the Galilean ministry.

Verse 1 and 2 of Matt. v. read:

> "And seeing the multitudes, He went up into a mountain: and when He was set, His disciples came unto Him: and he opened His mouth, and taught them, saying",

Who represent His disciples? We must remember that this sermon is given before Matthew records the calling of the Twelve in chapter x., whereas in Luke, the Twelve are called before his summary of the Sermon on the Mount (Luke vi. 13-16). Whether His disciples consisted only of the two pairs of brothers He had called, or all the Twelve we cannot be sure, but one thing is clear, these disciples were sitting nearest to Him as He gave His teaching. In Luke's account a great multitude of people also came to hear Him (Luke vi. 17). He "stood in the plain" of the A.V. should be rendered "He stood on a level place" as the N.I.V., and this could have been on the side of the hill as He ascended. The discourse was given largely for the instruction of the disciples, and we must keep this constantly in mind as we ponder over each verse.

The word "blessed" occurs 9 times in verses 3-11. It is not the normal word, which is eulogetos, but makarios which is difficult to render exactly in English. "Happy" comes nearest to it and it is actually applied to God in I Tim. i. 11 and vi. 15. There is no copula (is or are) in these opening verses, so they be translated "happy the poor in spirit", "happy those that mourn", etc. Or it could be rendered "O the happiness of . . . . .". The word translated happy refers to bliss which is attached to each promise. Expositors variously number these as 7, 8 or 9. They are 9 if verses 11 and 12 are considered as a distinct and complete unit. They are 8 if verses 11 and 12 are regarded as expansions of verse 10. They are 7 if the numbering is regulated by distinctions in the subject matter of the promises. In the Gospel of Luke there is no question about the number, for here we have 4 beatitudes and 4 woes.

Some of them seem to overlap, for the poor in spirit are most likely to be meek; those who are merciful are likely to be peacemakers; those who hunger and thirst after righteousness are likely to be pure in heart. Those who are persecuted for righteousness sake will mourn for those who stoop to do this sort of thing and they will surely be comforted. These verses are seeming paradoxes, for according to God's reckoning, blessedness begins where man reckons that misery begins and there is nothing like this teaching in Jewish or Gentile philosophy.

With what surprise those around the Lord must have listened! To some in the crowd, the statements must have come as a shock, for the Jews' conception of the Messiah was one of a mighty conqueror who would free them from the Roman yoke and there is nothing like that in this great address. The happiness described in these verses does not come from human opinion, but rather from the condition ascribed to them in the estimate of God. Matthew does not attempt to gather all the Beatitudes uttered by the Lord into this sermon. He could have added "blessed are your eyes, for they see: and your ears, for they hear" (xiii. 16); "Blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in Me" (xi. 6); "Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing" (xxiv. 46); "Blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it" (Luke xi. 28); "Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed" (John xx. 29).

It was possible that the Lord Jesus, on the hill side, had the Psalms in mind, for they give many instances of blessedness, the first commencing with "blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly".

> "Now when He saw the crowds, He went up on a mountainside and sat down. His disciples came to Him, and he began to teach them, saying: Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. v. 1-3, N.I.V.).

The Greek says "the mountain", although we do not know which mountain it was. It was evidently a prominent hill in the district from which the Lord found it more convenient to give His address. In the manner of the rabbis, He sat down, as they did, and taught His disciples. He commences to describe the character and conduct of those who will be worthy to enter into His great kingdom of the heavens.

Who are the "poor in spirit"? It certainly does not mean spiritual poverty, but rather those who have no confidence in themselves, or as Paul said later "no confidence in the flesh", but every confidence in God that He is able to supply all they require. In other words they are truly humble in mind, the very opposite of being self-sufficient and proud as the Pharisees were. The parable of the Pharisee and the Publican illustrates these two classes well (Luke xviii. 10-14). The Pharisee was full of himself and his good deeds, full of pride. The Publican, on the other hand, made no attempt to exalt himself. He could only describe himself as "the sinner" and depend on the mercy of the Lord. The comment of the Lord Jesus was that he went down to his house "justified" rather than the other and then He adds, "every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted" (verse 14). This man was indeed "poor in spirit", ready to enter the kingdom, if God willed, and be exalted by Him in that kingdom.

From this first Beatitude, we get the clear teaching that proud self-righteous people will never enter into the Lord's kingdom. As we study each Beatitude, we get a picture of the character of those in this future kingdom. In Luke's account, the words "in spirit" are omitted and reads, "blessed are you who are poor, for yours is the kingdom of God" (Luke vi. 20, N.I.V.). Luke may include therefore, those who are literally poor, but this word goes wider to include the mind, for the literally poor are not necessarily "poor in spirit". "Blessed is he that considereth the poor" (Psa. xli. 1) could be understood, but "blessed are the poor" would have sounded strange doctrine indeed.

> "Blessed are those who mourn, for they will be comforted" (Matt. v. 4, N.I.V.).

This does not refer to those who are lamenting from any cause. Much will depend on the cause of the mourning and the mental outlook of the mourner. Such may mourn over their own shortcomings and sins, but they will also be concerned about the sin and failure and indifference of the world around them, which interferes with the plans of God and His sovereignty over the earth. They will be comforted when they realize that nothing finally can overturn His almighty purpose which will surely be fulfilled, and then "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" (Rev. vii. 17).

> "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. v. 5).

These words are uttered by the One Who called Himself "meek and lowly in heart" (Matt. xi. 29) and shall the disciple be above his Master? Christ is quoting from Psa.xxxvii., where the phrase "shall inherit the earth" occurs 5 times (verses 9, 11, 22, 29, 34, land and earth represent the same word). The land is surely that which was promised to Abraham and his posterity, from the Nile to the river Euphrates (Gen.xv.18). Meekness is often misunderstood and reckoned as weakness. Moses was described as "very meek, above all men which were upon the face of the earth" (Numb. xii. 3) but he was anything but weak. Meekness is the gentleness of real strength, certainly not effeminacy. Meek people are humble so far as their own attainments are concerned, but they have a mighty tower of strength divinely given to draw on when needed, and can be resolute and unbending when demanded by circumstances.

> "Blessed are those who hunger and thirst for righteousness, for they will be filled" (Matt. v. 6, N.I.V.).

It is noteworthy that it is the hunger and thirst for righteousness, and not the possession of it, that is pronounced "blessed". To assess oneself as righteous, like the Pharisee in the parable, is fatal. To know one needs it is not enough. But to have a passionate and persistent longing for something better like righteousness is always good. We should never be content with our spiritual condition. It is the hungry soul that the Lord fills with goodness (Psa. cvii. 9) and our aim should constantly be Christ-likeness even though we can never completely attain to it.

Such will be the attitude of mind of those who seek to enter the kingdom, the Lord declares.

> "Blessed are the merciful, for they will be shown mercy" (Matt. v. 7, N.I.V.).

This Beatitude relates to the dealing of men with one another, and those who exhibit mercy will themselves find mercy in the day of judgment and reckoning for service. God's mercy is at once cause and effect. Because God is merciful to him, the righteous person is merciful to others and because he is merciful, he wins God's mercy. This mercy is frequent in the O.T. (Psa. lxxxvi. 15; ciii. 8; cxi. 4; cxii. 4; cxvi. 5; cxlv. 8) and is often joined with graciousness and compassion. The need for mercy and compassion shown to others is vividly portrayed in the parable of Matt. xviii. 21-35 and the divine judgment on those who deal harshly with others.

No.9. The Sermon on the Mount (cont'd) (v. 8 - 12).
pp. 125 - 130

> "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God" (Matt. v. 8).

This does not only mean a mind that is free from sin, but rather single-mindedness, whose first desire is continually to the Lord and His claims. We remember the warning of double-mindedness (James i. 8). One of the features of our great and certain hope is that "we shall see Him as He is" and this will be true of all the callings of the redeemed.

> "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called sons of God" (Matt. v. 9, N.I.V.).

It is true to say that the "worthy walk" always leads to peace and not enmity or division. In other words, peace leads to unity, and unity is very important in the outworking of the purposes of God, hence the three divine unities of Eph. iv., the sevenfold unity of the Spirit, of the Faith and of the Body.

God's work can proceed with unity; it is hindered by division, hence Satan's aim to constantly divide the people of God. The One Who is the Lord and Head of the Body is the Prince of Peace, Whose kingdom is one of peace. Each member's spiritual experience starts with peace (Rom. v. 1) and continues with it, for peace is an important part of the fruit of the Spirit (Gal. v. 22, 23). Peacemaking begins at home, in the mind, and then spreads to all God's family.

The eighth Beatitude deals with men's attitude towards the believer:

> "Blessed are those who are persecuted because of righteousness, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. v. 10, N.I.V.).

And this attitude will often be one of hostility:

> "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated Me before it hated you . . . but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you . . . if they have persecuted Me, they will also persecute you . . ." (John xv. 18-20).

The Lord has warned us beforehand of the opposition and hatred of an unbelieving world. Most people dislike those whose principles differ greatly from their own, and specially those whose principles are much higher than their own. Such are a standing reproach to those who are not righteous, and it is exasperating to be constantly reminded that one's life is not what it ought to be.

The believer then, who is reflecting His Lord, must not be surprised if he is misunderstood and is treated with coldness, contempt or ridicule; for this is just the treatment that his Saviour experienced. In this Beatitude there is another seeming paradox, but the blessedness here, as the next verse shows, leads to God's commendation at the end, with reward that lasts for ever. The pathway of the believer is much the same whatever calling and whatever time we are dealing with; it is never a way of ease and freedom from trouble. Later on, the Apostle Paul stressed this when he said "we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God" (Acts xiv. 22).

The next verses in Matt. v., verses 11 and 12, are companions of the one we have been considering:

> "Blessed are you when people insult you, persecute you and falsely say all kinds of evil against you because of Me. Rejoice and be glad, because great is your reward in heaven, for in the same way they persecuted the prophets who were before you" (Matt. v. 11, 12, N.I.V.).

This Beatitude amplifies the one given before, but one thing must not be missed, and that is the words "for My sake" or "because of Me". There can be no reward for suffering for one's own wrongdoing. The slanderous treatment of the above verses must not be true, but must be entirely for Christ's sake. The Lord can never commend any one who deserves all the evil said of him and done to him here.

We have seen that the kingdom which John the Baptist and Christ proclaimed was the great Messianic kingdom so graphically described by the O.T. prophets. Peter in his sermon recorded in Acts iii., does not hesitate to link this kingdom, this time of refreshing and restoration from the Lord, as the time described by all the prophets from Samuel onwards, for they foretold of these days, he declared (Acts iii. 19-26). The point at issue is this, is the Sermon on the Mount describing this kingdom? Is it a time of persecution, reviling and slandering of God's people? Is it a time of enduring all the losses and crosses of this sermon? Is evil still going to abound? Will it be a time when God's people will be hated of all nations? (Matt. x. 22 and xxiv. 9). The kingdom in this great address is looked on as future:

> "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven" (vi. 10).
> "The meek shall inherit the earth" (v. 5).
> "They shall be filled" (v. 6).
> "Many will say to Me in that day" (vii. 22).

When at last the Lord's prayer is answered and that kingdom becomes a reality, it will be a time when God's will is done perfectly, as it is done in heaven. Does the Sermon on the Mount describe such a time we ask again? And the answer must be "no", or the Word of God absolutely misleads. What we do see clearly is a persecuted, waiting people, suffering in the absence of their rightful King, sustained by the hope that, when He comes and the kingdom is set up, they will receive their great reward when they, the meek, shall inherit the earth and receive the rich blessings of this great kingdom.

Once we recognize this, we are better able to decide whether the Sermon on the Mount was addressed to the Church which is His Body or whether, as some maintain, it gives the laws of the kingdom when set up. We feel, from the standpoint of interpretation, that both these conceptions are wrong, for the former assumes the kingdom of heaven to be the church and the latter assumes that the great Messianic kingdom is one of suffering and loss, whereas the prophets maintained that it would be the time when Christ should reign gloriously as the Son of David:

> "In His days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth" (Psa. lxxii. 7), and so many are the growing O.T. descriptions of this kingdom, both spiritually and temporally along these lines, that there is no need to quote them.

The two great key thoughts of the Sermon on the Mount, and in fact the whole Gospel, are reward and entry into the kingdom. The Sermon is giving us the qualities of those who are permitted to enter and those who will be shut out.

We will now give the outline of the section before us:

A | v. 1-16. Reward.
B | v. 17. The Law and the Prophets.
C | v. 19, 20. Entry into the kingdom.
D | v. 21-44. But I say unto you.
E | v. 45-48. The Perfect (spiritually mature).
A | vi. 1 - vii. 11. Reward.
B | vii. 12. The Law and the Prophets.
C | vii. 13-23. Entry into the kingdom.
D | vii. 24-29. These sayings of Mine.
E | vii. 24. The Wise.

The word for 'enter' or 'go into' occurs no less than 35 times in the Gospel of Matthew. Five of these occurrences are found in the Sermon on the Mount. The word is eiserchomai:

> ". . . . . except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven" (v. 20).
> ". . . . . when thou prayest, enter into thy closet . . . . ." (vi. 6).
> "Enter ye in at the strait gate . . . . . broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat" (vii. 13).
> "Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of My Father . . . . ." (vii. 21).

It is clear that conditions for getting into this kingdom are severe, and bear in mind that the whole sermon is addressed primarily to the disciples, saved men who had been "born again" by believing in Christ. This will no doubt cause problems, but Scriptural problems are meant to be faced, and must be faced if we want truth.

Other references in this Gospel which bear directly on the kingdom are the following:

". . . . . I tell you the truth, unless you change and become like little children, you will never enter the kingdom of heaven" (xviii. 3, N.I.V.).

"If your hand or your foot causes you to sin, cut it off and throw it away. It is better for you to enter life maimed or crippled than to have two hands or two feet and be thrown into eternal fire" (xviii. 8, N.I.V.), (likewise verse 9).

". . . . . If you want to enter life, obey the commandments" (xix. 17, N.I.V.).

". . . . . it is hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven" (xix. 23, N.I.V.).

". . . . . it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God" (xix. 24, N.I.V.).

"Friend, he asked, how did you get in here without wedding clothes? The man was speechless" (xxii. 12, N.I.V.).

". . . . . you hypocrites . . . . . you yourselves do not enter, nor will you let those enter who are trying to" (xxiii. 13, N.I.V.).

". . . . . the virgins who were ready went in with him to the wedding banquet" (xxv. 10, N.I.V.).

". . . . . well done, thou good and faithful servant . . . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord" (xxv. 21 and also verse 23).

In these references we can see that entering the kingdom and entering into life are parallel. Let us now look at the word "reward", first in the Sermon on the Mount and then in the rest of the Gospel. In the sermon it occurs 7 times:

Alms before men	No reward in heaven (vi. 1).
Hypocrites who seek glory of men	They have their reward (2).
Alms in secret	The Father shall reward openly (4).
Prayer as hypocrites	They have their reward (5).
Prayer in secret	The Father shall reward openly (6).
Hypocrites fasting	They have their reward (16).
Appeared not to fast	The Father shall reward openly (18).

Other references are:

"Anyone who receives a prophet because he is a prophet will receive a prophet's reward, and anyone who receives a righteous man because he is a righteous man will receive a righteous man's reward. And if anyone gives a cup of cold water to one of these little ones because he is My disciple, I tell you the truth, he will certainly not lose his reward" (x. 41, 42, N.I.V.).

In each case it will be noticed that it is always some kind of action that produces a divine reward, not just faith alone. It is absolutely necessary that we distinguish between faith and works, between what we receive from God as a gift of His grace, quite apart from merit, and what we work out for the Lord in service as the fruit of salvation. Salvation is never by works; it comes from faith in Christ and what He has done for us, but it is "unto good works". Good works should result from it (Eph. ii. 8-10). It is the service of the believer that the Lord tests, and faithful service leads to the Lord's commendation and His reward (Matt. xxv. 19-23). Unfaithful service means loss of reward, but not loss of salvation (I Cor. iii. 10-15).

Failure to distinguish between these parallel truths has caused a multitude of difficulties and arguments, some teaching that we can be saved today and lost tomorrow. Others deny that there is any reward or loss at all, for, they say, grace covers all this. A very convenient doctrine no doubt, specially where unfaithfulness is concerned. Nevertheless it is quite unscriptural and therefore not true.

The Sermon on the Mount is not the gospel for the unsaved. If it is, then salvation is by works, merit and human attainment and much of holy Scripture is contradicted. It is reward teaching to believers of the time of Christ's first coming and lays down God's conditions for entry into the kingdom of the heavens. Those who do not fulfil these conditions are refused entry and "wailing and gnashing of teeth" describe the intense disappointment of such who are excluded.

No.10. v. 13 - 30.
pp. 149 - 154

Having seen the Scriptural setting of the Sermon on the Mount and considered the Beatitudes, we proceed with verse 13 of chapter v.:

> "You are the salt of the earth. But if the salt loses its saltiness, how can it be made salty again? It is no longer good for anything, except to be thrown out and trampled by men" (v. 13, N.I.V.).

Salt gives flavour to food and preserves from corruption. It makes food more palatable and wholesome. Dr. A. T. Robertson says that it is common in Syria and Palestine to see salt scattered in piles on the ground, because it has lost its flavour. Thomson in his The Land and the Book page 381 says, "I saw large quantities of it literally thrown into the street, to be trodden under foot of men and animals". This is a picture of encouragement and warning given by the Lord to describe those who were intensely concerned about entering and enjoying God's kingdom.

Like salt, they should be a preservative against corruption and evil around them. Instead of this the danger is that such could be infected by these evils, in which case the "saltiness" has gone and is worthless. The Apostle Paul uses the same figure in Colossians, "Let your speech be alway with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man" (Col. iv. 6).

A second illustration is now given by the Lord:

> "You are the light of the world. A city on a hill cannot be hidden. Neither do people light a lamp and put it under a bowl. Instead they put it on its stand, and it gives light to everyone in the house. In the same way, let your light shine before men, that they may see your good deeds and praise your Father in heaven" (v. 14-16, N.I.V.).

A city on a mountain and a candle on a lampstand would certainly be seen and would shed its light around. In the same way, the believer should let his light shine to all mankind. Even so the light does not originate from him, but from the One Who is "the light of the world" (John viii. 12). The believer is only a light bearer and as such deserves no glorification. All glorification should go to the Lord. He Who commanded the light to shine out of darkness and to shine in our hearts (II Cor. iv. 4-6) deserves all the glory, for the glory is not ours.

Likewise Phil. ii. 15 (margin) exhorts us to "shine as lights in the world, holding forth the Word of life" and this is not the first time the Sermon on the Mount is referred to in Paul's epistles. The world's darkness is intense and Christ, as the world's Light, is absent. All the more need then for His followers to reflect the light of His truth which alone can dispel the darkness.

The Fulfillment of the Law.

The Lord now comes to His relationship to the law given through Moses:

> "Do not think that I have come to abolish the Law or the Prophets; I have not come to abolish them but to fulfil them. I tell you the truth, until heaven and earth disappear, not the smallest letter, not the least stroke of a pen, will by any means disappear from the Law until everything is accomplished" (v. 17, 18, N.I.V.).

The idea that, as a Teacher, He had come to make known something that was novel and exciting, is absolutely wrong. He had not come to alter or abolish God's law, but to fulfil it and remove the traditional misinterpretations of the scribes and Pharisees, thus opening the way to the correct interpretation of the laws of God. There are six illustrations of this, grouped in two "threes", which are separated from one another by the word "again" in verse 13. Six times the Lord says, with the calm assertion of supreme authority, "But I say unto you", correcting what had been said to previous generations (verses 22, 28, 32; 34, 39, 44).

The Lord asserts:

> "Anyone who breaks one of the least of these commandments and teaches others to do the same will be called least in the kingdom of heaven (that is he will have no position of authority in it), but whosoever practices and teaches these commands will be called great in the kingdom of heaven. For I tell you that unless your righteousness surpasses that of the Pharisees and teachers of the law, you will certainly not enter the kingdom of heaven" (v. 19, 20, N.I.V.).

Note the order of practicing the law first, and teaching it afterwards. Nothing can be clearer that the righteousness to which the Lord refers here, is the righteousness of obedience, not the imputed righteousness which is the characteristic of the epistle to the Romans. Again we remind the reader that He is addressing saved men, His disciples, and telling them that their conduct and practical working out of the law is essential for admittance into the kingdom of heaven. We are on the ground of "reward teaching" here, not salvation by grace, and those who attempt to introduce this into this context are utterly confusing the purposes of God. (For the frequent groups of three in this Gospel, the reader is referred to Volume LI, page 233). The Pharisees were men who "say and do not" (xxv. 3), who preach and do not perform. This practicing of the law is the Lord's test of greatness in the kingdom.

Murder.

> "You have heard that it was said to the people long ago, 'do not murder', and anyone who murders will be subject to judgment. But I tell you that anyone who is angry with his brother will be subject to judgment. Again, anyone who says to his brother, 'Raca', is answerable to the Sanhedrin; but anyone who says 'you fool', will be in danger of the fire of hell" (v. 21, 22, N.I.V.).

There is a threefold grading of guilt here. What must be remembered is that the Lord Jesus is not just dealing with the outward act or word, but the inward state that is behind it all. If we miss this, we shall have endless difficulties with verse 22 and other statements in this sermon. Let us note too the words "You have heard that it was said", not "it was written". Many of those listening to Him could neither read nor write. Their knowledge of the Law came from the public instruction of the synagogue, where the spirit of the law was frequently missed or obscured. It was right that a murderer should be liable to prosecution, but there was more that should have been taught than this. The command "thou shalt not kill" is based on the principle "thou shalt not hate", and these words again rested on the command "thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (Lev. xix. 18, 34). This, later on in the N.T., is expressed as "whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer" (I John iii. 15), so the condition of the mind is bound up with the action that follows.

Thus, in the eyes of divine justice, such a person is liable to the same punishment as an actual murderer. When one reflects, it is obvious that Christ is not nullifying the law; rather is He applying it more intensely, for He knows the human mind through and through and looks at it before action takes place.

The grades of punishment to which He refers are the local court; the supreme court at Jerusalem, the Sanhedrin; and the fiery Gehenna; dealing with (1) aroused anger, (2) insolent speech and (3) worse language such as Raca, a term of contempt, a word of deeper insolence than the English word 'fool'.

Gehenna and Hades are often confused in the Authorized Version which is a pity. Locally Gehenna referred to a valley, south-east of Jerusalem, where refuse and dead bodies of criminals were cast. Since fire was always needed to consume the refuse it was known as a place of perpetual burning. Here idolatrous Israelites offered their children to Moloch (II Kings xxiii. 10). It was a term of utmost degradation to a Jew. The words "where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched" which occur elsewhere in the Gospel are a quotation from Isa. lxvi. 24:

> "And they shall . . . . . look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against Me: for their worm (i.e. of the carcasses) shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched . . . . .".

We must not assume from this context in Matthew that the Lord is condemning all use of the word 'fool', for He Himself uses it of the Pharisees (xxiii. 17, 19), also calling them hypocrites and vipers. But then the Lord was holy and righteous in His assessment of these men and could not use these words untruthfully.

The warning underlying Matt. v. 21, 22 is that all degrees of hatred and contempt, whether expressed or not, are dangerous and liable to condemnation by God Who alone can righteously judge the feeling and malevolent of the heart. This point is enforced by what follows:

> "Therefore, if you are offering your gift at the altar, and there remember that your brother has something against you, leave the gift there in front of the altar. First go and be reconciled to your brother; then come and offer your gift" (v. 23, 24, N.I.V.).

The law of love is on a higher plane than that of sacrifice, therefore postpone sacrifice rather than reconciliation, remembering the importance of peace-makers (verse 9). It is essential for such to get rid of bad feelings against someone else before bringing his offering to the altar.

The next words of the Lord expand this:

> "Settle matters quickly with your adversary who is taking you to court. Do it while you are still with him on the way, or he may hand you over to the judge, and the judge may hand you over to the officer, and you may be thrown into prison. I tell you the truth, you will not get out until you have paid the last penny" (v. 25, 26, N.I.V.).

The point stressed here is that no time must be lost. It must be done quickly. The offended person may die, or the offender may die, therefore put an end to the situation of enmity as soon as possible.

The Apostle Paul gives similar advice in Eph. iv. 26:

> "Be ye angry and sin not; let not the sun go down upon your wrath."

In other words, do not let the day end before such a condition is put right. What a weight of troubles would be avoided if believers would always heed this advice!

Adultery.

> "You have heard that it was said 'do not commit adultery'. But I tell you that anyone who looks at a woman lustfully has already committed adultery with her in his heart" (Matt. v. 27, N.I.V.).

This injunction of God protects the sanctity of marriage and the peace of married life. There never was a time when this command was more needed than today. Moral standards have collapsed in this and other countries of the world with disastrous results; leading to misery and profound unhappiness. One of the latest surveys is that one marriage in three ends in divorce in this country and thousands of homes are broken up, with pitiful effects on the children of such marriages.

When will people realize that God's laws are not given to deprive people of happiness, but to give and protect happiness and well-being. Until this is recognized, there can be no end to the pressing problem of broken homes and the heart ache that this inevitably produces. It will never result from more laws and regulations. They can never touch the heart of the problem, which is disobedience to the Lord's commands.

Furthermore, in the context of Matt. v., it is clearly taught that the purity of heart is indispensable for admission to God's kingdom (verse 8).

The verses that follow teach that no sacrifice is too great in order to enter into the kingdom of heaven:

> "If your right eye causes you to sin, gouge it out and throw it away. It is better for you to lose one part of your body than for your whole body to be thrown into hell. And if your right hand causes you to sin, cut it off and throw it away. It is better for you to lose one part of your body, than for your whole body to go into hell" (v. 29, 30, N.I.V.).

The right hand and eye are the most valuable members of the body that can be sacrificed without causing death. They signify what is most precious. It should be obvious that the Lord is using figures here, for the actual sacrifice of an eye or hand would do nothing towards securing purity. Christ is not teaching that the body should be mutilated, and we have never met a person zealous enough to have done this. What He is doing is to strongly stress self-control, and let us not forget that this is part of the fruit of the Spirit which the Lord expects from His children (Gal. v. 22, 23 where 'temperance' means 'self-control'). "Causes you to sin" of the New International Version is better than 'offend' in the Authorized Version. Giving offence to others is not what the Lord Jesus means here but the inability to control one's self.

The eye stands for seeing and the hand for doing. If what we look on and what we do causes us to sin, then we must cut it out ruthlessly. The One Who gave the law of God through Moses is the One Who is interpreting it here and His interpretation must be right!

Divorce.

> "It has been said, 'Anyone who divorces his wife must give her a certificate of divorce'. But I tell you that anyone who divorces his wife, except for marital unfaithfulness, causes her to commit adultery, and anyone who marries a woman so divorced commits adultery" (Matt. v. 31, 32, N.I.V.).

Here the allusion is to Deut. xxiv. 1. The Pharisees and Scribes differed greatly among themselves regarding divorce. Those who followed the school of Shammai forbad divorce on any other ground than infidelity. The Pharisees belonged to the Hillel school and interpreted "uncleanness" in a wide variety of definitions so that they could grant divorce on the flimsiest of pretexts. This meant that they twisted the law of Deuteronomy xxiv. 1 in order that they could live as immorally as they pleased, yet still make a pretence of being law-abiding.

The Lord Jesus brings them back to a true interpretation of the verse in Deuteronomy. In Matt. xix. 7, 8 He adds that divorce was given "because of the hardness of your hearts . . . . . but from the beginning it was not so". Some assume from this that divorce for any reason is wrong now, but they forget that the first marriage was made in a time of sinlessness and therefore would never have been broken up while this lasted. There could have been no question of divorce at the beginning. Others, noting that both Mark and Luke omit the clause about adultery, assume that Matthew added the clause because he felt that it represented the Lord's teaching, in which case it was merely Matthew's opinion. We absolutely reject this as it contradicts the inspiration of the holy Scriptures.

Moreover, the Evangelists omit other facts that Matthew includes, but sound exposition does not consider these to be wrong because this is so. Rather, we have the Holy Spirit superintending the composition of His Word in both cases. The plain teaching of Christ is that marriage is indissoluble except for adultery. God's laws have social implications, for they deal with human behaviour and this affects all society. When anyone breaks the laws of God they are disrupting society whether they realize it or not. Modern conceptions of divorce have drifted far away from God's standards and instead of solving problems, they only make more, and produce further unhappiness. Most people are married in a church and take an oath that they do so "for better or for worse". But how many really mean this and feel the obligation to keep it? "For better", yes, but "for worse", no. They think this gives them the right to link with someone else, if they so desire. Is it any wonder that the home, which is the very centre of the nation's life is being destroyed and anarchy and misery are taking its place? Specially is this so, when according to some surveys, every third marriage ends in divorce in Great Britain.

Oaths.

> "Again, you have heard that it was said to the people long ago, 'Do not break your oath, but keep the oaths you have made to the Lord'. But I tell you, Do not swear at all: either by heaven, for it is God's throne, or by the earth, for it is His footstool; or by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the Great King. And do no swear by your head, for you cannot make even one hair white or black. Simply let your 'yes' be 'yes', and your 'no', 'no'; anything beyond this comes from the evil one" (v. 33-37, N.I.V.).

The Lord now comes to the subject of oaths. In the O.T. God made it clear that promises to Himself, whether oaths or not, must be kept. A man must "do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth" (Numb. xxx. 2). In other words, his word must be relied on, for this is the basis of character. The Lord Jesus did not prohibit oaths in a court of justice, for He Himself answered Caiaphas on oath. Deut. vi. 13 and x. 20 commands "thou shalt swear by His name". And Psa. lxiii. 11 states that "every one that sweareth by Him shall glory" (or be commended). It was flippant oaths and all that borders on profanity Christ was prohibiting. Oaths and strong statements have come into use because men are so often liars. They should not really be necessary. False swearing was common among the Jews, hence the charge given by James (v. 12) which strongly resembles the Sermon on the Mount. Dr. A. T. Robertson says:

> "The Jews were past masters in the art of splitting hairs, about allowable and forbidden oaths or forms of profanity just as modern Christians employ a great variety of vernacular 'cuss-words' and excuse themselves because they do not use the more flagrant forms" (Word Pictures of the New Testament).

This light taking of oaths Christ forbids absolutely. The law said, "ye shall not swear by My name lightly" (Lev. xix. 12) and the Lord shows that the way to avoid false swearing is to be content with simple affirmations and negations. Nor does the absence of an oath lessen the obligation to speak the truth. In the kingdom of God, truth will reign, and no one can enter it who regards truth as being unimportant.

An eye for an eye.

> "You have heard that it was said, 'Eye for eye, and tooth for tooth'. But I tell you, Do not resist an evil person. If someone strikes you on the right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if someone wants to sue you and take your tunic, let him have your cloak as well. If someone forces you to go one mile, go with him two miles. Give to the one who asks you, and do not turn away from the one who wants to borrow from you" (v. 38-42, N.I.V.).

The law of retaliation was affirmed in Exod. xxi. 23-25, but the spirit of revenge was forbidden (Lev. xix. 18). Vengeance belongs to God only (Deut. xxxii. 35). The law of God put a restriction on unrestrained vengeance. "It limited revenge by fixing an exact compensation for an injury" (McNeil). The Greek can be translated evil or evil person. Resistance is forbidden when it is a matter of personal revenge, and it is personal revenge for a personal injury that Christ is speaking about. It is mishandling the words of Christ to try to apply them to judges who inflict penalties for guilt, or for governments to use arms to defend the defenseless under their charge. But it is sinful to resist wrong in a wrong way or from a wrong motive. To resist from love to God, from love to society, or love to one's family is different. If all resistance to evil was wrong, then it would be wrong to resist the devil by words or even prayer.

The Lord gives five examples: assault, lawsuit, impressment, begging and borrowing. These all indicate an attitude of mind which is stressed so much by the Lord in this Sermon. It would be foolish for us to surrender our homes and property to anyone who likes to claim them, whether in need or not. But we ought to be ready to give to all who are in need. We are not told to give everything that is asked for, but to every one who asks, which is a different thing. And then generosity and wisdom should come into the picture. The Lord Jesus did not consent when He was asked to interfere about an inheritance. But He gave a necessary rebuke and a wholesome warning (Luke.xii.13-15). We should, however, remember Prov. xix. 17, "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord".

Love for enemies.

> "You have heard that it was said, 'Love your neighbour and hate your enemy'. But I tell you, Love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, that you may be the sons of your Father in heaven. He causes the sun to rise on the evil and the good, and > sends rain on the righteous and the unrighteous. If you love those who love you, what reward will you get? Are not even the tax collectors doing that? And if you greet only your brothers, what are you doing more than others? Do not even pagans do that? Be perfect, therefore, as your heavenly Father is perfect" (v. 43-48, N.I.V.).

The logic of these words is surely clear. It is not hard to love loveable people, but it is far from easy to love one's enemies. But this is in harmony with the pathway to divine reward. It is a difficult and testing way and we must not expect it to be otherwise. If it was, then reward cannot mean much.

The phrase "and hate your enemy" is not in Lev. xix. 18 or for that matter anywhere in the O.T. It is a rabbinical inference that Christ repudiates bluntly. The Apostle Paul refers to this aspect of the Sermon on the Mount with similar instructions as to our attitude to enemies (Rom. xii. 20). He quotes from Prov. xxv. 21 to confirm this.

The Lord Himself prayed for His enemies, even while He hung on the cross, as also did Stephen, the first martyr in the N.T. (Acts vii. 60). The section closes with the tremendous statement to be perfect like our heavenly Father. The word perfect is teleios, the goal, the end, and perfection in love seems to cover it all. We cannot be sinless like God is, but Christ is not teaching this. In our much smaller measure we can be filled with divine love which unselfishly spends itself for the Saviour and those with whom we come into contact day by day. We need to learn the lesson about the perfecting effect of love described in I John iv. And those of the Lord's day who listened to this great Sermon would surely be able to carry it out in practice, though difficult, through this love of God which later Paul declares is "shed abroad in our hearts" (Rom. v. 5). Dr. R. V. Tasker has an interesting note here. Remembering that the Lord Jesus spoke in Aramaic and commenting on the word 'perfect' he says:

> "Perfect here is a misleading translation of teleios and is largely responsible for the erroneous doctrine of 'perfectionism'. Men can never be perfect as God is perfect; and Jesus Himself taught that at best, when men have done everything possible, they are unprofitable servants, who have only done their duty (see Luke 17:10). Torrey would seem right in supposing that the underlying Aramaic word was active in sense, and that the meaning here is 'all-including (in your good will) even as your Father includes all'. Nothing here leads up to the idea of perfection, to say nothing of equaling the perfection of God Himself! In this paragraph, the disciples are taught that they must show kindness to all men, just as the heavenly Father makes no exception."

This needs weighing over very carefully.

Giving to the Needy.

The Lord now proceeds to contrast the ordinary conduct of the Jews, as exhibited in the conduct of the Pharisees, with the standard He requires. The chief Greek texts read "righteousness" instead of "almsgiving" (A.V.). It is "acts of righteousness" (as in the N.I.V.) which are described by Christ, the external conduct of the leaders in observance of the law. Again we have another triplet, alms, prayer and fasting. The danger in the first is the praise of men. The Pharisees loved to parade their good deeds in front of the people so that they could be admired.

"Be careful not to do your 'acts of righteousness' before men, to be seen of them. If you do, you will have no reward from your Father in heaven. So when you give to the needy, do not announce it with trumpets, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and on the streets, to be honored by men. I tell you the truth, they have received their reward in full. But when you give to the needy, do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing, so that your giving may be in secret. Then your Father, Who sees what is done in secret will reward you" (vi. 1-4, N.I.V.).

Ostentatious religion may have reward here with human praise, but it receives none from God later on. One cannot have it both ways. Some say we ought not to consider the thought of reward at all. In one sense this is true. The all pervading motive should be love for Him. But if God chooses to reward those whom He counts faithful, who are we to disdain it? Some people act as though they are holier and wiser than the Lord. The fact remains that the doctrine of reward runs right throughout the Bible and only foolishness and blindness will ignore it. Great will be the disappointments of those who miss God's rewards, for they are eternal and of infinite worth.

Prayer.

"But when you pray, do not be like the hypocrites, for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and on the street corners to be seen of men. I tell you the truth, they have received their reward in full.

When you pray, go into your room, close the door, and pray to your Father, Who is unseen. Then your Father, Who sees what is done in secret, will reward you. And when you pray, do not keep on babbling like pagans, for they think they will be heard because of their many words. Do not be like them, for your Father knows what you need before you ask Him" (vi. 5-8, N.I.V.).

Ostentation in praying is just as bad as ostentation in giving. The Lord warns against the public actions of the Pharisees regarding prayer. All the reward they will get is the admiration of those who watched their sanctimonious behaviour. In contrast, the disciples are advised to go into a quiet room where there is no distraction and there pray to the Father.

Not only must they avoid the bad example of the Pharisees, but also the habits of pagans in prayers to their gods. These pagans thought that long prayers and constant repetition would move the gods to give them what they wanted.

And it has to be said that there are Christians today with similar views. They seem to think that God can be worried into granting prayers and that such prayers, if repeated many times are more likely to be answered than a petition made only once. Thus they think they can compel Him to do what He is unwilling to do and some call this 'prevailing prayer'!

The Lord Jesus not only condemns this, but reminds us that our heavenly Father knows our needs before we pray to Him. He does not need any information on this point and believers should constantly remember prayer is never presented in the Bible as a means of bending God to our will. Rather it is the opposite; it is bringing us to leave all to His will as the model kingdom prayer, about to be given, enjoins. And we have a wonderful example of this in the Lord's statement in Gethsemane ". . . . . not My will, but Thine be done" (Luke xxii. 42).

If we do not do this, then such wrong praying can be dangerous as Israel learned to their cost. They had tired of the heavenly provision of the delicious manna. We need flesh to eat was their constant complaint and prayer. Psa. cvi. 14, 15 gives us the sad result:

> "they . . . . . lusted exceedingly in the wilderness, and tempted God in the desert. And He gave them their request, but sent leanness into their soul", and the O.T. records the stern judgment that followed from the Lord. And all this is the result of repeatedly asking God for something that they wanted, but was contrary to His will.

The model prayer, suited to those believers who were keenly desirous of entering the Kingdom now follows:

> "This is how you should pray.
> Our Father in heaven,
> hallowed be your Name,
> Your kingdom come.
> Your will be done
> on earth as it is in heaven.
> Give us today our daily bread.
> Forgive us our debts,
> as we also have forgiven our debtors.
> And lead us not into temptation, > but deliver us from the evil one" (vi. 9-13, N.I.V.).

There is no doubt that this is the best known prayer of the Bible, for all who profess to be Christians are taught it from their earliest days, and it enters into practically every church service. Did the Lord intend this? He said 'after this manner' (or 'in this way') not necessarily 'in these words'. Professor A. T. Robertson says:

> ". . . . . He gives them a model. He Himself did not use it as a liturgy (cf. John xvii.). There is no evidence that Jesus meant it for liturgical use by others. In Luke xi. 2-4 practically the same prayer is given at a later time by Jesus to the apostles in response to a request that He teach them how to pray" (Word Pictures of the New Testament, p.52).

This does not mean that the prayer was never meant to be used, but rather to watch carefully that constant repetition does not cause one to become too used to the phraseology and therefore deadened to its meaning.

There is no agreement as to the number of petitions in this prayer, any more than the number of the Beatitudes. But it seems obvious that the prayer is divided into two parts, the first relating to God alone and the second concerning human needs. Each part consists of three petitions, which is in line with Matthew's constant grouping in triplets. It is important to note that the petitioner should begin with God and not his own wants or needs. Too often prayer is only real to us when we are in desperate straits and then it consists of our needs only.

We should remember that this prayer is addressed to Israelites who had close links with God by covenant ties. Their favoured position is described by Paul in Rom. ix. 3-5 and thus they could look on Him as Father (see Deut. xxxii. 6; Isa. lxiii. 16; Jer. xxxi. 9). The idea of the universal fatherhood of God is unscriptural and therefore untrue. John.i.12 states "as many as received Him, to them gave He the right (power) to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His Name". All may be related to God as Creator, but redemption is necessary to restore the relationship as Father.

Which art in heaven. This may not convey much to us as there is little description of it in the Bible, probably because it is beyond the power of human words to express it. Heaven is used in the singular and the plural. We even have the phrase above all heavens (Eph. iv. 10) which describes the Saviour's supreme exaltation at His ascension and His going back to the glory that was His before Bethlehem.

Hallowed be Thy Name. God's Names represent His nature and character so far as this can be known. It is a fascinating and profitable study to consider the various Names of God which occur in His Word, each one making known some facet of His infinite greatness.

The word 'hallow' may mean "make holy" which is impossible with regard to God Who is already holy. It can also mean "make known as holy", or "regard as holy" and this is what is meant here. While the relationship with God to His children as Father is true and encourages all such to come to Him, nevertheless this must be without any irreverent familiarity. Reverence must always characterize our approach to God.

Thy Kingdom come. This shows obviously that the complete fluffiest of this great Kingdom is yet future. We need to beware of the frequent spiritualization which makes this mean no more than God's rule in the mind of the believer here and now. Of course it starts here, but its great outworking goes much further than this, as the Scriptures show.

Your will be done on earth as it is in heaven. This tells us at least two things—(1) the kingdom of heaven, though heavenly in origin and character, will be realized on the earth, and (2) it will be a time when God's will is paramount as it is now in heaven. The Beatitude had already promised that "the meek should inherit the earth", and this but confirms us in the belief that the kingdom preached by John the Baptizer of the Lord Jesus is the great Messianic kingdom of the O.T. which combines spiritual bliss with earthly blessings, and freedom from the attacks of the evil one.

There is a heavenly phase of the Kingdom of God which is revealed in the later epistles. To limit God's Kingdom to either earth or heaven, as many do, is a profound mistake. Such a view is bound to be partial and defective, for both aspects are revealed in the Word of God (The reader is referred to the author's The Kingdom of God in heaven and on earth where this is dealt with in detail). God's will is done perfectly in heaven by the angelic beings and principalities and powers. What a glorious day it will be when this blessed state of things is true of the earth! And God will not rest until this comes to pass.

Give us today our daily bread. We pass now from what relates to God to human needs. The word translated 'daily', epiousios, has given Bible scholars a good deal of trouble. It is an extremely rare word, so much so that Origen said that it was coined by Matthew and Luke to reproduce the idea of an Aramaic original. Moulton & Milligan say in their Vocabulary, "the papyri have as yet shed no clear light upon this difficult word, which was in all probability a new coinage by the author of the Greek Q (a work purporting to give some of the sayings of the Lord Jesus) to render his Aramaic original". This was written in 1919. Professor A. T. Robertson, whose New Testament Greek scholarship is unquestionable, says that the word must have originated in trade and traffic of the everyday life of the people, and this has been confirmed by A. Debrunner's discovery of epiousios in an ancient housekeeping book (Light from the Ancient East, New ed. 1927 p.78 and note 1). The word occurs also in three late MSS after 2Macc.1:8. Professor Robertson says that the meaning of the word, in view of the kindred participle (epiousei) in Acts xvi. 12, seems to be "for the coming day", a daily prayer for the needs of the next day, as every housekeeper understands.

Dr. A. Plummer's words are to the point here:

> "We are not to ask for superfluities. The petition will cover what is needed for culture and refinement, but it will not cover luxury or extravagance. What we need must not be interpreted to mean all that we desire; sufficiency and contentment will never be reached by that method. Contentment is reached by moderating wants, not by multiplying possessions."

Forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors. The debts here are equivalent to sins and Luke's account uses the word "sins" (Luke xi. 4). When we sin we become liable to God. "Debt" was a Jewish way of describing sin. Here forgiveness is asked "in proportion as" we also have forgiven those in debt to us (A. T. Robertson) a very serious reflection. There are expositors who try to minimize this and make it square with forgiveness of sin in the epistles, but the verses following the Prayer forbid this:

> "For if you forgive men when they sin against you, your heavenly Father will forgive you. But if you do not forgive men their sins, your Father will not forgive your sins" (Matt. vi. 14, 15, N.I.V.).

To this must be added Mark xi. 25:

> "And when you stand praying, if you hold anything against anyone forgive him, so that your Father in heaven may forgive your sins" (N.I.V.).

And in Matt. xviii. 35 this is strongly enforced by the parable of the unmerciful servant who did not forgive, and the conclusion by the Lord Jesus is:

> "This is how My heavenly Father will treat each of you unless you forgive your brother from your heart", and this forgiveness was cancelled because of an unforgiving spirit. All the time we must keep in mind the conditions laid down in Matthew's Gospel for entering the Kingdom or being shut out.

When we read Eph. iv. 32 we have the opposite:

> "And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

Here we are urged to forgive, not in order to obtain forgiveness by God, but because we have already been forgiven by Him. As Col. ii. 13 expresses it: "having forgiven you all trespasses". It is a question of keeping verses in their contexts and interpreting strictly with these contexts in view.

No.13. vi. 13 - vii. 5.
pp. 205 - 209

Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from the evil one. The temptation mentioned here does not mean temptation to sin. James i. 15 denies that God ever tempts any person to sin. The word means trial or test and in His wisdom God tests in order to challenge us, so that our faith in Him grows from "little faith" to "great faith".

It is impossible to say whether the Greek means "evil" or "the evil one"; it can mean either and both senses are found in the N.T. If it is "the evil one", Satan, then we should remember for our comfort that God has provided a sure shield against his attacks. It is the shield of faith (Eph. vi. 16).

The doxology of verse 13 is placed in the margin of most modern versions. It is not found in the oldest manuscripts. The earliest forms of it vary very much; some are shorter and some longer than the one in the A.V. It would appear that the use of a doxology arose when this prayer began to be used as a liturgy to be recited in public worship and it was probably derived from I Chron. xxix. 11.

There is no reason, however, why this doxology cannot be used, for it is quite Scriptural and gives a conclusion to the prayer (end of verse 13).

Fasting.

The verses follow do not lay down for fasting either as to the frequency or any special time when it should be done. But when a fast was undertaken, then, as with other things that have been mentioned, there must be no ostentation. There was no rigid law; in fact we are told at this time the disciples did not fast and the Lord explains why (Matt. ix. 14; Mark ii. 18).

Again warning is given about the Pharisees and their sanctimonious ways:

> "When you fast, do not look somber as the hypocrites do, for they disfigure their faces to show they are fasting. I tell you the truth, they have received their reward in full. But when you fast, put oil on your head and wash you face, so that it will not be obvious to men that you are fasting, but only to your Father, Who is unseen; and your Father, Who sees what is done in secret, will reward you" (vi. 16-18, N.I.V.).

Treasures in heaven.

In this section (vi. 19-34) we find another triplet. There are divisions: the heavenly treasure (19-21), the single eye (22, 23), the banishment of anxiety (29-34).

> "Do not store up for yourselves treasures on earth, where moth and rust destroy, and where thieves break in and steal. But store up for yourselves treasures in heaven where moth and rust do not destroy, and where thieves do not break in and steal. For where your treasure is, there your heart will be also" (vi. 19-21, N.I.V.).

There is a play on words here in the Greek, for literally it is "treasure not for yourselves treasures" and Wycliffe renders it "do not treasure to you treasures". These would be stored normally in houses with mud walls that could be easily broken through by thieves or "dug through" as the original has it. Even if free from thieves, there was always rust which corrodes and ruins. But in God's care and keeping the real treasures are for ever secure and then comes the important statement that "where your treasure is, your heart will be". The two interact on one another. Our hearts or minds will be drawn upwards if we treasure the eternal things which are safe in heaven.

On the other hand if our minds are bent on earthly things, that is where they will be fixed. Earthly things are linked with materialism, and this is the great god that is worshipped today and by which everything is measured. The Lord warned:

> "Watch out! Be on your guard against all kinds of greed; a man's life does not consist in the abundance of his possessions" (Luke xii. 15, N.I.V.).

Would that this was blazed abroad today. Millions could be saved from deception and continued disappointment if they would only heed these words!—for it is generally believed that lasting happiness is bound up with plenty of money and possessions!

The Lord now proceeds to the "single eye". The eye is called "single" in a moral sense. The Jew often used it in this way, a good eye signifying generosity and an evil eye a grasping and grudging one (Deut. xv. 9; Prov. xxiii. 6; xxviii. 22). Haplous (single) means "free from distortion" and so able to see the true value of things. The opposite is true of the "evil eye" and can only lead into darkness:

> "The eye is the lamp of the body. If your eyes are good, your whole body will be full of light. But if your eyes are bad, your whole body will be full of darkness. If then the light within you is darkness, how great is that darkness!" (vi. 22, 23, N.I.V.).

The subject now passes to freedom from anxiety, but is linked to the context by verse 24:

> "No one can serve two masters. Either he will hate the one and love the other, or he will be devoted to the one and despise the other. You cannot serve both God and Money" (N.I.V.).

Yet many try to do so, but failure awaits them all. The issue is clear cut. To be a slave to money, at the same time trying to serve the Lord, is to attempt the impossible. This only amplifies what we have seen before about materialism. Alas, there are millions of idolaters about today whose only god is money. And the bondage that this god demands is terrible indeed. The possession of money is not condemned in the Bible; it is being enslaved to it that is fatal. James v. 1-6 is a warning where money can lead us and Paul warns that a love of it is a root of all evil (I Tim. vi. 9, 10). It has been said with truth that "money is a trust, not absolute property; an instrument, not an end. It is to be used, not for selfish enjoyment, but for the well-being of ourselves and others". Another danger with money is that it tends to make us independent of God. Both this and its opposite, worry regarding the future, is wrong, for this denies God's care for us and our needs:

> "Therefore I tell you, do not worry about your life, what you will eat or drink; or about your body, what you will wear. Is not the life more important than food, and the body more important than clothes? Look at the birds of the air: they do not sow or reap, or store away in barns, and yet your heavenly Father feeds them. Are you not much more valuable than they? Who of you by worrying can add a single hour to his life?" (Matthew vi. 25-27, N.I.V.).

It is the responsibility of parents to clothe and feed their children, and if human beings do this, how much more will the heavenly Father do so to all His family? In this context there is a threefold occurrence of merimnao, "to take anxious thought" (vi. 25, 31, 34). This word does not forbid foresight or provision for the future. In fact the N.T. asserts that "if a man provide not for his own, specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever (A.V. infidel)" (I Tim. v. 8). The A.V. "take no thought", however suitable for 1611, is quite misleading today. In the seventeenth century 'thought' meant anxiety or worry, and the Lord always wants to saves us from this.

Nothing is more destructive of peace of mind and good health than worry. Prolonged anxiety takes more lives than hard work. Worry and full trust in the Lord cannot exist together. If we worry we do not trust, and if we trust we do not worry. And how often it turns out that what we worry about does not take place!

The Lord gives the examples of the lilies of the field growing, and the grass of the field (verses 29, 30) and says, "How much more will He (the Father) clothe you, O you of little faith?". There is therefore no need to worry about eating, drinking or clothes (verse 31). These are what the darkened pagans run after and the Father knows we need these things (verse 32). The Lord then sums up this section of the sermon:

> "But seek first His kingdom and His righteousness and all these things will be given to you as well, therefore do not worry about tomorrow, for tomorrow will worry about itself. Each day has enough troubles of its own" (vi. 33, 34, N.I.V.).

It is noteworthy that it is the disciples who are described by Christ as those of "little faith" (see also viii. 26; xiv. 31; xvi. 8), whereas to two Gentiles, who were outsiders, he ascribed "great faith" (viii. 8-10, xv. 28).

The all important thing is to get priorities right—first, God and His Kingdom, and then follow the normal needs of life and all other temporal things which are necessary.

The habit of criticism.

The Lord now deals with the common habit of criticizing others:

> "Do not judge, or you will be judged. For in the same way you judge others, you will be judged, and with the measure you use, it will be measured to you" (vii. 1, 2, N.I.V.).

The verb here is krino from which we get the word 'critic'. This is censoriousness, sharp unjust criticism which is a violation of the law of love and is so easy to do. Other people's faults stand out clearly to us, but our own are often forgotten. It is possible that here the Lord is alluding to current sayings, similar to our proverb about "those who live in glass houses":

> "Why do you look at the speck of sawdust in your brother's eye and pay no attention to the plank in your own eye? How can you say to your brother, 'let me take the speck out of your eye', when all the time there is a plank in your own eye? You hypocrite, first take the plank out of your own eye, and then you will see clearly to remove the speck from your brother's eye" (vii. 3-5, N.I.V.).

The point here is that criticism should begin with ourselves before we judge other people. And if it does, the probability is that we shall not criticize others because we shall have enough to occupy us in seeking to correct our own faults. Also the Lord warns that the judgment that we mete to others will one day be applied to ourselves.

The Apostle Paul suffered much from the harsh criticism of others, but remembering that it is the Lord's assessment of us that finally matters, he said to the Corinthian church:

> "I care very little if I am judged by you or by any human court; indeed I do not even judge myself. My conscience is clear, but that does not make me innocent. It is the Lord Who judges me. Therefore judge nothing before the appointed time; wait till the Lord comes" (I Cor. iv. 3-5, N.I.V.).

One day every believer will have to stand before Him and get His assessment of their witness and work for Him (II Cor. v. 10), and this is the only judgment that really matters. In his last letter, Paul referred to Christ as the righteous Judge who, with absolute fairness, bestows crowns upon the faithful and those who have constantly loved and been influenced by His appearing (II Tim. iv. 7, 8).

Every believer needs to remember that criticism should first start with ourselves and then I Cor. xi. 31 states:

> "For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged."

No.14. vii. 6 - 29.
pp. 221 - 225

> "Do not give dogs what is sacred; do not throw your pearls to pigs. If you do, they may trample them under their feet and then turn and tear you to pieces" (vii. 6, N.I.V.).

This is proverbial counsel regarding discrimination. While we are to preach the truth when opportunity offers, yet heavenly wisdom will guide us so that we do not give it to people who, by their actions, show that they do not value but rather despise it. Trench, commenting on this verse, says that the reference is to meat offered in sacrifice to God and such must not be flung to dogs (which in Palestine were undomesticated and regarded as unclean, just as pigs were). The dogs would eat it, but it would be profanation to give it to them.

In the same way the pigs are probably the wild boars that apparently still haunt the Jordan valley, who might attempt to eat the pearls and then attack those who flung them there. There now follows another triplet:

Ask, Seek, and Knock.

> "Ask and it will be given to you; Seek and you will find; Knock and the door will be opened to you. For everyone who asks receives; he who seeks finds; and to him who knocks the door will be opened" (vii. 7, 8, N.I.V.).

The Lord has stressed the importance of prayer, and we have seen the need for praying and leaving the answer to the Lord and the fulfillment of His will. But one can go to the other extreme and not ask at all. This is just as wrong, for our prayers show clearly what our attitude of mind and desires are and these should be expressed, for we are not treated as machines by God. "Ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not" (James iv. 2).

It is part of our Christian schooling and discipline to pray to the Lord. In Ezek.xxxvi. we have a wonderful chapter where God explains what New Covenant truth will finally mean to Israel, in forgiveness, cleansing, restoration and enjoyment of the promised land. Yet verse 37 reads:

> "I will yet for this be enquired of by the house of Israel to do it for them."

Israel must one day express their need for this to the Lord. Likewise, we must engage in prayer constantly, but finally leave the answer to the Lord's will, for after all, He knows best and must have the last word. If human parents though imperfect, give good gifts to their children, will the heavenly Father do less? (Matt. vii. 9-11). Then follows the Golden Rule:

> "In everything, do to others what you would have them do to you, for this sums up the Law and the Prophets" (vii. 12, N.I.V.).

Luke puts the Golden Rule in the same context as Matt. v. 42, and this rule sums up a large portion of the Sermon. It is of course a complete denial of one of the worst of sins, namely selfishness. Instead, it has continual regard for one's neighbour and his needs. Partial gleams of this golden maxim have been seen by many moralists and thinkers. It is found in Isocrates, in Philo and in the Stoics; but none have expressed it so compactly and clearly as the Lord Jesus has done. It is the golden rule of all social life, the family life, commercial life, church life, national life. It is the rule of international prosperity.

The human expressions have mostly been in a negative way, what we should not do to others. But the Saviour's maxim covers the whole breadth of our conscience, in a man-ward direction. It is a summing up of the law of love expressing itself in sheer unselfishness. The Lord continues:

> "Enter through the narrow gate, for wide is the gate and broad is the road that leads to destruction, and many enter through it. But small is the gate and narrow the road that leads to life, and only a few find it" (vii. 13, 14, N.I.V.).

A. Plummer's comment here is:

> "The gate (Matthew) or door (Luke) is that which leads to the Kingdom, and we have returned to the thought with which the sermon began—admission to the Kingdom" (5:3).

This is correct, and it fits the context perfectly, which is not dealing with heaven or hell, but the all-important question as to the searching rules for admittance into the Messianic Kingdom. The A.V. "at the strait gate" has misled some who do not distinguish between "strait" and "straight". The narrow way is repeated in verse 14. It is "compressed", and narrowed like a path between two almost adjoining rocks. The broad way is popular because it requires no self-discipline, and seems to promise greater freedom. The majority go this way because it appeals more to the senses. What they cannot see is that the restrictions of the "narrow way" are not denials of liberty, but protections against evil and the things that can never satisfy. Christ Himself is the Way, and as the Reformers expressed it, "His service is perfect freedom".

The Lord Jesus goes on to teach that, if the right way is really desired, then false guides must be avoided:

> "Watch out for false prophets. They come to you in sheeps' clothing, but inwardly they are ferocious wolves. By their fruit you will recognize them" (vii. 15, N.I.V.).

Primarily this referred to the religious leaders, the Scribes and Pharisees. Outwardly they had a lamb-like appearance posing as angels of light, but this merely hid their rapacious character, greedy for gain and power. There have always been false teachers. Satan sees to that. The O.T. contains many of them. They were active too in the lifetime of Christ and, as He forecast, they will be prominent at the end of this age (Matt.xxiv.11). One is always amazed at the credulity of people, for these false leaders never lack a following. It does not matter how stupid or preposterous their claims are, some will gladly accept them and deception surely follows.

The illustration of good and bad trees is found again in James iii. 11, 12 and there are parallels in ancient writers:

> "Do people pick grapes from thorn bushes, or figs from thistles? Likewise every good tree bears good fruit, but a bad tree bears bad fruit. A good tree cannot bear bad fruit and a bad tree cannot bear good fruit. Every tree that does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire. Thus, by their fruit you will recognize them" (vii. 16-20, N.I.V.).

This illustration was used by Christ on other occasions (xii. 33). A bad tree will finally display this quality by bearing bad fruit, and in the same way the falsity of corrupt teachers will be manifest.

The Lord not only warned His hearers of listening to false teachers, but also of deceiving themselves:

> "Not every who says to Me, Lord, Lord, will enter the kingdom of heaven, but only he who does the will of My Father Who is in heaven. Many will say to Me on that day, 'Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy in Your Name, and in Your Name drive out demons and perform many miracles?' Then I will tell them plainly, I never knew you. Away from Me, you evil doers!" (vii. 21-23, N.I.V.).

Those words of the Lord are very searching. It was possible to be very orthodox and yet miss entry into the kingdom. There is a sharp contrast here between saying and doing the will of God. The external words sounded correct, but the internal obedience to the Lord and His Truth was lacking. The Greek negative ou in the question expects an affirmative answer and the Lord does not deny this. But He say "I was never acquainted with you"; "I do not recognize you". The threefold repetition of "in My Name", which in the Greek is placed first in all three cases for emphasis, shows that apparent orthodoxy was of no avail. It is startling to realize that prophecy and the working of miracles was not enough to prove genuineness. But then we know that Satan can perform certain miracles and it only shows how he can travesty the Truth. The Lord cannot be deceived, however.

In both reports of the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew and Luke), the parable of the wise and foolish builders forms an impressive conclusion. Each contain the important words "Everyone who hears these words of Mine and puts them into practice"

(Matt.vii.24; Luke.vi.47). Listening to them is not enough. Entering the Messianic Kingdom demands obedience to them and this reminds us of the words of the Lord at the beginning of the address, "Whosoever shall do and teach them (these commandments), the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. v. 19); "Doing" again coming before "teaching". Hearing this sermon was dangerous if it was not put into practice. The Lord divides into two classes only, the wise who put into practice what they have just heard and the unwise who merely listened and were likened to fools.

The effect of all this on the crowds who had evidently gathered around Him as He talked, was tremendous:

> "When Jesus had finished saying these things, the crowds were amazed at His teaching, because He taught as One Who had authority, and not as their teachers of the law" (vii. 28, 29, N.I.V.).

The verb "amazed" is in the imperfect tense, which means they became more and more astonished as they considered the Lord's words. It was the authoritative manner of His teaching that astounded them. Their teachers frequently quoted some authority, Scripture or tradition. The Lord Jesus spoke without argument or production of credentials. He spoke on His own authority. The words, "but I say unto you" were given in absolute confidence and were the words of the greatest Legislator the world has ever seen or will see.

The metaphor of building occurs later on in the epistles. Paul, in his first letter to the Corinthian church, refers to a building whose foundation was Christ (I Cor. iii. 10, 11). But on this foundation every believer was erecting a building. Again there are only two classes of builders and two kinds of material. At the end comes the testing fire of God's holiness. "The fire shall try (or test) every man's work of what sort it is" (verse 13). "Every man's work shall be made manifest" (13). There is no exception to this. The only service that will endure this searching test is likened to "gold, silver, and precious stones" (12). That which is likened to "wood, hay, stubble" is consumed and the believer "suffers loss" (15) of reward (14), but his salvation is still secure (15) for that does not depend on his service, but on the perfect redemptive work of Christ on his behalf.

There are those who try to eradicate reward and loss from the later epistles. This is foolish and dangerous, for the One Who is the "righteous Judge" (II Tim. iv. 8), because of the very fact that He is righteous, will take account of the quality of service rendered by members of the Body of Christ. Those who have been faithful and have a good conscience towards the Lord and His claims, have nothing to fear. They have no need "to be ashamed" (II Tim. ii. 15).

The Great Commission of Matthew xxviii.

pp. 145 - 149

Those who value dispensational truth often have a problem with the so-called Great Commission of Matt. xxviii., for it seems to conflict with the commission given by the Lord Jesus to the twelve apostles in Matt. x.:

> "These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles (the nations), and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. x. 5, 6), and this was in line with His own ministry, for to a Gentile woman He said,

> "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. xv. 24).

The Lord restricted His earthly ministry to Israel and also that of the twelve apostles.

However, after His resurrection He appeared to contradict this to the same apostles:

> "Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee . . . . . and Jesus came and spake to them, saying, All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations (Gentiles), baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world (age). Amen" (Matthew xxviii. 16-20).

It is quite clear that now their ministry was greatly enlarged to embrace all nations, but what was the reason for this? Many interpret it of the future gathering in of the church, but in the Scriptures that follow, this is shown to be wrong. The Body of Christ at this time was still a secret "hid in God" (Eph. iii. 1-11; Col. i. 24-27) and when God hides no one can find until He chooses to reveal. He did this through Paul's prison epistles. We quote from a future article on Matthew's Gospel which deals with this problem:

> "In the passage quoted in Matt. xxviii. (verses 19 and 20) the Lord Jesus speaks as the One having all the resources of heaven as well as earth at His command. This can mean nothing less than sovereignty in both spheres of heaven and earth. His authority and power in His earthly life had been great (Matt. vii. 29; xi. 27). Now it is boundless and it is this fact that must be proclaimed the world over, so that His kingdom and authority may at last be realized."

As we have seen, the Gospel of Matthew commences with the restriction of His ministry and that of the disciples to Israel (Matt. x. 5-8; xv. 23, 24). In Mark's account, to the Gentile Syro-Phoenician woman, the word of Christ were, "let the children first be filled" (Mark vii. 26, 27). The children were Israel; they were to have the message first, but not first and last, that is for the kingdom message to be permanently restricted to them. Its world-wide extent is implicit in God's unconditional promise to Abraham, that through his seed (posterity) all families of the earth would finally be blessed (Genesis xii. 1-3).

In God's earthly kingdom purposes redeemed Israel was to be the channel of blessing to the whole world, and it was for this purpose alone that God planned to make them the premier nation of the earth, spiritually and temporally, for they were to be a priestly nation (Exod. xix.) that could mediate God's truth (Deut. vii. 6; xxviii. 1, 13; Psa. cxxxv. 4; cxlvii. 19, 20; Acts xiii. 46, 47 and many other Scriptures). Israel was to be the divine agent God would use to make Himself known to all nations, so that at last His kingdom on earth could be established.

This also explains why there is the stress on the word "world" in the Gospel of John (79 occurrences). It in no way contradicts the Lord's statement in Matt. xv. 24, that His earthly ministry was to Israel. We must remember that the words of Christ recorded by John were part of this earthly ministry and they must primarily be kept in this setting and all of them must be studied with this in mind. Whether the dating of John's Gospel was early or late cannot alter this important fact. However late it was, it could not be revealing the great secret of Eph. iii. and Col. i. concerning the Body of Christ, for that was kept for Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ, to make known under the guidance of the Holy Spirit after Israel was laid aside in unbelief (Acts xxviii.). It is in the epistles to the Ephesians and Colossians we find the revelation of the Body of Christ, giving its calling, constitution and heavenly destiny.

In the O.T. and during the Lord's earthly ministry, Israel had alas forgotten that God's choice and purpose for them had the whole world in view. They looked on the Gentiles as "dogs" therefore the Lord Jesus emphasizes the word "world" as a corrective in His ministry to them, recorded in the Gospel of John, showing them that He had a wider purpose. The earthly kingdom made known in the Gospels was the great Messianic kingdom of the Old Testament prophets, and it was this kingdom that the fore-runner, John the Baptist, proclaimed followed by the Lord Himself. It was already known, being revealed in its wondrous details in the O.T.

Thus it was that this kingdom was described in the model kingdom prayer, given by the Lord, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven" (Matt. vi. 9-13). Even when Israel had crucified her King and Redeemer, this purpose of God was not ended, for the period covered by the Acts followed in which Israel had another opportunity of repentance and turning back to God. The Jew was still first both for judgment and blessing (Rom. i. 16, 17; ii. 8-11). We find both Peter and Paul putting them first in their ministry. God's tremendous long-suffering had not run out as Peter made clear in Acts iii. 19-26. If they repented and turned back, their sins and opposition would be forgiven and their King would be sent back to them again. The kingdom was still "the restoration of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets" (verse 21). They had "foretold of these days" (verse 24) and Israel was still "the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with the fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all families of the earth be blessed" (verse 25).

The great implication of these most important verses has been missed by so many that we do not wonder at all the confusion of ideas about the Kingdom of God (The reader is directed to the author's The Kingdom of God in Heaven and on Earth).

Prophecy makes it quite clear that finally many nations (Gentiles) are to be blessed with Israel (Zech. ii. 10-13 and Isa. xix. 23-25). Christ will then become King and Lord of the whole earth (Zech. xiv. 9). Once we keep this in mind we shall be in a better position to understand the great commission of Matt. xxviii. 18-20. We shall then be able to appreciate this ministry in its rightful God-given setting and avoid divorcing it from the kingdom of heaven, finally to be established on earth. It concerns discipling or teaching the Gentiles in every land and baptizing them in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. The water baptism of the Acts period was in the name of Jesus Christ as the God-man, the great Mediator and King. This great commission is essentially one of teaching and it must be one of the greatest teaching ministries of Scripture. To understand it in any measure we must not only keep it to the setting given in Matthew's Gospel, but also to the other Scriptures which pertain to it relating to the Messianic kingdom.

Perhaps we have wondered how the knowledge of the glory of the Lord will one day "cover the earth, as the waters cover the sea" (Isa. xi. 9)? The commission given to the apostles in Matt. xxviii. is doubtless one of the means used by God as well as the ministry of redeemed and restored Israel during the millennium. Even in the Acts period the Lord Jesus commanded the eleven and said, "ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (Acts i. 8, see also Luke xxiv. 46, 47). Jerusalem in prophecy is the geographical pivot of the kingdom on earth and the light and knowledge radiate from it world-wide. This is in accord with the gospel of the kingdom which is also preached to all nations of the earth (Matt. xxiv. 14).

The final words of the Lord Jesus before His ascension were:

> "I am with you alway, even unto the consummation of the age (literally)" (Matt.xxviii.20).

Note the present tense "I am", not "I have been or will be". The Lord uses the prophetic perfect here to stress His constant presence and enabling. And "if God be for us, who can be against us?" (Rom. viii. 31). Satan and the powers of darkness have been conquered for ever by the victorious risen and ascended Lord and He will finally reign forever and ever both on earth and in all regions of the heavens.

To sum up: we have seen that the great stress on the word "world" in John's Gospel, mankind in general, was to remind Israel of their responsibility that, through them, all families of the earth should be blessed. This does not mean that this Gospel is Jewish in the sense that it was addressed solely to Israel and was entirely about Israel. This is the province of Matthew's Gospel. John's parish, so to speak is mankind as a whole, whether Jew or Gentile and it has a basic message for each, namely eternal life through faith in Christ alone which gives either of them new birth and freedom from condemnation (John iii. 3; v. 24). Without this new birth a man "cannot see the kingdom of God", but with it he can, for he is now "born of the Spirit" (John iii. 8) and has this new life which is eternal and now is linked with Christ by faith. If anyone is troubled by the word "water" in these verses they should consult Dr. E. W. Bullinger's The Giver and His Gifts page 63-68 where he shows that the meaning is "spiritual water" by the figure Hendiadys. In this context is the precious message of John iii. 16 which has been the means of salvation to thousands in this present age.

God is using more than one way of bringing Gentile sinners to Himself in order to realize His earthly kingdom. He is using the Gospel of John with its emphasis on "he that believeth in Me hath everlasting life". He will later on use the gospel of the kingdom to all the nations of the world (Matt. xxiv. 14). He will also use redeemed Israel after His second Advent to be His witnesses 'to the uttermost parts of the earth' (Luke.xxiv.46-48; Acts i. 8), so at last the time will come when "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev.xi.15). Then the Lord shall be not just the King of Israel, but "king over all the earth" (Zech. xiv. 9).

The Miracles of the Apostles

No.6. They gave forth their Lots.
pp. 5 - 13

In this series we are considering the evidential miracles performed by the apostles. Evidential, i.e. that which furnishes external evidence of direct intervention by the Almighty. Such miracles were not only displays of power which made people wonder, but also were signs to those who observed them and a testimony to those who performed them. We have been concerned with neither:

> "The gospel of Christ: for it is the power (miracle, dunamis) of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth" (Rom. i. 16).

nor:

> "The preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness, but unto us which are saved it is the power (miracle, dunamis) of God" (I Cor. i. 18).

There can be no doubt about it. The gospel of Christ and the preaching of the cross do work miracles when people believe and are saved. This is no less true today than it was during the Acts period but such miracles work inside people, in the heart and in the mind. During the Acts period such occurrences were accompanied by external signs of God's internal action but this is not the case today.

The first evidential miracle performed by the Apostles in the book of Acts is the casting of lots (Acts i. 26). Judas had betrayed the Lord and then killed himself. There was a need for the apostles to replace him, to make their number up to twelve (Matt.xix.28). However, the replacement had to have certain credentials. If they were to be witnesses, according to the Lord Jesus Christ:

> "Ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning" (John.xv.27).

It is obvious that Peter and the others appreciated this:

> "Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the Baptism of John, unto that same day that He was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of His resurrection" (Acts i. 21, 22).

How many people had the necessary qualification? Acts i. 23 states "they had appointed two". Whether these were the only two or whether they had been selected from other possible candidates is not clear. What is clear is that both men were so well-suited for the office that the apostles could not decide who was the better qualified. However, all agreed that it must be one of these two so . . . . . in what sense did the apostles "appoint these two"?

> Appoint. In Acts i. 23 with reference to Joseph and Matthias the Revised Version has 'put forward', for these were not both appointed in the accepted sense of the term, but simply singled out, in order that it might be made known which of them the Lord had chosen (Vine).

Following this, they prayed, and:

> "They gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles" (Acts i. 26).

The first time that lots were used to ascertain the will of the Lord is recorded in Leviticus xvi. 5-10:

> "And he (Aaron) shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel two kids of the goats for a sin offering . . . . . And he shall take the two goats and present them before the Lord at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scapegoat. And Aaron shall bring the goat upon which the Lord's lot fell, and offer him for a sin offering. But the goat on which the lot fell to be the scapegoat, shall be presented alive before the Lord, to make an atonement with him, and to let him go for a scapegoat in the wilderness" (Leviticus xvi. 5-10; see also verses 20-22).

Then in Numbers (xxvi. 55, 56; xxxiii. 54; and xxxvi. 3, 4), throughout the whole of Joshua and in various other parts of the O.T. there are references to the land being divided among the different tribes by lot. This was to ascertain which part of the land the Lord willed for each tribe.

> "And ye shall divide the land by lot for an inheritance among your families: and to the more ye shall give the more inheritance, and to the fewer ye shall give the less inheritance: every man's inheritance shall be in the place where his lot falleth; according to the tribes of your fathers ye shall inherit" (Numb. xxxiii. 54).

This was not an allocation by mere chance and Ezekiel (xlv. 1; xlvii. 22; xlviii. 29) seems to indicate that this method will again be used in the future for a second distribution of the land. No doubt then, as in the past, the larger tribes will obtain the larger inheritance and the smaller ones a reduced portion but how is this possible by what appears to be the chance of the lot?

> "The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord" (Prov.xiv.33).

There, working silently and supernaturally behind this apparently chancy system was the Lord. His hand was seen disposing the lot and so:

> "The lot causeth contentions to cease, and parteth between the mighty" (Prov. xviii. 18).

Was it to be Joseph or Matthias who was to replace Judas? No doubt they were both mighty men and the issue could have been contentious. Thus "they put forward two . . . prayed . . . gave forth their lots . . . the lot fell on Matthias". They desired to know which of these two God would choose and so they restored to this well tried system that was clearly in accordance with the Lord's will. The choice was the correct one as Acts ii. 4 states "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost"; all must have included Matthias.

In Judges lots were cast to see which tribe was to "go up first to battle against the children of Benjamin" (see Judges xx. 9, 18, 23, 28). In I Samuel the Lord did not answer Saul over the issue of the Philistines because sin had been committed by the people. The lot was used to determine the culprit, Jonathan (I Sam. xiv. 24-42). In I.Chronicles we read of:

(a) the divisions of the sons of Aaron by lot in 24 orders (I Chron. xxiv. 5, 7 and 31).
(b) the number and offices of the singers and their divisions by lot into 24 orders (xxv. 8, 9).
(c) the divisions of the porters and the assignments of the gates by lot (xxvi. 13-16).

In Nehemiah lots were used to select the people and the priest to bring the wood offering (x. 34) and to determine who was to live in Jerusalem (xi. 1). There are many examples of how the people of Israel ascertained the will of the Lord by lots but . . . . . how did it function? What did lots look like? How did the system work?

> "The various names, dates, etc. for selection were marked on pieces of wood, potsherd, etc., and these 'lots' were then shaken together either in a vessel or in the fold of a garment till one came out" (New and Concise Bible Dictionary).

> "Lots: kleros, denotes an object used in casting or drawing lots, which consisted of bits, or small tablets, of wood or stone (the probable derivation is from klao, to break; these were sometimes inscribed with the names of persons, and were put into a receptacle or a garment (a lap, Prov. 16:33), from which they were cast, after being shaken together; he whose lot first fell out was the one chosen" (Vine).

However, The Companion Bible note on the word 'fell' in Lev. xvi. 9 seems to disagree with this. That verse states "And Aaron shall bring the goat upon which the Lord's lot fell and offer him for a sin offering". The Companion Bible note is:

> "fell: Hebrew 'came up': i.e. out of the bag containing the Urim and Thummim. No other means of taking Jehovah's lot or judgment."

The first occurrence of Urim and Thummim is found in Exod. xxviii. 30 and the extended Companion Bible note there draws attention to the fact that in Josh. xviii. 11 the lot 'came up'; in Josh. xix. 1 it 'came forth' and in Josh. xix. 17 it 'came out'. The claim is that the lot came 'out' or 'forth' from the bag of the ephod worn by the priest, into which the Urim and Thummim were placed. But what did the priest wear? What exactly were the Urim and Thummim? Exod. xxviii. 15-19 contains instructions about the construction of the breastplate of judgment and this section concludes with the words:

> "And thou shalt put in the breastplate of judgment the Urim and Thummim . . . . . and Aaron shall bear judgment of the children of Israel" (Exod. xxviii. 30).

But this is judgment neither in the sense of punishment and condemnation nor in the sense of appraisal and reward. This is judgment in the sense of "giving a judicial decision", as the N.I.V. translation of this verse makes clear:

> "Fashion a breastpiece for making decisions—the work of a skilled craftsman . . . . . And put the Urim and Thummim in the breastpiece, so they may be over Aaron's heart whenever he enters the presence of the Lord. Thus Aaron will always bear the means of making decisions for the Israelites over his heart before the Lord" (Exod. xxviii. 15, 30, N.I.V.).

In agreement with this translation and with the view that the lot was cast by Urim and Thummim is Moffatt's translation:

"Then you must make a judicial pouch . . . . . also you must put the sacred lots into the judicial pouch . . . . . that Aaron may constantly bear on his heart before the Eternal Israel's appeal for guidance" (Exod. xxviii. 15, 30, Moffatt).

Joshua's appointment was confirmed to the people by the Urim (Numb. xxvii. 21) and these are also mentioned in Lev. viii. 8 and Deut. xxxiii. 8. In I Sam. xxviii. 6 it is recorded that "when Saul enquired of the Lord, the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets". Thus we must not think that either the casting of lots or the use of Urim and Thummim, or both, were the only ways the Lord used to guide the people of Israel. There were others but the Urim and Thummim were important. For example, when the Israelites returned from the Babylonian captivity some claimed to be priests but they could not show their genealogy. These were not allowed to eat holy things until a priest could stand up with Urim and Thummim and an answer be obtained from God as to whether or not they were true Aaronic priests (Ezra ii. 63; Neh. vii. 65).

It is interesting to note that nowhere in Scripture are the exact details of the Urim and Thummim recorded, neither is it explained exactly how they were used. The construction of many items for the tabernacle and temple and the clothes for the priest are described in vivid details (e.g. the "judicial pouch" in Exod. xxviii. 12-29) but there is not even a command from God to make the Urim and Thummim. Scripture merely records that Moses was to put them in the "breastplate for making decisions", almost as if God had given them to Moses Himself!

The Hebrew for Urim is Uwriym, the plural of uwr which is translated fire and light and which comes from owr, a primitive root which means to be luminous (Strong).

The Hebrew for Thummim is Tummiym, the plural of tom which is translated full, integrity, perfect, perfection, simplicity, upright, etc. and which comes from taman, a primitive root which means complete (Strong).

That does not help us much and the problem of exactly what the Urim an Thummim were is shown by the following quotation from the New and Concise Bible Dictionary:

Urim and Thummim: The significance of these Hebrew words is "lights" and "perfections".

The greatest help comes again from The Companion Bible note on Exod. xxviii. 30:

"The Hebrew Urim and Thummim means 'lights' and 'perfection'. Probably these are the plural of majesty, the singular 'light' (being put by Metonymy for what is brought to light, i.e. guilt), and 'perfection' (put by Metonymy for moral perfection, i.e. innocence). Thus these two placed in the 'bag', and one drawn out, would give the judicial decision . . . . . which would be of the Lord."

The figure of speech Metonymy, or change of noun, is when one name or noun is used instead of another, to which it stands in a certain relation. Thus "light' instead of 'guilt' and "perfection" instead of 'innocence'.

Some have confused the Urim and Thummim with the precious stones upon the judicial breastpiece but this cannot be correct as a careful reading of Exod. xxviii. 15-30 makes clear. Also Leviticus records that Moses put the breastpiece upon Aaron and then, afterwards, put the Urim and Thummim in the pouch or bag of the breastpiece. However it is quite possible that they were two precious stones for the word generally translated 'lot' in the Hebrew goral, which means a stone. One of these was drawn out to give Jehovah's decision on any particular issue. It was essential when using Urim and Thummim, that a priest be present and if he was the lot would be cast using the Urim and Thummim. The allocation of the land by lot was done in this way by "Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun" (Numb. xxxiv. 17). Similarly the Urim and Thummim were used for the two goats in Lev. xvi. 5-10, the battle against Benjamin in Judges xx. 9-28, the divisions of the priests & singers and the allocation of the gates in I.Chron.xxiv.-xxvi. Urim and Thummim were used to find the culprit Jonathan as Saul said unto the Lord, "give a perfect lot" (i.e. give perfections = Thummim). Thus there seems to be much substance in the view that all lots were cast by Urim and Thummim but there are other sides to the debate.

In Neh. vii. 65 they had no priest with Urim and Thummim yet lots were cast in Neh. x. 34 and xi. 1. Had they acquired such a priest by then? Possibly . . . . . but was there a priest with Urim and Thummim among the 120 disciples in Acts i. 15-26? The context seems to indicate that there was not, and "they gave forth their lots" (verse 26) adds further weight to the view that, in this case, neither the Urim and Thummim nor the priesthood were involved. Thus The Companion Bible note on Lev. xvi. 9 seems to be incorrect when it states that except for the Urim and Thummim there was no other means of taking Jehovah's lot or judgment. However one must never take any writings out of their context and one wonders if the writer of that note, Dr. E. W. Bullinger, actually meant that note to embrace the whole of Scripture and every reference to lots or just the ones mentioned in that note or in the O.T. The following definition from his Critical Lexicon and Concordance to the English and Greek New Testament shows he thought that lots could involve other than Urim and Thummim in the N.T.

> "Lots: kleros (probably from klao to break, because twigs and other klasmata 'fragments' were used for the purpose of casting lots).

Thus generally lots were cast using Urim and Thummim but not always and Acts i. 26 seems to be one of the exceptions. It is indeed significant that there are no instructions for making the Urim and Thummim in Scripture, neither is there any description of them nor is there any detail of how they were to be used—and we can appreciate why! Imagine what would happen in today's society if the Bible contained such information! Imagine the number of people who would make them and use them! Indeed the casting of lots was practiced by the Gentiles in Biblical times but the use of such was mere mimicry. The hand of the Lord was not behind it and quite often the issue for decision was sinister, being against the people of Israel and therefore against God's plan and purpose.

> "And they (the nations) have cast lots for my people; and have given a boy for an harlot, and sold a girl for wine, that they might drink" (Joel iii. 3).
> ". . . . . strangers carried away captive his forces, and foreigners entered into his gates, and cast lots upon Jerusalem" (Obad. 11).
> ". . . . . and when they had crucified Him, they parted His garments, casting lots upon them" (Mark xv. 24).

Here the Gentiles are seen casting lots as a means of apportioning the people of Israel, Jerusalem and our Lord's garments. This method was, and still is, a common one of distributing, without bias items of different worth among people. The Gentiles would not pretend that in doing this they were endeavouring to ascertain how their god(s) had willed such distribution. To them it was chance, which it was. However, in Jonah i. 7 the pagan sailors cast lots to know "for whose cause this evil is upon us . . . . . and the lot fell on Jonah". Could it be that here the Lord was working behind the scenes, guiding the Gentile lot? Again the book of Esther records:

> "In the first month (that is, the month of Nisan), in the twelfth year of King Ahasuerus, they cast Pur, that is, the lot, before Haman from day to day, and from month to month, to the twelfth month, that is, the month of Adar" (Esther iii. 7).

The ones who cast the Pur, the lot, before Haman were possibly one of the types mentioned in Isa. xlvii. 12, 13. The Pur was cast from "month to month" possibly by the "monthly prognosticators" and the reason Haman wanted the lot cast was to ascertain a favourable time for the destruction of the Jews!

> "Haman the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, the enemy of all the Jews, had devised against the Jews to destroy them, and had cast Pur, that is, the lot, to consume them, and to destroy them" (Esther ix. 24).

They started to cast lots on the first day of the first month and the lot fell on the thirteenth day of the twelfth month (Esther iii. 7, 13), but why did it take so long? If this was a choice of one in two (i.e. like the Urim and Thummim), then to go to the 13th day of the first month is a one in ten thousand chance! To go to the 13th day of the twelfth month!! Could it be that the Lord was at work here, directing the heathen lot in order to work out His own purpose? The extremely lengthened period of time before the day of execution of the Jews gave time for the action of Esther and for new edicts to be issued and sent over all the kingdom—thus the Jews were saved from destruction.

A detailed study of Urim and Thummim and the casting of lots shows them to be of a miraculous nature peculiar to the people of Israel and evidence to them that they were in covenant relationship with God. We must be careful of such views as "this method of selection was not repeated by the apostles after the descent of the Holy Spirit" (Cassell's Concise Bible Dictionary) and "when Israel is restored, Christ Himself will take the place of the ancient Urim and Thummim" (New and Concise Bible Dictionary). Ezek. xlv. 1, xlvii. 27 and xlviii. 29 indicate a distribution of the land to a restored Israel "by lot" and remembering that John did not record every miracle of Christ's (John xx. 30, 31; and xxi. 25), we must be careful in dismissing Acts i. 26 as the last use of this miracle which testified to the Jews who practiced it that they had God's approval and were His people. Certainly the last reference to lots is in Acts i. 26 and although it may have been used elsewhere during the Acts period, there is no record of it. However at Acts.xxviii.26-28 the people of Israel were set aside by God and salvation was then sent directly to the Gentiles, independently of the Jews. Then, from that time, the people of Israel ceased to be a nation in covenant relation with God, they became lo-ammi, not my people (Hosea i. 9). Thus the privileges of such a covenant position were put into abeyance and then the miracle of lots and the Urim and Thummim would have ceased. Naturally there is no record of them in any of the epistles written after the end of the Acts period (Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Philemon, Titus, I & II Timothy) and for the Gentiles of this dispensation to attempt to copy a Jewish practice of a previous dispensation is not only folly, but also dangerous, yet it can creep up unawares.

> "Shall I send my friend this Christian tract? I will write to him. If his reply comes back on a Monday, a Wednesday or a Friday—I'll send it to him! If on another day, I won't."

This incident is not fiction, it is fact. It actually happened. Sadly some Christians indulge in such practices, not being aware that at best it is mere superstition and failure to use our God given wisdom and responsibility and at worst . . . . . they could be allowing themselves to be influenced by "seducing spirits and the doctrines of demons", words addressed to Christian believers, not unbelievers, in I Tim. iv. 1.

Lastly there is the view that the disciples of Acts i. 15 were too hasty in replacing Judas. If they had waited, the right man, Paul, would have appeared. Such a view is totally wrong as Paul did not have the qualification of being with the Lord from the time of His baptism by John to His ascension (John xv. 27 and Acts i. 22). Paul probably never even met our Lord when He was on earth. Also such criticism fails to appreciate that lots was a divinely appointed method for making judicial decisions and that that decision was confirmed by the Holy Spirit filling all of them, including Matthias (Acts.ii.4). In I Cor. xv. 5 Paul himself speaks of "the twelve" as separate from himself and this testifies to the correctness of Matthias' appointment. Lastly:

> "The idea that Paul was divinely intended to be the twelfth, and that the apostles here wrongly anticipated God's plan, betrays a misunderstanding of the unique character of Paul's apostleship" (New Bible Commentary Revised).

The twelve were the twelve apostles for the Jews. They "shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. xix. 28). Paul, on the other hand, was "the apostle of the gentiles" (Rom. xi. 13) and as such could have no place as one of the twelve.

No.7. Cloven Tongues Like as of Fire (Acts ii. 3).

The Lord Jesus Christ was "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (John i. 29). He "who knew no sin" was made sin on account of us "that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (II Cor. v. 21). "The wages of sin is death" but He received those wages on Calvary's Cross so that the "free gift of God, eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" may be open to all (Rom. vi. 23). "Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all them that believe" (Romans iii. 22).

Speaking of that great act, Paul said "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us" (I.Cor.v.7). He fulfilled that passover which was instituted when the Israelites were in Egypt many centuries earlier. As a last resort to make Pharaoh let the people of Israel go, God was to strike dead the firstborn males in all the land but the Israelites were ordered to sacrifice a lamb and to sprinkle its blood on the lintel and two side posts of the doors of their houses.

> "And the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where ye are: and when I see the blood, I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you, when I smite the land of Egypt" (Exod. xii. 13).

The people obeyed and in perfect safety fed upon the lamb whilst under the shelter of the blood. After they had left Egypt and had crossed the Red Sea, the law was given to them through Moses and part of this law was that they had to keep the Passover feast (Lev. xxiii. 4-8). This was held on the fourteenth day of the first month, Abib—later known as Nisan.

Leviticus xxiii. 15-21 records that fifty days afterwards there was the feast of weeks. A new meat (meal) offering of two loaves baked with leaven was offered; also seven lambs, one bullock and two rams for a burnt offering were to accompany the meat and drink offerings, "even an offering made by fire, of sweet savour unto the Lord" (Lev.xxiii.18). Also there was to be a kid of the goats for a sin offering and two lambs for a peace offering (verse 19). It was proclaimed a holy convocation in which no servile work was to be done. It was a day of universal rejoicing before the Lord (Deut.xvi.9-12). Some commentators suggest that this feast marked the commencement of the ingathering of the harvest but Deut. xvi. 10, and other passages, imply that the harvest started just after the wave offering of Lev. xxiii. 9-14 and so the feast of weeks marked the end of that harvest.

A detailed study of Lev. xxiii. is most edifying as all the feasts described were prophetic of some aspect of God's great plan centred in our Lord Jesus Christ. Some have been fulfilled (e.g. Passover, Firstfruits/Wave offering, Weeks), others await fulfillment (e.g. Trumpets, Atonement, Tabernacles).

Following His fulfillment of Passover and Firstfruits, for forty days the Lord Jesus Christ taught the disciples and opened "their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures" (Luke xxiv. 45). He also told them:

> "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high" (Luke xxiv. 49).

Why did they have to tarry? To suggest that they were not ready or were not sufficiently mature is to cast doubt on the ability of the One Whom they had followed for over three years and Who had just opened their understanding of the Scriptures. Again, He said unto them:

> "that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith He, ye have heard of Me. For John truly baptized with water; but ye hall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence" (Acts i. 4, 5).

Why "not many days hence"? Why not there and then? Some of those of Pentecostal or Charismatic persuasion have made much out of the need to "tarry" or to "wait for the promise", failing to realize that the only reason for the delay was that in the O.T. there were exactly fifty days between Firstfruits and the feast of Weeks! God's symbols and His types and shadows are exact, and just as the Passover had been perfectly fulfilled, so now the feast of Weeks was to receive its realization—at the right time. When the fifty days were up, and Pentecost means "the fiftieth (day)", the feast would be fulfilled. (The name Pentecost, describing the feast of Weeks, is found only in the N.T. and occurs in Acts ii. 1, xx. 16 and I Cor. xvi. 8). Thus the reason for the "wait", the reason why they had to "tarry" was nothing to do with the disciples themselves. It had nothing to do with their spiritual condition or lack of readiness. It was to do with the perfect fulfillment of the feast of Leviticus, and so we read:

> "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come (lit. being fulfilled: Gk. sumpleroo) they were all with one accord in one place" (Acts ii. 1).

What happened next must have been a complete surprise to all those present. Not one of them could have foreseen what was about to happen.

> "All of a sudden a sound came from the sky like a blast of violent wind, and it filled the whole house where they were sitting. There appeared to them what looked like tongues of fire, which divided themselves up, and settled on each of them. They were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak in other tongues, as the Spirit enabled them to speak" (Acts ii. 2-4, William Barclay).

In John iii. 8 the Lord Jesus Christ likened the Spirit to the wind. It "bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth". Thus in Acts ii. it is not surprising that this great work of the Holy Spirit is accompanied by the "sound . . . . . as of a rushing mighty wind". What is unusual is that there was a visible manifestation of the Spirit. Such had happened only once before. Just after His baptism by John . . . . .:

> "Jesus . . . . . went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto Him, and He saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon Him:

> and lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. iii. 16, 17).

On another occasion there was a voice from heaven (John xii. 28, 29), and of that the Lord Jesus Christ said:

> "This voice came not because of Me, but for your sakes" (John xii. 30, K.J.V.).
> "The voice was for your benefit, not mine" (John xii. 30, N.I.V.).

Similarly the voice from heaven, following John's baptism, and the appearance of the Holy Spirit as a dove could not have been for His sake. It was for John the Baptist's sake (John i. 33) and for the benefit of others who were there, including the twelve (Acts.i.22).

> "but that He should be made manifest (revealed) to Israel, am I (John) came baptizing with water. And John bare record, saying 'I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon Him. And I knew Him not: but He that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on Him, the same is He which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost" (John i. 31-33).

Thus Christ was to baptize them with the Holy Ghost but if the Holy Ghost is just like the wind, how would they know the promise had been fulfilled? One possibility was that the Spirit would again take, briefly, a visible form and this was what happened, but why cloven tongues of fire? Why this form? Some point to Matt. iii. 11 where John says of Christ:

> "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire."

They claim that the fire mentioned there refers to the tongues of fire seen on the day of Pentecost but from the context this does not seem to be correct. Matt. iii. 10 speaks of the fire of judgment:

> "And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance . . . . . He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire" (Matt. iii. 10, 11).

The next verse makes the link between judgment and baptism with fire even stronger.

> "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire: Whose fan is in His hand, and He will thoroughly purge His floor, and gather His wheat into the garner; but He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire" (Matt. iii. 12; see also Luke iii. 16, 17).

Thus the baptism "with the Holy Ghost" was to follow His first coming whilst the baptism "with fire" is to do with judgment and will follow His second coming. Any who object to such a division of these words should note that John was a typical prophet (Luke xvi. 16), just like Isaiah and others of the O.T. Luke iv. 19, 20 records how the Lord Himself divided Isa. lxi. 2 into two halves. The first half, "the acceptable year of the Lord", was fulfilled then but the second half, "the day of vengeance of our God", waits until His second coming for fulfillment. Thus we cannot use the words of John the Baptist to give a reason why the Spirit appeared as cloven tongues of fire on the day of Pentecost. Also Acts i. 5 mentions "baptized with the Holy Ghost" but it omits "and with fire", indicating it was not applicable to the "not many days hence".

The explanation may be simply that "the Jews require a sign" (I Cor. i. 22), and what sign could be more appropriate than fire. God spoke to Moses on Mount Horeb from out of the burning bush (Exod. iii. 1-6). On Mount Sinai "the sight of the glory of the Lord was like a devouring fire" (Exod. xxiv. 17), and Moses wrote that "the Lord thy God is a consuming fire" (Deut. iv. 24). When Aaron began his administration in the tabernacle, fire came out "from before the Lord, and consume the altar and the burnt offering and the fat" (Lev. ix. 24). Again, God vindicated His servant Elijah when he stood against the prophet of Baal, by consuming the sacrifice with fire from heaven (I Kings xviii. 38). Similarly, the burnt offerings of both David and Solomon were consumed with fire from heaven (I Chron. xxi. 26 and II Chron. vii. 1).

Fire from heaven was an unmistakable sign to the Jews that God was behind the activity. Such a sign was proof to them of God's existence and it signified to those who benefited from its consequences that they were acceptable to Him and were in His will. Thus for the Holy Spirit to assume the appearance of fire was perhaps not all that surprising, and the disciples would appreciate the significance of such a manifestation even though we may not. But was this the only occasion when there were tongues of fire? Peter and John laid their hands on those from Samaria:

> ". . . and they received the Holy Ghost. And when Simon saw that through the laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money" (Acts viii. 17, 18).

How did he know that the Holy Ghost had been given? Did he see anything? Were there tongues of fire? Did they speak in tongues? We are not told. Again, at the house of Cornelius:

> "While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts x. 44, 45).

Again, how did they know that the gift of the Holy Ghost had been poured out? Did they see tongues of fire? The next verse states how they knew:

> "For (because) they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God" (Acts x. 46).

However, some make a case for tongues of fire upon Cornelius and his house because of what Peter says about the incident in the next chapter.

> "The Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning" (Acts xi. 5).

The problem here is reading too much into the word as. It does not mean "in like manner" but, as The Companion Bible note states, "even as". With this J. N. Darby's translation agrees:

> "The Holy Spirit fell upon them even as upon us also at the beginning" (J.N.D.).

At Ephesus Paul laid his hands upon the disciples and:

> "The Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied" (Acts.xix.56).

But again, there is no mention of "cloven tongues like as of fire". Thus the overall evidence of Scripture is that, whereas the baptism and the filling of the Holy Ghost occur on many occasions, the accompaniments of the "rushing mighty wind" and the "cloven tongues like as of fire" were unique features of the Day of Pentecost, not repeated anywhere else in the N.T. and certainly not applicable to us in this dispensation. If anyone is tempted to look for such things he would do well to study these passages of Scripture relating to the days leading up to the return of Christ:

(1) Matt. xxiv. 1-33 and note verse 24 where the Lord speaks about false Christs and false prophets which "shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect".
(2) II Thess. ii. 1-12 and note verse 9 where Paul speaks about "the workings of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders".
(3) Rev. xiii. 1-18 and note verse 14 where John speaks about being deceived "by means of those miracles which he had power to do", and one of those miracles is, according to verse 13, "he maketh fire to come down from heaven on earth in the sight of men". It may have been a sign from God in the past but then it will be a sign from Satan.

No.8. Baptized with the Holy Ghost (Acts i. 5) Part 1.
pp. 45 - 50

In Acts i. 5 the Lord Jesus Christ told the disciples that they were to be "baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence" and this was fulfilled on the Day of Pentecost described so dramatically in Acts ii. 1-4:

> "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."

What exactly happened is perhaps not clear to those who were not present, but two separate things seemed to have occurred at the same time, first the promise of Acts i. 5 was fulfilled: they were baptized with the Holy Ghost, and secondly they were also filled with the Holy Ghost. Scripture exhorts us to "rightly divide the word of truth" (II.Tim.ii.15) and to "test things that differ" (Phil. i. 10 K.J.V. margin); to ignore such commands is detrimental to spiritual growth. Some believers refuse even to consider if there is a difference between being baptized and being filled with the Holy Ghost. As two different Greek verbs are used it is necessary to test the occurrence of each expression in the Scriptures and, if necessary, to change what we believe, making our views agree with what is revealed in the Word of Truth. Both phenomena have to be investigated to see if there are any differences between them and if either, or both, are applicable to this dispensation. It will be necessary to find out whether the speaking in tongues, referred to in Acts ii. 4, was the result of being baptized or filled with the Holy Ghost. Then finally, Scripture must be searched to see if the result of the baptism and the result of the filling remains the same after the Jewish nation had been set aside at the end of the Acts period (Acts xxviii. 26-28). First, however, the expression "baptized with the Holy Ghost" will be considered.

The word with is the Greek preposition en and the note on this word in Appendix 104 of The Companion Bible is illuminating:

> "en governs only one case (the Dative) and denotes being and remaining within, with the primary idea of rest and continuance . . . . . En denotes also continuance in time."

The important point to note is that this word denotes "remaining within, with the primary idea of rest and continuance". The expression "baptized with the Holy Ghost" does not occur anywhere in the O.T. Its first occurrence is in Matt. iii. 11 where, referring to the Lord Jesus Christ, John the Baptist said, "He shall baptize you with Holy Ghost". Mark i. 8, Luke iii. 16 and John i. 33 are similar and relate to the same event. In Acts i. 5 the Lord repeats the promise made earlier by John the Baptist and in Acts.xi.16 Peter recalls that promise of the Lord's. These are the only passages in Scripture which contain the expression "baptized with the Holy Ghost". The only other reference which directly links the Spirit and baptism is I Cor. xii. 13:

> "For by (en = with) one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit."

With so little to go on it is difficult to ascertain exactly what was the significance and the result of being baptized with the Holy Ghost. One approach in attempting to come to a Biblical understanding of the expression is to put ourselves in the position of those who heard the proclamation of John the Baptist. What did they understand by being baptized with the Holy Ghost? What did the word with convey to them? What, to them, was the meaning of baptism?

In the O.T. there are many references to the work of the Holy Spirit. In those days He came upon people to strengthen them (Judges xiv. 5, 6), and to enable them to do all manner of skilful work (Exod. xxviii. 1-5; xxxi. 1-5). He gave them the ability to prophesy (Numb. xi. 24-30), to administer with wisdom (Judges iii. 10; vi. 34; xi. 29; xiii. 25) and many other talents that were required, but He did not abide with them continually and neither did He indwell them permanently. When the task was over, when the work was completed, He departed. If, as in Saul's case, there was extreme disobedience, He left. Also, not everyone had the enabling of the Spirit, but Joel testified that a time was coming when the Spirit would be poured out upon all flesh (Joel ii. 28). However, nowhere in that context is it ever suggested that the Holy Spirit would be a permanent possession, indwelling continually. Those who heard that the Lord Jesus Christ was to baptize them with the Holy Spirit would have heard something very new. Instead of the Holy Spirit staying and enabling for just short periods of time, He was to remain within, "with the primary idea of rest or continuance . . . . . En denotes continuance in time". This new truth was made very clear by the Lord Jesus Himself in John xiv. 16, 17:

> "And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of Truth . . . . . He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you."

This baptism with the Holy Ghost would result in Him being permanently within those who experienced it but what, to them, was the significance of baptism?

> Baptism = Baptisma, consisting of the process of immersion, submersion and emergence (from bapto, to dip).
> Baptize = Baptizo, primarily a frequentative form of bapto, to dip, was used among the Greeks to signify the dyeing of a garment, or the drawing of water by dipping a vessel into another (Vine).

A very informative comment on baptism is found in Classic Baptism by James W. Dale:

> "Whatever is capable of thoroughly changing the character, state or condition of any object is capable of baptizing that object and by such change of character or condition, does in fact baptize it."

Associated with a baptism is an agency; water, a dye or whatever, but an agency is essential. Also associated with baptism is a change of character or condition. In baptism with the Holy Spirit, the Spirit Himself is the agency and there must be a change of character or status or condition for He is certainly able to bring about such changes. These points, so essential to the understanding of baptism, are clearly demonstrated in the first baptism of the Bible which so dramatically changed all who underwent it.

> "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in (en) the cloud and in (en) the sea" (I Cor. x. 1, 2).

Here the agency was the cloud and the sea, and the condition and status of the people changed dramatically. In Egypt they had been slaves under the domination of Pharaoh. There they had sacrificed the passover lamb which redeemed the firstborn and caused the Egyptians to let them go. They went but were pursued by the army and escaped by passing through the Red Sea to safety. This was the "baptism unto Moses in (en) the cloud and in (en) the sea".

> "All were baptized unto Moses . . . . . It united them with all that Moses stood for in divine law and ceremonial and that is the first great underlying teaching of baptism . . . . . there the whole nation of Israel, redeemed and brought out of Egypt, is linked with all that Moses stood for in law and ceremony" (Stuart Allen, Baptism).
>
> "The Israelites were baptized unto Moses by the cloud and by the sea. In this way they were separated from Egypt and Pharaoh, came under the leadership of the deliverer (Moses) and identified with him in hope and destiny" (Merril F. Unger, The Baptism and Gifts of the Holy Spirit).

The point both these writers bring out is that in this first baptism the Israelites were baptized with (en) the cloud and the sea and the result was that they were baptized unto (eis) Moses, being identified with all that he stood for. However, is there any link in the O.T. between baptism and identification?

The Greek translation of the O.T., The Septuagint (LXX), used bapto to translate the Hebrew tabal which is a primitive root meaning to dip and is translated to dip and plunge in the K.J.V. The first occurrence is in the passage describing the institution of the passover.

> "Draw out and take you a lamb according to your families, and kill the passover. And ye shall take a bunch of hyssop, and dip (tabal) it in the blood that is in the bason, and strike the lintel and the two side posts with the blood that is in the bason . . . . . The Lord will pass through to smite the Egyptians; and when He seeth the blood upon the lintel, and on the two side posts, the Lord will pass over the door, and will not suffer the destroyer to come in unto your houses to smite you" (Exod. xii. 21-23).

The people were identified with the lamb. Its death was in place of the death of the firstborn in the household and this was guaranteed by the symbol of dipping (baptizing) the hyssop in the blood and striking the lintel and two side posts.

Leviticus iv. deals with the sin offering of ignorance and there, after the sacrifice of the bullock, "the priest shall dip (tabal) his finger in the blood, and sprinkle of the blood seven times before the Lord, before the vail, of the sanctuary" (Lev. iv. 6; see also verse 17). Lev. iv. 4 shows the strong link with identification. The priest "shall lay his hand upon the bullock's head, and kill the bullock before the Lord" (see also verses 15, 24 and 29).

Lev. xiv. deals with the cleansing of lepers and their houses. Verses 4 and 5 record that two birds were taken and one sacrificed. "As for the living bird, he shall take it, and the cedar wood, and the scarlet, and the hyssop, and shall dip (tabal) them and the living bird in the blood of the bird that was killed" (verse 6, see also verse 51). Thus the living bird was identified with the one that had been sacrificed.

The link between baptism and identification is seen in the N.T. in such passages as:

> "I indeed baptize you with (en) water unto (eis) repentance" (Matt. iii. 11).
>
> "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in (eis) the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (Matt. xxviii. 19).
>
> "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized unto (eis) Jesus Christ were baptized into (eis) His death? Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into (eis) death" (Rom. vi. 3, 4).
>
> "For as many of you as have been baptized into (eis) Christ have put on Christ" (Galatians iii. 27).
>
> "And were all baptized unto (eis) Moses in (en) the cloud and in (en) the sea" (I.Cor.x.2).

An important word in the above passages is the preposition eis. The Companion Bible note in Appendix 104 is as follows:

> "eis governs only one case (the Accusative). Euclid uses eis when a line is drawn to meet another line, at a certain point. Hence, it denotes motion to or unto an object, with the purpose of reaching or touching it."

Those who responded to the call of John the Baptist (Matt. iii. 2), were baptized by him "with (en) water unto (eis) repentance". In the wilderness John preached "the baptism of repentance for (eis) the remission of sins" (Mark i. 4). By listening to John's message the people made their first step in moving towards his teaching. By undergoing his baptism with (en) water they were associating themselves with his message. They were identifying themselves with repentance and remission.

Baptism with water was carried out by the disciples (John iv. 1, 2) and after His resurrection the Lord Jesus told them, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark xvi. 15, 16). Is this referring to water baptism? Was water baptism necessary for salvation? It would seem that from Peter's point of view the answer to both questions is 'yes' for this is exactly what he preached and performed during the Acts period:

> "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts ii. 38).

There are a number of similarities between the ministries of John the Baptist and Peter. In both there was the call to repent. There was also water baptism and for both "the kingdom of heaven was at hand" (compare Matt. iii. 2 with Acts iii. 19-22). If the people to whom John preached had accepted the Lord Jesus as Messiah, that millennial kingdom would have come soon afterwards. It was at hand. It had drawn near. Matthew xii. records that they rejected Him as Prophet, Priest, and King so that offer of the kingdom was withdrawn. However, another offer was made to them in the book of Acts and Peter's speech in Acts iii. 19-26 makes it clear that if they repented, Christ would return (Acts iii. 19, 20) and the kingdom would be restored (Acts i. 6; iii. 21 restitution = restoration), Bearing in mind these parallels and the Lord's command to him in Matt. xxviii. 19 and Mark xvi. 16, Peter's insistence upon water baptism is very understandable but what about the apostle Paul? Commenting upon the issue of water baptism he wrote:

> "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel" (I Cor. i. 17).

We shall look at Paul's teaching on baptism next time.

No.9. Baptized with the Holy Ghost (Acts i. 5) Part 2.
pp. 66 - 73

Last time we saw how water baptism had been carried out by the Apostles during the period of our Lord's earthly ministry (John iv. 1, 2). After His resurrection He gave instructions concerning this rite in Matt. xxviii. 19 and Mark xvi. 16. Thus Peter's insistence upon water baptism in Acts ii. 38 is very understandable but what about the Apostle Paul? Commenting upon the issue of water baptism he wrote:

> "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel" (I Cor. i. 17).

Earlier in that chapter it is obvious that water baptism was not essential to Paul's ministry:

> "I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius . . . . . I baptized also the household of Stephanas: besides, I know not whether I baptized any other' (I.Cor.i.14,16).

Any who are perplexed by this difference between these two great men of God should note that Paul was "the Apostle of the Gentiles" (Rom. xi. 13), whereas Peter was appointed "to the apostleship of the circumcision (i.e. the Jews)" (Gal. ii. 8). To the Jews the meaning and implication of baptism was obvious from their (O.T.) Scriptures but to the Gentiles it would have little or no meaning.

> "The gospel of the uncircumcision (Gentiles) was committed unto me (Paul), as the gospel of the circumcision (Jews) was unto Peter" (Gal. ii. 7).

The foundation of both gospels was Christ's completed work on Calvary's cross but there were differences in the two sets of "good news", one of which was the place of water baptism. To Peter it was essential (Mark xvi. 16; Acts ii. 38), but to Paul it was not (I Cor. i. 14-17). The second half of the Acts of the Apostles highlights many differences between the Jewish and Gentile believers (e.g. Acts xv. 12-22) but they had much in common including the need to repent and to have faith in the sin offering of the Lord Jesus Christ. Also there was the message of eternal life through resurrection but how could such a resurrection be achieved?

> "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into (eis) Jesus Christ were baptized into (eis) His death? Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into (eis) death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection" (Rom. vi. 3-5).

The believer's resurrection is assured because he has been planted together with Christ in His death. This ensures that he shall be united with Him in His resurrection. The N.I.V. is helpful and clear on these verses:

> "We were therefore buried with Him through baptism into (eis) death in order that, just as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, we too may live a > new life. If we have been united with Him in His death, we will certainly also be united with Him in His resurrection" (Rom. vi. 4, 5, N.I.V.).

To be united with Christ in His resurrection a believer must be united with Him in His death. This is achieved by being "buried with Him through baptism into (eis) death" but to which baptism is Paul referring? Is it baptism with (en) water or baptism with (en) Spirit? Nowhere in this passage, or indeed the whole epistle, is it stated what the baptizing agency is. Yet a baptism requires an agency. It must have one to change "the character, state or condition". The N.T. knows of only two such agencies: water or the Holy Spirit. To which is Paul referring in Rom. vi. 3-5? Certainly it cannot be water. Paul's words in I Cor. i. 17 and the attitude he displayed towards it in I Cor. i. 14-16 preclude it. Thus Rom. vi. 3-5 must be the result of being baptized with (en) the Holy Spirit.

> "In these passages (Rom. vi. 3, 4; Col. ii. 12; Eph. iv. 5) the holy Apostle is not considering ritual baptism at all. The sublimity of thought, the context of the argument, the exalted nature of the spiritual verities taught, support this position. He is speaking of something infinitely higher, not of a mere symbolic ordinance that is powerless to effect intrinsic change, but of a divine operation which places us eternally in Christ, and into His experience of crucifixion, death, burial and resurrection" (Merrill F. Unger, Bibliotheca Sacra).
> "The conclusion therefore at which I arrive is that baptism by water is not in the mind of the Apostle at all in these two verses (Rom. vi. 3, 4); instead it is the baptism that is wrought by the Spirit . . . . . that is because water baptism does not achieve union, it does not produce it; indeed at that point it does not even represent it. This is a baptism which is carried out by the Holy Spirit when He incorporates us into and engrafts us into the Lord Jesus Christ" (Martyn Lloyd Jones, Romans Chapter 6).

Both these great writers reject water baptism in Rom. vi. but Martyn Lloyd Jones speaks of a baptism "wrought by the Spirit . . . . . carried out by the Holy Spirit", but is he correct? In the N.T. there is the baptism with (en) water for (eis) repentance and remission of sins and this was carried out by men; John the Baptist, Peter, etc. Also there is the baptism with (en) the Holy Spirit which is carried out by Christ Himself (Matt. iii. 11). Rom. vi. implies that this baptism "incorporates us into, engrafts us into the Lord Jesus Christ". It identifies believers with His work on the cross and ensures them identification with His resurrection.

It is interesting to note that the Lord Jesus Christ Himself links together baptism and His death. In Luke xii. 50, speaking of the crucifixion which lay ahead of Him, He said, "Behold I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened till it be accomplished". That wasn't the only occasion He brought the two together. The mother of Zebedee's children came to Him to ask if her sons could sit on His left and right hand when the kingdom came in. His reply in Matt. xx. 22, 23, contains the words, "Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?".

Writing to the church at Corinth, Paul stated that "by (en) one Spirit are we all baptized into (eis) one body" (I Cor. xii. 13). Again he cannot be referring to water baptism as the reference to the Spirit here, and later in the verse, makes clear. Also

Paul's words in the opening chapter of I Corinthians (i. 14-17) make it unlikely that he would write about water baptism in chapter xii. Again, in I Cor. x. 2, Paul wrote about a dry baptism unto (eis) Moses. Commenting upon I Cor. x. 1, 2 Charles H. Welch wrote:

> "This baptism was 'unto Moses', even as in its fullest sense; the baptism of the N.T. was 'unto Christ' but I Cor. x. 1, 2 prefigures the baptism of the Spirit, not immersion in water, for we have seen the Scripture seems to go out of its way to impress upon us the absence of water at this time" (See Exod. xiv. 22; xv. 19; Psa. lxvi. 6; Heb. xi. 29) (An Alphabetical Analysis Volume 1).

> "The Israelites were baptized into Moses by the cloud and by the sea. In this way they were separated from Egypt and Pharaoh, came under the leadership of the deliverer (Moses) and identified with him in hope and destiny. Likewise the believer, by being baptized into Christ by the Spirit, is cut off from the world of Satan, and identified with Christ, coming under Christ's influence and control, and made one in hope and destiny with Him" (Merril F. Unger, The Baptism and Gifts of the Holy Spirit).

It was the action of being baptized with (en) the Holy Spirit which baptized the Corinthian saints into (eis) one body and which had caused them all to drink from the same source (I Cor. xii. 13). It is impossible for it to have been a baptism with (en) water.

Neither could baptism with (en) water have been what Paul meant when he wrote, "for as many of you as have been baptized into (eis) Christ have put on Christ" (Gal. iii. 27). Again no agency for baptism is specifically mentioned but earlier Paul had dealt with the gospel of the circumcision and the gospel of the uncircumcision (Gal. ii. 7, 8). He had raised the issue of the apostleship to the Jews and apostleship to the Gentiles. Common to both gospels and both apostleships was the one foundation of Jesus Christ but the buildings on that foundation were different and one of the differences was water baptism. Thus it is not possible for Paul to be speaking of this ritual in Gal. iii. 27. In fact this verse is similar to Rom. vi. 3-5 where verse 3 speaks of being "baptized into (eis) Christ".

This concludes a study of being baptized with (en) the Holy Spirit in the gospels, the book of Acts and the epistles written during the Acts period. Perhaps, surprisingly, there has been no association between the baptism with (en) the Holy Spirit and gifts, signs, evidential miracles and external displays of power. Obviously these are to do with the Holy Spirit but they do not form part of His baptizing work which identifies the believer with the Lord Jesus Christ on Calvary's cross and so ensures that the believer will be united with Him in His resurrection and thus eternal life is guaranteed.

But what about the epistles written after the Acts period, after the Jew had been set aside? Do these contain any instructions on baptism, either with (en) water or with (en) the Holy Spirit? Did the failure and rejection of Israel cause any changes in God's economy? A study of Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, I & II Timothy, Titus and Philemon reveals that there are two references to baptism in the epistles written after Acts xxviii. 28.

> "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, Who is above all, and through all, and in you all" (Eph. iv. 4-6).

To which does the one baptism refer? Is it baptism with (en) water or baptism with (en) the Holy Spirit? Or is it both (!!!), as some would maintain? Merril F. Unger is adamant that what Paul meant was "one (spiritual) baptism" and that the apostle was not excluding baptism with (en) water. However to state that this passage teaches that there is "one (spiritual) baptism" and allow a second (ritual) baptism destroys the important features of these verses. The *one*ness, the singleness, the uniqueness of each item mentioned is essential. To allow another baptism, a second one, would open the way to permitting another hope or another faith or another body. Even another Lord or another God could be introduced, or another Spirit—a subject on which Paul expressed himself forcibly in II Cor. xi. 3-15.

To say that Paul had in mind both baptism with (en) the Spirit and baptism with (en) water shows a lack of appreciation of the differences between the ministries of Peter and Paul during the Acts period. Baptism with (en) water was of vital importance to Peter's ministry but it wasn't to Paul's. Thus in writing Eph. iv. 4-6 Paul could not be alluding to water baptism in either a primary or a secondary sense. Commenting on the one baptism of Eph. iv 5, I. M. Haldeman writes:

> "If it be Holy Ghost baptism, water baptism is excluded. There is no authority; no place for it. No minister has a right to perform it; no one is under obligation to submit to it. To perform it, or to submit to it, would be not only without authority, but useless, utterly meaningless. If it be water baptism, Holy Ghost baptism is no longer operative. But it must be either one or the other, Holy Ghost or water. It cannot be both. Two are no longer possible" (Holy Ghost or Water?).

With this every unbiased reader will agree, it being impossible to make one into two. However, what follows in Haldeman's book is quite incredible! He states that the one baptism of Eph. iv. 5 is baptism with (en) water. To make such a statement shows that he has failed to take into account three important facts:

(1) Paul's attitude to water baptism in I Cor. i. 14-16 was a result of the orders he had been given by the glorified, ascended Christ. "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel" (I Cor. i. 17). Nowhere in Paul's ministry, either before or after Acts xxviii. 28, does baptism with (en) water have an important role let alone an essential one.

(2) The structure of Eph. iv. 4-6 parallels baptism and Spirit:

one body
one Spirit
one hope one Lord
one faith
one baptism
one God and Father.

This shows that the One Who inspired the writer wanted to show that the one baptism of this dispensation is one associated with the Spirit.

(3) It is the Lord Jesus Christ Himself Who baptizes the believer with (en) the Holy Spirit (Matt. iii. 11). This act ensures that the believer is identified with, > baptized into (eis) Christ and identified with, baptized into (eis) His death. Thus the believer is "united with Him in His death" and "will certainly be united with Him in His resurrection" (Rom. vi. 5, N.I.V.). That identification, that union with Him in death and resurrection is as essential for believers in this dispensation as it was for those during the Acts period. Thus Eph. iv. 5 must be referring to this baptism.

Weighing up the whole ministry and writings of Paul one can but conclude that to the Apostle of the Gentiles, water baptism was not essential during the Acts period. To Paul, "the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles" (Eph. iii. 1), there was only one baptism permitted after the rejection of Israel at the end of the Acts period and that was the one in which the believer was baptized with (en) the Holy Ghost.

Colossians ii. 10, 11 is the only other passage, written after the setting aside of the Jewish nation, which mentions baptism:

> "And ye are complete in Him, which is the head of all principality and power: in Whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ: buried with Him in (en) baptism, wherein also ye are risen with Him through the faith of the operation of God, Who hath raised Him from the dead."

To try and make this passage refer to the ritual of being baptized with (en) water is simply not possible. To attempt to do so would show failure to appreciate that Colossians is parallel to Ephesians and in the latter there is but one baptism and that must be the baptism with (en) the Spirit. Also the context of Col. ii. is suggestive. Verse 11 mentions "the circumcision made without hands" and the reference, in the same verse, to "the circumcision of Christ" cannot refer to the rite performed on the eighth day old baby but to His death, to Him being cut off (Dan. ix. 26). Also Col. ii. 14 refers to "blotting out the handwriting of ordinances" and verse 16 gives freedom concerning food, drink, holy days, new moons, and sabbaths. Col. ii. 17 states that all these were but "a shadow of things to come; but the body (i.e. the reality) is of Christ". In the light of all this, to insist that Col. ii. 12 refers to baptism with (en) water not only ignores the context, it actually breaks with it.

As mentioned above, the second half of Col. ii. 11 "putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ" is referring to the Lord's crucifixion and this verse has similarities to Rom. vi. 6. In fact Col. ii. 12 is saying much the same as Rom. vi. 3-5 and the expression "buried with Him" occurs in both. This does refer to the work of the Holy Spirit and is the result of being baptized by the Lord Jesus Christ with (en) the Holy Spirit into (eis) His death. Thus the conclusion is the same. Water baptism has no place after the Jewish nation was set aside at Acts xxviii. 26-28. The baptism for today is the one with (en) the Spirit which identifies the believer with His Lord and His crucifixion and His resurrection. This baptism is essential to eternal life but when does it take place?

In Luke xxiv. 29 the Lord told the disciples to "tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high" and in Acts i. 4, 5 the Lord's command was:

> "That they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith He, ye have heard of Me. For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with (en) the Holy Ghost not many days hence."

Here the waiting was essential to fulfil the feasts of Lev. xxiii. Thus they had to wait until the fiftieth day, until Pentecost. "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come (being fulfilled: Greek sumpleroo)" (Acts ii. 1), they were filled and baptized with (en) the Holy Ghost. However, for others there was no waiting period.

> ". . . . . ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in Whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, Which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. i. 13, 14).

This appears to imply that sometime after believing, the believer is sealed with the Spirit but this is an inaccurate translation, a better one being "in whom also having believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise". See, for instance, the N.I.V.:

> "And you also were included in Christ when you heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation. Having believed, ye were marked in Him with a seal, the promised Holy Spirit, Who is a deposit guaranteeing our inheritance until the redemption of those who are God's possession" (Eph. i. 13, 14, N.I.V.).

To sum up: baptism with (en) the Holy Spirit is not associated with evidential miracles, signs and displays of power. These are to do with the filling and gifts of the Spirit. The Lord Jesus Christ Himself (Matt. iii. 11) baptizes with (en) the Holy Ghost and this act identifies the believer with his Lord and His death and ensures that he will be united with Christ in resurrection (Rom. vi. 3-5). Such union with Christ takes place when the believer is sealed with the Spirit at the moment of believing (Eph. i. 13, 14). This is an important fundamental truth which is as true for the believers of the Acts period as it is for believers today.

In concluding, consideration must be given to the view that there are three baptisms in the Acts period, namely (1) water baptism, (2) Holy Spirit baptism, (3) Rom. vi. baptism. This view states that it is the Rom. vi. baptism which is essential for today and which is the one referred to in Eph. iv. 4-6 and Col. ii. 11, 12. However, the N.T. knows of only two baptismal agencies, water and the Holy Spirit, and so there cannot be three baptisms. No agency is mentioned in Rom. vi. 3-5 and this study has shown that the relevant agency for the great work described in those verses must be the Holy Spirit. The idea that there are three baptisms in the Acts period, and views like Haldeman's that the baptism with (en) the Spirit is not the one baptism of Eph. iv. 5, have as one of their roots the teaching that evidential miracles and signs are linked to the baptism with (en) the Spirit. They conclude that as such signs had no place once the people of Israel had been set aside (Acts xxviii. 26-28), then Holy Spirit baptism ceased also. However, the evidential miracles and displays of power were not associated with the baptism with (en) the Holy Spirit. They are associated with the filling and gifts of the Spirit.

No.10. Filled with the Holy Ghost (Acts ii. 4).
pp. 93 - 100

In Acts i. 5 the Lord Jesus Christ told the disciples that "ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence" and, because Acts ii. 4 records that "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost", some conclude that being filled with the Holy Ghost is exactly the same as being baptized with Him but is this correct? In Matthew iii. 11, Mark i. 8 and Luke iii. 16, John the Baptist says of the Lord, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost". This baptism was, to John, still future and no one, up to then, had even heard of it let alone experienced it. Also there is no record of the Lord baptizing anyone with the Holy Ghost during His earthly ministry; the first to be baptized in this way were those at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost but the O.T. and the Gospels record that a variety of people were filled with the Spirit (e.g. Exod. xxviii. 3; xxxi. 3; xxxv. 31; Luke i. 15, 41, 67). The conclusion must be that the baptism and the filling are different. This is further demonstrated by Peter being filled with the Holy Spirit at least three times (Acts ii. 4; iv. 8, 31) and Paul twice (Acts ix. 17; xiii. 9). The baptism of the Holy Spirit can be experienced only once (see previous article) and so there must be a difference between the two.

The expression "filled with the Holy Ghost" occurs ten times in the N.T. (A.V.) and in the majority of cases the word for filled is:

> pimplemi: to fill, fill up. Passive, to become full of, be satisfied, have enough of (Bullinger).
> pimplemi and pletho, lengthened form of pleo, to fill (pletho supplies certain tenses of pimplemi): is used . . . for persons . . . . . filled with the Holy Ghost, Luke i. 15, 41, 67; Acts ii. 4; iv. 8, 31; ix. 17; xiii. 9 (Vine).

The first occurrence in Luke i. 15 refers to John the Baptist and he was unique, being "filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb". John was to go "in the spirit and power of Elias" (Luke i. 17), and here a link is seen between being filled with the Holy Ghost and having power. In Luke xxiv. 29 the Lord Jesus told the disciples to "tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high". On the day of Pentecost "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost" (Acts ii. 4), and their subsequent actions show that the Lord's promise of power was fulfilled.

The second reference is in Luke i. 41 when Elizabeth "was filled with the Holy Ghost: and she spake out with a loud voice, and said . . . . .". Verses 42-45 record her inspired words, the result of her being filled with the Holy Ghost. The effect upon her husband, Zacharias, was similar when he was filled with the Holy Ghost (Luke i. 67). He "prophesied, saying . . . . ." and verses 68-79 contain the inspired Benedictus.

When the apostles were filled with the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, the result was not dissimilar. They spoke "with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance" (Acts ii. 4, 11), and Acts ii. 14-36 records Peter's long speech containing the quotation from Joel.

In Acts iv., Peter and John were imprisoned but when they appeared before Caiaphas and company, "Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, said unto them . . . . ." (Acts iv. 8). Then followed a brief but inspired and powerful speech, "and when they (Caiaphas and company) saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marveled . . . . . and beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing" (Acts iv. 13, 14). Such incidents as these were fulfillments of the Lord's words in such places as Matt. x. 17-20:

> "But beware of men: for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will scourge you in their synagogues; and ye shall be brought before the governors and kings for My sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles. But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak: for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak. For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you."

Not long after being released, Peter and others were praying together (Acts iv. 23-30) and when they finished "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and they spake the word of God with boldness" (verse 31). This is the third time Scripture records that Peter was "filled with the Holy Ghost" and on each occasion the result was an inspired and empowered speech. This would not be unexpected by the Jew who knew his Scriptures for in the O.T. there is close connection between the Spirit and prophesying (i.e. speaking forth about God):

> "And the Lord came down . . . . . and took of the Spirit that was upon him (Moses), and gave it unto the seventy elders: and it came to pass, that, when the Spirit rested upon them, they prophesied, and did not cease" (Numb. xi. 25).

Thus the miraculous, empowered speeches of Elizabeth, Zacharias, Peter and others were the result of being "filled with the Holy Ghost".

On the road to Damascus, Paul met his Lord and the glory blinded him, but he heard Ananias say:

> ". . . . . the Lord . . . . . hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith . . . . . Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus. And straightway he preached Christ" (Acts ix. 17-20).

Here some claim that the restoration of sight was the result of being "filled with the Holy Ghost" but this is not stated in the passage. In the context of Acts it makes more sense to recognize the restoration of sight as the result of Ananias laying his hands on Paul. Such a healing miracle would be a sign to Paul that God was working through Ananias. Paul received his sight and was filled with the Spirit and verse 20 states that "straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues".

Paul was again filled with the Holy Ghost in Acts xiii. At Paphos, Elymas the sorcerer withstood Paul who, being "filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him, and said . . . . .” (Acts xiii. 9, 10). The short sharp speech that followed contained the pronouncement of the blindness judgment upon Elymas.

On four occasions the N.T. records that certain people were “full of the Holy Ghost”.

> full = pleres: (1) full of, filled with, generally full, complete sufficient (Bullinger). (2) denotes full, in the sense of being filled spiritually, of the Holy Spirit, Luke iv. 1; Acts vi. 3; vii. 55; xi. 24 (Vine).

Luke iv 1 records that “Jesus being full of the Holy Ghost returned from Jordan, and was led by the Spirit into the wilderness”. There the Lord underwent those testing temptations which He overcame with three quotations from Deuteronomy.

In Acts vi. 1 “there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration”. To solve this administrative difficulty the twelve looked for “seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom . . . . . and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost” (Acts vi. 3-5). The link between administrative gifts and the Holy Spirit would not be unknown to those who knew their Scriptures.

Such people as Othniel, Gideon and Jephthah needed wisdom, discernment and prudence to judge the Jewish nation and “the Spirit of the Lord came upon” them to equip them with the necessary administrative abilities (Judges iii. 10; vi. 34; xi. 29).

As well as Stephen being “full of faith and of the Holy Ghost” (Acts vi. 5), Acts vi. 8 records that he was “full of faith and power”; again a link between these two is seen. Acts vii. records Stephen’s mighty speech to the high priest and verse 55 states again that he was “full of the Holy Ghost”. He could never have made such a speech if he had not been.

The last reference to a person being “full of the Holy Spirit” is in Acts xi. 24 where Luke describes Barnabas, but nothing is said in the context which adds further detail and this concludes the study of being “filled (pimplemi) with the Holy Ghost” and of being “full (pleres) of the Holy Ghost”. Every occurrence in the New Testament has been considered and neither of these expressions occurs in any of the epistles, neither in those written during the Acts period nor in those written after the Jewish nation had been set aside at Acts xxviii. 26, 27. Does being filled (pimplemi) or being full (pleres) of the Spirit have any significance to members of the Body of Christ, a relationship revealed in those seven epistles written after the close of the Acts period?

Elizabeth, Zacharias, Peter, Paul, Stephen and others were filled with the Holy Ghost and prophesied or spoke with power and boldness. For those alive in the Acts period this was a fulfillment of Matthew x. 17-20, but such a promise was not for this dispensation. We do the words of our Lord disservice if we try and apply that promise to ourselves. We are not likely to be scourged in the synagogues! (Matthew x. 18). Thus we cannot apply this promise to this age, and this aspect of being filled with the Spirit is not truth for today. Instead we are told the very opposite. We are not told to “take no thought of what ye shall speak". On the contrary, we are told to "study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth" (II Tim. ii. 15).

Paul was filled with the Holy Ghost, condemned a man and struck him blind but such miracles of judgment have no place in this dispensation of the grace of God (Eph. iii. 2). Paul's restoration of sight may have been due to the filling with the Holy Ghost, but after Acts xxviii. 28 such healing miracles ceased. Timothy had stomach problems and other infirmities, and Trophimus was left sick at Miletum (I Tim. v. 23; II Tim. iv. 20).

Elizabeth "spake out" and Zacharias "prophesied" but in this dispensation the prophets of Eph. iv. 11 were to lay the foundations (Eph. ii. 20), a job done in the years just after the Jews were set aside at Acts xxviii. 26, 27.

I Corinthians xiii. 8 states that the gift of prophecy would fail. It states also that the gift of knowledge, the Acts period of fulfillment of Matt. x. 17-20, would cease, as would tongues. Peter and the apostles were filled with the Spirit and spoke in tongues, which was a sign to the unbelieving Jews (I Cor. i. 22; xiv. 21, 22). When that nation was set aside, the need for such signs ceased and then there is no record of them in the later epistles (Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, I & II Timothy, Titus and Philemon). The only conclusion one can come to is that being "filled (pimplemi) with" and being "full (pleres) of" the Holy Ghost with the resultant displays of miraculous power is not truth for today. But what about Eph. v. 18?

> "And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be ye filled with the Spirit; speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord; giving thanks always for all things unto God" (Ephesians v. 18).

Here the word translated filled is pleroo:

> pleroo: (1) to fill, make full, to fulfil. Passive, to be filled or full (Bullinger). (2) to make full, to fill to the full; in the Passive voice, to be filled, made full; it is used . . . . . of believers filled with the Spirit, Acts xiii. 52 and Eph. v. 18 (Vine).

Acts xiii. 52 states that "the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost" but Eph. v. 18 is not a description of the condition or state of believers. It is a command, telling them what they should be like: literally, "Be not drunk . . . . . but be filled up to the full by the Spirit". Commenting on the expression "be filled with the Spirit", Charles H. Welch wrote:

> "To understand this statement it is necessary to understand the use of the Greek verb 'to fill'. Pleroo, 'to fill' takes three cases after it. As an active verb, followed by the Accusative, of the vessel or whatever is filled. As an active verb, followed by the Genitive, of what it is filled with. As a passive verb, followed by the Dative, of the filler, and as a passive verb, followed by the Genitive, of what the vessel is filled with.
>
> In the passage before us the verb is passive, and 'with the Spirit', en pneumati, is Dative. This means that the Spirit is the One that fills, and not that the believer is filled with the Spirit" (In Heavenly Places, page 393).

To make the point clear: A glass may be filled with a tap but no one would imagine that afterwards the tap would be found in the glass. The tap fills the glass and here the Holy Spirit can fill the believer. The tap fills the glass with water but with what does the Holy Spirit fill the believer? The immediate context does not supply the answer but earlier, Paul had prayed:

> ". . . . . that He would grant you . . . . . to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled (pleroo) with all the fullness of God" (Eph. iii. 16-19).

Here Paul prays that each individual may be filled with the fullness of God, i.e. each individual filled to the maximum of his capacity for no human being could ever contain all the fullness of God. Can believers achieve this filling themselves or do they need assistance? Obviously they need help and the One Who provides it is the Spirit.

> ". . . . . that He would grant, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man . . . . . that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God" (Eph. iii. 16-19).

It is significant that this word pleroo, to fill, is found in three other prayers in the epistles written after Acts xxviii. 28. Consider the following:

> ". . . . . this I pray, that . . . . . ye may be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ; being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ" (Phil. i. 9-11).
>
> "For this cause we . . . . . pray that ye might be filled with the knowledge (or acknowledgment) of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding" (Col. i. 9).
> "Epaphras . . . . . labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect and complete (filled full) in all the will of God" (Col. iv. 12).

If any of us are to be filled to the fullness of our capacity with the fullness of God; if any of us are to be fill with the fruits of righteousness; if any of us are to be filled with the knowledge of His will and the acknowledgment of it, we cannot do it in our own strength. We cannot fill ourselves but the Holy Spirit can and will. However the initial desire and effort must come from us. Is there anything we can do? An answer may be provided by comparing closely two passages of Scripture:

"Be filled with the Spirit speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord; giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God. Wives . . ." (Eph. v. 18-22).	"Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of our Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by Him. Wives submit . . ." (Col. iii. 16-18).

The parallels here are so close that many have decided that "to be filled with the Spirit" is synonymous with "let the word of Christ dwell in you richly". This may not be strictly correct but the two expressions must be closely related and perhaps the first step a believer must take in observing the command to "be filled with the Spirit" is to "let the word of Christ dwell" in him richly. Here "the word of Christ" does not refer exclusively to the words spoken by Christ but means "the word concerning Christ" and that embraces the O.T. (Luke xxiv. 44), as well as the Gospels and the epistles. If the Spirit is to fill us with the knowledge of His will then it seems very sensible for us to first read and study the Book which contains His will. As Paul puts it elsewhere:

> "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth" (II Tim. ii. 15).

It is impossible for the Spirit to fill us with the fullness of God, with the fruits of righteousness and with the knowledge and acknowledgment of His will if we keep the Book shut.

= = = = = = = = = =

In concluding this study of being filled with the Holy Ghost, it should be pointed out that there are a variety of other expressions which occur in Scripture. For example:

> "receive (lambano) the Holy Ghost" (Acts ii. 38; viii. 15, 17, 19; x. 47; xix. 2).
> "the Holy Ghost fell (epipipto) on them" (Acts viii. 16; x. 44; xi. 15).
> "poured out (ekcheo) the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts x. 45).
> "the Holy Ghost came (eitho) on them" (Acts xix. 6).

To these could be added such O.T. expressions as: "the Spirit came upon them" (Judg. iii. 10; vi. 34; xi. 29; xiv. 6); "the Spirit rested on them" (Numb. xi. 25); "the Spirit began to move" (Judg. xiii. 25), as well as "filled with the Spirit" (Exod. xxviii. 3; xxxi. 3), and a variety of other expressions. (For example see II Sam. xxiii. 2; Psa.li.12; Joel ii. 28; Micah iii. 8; Zech. iv. 6). We make no comment on these as often they are either in the context of being filled with the Spirit or little is said in the text from which any positive deductions can be made. If any of our readers would like to study "came", "rested", "fell", "poured out" etcetera then a concordance will help them greatly. Also Dr. E. W. Bullinger's The Giver and His Gifts, published by Kregel, will answer many queries concerning the diverse workings of the Holy Spirit.

No.11. Speak with other Tongues (Acts ii. 4).

Tongues! Ecstatic utterances or languages? Languages of the earth or languages of heaven? For use in public speaking or for private prayer? A sign to the unbelieving Jew or confirmation of salvation to a believing Gentile? All these, and probably many more, are the opinions of people on the purpose of tongues. There is so much dispute over this subject and yet so little is said about it in Scripture. There is one verse in Mark's Gospel; three short passages in the Acts of the Apostles and three chapters in I Corinthians. If the Scriptural accounts are so few why is there such a divergence of views in Christian circles about this subject? Why are there so many interpretations of what actually happened and why it happened?

> "In tongues movements, alleged experience and emotional excitement have attempted to be a substitute for accurate teaching and clear exposition of Holy Scripture. The result has been that the Word of God has been interpreted on the basis of human experience instead of experience being interpreted on the basis of the Word of God" (Merril Unger, New Testament Teaching on Tongues).

> "Is experience wrong? Of course not. The Christian life is a love affair, 'thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart . . . . .'. Love is experiential, not theoretical. But the Lord Jesus Christ gave the proper pattern in the Gospel of John, chapter eight, verse thirty two, 'ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free'. What that truth is, is seen from the previous verse, 'My word'. God's design is from truth to experience not from experience to truth! The formula, 'I have had an experience. I find experience like mine in the Bible. Therefore my experience is Scriptural'' is dangerously misleading" (George E. Gardiner, The Corinthian Catastrophe).

Peter experienced one of the greatest events ever seen. He was there on the mountain when the Lord's glory began to be shown and he refers to this in his epistle (II.Pet.i.16-18). However, Peter goes on to say, "we have also a more sure word of prophecy" (verse 19). To Peter, what the O.T. prophets had written was "more sure" than what he had seen. Thus, like Peter, in this study on the subject of tongues, we will start off with the Bible and keep rigidly to it throughout.

There are two words which are translated "tongues".

dialektos - language (English dialect) (Vine).
- a speaking through, or to and fro; hence language spoken by a people or province, especially a dialect, peculiar idiom (Bullinger).
- a language of a nation or region (Bauer).

Here there is total agreement amongst these three experts. This word, dialektos, occurs only six times in the N.T., all in Acts (i. 19; ii. 6, 8; xxi. 40; xxii. 2; xxvi. 14).

glossa - is used of (1) the 'tongues . . . like as of fire' which appeared at Pentecost.
(2) the tongue, as an organ of speech.

(3) (a) a language, coupled with phule, a tribe, laos a people, ethnos, a nation.
(b) the supernatural gift of speaking in another language without it having been learnt (Vine).

glossa the tongue, as part of the body; also personified (as in Phil.ii.11) para glossa, i.e. every person . . . . . and also, a tongue, a language, a gift of language (Bullinger).

glossa-- (1) (a) literally, as an organ of speech.
(b) figuratively, of forked flames.
(2) language (Acts ii. 6) . . . . . every language = every person regardless of the language he speaks, Acts ii. 6, Phil. ii. 11.
(3) a special problem is posed by the technical term glossai, gene glosson en glosse (asi) lalein, I Cor. xiv. 1-27, 39; xii. 10, 28, 30; xiii. 1, 8; Acts.x.46; xix. 6. There is no doubt the thing referred to, namely the broken speech of persons in religious ecstasy. The phenomenon, as found in Hellenestic religion . . . . . The origin of the term is less clear. Two explanations are prominent today. The one (Bleek, Heinrici) hold that glossa here means antiquated, foreign, unintelligible, mysterious utterances . . . . . The other (Reitzenstein, Baisset) see in glossalia as speaking in marvelous, heavenly languages (Bauer).

Here Bauer adds a meaning not given by Vine and Bullinger. Who is correct? There is no doubt that dialektos means a language, a dialect of this earth but what about glossa? Literally it means the tongue but what does the expression "to speak with tongues" mean? What was its meaning in classical Greek? How do the N.T. writers use it? To help in this study, a complete concordance of glossa is given. It occurs 50 times and is used in the following ways:

(a) Speak in tongues (25); Mark xvi. 17; Acts ii. 4, 11; x. 46; xix. 6; I Cor. xii. 10, 10, 28, 30; xiii. 1, 8; xiv. 2, 4, 5, 5, 6, 13, 14, 18, 19, 22, 23, 26, 27, 39.
(b) The tongue (literally) (17); Mark vii. 33, 35; Luke i. 64; xvi. 23; Acts ii. 26; Rom. iii. 13; xiv. 11; I Cor. xiv. 9; Philippians ii. 11; James i. 26; iii. 5, 6, 6, 8; I.Pet.iii.10; I John v. 9; Rev. xvi. 9.
(c) Tongues of fire (1); Acts ii. 3.
(d) Peoples, nations, tongues (7); Rev. v. 9; vii. 9; x. 11; xi. 9; xiii. 7; xiv. 6; xvii. 5.

The phrase glossais lalein, to speak with tongues, was not invented by the N.T. writers but borrowed from the ordinary speech of pagans. Plato (B.C.427-348) uses it and so does Virgil, who lived B.C.70-19, and he graphically describes the ancient, pagan prophetess as "speaking in tongues", (see Aeneid VI49,98). Bauer points out that the origin of the term is uncertain but two explanations are prominent. One holds that glossa means "antiquated, foreign, unintelligible utterances" whilst the other sees it as "speaking in marvelous, heavenly languages". All this leads to three different views of tongues (glossa) in the N.T.:

(1) That it is a language of this earth, like dialektos.
(2) That it is the language of angels, a heavenly language.
(3) That it is ecstatic utterances.

Which is it? Is it all three or two of the three or just one?

The first occurrence of the phrase is in Mark xvi. 17, 18:

> "And these signs shall follow them that believe; in My name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

Here the Lord Jesus Christ was speaking to the disciples. How would they have understood the sign of speaking in new tongues? That they were to behave as the pagans did in their temples, by making ecstatic utterances!? This surely cannot be correct. Such behaviour would not have been a sign of God's workings. To them it would have been a sign of Satanic activity for the practices of the pagan temples were strongly forbidden in the Old Testament.

The Lord, here, was speaking to Jews who were brought up on the Scriptures. What did "speak with new tongues" mean to them? How did they understand it? Were they perplexed? Did they know what to look for? We may never know the answers to such questions but if there was any uncertainty in their minds it must have vanished on the day of Pentecost when, in Acts ii. 4, this phrase occurs. In this passage, we get the most detailed description of this phenomenon:

> "And they . . . . . began to speak with other tongues (glossa) . . . . . and . . . . . devout men . . . . . heard them speak in his own language (dialektos) . . . . . 'How hear we every man in our own tongue (dialektos) . . . . . and we do hear them speak in our own tongues (glossa)" (Acts ii. 4, 6, 8, 11).

Here there can be no doubt it, tongues (glossa) were foreign languages (dialektos). This was truly a remarkable sign to the Jews who had gathered in Jerusalem from every nation (Acts ii. 5). They heard them speak in their own language and "they were all amazed" (Acts ii. 12). If the disciples had been performing the ecstatic utterances of pagan temple-worship it would have been no sign to the Jews visiting Jerusalem. To them such a display would have been abhorrent.

The next occurrence of the phrase is in Acts x. 45, 46, "and they of the circumcision which believed were astonished . . . . . for they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God". Now the Jews who observed this would not have been astonished if the Gentiles had merely indulged in ecstatic speech for that was common place in Greek religion. It would have been no sign to the Jews. If those Gentiles had made the ecstatic utterances as heard in pagan temples, Peter would not have baptized them, he would have rejected them. It is clear that here tongues (glossa) are languages (dialektos) just as they were in Acts ii., and this is what is implied in Peter's report of the incident in Acts xi. 15, 16. Also the result was similar on both occasions. Here they magnified God (Acts x. 46), with their tongues and earlier "we do hear them speak in our own tongues the wonderful works of God" (Acts ii. 11). Again, if these tongues were not in languages known to Peter and company, then how did they know that they magnified God? No interpreter is mentioned.

The third and final reference in Acts is in xix. 6 where "they spake with tongues, and prophesied". This would not have signified anything to Paul, and to the other Jews involved, if the result of his laying on of hands was that they could copy pagan practices. We may have laboured this point but it is important. The first reference to tongues states:

> "these signs shall follow them that believe . . . . . they shall speak with new tongues" (Mark xvi. 17).

In the last chapter which deals with tongues, Paul writes:

> "wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not" (I Cor. xiv. 22).

Is this a sign to the unbelieving Jew or Gentile? Either way, it wouldn't be a sign to either if it merely copied the prophetess at Delphi. Although the phrase glossais lalein, to speak with tongues, does occur in classical Greek and is used there of ecstatic utterances, this cannot be how the N. T. writers use it. But what about the Old Testament? Do we get any help there?

It is obvious that the speaking in tongues was primarily a sign to the unbelieving Jew, not Gentile. This is clear when I Cor. xiv. 22 is taken in context:

> "In the law it is written, With men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that will they not hear Me, saith the Lord. Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not" (I Cor. xiv. 21, 22).

Obviously this passage is aimed at the Jew, since quoting the Law to the Gentiles, who would not know it, would be of little value, but to which part of the O.T. is Paul referring? There are three possibilities and it is best to consider them all to see if languages or ecstatic utterances were what the O.T. writers had in mind.

> Deut. xxviii. 49: "The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth; a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand."
>
> Isa. xxviii. 11: "For with stammering lips and another tongue will he speak to this people."
>
> Isa. xxxiii. 19: "Thou shalt not see a fierce people, a people of a deeper speech than thou canst perceive; of a stammering tongue, that thou canst not understand."

In Isa. xxviii. 11, the Septuagint (LXX) uses glossa for tongues and this passage, addressed to the northern kingdom of Israel, refers to the Assyrians and their language. The Jews of that nation were not believing in the Lord and they were soon to hear a new tongue, a strange language.

Isaiah xxxiii. 19 again refers to the Assyrian language and to Deut. xxviii. 49. The whole of Deut. xxviii. 45-51 is worth reading. There the Jews were told, "these curses shall come upon thee . . . . . because thou hearkenedst not unto the voice of the Lord thy God . . . . . they shall be . . . . . for a sign . . . . . Because thou servedst not the Lord thy God . . . . . the Lord shall bring a nation against thee . . . . . a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand".

If the Jews did not worship the Lord, if they strayed into unbelief then certain curses and judgments would befall them. These were for a sign, to signify to the Jews their unbelief and one of these signs was to do with the tongue, the language of a foreign nation, i.e. another earthly language, one different from their own. Thus a copy of the ecstatic utterances of pagan priestesses could not have been what the N.T. meant by "speaking in tongues". The writers may well have borrowed the expression from classical Greek but they gave it a new meaning. But what about heavenly languages, the tongues of angels? In I Cor. xiii. 1 Paul wrote:

> "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity (love), I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal."

Here, some assert, Paul claims he has spoken in the tongues or languages of angels but The Companion Bible note on "though" is enlightening:

> though = if, Greek ean = if haply, if so be that, haply, perchance. Here followed by the subjunctive mood, it expresses a hypothetical but possible condition, contingent on circumstances the future will show.

Up to that point of time, Paul had not spoken in the tongues of angels. Here, he was arguing hypothetically. "If I speak with the tongues of men, even if I speak with the tongues of angels, and have not love, I am as empty as a drum" is a possible paraphrase which makes the argument clear. It is interesting to note that throughout the whole of the Scriptures, whenever angels talk, they are always clearly understood by the human beings addressed. Thus in Scripture, angels have always spoken in the tongues of men.

To sum up, in Scripture to speak in tongues does not refer to angelic speech, neither can it refer to utterances made in religious ecstasy which were common in the pagan temples. It refers to a language, a dialektos, a speech of some other nation here on earth.

No.12. Pray in a Tongue (I Cor. xiv. 14).
pp. 154 - 160

Much is made, nowadays, about "praying in tongues" yet the expression occurs but once in Scripture and then it is qualified by the word "if".

> "For if I pray in an unknown tongue, my spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful. What is it then? I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also" (I Cor. xiv. 14, 15).

The word 'unknown' is in italics in the K.J.V. because it is not in the Greek manuscripts but the translators thought some word should qualify 'tongues'. Possibly they inclined to the view that tongues were unknown ecstatic utterances or angelic languages but earlier we have shown that such views are untenable. Tongues were languages of the earth and the unknown should not be there.

Returning to "if I pray in a tongue", the word for "if" is ean and the note quoted previously for the "though" of I Cor. xiii. 1 applies to this verse also. Thus Paul is not saying he has prayed in a tongue. He is saying what would happen if he did. If he were to pray in a tongue, his mind (understanding) would be unfruitful. What is to be done then? (What is it then?). Paul states that he will pray with the spirit and with the understanding also, i.e. at the same time. Here Paul rules out praying in a tongue. It was not to be done as it didn't involve the mind, the understanding, which was so important. Just a few verses later Paul wrote "yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding (mind) that . . . . . I might teach others also, than then thousand words in an unknown tongue" (I Cor. xiv. 19).

In an attempt to justify the present-day practice of praying in tongue, some have asserted that "I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also" does not imply these two are simultaneous but that they are separate and sequential. That is, on some occasions one should pray with the spirit (in tongues) and on others one should pray with the understanding (in everyday language). Naturally such an occasion is nowhere described in Scripture and both singing in tongues and praying in tongues must be rejected as neither is Biblical.

Some turn to passages such as Eph. vi. 18 in an attempt to justify praying in tongues but that verse states "praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit". It has nothing to with praying in tongues. It is to do with praying in the strength and the will of the Spirit. (Jude 20 similar). Again the use of Rom. viii. 26 to justify praying in tongues is impossible as that verse ends with the words "the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered". As said above, I.Cor.xiv.14 is the only reference in Scripture to praying in a tongue.

Others turn to I Cor. xiv. 18, 19 to support praying in tongues. There Paul states "I thank my God, I speak with tongues more than ye all; yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding". Such people conclude that, as Paul preferred to speak with understanding in the church, yet spoke with tongues more than any of the Corinthians, he used tongues in private prayer, but note that Paul does not say "I pray with tongues more than ye all". He was not referring to prayer, he was referring to speaking in tongues, and this he did more than any of the Corinthians. Also it is wrong to conclude that if Paul preferred ordinary speech in the church, then he spoke in tongues in private. That would be stupid. Such would be impossible because "tongues are for a sign . . . . . to them that believe not" (I Cor. xiv. 22). They would hardly be a sign to unbelievers if they were practiced in private. No, the opposite of "in the church" is not "in private" but "out of the church" i.e. out and about on his travels, his missionary journeys. A quick read through the Acts of the Apostles will reveal that Paul was an energetic traveler and a keen witness to the truth in Christ. During the Acts period he made journeys all over the Roman Empire but always went to the Jewish synagogue first (e.g. Acts xiii. 14, 46; xiv. 1; xvii. 1, 2, 10 . . . . . xxviii. 17). What sign would he give to the Jews he met on his travels? How would he convince them that the nation had been wrong to reject Christ and to refuse to believe He was their Messiah? What sign would he give to them of their unbelief? Tongues was for that very purpose (I Cor. xiv. 22), but once an assembly had been formed, once a church had come together, how would tongues be used then? That is the issue of I Cor. xiv. Paul was concerned about the abuse of the gift, especially how an unbeliever might view it.

> "If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say that ye are mad?" (I Cor. xiv. 23).

This verse again illustrates that tongues could not be ecstatic utterances. If a visitor to Corinth called on the Christian assembly there and saw them gabbling and babbling in religious ecstasy, he wouldn't be impressed. Such behaviour was not uncommon in the temples of that time. If, however, he went into an assembly where they all spoke Greek then another got up and spoke another foreign language and then a third, and a fourth and a fifth . . . . . He would certainly think them mad, especially if he asked what each person was saying and no one knew. On the other hand, if a stranger entered the congregation and heard two or three messages in his own language and then heard an interpretation in the common to all Greek language, what an impact that would make, especially if he were a Jew.

Some have argued that I Cor. xiv. 1-5 refers to the private use of tongues but it does not. If the Apostle's point is that it is better to prophesy (i.e. speak forth about God) in ordinary, everyday speech, then to prophesy in private is nonsense. Thus if we keep rigidly, strictly and exclusively to Scripture we have to rule out the idea of tongues for prayer, either in public or in private. In private, tongues have no use whatsoever and ecstatic utterance and tongues of angels are foreign to the Biblical teaching. Tongues were the recognized languages of this world and people spoke in them, albeit to God (I.Cor.xiv.2), but for others to hear. In that way they were a sign (I Cor. xiv. 22).

Some have proposed that there are two types of tongues and that the ones used for praying are different from those used for the other purposes described in I Corinthians. From what is written above, this view is not tenable. Others have tried to argue that every believer should speak in tongues but such a view is completely contrary to Scripture. Certainly, during the Acts period, not everyone had the gift of tongues.

> "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit . . . . . for to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; . . . . . to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues" (I Cor. xii. 4, 8-10).

In concluding this chapter, Paul writes:

> "Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?" (xii. 29, 30)

Here is a list of rhetorical questions which all demand the answer, No!. No, not all spoke with tongues. If the teaching is as plain as this, why is it that some insist that all should speak in tongues? It is, perhaps, the result of compounded errors in their beliefs. If they fail to appreciate the change in God's administration subsequent to the rejection of Israel at Acts xxviii. 26-28, then they have believe that what was experienced during the Acts period should be experienced today. A wrong appreciation of the baptism and filling with the Holy Spirit leads some to think that evidence required to prove that the Spirit indwells a person. This evidence is sought not in the fruit of the Spirit (Gal. v. 22, 23) but in the miraculous signs and displays of power which were common during the Acts period and peculiar to it. Naturally these wonders are not forthcoming. It is hard to heal all the sick, let alone do it immediately. It is even harder to raise the dead, to drink poison or to survive venomous snake bites, but to manifest tongues is easy! Thus, some conclude, tongues is the sign which signifies that the Holy Spirit indwells a person. Such a view is unscriptural and dangerous. If people do speak in tongues today, is it ecstatic utterance, angelic languages or foreign languages, and by whose power do they perform this feat?

> "If glossolalia today are not explainable by demon power, they may be due to psychological suggestion and psychosomatic manifestation produced under high emotional excitability" (Merril Unger, New Testament Teaching on Tongues).
> "The desire for experience coupled with instruction, motivation and the approval of the peer group produces ecstatic speech. I have publicly said, 'Give me a group of people who will do what I tell them to do, sing, relax, anticipate and go through the right motions and it will be only a matter of time before some will speak ecstatically'." (George E. Gardiner, The Corinthian Catastrophe).

Gardiner speaks of "instruction" and going "through the right motions". Is it, then, possible to teach people to speak in tongues? Yes, and books have been written on it, and there are a variety of methods. In his book, Speaking in Tongues, Larry Christenson states:

> "In order to speak in tongues, you have to quit praying in English . . . . . you simply lapse into silence and resolve to speak not a syllable of any language you have ever learned. Your thoughts are focussed on Christ . . . . . you take no thought of what you are saying. As far as you are concerned it is just a series of sounds."

Stuart Allen discusses this in detail in his booklet Tongues Speaking Today—a Mark of Spirituality or Deception?. A comparison of this section of Christenson's book with that of certain publication produced by the Transcendental Meditation people is rather enlightening. There are also similarities between it and certain literature dealing with the religions of the East which go in for self-hypnosis and trances. Such similarity is not surprising, for speaking in ecstatic utterances is not uncommon among Indian fakirs and Moslem dervishes. It has also been experienced by Mormons and Irvingites and, as the Encyclopaedia Britannica puts it, by "savages and people of lower culture". There is nothing particularly Christian about the phenomenon and it can be produced from within, by learning how to do it. Group pressure or mass hysteria coupled with the right instruction will also result in the language of religious ecstasy. However, if the tongues (glossa) of the N.T. were to be a specific sign to the unbelieving people of Israel then they could not be ecstatic utterances or languages of angels. They had to be recognized languages (dialektos), and this is exactly what they were, as is clearly demonstrated in the only passage which gives full details of the phenomenon, Acts ii. 1-11. Other passages of Scripture must be interpreted in the light of that chapter and not in the light of present-day experiences.

Some state that many who speak in tongues nowadays do so in foreign languages but this is extremely dubious. In one issue of the charismatic magazine, Renewal, the general secretary of the Assemblies of God (Pentecostal) Churches mentions one of their publications which contains seventy-five documented cases of tongues in foreign languages. The implication is that these were unusual and that the vast majority of tongues are ecstatic utterance, but what about these foreign language tongues? Are they genuine, a gift from the Holy Spirit? Some will argue that they are not because in translation some say nothing about God or Christ or anything religious. Others contain blasphemy and these can easily be ruled out, but what about those manifestations which have praised God? Does that imply the source was the Holy Spirit?

In Acts xvi. 16, 17 a "damsel possessed with a spirit of divination" met Paul and Luke and followed them, saying, "These men are the servants of the most high God, which shew unto us the way of salvation". Nothing could have been more true yet it grieved Paul (verse 18). Commenting on these verses, Jessie Penn-Lewis in War on the Saints, writes:

> "When the spirit of divination spoke the truth that Paul and Silas were the servants of God, it was to suggest the lie that Paul and Silas derived their power from the same source as the girl under the evil spirit's power. The devil and his wicked spirits will speak, or use, ninety-nine parts of truth to float one lie."

The conclusion is that tongues speaking today can be learnt or self-induced, in the case of ecstatic utterances, but with foreign languages, without denying that these too may be psychosomatic, the likelihood is that the power originates from Satan. Some people are shocked by such a suggestion. They think it impossible that he can influence believers but he managed to deceive Peter (Matthew xvi. 23) and I Timothy iv. 1-3 is addressed to believers. Also during the Acts period the gift of discerning spirits was given (I Cor. xii. 10) as well as the test of I John iv. 1-3. These would not have been necessary if believers could not have been influenced and deceived by Satan and his spirits.

In Pentecostalism—Is it of God, Man or Satan, William Campbell suggests that the test of I John iv. 1-3 is applicable today but he fails to appreciate that such a gift was part of the Acts Period dispensation. When the Jews at Rome rejected Christ then that nation was laid on one side (Acts xxviii. 25-27). The miracles, signs and displays of power used by God to encourage them to repent ceased. That included the gift of tongues, the discernment of spirits and the tests of spirits (I John iv. 1-3). Now we have a completed Scripture and can see the whole picture.

Thus if we, who are Gentiles, go looking for things pertaining to the Jews we will open ourselves to deception. Initially it may be self-deception, as with self-induced ecstatic tongues, but it could grow into Satanic deception, with speech in a foreign language. Will God allow Satan to go that far? Rev. xiii. records how the false prophet is allowed to make fire come down from heaven in the sight of men (verse 13), a copy of the O.T. miracle which confirmed God's existence and His blessing. A copy of the Acts period miracle of tongues must be expected for he "deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast" (Rev. xiii. 14). Present-day charismatic movements are setting the scene for that future great deception.

No.13. Tongues, they shall cease (I Cor. xiii. 8).
pp. 174 - 180

It seems appropriate at this point in the series to consider the very important but controversial verses 8-10 of I Corinthians xiii.:

> "Charity (love) never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away."

In these verses, Paul takes three of the Acts period miraculous signs and states that they will cease. Prophecy was not exclusively to do with the future. The inspired prophet spoke of God saying what He had done in the past, was doing at the moment or what He would do in the future. Tongues were languages of various parts of the earth and were for a sign to the unbelieving Jew (I Cor. xiv. 21, 22). Knowledge was the Acts period gift which fulfilled the Lord's words of Matt. x. 17-20. Paul takes these three as representatives of the long list of miraculous signs dealt with in I Cor. xii. All these signs, prophecy, tongues, knowledge, healing, interpretation, etc., were to cease. The unfailing, never-ending gift of love was the pre-eminent quality which the Corinthians, and we, should seek to practice.

These three verses of I Cor. xiii. are open to a wide variety of interpretations, and it is enlightening to consider each one.

(1) When the Church is a unity, Miracles will return.

This view seems strange in the light of I Cor. xiii. 10. "But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away". That is, the evidential miraculous signs will cease when "that which is perfect is come". Whatever that may be, and whenever it may be, it is obviously something good and beneficial, as true unity would be. One could almost argue that if true unity ever came about then there wouldn't be the need for miracles, but returning to the Scriptures, what about the Acts period? It abounded in miracles, yet it lacked unity. The most striking example of this is found in the opening chapters of this very epistle.

> "For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you. Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul: and I of Apollos: and I of Cephas: and I of Christ" (I.Cor.i.11,12)

This was written to a group who came "behind in no gift" (I Cor. i. 7). They had severe divisions and there was great disunity, but they had all the gifts. Further problems can be seen with Ananias and Sapphira (Acts v. 1-11), who tried to deceive the assembly. Even Paul and Barnabas were so divided over John Mark "that they departed one from the other" (Acts xv. 36-39). Then there is Peter who "withdrew and separated himself" from the Gentiles (Gal. ii. 11-13) and Barnabas joined him. It is a fundamental truth that "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. iii. 23). Thus there has never been a time when human beings did not disagree. For us the unity has been made by the Holy Spirit; we have to guard it (Eph. iv. 3), and by and large we do a poor job. So the view that miracles will return when the Christian Church is a unity is not supported by Scripture.

(2) Miracles cease when Christ return.

This view affirms that miracles should abound from the day of Pentecost, throughout this age and dispensation, right up to the return of Christ, when they should cease. I.Cor.xiii.10 "when that which is perfect is come", refers to the second coming of Christ, so it is claimed. However the word 'come' is elthe which has nothing in common with parousia, the word for the Lord's second coming. Also, "that which is perfect" could hardly refer to a person since it is neuter, but we need not resort to Greek grammar to show the view is unscriptural. Heb. vi. 5 refers to the miracles of the Acts period and describes them as a foretaste of the age to come, the Millennial age.

> ". . . . . tasted the good word of God, and the powers (miracles) of the world (age) to come" (Heb. vi. 5).

That millennial age is brought in by Christ at His return and miracles will abound. This is clear from various portions of the prophets. For example: healing—Isa. lviii. 8, Jer. xxx. 17, Mal. iv. 2; judgment (as experienced by Ananias & Sapphira)—Isa.lxv.20; prophecy—Joel ii. 28, 29. So it is not true that miracles will cease when the Lord Jesus Christ returns. It is the very opposite. They will abound.

(3) Miracles cease when the Bible was completed.

To any unbiased observer it is obvious that we do not live in the days of the Acts of the Apostles. The miracles, then so common, are not around us. This has led some to view the writing of the New Testament with scepticism, suggesting it to be exaggerated, in error and not true. It has caused others, who believe in the inspiration and accuracy of the Bible as God's Word, to seek another explanation. The view that the miracles ceased upon the completion of the Bible is, perhaps the most commonly held explanation and Merril Unger is its great advocate. His style is not easy to follow.

> "But when that which is perfect is come (Greek to teleion, the completed and final thing, which means 'the New Testament Scriptures'; the neuter in the Greek denotes neither Christ nor His second advent, both of which thoughts are foreign to the context), then that which is in part (partial or piecemeal revelation through the gift of directly inspired prophecy and knowledge before the New Testament was given) shall be done > away with (kata gethesetai, shall be superseded, rendered unnecessary and meaningless, because no longer needed and so shall be cancelled and done away with)" (Merril Unger, New Testament Teaching on Tongues).

There are problems with this view. What does he mean by the completed and final New Testament Scriptures? Does he mean once the last writer of the N.T. had been inspired and committed the message to paper? That is dated, traditionally about 90A.D. but J. A. T. Robinson argues sensibly for a date pre-70A.D. Or is Unger referring to when the canon of Scripture was eventually decided upon, some 200 or so years later? It is clear from the writers of the second and third centuries A.D. that the miracles of the Acts period were not in abundance but we reject this view by what is recorded in Scripture. Not only do we find no reference to any of the Acts period's miraculous signs in the later epistles (Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, I & II Timothy, Titus, Philemon) but it is evident that immediate, universal healing had ceased (Phil. ii. 26, 27; ITim.v.23; II Tim. iv. 20). When imprisoned in Acts, Peter was miraculously freed (Acts xii. 6-11) but after, Paul spent years chained to a Roman guard. The gift of knowledge (Acts.iv.13) ceased, to be replaced by the command to study (II Tim. ii. 15). The conclusion must be that prophecies, tongues and knowledge, as well as the other Acts period miracles ceased before the completion of the N.T., let alone before the canon was settled. Miracles and displays of power finished before the last books of the N.T. were written.

(4) "That which is perfect" refers to "the mystery" of Eph. iii. 9.

At Gen. xii., the Lord took Abram and promised that he would be the father of a great nation which was to take the message of salvation to the other nations of the world. There was to be a kingdom upon the earth with miraculous physical blessings. For the next 2,000 years this people were the centre of the Lord's attention but their rejection of Christ and their refusal to repent at the call of Peter and Paul in the Acts period caused the judgment of Acts xxviii. 25-27 to be announced. But what was God going to do next? He revealed a mystery, the secret which he had hidden in Himself (Eph. iii. 9). He would go direct to the Gentiles (Acts xxviii. 28): there would be spiritual blessings (Ephesians i. 3) with eternal life in the heavenly places (Eph. ii. 6). The Jews would no longer have special privileges (Eph. ii. 12-17). The Jews and the Gentiles would be fellowheirs (Eph. iii. 6). The substance of this secret (mystery) is found in Eph. i., ii., iii. and Col. i., where Paul wrote:

> ". . . . . the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfil the Word of God; even the mystery (secret) which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to the saints" (Col. i. 25, 26).

The view of some is that the expression "that which is perfect" refers to the revelation of this secret (mystery) as the miracles ceased at the rejection of Israel at Acts.xxviii.25-27, which was when this revelation was given to Paul in his Roman prison. There can be no doubt about the fact that the evidential miracles and external displays of power were signs for the Jews and that when they were, as a nation, set aside by God at the end of the Acts, such tokens were no longer needed. However, it was impossible for Paul to have had this secret in his mind at that time simply because he didn't know it. God had not revealed it to him. Speaking of the mystery of Christ, Paul writes that in other ages it "was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles" (Eph. iii. 5). Similarly, as quoted above, Col. i. 25 states that "the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to His saints". That secret (mystery) having been "hid in God" (Eph.iii.9) could not have been known by Paul until God revealed it to him in his Roman prison, the time to which the now refers. Paul could not have known, when writing Corinthians, the secret of what God would do if the Jewish nation was rejected. Years after writing I.Corinthians, Paul wrote Romans, the last epistle he wrote during the Acts period, and in that it is obvious that he still saw the Jews playing the dominant role (e.g. Romans i. 16; ii. 10; iii. 1; xi. 1, 18, etc.). Thus the secret of Ephesians, with its absolute equality between Jew and Gentile in all things, must have been revealed to Paul after the writings of Romans. Thus "that which is perfect" of I Cor. xiii. 10 cannot refer to the revelation of the secret (mystery) of Ephesians.

(5) What was in Paul's mind in I Cor. xiii.?

One of the reasons why believers have trouble in agreeing on the meaning of a passage of Scripture is "backwards thinking:" not backward thinking but backwards thinking, retrospective thinking. It is so easy to read into an O.T. passage some truth not contained in it and not revealed until the New Testament. We can attribute to a verse in the Gospels something which was not known until after the Lord had ascended. We can read into an Acts period epistle knowledge which wasn't revealed until after the Jewish nation had been set aside and the secret (mystery) of Ephesians revealed. Thus in dealing with any passage, and especially those which are controversial and confusing, we should attempt to put ourselves in the writer's place. We should look on the passage prospectively from his point of view, and assume only the knowledge of God's plan that he had at that time. All too often we view the passage retrospectively, looking back from our point of view, assuming all the knowledge that is contained in the completed Scriptures.

Paul wrote I Corinthians during the Acts period and those alive at the time, knew that it was possible for Christ to return even then. This was why he wrote those controversial words on not marrying in I Cor. vii. 7: 7-11. Later he explained this and wrote:

> "I suppose therefore that this is good for the present distress, I say, that it is good for a man so to be . . . . . But this I say, brethren, the time is short; it remaineth, that both they that have wives be as though they had none" (I Cor. vii. 26, 29).

These Corinthian saints were "waiting for the coming (revelation) of our Lord Jesus Christ" (I Cor. i. 7) and in Rom. xiii. 12 Paul wrote "the night is far spent, the day is at hand". John stated "It is the last time (literally last hour)" (I John ii. 18) and James said "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" (James v. 8). In his epistle Peter wrote "the end of all things is at hand" (I Pet. iv. 7) but it is his speech in Acts that clears up any queries as to how the Acts period could be "the last hour":

> "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing (restoration) shall come from the presence of the Lord; and He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you" (Acts iii. 19, 20).

If the Jewish nation repented, "He shall send Jesus Christ". To encourage that nation to repent, a foretaste of the Millennial miracles was given them (Heb. vi. 5). The gift of tongues was a special sign, signifying to the Jews their unbelief (I Cor. xiv. 21, 22). Some of the Jews were cast off (Rom. xi. 17), and Gentiles brought in to provoke the nation to fruitfulness (Rom. xi. 11). Would the nation respond? Would the olive tree of Israel blossom and bring forth abundant fruit? If they did, then Christ would return, miracles would abound and proliferate right throughout the Millennium, right to its end. Then they would cease at the creation of the new heavens and the new earth. Is that the goal that Paul had in mind in I Cor. xiii. 10? "When that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part (the miracles) shall be done away."

The word for 'perfect' is teleios and The Companion Bible note on the word is interesting.

> teleios = that which has reached its end. From telos end. Latin finis, nothing beyond: hence perfect, in the sense of initiated.

In his Critical Lexicon and Concordance, Dr. E. W. Bullinger has:

> teleios = which has reached its end, term or limit: hence complete, perfect, full, wanting nothing, with special reference to the end for which it was initiated.

In I Cor. xiii. 10 the Greek is to teleion i.e. the perfect or the end, not an end. Thus we must ask if Paul could be thinking of the end of this earth which, at the end of the Millennium, will have completed the purpose for which it was created and then:

> "I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away . . . . . and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away" (Rev. xxi. 1, 4).

Neither will this new creation need miracles of Judgment (Isa. lxv. 20; Acts v. 1-11), for Peter states that in it "dwelleth righteousness" (II Pet. iii. 13). All this follows the time of the last of the resurrections (Rev. xx. 13) and certainly Paul is referring to resurrection life in I Cor. xiii. 12, 13:

> "For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face:
> now I know in part, but then shall I know even as also I am known.
> And now abideth faith, hope, charity (love), these three;
> but the greatest of these is charity (love)."

Why is love greater than faith and hope? "Without faith it is impossible to please Him" (Heb. xi. 6) is a very strong statement and "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" (Heb. xi. 1). When the believer's hope of eternal life has been realized through resurrection, hope will no longer have any role to play, but neither will faith. On the day of resurrection, when the redeemed stand before God, all things that have been hoped for will be seen. Thus faith will no longer have a role, but love . . . . .!

At present we are encouraged to get "to know the love of Christ, which passeth (surpasseth) knowledge" (Eph. iii. 19). Certainly that love far exceeds human comprehension but when we no longer have the limitations of this frail body and limited mind, then we can start to learn much, much more about divine love. Human love is such that a person will die for a friend, a good man (Rom. v. 7), yet God's love was such that in Christ He died for the ungodly, the sinners, for those who were enemies (Rom. v. 6, 8, 10). This is above human comprehension, but not above human gratitude and response.

It does seem as if this explanation of I Cor. xiii. 8-10 is along the right lines for when Paul has dealt with tongues in I Cor. xiv. he takes up the theme of resurrection in chapter xv. There he does look into the far future, to the days described in Revelation:

> "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at His coming. Then cometh the end (to telos), when He shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when He shall have put down all rule and all authority and power" (I.Cor.xv.22-24).

This comes after the rebellion of Rev. xx. 7-9 and it seems possible that this is the meaning of "when that which is perfect (the end) is come, then that which is in part shall be done away" (I Cor. xiii. 10). It is the end of the Millennium, the end of this present heavens and earth. It is looking for the new heavens and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.

The fact that miracles ceased a few years after Paul wrote I Corinthians was due to the hardness of the hearts of the people of Israel (Acts xxviii. 27). They continued to reject the apostles' plea to repent and, as a nation, they were set on one side for a period of time. In the future the Lord will again start to work with them and fulfil all the promises made to the fathers.

The Second Epistle to Peter.

No.4. Chapter ii.
p. 20

In Deut. xiii. 1-5 God says He will permit false prophets to show signs and wonders in order to test and prove them. Peter says "as then so now". Compare I John iv. 1:

> "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world."

Satan is busy in all ages and trims his snares to contemporary conditions. What pitfalls does he put in our path today? Instead of the all-wise God and Creator originating a perfect family of creatures and suitable environment in which to live and enjoy life with all the senses of their bodies, we are told that over millions of years dissatisfied living matter managed to change little by little its own body by thought, in order that its offspring might have a better chance to survive!

Paul in Rom. i. traces the downfall and corruption of man. In verse 23 he says the glory (or supernatural demonstration—this is true, compare and study other usages of the word glory) of the incorruptible God was changed into an image made like unto corruptible man . . . . . Today the power of creation is not said to be in a golden calf but in (for example they say) a bull who seeks a safer form to survive the attacks of his enemies or the hardships of his environment. The evolutionists use the terms "trial and error" and "survival of the fittest". Such terms imply the creature doing the planning, for surely they do not pin on God this haphazard process.

Paul in Rom. i. traces the downfall and corruption of man. In verse 23 he says the glory (or supernatural demonstration—this is true, compare and study other usages of the word glory) of the incorruptible God was changed into an image made like unto corruptible man . . . . . Today the power of creation is not said to be in a golden calf but in (for example they say) a bull who seeks a safer form to survive the attacks of his enemies or the hardships of his environment. The evolutionists use the terms "trial and error" and "survival of the fittest". Such terms imply the creature doing the planning, for surely they do not pin on God this haphazard process.

Continuing in Rom. i. we find that although they knew God once, because they changed God's truth into a lie, he gave them up and what happened? They twisted the ordained plan of man and woman being one flesh for the basis of the perfect family.

What happened to them then (see Rom. i.) is happening today. We quote from an article in The Daily Telegraph of 22.6.70:

> "Love between two men 'can achieve a pure and glorious relationship' the Bishop of Southwark the Rt. Rev. Mervyn Stockwood wrote yesterday in a diocesan newsletter."

Whatever the Bishop intended to convey, the homosexual camp interprets it as a green light to them. The article continues:

> "The Bishop's comment were greeted enthusiastically by the Gay Christian Movement. Its secretary said: We are grateful to the Bishop of Southwark who appears to endorse our views that love should be fully expressed in personal sexual relationships."

We are only too ready to agree that the news media represent the extremes, but the silence of ecclesiastical authority on what God called repeatedly an "abomination" is significant.

> "And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you: whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not" (II Pet. ii. 2 and 3).

We think of the many religious cults of our day and the facile success they have in raising funds and acquiring property and followers. We think of the frequent callers at our doors urging Bible study but denying the deity of our Saviour and thus undermining His qualification to be our redeemer. All these contribute to make for some "the way of truth evil spoken of".

What other ploys of Satan do we find? Generally we might say formal worship ceremonies and ordinances usurp the rightful place of teaching and exposition of and from the Bible. Paul with final instructions to Timothy says, "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine" (II Tim. iv. 2).

Peter turns from warning of the dangers of apostasy to examples of judgment and punishment exacted by God on past generations of men and angels who rebelled and followed not the commands and ordained way of life for their own habitation.

> "For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment; and spared not the old world, but saved Noah the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly" (ii. 4 and 5).

We have no specific statement of the nature of this sin of the old world. The most certain inference is that Satan introduced his seed into the world, ". . . . . the sons of God (angels) saw the daughter of men that they were fair, and they took them wives of which they chose" (Gen. vi. 2). "The angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation" (Jude 6). This violation of the divine designed habitat of these angels seemed to have corrupted the old world so that "the wickedness of man was great in the earth"

(Gen. vi. 5), and moreover only Noah was "perfect in his generations" (Gen. vi. 9) that is uncorrupted by Satan's angels.

> "And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into ashes condemned them with an overthrow, making them an example unto those that after should live ungodly; and delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation (way of living) of the wicked: (For that righteous man dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds;)" (ii. 6-8).

Note the word "their unlawful deeds". The men of Sodom were not interested in Lot's two daughters but pressed for the men who had entered the house (angels) (Gen. xix. 8). There were not found ten righteous men in Sodom (Gen. xviii. 32) so contagious and corrupting was the sin of sodomy. Whatever we may think of the act itself the only criterion with which we should be concerned is that it contravened the laws of God then even as it does today.

> "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished: but chiefly them that walk after the flesh in lust of uncleanness, and despise government. Presumptuous are they, selfwilled, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities" (ii. 9-10).

Here is solemn warning for judgment and punishment to come for all sinners from the beginning of time to the final day. An even more surprising and drastic warning was uttered by our Lord. Christ sent His disciples to herald the coming of the kingdom of heaven to the Jewish nation (Matt. x. 7). Those who neglect to study the words of Christ given to the Apostle Paul for us Gentiles in his epistles should consider:

> "Whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet. Verily (great emphasis) I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city" (Matt. x. 14-15).

Think of it. It will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha (that God destroyed by earthquake and fire) than for those, who, given a proper chance to hear and understand God's call to them, turned their backs on their Creator's messengers. God in the O.T. has given us much information of Himself, His attributes, character and intentions which are wise and righteous. In the N.T. He has recorded the work of His Son and interpreted for us its message and application to us, together with our own specific hope in resurrection. It is this record we are warned not to neglect. Praise and worship without knowledge must be empty and unacceptable to Him.

Looking back to verse 10 there is a reference to government. Communal control and discipline are necessary and so are supported and endorsed by God. Psa. lxxxii. 1 indicates He is at the back of earthly judges and magistrates ("gods" in the text). Our Lord said: "Render unto the things that are Caesar's". The coin with its inscription was part of the Roman administration. The indictment of verse 10 is against those who have such a proud and foolish opinion of themselves that they despise or have contempt for the restraint of the law. This is another area of departure from God's recipe for good order and peace, the fruits of such departure are rife in vandalism, abuse of social benefits and tax evasion.

"Whereas angels, which are greater in power and might, bring not railing accusation against them before the Lord. But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption" (ii. 11 and 12).

Peter and some of the other apostles had revelations of the powers and limitations of the angels which are hidden from us. Of those denounced in verse 12 we cannot therefore give examples. Certain it is that offences like those of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts v.) were swiftly judged and punished. The present age of grace has no counterpart.

"And shall receive the reward of unrighteousness, as they that count it pleasure to riot in the day time. Spots they are and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings while they feast with you; having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls: an heart they have exercised with covetous practices; cursed children" (ii. 13 and 14).

No.6. ii. 15 - iii. 4.
pp. 58 - 60

For some in those days who were in possession of a gift of the Holy Spirit there may well have been a temptation to hold superiority over others, and this in turn enticed them to exact pecuniary advantage or sway over the opposite sex. Satan knows how to fit the temptation to the character of the one deceived. Verse 15 quotes the example of Balaam (see Numb. xxii.) who, says Peter, "loved the wages of unrighteousness". The privilege of participation in the Lord's plans devolves on us great responsibility, but also severe judgment for betrayal of trust. In the mercy of God we are at times kept from sin as Balaam by the voice of his ass. Let us not hesitate to accept the truth of this miracle, for Peter by inspiration makes use of it as a valid example of God's power and mercy.

"Which have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the way of Balaam the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness; but was rebuked for his iniquity: the dumb ass speaking with man's voice forbad the madness of the prophet" (ii. 15, 16).

Peter now continues to denounce those who preaching to believers with a great show of spirituality, nevertheless have no virtue in their message and rather are leading their flock into paths that appeal to the flesh.

"These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest; to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever. For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, those that were clean escaped from them who live in error. While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage. For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning" (ii. 17-20).

Paul had occasion to write to the Galatians on this very failing. In Gal. v. 16-25 the Apostle lists the fruit of walking in the flesh and a nasty list it is. By contrast he lists the fruits of walking in the spirit: love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance (moderation). Faith initially is the conviction that a premise is true and always imposes on such a believer the responsibility to ensure that his future life is in harmony with that discovered aspect of truth. To do otherwise is to live a lie and nothing is more damaging to the character of an individual. Christ in Luke xi. 34 confirms this by saying "The light of the body is the eye: therefore when thine eye is single (free from defect or double vision), thy whole body (daily walk and direction) is full of light (clear discernment); but when thine eye is evil (apart from God), thy body also is full of darkness (confusion)".

> "For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteouness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them. But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire" (ii. 21, 22).

The Apostle Paul runs on a parallel path when he writes to the Hebrews:

> "For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries" (Heb. x. 26, 27).
>
> "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good Word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put Him to an open shame" (Heb. vi. 4-6).

Peter closes his teaching of this aspect of apostasy by two examples of nature. We wonder if God implanted in two of His created animals this retrograde character in order to teach us a lesson.

Chapter iii.

Here is, as it were, another appeal to his brethren to keep before them and continually turn over in their minds the Old Testament and his own witness and ministry. Such is our own present urgent need. We need every day the Bread of Life and like all food we need to masticate it well with the saliva of our body in order that it can be so digested and profit every part of our body. The analogy of type and antitype was well chosen by God and we need to mark it well.

> "This second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance: that ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour: knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of His coming? For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation" (iii. 1-4).

Peter warns his compatriots that there were those who sought to sap the faith of the believer by setting forth a false history of the world saying "all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation". The same creed finds an echo from the present day school of evolutionists. We quote from The Genesis Flood by J. C. Whitcomb, Jr., Th.D. and H. M. Morris, Ph.D.:

> "Even evangelical Christians, though still professing belief in the divine validity of Scripture, have often capitulated to uniformitarian scholarship, denying the universality of the Flood and, with the denial, thereby sacrificing its mighty evangelistic witness to a world in rebellion against its Creator. (A footnote to this reads) Uniformitarianism is the belief that existing physical processes, acting essentially as at present, are sufficient to account for all past changes and for the present state of the astronomic, geologic and biologic universe. The principle of uniformity in present processes is both scientific and Scriptural (Gen.8:22) but comes into conflict with Biblical revelation when utilized to deny the possibility of past or future miraculous suspension or alteration of those processes by their Creator" (page 20).

No.7. iii. 5 - 10.
pp. 79, 80

The Second Advent of Christ is not preached or made the subject of warning as much as it should be. Neither is its connection with Israel sufficiently emphasized. We need to remember that the word lust has not necessarily an application to sex or fleshly desires. It means a strong desire and as such can also have reference to doctrinal quirks and gimmicks that have little to do with the will of God.

> "For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the Word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water: whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished. But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same Word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men" (iii. 5-7).

Peter by inspiration affirms the fact of a universal flood and uses it as proof of a future judgment on the world by fire. Peter uses the word "reserved", the Greek for which is often translated "keep". We have here stated the supreme sovereignty of God in the enactment of His foreordained will. We are given signs, if we have eyes to see, when these future acts of judgment will come but the exact date and moment is hid in God. Even when Christ was on earth He affirmed that only His Father knew the day and the hour (Matt. xxiv. 36). Jude (verse 6) refers to the angels that kept not their first estate "reserved . . . . . unto judgment". All the progeny of Adam await their respective day of judgment and here in verse 7 even the present heavens and earth are kept for that terrible moment of destruction. The details we shall find in verse 10 well accord with what we have seen and heard described of minor atomic explosions. Russia and the U.S.A. we understand are primed with thousands of missiles capable of destroying a great part of the earth in a moment of time. Our great comfort is in the Word "kept" or "reserved" in verse 7. This holocaust will only happen when God is ready and it will be under His control.

The day of judgment we believe will be a day long prepared and planned by God. His written Word we also believe will be present and play a major part in convictions and condemnation or approval and reward.

> "But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. The Lord is not slack concerning His promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up" (iii. 8-10).

Verse 8 "One day is with the Lord as a thousand years". How often have these words been used to twist the 6 days creation into a longer period of time. It should be noted that if you continue the text the reverse is stated. The true conception of time is outside man's limited understanding. Before God created this world He knew how each of the millions of mankind that would be born would act and respond to the dictates of conscience or divine revelation. Because He possesses such supernatural foreknowledge He could and has planned how He will deal with the world and its inhabitants throughout the ages to come.

The concordance gives 10 occurrence of katabole in phrases "before or since the foundation of the world" (Matt. xiii. 35; xxv. 24; Luke xi. 50; John xvii. 24; Eph. i. 4; Heb. iv. 3; ix. 26; I Pet. i. 20; Rev. xiii. 8; xvii. 8). The Ephesian reference is "According as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world". If you look up the other references you will find they are all important milestones in His eternal purpose. They prove the miraculous ability of God to foreknow how we and all others will behave. Remember we are free, He does not manipulate us to make it come right, although He will, when necessary, overrule events. All His other creatures apart from man in their natural state behave perfectly in their planned and predictable fashion. Only man has a free choice to do otherwise. God desires the worship of man from a free and willing heart. It is for and to this end that the painful probation period for angels and men has to proceed through the ages. The parable of the sower and his seed shows that only a small part of the seed sown will produce the desired harvest and even this will be of varying quality and success. But success there will be, thanks be to God through His Son the Lord Jesus Christ.

No.8. iii. 11 - 18.
pp. 119, 120

In verse 9 Peter writes that God is "not willing" that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. The Apostle Paul had the same message in Acts xvii. 30 "The times of ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent". These men spoke by revelation. We dare not write what we think God intends. We can only point to the Scriptures. Shall we expound the word "perish" that Peter uses in verse 9? We know that in this world we all die so that perish cannot in this context have reference to life in the flesh. The answer seems to be in Rom. x 6, "The righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, Say not in thine heart, who shall ascend into heaven? etc.". Christ has died for us and has risen for our justification. This is God's positive answer recorded in His Word. We are not called upon to explore or speculate the possibilities of alternative rebellion.

> "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner (sort of) persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness" (iii. 11).

The vision of God's future and final judgment of this earth and its inhabitants together with the revelation of the desire of God that there should be via resurrection a future for those who respond and repent, calls for those addressed in Peter's letter to consider immediately their future way of life. They are reminded that they are under the continual scrutiny of the Lord for their qualification to have a place in their destined sphere in resurrection. This challenging question calls for just as urgent an answer today as when Peter wrote it all those years ago. Shall we drift on from day to day putting off our spiritual stocktaking and reappraisement of priorities until the question is forgotten? Time does absolutely nothing for us. Peter continues:

> "Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. Nevertheless we, according to His promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless" (iii. 12-14).

Peter gives a second knock on the door of warning concerning the coming dissolution of the world in heat but adds the revelation that God has in store, a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. If righteousness is the key word for this new habitation Peter exhorts his brethren to let their present lives be in harmony with those conditions now. The word diligent implies using haste or speed in adjusting one's way of life to these requirements of perfection.

> "And account that the longsuffering of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul also according to the wisdom given unto him hath written unto you; as also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction" (iii. 15, 16).

Needless to say with Paul's second commission after Israel had been set aside, his ministry took a divergent line from a dispensational aspect from Peter's ministry. It was possibly the ministry concerning the Church of the One Body that found Peter at a loss when he says "hard to be understood".

Paul's new ministry where no place for the Jew as a Jew resided, must have met intense opposition. The destiny of that calling "Far above all" would have sparked off much Satanic opposition. Jewish antagonism would also have been rife when it was seen that such a calling had no place for Jewish heritage.

> "Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness" (iii. 17).

Peter in this letter has discharged the task committed to him by His beloved Lord. Peter has exhorted and fed the sheep and the lambs with their ordained pasture, the Word of Life. The need for remembrance, exercise and experience of the things taught has been pressed. He has given warning of those who would twist the Word and entice them back to their old ways. Finally he calls for his brethren to grow in grace and knowledge. Inertia and neglect quickly open the gates to competing interests and the snares of the enemy. Christ in Rev. iii. 15 expressed an abhorrence of being lukewarm. May we too burn with zeal for the riches of God's Word . . . . .

> "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To Him be glory both now and for ever. Amen" (iii. 18).

The Epistle to the ROMANS.

No.9. v. 5 - 12.
pp. 1 - 4

The climax of the blessings that result from justification by faith is found in Rom.v.5:

> "And hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us."

In chapters ix. 33 and x. 11 the Apostle quotes the Septuagint of Isa. xxviii. 16, "Whosoever believeth on Him shall not be ashamed". A hope that is not realized does lead to shame and embarrassment, but a hope based on God's promises is certain of fulfillment, and believers have the God-given assurance that His love is poured out in their hearts by the work of the Holy Spirit. That exceeding love (Eph. iii. 19) which did not find its cause in any action on our part:

> "But God commendeth (or proves) His love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. v. 8).

God gave no less than Himself in the Person of His Son on behalf of sinners. This is the consistent testimony of the New Testament. He died for the ungodly (verse 6) (compare John x. 11; Rom. viii. 32; xiv. 15; I Cor. xv. 3; II Cor. v. 15; Gal. i. 3, 4; Eph. v. 2, 25; I Thess. v. 9, 10; I Tim. ii. 5, 6 <and see i. 15>; Titus ii. 11, 12, 14; Heb. ii. 9, 10, 14; I Pet. ii. 21-24; iii. 18; I John iii. 16). God's love is not just an emotion. Real love is shown by the constant spending and giving of one's self for others without any thought of return, and when that giving goes so far as giving of a life for others, that is not a common human experience as verse 7 of Rom. v. testifies.

But God did this very thing in the Person of Christ for His enemies, not His friends, for "While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (verse 8) and the glorious result is:

> "Since we have been justified by His blood, how much more shall we be saved from God's wrath through Him" (verse 9, N.I.V.).

This verse reminds us again, as in Rom. iii. 25 that the shed blood speaks of life laid down on our behalf as a sacrifice for our sin, and it is only in this way that a thrice holy God can justify sinners! (Rom. iii. 23-26) thus exempting them from condemnation and wrath:

> "For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by His life" (verse 10).

Colossians i. 21 is parallel to this:

> "And you, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath He reconciled in the body of His flesh through death."

It is in man that this hostility and estrangement is found, not in God, for it is He Who takes the initiative in His great love in providing "the redemption which is in Christ Jesus".

> "For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by His life. And not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by Whom we have now received the atonement" (verse 10, 11).

A new word, reconciliation, comes in here, which gives us another aspect of Christ's redeeming work. Reconciliation pre-supposes enmity, that of rebels against God, and this reconciling work cancels this enmity, in the same way as justification deals with sinners who have broken God's laws and are arraigned before Him as Judge.

It is important to realize that the Authorized Version's "atonement" in verse 11 means reconciliation, for in 1611 the word stood for "at-one-ment" (to make at one), which meaning it has now lost, and all modern translations correctly render the Greek word used, reconciliation. God is always the Reconciler in the N.T. and man the object of His reconciliation. The "life" of Christ in verse 10 is His resurrection life. The perfect earthly life of the Lord Jesus by itself is never brought forward as the basis for salvation, but His resurrection life is, as Rom. iv. 25 has already stressed; the resurrection of Christ is therefore an integral part of the gospel, and this is confirmed in chapter x. 9 and I Cor. xv. 3, 4.

It is important to note that the doctrine of reconciliation in its various aspects is confined to the ministry of the Apostle Paul. It is in his ministry alone that we find that God's reconciliation deals with:

(1) the alienation from God, in Adam, apart from personal sins (Rom. v. 12).
(2) the alienation from God, as Gentile nations (Rom. i. 18 and xi. 15).
(3) the alienation from God, by sins committed (II Cor. v.).
(4) the alienation perpetuated by the distinction of circumcision and uncircumcision which has been abolished in "the new man" of Eph. ii. 13-16.
(5) the alienation of the whole body of Christ from its destined sphere of blessing "in the heavenlies, far above principalities and powers" (Col. i.).

The first of these, that sets aside the alienation introduced by Adam, lie immediately before us in the new section of Romans that covers v. 12 - viii. 39 which deals with Adam and Christ. The words of C. H. Welch are to the point here:

> "We now enter the great inner section of this epistle . . . . . we leave behind the question of sins for the deeper question of sin, the disobedience to the law of Sinai, for the one transgression of the garden of Eden. Moses and Abraham fade from view, and Adam is revealed as the channel of sin, death and its dominion. Here we are to learn the utter ruin of the creature as something deeper than the failure of the Gentile under the law of conscience, or of the Jew under the law of Moses. Here we shall plumb the depths of the depravity of our nature; here we shall come face to face with the dread fact that in our flesh dwelleth no good thing. This is a more terrible revelation than that of Rom.iii.12. There we read that there is none that doeth good; here we are to learn that, apart from deeds altogether, there is not any that are good, or that have any hope or > possibility, in themselves of pleasing God. The cry of Rom. vii. 24 "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" will startle us, as though we heard the echo of our own heart's cry beat back to us" (Just and the Justifier, p.102).

The argument that the Apostle Paul now begins to develop concerning Adam and the human race shows that he accepted the facts recorded in Gen. i.-iii. as events that really happened:

> "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sins; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Rom. v. 12).

The ten verses that follow contain the word "one" no less than 12 times. There must be a reason for this emphasis. What we shall discover by careful study in the new section of the epistle before us is that there is something deeper and fuller than substitution, and that is identification, which is set forth in chapter vi. and shown in such phrases as "baptized into His death", "planted together in the likeness of His death", "our old man crucified with Him", "dead with Christ". These statements require substantiation by something more intimate than substitution, and that is identification with Christ. This is another aspect of truth that is peculiar to the ministry of Paul.

The doctrine of identification must be shown to exist as a fact, and this is demonstrated by the Scriptural doctrine of the organic unity of the human race. The essential oneness of the race with Adam is the consistent note of Rom. v. 11-21. Paul included this in his address to the Athenians, "He hath made of one (blood) all nations of men" (Acts xvii. 26). Adam was more than an historical individual, for his name in Hebrew means "mankind", and the whole of mankind is viewed a having existed at first in Adam. Not only this, in order for Paul's argument to be valid there must also be a real and vital union of the Lord Jesus with the human race and this is seen in the fact that He is the Second Man and the Last Adam (I Cor. xv.). Underlying this doctrine is the O.T. conception of the Kinsman-Redeemer. The type is set forth in the law given in Deut.xxv.5-10 and ramifies throughout the book of Ruth in the relationship of Boaz and Ruth. Boaz's interest in Ruth would have been useless without the essential element of Kinship. The margin of Ruth ii. 20 shows that the goel, the next of kin, is the "one that has the right to redeem" and no one else could claim this right. Thus it is that it was imperative that the great Antitype, the Lord Jesus Christ, should be made a partaker of "flesh and blood" and become related to us:

> "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same; that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage" (Heb. ii. 14, 15).

Christ, to fulfil His great mission, must come as the Seed of the woman, the Seed of Abraham, the Seed of David, the Son of man and the Son of God. His genealogy necessitated that He should have a lineage that went back to Adam (Luke iii.). The virgin birth of Christ made it possible for Him to be related to man without partaking of the sin, death and condemnation that came upon the race through fallen Adam. The doctrine of Rom. v. is impossible apart from the organic unity of mankind, the headship of Adam, and the new headship of Christ, and the identification that comes from this relationship.

The seed, true and false.

Not only must we recognize the truth of the Kinsman-Redeemer in order to understand the section of the epistle now before us, but also the Scripture teaching of the two seeds among mankind. When Adam and Eve fell into sin through the deception of the serpent (Satan) God said to the deceiver:

> "And I will put enmity between thee (Satan) and between thy seed and her seed . . ." (Gen. iii. 15).

No.10. v. 12 - 21.
pp. 21 - 25

The seed, true and false.

Not only must we recognize the truth of the Kinsman-Redeemer in order to understand the section of the epistle now before us, but also the Scripture teaching of the two seeds among mankind. When Adam and Eve fell into sin through the deception of the serpent (Satan) God said to the deceiver:

> "And I will put enmity between thee (Satan) and between thy seed and her seed . . ." (Gen. iii. 15).

The first two men to be born illustrate the fact of these two seeds, for the N.T. teaches us that "Cain was of (ek) that wicked one" (I John iii. 12). Ek here expresses origin. The distinction between the two seeds is maintained by Christ in His argument with the Pharisees in John viii. They claimed to be Abraham's seed (John viii. 33) and this was admitted by the Lord in verse 37: "I know that ye are Abraham's seed". He continued:

> "I speak that which I have seen with My Father: and ye do that which ye have seen with your father" (verse 38), and in order to prevent their misunderstanding Him He said to them in verse 44:

> "Ye are of (ek) your father the devil."

Not only this, but in verse 47 He added

> "He that is of (ek) God heareth God's words: ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of (ek) God."

In the Lord's teaching here we have the fact of the false seed stated positively and negatively.

The Pharisees, in spite of their physical descent from Abraham, did not originate (ek) from God—but they did originate (ek) from Satan. We can surely understand why Christ was not popular with the religious leaders of His day! And we may say that this doctrine is not popular today either. Some professing Christians flatly reject it because it does not square with their ideas, but we would remind them that this doctrine comes from One Who said "I am the Truth" (John xiv. 6) and Christians are not at liberty to disagree with Him!

The doctrine of the two seeds is also clearly taught by the Lord in the parable of the tares (Matt. xiii. 24-30), and it was this one out of all the other parables that the disciples asked the Lord to explain (verse 36). It should be noted that the Lord disclaims any connection with the tares. They did not emanate from Him. "An enemy has done this", He said (Matt. xiii. 27, 28). "The tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil" (verses 38, 39) the Lord declared. One thing is perfectly clear; tares remain tares right to the end of the age, when they are gathered together by angels and destroyed in a "furnace of fire" (verses 40-42). Not a single tare is changed into true wheat, nor does the true wheat ever becomes tares. They represent two totally different classes, the true wheat, the children of the kingdom, and the tares, the children of Satan introduced by him in his attempt to thwart and overthrow the kingdom purposes of God. Similar teaching is given by the Lord Jesus when He said "Every plant, which My heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up" (Matt. xv. 13). Not all those who are in the garden of mankind are planted by God. Satan has introduced his weeds and they will surely be eradicated before God's kingdom becomes a glorious reality.

One may ask the question, as the true seed of God are born into this world as sinners (as Romans clearly testifies), can they not be regarded as "tares" before they are saved and justified? The answer is definitely "no". They come under the dominion of sin and death certainly, and need the redeeming work of Christ to remove this condition, but never are they regarded as originating from Satan and being the children of the devil. Nor, as stated before, do we find a single tare in the above parable, changing into true wheat. They remain Satan's seed right to the end, when they are "rooted up" and destroyed. They are outwardly human, but inwardly the seed of the devil. Such is the sinister picture which the Word of God portrays whether we like it or not. We must therefore take great care that we do not mix or confuse these two companies or our conclusions will be wide off the mark of truth. Physical connection with Abraham does not constitute them the true seed, as the Apostle Paul demonstrates in Rom. ix.:

> "They are not all Israel, which are of Israel; neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children (i.e. of Abraham); but, In Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God; but the children of the promise (i.e. through Isaac) are counted for the seed" (Rom. ix. 6-8).

Ishmael and Esau were "children of the flesh", but that does not constitute them the true seed. The true seed are the children of promise who originate from God. They are "in Isaac" if true Israelites, and "in Christ" in the wider application of the figure.

Once we have grasped this, it will help us considerably to understand the Apostle's argument in Rom. v. which centres round the words "many" and "all". Otherwise these words constitute a real problem which makes verses 15-19 very difficult to interpret. Just as "they are not all Israel which are of Israel", so, bearing in mind what we have seen regarding the two seeds, we can say "they are not all in Adam that are of Adam".

As Charles H. Welch says:

> "There are men who, though 'of Adam', are not 'in Adam'; such was Cain. For all 'in Adam' Christ became Kinsman-Redeemer, and their names are in the book of life. We shall find in Rom. v. that the interchange in the use of 'all' and 'many' is because at one time the whole of the true seed are in view by themselves, 'all', and at another, the whole of the physical descendants of Adam, when the true seed are differentiated and spoken of as 'the many'. Just as one star differs from another, though both be in glory, so we shall find that, when it is a question of 'receiving' and 'reigning', 'many' is used, but when it is a matter of justification unto life, 'all' is the word employed. When once we see that 'all in Adam' does not include all that are 'of Adam', every text of Scripture can be accepted at its full value. We do not become Universalists and spoil the insistent teaching of Scripture concerning the Kinsman-Redeemer. We have no need to alter the wording of I Cor. xv. 22. All 'in Adam' and all 'in Christ' are co-extensive. Only by closing our eyes to the divine principle of Rom. ix. 5-7 can we assert that 'all Israel' of Rom. xi. is as universal as the physical connection" (Just and the Justifier, p.107).

We can now approach the section of the epistle covered by verses 12-21:

> "Therefore, just as sin entered the world through one man, and death through sin, and in this way death came to all men, because all sinned—for before the law was given, sin was in the world. But sin is not taken into account when there is no law. Nevertheless death reigned from the time of Adam to the time of Moses, even over those who did not sin by breaking a command, as did Adam, who was a pattern of the One to come" (verses 12-14, N.I.V.).

The insistence here is upon two opposite words, death and life. Why do human beings die? What is the cause of death? Did God create men and purpose that they should die? Such a thought makes nonsense of the divine plan. There is no satisfactory explanation of the origin of death except that contained in verse 12. Adam's obedience was put to the test by God. He was given an explicit command and disobeyed it in spite of God's warning. By this act the virus of sin entered into him and it spread to all his descendants with its inevitable end—death. In the light of Scripture death is always seen as something hideous, an enemy right to the last. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death" (I Cor. xv. 26). Men may try to glorify death and dress it up in attractive colours, but God regards it as an enemy to His divine plan right to the end, and this enemy with its root cause sin, must be eliminated if ever that tremendous plan is going to reach its glorious fulfillment.

Paul points out that those who lived from Adam to Moses did not have specific statutes as Adam had, or as those later given through Moses. Therefore, they were not like Adam who broke a specific commandment of God. Yet death was there just the same, which proved that sin was present but it was not charged against men at that time by God, for the absence of a code of law, a divinely given norm affects the way God reckons sin against men. Adam, the Apostle asserts, as a "figure", or type of Christ, and elsewhere he designates Him as 'the last Adam' and 'the Second Man' (I.Cor.xv.45,47). The typological relation between them was one of contrast, rather than resemblance, for Christ was sinless, which was essential if He was to become the bearer of human sin.

The Apostle proceeds:

> "But the gift is not like the trespass. For if the many died by the trespass of the one man, how much more did God's grace and the gift by the grace of the One Man Jesus Christ, overflow to the many!" (verse 15, N.I.V.).

It is important to note the definite article before the words "many" and "all" which are unfortunately omitted by the A.V. It is "the many" and "the all", the two phrases representing the "true wheat", the "true seed", who are united to Christ in His headship as the Second Man and last Adam. The Apostle uses three words to denote sin. One is hamartia, which represents sin in itself (verses 12, 13, 16 verbal form). Another, parabasis, means disobedience to a revealed command (verse 14, "transgression"). The third is paraptoma with a meaning similar to parabasis. It is the act of sin.

Over against this act of sin on Adam's part stands the great act of grace (charisma) performed by the Lord Jesus Christ, and these are not exact equivalents. The Lord's act of grace in the giving of Himself on Calvary's cross does not just balance the act of sin; it overbalances it. Hence the "much more" in the argument of the verses before us:

> "Again, the gift of God is not like the result of one man's sin. The judgment followed one sin and brought condemnation, but the gift followed many trespasses and brought justification. For if, by the trespass of one man, death reigned through that one man, how much more will those who receive God's abundant provision of grace and of the gift of righteousness reign in life through the one Man, Jesus Christ. Consequently, just as the result of one trespass was condemnation for all men, so also the result of one act of righteousness was justification that brings life for all men. For just as through the disobedience of the one man the many were made sinners, so also through the obedience of one Man the many will be made righteous" (verses 16-19, N.I.V.).

The Apostle piles up words to emphasize the greatness, the freeness, and the graciousness of the gift of Christ and His righteousness. This not only undoes all that Adam did, but goes far beyond. Adam brought in death; Christ brings in life eternal. Adam brought condemnation; Christ brings in justification of life and acquittal. Adam puts death on the throne, "death reigned" (verse 14); Christ puts His people on the throne with eternal consequences (verse 17). And just as surely as by the disobedience of Adam were all the true seed "constituted sinners", so by the obedience of Christ they finally are all "constituted righteous". Where once the believer fell "in Adam" he now stands "in Christ" forever and in grace.

What joy this should bring to everyone who fully trust in the Lord Jesus! The believer should continually rejoice in the Lord as he realize this with its tremendous implications.

The climax comes in verses 20 and 21:

"The law was added so that the trespass might increase. But where sin increased, grace increased all the more, so that just as sin reigned in death, so also grace might reign through righteousness to bring eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (verses 20, 21, N.I.V.).

It is helpful to note the key-words of these inner chapters of Romans. In chapter v. it is death; in chapter vi. sin; chapter vii. law; and chapter viii. spirit. In chap.v. it is a matter of life and death; in chap.vi. of sin and righteousness; in chap.vii. of law and grace; and chap.viii. of flesh and spirit. The matter contained in chap.vi. arises from the doctrine set forth in v. 20, 21 that "where sin increased (or abounded) grace increased all the more". From this a critic of the Apostle might have said, If this is so, why not go on sinning, so that grace may further increase? The fact is that from time to time people have criticized the doctrine of grace set forth in Paul's epistles. They assert that such teaching leads to laxness in conduct. Surely, they argue, if sin is to be controlled, the best way to do it is to legislate against it. They forget that law merely sets a standard, but gives no wisdom or power to keep it. In other words the law can never turn sinners into saints.

We shall have to consider the Scriptural teaching concerning the law later on. For the moment we would say the main reason for the law in the Bible is to show up sin in its true colours. The Apostle in this section of the epistle deals with four possible objections to his teaching and in each case he strongly repudiates it by saying "God forbid" (A.V.). Other versions render me genoito "by no means!", "certainly not!", or "of course not!". Then follows in each case his argument to show the falsity of the objection. The four questions are these:

(1) "Shall we continue in sin that grace may abound?" (vi. 1); the repudiation and answer (vi. 2-14).
(2) "Shall we sin because we are not under the law, but under grace?" (vi. 15); the repudiation and answer (vi. 15 - vii. 6).
(3) "Is the law sin?" (vii. 7); repudiation and answer (vii. 7-12).
(4) "Was that which is good made death unto me?" (vii. 13); repudiation and answer (vii. 13-25).

Let us consider the first objection which opens chapter vi.:

"What shall we say, then? Shall we go on sinning, so that grace may increase?" (Rom. vi. 1, N.I.V.)

The Apostle gives a definite reply straight away: "of course not". Those that asserted that his doctrine could be construed in this way, had a total misconception of it. As Paul expressed it so clearly in a later epistle—"we are not saved by good works, but unto good works" (Eph. ii. 8-10). In other words salvation by grace leads to a life of practical conformity to the standards of God. The Apostle continues his answer by saying:

> "We died to sin; how can we live in it any longer?" (vi. 2, N.I.V.).

A dead man is beyond the capability of sinning! Let us note that it is not a question as to whether the believer will ever fall into sin or discover some hidden imperfection, but whether he will "continue in" sin, that is, make a practice of it. To reinforce his argument Paul brings in the great doctrine of identification with Christ as set forth by the doctrine of baptism:

> "Don't you know that all of us who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into His death? We were therefore buried with Him through baptism into death, in order that, just as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, we too may live a new life" (vi. 3, 4, N.I.V.).

The point to be settled here is whether Paul is alluding to the baptism of the Holy Spirit which identifies a believer with the risen Christ or does it refer to water baptism? Does it refer to the reality, the work of the Holy Spirit, or the shadow that represents it? Because we are creatures of time and sense, what we see, hear, touch or feel appears to be more real than anything spiritual. But we should remember that all ritual is but an illustration, a "shadowing forth". It can never be the reality which is eternal and spiritual and God asks us to walk by faith in these glorious realities and not by sight, feeling or sense (compare Heb. x. 1 and Col. ii. 16, 17).

Dr. Merril Unger in Bibliotheca Sacra writes:

> "In these passages (Rom. vi. 3, 4; Col. ii. 12; Eph. iv. 5) the holy Apostle is not considering ritual baptism at all. The sublimity of thought, the context of the argument, the exalted nature of the spiritual verities taught, support this position. He is speaking of something infinitely higher, not of a mere symbolic ordinance that is powerless to effect intrinsic change, but of a divine operation which places us eternally in Christ, and into His experience of crucifixion, death, burial and resurrection."

In his book on Romans (chapter six), Dr. Martyn Lloyd Jones states, in expounding verses 2 and 3:

> "The conclusion therefore at which I arrive is that baptism by water is not in the mind of the Apostle at all in these two verses; instead it is the baptism that is wrought by the Spirit . . . . . Again take the statement which the Apostle makes in Gal.2:20 which is so frequently misquoted: 'I have been crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me . . . . .'. Now there you have the identical doctrine (as Rom.6:2,3), but baptism is not mentioned. That is because water baptism does not achieve union, it does not produce it; indeed at that point it does not even represent it. This is a baptism which is carried out by the Holy Spirit when He incorporates us into, engrafts us into the Lord Jesus Christ" (page 36).

It is only fair to say that Dr. Lloyd Jones is not a dispensationalist and accepts that water baptism has its place, but certainly not in Rom. vi., Col. ii. or Eph. iv. This makes his testimony all the more telling. It is this spiritual baptism effected by the Holy Spirit that is the baptism of Rom. vi. In Eph. iv. it is "one baptism". As to "hope",

"Lord", "faith", "God" there is little, if any, difference among true believers. But when we come to baptism, so many forget that the one baptism is mentioned in equal terms with the above words. The emphasis in "one" is in opposition to corporate diversity in the Body of Christ.

There are those who suggest water baptism can be blended with the Spirit's baptism here and yet be looked upon as one baptism. We do not understand this kind of mental jugglery, but it cannot be true, not only in view of the above arguments, but also because water baptism did not form a necessary part of the commission Christ gave Paul. "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel" (I Cor. i. 17) he asserted. Even though he did baptize a few, it should be quite evident from the clear command of the Lord that ritual baptism was not essential to the ministry entrusted to him and therefore it is an intruder in Eph. iv. 5 and Col. ii. as well as being quite foreign to the context. Each member of the Body is "filled full (complete) in Christ" (Col. ii. 10). What can "shadows" add to this glorious fullness? And is it not lack of appreciation of this fullness that causes many to cling to these "shadows"?

We would sum up by saying that the real Spirit baptism identifies and unites a believer with Christ eternally. There are three great unities in Scripture:

(1) The unity between the members of the Godhead (John xvii.).
(2) The unity between Christ and the believers (Rom. vi.).
(3) The unity between believers themselves (Eph. iv.).

No wonder we are not exhorted to make a unity, but to carefully guard one already made by God.

The baptism of the Holy Spirit does not depend upon or wait for the action of man, that is one man baptizing another in water, it is wholly the "operation or working of God" (Col. ii. 12) and occurs at the moment of salvation. In just the same way being "planted together in the likeness of His death" (Rom. vi. 5) does not depend upon ritual, but solely upon the action of the Holy Spirit, thus effecting complete identification of the believer with Christ in His death, burial, and resurrection.

> "For if by means of the image of His death we have been joined with His death, then we shall also be joined with His resurrection" (Rom. vi. 5, C. K. Barrett).

The thought here is akin to grafting. Sumphutos "planted together" A.V. literally means "grown together with" and explains how complete this wondrous identification is. The work of God does not leave the believer in death; it puts him on resurrection ground, a new outlook, a new life, here and now, although the literal resurrection representing our hope is yet future. Note carefully how Paul puts this hope into the future "We shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection" (verse 5) and "we believe that we shall also live with Him" (verse 8).

Verse 6 continues:

> "For we know that our old self was crucified with Him so that the body of sin might be rendered powerless, that we should no longer be slaves to sin—because anyone who has died has been freed from sin" (N.I.V.).

It is important to note that the aorist tense is used here "was crucified" not "is crucified" of the A.V. It is looking backward to the time when it occurred and this must be the same moment when the believer died with Christ. This again cannot be water baptism for the context goes back to the crucifixion of Christ. Those who are united by faith to Christ are reckoned as having been crucified with Him when He was crucified. The Apostle describes this in his own experience in Gal. ii. 20:

> "I have been crucified with Christ and I no longer live, but Christ lives in me. The life I live in the body, I live by faith in the Son of God Who loved me and gave Himself for me" (N.I.V.).

Paul knew that this was all the work of God, going back to the crucifixion of the Lord and certainly not commencing with his being baptized in water. The "dying with" and "being crucified with", must refer to the same event and the same time, that is the crucifixion and this rules out any work of man.

In Rom. vi. 6 the A.V. renders katargeo "destroyed". This is too strong; it is neither true to fact nor experience. The N.I.V. "rendered powerless" or "put out of action" (F.F.Bruce) is nearer the mark. The believer carries the sinful old nature to the grave or the moment that his hope is realized in translation or resurrection, but this "crucifixion" by God delivers him from its domination here and now. He need never be a slave to it if he does what this context commands, and reckons what God has done for him in identification with Christ to be absolutely true. In this position the believer is "dead" to sin and a dead man is no longer answerable for it, "He that is dead is freed from sin" (verse 7).

> "Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him. For in that He died, He died unto sin once; but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God" (verses 9, 10).

"Once" here is ephapax, "once for all", a word that is used repeatedly in the epistle to the Hebrews to express the finality and completeness of the sacrifice of Christ.

But death is only one side of the story. It leads to resurrection life and the practical conclusion is:

> "In the same way, count yourselves dead to sin but alive to God in Christ Jesus" (verse 11, N.I.V.).

The word "count" is the same as is translated "reckon" and "impute" in connection with Abraham in chapter iv. The way that gives deliverance from the power of sin in the believer is for him to count on what God has said about his unity with Christ's death and resurrection as being true of himself here and now. This is God's way of holiness and the only one that really works. Holiness conferences may bring all sorts of ideas and resolutions before the believer in Christ but none can improve on God's remedy for the deliverance from the bondage of sin and self.

No.12. vi. 12 - vii. 7.
pp. 61 - 65

When the believer 'reckons' as vi. 11 enjoins, that he himself is dead to sin yet alive to God, the practical result is expressed in the next verse:

> "Therefore, do not let sin reign in your mortal body so that you obey its evil desires" (verse 12, N.I.V.).

Without this reckoning, the exhortation would be impossible to carry out. Identification with Christ in His death and burial means the end of slavery to sin. A "newness of life" (verse 4) follows because of identification with His resurrection life and this means glorious freedom. In fact slavery and freedom sum up the section before us. Let us note this:

> "Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness" (vi. 18).
> "For when ye were the servants (slaves) of sin, ye were free from righteousness" (vi. 20).
> "But now being made free from sin, and become servants (slaves) to God" (vi. 22).
> "If her husband be dead, she is free from that law" (vii. 3).
> "For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death" (viii. 2).
> "Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God" (viii. 21).

And now the references to slavery and bondage; the reader should note that in the A.V. this is veiled by being translated "serve" or "servants":

> "That henceforth we should not be slaves to (serve) sin" (vi. 6).
> "Slaves (servants) to obey, his slaves (servants) ye are" (vi. 16).
> "Ye were the slaves (servants) of sin" (vi. 17).
> "Ye became slaves (servants) of righteousness" (vi. 18).
> "Slaves (servants) to uncleanness . . . . . slaves (servants) to righteousness unto holiness" (vi. 19).
> "When ye were the slaves of sin" (vi. 20).
> "Now . . . . . having become slaves (servants) to God" (vi. 22).
> "Ye have not received the spirit of bondage' (viii. 15).
> "Shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption" (viii. 21).

The two conditions are absolute opposites. One speaks of slavery, darkness and misery; the other of glorious freedom, peace, joy and contentment—freedom now to serve the Lord faithfully and carry out His will. It may be summed up in a threefold way. The believer in Christ is in:

(1) A new sphere—"newness of life".
(2) A condition—union, crucified with, dead with, buried with, raised with Christ.
(3) A state—freedom to serve Him faithfully.

Keeping this facts in mind we can now look at the Apostle's argument more closely and we quote from The New International Version:

> "Do not offer the parts of your body to sin, as instruments of wickedness, but rather offer yourselves to God, as those who have been brought from death to life, and offer the parts of your body to Him as instruments of righteousness. For sin shall not be your master, because you are not under law, but under grace" (vi. 13-14, N.I.V.).

Because God has broken the domination of sin, the believer can now hand over himself to Him rather than yield to slavery. He is not like a "dead man brought to life" as C. K. Barrett expresses it. A master has no further authority over a dead slave: he is freed by death. In the same way the believer is freed from the mastery of sin because he has died (in Christ) to it and now has "newness of life" in which to live with all its blessedness. He is now "under grace" (verse 14) and it is the grace of God which strengthens him and so enables him, now a free man, to become faithful and fruitful servant of God.

Paul now comes back to the antinominian argument of verse 1:

> "What then? Shall we sin because we are not under law but under grace? By no means! Don't you know that when you offer yourselves to someone to obey him as slaves, you are slaves to the one whom you obey—whether you are slaves to sin, which leads to death, or to obedience, which leads to righteousness? But thanks be to God that, though you used to be slaves to sin, you wholeheartedly obeyed the form of teaching to which you were entrusted. You have been set free from sin and have become slaves to righteousness" (vi. 15-18, N.I.V.).

From what we have seen, the argument of the Apostle is surely clear to the objector who thinks that a practice of sin and a state of grace can be combined. As F. F. Bruce comments, "to make being 'under grace' an excuse for sinning is a sign that one is not really 'under grace' at all". Those who are "in Christ" and united to Him, will be concerned to render glad obedience to His will and this will characterize their lives. They now will wholeheartedly obey Him Who is not only their Saviour but their Lord (vi. 17).

The illustration that Paul has given concerning slavery is a human one, he informs us, in order to help the Roman Christians to understand the vital doctrine of identification with the risen Christ and its practical outcome (verse 19). Again he contrasts their lives as unsaved pagans with the new one in Christ:

> "The point of the matter is this: just as in the past you offered your members to uncleanness and iniquity as their slaves (with the result of producing iniquity), so now offer your members to righteousness as its slaves (the result of this will be sanctification). These are mutually exclusive attitudes; for when you were slaves of sin you were free men in respect of righteousness (and what fruit did you reap of that?—things of which you now are ashamed, for their end is death). But now you have been freed from sin, and have become slaves to God. Accordingly your fruit proves to be sanctification, and the ultimate result will be eternal life. For the wages paid by sin is death: but the gift freely given by God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord" (vi. 19-23, C. K. Barrett).

It is noteworthy that the stress on slavery does not cease when the new life in Christ begins. Paul talks about being a "slave to righteousness" and a "slave to God". Strictly speaking the believer does not change his condition as a slave—he changes his master—once a slave to Satan, sin, and self, now a slave of Christ, "whose service is perfect freedom". What an exchange! What a transformation! And Paul the one who stresses freedom more than any other N.T. writer, specially when he says:

> "It is for freedom that Christ has set us free. Stand firm then, and do not let yourselves be burdened again by a yoke of slavery" (Gal. v. 1, N.I.V.).

Yet he delighted to constantly describe himself as the "slave of Christ"! (translated servant in the A.V.). This is a seeming paradox, and yet not so to the one who rejoices in the truth of the section now before us, namely vi. 1-23 with its mighty deliverance brought about by the God-made union with Christ in His death and resurrection.

Chapter vii. begins another section still dealing with this great doctrine of identification with Christ. In vi. 14 Paul had stated that the believer was not under the reign of law, but under the reign of grace. The Apostle is now going to amplify this:

> "Do you not know, brothers—for I am speaking to men who know the law—that the law has authority over a man only as long as he lives? For example, by law a married woman is bound to her husband as long as he is alive, but if her husband dies, she is released from the law of marriage. So then, if she marries another man while her husband is still alive, she is called an adulteress. But if her husband dies, she is released from that law and is not an adulteress, even though she marries another man" (vii. 1-3, N.I.V.).

The Apostle is concerned to show that legal obligation is discharged only by death. Sometimes Paul uses the definite article with 'law', and sometimes omits it. Generally speaking, law with the article refers to the law of Moses, without it, law in general, that is Roman law as well as Jewish. Here at the beginning of chapter vii., Paul asserts that death breaks man's relation to the law and to illustrate this he brings forward an analogy from marriage. It is important to bear in mind that the Apostle in no way belittles the law. It was "holy, just and good" (vii. 12), but as a means of acquiring merit before God, law-keeping was impossible and therefore, completely deceptive. Death is the answer to the dominion of sin (chapter vi.) and likewise it is the answer to the dominion of law (chapter vii.). Applying the analogy to the believer, Paul reminds him again of his identification with Christ in His physical death, "So, my brother, you also died to the law through the body of Christ, that you might belong to Another, to Him Who was raised from the dead, in order that we might bear fruit to God" (verse 4, N.I.V.). This 'fruit' is the life that is dominated by the risen Christ and brings glory to Him. It is the "fruit of the spirit", the new nature, described in Gal. v. 22, 23.

However, looking back to the days of unregeneracy, sinful passions aroused by the law produced the very opposite "fruit unto death" (verse 5). God's mighty deliverance through the union with Christ means that the believer is released from the slavery of law so that now he can become the slave of God and serve Him freely "in the new way of the Spirit and not the old way of the written code". In place of legalism that seeks to enforce statutes there is the spirit of willing service through dedication and love.

Paul now comes to his third question and asks, “is the law sin?” (verse 7). If the believer has been delivered from the law as a task master, is there something wrong with it? The answer is “certainly not”. The wrong is in the sinner, not in the law of God. And yet there is a connection between law and sin in at least two ways:

(1) Sin would never be seen in its true colours unless there was a perfect standard by which all conduct could be measured.
(2) The law stirs up the latent rebellion that lies dormant in every heart. We all know our reaction when someone tries to force us to act in a particular way.

As regards (1) the Apostle says:

> “Indeed, I would not have known what sin was except through the law. For I would not have known what it was to covet if the law had not said, Do not covet” (vii. 7, N.I.V.).

The word ‘covet’ means desire. God’s law goes deeper than the external act. Paul as a Pharisee had been concerned largely with the external conformity to the law, but when it dawned upon him that the law also had to do with ‘desires’ before they had become manifest as ‘deeds’ the shock was intense. He might be able to control his action, but what about his thoughts? The command at last ‘came’, as never before and the Apostle says: “sin revived, or sprang to life, and I died” (verse 9). All his boasted righteousness vanished. The commandment which, if obeyed, would have led to life, he now found to be too searching and deep—it led to death. Sin had deceived him, as it had done to Adam and Eve and like them, it ‘slew him’.

Covetousness is a state of mind—it is idolatry (Col. iii. 5). It may be desire for right or wrong but if such self-regarding is of such intensity, it can usurp the place God ought to have, that is place No.1.

No.13. vii. 8 - viii. 1.
pp. 81 - 85

From this point onwards Paul personifies sin as a powerful enemy ready to pounce upon him and lead him to do the very things that he abhorred:

> "For sin, seizing the opportunity afforded by the commandment put me to death" (vii.11, N.I.V.).

Yet, in spite of all this he declares that the law is "holy, righteous and good" (vii. 12). The fault is not in God's law, but in the sinner. It was weak only "because of the flesh" (viii. 3), the inability of sinful human nature to rise to its standards. This leads the Apostle to his fourth question:

> "Did that which is good, then, become death to me? By no means! but in order that sin might be recognized as sin, it produced death in men through what was good, so that through the commandment sin might become utterly sinful" (vii. 13, N.I.V.).

The answer again is "no", his real enemy was not the law but SIN which forced him against his better judgment, to do things the law had shown him to be wrong. In the section that follows Paul continues to speak of himself. He leaves the past tense and uses the present. There is no doubt that he is giving his own experience. It is a self-portrait, an autobiography, yet this passage is one of the most controversial in the N.T. Volumes have been written on it. One may ask, is it the experience of the believer? Is it the experience of the unsaved wrestling with their consciences? Is it limited to the Jew under the law of Moses? We do not hesitate to say it refers to the believer for 4 reasons:

(1) The person here described "hates sin" (verse 15). This is not a characteristic of the unsaved.
(2) He "delights" in the law of God (verse 22). This is a characteristic of the children of God as Psa. i. 2 clearly testifies.
(3) He looks for deliverance to Christ alone through grace (verses 24 and 25).
(4) There is a passage in Galatians that covers the experience of Rom. vii. & viii., and the persons addressed are believers, not unbelievers:

> "So I say, live by the spirit, and you will not gratify the desires of the sinful nature, for the sinful nature desires what is contrary to the spirit, and the spirit what is contrary to the sinful nature. They are in contrast with each other, so that you do not do what you want" (Gal. v. 16-17, N.I.V.).

C. H. Welch's comments are to the point here:

> "While therefore Paul's experience may primarily set forth the vain endeavour of a Jew to perform the law which has 'enlightened his eyes, and converted his soul' (Psa.xix.7-9), and so show to all mankind that the law can neither save, justify, nor sanctify, the passage also sets forth in clear characters the warfare that must ever go on between flesh and spirit, until the day of complete deliverance and the redemption of the body" (Just and the Justifier, p.191).

Not only this, but the truth of the passage now before us has been the experience of countless Christians all down this age. It is significant that where the Apostle describes his life before his conversion there is no trace of spiritual conflict or of a divided self. Gal. i. & Phil. iii. depict a Jew who is practicing his religious beliefs more successfully than his contemporaries and blameless in his observance of the law of Moses.

After salvation the situation has completely altered. Why? Because God has introduced something that is entirely opposite to the human mind which has come under the influence of sin. It is nothing less than a portion of His own divine and sinless nature. Peter, in his second epistle, describes this:

> "His (God's) divine power has given us everything we need for life and godliness through our knowledge of Him Who has called us by His own glory and goodness. Through these He has given us His very great and precious promise, so that through them you may participate in the divine nature and escape the corruption in the world caused by evil desires" (II Pet. i. 3, 4, N.I.V.).

The Holy Spirit effects this divine implantation in the sinner at the moment of believing in Christ. Consequently it can be expressed as 'spirit' with a small 's' and placed in opposition to the 'flesh'. While the words 'flesh' and 'spirit' are used in more than one sense in the N.T. and by Paul himself, when they occur in the same context they generally represent this divine nature in absolute contrast to the sinful nature inherited from fallen Adam. As the Apostle writes in Galatians:

> "For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye cannot do the things that ye would" (Gal. v. 17).

The word 'spirit' in the A.V. could have been spelled with a small 's' and then the conflict between these two natures, the new and the old, is clearly set out. It is this conflict in himself that Paul is describing in Rom. vii. 14-25:

> "We know that the law is spiritual; but I am unspiritual, sold as a slave to sin. I do not understand what I do. For what I want to do I do not do, but what I hate I do. And if I do what I do not want to do, I agree that the law is good. As it is, it is no longer I myself who do it, but it is sin living in me. I know that nothing good lives in me, that is, in my sinful nature. For I have the desire to do what is good, but I cannot carry it out. For what I do is not the good I want to do; no, the evil I do not want to do—this I keep on doing. Now if I do what I do not want to do, it is no longer I who do it, but it is sin living in me that does it. So I find this law at work: when I want to do good, evil is right there with me. For in my inner being I delight in God's law; but I see another law at work in the members of my body, waging war against the law of my mind and making me a prisoner of the law of sin at work within my members. What a wretched man I am! Who will rescue me from this body of death? Thanks be to God—through Jesus Christ our Lord! So then I myself in my mind am a slave to God's law, but in my sinful nature a slave to the law of sin" (Rom. vii. 14, 25, N.I.V.).

These words graphically describe the conflict between the two natures. Sin is personified as a mighty enemy that resides in human nature and tyrannically controls the person. As long as he struggles against it in his own strength he is constantly defeated. It is not until he realizes that the Lord alone has the answer, that he wins the victory. Who can rescue me from this terrible dilemma he cries? but then he turns to the Lord Jesus Christ, realizing what He had done in becoming the Victor over the consequences of sin and death and in the glorious fact that he is now united to Him in death and resurrection. Then, and not till then, the chains drop off and he is free—a slave no longer, except to Him Who has bought him with a price!

As we have stated before, all sorts of remedies are offered by the Christian world—for deliverance from indwelling sin. All are of no avail, unless they conform to the teaching of this section of the Roman epistle concerning identification with the Lord Jesus in His death and resurrection and the believer reckoning this to be true in his own experience (Rom. vi. 6-11). This is God's way and His way is always the best and cannot be improved.

Dr. E. W. Bullinger sums it up in his Church Epistles pp.64-66:

> "Thus does the Holy Spirit lay bare to our view His own explanation of the origin and nature of the experience possessed by every soul which is the subject of the grace of God, and which has the gift of the new nature as the result and sign of God's justifying . . . . . Those who fail to learn this lesson as to the conflict of the law, first with the old nature (vii. 7-12), and afterwards (21-25) with the new nature, will not only be in constant perplexity themselves, but will fall into that error of doctrine which is corrected in the epistle to the Galatians, chapter iii. 3. Having begun with the truth as to the new nature (called 'spirit') they will, if they depart from it, seek to improve the old nature. This is the error which Gal. iii. 3 corrects, "Are ye so senseless? having begun in the spirit (in the new nature) are ye now being perfected in the flesh (i.e. in the old nature)? This is what thousands are doing everywhere around us. They are seeking to perfect, or, at least improve, the old nature. Not seeing the truth or reality of the two natures, they are seeking to improve the only one which they are acquainted with. This is ever the work of all who are ignorant of what the Spirit is saying to the churches. Be they Buddhists, Romanists, Perfectionists, they are all alike endeavouring to convert the 'flesh' into 'spirit', to subdue the 'flesh', and by all kinds of arts and artifices, and rules and regulations, pledges, and badges, to improve the old nature. All alike formulate 'rules for holy living', ignorant of the fact which lies before us in this Scripture that the old nature knows no rules, and that the new nature needs no rules. Instead of reckoning the old nature to have died with Christ, they are ever seeking to put it to death! Instead of reckoning that it was crucified with Christ upon the cross, they are exhorting us to crucify it for ourselves. When God crucified it with Christ, He did it once and for all. But those who know nothing of this, tell us to crucify it. They do not tell us how we are to do it; but knowing how futile is the effort, they tell us we must do it every day. But, no! once would be enough if it could be done at all. And, thank God, it has been done. HE has done it Himself on Calvary; and now, we, in spite of all our conflict, in spite of the flesh (the old nature) lusting against the spirit (the new nature) and spirit against the flesh; in spite of the fact that these are contrary the one to the other, so that we do the evil which th flesh would have us do, and we cannot do the good that the spirit would have us do; in spite of this conflict, we find 'peace with God' and rest in the truth—that the child of God has his old nature, which can produce no good thing—and he has a new nature, which 'doth not commit sin' (I John iii. 9), 'sinneth not' (I John v. 18). And, further, that God reckons the old nature as having died with Christ, and as having therefore no dominion over us, though the conflict in actual experience is ever present with us. Those who learn this lesson have learned that the old nature is so bad that nothing can ever improve it, and that the new nature is so perfect that it needs no improvement. It is 'spirit', and its life cannot be 'deepened'. It is 'newness of life', and cannot be made 'higher'."

We make no apology for this lengthy quotation from the witness of that doughty warrior, Dr. Bullinger, and only wish that there were more today to testify to the reality of the two natures in the child of God.

When we come to chapter viii. it is like coming out of a dark tunnel into the sunlight for we pass from the slavery of sin into the glorious liberty of the children of God. We should remember that Rom. viii. 1 really follows the teaching of Rom. v. 16-18 with its statement as to how condemnation came, namely through the sin of one man, Adam, condemnation came upon all men. In Rom. viii. 1 we have the great reversal through the redemptive work of Christ:

> "Therefore there is now no condemnation for those who are in Christ Jesus" (N.I.V.).

The reader will note that the concluding words of the verse "who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit" are omitted for they do not occur in the principal Greek texts, but are evidently an interpolation from verse 4 which is their rightful place. Those who insist on their retention fail to realize that they are making freedom from condemnation a result of the believers' walk and not the all-sufficient work of Christ and this completely nullifies the basic teaching of this great epistle. Being free from condemnation does not depend on the works or walk of the believer. It is entirely conditional upon the work of the Son of God. It is justification that is set over against condemnation in Rom. v. 16-18 and viii. 1-14, not sanctification. We must keep truth in its Scriptural place, otherwise we shall not be "unashamed workmen" (II Tim. ii. 15).

The glorious teaching of the previous chapters is that a person who is declared to be righteous or just by God is one who is innocent of wrong doing. God's verdict is 'not guilty' and as such he cannot come under condemnation. This has been made absolutely clear in chapter iii. where it is asserted that God's righteousness comes upon all who believe by faith of Jesus Christ and not through any works of merit of the believer. Thus it is through abounding grace on God's part. Grace and works never blend together as Rom. xi. 6 testifies. It is only in this way that He can be just and at the same time be the Justifier of him who believes in Jesus (Rom. iii. 26). He is then the God Who justifies the ungodly.

The Lord in His earthly ministry dealt with the question of condemnation. He said:

> "He that believeth is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God" (John iii. 18).

Of course there are those who say that this teaching is dangerous and will result in laxness of walk. In fact much of Paul's teaching was considered dangerous in his day and has been many times since, but there is no need for us to put out the hand to stay the ark of God. The all wise God and Father knows how to deal with His children in discipline if they walk after the flesh, but He will never deny Himself or His truth in doing this.

No.14. viii. 2 - 11.
pp. 109 - 113

The glorious fact of "no condemnation" does not await the day of glory, it is true of the believer here and now—"there is therefore now no condemnation" are the words of Rom. viii. 1 and this results from the work of the "spirit of life":

> "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made us free from the law of sin and death" (viii. 2).

In II Cor. iii. 17 we are reminded that "where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty" and we have been called to liberty (Gal. v. 13). This freedom is from the domination of "the law of sin" which is in our members (Rom. vii. 23). It is good to realize what we have NOW through the redemptive work of Christ, "Now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested" (Rom. iii. 21). "Being now justified by His blood, we shall be saved from wrath" (Rom. v. 9). "By Whom we have now received the reconciliation" (Rom. v. 11). "But now being made free from sin . . . . . ye have your fruit unto holiness" (Rom. vi. 22). These present assurances are for the believer to enjoy now through faith. We are acquitted now; we are free from condemnation now. Nothing we can do of ourselves can ever set us free from condemnation. It has all been done by our Saviour and Lord and because we are for ever united with Him, condemnation has gone for ever. This does not mean we are free to please ourselves, but rather we are free to please and serve Him faithfully. In other words it leads to experimental sanctification. But let us not confuse sanctification and justification. It is our acquittal (justification) which ensures our freedom from condemnation and Rom. viii. 3 goes on to teach us that this is wholly dependent upon the work of Christ and not on the walk of the believer.

> "For what the law was powerless to do in that it was weakened by the sinful nature, God did by sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful man to be a sin offering" (N.I.V.).

This epistle has made it abundantly clear that sinful man cannot rise to the standard of God's law and that law was therefore powerless to produce a life of holiness. However what the law could not do, has been done by God in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ Who came in the "likeness of sinful flesh", giving His life as a sin-offering on behalf of His people. The words are carefully chosen here. Christ did not come in sinful flesh for had He done so He would have had the taint of sin, and so would have needed a Saviour himself; He could never have been the Saviour of others. The Apostle Paul and the N.T. generally, absolutely insists on the sinlessness of Christ, the One Who "knew no sin" (II Cor. v. 21).

> "He was made to be sin (or a sin-offering) for us Who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (II Cor. v. 21).

"No condemnation" is true of believers, because "condemnation" was true of Him. The righteous sentence of the law has been fulfilled in the redeemed in the Person of their Saviour. The sphere of emancipation is the "spirit", and unites us with Christ, risen and ascended. We can now "walk in newness of life" and serve the Lord in "newness of spirit".

The section now before us is verses 5-16 which revolve around 'flesh' and 'spirit'. These words are used in various ways in the N.T. and need care in interpretation:

F L E S H

(1) This word is used in the sense of bodily flesh (cp. Gen. xvii. 11).
(2) It is used of human descent. Christ is a descendant of David as concerning the flesh (Rom. ix. 5).
(3) Human nature. Christ came "in the flesh" (I John iv. 2) and was "manifested in the flesh" (I Tim. iii. 16).
(4) Mankind. "By the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified" (Rom. iii. 20).
(5) The sinful old nature in the believer. This is inherited from fallen Adam and extends to all mankind. It is the sense frequently used by the Apostle Paul.

We must be careful not to look on the human body as sinful in itself. It is rather the sphere in which the principle of sin operates, hence the "body of sin" (Rom. vi. 6) and the law of sin in my members (Rom. vii. 23). The physical body can be presented to God as a "living sacrifice" (Rom. xii. 1) so that His will may be done and the body can be indwelt by the Holy Spirit (I Cor. vi. 19; Rom. viii. 11). The N.T. has no place for the contempt of the body shown by the Greek philosophers or their regard for it as a prison house of the soul. For the believer it awaits to be redeemed (Rom. viii. 23) and to be conformed to the Lord's resurrection body of glory (Phil. iii. 20, 21).

S P I R I T

This important word is used in various ways in the Scripture:

(1) God. (John iv. 24; I Cor. iii. 16).
(2) Christ. (I Cor. vi. 17; xv. 45; II Cor. iii. 17, 18).
(3) The Holy Spirit. This is generally with the article but not necessarily so.
(4) The operations of the Holy Spirit—spiritual gifts (I Cor. xiv. 32).
(5) The new nature in the believer. This is specially the Pauline usage; spirit as opposed to the sinful old nature.
(6) Man (psychologically). Spirit as imparted to man, making him "a living soul" (Gen. ii. 7).
(7) Character. This as being in itself invisible and manifested only in one's actions (II Tim. i. 7; Rom. viii. 15).
(8) Other invisible characteristics such as feelings and desires (Matt. xxvi. 41).
(9) The whole person, the part being put for the whole (Luke i. 47).
(10) Angels, or spirit-beings (Heb. i. 7, 14).
(11) Demons, or evil spirit beings (Mark i. 23).
(12) The Resurrection body (I Cor. xv. 45).

It will be seen that this word has a wide range of meaning; but in Romans it is in antithesis to the "flesh", denoting the sinful old nature inherited from fallen Adam. Thus we have the doctrine of the two natures in the believer which are for ever opposed. They are "contrary the one to the other" (Gal. v. 17), and the Scriptural doctrine relating to these natures is a subject of immense importance to the believer. Wrong conceptions of holiness and spiritual progress arise from not understanding what the Scripture teaches in relation to the two natures in the child of God.

One great difficulty in deciding whether to translate the word 'spirit' with a capital or small 's' is seen when different translations are compared. If translated with a capital 'S' it refers to the Holy Spirit; if a small 's' the new nature which He imparts to the believer. Comparing different translations one can quickly see that the translators had varying ideas on this point. But one thing should be made clear if spirit is rendered with a small 's', referring to the gift of the divine nature, the Holy Spirit is not eliminated for one cannot have a divine gift without a divine Giver. In fact both these meanings may be true of the context and then there is no question of it being "either or".

For ourselves, we feel that in the context of the Romans that we are studying, there is no direct reference to the Holy Spirit by Himself until we reach viii. 16. "For the Spirit Himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are children of God". Until then it is the activities of the two natures that are being dealt with. These two opposing principles are set out by the Apostle in verses 5-7:

> "Those who live according to the sinful nature have their minds set on what that nature desires but those who live in accordance with the spirit, have their minds set on what the spirit desires. The mind of sinful man is death, but the mind controlled by the spirit is life and peace, because the sinful mind is hostile to God. It does not submit to God's law, nor can it do so. Those controlled by their sinful nature cannot please God" (N.I.V.).

We render this quotation as 'spirit' with a small 's' making it refer to the new nature, but behind it is of course God Himself, the Holy Spirit. The context is not so much contrasting the Holy Spirit with the flesh but rather His gift, the perfect divine nature, over against the old sinful one inherited from fallen Adam. Redemption means that the believer's mind is now free and can be allied either with the flesh or the spirit and it is made perfectly clear what happens in both cases. One expresses "enmity against God" and leads finally to death; the other to "life and peace". Gal. v. takes this further and reveals plainly the two entirely opposite 'fruits' resulting from flesh and spirit:

> "The acts of the sinful nature (flesh) are obvious: sexual immorality, impurity and debauchery; idolatry and witchcraft; hatred, discord, jealousy, fits of rage, selfish ambitions, dissensions, factions and envy; drunkenness, orgies, and the like . . . . . but the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness and self-control . . . . ." (Gal. v. 19-23, N.I.V.).

There could not be a greater contrast, and the believer must decide whether his mind is going to be directed by the one or the other. He can be free from the slavery of the flesh by realizing his unity with Christ in death and resurrection and counting on this as Romans viii. 11 commands him to do. Or he can allow the old nature to put the chains of bondage on him again and thus he ceases to "please God". "So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God" (Rom. viii. 8).

> "You, however, are controlled not by the sinful nature but by the spirit, if the spirit of God lives in you. And if anyone does not have the spirit of Christ, he does not belong to Christ. But if Christ is in you, your body is dead because of sin, yet your spirit is alive because of righteousness. And if the spirit of Him Who raised Jesus from the dead is living in you, He Who raised Christ from the dead will also give life to your mortal bodies through His spirit, Who lives in you" (viii. 9-11, N.I.V.).

Again a small 's' could have been used in these verses in the A.V. It may be best to read it both ways and interpret the statements both of the Holy Spirit and His divine nature as a gift. It is important to note that the saved, although still having an old nature called 'flesh' are not considered as being "in the flesh" but rather "in the spirit", for the spirit (God the Spirit and His gift) indwells him.

The thought of indwelling is emphasized in Rom. vii. & viii. Sin indwells in vii. 17, 18, 20—"sin dwelleth in me" and the spirit of God and of Christ in viii. 9, 11. The believer has two "indwellers", but he has been completely freed from the bondage of the one in order to come under the control of the other. What does the Apostle mean by "the body is dead because of sin"? The N.E.B. rendering is helpful here:

> "But if Christ is dwelling within you, then although the body is a dead thing because you sinned, yet the spirit is life itself because you have been justified" (viii. 10).

"The body is dead" in the sense that it is subject to death resulting from sin. The believer now has the spirit of the risen Christ indwelling in him and that is itself a foretaste of the sure and certain hope that will be realized when in actual resurrection he will have a body "fashioned like the body of His glory" (Phil. iii. 20, 21) when he will be clothed with the permanent "house from heaven" (II Cor. v. 1-4). Then he will experience the "redemption of the body" of Rom. viii. 23.

No.15. viii. 12 - 27.
pp. 130 - 135

The Apostle concludes his argument concerning the two natures in the child of God by saying:

> "Therefore, brothers, we have an obligation—but it is not to the sinful nature, to live according to it. For if you live according to the sinful nature, you will die; but if by the Spirit you put to death the misdeeds of the body, you will live, because those who are led by the Spirit of God are sons of God" (Rom. viii. 12-14, N.I.V.).

"Mortify" or "put to death" is the equivalent of Rom. vi. 11 where the believer is urged to reckon as "dead" . . . . . and as "alive to God" and Col. iii. 5 is teaching the same thing. He is not asked to work his crucifixion out in his own strength, but to count on what God has already done to the old nature. When this is obeyed he can have the joy of divine leading in his daily life, because "those who are led by the Spirit of God are sons of God".

What constitutes divine leading? Volumes have been written on this, some of which is unscriptural and therefore misleading. Many think that it has to do with a special feeling or emotion. They say "I felt led to do this or that"; but the leading of God does not depend on anything so frail as our impressions or feelings.

If we look back to the typical people, Israel, we shall see that God's leading was a part of their redemption, "He led them forth by the right way" (Psa. cvii. 7). In fact, divine leading was Israel's experience right through the forty years in the wilderness (Deut. xxix. 5). The O.T. has a good deal to say about divine leading as a concordance will quickly show, and the sincere Bible student is recommended to study this carefully. The pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night gave God's earthly people sure and certain guidance (Exod. xiii. 21, 22). All they had to do was to watch them and not alter their position until these began to move. In this way they were infallibly guided by God Himself.

But it may be objected that in the N.T. we have nothing like this. This is true, but we may ask whether the Apostle Paul gives us any clue on this most important matter? When we read the divine account of his journeying, his witness and service during the period covered by the Acts of the Apostles we find that the Lord guided him by shut doors and open doors. God is sovereign in this. He is the One Who says that He "opened, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth" (Rev. iii. 7). In I.Cor.xvi.9 Paul says "a great door and effectual is opened unto me" and in II Cor. ii. 12, "a door was opened unto me of the Lord", and he asks for prayer in Col. iv. 3 that "God would open unto us a door of utterance". The opposite is seen in Acts xvi. 7, "When they (Paul and his companion) came to the border of Mysia, they tried to enter Bithynia, but the Spirit of Jesus would not allow them to" (N.I.V.). In other words God closed the door to Bithynia, thus guiding them infallibly to Europe. God still guides His children, for this is not reserved for special Christians. What is absolutely essential is an open mind that is ready to accept an open or shut door according to the Lord's will. Too often we come to the Lord with our minds already made up on a line of action and then we pray "Lord, guide me". Needless to say this is not the way to know the Lord's will or His leading. We can with certainty ask Him for shut doors or open doors according to His wisdom and purpose and this is much safer than depending on our feelings. We have seen tragedies result from the latter. But some may still object and say that in times of urgency we may need instantaneous guidance. If this is really true, we can still depend on the Lord, for with Him "all things are possible".

Paul goes on to say "for you did not receive a spirit that makes you a slave again to fear, but you received the Spirit of sonship" (Rom. viii. 15, N.I.V.). "God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind" (II Tim. i. 7). Adoption (Authorized Version) huiothesia means our placing as sons. We must not read our Western ideas of adoption into the N.T. Adoption was a legal term at that time, appointing the inheritance which could be to a person outside the family if the parent chose. Sir William Ramsay writes as follows:

> "Adoption was a kind of embryo will; the adopted son became the owner of the property and the property could pass to a person that was outside the family only through his being adopted . . . . . this ancient form of will was irrevocable and public. The terms 'son' and heir are interchangeable . . . . . it is remarkable that the adopted son should have a stronger position than the son by birth, yet it is so."
>
> (A Historical Commentary on St. Paul's epistle to the Galatians).*

[* - Those who wish to go into more detail should consult Just and the Justifier by Charles H. Welch, pages 208-213.]

It is essential to understand this, specially when dealing with Gal. iv. 1-7 and iii. 15. With our Western ideas an adopted child can never be in such a close relationship as a child by birth; not so in century one. We should therefore realize that believers are not outsiders who cannot have a claim on God as Father, but they are really "sons of God" (I.John.iii.1,2) by redemption and as such have a glorious inheritance in view. "If children, then heirs . . . . ." (Rom. viii. 17). The idea of the universal fatherhood of God is a popular misconception. God is not the Father of every human being but has a relationship as Creator. Only those who receive Christ by faith are brought into God's family.

> "Yet to all who received Him (Christ) . . . . . He gave the right to become children of God—children born not of natural descent, nor of human decision or a husband's will, but born of God" (John i. 12, 13, N.I.V.).

Only such, according to Rom. viii. 15, can come to God and call Him Father (Abba). This word is Aramaic and was the familiar term that children used to address their father. Such is the warm close relationship that redemption confers on the believer. It was used by the Lord Jesus in Mark xiv. 36 and it occurs in Gal. iv. 6. All the wealth of meaning that is covered by the word "father" is inherent in the Lord and in this, as in all other respects, He can never fail His children. In the passage we are considering the Apostle uses huioi, sons, and tekna, children interchangeably and we must be careful not to make too sharp a distinction between them. As Bishop Westcott says, the two words are complimentary, one expressing the privilege of inheritance and the other tender relationship. In Gal. iii. 23 - iv. 7 a contrast is made between infancy (under the law) and the status as sons (huioi) but here the word nepioi (infants) is used not tekna (children). We are "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him" (Rom. viii. 17). Many take these two statements as being identical in meaning, but one is conditional and the other is not. Scripture distinguishes between Hope and Prize. One is a gift by grace, the other depends upon faithfulness and service which may involve suffering.

Did not the Lord Jesus make a distinction between coming to Him and coming after Him (Matt. xvi.)? The latter involves the denying of self and taking up the cross (suffering) and it would be quite wrong to say that this is automatically true of all those who believe in Christ.

Suffering can largely be avoided by our hiding our light under a bushel. It was "to him that overcometh" (and this included suffering) that the promise was made that "he should sit with Me in My throne" (Rev. iii. 21). If we died with Christ we shall live with Him, but if we suffer (endure) we shall reign with Him (II Tim. ii. 12). The latter is conditional and we have no right to ignore the condition laid down by God. "Joint-heirs with Christ" is parallel to being on the throne (reigning) with Him in glory, but faithfulness and suffering is the necessary prelude. There is future glory that will be true of all the redeemed and this the Apostle now proceeds to expound; but there is also the added glory of the overcomer for "one star differeth from another in glory" (I.Cor.xv.41).

He goes on to say:

> "I consider that our present sufferings are not worth comparing with the glory that will be revealed in us" (viii. 18, N.I.V.).

A few years previously Paul had written to the Corinthian church "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" (II Cor. iv. 17). The suffering and the future glory are beyond comparison, but in our experience this is only true "while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal" (II Cor. iv. 18). If we look at the trials and suffering we may well be overwhelmed, but if we "look unto Jesus" (Heb. xii. 2) the present with all its testing fades away into insignificance; it is not worthy to be compared with the future glory in resurrection.

Not only does this glorious hope affect the believer; it extends to the whole creation:

> "The creation waits in eager expectation for the sons of God to be revealed. For the creation was subjected to frustration, not by its own choice, but by the will of the One Who subjected it, in hope that the creation itself will be liberated from its bondage to decay and brought into the glorious freedom of the children of God" (viii. 19-21, N.I.V.).

The whole universe has become affected by sin and failing. First of all with the fall of Satan and the angels that fell with him; then with Adam's failure and its effect upon the whole of mankind. Not only this but the earth itself was cursed for man's sake and still bears evidences of that curse as everyone knows who works with the soil. No wonder the Preacher declared that all was subjected to vanity (Eccles. i. 2), and the book of Ecclesiastes is a divine commentary on this. Emptiness, frustration, bondage now reigns over the earth. But the glorious redemptive work of the last Adam, reaches out to the whole universe and will at last break and banish this bondage so that it may realize the goal for which it was brought into being.

Now it groans and travails, yet with eager expectation looking for its release which will take place when the sons of God are manifested and this manifestation is bound up with the return of the Lord Jesus Christ in power and great glory. Then the "desert shall blossom as the rose" and the beauty of the primal creation be restored, finding its culmination in the new heavens and earth. Its longing is bound up with the believer's longing and hope.

> "Not only so, but we ourselves, who have the firstfruits of the Spirit, groan inwardly as we wait eagerly for our adoption as sons, the redemption of our bodies. For in this hope we were saved. But hope that is seen is no hope at all. Who hopes for what he already has? But if we hope for what we do not yet have, we wait for it patiently" (viii.23-25, N.I.V.).

The "firstfruits of the Spirit" can mean the indwelling of the Holy Spirit or His gift of the new nature. This is a present experience for the believer and is, as it were, a pledge or the first installment of the coming glory in resurrection. Now is the groaning and travail. II Cor. v. 2 concurs with Romans, "for in this tabernacle (i.e. body) we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven (i.e. the resurrection body)"; then will be the glorious release.

In order to sustain us at the present time we have the help and strengthening of the Holy Spirit specially in regard to our prayers:

> "We do not know what we ought to pray, but the Spirit Himself intercedes for us with groans that words cannot express. And He Who searches our hearts knows the mind of the Spirit, because the Spirit intercedes for the saints in accordance with God's will" (viii. 26, 27, N.I.V.).

What Christian has not felt the inadequacy of his prayer life? And what a comfort to know that our deepest longings which often we cannot express in words, the indwelling Holy Spirit interprets and intercedes for us to the Father. After all it is our attitude of mind which is of first importance and this is what God is continually looking at "for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart" (I Sam. xvi. 7).

No.16. viii. 28 - 39.
pp. 170 - 174

After dealing with the strengthening of the interceding Holy Spirit, the Apostle Paul continues:

> "And we know that in all things God works for the good of those who love Him, who have been called according to His purpose" (Rom. viii. 28, N.I.V.).

We should realize that "all things" include the dark and difficult experiences of life which God can overrule and turn to our good and this should encourage us when we go through such experiences. All is under His control and nothing can happen to us that is outside of His will. Even when we suffer through our own foolishness there are lessons that can be learned to our profit. Behind everything is a plan and purpose of God and this is where election and predestination come in. There are links in the divine chain embodying this plan and these the Apostle now enumerates:

> "For those God foreknew He also predestinated to be conformed to the likeness of His Son, that He might be the firstborn among many brothers. And those He predestined, He also called; those He called, He also justified; those He justified, He also glorified" (viii. 29, 30, N.I.V.).

Many regard the Bible merely as a book for devotional exercise but it is much more than this. It is a record of the plan God had in mind when He created the heaven and earth. We are too limited to have a full understanding of this, but the divine outline is clear for those who are willing and keen enough to search the Word of God* (* - such may be interested in the author's The Kingdom of God in heaven and on earth where this subject is dealt with). In order that this plan can never miscarry we have God working along the lines of foreknowledge, predestination, calling, justification and glorification. We may be sure that any plan left to created beings to carry out would finally founder and God cannot and will not allow this for then all His plan would be in vain. The first link is foreknowledge and we should note that it is put before predestination. We find that similarly foreknowledge is put before election in I Pet. i. 2. It is absolutely essential that this order be kept otherwise we shall land ourselves in all sorts of difficulties. If only Bible students had kept to God's order and gone no further than what is revealed in Scripture much profitless argument and dissension would have been avoided.

God knows everything, past, present and future; He is omniscient.

> ". . . . . I am God, there is none else; I am God and there is none like Me, declaring the end from the beginning and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all My pleasure" (Isa. xlvi. 9, 10).

God's purpose (counsel) will stand and be fulfilled because He knows the end from the beginning and can prepare in advance. If this was not so there could be no certainty of fulfillment. Something could happen in the future concerning which God had no knowledge and thus could overthrow His purpose. Those who do not accept the omniscience of God are throwing away the ground for complete assurance.

It is important that we do not read into foreknowledge what is not there. The word means just to know beforehand without exercising any control over future events. This is inherent in other words as we shall see, but God in past eternity was able to devise a wonderful plan because He has all-knowledge of the future, and therefore cannot be taken by surprise and He has all power and so can carry it out in every detail. C. H. Welch writes:

> "We shall be wise, therefore, to leave the word foreknowledge to mean just what it says and no more. The infinite knowledge of God makes it impossible that He shall not know who will preach and who will teach; where they will go, and when they will go; who shall hear, who reject, who accept, and who be left without a word of the gospel. The one great demand upon all who hear the gospel is that they believe the testimony of God concerning His Son. Whoever so believes passes into all the blessings purchased by the blood of Christ. Whoever does not believe makes God a liar (I John v. 10). If there were any idea of preordination in this, refusal to believe would be as much a part of God's predeterminate decree as is election to glory, and it would not be possible to make God a liar by so refusing His testimony . . . . . We therefore understand the passage > before us to declare that God, Who is not under the limitations of time and space as we are, and needs no external evidence to attain to this knowledge, knows all things, past, present and future: knows them perfectly and completely, and can, therefore, act with complete certainty where, to us, all would appear in a contingent light" (Just and the Justifier, pp. 234, 235).

Some imagine foreknowledge to be equivalent to predestination, in which case Paul has written "Whom he did predestinate, he also did predestinate", which makes nonsense. Proorizo means literally to mark off beforehand for some specific purpose. Surely the Creator has a right to do this. If a man invents something, has he not the right to use this for the purpose he had in mind? What we have here in Romans is not a hard determinist philosophy, but the loving plan of One Who purposes to bless human beings beyond their dreams or comprehension.

These foreknown ones are to be "conformed to the likeness of His Son" (verse 29). He Himself is the image of God Who as Spirit is invisible (Col. i. 15), and these are conformed to that image, so in one sense they are replicas of God. But one very important fact is stressed here. The Lord Jesus is first among them all, for this is the meaning of the Greek word rendered "firstborn". It is fatal to base doctrine on the English word. Col. i. 15, 16 insists that Christ is the firstborn of all creation, not because He was the first creature born but because "by Him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth" (Col. i. 16). In other words as Creator He is and must be first with the object stated in verse 18, "that in all things He might have the first place" (pre-eminence). Professor F. F. Bruce and Dr. W. J. Martin state:

> "The word firstborn had long since ceased to be used exclusively in its literal sense, just as prime (from Latin primus—first) with us. The Prime Minister is not the first minister we have had; he is the most pre-eminent. A man in the 'prime' of his life has long since left the first part of his life behind. Similarly, firstborn came to denote not priority in time but pre-eminence in rank" (The Deity of Christ).

In the chain of God's purpose, predestination is followed by "calling" and to this calling those concerned respond by faith in Christ and this leads to justification or acquittal as Romans makes perfectly clear. Eternal life and future glory are impossible apart from the righteousness conferred by justification for God plans a universe where sin, death and all its consequences are entirely absent and therefore no sinner as such can have a part in it.

The final link in the chain of God's plan is glorification, "those He justified He also glorified" (verse 30) and here is the wonderful climax. So great is Paul's confidence in the Lord that he can describe a future event in a past tense as though it had already happened, and thus the great purpose comes to completion. Dr. C. K. Barrett's comments here are worth repeating:

> "Predestination is the most comfortable of all Christian doctrines, if men will accept it in its Biblical form, and not attempt to pry into it with questions which it does not set out to answer. It is not a 'quantitive limitation of God's action, but its qualitative definition', the final statement of the truth that justification, and in the end, salvation also, are by grace alone and through faith alone" (The Epistle to the Romans, pp. 170, 171).

Here then we have the purpose of God's predestinating grace—the creation of a new race displaying the Creator's glory. The Apostle Paul now concludes this portion of the epistle and deals with the final triumph of the believer.

> "What, then, shall we say in response to this? If God is for us, who can be against us? He Who did not spare His own Son, but gave Him up for us al--how will He not also . . . graciously give us all things? Who will bring any charge against those whom God has chosen? It is God Who justifies. Who is he that condemns? Christ Jesus who died—more than that, who was raised to life—is at the right hand and is also interceding for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall trouble or hardship or persecution or famine or nakedness or danger or sword? As it is written 'For your sake we face death all day long; we are considered as sheep to be slaughtered'. No, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him Who loved us. For I am convinced that neither death nor life, neither angels nor demons, neither the present nor the future, nor anything else in all creation, will be able to separate us from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (verses 31-39, N.I.V.).

In verse 31 the point to note is not are we on God's side, but is He on ours and assuredly He is, and so the only conclusion is if God is on our side who, or what, can be against us? The answer is nothing. The cost to God for our justification, salvation and final glorification is beyond our comprehension—"He that spared not His own Son". There is surely here an allusion to Gen. xxii. 12 where Abraham does not spare the promised son, Isaac, and it is significant that the LXX here uses Paul's word 'spared' in verse 12. There now follows rhetorical questions. The answer to each can either be a statement of fact or a question as the RSV text and margin show. Who shall bring any charge against God's elect? Will God (the Judge of all) who justifies us? Who can condemn us? Will Christ Who died for us and is now risen and at the right hand of God? Will the One Who suffered for us, bore our sins and endured the shameful death of the cross, will He condemn us? The answer is decidedly "NO" or all He has done is in vain. He too is interceding for us as the Holy Spirit is (verses 27 and 34). What a strong position we are in then! These two Persons of the Godhead constantly praying for us!

The Apostle now lists those who are our enemies and asks "Can these separate us from Christ?" The answer again is "Certainly not". He refers to persecution and possibly this had already fallen on the Roman church. It was already dangerous to profess Christianity and he quotes Psa. xliv. 22, "we are counted as sheep for the slaughter". Paul's reference to "principalities and powers" are evidently the evil spirits forces under the control of Satan mentioned in Eph. vi. with which our warfare is now concerned. Height and depth were technical terms in astrology and later appeared in Gnosticism. These spirit forces were believed to control the movements of the planets and the destinies of men. "In all these things we are more than conquerors" (literally super-conquerors). The Apostle concludes by saying that nothing in the realm of the whole universe can sever the children of God from him.

The chapter starts with "no condemnation" and ends with "no separation". What a triumph for the believer! And all because of the great plan of God and redeeming grace! If only we could constantly remember these glorious truths even when pain and problems are pressing down upon us, how much easier would be the pathway that leads to eternal glory!

No.17. ix. 1 - 12.
pp. 181 - 185

The closing words of Rom. viii. end the inner section of this epistle, which dealt with man in general, whether Jew or Gentile, in relation to Adam. Abraham and Israel as a nation were passed by. But that does not mean that the position of Israel with its close covenant ties with God had to ceased to count. This favoured nation had been in the forefront of God's purposes for His Kingdom on earth since the time of Abraham and that relationship had not yet been altered. The Apostle's answer to the question as to whether Israel had been cast off by God is perfectly clear. "God hath not cast away His people which He foreknew" (Rom. xi. 2), and any system of theology that demands that He had done so at this point must be completely wrong.

Not only this, but Paul's love for his brethren and his longing that they should be saved is evident from this new section of the epistle:

> "I have great sorrow and unceasing anguish in my heart. For I could wish that I myself were cursed and cut off from Christ for the sake of my brothers, those of my own race, the people of Israel" (ix. 2-4, N.I.V.).
>
> "Brothers, my heart's desire and prayer to God for the Israelites is that they may be saved" (x. 1, N.I.V.).

Israel's attitude to the gospel, their place in God's scheme, God's elective purpose and the position of the believing remnant must be considered. The key thought of justification is not forgotten for the word righteousness occurs 12 times in chaps. ix.-xi. (ix. 30; xi. 31, 32). One might think that with the glorious conclusion to chapter viii., the theme of the epistle had been brought to an end. In fact there are some expositions of Romans that end with chapter viii.! But not so; the problem of Israel's unbelief and their attitude to the gospel is now dealt with. This new section of Romans is a divine commentary on what was happening in the period covered by the Acts of the Apostles. Those who do not seriously consider its testimony and receive it as truth, are bound to be defective in their knowledge of God's purposes.

Chapter ix. begins with sorrow, but the section ending with chapter xi. ends with song (xi. 33-36). The Apostle was racked with pain as he considered Israel's unbelief and rejection of the gospel and was willing to sacrifice himself for their good, as Moses of old was—"Yet, now if Thou wilt forgive their sin—and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of Thy book which Thou hast written" (Exod. xxxii. 32).

> "I speak the truth in Christ—I am not lying, my conscience confirms it in the Holy Spirit—I have great sorrow and unceasing anguish in my heart. For I could wish that I myself were cursed and cut off from Christ for the sake of my brothers, those of my own > race, the people of Israel. Theirs is the adoption as sons; theirs the divine glory, the covenants, the receiving of the law, the temple worship and the promises. Theirs are the patriarchs, and from them is traced the human ancestry of Christ, Who is God over all, for ever praised! Amen" (Rom. ix. 1-5, N.I.V.).

Paul's sorrow is expressed first of all, not in their fall, but in their heights of privilege bestowed on them by God and this made that fall all the more terrible. There were many nations before Israel existed, but the Lord passed them by and chose Israel as His firstborn and this, as we have seen, was linked with an inheritance and this was secured by eternal promises relating to the seed and to the land. "Israel is My Son, even My firstborn" (Exod. iv. 22) and as such was "above all the nations that are upon the earth" (Deut. xiv. 2). To them therefore pertained the promises first made by God to the patriarchs Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

To Israel pertained the external evidence of God's presence among them, the shekinah glory in the Tabernacle (Exod. xl. 34) and in the Temple (I Kings viii. 10-11). Not only these but all the covenants of Scripture with one exception belonged to Israel, the exception being the covenant with Noah and mankind. There is evidence for the singular here, the covenant referring to the law of Moses, but the plural is to be preferred for Ephesians ii. 12 uses the plural in defining Israel's covenant privileges.

The Law with God's standard of righteousness eclipsing any other human code of conduct was their possession and not only this but the service and worship of God and the divine ceremonial that prophetically looked forward to the Person and the work of Christ was expressed in their Temple at Jerusalem.

Theirs also were the promises, specially the Messianic promises, "the sure mercies of David" (Isa. lv. 3; Acts xiii. 23, 32-34) and the climax is reached in the Apostle's last statement "of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came" (verse 5).

In Eph. ii. Paul again summarized the divine privileges of Israel by noting in contrast the position of the unsaved Gentile "that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world" (Eph. ii. 12).

With this wealth of blessing and privilege no wonder the Psalmist wrote concerning Israel:

> "He (God) hath not dealt so with any nation: and as for His judgments, they (the nations) have not known them. Praise ye the Lord" (Psa. cxlvii. 20).

Something must be said about the words following the statement "as concerning the flesh Christ came". The A.V. concludes the statement by saying "Christ . . . . . Who is over all, God blessed for ever", or the N.I.V. "Who is God over all, for ever praised! Amen". However, some versions put a full stop after God and then finish with a doxology, "as concerning the flesh Christ came. God be blessed for ever!" Erasmus was one of the first to suggest this. What has to be decided is (1) is this latter translation possible from the Greek and (2) does it fit the context? If this second rendering is admitted then the verse does not directly affirm the deity of Christ.

Charles Hodge states here:

> (1) The relative 'who' must agree with the nearest antecedent. There is no other subject in the context sufficiently prominent to make a departure from this ordinary rule, in this case, even plausible. "Of Whom Christ came Who is", etc. Who is? Certainly Christ, for He alone is spoken of.
>
> (2) The context requires this interpretation because, as Paul was speaking of Christ, it would be very unnatural thus suddenly to change the subject, and break out into a doxology to God . . . . . it was the very object of the Apostle to set forth the great honour to the Jews of having Christ born among them and this of course would lead to his presenting the dignity of the Redeemer in the strongest light . . . . . The uniform expression (for a doxology) is "blessed be God" and never "God be blessed". The word "blessed" always stands first and the word "God" after it with the article. Often as such cases occur in the Greek and Hebrew Scriptures, there is, it is believed, no case of contrary arrangement. (Romans, pp. 300, 301).

Professor F. F. Bruce writes:

> "The former construction (i.e. of the A.V. and N.I.V.) is more in keeping with the general structure of the sentence (cp. 1:25) where the words 'Who is blessed for ever, Amen" are not an independent ascription of praise, but form the integral peroration of the sentence. It is further supported by the consideration that something is required to balance the phrase 'as concerning the flesh'. The Messiah, 'as concerning the flesh', that is with regard to His human descent—came of a long line of Israel ancestors but as regards His eternal being, 'He is God over all, blessed for ever'. A formal parallel to this antithesis appears in 1:3 where Christ is said to have been born a descendant of David 'according to the flesh', but installed as the Son of God with power by the dispensation of the Spirit."

Professor Bruce goes on to say that while Paul is not in the habit of calling Christ God in this direct way, yet for him Christ is the One in Whom, through Whom and unto Whom all things were created (Col. i. 16); in Whom dwells all the fullness of the Godhead bodily (Col. ii. 9). The title Lord is given to Christ by Paul as the equivalent of the Hebrew Yahweh (Jehovah); the way in which he applies Isa. xlv. 23 in Phil. ii. 10 indicates that, to him, the confession "Jesus Christ is Lord" means "Jesus Christ is Jehovah".

Moreover Paul does not hesitate to describe Christ as "our great God and our Saviour" in Titus ii. 13 and he was well aware that the writer of Hebrews in quoting Psa. xlv. applies the words "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever" to Christ (Heb. i. 8).*

[* - Readers are referred to the author's booklet The Lord Jesus Christ, God or only Man?]

Coming back to Rom. ix. 5 there can be no doubt that these lines are not a doxology to God for that does not fit the train of thought. Rather they show how exalted Christ is, which fits the train of thought perfectly. Those who wish to take this further should consult The Epistle to the Romans by Sanday and Headlam, pp. 232-238.

Paul now proceeds to deal with the failure of Israel and he brings in the truth of election, not to decide who would be saved or who would be lost, but to show what individuals and nations God has chosen to work out His purpose for a kingdom on this earth. And who is there that can criticize or judge Him for so doing? The marvel is that He uses sinful and failing human beings at all. Only a God of infinite grace would do this.

First of all the word "Israel" must be correctly understood. Who constitute Israel? Some may answer "The physical descendants of Abraham", but they would be wrong.

> "It is not as though God's Word had failed. For not all who are descended from Israel are Israel. Nor because they are his descendants are they all Abraham's children. On the contrary 'It is through Isaac that your offspring will be reckoned'. In other words, it is not the natural children who are God's children, but it is the children of the promise who are regarded as Abraham's offspring" (verses 6-8, N.I.V.).

Abraham had eight sons by Hagar, Keturah and Sarah. If physical descent constituted a claim then seven other nations might have disputed Israel's rights, but the deciding factor was decided by the Sovereignty of God. Even sons born to Isaac do not share equal privileges. Esau and Jacob were both children of the same mother yet Esau is rejected and Jacob chosen.

> "For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works but of Him that calleth; it was said unto her, 'The elder shall serve the younger'." (Rom. ix. 11, 12).

Not only this but from time to time outsiders have joined the Jews and accepted Judaism. In 800A.D. the ruler and many of the ruling classes of the Khazars, a people living near the Caspian Sea, joined Judaism. Even in Romans itself we have the distinction between the natural and spiritual seed brought forward:

> "For he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh; But he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God" (Rom. ii. 28, 29).

The condition of the Jewish nation today is like the parable of the tares and true wheat. They are so similar that only an inerrant God can separate them without making any mistake. He surely will do this before His earthly kingdom becomes a reality. This means that while it is true that the false seed is among Israel, the true seed are there too, all known to the Lord and this makes anti-semitism a dangerous thing, remembering what God said to Abraham. "I will bless them that bless thee and curse him that curseth thee" (Gen. xii. 3), for it is through the true seed coming through Isaac that constitutes the real Israel in God's sight and it is through this channel, finally redeemed and saved, that His elective purpose works to bring in His earthly kingdom; election and the power of God guarantee that this finally will not fail.

No.18. ix. 13 - x. 11.

Election then dominates the context of Romans we are considering and again we stress that it is brought in here to guarantee the fulfillment of the great plan of God. The Lord conceives the plan and chooses what human agents He will use for carrying it out to completion. No one is in a position to say this is unreasonable or unjust. It is in this context that the example of Pharaoh is brought in. The hardening of Pharaoh's heart has always been a problem, but so many try to judge God without considering all the facts given in the O.T. and thus they make their own problems and denigrate God.

God Himself states the purpose of His dealings with Pharaoh, "For the Scripture says to Pharaoh, I raised you up for this very purpose, that I might display My power in you and that My Name might be proclaimed in all the earth" (Rom. ix. 17). See Exod.xv.14; Josh. ii. 10; ix. 9; and I Sam. iv. 8 for the effect on the nations of the plagues and the Exodus. That power was displayed in rescuing the people of God from the iron grip and cruel bondage of a vicious tyrant. But some will say, it was not just for God to punish Pharaoh seeing that He hardened Pharaoh's heart. How could Pharaoh respond and be obedient if God dealt with him in this way? But let us take account of the facts. Three words are used for 'hardening'.

Chazaq to brace up (13 occurrences).
Qashah make hard (2 occurrences).
Kabed become heavy (6 occurrences).

Three times the Lord threatened to do this: (Exod. iv. 21; vii. 3; xiv. 4), but held back till Pharaoh's actions made his attitude of rebellion quite clear. Four times Pharaoh hardened his own heart before the Lord's hardening (Exod. viii. 15, 19, 32; ix. 34, 35). The consequence was that the Lord in His sovereignty did not alter Pharaoh's resolve to oppose Him. He allowed the hardness to continue (x. 1; xi. 10; xiv. 8). Even the plagues had an element of mercy behind them, for every one was sent by God to shake and change this man's obstinacy and contempt (v. 2). Man of himself deserves nothing. If God deals with him it must be on the lines of mercy and grace and he is in no position to put God into the dock and judge Him for His actions.

> "One of you will say of me, 'Then why does God still blame us? For who resists His will?' But who are you, O man, to talk back to God? Shall what is formed say to him who formed it, 'Why did you make me like this?' Does not the potter have the right to make out of the same lump of clay some pottery for noble purposes and some for common use? What if God, choosing to show His wrath and make His power known, bore with great patience the objects of His wrath—prepared for destruction?" (Rom.ix.19-22, N.I.V.).

The Apostle will not allow any questioning of God's right to do what He wills with His own. Who fits any to destruction? Not God; they fitted themselves by their rebellious attitude of mind and actions that follow. It is absolutely wrong to imagine or teach that God "endured with much longsuffering" vessels that in His own sovereign will He had Himself "fitted to destruction". What God has done is with the object of showing His mercy towards those whom He calls whether Jews or Gentiles. The fact that, at the end of the Acts period God laid aside Israel in unbelief, was no more against His promises than the rejection of the ten tribes who were carried away into captivity by the Assyrians; for, although thousands were deported, yet a remnant returned to perpetuate the race, and it is this doctrine of the remnant that is so important to understand. If any reproached God for the smallness of the remnant, Paul says that such should be glad to think that a remnant had been spared at all, for, as Isaiah had said, the people had become like Sodom and Gomorrah and the Lord, but for His mercy, might have left them all to perish (verse 29).

The conclusion of this section of Romans is clear. No one is in a position to criticize God or His actions, denying the fact that He has a right to do what He wills with His own, for the whole world has been brought guilty before God (iii. 19) and so has no claim upon a holy God Who is Judge of all the earth. He is a God of mercy and grace and no sinner can be entitled to this.

Paul goes on to sum up:

> "What then shall we say? That the Gentiles, who did not pursue righteousness, have obtained it, a righteousness that is by faith; but Israel, who pursued a law of righteousness, has not attained it, Why not? Because they pursued it not by faith, but as it were by works. They stumbled over the 'stumbling stone'. As it is written, See, I lay in Zion a stone that causes men to stumble and a rock that makes them fall, and the one who trusts in Him will never be put to shame" (Rom. ix. 30-33, N.I.V.).

The attitude to righteousness of these two classes, Gentiles and Jews, is made clear. The former accepted God's verdict on them as being guilty sinners and then accepted His gracious provision of righteousness through Christ's sacrificial work. The Jews on the other hand imagined that they could keep the law of Moses by their own efforts and attain to a standard of righteousness that God would accept. This might have been regarded as being blameless in the sight of men, but not before God. Even Paul could regard his pre-Christian life as being blameless (Phil. iii. 6), but he soon learned that his own righteousness was worthless.

The Apostle quotes from Isaiah and combines two verses. Isa. viii. 14 and xxviii. 16 whose common term is a stone laid by God. Isaiah foretells that the future Assyrian invasion will sweep over the land of Israel like the waters of a flood. The only safe place will be God Himself likened to a rock upon which they can stand safely. But those who do not trust the Lord will be swept by the flood against this rock and come to disaster. To them it will become "a stone of stumbling" and a "rock of offence". Peter quotes the same references in I Pet. ii. 8 and also combines another, Psa. cxvii. 22. These two opposite effects have always followed the preaching concerning Christ and His redemptive work. Some believe and build on Him as a secure foundation for eternity; others reject, to them He is a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence, as I.Cor.i.18,23,24 declares. Just as the sun both melts wax and hardens clay, so this twofold effect goes on wherever Christ and the gospel are faithfully preached. It was true in the Acts period and explains Israel's tragic failure, because they sought to justify themselves by their own efforts and not by the way of faith in Christ. It seems unbelievable that a people chosen by the Lord and instructed by Him through the O.T. centuries by type and shadow, pointing forward to their Messiah, King and Saviour, should end in this way. They thus brought spiritual blindness, deafness, and hardness of heart upon themselves from which they as a nation are still suffering today. How wonderful to know that this is not the end of the story, for this very section of Romans looks to the future when at last they will believe and be saved and thus become the channel of God's blessing to the whole earth. But this will be by the way of faith, not works, which they refused when the preaching of the gospel of grace was carried out in the Acts period.

Chapter x. opens with the Apostle Paul's concern for his nation which he has expressed before:

> "Brothers, my heart's desire and prayer to God for the Israelites is that they may be saved. For I can testify about them that they are zealous for God, but their zeal is not based on knowledge.
> Since they did not know the righteousness that comes from God and sought to establish their own, they did not submit to God's righteousness. Christ is the end of the law so that there may be righteousness for everyone who believes" (Rom. x. 1-4, N.I.V.).

Many people today are like Israel described here, keen and active, but this is not the same as being ruled by the truth of God. How often we hear about a certain Christian, "but he is so zealous and sincere", forgetting that it is possible to be zealous in the wrong thing.

> "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Prov. xiv. 12).

Neither zeal or sincerity is enough in God's sight. This is where Israel stumbled and fell so badly. They had never learned the lesson that Paul the Pharisee had, namely, that Christ put an end to the law as a means of acquiring favour with God. "Christ is the end of the law" (verse 4). Telos, 'end' can mean either goal or termination. The Lord Jesus provides the very righteousness which God demands, making all human attempts to produce it superfluous and useless. The two ways of law and faith are illustrated by two quotations from the Pentateuch. The first one is from Lev. xviii. 5 "Ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgments; which if a man do, he shall live in them". But it must be said straight away that these words do not teach that a man could obtain eternal life by his efforts to keep the law. The blessing on those who kept God's commandments resulted in prolong life and enjoyment in the land of promise. They would live long in the land "which the Lord thy God giveth thee" (Exod. xx. 12).

The way of faith is illustrated by a quotation from Moses' farewell to Israel recorded in Deut. xxx. 11-14:

> "For this commandment which I command thee this day, it is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off. It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us to > heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go over the sea for us and bring it unto us, that we may hear it and do it? But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it."

So the Apostle Paul quotes these two references thus:

> "Moses describes in this way the righteousness that is by the law: 'The man who does these things will live by them'. But the righteousness that is by faith says: Do not say in your heart 'Who will ascend into heaven?' (that is, to bring Christ down), or 'Who will descend into the deep?' (that is, to bring Christ up from the dead). But what does it say? The word is near you; it is in your mouth and in your heart, that is, the word of faith we are proclaiming. That if you confess with your mouth, 'Jesus is Lord', and believe in your heart that God raised Him from the dead, you will be saved. For it is with your heart that you believe and are justified, and it is with your mouth that you confess and are saved. As the Scripture says, 'He that believes in Him will not be disappointed'." (Romans x. 5-11, N.I.V.).

There is no need for Israel or any one else to reach heaven and bring Christ down. The Incarnation had already accomplished that. Nor was there any need to bring Christ from the dead, for His resurrection and ascension was an accomplished fact. The word of faith was so near that it was in their minds. They had only to exercise it and believe God's testimony concerning Christ, confessing, proclaiming Him to be the One Lord, then this would result in their salvation. Note how the resurrection is an essential part of the gospel of grace (I Cor. xv. 3, 4). Too often it is forgotten by preachers who limit their gospel to Calvary. "If Christ be not risen from the dead . . . . . your faith is also vain" (I.Cor.xv. 14). We do not proclaim a dead Christ but a risen Saviour, Who is the One Lord of the Bible, Old Testament and New, that is, Jehovah, the great almighty God. The Lord Jesus is assuredly "our great God and Saviour" (Titus ii. 13, R.S.V.), and all who put their trust in Him will never be confounded, that is, disappointed or "let down".

No.19. x. 12 - xi. 16.
pp. 225 - 229

The Apostle Paul goes on to state that there is no distinction between Jew and Gentile:

> "For there is no difference between Jew and Gentile—the same Lord is Lord of all and richly blesses all who call on Him, for, 'everyone who calls on the name of the Lord will be saved'." (Rom. x. 12-13, N.I.V.).

All without distinction have sinned and all without distinction have the same Lord who will hear their call and pour out His rich blessing on them. The Apostle quotes exactly the LXX version of Joel ii. 32 and then, by constructing a chain of connecting links, shows why Israel failed to do this very thing. At the same time he emphasizes the limits of human responsibility. A righteous God does not expect the impossible.

> "How then can they call on the One they have not believed in? And how can they believe in the One of Whom they have not heard? And how can they hear without someone preaching to them? And how can they preach unless they are sent? As it is written, 'How beautiful are the feet of those who bring good news!'." (x. 14-15, N.I.V.).

These queries are really self-evident. Men will only call for salvation upon one whom they believe or trust. And to do this, someone must make Christ known to them and these come not of their own choice or authority, but because they have been sent by the Lord, so the whole process begins and ends with Him. Paul now shows from the Word of God that He did not fail to send out His preachers.

> "It is written, how beautiful are the feet of those who bring the good news", and here he quotes from Isa. lii. 7. How was it then that Israel did not believe, for they had the message first, before the Gentiles? This was not unforeseen for this very context deals with the small response from those who heard—"who has believed our message?" (Isa. liii. 1).

To a large extent the gracious message to Israel went unheeded and the opposite of faith reigned, namely, unbelief. How does faith originate? Many have asked this question again and again. There is only one answer:

> ". . . . . faith comes from hearing the message, and the message is heard through the word of Christ" (x. 17).

Many seem to imagine that faith can be produced by will-power or by holy living. It can only come by constantly listening to the word of Him Who is the Truth (John xiv. 6). Then it becomes the most reasonable thing to believe Him Who cannot lie or mislead. Christians who keep their Bibles closed are never likely to have big faith!

In Paul's day some may have imagined that the people of Israel did not all hear the message.

> "But I ask, did they not hear? Of course they did. Their voice has gone out into all the earth, their words to the ends of the world. Again I ask, did not Israel understand? First, Moses says, 'I will make you envious by those who are not a nation. I will make you angry by a nation that has no understanding'. And Isaiah boldly says, 'I was found by those who did not seek me; I revealed Myself to those who did not ask for Me'. But concerning Israel he says, 'All day long I have held out My hands to a disobedient and obstinate people'." (x. 18-21, N.I.V.).

Yes, Israel had heard. Wherever there was a company of Israelites the gospel had been preached. Here Paul quotes Psa. xix. which deals with the witness of God's creation to the world. The point here is that wherever there were Jews, there the good news had been proclaimed. Nor could it be said that Israel did not understand. Their root trouble was they would not obey. They showed envy and jealousy when the Gentiles accepted the message but they would not believe it themselves. This fulfilled the word of the prophets and here the Song of Moses is quoted (Deut. xxxii.) where the ingratitude of Israel is described, and then God says:

> "I will move them to jealousy with those which are not a people; I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation" (Deut. xxxii. 21).

So we see that unbelieving and disobedient Israel will be put to shame by believing Gentiles who had nothing like the privileges of Israel. All through the Acts period, the record shows that God's hands were extended in blessing and forgiveness to Israel who had just committed their climax sin in murdering their King, Saviour and Messiah. The most important statement of Peter (Acts iii. 19-26) should be carefully considered here. In spite of this, Israel still refused to respond. They were indeed a disobedient and contradicting people (verse 21).

Chapter xi. continues with God's purpose for Israel in spite of their failure and unfaithfulness. We shall see that, although this failure is written all over Israel's history, yet it was not total failure, for there was always a number, sometimes few, who responded to the call of God. God always saw to it that there was a faithful remnant in Israel, so that He was never without a witness in the nation.

On the surface one might think that with all Israel's unbelief and unreliability, God would cast the nation aside and find other means of carrying out His earthly kingdom purposes. But no, for chapter xi. commences:

> "I ask then, did God reject His people? By no means! I am an Israelite myself, a descendant of Abraham, from the tribe of Benjamin. God did not reject His people, whom He foreknew" (Rom. xi. 1, 2, N.I.V.).

In fact in His foreknowledge He knew that this would happen and so He had provided for this very thing. God is never taken by surprise. He had not cast away His earthly people at this point any more than in earlier days when they failed Him. Yet there are a number who believe that Israel was cast off by God at the cross. In fact this view is very popular among evangelical expositors. How wrong they are! Such ideas cloud the mind and the purpose revealed in the Acts of the Apostles and is quite contrary to this definite statement in Rom. xi.

The Apostle Paul's answer to the question is settled first of all by referring to himself. "I am", he says, "a true Israelite", and "God has not cast me off", nor for that matter was this true of numbers of Jews who had responded to the Gospel after the resurrection and ascension. Later on in the chapter he is going to give the important statement concerning God and His dealings with men. In verse 29 we read "God's gifts and His call are irrevocable". That is to say, what He gives in grace in His plan, He never withdraws or changes His mind, and upon this rock of truth there must be real future of Israel (Psa.lxxxix.28-37), and in this context we shall be instructed how this is so.

In the days of Elijah, a time of deep national apostasy, there was a faithful remnant of 7,000 who refused to worship Baal. In the A.V. of Rom. xi. 2 "Wot ye not", the word 'wot' is the archaic present tense of the verb 'to wit'.

> "Don't you know what the Scripture says in the passage about Elijah—how he appealed to God against Israel: 'Lord, they have killed your prophets and torn down your > altars; I am the only one left, and they are trying to kill me'. and what was God's answer to him? 'I have reserved for Myself seven thousand who have not bowed the knee to Baal' (I Kings xix. 18). So too, at the present time there is a remnant chosen by grace. And if by grace, then it is no longer by works; If it were, grace would no longer be grace" (verses 2-6, N.I.V.).

God sees to it that He always has a witness and this is an act of sheer grace on His part. As for the rest of the unbelieving nation, they came under God's judicial penalty for their disobedience and in connection with this three O.T. scriptures are quoted:

> "God gave them a spirit of stupor, eyes so that they could not see and ears so that they could not hear, to this very day. And David says, 'May their table become a snare and a trap, a stumbling block and a retribution for them. May their eyes by darkened so that they cannot see, and their backs be bent for ever'." (verses 8-10, N.I.V.).

The quotations are from Isa. xxix. 10, Deut. xxix. 4, and Psa. lxix. 22 (LXX). When Israel made it perfectly clear that they were not going to believe and obey God's Word they then were disciplined by God and left in their darkened state. But one thing is perfectly clear. Israel did not fall so as to rise no more:

> "Again I ask, did they stumble so as to fall beyond recovery? Not at all! Rather, because of their transgressions, salvation has come to the Gentiles to make Israel envious. But if their transgression means riches for the world, and their loss means riches for the Gentiles, how much greater riches will their fullness bring!" (verses 11 and 12, N.I.V.).

These verses give the Apostle's interpretation of the words from the Song of Moses (Deut. xxxii. 21) already quoted in x. 19. When Israel began to see that God's blessing was resting upon the despised Gentile and the nation's unique position was slipping away, it might have the effect of stirring them up to belief and response. It is important to note that this is the divine reason given for the admission of the far-off Gentile for blessing. It was not to form the church revealed in Ephesians and Colossians, but to wake up slumbering Israel to realize what they were losing. Paul's argument is that if through the failure of the chosen people of Israel great blessing has resulted for the Gentiles, how much more blessing will come when they are converted and at God's disposal again! It will be like resurrection life to a dead world! The Apostle uses the word pleroma, translated fullness. It means "full strength" or "complement".

He continues:

> "If part of the dough offered as firstfruits is holy, then the whole batch is holy; if the root is holy, so are the branches" (Rom. x. 16, N.I.V.).

Paul uses two figures here. The former is an allusion to Numb. xv. 20. He regards the faithful Jewish remnant as a pledge of the final salvation of all Israel. The second is likened to a tree where the condition of the root vitally affects the branches and this leads Paul to develop his parable of the olive tree which has given such difficulty to expositors. One thing should be evident; it must be interpreted strictly with the context in view and any attempt to avoid this or go over its bound must be resisted, otherwise we shall only be misled.

Dear Fellow-members,

We give thanks that by the grace of God we are able to issue another volume of The Berean Expositor. During the past two years reprinting of old bound volumes that have been out of stock for a long time has continued, and we are now pleased to report that the backlog of missing volumes has now almost been made up. We shall continue reprinting until a complete stock of bound volumes is available to our readers.

In addition, a new Index is being prepared for these volumes. As we wish to make this as comprehensive as possible it will involve a great deal of time in search and notation. Nevertheless, when ready it will provide an analysis of Bible exposition which we believe will be of considerable value to the earnest Bible student.

The level of distribution of the bi-monthly magazine has been maintained, and has shown a slight increase during the past two years. We take this opportunity of thanking all friends who have continued to help us actively, financially, and prayerfully in this work. Without this valuable help this witness for the "good deposit of truth" could not be maintained so well for so long. May we carry on as faithfully as we can to "redeem the time" as long as this age of grace lasts. To Christ be all the glory.

Yours by His Grace,

No.17. Loneliness.
pp. 10 - 12

"I watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the housetop" (Psa. cii. 7).

Introduction

Loneliness might be described as the condition of being alone. As a person becomes older, friends move to other districts, or pass away, and so an old person may feel isolated and friendless. Depression and despondency may follow. On the other hand, a person may be surrounded by many people and yet feel lonely. One may take a trip to London and stand at one of the busy junctions, such as the corner near the Bank of England, and see so many people rushing hither and thither, but they are all strangers and you are not recognized or noticed. "I watch and am as a sparrow alone upon the housetop." There is a feeling of loneliness if one is deserted by one's friends, as is indicated by the Psalmist when he wrote "Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me" (Psa. xli. 9), and these words apply also to the Lord Himself, when He was betrayed.

The Lord spoke of the sparrow as an example to show His love and care for all, including the lonely, and to give His assurance of the provision He makes for each one.

> "Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God? But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows" (Luke xii. 6, 7. See also Matt. x. 29-31).

When we feel neglected and like a sparrow alone upon the housetop, let us remember that God is with us and He has not forgotten us. As he provides for the sparrow, He will provide for us. Remember, too, the promises made to Moses and Joshua, "He will not fail thee, neither forsake thee: fear not, neither be dismayed" (Deut. xxxi. 8; Josh. i. 9; Heb. xiii. 5). Christ did not forsake His disciples but made provision for them when He had to leave them. He sent the Holy Spirit to be their Comforter and guide them (John xiv. 16-18).

Elijah

The servants of the Lord frequently had experiences of loneliness. The O.T. prophets were sent with messages from the Lord, often with warnings and admonitions, and their task made them sometimes unpopular, and often lonely men. Elijah is an excellent example.

At first we read of the unpopular message "there shall not be dew nor rain these (three) years" (I Kings xvii. 1). He ran away to hide by the brook Cherith. Later he went to Zarephath. Read the full story in chapters xvii. and xviii.

The challenge of the 450 prophets of Baal is exciting. Let the God that answers by fire be the true God. Baal could not answer but God sent the fire, and later He sent the rain.

But the story as recorded in I Kings xix. is related to our study. Elijah's life was threatened, so he ran away with his servant. At Beersheba he left his servant and went alone into the wilderness. Under the juniper tree we hear Elijah saying, "It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life; for I am not better than my fathers". He was very depressed. An angel gave him refreshment twice and he went for 40 days in the strength of that food. "What doest thou here Elijah?" asked the Lord. The Lord then revealed Himself to Elijah, not in the strong wind, not in the earthquake, not in the fire, but in a still small voice. "What doest thou here?" asked the Lord again. In reply Elijah complained to the Lord that Israel had forsaken the covenant, thrown down His altars, killed the prophets, and Elijah himself was in great danger, "and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life . . . . .". Elijah believed he had come to the end for he thought he was alone, and his life was in real danger. How hopeless was his case! How depressed was Elijah!

But what was God's answer to Elijah? The full answer is given in I Kings xix. 15-18:

> He must anoint: Hazael to be king over Syria.
> Jehu, to be king over Israel.
> Elisha, to be prophet in Elijah's place, and God added:

> "Yet I have left Me SEVEN THOUSAND in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him" (verse 18).

Was Elijah really alone? He thought he was but many were following the true God. And God had His plans for the future of Israel. When we think all is lost, let us remember that God is in control and He has His own plans which will ripen in due course. God will not fail us nor forsake us.

Our Lord

Let us remind ourselves of the tremendous cost paid, and the sufferings endured by the Lord. When the final test came was He supported by the disciples, or was He alone?

> "But all this was done, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. Then all the disciples forsook Him, and fled" (Matt. xxvi. 56).
>
> "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" (Matt. xxvii. 46).
>
> "But He was wounded for our transgression, He was bruised for our iniquities" (Isaiah liii. 5).

The Apostle Paul

Paul often asked the brethren to be followers of him, and in I Cor. xi. 1 he writes, "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ". He followed his Lord closely and suffered with Him. We have noticed how the disciples forsook Christ and fled. Paul had a similar experience. In II Tim. i. 15 we read:

> ". . . . . all they which are in Asia be turned away from me . . . . .", and in II Tim. iv. 16:

> "At my first answer no man stood with me, but all men forsook me . . . . .", but he adds in verse 17, "Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me and strengthened me".

If we endeavour to follow Paul as he followed Christ, we must not be surprised if we share, perhaps in a rather small way, in this kind of experience. If we try to "hold fast the form of sound words", some may turn away from us. We might be called to endure some loneliness. If we are able to have fellowship with those who share our faith let us be thankful, for it is indeed precious and helpful to enjoy such fellowship. But if we are isolated, may we be enabled to hold fast the form of sound words.

A last word

Are you one of those who feel lonely? You feel your need of fellowship? The Lord knows your need.

> "But my God shall supply all your need according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus" (Phil. iv. 19).

No.18. Fellowship.
pp. 29 - 32

> "truly our fellowship is with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ" (I John i. 3).

The family were at home and auntie would probably call as she was expected to be in the district. She came and brought her friends with her. They looked around in the garden, but No! they could not stay for tea. They all came indoors for a chat and then they went. One of the ladies who was quite a stranger to the family said to the lady of the house, "Thank you very much for the fellowship". This remark caused a discussion in the family. Was this just a polite way of saying, "Thank you for receiving us"? Did the friend really think that wandering in the garden and polite talk inside the house constituted real fellowship?

We can ask ourselves some questions. What do we mean by fellowship? What is the meaning of the word, fellowship? What does the Bible tell us about fellowship?

Was the stranger right in thanking the family for their fellowship? When we speak of fellowship, we usually think of sharing spiritual things. If we speak to those who hold similar or identical faith and we rejoice together as we talk of those things, this is fellowship. The two disciples walking to Emmaus enjoyed the Lord's conversation about the Scriptures which concerned Himself and they said "Did not our heart burn within us, while He talked with us by the way, and while He opened to us the Scriptures?" (Luke.xxiv.32).

While fellowship may be greatly enjoyed between Christians who share their experience and their faith, is it not more important to have fellowship with the Lord? The whole of I John i. 3 reads:

> "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ."

Writing on the subject of true prayer and fellowship with God, Charles H. Welch says in An Alphabetical Analysis, Part 10, page 79:

> "God forbid that we should ever regard prayer as a Christian act to be engaged in only when we want something, but rather learn, in a practical way, what day by day fellowship with the Father means, its wonder, privilege and joy. Just as breathing is the natural expression of physical life, so should prayer be the normal and continuous expression of our spiritual life."

Let us consider the meaning of the word "fellowship". We have assumed, so far, that fellowship is of necessity concerned with spiritual realities. Is this so?

If we look at the early chapters of the Acts we find that fellowship is related to having all things in common, and that meant material and spiritual things. Two references will illustrate this:

> "And they continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers . . . . . And all that believed were together, and had all things common" (Acts ii. 42, 44).
>
> "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul: neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common" (Acts iv. 32).

Again, we quote Charles H. Welch, who writes on Fellowship in An Alphabetical Analysis, Part 2, pages 24-28:

> "The basis of the word fellowship is something that is 'common' like a 'common faith' or a 'common salvation'. The bulk of the references is of a practical nature, manifesting in deed, and by the sharing of expenses, the blessings which all shared alike in grace. The believer should be willing 'to communicate' (I Tim. vi. 18), which is used in that passage almost synonymously with readiness 'to distribute'. The Philippians, not only > knew about 'the fellowship' of the sufferings of Christ (Phil. iii. 10), they had fellowship with Paul in the gospel also (Phil. i. 5; iv. 15)."

When we consider the references in Acts and Charles H. Welch's comments we can see that it is not correct to restrict the meaning of fellowship. It certainly includes the sharing of spiritual things, and true fellowship must include prayer and communion with God our Father. Sharing material things must not be excluded. Paul had much to say about the gift made by the Philippians (see Phil. iv. 10-19), and when writing to those at Corinth he gave instructions about the orderly manner in which the collection should be made (see I Cor. xvi.). Because "having all things common" was in the Acts period, we cannot say that the principle of sharing with those who are in need does not apply to us. Paul told the Philippians that their gift was "an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God".

We will not attempt to list every reference to fellowship, but the word koinonia, translated fellowship, is sometimes translated "communication", or "contribution", or "communion". In the touching letter that Paul wrote to Philemon about his runaway slave Onesimus, koinonia appears in the A.V. as "communication":

> "That the communication of thy faith may become effectual by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus" (Philemon 6).

In Rom. xv. 26 fellowship is shown by a material gift:

> "For it hath pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints which are at Jerusalem."

In a negative sense we have a reference in Eph. v. 11:

> "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

If we are working on the A.V. with a concordance we shall find Eph. iii. 9 reads "And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, Who created all things by Jesus Christ". But if we turn to the R.V. we find that instead of "fellowship" we have "dispensation". Some texts have the Greek word oikonomia instead of koinonia, and scholars hold the view that the R.V. is better than the A.V. Both Mr. Welch and Mr. Allen use the R.V. for this verse.

But the spirit of Ephesians is that our position in the Body does merit the word fellowship. If we turn to verses 6 and 7 of Eph. iii., Stuart Allen in Letters From Prison, page 60, quotes the Revised Version thus:

> "To wit, that the Gentiles are fellow-heirs and fellow-members of the Body, and fellow-partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus through the gospel, whereof I was made a minister according to the gift of the grace of God which was given to me according to the working of His power."

So in Ephesians we have a strong and warm unity in Christ, being joints and bands, all working together and building each other up in the faith.

To conclude, let us remember the three references to fellowship in Philippians:

i. 5.	Your fellowship in the gospel.
ii. 1.	Fellowship of the Spirit.
iii. 10.	Fellowship of His sufferings.

Fellowship in the gospel will give plenty of scope for sharing in things material and spiritual. Fellowship in the Spirit should help us to be likeminded, the same love, of one accord, of one mind. Fellowship of His sufferings can only be endured by the power of His resurrection. But what a wonderful fellowship!

No.19. Distress.
pp. 49 - 53

"Many are the afflictions of the righteous:
but the Lord delivereth him out of them all" (Psa. xxxiv. 19).

In this present life there are many things that affect all of us, whether we are Christians or not: we are by nature descended from Adam, and through his fall we are involved in its consequences. Everyone has to face life as it is. We read in Job v. 7:

> "Yet man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward."

In Matt. v. 45, when Jesus Christ was teaching the multitudes, He told them to love their enemies:

> ". . . . . that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust."

While it is true that both the just and unjust are subject to the trials and limitations of this present life, the invitation of Jesus Christ, extended to men while He was on this earth, promised relief and rest to those who came to Him. But He did refer to His yoke. In Matt. xi. 28-30 we read:

> "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light."

In His earthly ministry Christ did not offer an easy life to those who followed Him. He said to His disciples:

> "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me" (Matt. xvi. 24).

The apostle Paul did not tell Timothy that his life would be an easy one. He urged him to be strong, be faithful, and to stir up the gift that was in him; not to have a spirit of fear, and to hold fast the form of sound words. He wrote in II Tim. i. 8:

> "Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me His prisoner: but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God."

In verses 11 and 12 of the same chapter, Paul says that he was appointed a preacher, an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles. And he continues, "For which cause I also suffer these things: nevertheless I am not ashamed". So he was an example to Timothy, but notice that Timothy was to share "the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God" (verse 8).

Whenever there is affliction, suffering, or pain, there is also strength given. When Paul wrote to the Philippians (iii. 10) and referred to the sharing of the sufferings of Christ, and being made conformable to His death, he mentions first the "power of His resurrection", which is the enabling power by which we endure all things.

As Timothy was to follow the example of Paul, we may remind ourselves of his own experiences. In II Cor. xi. 22-33 we have a long list of Paul's sufferings for Christ. There is also a shorter list in II Cor. vi. 4-10 where we note in verse 4 that Paul speaks of "afflictions, necessities, distresses . . . . .". In II Cor. xii. 10 he says:

> "Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong."

Although Paul suffered distresses, he was not overwhelmed by them, for he writes in II Cor. iv. 8, 9:

> "We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed;".

No doubt all of us experience trouble, for as we have seen in the book of Job, man is born unto trouble. But the experience of the faithful servant who suffers for his faith, who shares the afflictions of the gospel, and who partakes of the sufferings of Christ, is somewhat different. We share with Christ, and that means that He is with us and granting us help and strength by reason of which we may endure to the end. But in these present days, circumstances are different. It is possible that we may have to endure physical suffering as Paul did, for many suffer for their faith in Russia and other countries. In this country we have so far experienced no physical suffering, but if we suffer it is more likely to be mental distresses or anxiety. That is why this article is headed "Distress". We may have been preserved so far from such pain, but who knows what may lie ahead. Let us be prepared for any trial that may await us.

Distress may be defined as anguish or agony. It may be due to physical or mental anguish and may be caused by poverty or misfortune, or other troubles. It is said that distress is a painful degree of suffering (physical or mental). Unlike anxiety, distress is caused by immediate, not future trouble. The cause is real and not imaginary. Thus, distress is the more extreme and painful form of suffering. Anguish normally refers to mental suffering, but agony is the torture of the mind.

Agony occurs only once in the New Testament. It is the Greek agonia, and is found in Luke xxii. 44, where the agony of our Lord in the garden of Gethsemane is described. He was subject to extreme tension, which caused mental agony and physical exhaustion.

Anguish occurs several times, and different Greek words are used. We have already referred to II Cor. vi. 4 and xii. 10, where the Greek is stenochoria, and the same Greek word occurs in Rom. ii. 9 and viii. 35. In Rom. viii. 35 it is translated "distress", "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?". Read Rom. viii. 35-39. Here is reassurance, confidence, and the promise of the Lord's enabling power. We are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. Nothing can separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Before we close, let us turn to the Psalms, for David during the lifetime of Saul had much to endure. He was persecuted and frequently feared for his life, but God delivered him and consequently he wrote many Psalms of praise and thanksgiving. Psa. xxxiv. is an example. We will not comment on this wonderful Psalm, but ask the reader to read it right through. Another which is worthy of study is Psa. cvii. Its structure is both interesting and helpful, so we will give it below. Fuller detail will be found given in The Companion Bible:

Psalm cvii.

A | 1-3. Praise.
B | 4-32. Distress and Deliverance.
B | 33-41. Judgment and Blessing.
A | 42-43. Praise.

Further expansion of B | 4-32. Distress and Deliverance.

a1 | b1 | 4, 5. Trouble.
b2 | 6-. Cry.
b3 | -6, 7. Deliverance.
b4 | 8, 9. Praise.
a2 | b1 | 10-12. Trouble.
b2 | 13-. Cry.
b3 | -13, 14. Deliverance.
b4 | 15, 16. Praise.
a3 | b1 | 17, 18. Trouble.
b2 | 19-. Cry.
b3 | -19, 20. Deliverance.
b4 | 21, 22. Praise.
a4 | b1 | 23-27. Trouble.
b2 | 28-. Cry.
b3 | -28-30. Deliverance.
b4 | 31, 32. Praise.

b1. Refers to Wandering in the wilderness.
"They cried to the Lord in their trouble, and He delivered them out of their distresses" (6).

b2. They rebelled against the word of God.
"They cried unto the Lord in their trouble and He saved them out of their distresses" (13).

b3. Fools — Iniquities.
"They cry unto the Lord in their trouble and He saveth them out of their distresses" (19).

b4. Wanderers on the Deep (at their wit's end!).
"They cry unto the Lord in their trouble and He bringeth them out of their distresses" (28).

At the end of each section there is the refrain:

> "O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD FOR HIS GOODNESS AND FOR HIS WONDERFUL WORKS TO THE CHILDREN OF MEN."

And at the end of the Psalm:

> "Whoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the lovingkindness of the Lord" (Psa. cvii. 43).

So in both the O.T. and N.T. we have similar testimonies:

> "Even they shall understand the lovingkindness of the Lord" (O.T.).
>
> ". . . . . nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. viii. 39).

No.20. Boasting.
pp. 69 - 72

"He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord" (I Cor. i. 31).

In article No.4 (The Berean Expositor, Volume LI, page 192) we considered "joyfulness", and we meditated on Phil. iv. 4 "Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice". There are many references to rejoicing and we have pointed out that Paul, despite his many intense sufferings, was always rejoicing. In Acts xvi., when Paul and Silas were beaten with many stripes and thrown into prison, their feet being made fast in the stocks, we read that at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises to God. There was an earthquake and they were delivered. The keeper of the prison was converted. But this is just one example how Paul rejoiced continually, although he suffered so much.

There are several Greek words that have been translated "rejoice" and one word is rather striking. It is kauchaomai, which means "to boast".

In Proverbs there is the well-known statement "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old, he will not depart from it" (xxii. 6). As children, we were taught to adopt a humble attitude (are they still taught that way?), not to boast, nor to think more highly of oneself than one ought to think (Rom. xii. 3). To believe that boasting is entirely wrong is an extreme attitude. But we should ask what is the cause of the boasting? In what circumstances may it be permitted?

There are many warnings and exhortations about boasting. At this point we should mention that the Greek word kauchaomai is often translated "to glory", and there is also a Hebrew word that is translated "to boast" and "to glory". So when in Jer. ix. 23-24 we read "glory" we might equally read "boast":

> "Thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches: but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth Me, that I am the Lord which exercise lovingkindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth: for in these things I delight, saith the Lord."

The wise, the mighty, the rich should not boast, for the true cause of boasting is in the knowledge of the Lord and in His lovingkindness, His judgment, and His righteousness.

The clever businessman may be pleased with himself when he concludes a big deal. The Eastern style of bargaining is rather different from our way of quoting a market price, although in these modern days we have 'discounts', which may cause us to ask "When is a market price not a market price?". But let us visualize an Eastern market where the buyer says "Your goods are worthless". He walks away and then returns to offer a very low price: "I will give you so much". Prov. xx. 14 summarizes the transaction in the words:

> "It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth."

He is proud that he has bought from the poor man who must sell his wares to obtain money for food, and paid him much less than the true value.

Again in Prov. xxvii. 1 we are warned against boasting:

> "Boast not thyself of tomorrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth."

James iv. 14-16 conveys the same thought:

> ". . . . . whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away. For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that. But now ye rejoice in your boastings: all such rejoicing is evil."

Psalm x. 3 also speaks of the boasting of the wicked who persecute the poor. God is not in his thoughts and he believes he will not be moved. But the Psalmist calls on the Lord to arise and defend the humble and the needy.

Psalm xlix. 6 refers to the boasting of the rich man who trusts in his wealth, and Psalm lii. 1 refers to the boasting of the man who delights in mischief (evil or wrongdoing).

The tongue is a little member—but it boasts great things:

> "Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! And the tongue is a fire . . . . ." (James iii. 5, 6).

So we could examine the exhortations of Scripture and ascertain the kind of boasting we should avoid. We should search the Scriptures to find what boasting is allowed. May we boast in ourselves? Should we not rather make our boast in the Lord? We have the straight answer in Psa. xxxiv. 2:

> "My soul shall make her boast in the Lord: the humble shall hear thereof, and be glad."

It is right that we should be humble and realize our weakness and our need of the strength that the Lord alone can supply. As we acknowledge His greatness, we rejoice greatly and make our boast in the Lord. We have a similar thought in Psa. xliv. 8:

> "In God we boast all day long, and praise Thy name for ever. Selah."

And in Psa. lxiv. 10:

> "The righteous shall be glad in the Lord, and shall trust in Him; and all the upright in heart shall glory" (see also Psa. cv. 3 and cvi. 5).

Paul wrote about boasting both in the first and second epistles to the Corinthians. There are about thirty (30) references to boasting, sometimes rendered 'glorying', but in II Cor. xii. 1 he says it is not expedient to glory. In I Cor. i. 27 he says that God has chosen the foolish things to confound the wise, and the weak things to confound the mighty things . . . . . "that no flesh should glory in His presence" (i. 29). Again in I.Cor.iii.21, "Therefore let no man glory in men". There is nothing in us to merit any boasting. Paul does not boast of himself, but he does magnify his office. He had authority given to him by the Lord. Also he loved the Corinthians, he praised them for their generosity and was prepared to boast about them to encourage others.

But the most important reason for Paul's boasting was the work of the Lord Jesus Christ. When he writes to the Romans about this, quite suddenly he boasts (or glories) in tribulations. To quote all the chapter would take too much space, but we quote chapter v. 1-4 and 8-11:

> "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ: by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God. And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience . . . . .
> But God commendeth His love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by His blood, we shall be saved from wrath through Him. For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by His life. And not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by Whom we have now received the atonement."

We rejoice (or even boast) in the wonderful work of our Lord, but all the praise and glory is His. We rely entirely on His work. Eph. ii. 8, 9 reminds us:

> "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast."

Also in Phil. iii. 3 we have a similar thought:

> "For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh."

So we must not boast of our own works or praise the flesh, but we glory only in the Lord Jesus Christ. So we come to the text at the heading of this article, and another very similar one in the second epistle. After writing "That no flesh should glory in His presence", Paul continues:

> "But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, Who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption: that, according as it is written, 'He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord'." (I Cor. i. 30, 31).
>
> "But he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth" (II Cor. x. 17, 18).

No.21. Doctrine.
pp. 90 - 95

"Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine" (I Tim. iv. 16).

These articles are intended to help readers in their practical lives and we have therefore concentrated on 'practical truth'. Would an article on Doctrine be helpful? We will endeavour to set out what the Scripture says about it, and perhaps such a study may form the background for a deeper study later.

There are two references in the O.T. worthy of mention before we proceed to the N.T.

The Song of Moses is recorded in Deut. xxxii., and we quote verses 2 and 3:

> "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass: because I will publish the name of the Lord: ascribe ye greatness unto your God."

Moses set forth his teaching concerning the Lord, His greatness, His perfect work, His truth and His righteousness.

There is an interesting reference in Prov. iv. Solomon is exhorting his children, as a good father, to study wisdom. The whole chapter is profitable reading, but we must content ourselves by quoting only extracts from verses 1-7:

> "Hear, ye children, the instruction of a father, and attend to know understanding" (1).
>
> "For I give you good doctrine, forsake ye not my law" (2).
>
> "He taught me also, and said unto me, Let thine heart retain my words: keep my commandments and live" (4).
> "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom" (7).

Solomon says his doctrine is good and he followed his father's example. A father passed advice to his children, and in this way the doctrine was handed down from one generation to another. But then he (Solomon) says that wisdom is the principal thing, and the children should make every effort to get wisdom. We may have thought that doctrine is the vital thing, so why does Solomon say that wisdom is the first in importance? As doctrine was handed down by word of mouth (note the many references to 'words') there was the danger that in repeating what a father said, some inaccurate statement might be made. A wise man would spot any mistake of this kind by comparing statements made by various people, and so wisdom is important in the safeguarding of the truth. In our day we have the Scriptures, and so can compare Scripture with Scripture in our search for the truth. So wisdom is, and was, necessary to make sure that it was indeed "good doctrine".

In the N.T. we find a word didaskalia, which occurs 21 times and is translated:

doctrine	19 times
learning	1
teaching	1
	---
	21 times
	========

"Learning" appears in Rom. xv. 4, and "teaching" in Rom. xii. 7. Rom. xv. 4 says the Scriptures were written for our learning (doctrine). According to Young's concordance, this word means 'teaching', but it does not follow that the teaching is sound or good. We have to distinguish between the good and the bad: (Hence the need for wisdom). This is emphasized by the following references:

> ". . . . . teaching for doctrine the commandments of men" (Matt xv. 9 and Mark vii. 7).
>
> "That we be no longer children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine" (Eph. iv. 14).
>
> ". . . . . after the commandments and doctrines of men" (Col. ii. 22).

There are eight occurrences of this Greek word in I Timothy, all translated in the A.V. by the English "doctrine". They seem to form a pattern, so we will endeavour to display it:

DIDASKALIA in I Timothy

A | i. 10. Contrary to sound doctrine.
B | iv. 1. Latter times—doctrines of devils.
C | iv. 6. A good minister . . . of good doctrine.
D | iv. 13. Give attention to . . . doctrine.
D | iv. 16. Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine.
C | v. 17. Double honour—labour in the word and doctrine.
B | vi. 1. God and His doctrine not blasphemed (admonition to servants).
A | vi. 3. Consent not to wholesome words . . . and to the doctrine . . .

At the beginning and end of this letter there is a warning that some will oppose sound doctrine. This is reinforced by chapter iv., which speaks of the latter times and seducing spirits and doctrines of demons. This is balanced by the admonition to servants to respect their masters and count them as worthy of all honour, so that the name of God and His doctrine be not blasphemed.

In iv. 6 and v. 17 we have the picture of the good minister who himself is well nourished in the faith and of good doctrine, so encouraging the brethren in their spiritual lives. Such ministers are worthy of double honour because they labour in the word and doctrine. They conduct a teaching ministry and are worthy of financial support, for the labourer is worthy of his hire (or reward) (verse 18).

This leads us to the central references (iv. 13 and 16) where we have Paul's instruction to Timothy to be diligent in reading, exhortation, and doctrine (teaching). Do not let anyone despise your youth, he wrote. Be an example to all believers. Don't neglect the gift you have. Watch, or give heed to your own life and to the teaching. Conduct a teaching ministry.

To complete this study, we must record the occurrences in II Timothy and Titus:

DIDASKALIA in II Timothy

A | iii. 10. Thou hast fully known . . . my doctrine.
B | iii. 16. All scripture . . . inspiration . . . profitable for doctrines.
A | iv. 3. They will not endure . . . sound doctrine.

The central feature in II Timothy is that ALL Scriptures is profitable for doctrine. If our teaching is to be sound, it must take account of the whole of Scripture, which is given by inspiration of God. Paul reminds Timothy that he already knew Paul's teaching, as well as his manner of life and the many afflictions he had suffered. Timothy, too, will suffer persecution but he must continue in the things which he had learned. He mentions Timothy's training from a child, when he was taught the way of salvation by his knowledge of the Word of God. Then follows the declaration of the inspiration and profitability of the Scriptures. Paul exhorts Timothy to preach the Word, but warns him that the time will come when men will not bear (or endure) sound doctrine.

DIDASKALIA in Titus

A | i. 9. Bishop . . . able by sound doctrine to exhort . . . convince.
B | ii. 1. Speak thou those things which become sound doctrine.
B | ii. 7. Showing thyself a pattern of good works, in doctrine.
A | ii. 10. Servants . . . adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour.

In writing to Titus, Paul takes specific examples, giving advice to bishops, aged men and women, young men and women, and servants. Bishops should hold fast the faithful word so that they may encourage their hearers with sound teaching and also refute those who oppose it (N.I.V.). Servants should be obedient, honest and faithful in their service. By so doing they will "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things", (they will make the teaching about God our Saviour attractive, N.I.V.).

The two central texts relate to the witness of Titus. In his preaching he must convey sound doctrine. In his personal and practical life he must set a good example, showing a pattern of good works. In his teaching he must show integrity, seriousness, and soundness of speech that cannot be condemned. "Those who oppose you may be ashamed because they cannot find anything to say against you."

We have so often said that we should search the Scriptures for ourselves, to see "if these things are so". It is right that we should do this, but we must have an open mind, so that we may be led by the Holy Spirit. Christ spoke to the Jews, "Ye search the Scriptures for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of Me. And ye will not come to Me that ye may have life" (John v. 39, 40). Searching the Scriptures is good, but if the mind is closed and not receptive to the Spirit's leading, no progress is made.

Philip joined the Ethiopian eunuch in his chariot where he was reading the Scriptures, but he was making little progress. In Acts viii. 30 Philip asks if he had understood what he read. He did not but wanted help, "How can I, except some man should guide me?" said the eunuch. There are times when we need a sound teacher to help us guide us. Paul was a teacher of the Gentiles. Timothy was to be a sound teacher, and Titus was to speak those things which become sound doctrine. Bishops, and even servants, were to make their contribution.

But any teachers that teach the commandments of men are unsound. We need wisdom to distinguish between the sound and unsound teaching. In Prov. xxvii. we found that wisdom was the principal thing. The need for wisdom and understanding to enable us to grasp the teaching is evident from the prayer in Eph. i. 17-23 which requests, "the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him; the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know . . . . .".

We are all searchers of truth. We search the Scriptures because "Thy Word is truth". It is only by the enlightenment of the Holy Spirit that we can get the knowledge of that truth, and especially the truth for the present dispensation.

The advice to Timothy applies to us. We need to be on the alert so that we avoid unsound teaching. We need to take heed to ourselves and to the teaching. Or as the N.I.V. translates it, “Watch your life and doctrine closely”.

The Enlightenment of The Holy Spirit

No.1. pp. 190 - 196

There can be no doubt that in recent years in Christian circles there has been a tremendous emphasis on the work of the Holy Spirit, so much so that the Person and work of Christ has been put into the background. It is not so much now "what think ye of Christ?", as what think ye of the Holy Spirit? And some make it quite clear that they regard the work of the Spirit to be of more importance than any other Christian truth. There is only one way to settle this, and that is to ask another question, "what saith the Scripture?" for this is the only authority that can guide us and keep us from making mistakes. Some years ago we attempted to search the Scriptures and gather together its teaching on The Holy Spirit and His ministry. This was issued and entitled The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit and we commend it to all who value the Spirit's work, that they should read and test it from Scripture.

Fortunately for us we have the teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ on this great subject in the 16th chapter of the Gospel of John:

> ". . . . . He (the Holy Spirit) will bring glory to Me by taking from what is Mine and making it known to you. All that belongs to the Father is Mine. That is why I said the Spirit will take from what is Mine and make it known unto you" (John xvi. 14-15, N.I.V.).

This is so important that the Lord repeats it "He will not speak of Himself . . . . . He will glorify Me" (A.V.). And there can be no greater work than this than to magnify the Saviour. He will not glorify Himself, but He will glorify Me, said the Saviour. And how will He do this? "By taking from what is Mine and making it known to you" (14, 15). "He will testify about Me" (xv. 26). "He will guide you into all truth" (xvi. 13).

This must therefore be His chief work, for what can be more important than making Christ known to others? Is not getting to know Him Who is Saviour and Lord the most important thing for both unbeliever and believer? Did not the Apostle Paul sum up the whole of his aim by saying ". . . . . that I might know Him . . . . ." (Phil. iii. 8-11)?

Is there any higher and holier work than glorifying Christ? The Holy Spirit is not only the revealer of Christ, but He is the revealer of all truth. Not only is He the inspirer and author of God's Word, but He is the only one Who can give illumination and understanding of its divine contents.

In I Cor. ii. 9-11 we read:

> ". . . Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God . . . even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God."

The Holy Spirit, being God, can plumb the depths of God and is the only One Who can. What created being can search and discover God to perfection in all His fullness? What a mighty aid then we have in the Person of The Holy Spirit, the great Revealer of Truth so that "we might know the things that are freely given to us of God" (I Cor. ii. 12). All this is conveyed to us by the Scriptures which are "words . . . . . which the Holy Ghost teacheth" (verse 13). The Apostle asserts that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he get to know them because they are spiritually discerned" (verse 14). Unaided, man cannot get to know the things of God. Education and intellectual power will not avail here.

In other words we, as believers, are shut up to the revealing power of the Holy Spirit working upon the holy Scriptures, and it is by this alone that we get to know the truth lying behind the words contained in the Word of God, as we humbly read and seek divine illumination and understanding. So we have to pray with the Psalmist:

> "Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy Law (the Word)" (Psa. cxix. 18).

Let us get this quite clear. God's enlightenment cannot come from theological courses or by any special methods of study by themselves. It can only come from the Holy Spirit of wisdom and revelation (Eph. i. 13-19), the great Revealer of the truth He Himself has caused to be written.

If by grace we have come to know "the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" and the prize attached to it (Phil. iii. 14), then it is by the operation of the same Holy Spirit as Ephesians declares. Eph. i. is a marvelous revelation of the will of the Father (i. 3-5), the redemptive work of the Son (5-12), & the revealing power of the Holy Spirit (12-23). This gives us the divine basis for God's purpose of grace for the Body of Christ from its beginning to the end when its hope is realized. The Holy Spirit seals us (13), which is a figurative way of emphasizing the complete security of each member of the Body of Christ. No believer can accomplish this eternal security by his own power or actions. God the Holy Spirit sets His seal upon the salvation of the believer at the moment of believing.

This work of the Spirit does not refer to some exalted experience subsequent to salvation, for the tense of the Greek verbs show that the believing and sealing take place at the same time. The A.V. "after believing you were sealed" is misleading and not true. This "sealing" is the culmination of the act of salvation on God's part. It does not indicate where the sealed person will be blessed in resurrection. That is made known in other parts of Ephesians and Colossians. It is basic, not dispensational; and this is seen by the reference to the Holy Spirit's seal in chapter iv., "grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption" (iv. 30). Nor is the sealing something that is confined to the great Mystery (Secret) of Eph. iii. and Col. i. If we turn to II Cor. i. 21, 22, we read:

> "Now He which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God; Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts."

So this sealing and earnest was part of the Acts church that was waiting for the repentance of Israel and the early return of the Lord Jesus, and this was before the dispensation of the Mystery (Eph. iii. 9, R.V.) had been revealed through the apostle Paul in his Roman prison.

Needless to say, those who were sealed in Eph. i. are those whom the Father had selected (or elected) "before the foundation of the world", and the doctrine of election runs through the whole plan of God in the purpose of the ages. Israel were an elect nation (I Chron. xvi. 13; Psa. cv. 6; Isa. xliii. 20). The faithful remnant of Israel were elect too (Rom. ix. 11; xi. 5) and the Body of Christ is also elect (Eph. i. 3, 4). But let us not make wrong deductions. In a recent exposition of the Scriptures the author insisted that as this was so, every one of the elect from Genesis onwards must be in the Body of Christ!

God has a vast new creation in view, a new heaven and a new earth which is beyond our comprehension, and He has chosen just where He wants His redeemed children to be in eternity and He is Sovereign in this. Did not the Lord Jesus picture this figuratively when He likened the new universe to "the Father's house" which has "many rooms" (John xiv. 2, N.I.V.)? These Christ is now preparing for His children. Yet the general Christian view is that God has one big "room" in the future where He will lump together all His children!* [* - Paul was caught away to the third heaven in a vision, so there must be at least three heavens!]

The newly created "new man" of Eph. ii. 15 is an elect company whom the Father wills to bless in the heavenly places "far above all". Even now He sees them enthroned with the exalted Christ there (Eph. ii. 6), a unique sphere of blessing for any of the redeemed of God (and there are a number of other unique features too). No wonder its members are exhorted to seek and set their mind on "things above, where Christ is seated on the right hand of God, and not on the things of earth" (Colossians iii. 1, 2), for this super-heavenly calling will be their future home in eternity.

Now all this is what the Holy Spirit opens the eyes of believers to see, and gives a measure of understanding which increases as we receive the Word by faith and ask for the Spirit of revelation. This is further emphasized in Col. i. 25-27 which tells us that God wishes or wills to make this secret known among the Gentiles, "which is Christ among you (A.V. margin), the hope of glory". Paul's aim was "to make plain to everyone the administration (dispensation) of this Mystery (Secret now revealed by God)" (Eph. iii. 8, 9). Of course he is not claiming to be able to do the Spirit's work of enlightenment, nor did he believe that everyone then living in the world would see it. There is no word for "men" as in the A.V. rendering of these verses. The "all" obviously refers to all whom the Father has chosen (Eph. i. 4).

Some might imagine that this revealed truth is so wonderful that perhaps only a few choice people would receive it. But this is not true, for in the practical section of Ephesians (iv. 16) it is clearly taught that the growth of all the Body depends on "the working in due measure of every part, unto the building up of itself in love" (R.V.). And this must be true otherwise the Body would be lop-sided. "Every part" means every member, and each one has a contribution to make in this new creation and its growth. So God wants this new truth to be made known; the Apostle Paul fervently desired that all the chosen ones should see it, and then every single member of this company in practice should contribute his share in its spiritual growth.

But what do we find in practice? Does every believer rejoice in the knowledge of the exceeding spiritual riches of this "high calling of God in Christ Jesus"? The answer is decidedly No! Ask the average Christian if they see and understand this great Secret and are aiming that other believers should receive it and know it for themselves (Eph. iii. 9). In all probability they will look at you with puzzlement or even amazement.

What can we conclude from this? Surely either one of two things: (1) the Holy Spirit has not done His revealing work well, for many, in fact the majority of Christians do not see "the dispensation of the Mystery" (Eph. iii. 9), and some even oppose it as serious error, or (2) God has more than one plan for His redeemed today. We believe from Scripture that this is true, and if so the great problem vanishes.

No one can work out in practice what has never been revealed to them, and God Who is righteous will never expect them to do it. We ask the reader to turn back to Vol.LII and read pages 105 and 106 of the article "The Good Deposit". We cannot quote it in full here except to point out again that automatic membership of the church of the Mystery (Secret), the Body of Christ, makes Paul's object "to make all see what the dispensation of the Mystery is" (Eph. iii. 8, 9, R.V.) quite unnecessary, for its members would be in it whatever their attitude was. And this would be true of any subsequent witness to the Mystery, including that of the present time.

How strange it is that some stress the Holy Spirit's work as Sealer in Eph. i. 13, 14, but ignore the Spirit's work as Revealer in the same chapter (verses 17 and 18) in connection with the new calling and its hope! He had already opened the eyes of the understanding of the Ephesian believer to some extent concerning this calling (note the past tense of the verb, "the eyes of your understanding having been enlightened"). So a measure of understanding of this great Secret had already been given by the Holy Spirit, but more was needed, as the prayer that follows shows.

We quote from the article mentioned above, "moreover without these 'opened eyes' how can one guard the good deposit of truth (I Tim. vi. 20; II Tim. i. 13, 14)? How can anyone guard what is not seen and understood? Timothy was warned that faithful guarding would result in suffering and enduring hardness (II Tim. i. 8; ii. 3). How is it possible to suffer and endure hardness for truth that is not known or appreciated?". But at the same time let us remember that all the Spirit's enlightenment does bring responsibility to the Lord which cannot be evaded. This responsibility, if our eyes have been opened, is to make God's truth known as far as possible and then leave all the results to Him. He will not make mistakes. He knows just what He has planned for His redeemed family in the universe of the new heaven and earth; and all finally in resurrection life will be satisfied with the Lord's appointments (Psa. xvii. 15) and all will be to His glory.

The Lord is not expecting 100% success with us, but He is expecting faithfulness to the truth He has revealed to us by the Holy Spirit. What happens if others disagree with us or even leave us? Do we then modify our beliefs or keep silent about them to avoid trouble? What did the Apostles do in similar circumstances? Read carefully what happened to Paul in II Tim. i. 15. He tells Timothy that "all in Asia forsook him". Asia was a large province and note Paul does not say that some had forsaken him. All believers there had done so and this must have involved hundreds of Christians who had professed to be standing with the apostle in this new Truth. What a terrible blow this must have been, but did he give up? No! See what he says in II Tim. iv. 16, 17, and also note what he said to the Corinthian church concerning some who had turned away in division (I Cor. xi. 18, 19). Note also what the apostle John said in a similar experience (I John ii. 19).

Faithfulness certainly costs, and some are not willing to pay the price. And yet, at the end when we meet the Lord face to face, would it not be wonderful to hear Him say to us, (or its equivalent), "well done, good and faithful servant" (Matt. xxv. 21, 23)? Also carefully note I Cor. iv. 2 and II Tim. ii. 2 with its stress on faithfulness. If we have received the "good deposit" of truth, let us guard all of it as being precious, remembering that one day we shall have to give an account of our stewardship to the Lord.

In addition to the facts of the last article, there are other points to be considered. After Acts xxviii. and the laying aside in unbelief of Israel as a nation and their destruction by the Romans in 70A.D., what happened to Peter, James & John and their ministry which was primarily to Israel (Gal. ii. 7-9)? We say primarily to Israel advisedly, for Peter was instructed by the Lord to widen his ministry to include the Gentiles at Acts x., and its quite unscriptural to represent his ministry as being solely to Israel. The O.T. had made it clear that God's earthly kingdom purposes included the Gentile nations otherwise it could never be world-wide, and the O.T. prediction that "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord" (Isa. xi. 9) be realized. All that happened during the Acts was in line with this and must have been a feature of the ministry of James and John as well.

While Israel as a nation sank deeper and deeper into unbelief and rejection of the great Kingdom offer given in Acts iii. 19-26, there was still a number of faithful ones who responded to their ministry. They were likened by the apostle Paul to a faithful remnant, a "remnant according to the election of grace" (Rom. xi. 1-5). The doctrine of the remnant is an important one and runs through the O.T. as well, for God never leaves Himself without a witness, and this was always true in times of apostasy that the O.T. records, and it also includes the N.T.

But what happened to this remnant of grace at the end of the Acts and afterwards? It is obvious that the ministry of Peter, James, Jude and the rest of the 12 Apostles must have embraced a considerable number of people which lasted for some generations. Where do these come in the plan of God? They certainly could not have suddenly vanished after Acts xxviii. and the revelation of the Mystery that followed. Those who hold the theory of 'one calling' have an insoluble difficulty here. One of them has stated "there are not two groups after Acts xxviii. 28. There may have been two groups before, but not now". He goes on to assert that "all the Gentile Christians of the Acts period and all the Jewish Christian of the Acts period have been brought together INTO ONE NEW MAN" (Eph. ii. 15, his emphasis).

When we turn to Eph. ii. we find no such teaching, for he has added the word "all" to what Scripture reveals. Eph. ii. 15 does not say that the "new Man" consists of all Jewish and all the Gentile believers of that time, but rather that God had now created a new Man, out of Jew and Gentile (the "twain"). To "create" means a new beginning, not a continuation of something that had previously existed. Out of Jewish and Gentile believers God had made a fresh start by creating a new company of the redeemed, and these were elected (chosen) by the Father "before the foundation of the world" (Eph. i. 4). Nothing is said as to the number of those who are chosen. There is no clue given as to whether this is a small or large company, so this therefore we have to leave.

If we assume that what this writer says about 'one calling' is Scriptural and true, then we have the right to ask what happened to the faithful remnant of the Acts period? If there is only one calling today, then it means that Peter, James & John, and the other 12 apostles and all the Jewish believers they ministered to must have been suddenly transferred to the Body of Christ after Acts xxviii., and the ministry of these Apostles concerning the earthly kingdom must have ceased at this point and in its place they must have witnessed to the dispensation of the Mystery (Eph. iii., Col. i.) and all the revelation of Paul's prison epistle. This is the only logical conclusion one can come to if there is now only 'one calling'.

But we ask, where is the Scriptural backing for all this, and the answer is there is none whatsoever. That being so, the onus is on the 'one calling' adherents to say just where they place the Acts period remnant after Acts xxviii., and what happened to the earthly kingdom ministry of Peter, James, John, Jude and other of the 12 Apostles after this crisis. Guessing and human opinion will not do; we cannot have sound doctrine on such a basis. The more one examines this 'one calling' in the light of Scripture rightly divided, the more its fallacy is evident.

It may be understandable with those who believe that the church of the One Body began at Pentecost. But with those who profess to see the dispensational setting of the Acts period and the truth of the Mystery revealed after it, one calling is not understandable. It is a blow at the heart of "the good deposit" of Truth and the "dispensation of the Mystery" with all its uniqueness and wonder. It also makes unnecessary the revealing work of the Holy Spirit which Eph. i. stresses so much, and makes Him indulge in favouritism in revealing this Truth to some and not to all the members of the Body.

Timothy was commanded to "guard" the good deposit of truth (I.Tim.vi.20; II.Tim.i.14) and the word "guard" means to watch over carefully something that is costly and precious. He was then commanded to pass this truth on to those who could be described as "faithful men who shall be able to teach others also" (II Tim. ii. 2), or as the N.I.V. translates it, "entrust to reliable men who will also be qualified to teach others", and this clearly shows the importance that God puts upon this super-heavenly calling by the restrictions He has given and its great stress on faithfulness and reliability.

In this "good deposit" of truth is the great revelation of the creation of the New Man, revealed through Paul the prisoner who had received it by revelation from the ascended Christ (Eph. iii. 3). It now comes as a challenge to us today who have received it by faith and enlightenment. "The eyes of your understanding having been enlightened" (Eph.i.18, note the tense) is a necessary prelude to knowing the new calling and its hope, as this verse insists, for it is impossible to be faithful to something that is not known or understood. If all this truthfully describes our Christian witness, we can look forward to the Lord's approval when we meet Him face to face. We cannot play fast and loose with the "high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. iii. 14) which has been entrusted to our care.

Practical Truth in EPHESIANS

No.1. "Be strong in the Lord" (vi. 10).
pp. 109 - 113

In this series we do not pretend to cover the whole of our subject in detail. We hope to be able to pick out some features of the subject which will encourage our readers to engage in a more complete and detailed study. Of course, there is a tremendous amount of material in In Heavenly Places by Charles H. Welch, and there is the exposition by Stuart Allen in Letters From Prison. Stuart Allen deals with Practical Truth of Ephesians in pages 71-96 (chapter iv.), pages 97-105 (v.), and in pages 106-114 (vi.). As the author has a lucid style, we recommend his book Letters From Prison.

The first three chapters of Ephesians are devoted to Doctrine and the final three to Practice. In Charles Welch's book there is a chart which demonstrates that in the structure of the epistle, Practice is shown to be the outworking of the Doctrine, so making a perfect balance. As Stuart Allen says in his book:

> ". . . . . but the truth of God is nothing if it is not balance from start to finish: not all doctrine and little or no practice: or all practice and little or no doctrine. By themselves, each of these would lead to lopsidedness."

He goes on to explain that it is important to base Christian practice on sound doctrine.

We shall take Ephesians chapter vi. first because this balances with Eph. i. 1 - ii. 7. Actually, the balancing section is Eph. vi. 10-20. At the moment we are looking at Eph. vi. 10, but the reader may like to read Eph. i. 1 - ii. 7 as an introduction to our study.

In Eph. i. 19 there is the reference to the mighty power which was wrought in Christ when He was raised from the dead. We will quote part of verse 18 and verses 19 & 20:

> ". . . that ye may know what is the hope of His calling, and what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of His power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of His mighty power, which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at His own right hand in the heavenly places."

In Eph. i. 19 we have the "greatness of His power to us-ward", and the "working of His mighty power", while Eph. vi. 10 reads:

> "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might."

These are not words that would be addressed to children. Indeed, the Scriptures tell us of the growth that should take place. Eph. iv. 14 says ". . . . . that we henceforth be no longer children . . . . .", while Philippians expresses the growth in terms of a race or contest. Phil. iii. 12-14 read "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended: but this one I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus".

To encourage us, he adds that if in any thing we are "otherwise minded" God will reveal even this to us. So there is much encouragement for all who no longer wish to remain as babes or children, but wish to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Christ Jesus.

The instruction "be strong" reminds us of Josh. i. 6, "Be strong and of a good courage". Joshua was not a babe; he was a full grown man and indeed to be strong to lead the children of Israel into the promised land. He had to face enemies outside and doubters within the circle of the children of Israel. So we must be ready to face opposition, from any quarter, and taking the analogy of the soldier, we must endure hardship and continue right on to the end. But our strength is insufficient for such a task, so we must be strong in the Lord. It is not our strength, but the power of His might. Remember also Paul's word to Timothy, "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love and of a sound mind" (II Tim. i. 7).

Also Paul gave Timothy advice which is in line with Eph. vi. 10:

> "Thou therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus" (II Tim. ii. 1).
>
> "Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please Him who hath chosen him to be a soldier" (II Tim. ii. 3, 4).

We conclude therefore that (1) the instruction is to a fully grown man who is able to bear the heat and burden of the day, (2) he is like a soldier whose life is wholely committed to his duties, and (3) like the athlete who must keep to the rules of the game. He must realize that we face an enemy who is powerful, sly, and cunning, and he cannot deal with such an enemy in his own strength.

The Greek word that is translated "be strong" is endunamoo, and it appears 8 times in the N.T. It is sometimes translated "strengthen", or "in strength", or "enabled me". We will list the eight passages for easy consideration:

"endunamoo" (N.T.).

"But Saul increased the more in strength" (Acts ix. 22).
"He staggered not . . . . . but was strong in faith" (Rom. iv. 20).
"Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord" (Eph. vi. 10).
"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me" (Phil. iv. 13).
"I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, Who hath enabled me" (I Tim. i. 12).
"Thou therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus" (II Tim. ii. 1).
"Notwithstanding the Lord . . . . . and strengthened me" (II Tim. iv. 17).
". . . . . out of weakness were made strong" (Heb. xi. 34).

Charles H. Welch in his book In Heavenly Places devotes a paragraph to this Greek word and its eight occurrences. We cannot do better than end this article with his remarks which are set out on page 404.

The power of His resurrection.

No other writer in the N.T. uses the word which is here translated "be strong" except Luke, who in Acts ix. 22 uses it of Paul himself. The exception but proves the rule. The word is peculiar to the teaching of Paul and his own experience of the risen Lord. The eight occurrences of the word endunamao speak of resurrection, and the seven occurrences in the epistles are worth a moment's attention.

Endunamao* in Paul's epistles.

A		Rom. iv. 19, 20. Strong, not weak, in faith.--O.T.
B	a	Eph. vi. 10. Strong in the Lord.--WAR.	\
	b	Phil. iv. 13. Strong in Christ.--ENDURANCE.	\	After
C		I Tim. i. 12. Christ Jesus.--MINISTRY.	}	Acts
B	a	II Tim. ii. 1. Strong in grace.--WAR.	/	xxviii.
	b	II Tim. iv. 17. Strong in the Lord.--ENDURANCE.	/
A		Heb. xi. 34. Strong in faith, out of weakness.--O.T.

The first example, that of Abraham, is a strong witness for "the power of His resurrection", for it is said that "he believed God Who quickeneth the dead". The words of Eph. vi. 10 look back to Eph. i. 19. In vi. 10 we have endunamao, "be strong"; kratos, "power"; ischus, "might". In i. 19 we have dunamis, "power"; ischus, "mighty"; kratos, "power".

The believer is turned back to the risen and ascended Christ as the source of the power whereby he may stand the shock of battle. There is no other power at present either available or sufficient. All believers, whether conscious of it as an experimental fact or not, "have the sentence of death in themselves that they should not trust in themselves, but in God which raiseth the dead" (II Cor. i. 9).

No.2. The Spiritual Armour (vi. 14 - 18).
pp. 136 - 140

In the doctrinal section we learn of the great and wonderful spiritual blessings that are ours in Christ. By faith we enjoy them now, but the full realization is future. Now, we have the earnest, or foretaste, a pledge of the blessing to be enjoyed later.

We read of the will of the Father, who chose us and adopted us into the family with an inheritance in view. The work of the Son is set out, the redemption through the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the forgiveness of our sins according to the riches of His grace. The witness of the Spirit includes the sealing with that Holy Spirit of promise, and in the A.V. we have the phrase "after that ye believed". Eph. i. 13, 14 reads in the N.I.V., "And you also were included in Christ when ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation. Having believed, you were marked in Him with a seal, the promised Holy Spirit, Who is a deposit guaranteeing our inheritance until the redemption of those who are God's possession—to the praise of His glory". No wonder the apostle Paul exclaims in verse 3, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ".

Satan is in opposition to God's plan. We believe that Satan is a defeated enemy, but the war is not yet over. We are subjected to attacks by the enemy, and we are unable to withstand the wiles of the devil in our own strength. We must rely on the power, the mighty power, that is given to us, and remember what Christ has already done. So the apostle Paul write in Romans:

> "In all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers . . . . . shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus" (viii. 37-39).

The extent of the victory of Christ is wider than we often think. He is victor over death and the grave, and that is indeed wonderful for it leads us to think of the resurrection power, but in the passage quoted above we see a long list of those things which cannot separate us from the love of God. In Col. ii. 15 we see another viewpoint, the victory of Christ over principalities and powers:

> "And having spoiled the principalities and powers, He made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it" (A.V.).
>
> "And having disarmed the powers and authorities, He made a public spectacle of them, triumphing over them by the cross" (N.I.V.).

Let us now look at the spiritual armour. We must emphasize that the armour is "spiritual". Paul says in II Cor. x. 4 "For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds". In Rom. xiii. 12 he refers to the "armour of light" and in II Cor. vi. 7, the "armour of righteousness".

On Page 414 of In Heavenly Places, Charles Welch sets out the sixfold armour of Eph. vi. 14-18 in the form of a structure, which we quote:

The sixfold armour.

A | The GIRDLE. Truth or faithfulness.
B | The BREASTPLATE. Righteousness.
C | The SHOES. Gospel of peace.
A | The SHIELD. Faith or faithfulness.
B | The HELMET. Salvation.
C | The SWORD. The Word of God.

In connection with the girdle, we observe that Charles Welch writes "Truth or faithfulness", and we may ask why he adds faithfulness. The Greek word aletheia is translated "truth", but Charles Welch points out that the LXX translates "faithfulness" by aletheia, and quotes as an example Isa. xi. 5:

> "Faithfulness (shall be) the girdle of his reins."

It is interesting to note that there is a link with the sixfold armour in other passages:

> "For He put on righteousness as a breastplate, and a helmet of salvation upon his head" (Isa. lix. 17).
> "How beautiful . . . . . are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace" (Isa. lii. 7).

Truth is absolutely vital to the Christian. There is a link between truth and faithfulness. The follower of Christ must be sincere, speak the truth and defend the truth at all times. If there is any doubt in the heart, the enemy will use that uncertainty to undermine faith, and ultimately the Christian may be deceived. Satan used this method to sow the seed of doubt when he spoke to Eve in the garden of Eden. So she was persuaded to eat the forbidden fruit and she disobeyed.

In view of the importance of truth in the life of the Christian, it may be helpful if we look at all the references to truth in this epistle. We found that in Eph. iv. 24 the A.V. reads "and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness". The margin has a note which reads "the holiness of truth", and it appears that this gives the literal translation. We therefore include this in our list, and so there are seven references to "truth" which we find form a pattern, which we give below:

Truth in Ephesians.

A | i. 13. Heard the word of truth.
B | iv. 15. GROW UP. Speaking the truth in love.
C | iv. 21. PUT OFF. Taught by Him, as the truth in Jesus.
D | iv. 24. PUT ON. Righteousness and the holiness of truth.
C | iv. 25. PUT AWAY. Speak every man truth.
B | v. 9. FRUIT. Goodness and righteousness and truth.
A | vi. 14. Loins girt about with truth.

It will be seen that in the context of truth, we have the doctrine in chapter i. (which we need to hold faithfully), followed by instructions which affect not only our faith, but our daily life. We must be sincere, truthful, in our dealings in business and in our social life, as we speak to our 'neighbour'. There are references to "grow up into Him in all things, which is the Head, even Christ", also to the "fruit of the Spirit", or as translated in the N.I.V. "the fruit of the light", which follows the injunction of v. 8 to "walk as children of light". There are the practical injunctions of putting off the old man, putting on the new man, and putting away lying, so that we speak truth with our neighbour. This is practical truth for today.

We find there are eight references to faith in Ephesians which might be in the form of an introversion, like the structure of the references to Truth. We will however just list the eight references, and leave the reader to test and seek for the structure himself:

Faith in Ephesians.

"Heard of your faith" (i. 15).
"By grace are ye saved through faith" (ii. 8).
"Access . . . . . by the faith of Him" (iii. 12).
"That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith" (iii. 17).
"One Lord, one faith, one baptism" (iv. 5).
"Till we all come in the unity of the faith" (iv. 13).
"The shield of faith" (vi. 16).
"Peace . . . . . love with faith" (vi. 23).

In connection with the "shield of faith" in vi. 16, Charles Welch puts forward the question, is this a reference to our faith, or the Lord's faithfulness? He then draws attention to Psa. xci., as follows:

> "He shall cover thee with His feathers, and under His wings shalt thou trust: His truth shall be thy shield and buckler. Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day; nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday" (Psa. xci. 4-6).

The next pair in the structure of The Sixfold Armour, under B & B, is The Breastplate—righteousness, and The Helmet of salvation. Charles Welch links these as "heart" and "head". From a doctrinal aspect, salvation is essential. We were by nature without Christ, having no hope, and without God in the world. But it is by faith we are saved. In his book Letters From Prison, page 111, Stuart Allen suggests that the breastplate of righteousness does refer in the first place to imputed righteousness, but that it also has practical implications. It refers to righteousness in action. Stuart Allen also points out that the head stands for thinking and planning, so the helmet of salvation has doctrinal and practical implications.

The third pair in the structure, C & C, relating to the feet and hands, is "The Shoes—gospel of peace" and "The Sword—The Word of God". There are four references to gospel in Ephesians, i. 13, iii. 6, vi. 15 & vi. 19 and eight references to peace, bearing in mind that in the Greek "peace" occurs twice in ii. 17. We venture to set out these passages in a structure:

Peace in Ephesians.

A | i. 2. Grace and peace.
B | ii. 14. He is our peace.
C | ii. 15. Of twain, one new man, so making peace.
D | ii. 17. Peace—those far off.
D | ii. 17. Peace—them that were nigh.
C | iv. 3. Endeavour to keep unity—bond of peace.
B | vi. 15. Preparation of gospel of peace.
A | vi. 23. Peace and love with faith.

The practical aspect of peace is shown in this structure. The need to keep the unity of the Spirit is so important, and yet how difficult this can be. We should be ready to declare the good news of peace, and witness to our faith at all times.

The Sword of our Spirit, which is the Word of God, ir our only offensive weapon. All the others are defensive. As we read of the temptation endured by our Lord, we see how He used the Scriptures to great effect. In order that we should be ready to use the sword, we need to read and study the Scripture continually. Let us remember Col. iii. 16:

> "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord."

No.3. "and having done all, to stand" (vi. 13).
pp. 149 - 153

We have considered chapter vi. 10 (Be strong), and verses 14-17 which describe the spiritual armour. Now we study the conflict described in verses 11-13. The fact that there are only three verses does not mean that this is not important: how profound are the statements contained therein, and we must add, how real is the foe! Because we cannot see the enemy we may tend to forget him and ignore his existence. Satan does not always go about like a roaring lion. He can, and frequently does, work so quietly that we fail to appreciate what is happening. Possibly, when we wake up to the situation, it is too late to take effective action.

There are numerous references to Satan in the Scriptures and he is given various titles. Let us search and see what the Scriptures say about him.

The first time we read of Satan's activity is in Genesis, where we read about the fall of man. He is not called Satan but the serpent. The A.V. reads "Now the serpent was more subtil than any beast of the field which the Lord had made" (Gen. iii. 1). Satan whispers "Hath God said", and so the seed of doubt is sown. Disobedience followed. This is mentioned in Ephesians:

> "Wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience" (Eph. ii. 2).

Here we find another title, "the prince of the power of the air".

Other titles are given in Rev. xii. 9:

> "And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world."

When our Lord was on the earth He called Satan "the prince of this world", and the battle with Satan is clear when we read the references:

> "Now is the judgment of this world: now shall the prince of this world be cast out" (John xii. 31).
>
> "Hereafter I will not talk much with you: for the prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me" (John xiv. 30).
>
> "And when He (the Comforter) is come, He will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment . . . . . of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged" (John xvi. 8, 11).

Paul uses another title, the "god of this world", and he warns the Corinthians that the god of this world deceives and blinds the eyes of those who will not believe:

> "But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, Who is the image of God, should shine unto them" (II Cor. iv. 3, 4).

As we think of the activity of the Deceiver, may we join with Paul in his prayer that we may receive the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him, the eyes of our understanding being enlightened (Eph. i. 16-18).

Paul describes Satan as an angel of light and Peter in his warning describes Satan as one who goes around like a roaring lion:

> "For such men are false apostles, deceitful workmen, masquerading as apostles of Christ. And no wonder, for Satan himself masquerades as an angel of light. It is not surprising then, if his servants masquerade as servants of righteousness" (II.Cor.xi.13-15, N.I.V.).
>
> "Be self-controlled and alert. Your enemy the devil prowls around like a roaring lion looking for someone to devour. Resist him, standing firm in the faith, because you know that your brothers throughout the world are undergoing the same kind of sufferings" (I.Pet.v.8,9, N.I.V.).

In I Tim. iii. 6 there is a warning against pride which was the cause of the devil's downfall. Christ was very outspoken about the devil when he addressed the Jews; He said they were of their father, the devil. He was a murderer from the beginning and he did not abide in the truth. He is a liar and the father of it (John viii. 44).

In Hebrews we read that Satan had the power of death, but Jesus Christ shared flesh and blood, that through death, He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil (Heb. ii. 14-18).

We must also include a reference to the parable of the tares. In Matt. xiii. 24-42 the devil is described as the enemy who sowed tares in the field after the farmer had sown good seed. Good and bad grew up together and one could not tell which was good and which was bad. So it is in the world where there are children of the Kingdom and children of the wicked one. How difficult it is for us to know who is a child of the evil one! Only at the last day shall the good and bad be separated. What wisdom we need lest we are led astray by one who pretends to be a leader but who is not truly sent by God.

Now we must turn to other aspects. In Eph. vi. 12 (A.V.) we read "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood . . . . .", and it is interesting to look at other translations:

> "For our struggle is not against flesh and blood . . . . ." (N.I.V.).
>
> "For we are not contending against flesh and blood . . . . ." (R.S.V.).

Paul frequently writes about contending and he prefers to use the figure of the athlete, although he does refer to the soldier. He uses the Greek word agonizo, which means to agonize or contest publicly (Young's Analytical Concordance). It occurs in Luke xiii. 24 and John xviii. 36. We quote four references taken from Paul's letters. We should mention that agonizo is translated "strive" or "fight", and in one place "labouring fervently":

> "And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible" (I Cor. ix. 25).
> "Epaphras . . . . . always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God" (Col. iv. 12).
>
> "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life . . . . ." (I Tim. vi. 12).
> "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith" (II.Tim.iv.7).

Our struggle is with principalities and powers What do we know about them? There are about 400 references to angels: over 200 in the O.T. and about 188 in the N.T. They are heavenly messengers. The number of passages of Scripture that mention principalities and powers are few. It appears they are the heavenly aristocracy. Some of them accept the Lordship of Christ but others were in opposition to Him. Let us collect the references and learn what we can about these heavenly beings.

> Romans viii. 38 tells us nothing can separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord, not even principalities and powers.
> Ephesians i. 20, 21 speaks of Christ being seated at His (the Father's) right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality and power.

> Ephesians iii. 10 is a most remarkable verse so we quote it in full. "To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God."
>
> Ephesians vi. 12 "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in heavenly places".
>
> Colossians i. 16 tells us that all things were created by Him and for Him (the Son). Principalities and powers are specifically mentioned.
>
> Colossians ii. 10 says that Christ is the head of all principality and power.
> Colossians ii. 15 "He disarmed the principalities and powers and made a public example of them, triumphing over them in it" (R.S.V.).

In the R.V. of Eph. vi. 12, instead of "the rulers of the darkness of this world", it reads "the world rulers of this darkness". Stuart Allen in his book Letters From Prison, page 109, makes very interesting observations on the activities of the spiritual world. Space does not permit us to quote his remarks.

We must conclude this article by referring to the "mighty power inworked" and "the mighty power worked out". The mighty power which was wrought in Christ when He rose from the dead, is the mighty power "in-worked"; i.e. it is the resurrection power and is to us-ward who believe (Eph. i. 19, 20). Another verse which speaks of the power that works in us is Eph. iii. 20:

> "Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto Him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen."

The mighty power that "worketh in us" should be balanced by the "mighty power worked out". The A.V. of Eph. vi. 13 does not make this clear. It reads ". . . . . that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand". The phrase is the Greek katergazomai and should read literally "having worked out all". It appears also in Phil. ii. 12 where we read "work out your own salvation with fear and trembling".

We are engaged in a great conflict. A great power is ours by faith, the resurrection power, and it is by God's help that we are enabled to stand, despite the pressure we experience. We have the power and we have the spiritual armour.

We are not instructed to attack the enemy or to advance into his territory. We are just told to stand. If we experience the battle of the evil day, we are to withstand and having worked out all, to stand.

We may experience many assaults of the enemy, and we need wisdom when we are under pressure resulting from the "wiles of the devil". Our stand must be to safeguard the truth committed to us and to hold fast the form of sound words. May we receive strength so that we may stand firm whenever the truth is being attacked.

No.4. "Praying always . . . . . and for me . . . . ." (vi. 18, 19).
pp. 170 - 173

In the doctrinal section, Paul stops for a while after setting out the Will of the Father, the Work of the Son, and the Witness of the Spirit. It is as though he had placed before the Ephesians such a comprehensive volume of doctrines, that he must pause, and give them an opportunity to digest what he had written, and best of all, he prays for them. In the doctrinal section we have Paul's prayer for the Ephesians, and in the practical section Paul asks the Ephesians to pray for him.

The introduction to Paul's prayer is quoted:

> "Wherefore I also, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints, cease not to give thanks to you, making mention of you in my prayers" (i. 15, 16).

Then follows the prayer in verses 17-22. We will consider it later, but let us see the other references to prayer first.

In chapter iii. there is another prayer where Paul begins: "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ". For some reason he does not say "I pray to the Father . . . . .". He uses a Greek word kampto, which means to bend, and it occurs four times in the N.T. All four are in the epistles written by Paul, as follows:

> ". . . . . seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal" (Romans xi. 4).
>
> "For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to Me, and every tongue shall confess to God" (Rom. xiv. 11).
>
> "For this cause, I bow my knees unto the Father . . . . ." (Eph. iii. 14).
>
> "That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. ii. 10, 11).

Paul had written in chapters i., ii. & iii. of so many wonderful things, and intertwined was the reference to the greatness of God, the Creator, and the eternal purpose which He purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord. He must have been humbled at the thought that we, who by nature are quite unworthy, have been chosen by God, given an inheritance, and that even now the manifold wisdom of God is being made known by the Church to principalities and powers in heavenly places. No wonder he bowed his knees in submission to the will and purpose of God in humility and thankfulness. He then wrote that marvelous prayer which is recorded in verses 16 to 21.

In chapter vi. we have the two verses which are the concern of our study:

> "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints; and for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel, for which I am an ambassador in bonds: that therein I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak" (Eph. vi. 18-20).

In I Tim. ii. 1 Paul exhorts that "supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men". In the verses we have quoted above the Ephesians are exhorted to pray with all prayer and supplication, and this follows after the description of the spiritual armour. So, at first, Paul is referring to their stand against the enemy, which should then be buttressed with prayer and supplication. As they pray they must "watch . . . . . with all perseverance", and he adds "and supplication for all saints". So prayer and supplication, which is continual as the enemy exerts pressure on the saints, must be extended to include "all saints". Prayer and supplication is thus extended to intercession for others who are equally involved in the conflict. But Paul adds, while you pray for others, please include me. I am in prison, in chains, an ambassador in bonds, and I need your prayers so that I may be given a door of utterance, that I may open my mouth boldly (as I ought to do) to make known the mystery of the gospel. It may surprise us that Paul urgently needed their prayers, but let us remember that even the advanced preacher or teacher is in need of prayer support. This work of intercession was vital for Paul, and it is still vital today. Here is a most important work that each one of us may do. Let us share the burden of the ministry, of leadership, by praying for those who carry the responsibility; but as we remember Paul's instruction to Timothy, may we widen our prayers of intercession to include all men. Pray for those in authority, and all who are in distress or in need of any kind.

Before we leave these observations on references to prayer, may we very briefly look at Colossians and Philippians:

Prayer in Colossians.

"We give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you, since we heard of your faith . . . . ." (i. 3, 4).

"For this cause we also . . . . . do not cease to pray for you" (i. 9).

"Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving; withal praying for us . . . . . a door of utterance, to speak the mystery of Christ . . . . . as I ought to speak" (iv. 2-4).

"Epaphras . . . . . always labouring fervently for you in prayers" (iv. 12).

The quotations are similar to those we have seen in Ephesians, and it would be interesting to compare the two epistles. To follow such a study see The Testimony of the Lord's Prisoner by Charles H. Welch, especially pages 11, 205 & 206.

In Philippians there are three references to prayer. We will not comment on them as they speak for themselves.

Prayer in Philippians.

PAUL'S PRAYER FOR THEM: "Always in every prayer of mine for you all making request with joy" (i. 4).

THEIR PRAYER FOR PAUL: "For I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ" (i. 19).

THEIR OWN PRAYER: ". . . . . but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God . . ." (iv. 6).

Now let us consider the two prayers, the first in Ephesians i. 17-23, and the second in Eph. iii. 14-21. In the first prayer Paul asks that God may give (1) the spirit of wisdom, (2) revelation, and (3) in the knowledge (or acknowledgement) of Him. Then he continues, "the eyes of your understanding being enlightened (lit. 'having been enlightened')", that ye may know (1) what is the hope of His calling, (2) what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints (holy place), and (3) what is the exceeding greatness of His power to us-ward who believe. We need wisdom to understand all that is written in the doctrinal section, and we only know what the Holy Spirit reveals to us. It has been said that we only get to know the truth by divine enlightenment. It is indeed the work of the Holy Spirit. As we receive light we have a greater responsibility to put what we learn into practice, and so acknowledge the truth which will cause us to increase in our knowledge of Christ, and to acknowledge Him. This is the way we should grow in grace.

The second prayer in Eph. iii. 14-21 has three main points:

(1) "That He would grant you, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith;

(2) that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge.

(3) that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God."

In the space available it is impossible to comment adequately on these two prayers, so we refer our readers to the following items of supplementary reading:

In Heavenly Places, Charles H. Welch, pp. 148-188 and 310-320.
Letters From Prison, Stuart Allen, pp. 33-43 and 65-70.
An Alphabetical Analysis, Part 10, Stuart Allen, pp. 75-90.

We conclude by giving a comparison of the two prayers:

THE TWO PRAYERS
i. 15 - 19.	iii. 14 - 21.
THE PRAYERS ARE ADDRESSED TO
The God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory.	The Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.
THAT HE MAY GIVE
A spirit of wisdom and revelation.	Strength by the Spirit in the inner man.
THAT YE MAY KNOW
Hope, riches, power.	Love that passeth knowledge.
SOMETHING "EXCEEDING" (hyperballo).
Exceeding power.	Knowledge-exceeding love.
THE MEANS
We in Christ.	Christ in us—"The inner man".
THE POWER IS
The power wrought in (energeo) Christ.	The power that worketh in (energeo) us..
THE MIGHT (ischus) IS
The might exhibited at the resurrection.	The might necessary to comprehend with all saints.
THE GOAL IN EACH CASE
The fullness of Him that filleth all in all.	That ye might be filled up to the fullness of God.
HEAVENLY POWERS MENTIONED
Every name that is named.	Every family in heaven and earth is named.

No.5. The New Creation (v. 1 - vi. 9).
pp. 233 - 237

> "For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them" (Eph. ii. 10).

In the structure of Ephesians, as set out by Charles H. Welch (see In Heavenly Places), item 'C' is described as "The New Creation":

C | ii. 8-10. Walk of the new creation.
(shortest Doctrinal passage)
C | v. 2 - vi. 9. Walk of the new creation.
(longest Practical passage—applying to every department in life)

Let us consider first the Doctrinal section, and to do this we show an outline of that passage, using again Charles Welch's work:

C | ii. 8 - 10.

A | For by grace are ye saved through faith
B | a | Not of yourselves
b | The gift of God
a | Not of works lest (hina) any should boast FAITH
A | For we are His workmanship, created
B | a | Unto good works
b | Foreordained of God
a | That (hina) we should walk in them WORKS

Salvation is by grace, and is received by faith. Some have thought that faith is the gift of God, but Charles Welch explains that by studying the Greek and taking account of the rules of grammar (e.g. the gender of the words used) it becomes evident that "the grace by faith salvation" is the gift of God. (a full explanation is given on page 216 of In Heavenly Places.)

Another point brought out by Charles Welch is that the Greek for gift is doron. This word conveys the idea of an oblation; that is, something offered. This is further evidence that the gift of God cannot be faith, for in what sense can faith be regarded as an offering made by God? But to realize that salvation is something that God offers us, in other words an 'oblation', is a humbling experience. We can only accept it with heartfelt thanks and gratitude. The comment that Charles Welch gives on page 217 is most appropriate, which we quote:

> "What can we say however when we learn that in this calling it is God Who makes the oblation, it is God, not the humble worshipper, Who brings the offering; it is God Who comes out with both hands full of blessing, and pours them out at the feet of the worthless and undone. Salvation by grace through faith is the gift, the oblation of God. Let us close our lexicons, let us put aside for a moment our grammars, let us rather bow our heads in worship as we say out of full hearts:

Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift."

In verse 10 the word "workmanship" is the Greek poiema, which may mean anything made, hence workmanship. It occurs only twice in the N.T. The other occurrence is Rom. i. 20 where it is translated "things that are made". An alternative translation is "handywork". The Greek used the word to convey "poem", and Charles Welch comments that it is wonderful to think that the Church of the One Body may be regarded as "God's Poem".

This same verse tells us that we were created in Christ Jesus for the purpose of carrying out good works, that God prepared beforehand that we should walk in them. So here is another wonderful thought! The Father chose us in Christ before the foundation of the world, and God also before ordained that we should serve Him by good works. We accept His will in grateful humility.

The word 'create' occurs 7 times in the Prison Epistles, and of these four are in Ephesians, as follows:

Kitzõ* ("create").

A | ii. 10. God. The Church His creation.
B | ii. 15. The New Man doctrinally considered.
A | iii. 9. God. "All things" His creation.
B | iv. 24. The New Man practically exhibited.

It will be seen from the structure that there are several references to God as Creator. He created all things by Jesus Christ (iii. 9), and we read of the New Man created by Christ Jesus. This we hope to consider in our next article. At the moment we are rejoicing in the fact that we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus, with the object of producing the fruit He desires; even the completion of the plan He prepared long before we were born. Is it not wonderful to contemplate that God chose us, and planned for us, and God was willing to wait so long until we appeared on this earth. Then, we trust, He sees His plan being worked out in our lives.

We have used some space to consider only three verses which are the doctrinal section, but the truth contained therein demands careful thought, as well as praise and thanksgiving for all that the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ have done for us. We must now turn to the practical implications.

The practical section (New Creation, item "C" in the structure) commences at Ephesians v. 1, "Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children". Notice the word "therefore". This links with the last verse of the previous chapter, so we will quote that verse and Eph. v. 1, 2 from the N.I.V.:

"Be kind and compassionate to one another, forgiving each other, just as in Christ God forgave you. Be imitators of God, therefore, as dearly loved children and live a life of > love, just as Christ loved us and gave Himself up for us as a fragrant offering and sacrifice to God" (Eph. iv. 32 - v. 2).

Living a "good life" is not the way of salvation. We have seen that it is by grace we are saved; it is not of works lest any man should boast. But we are created in Christ Jesus "unto good works". If we are to walk according to the will of God, we should imitate Christ. He has loved us dearly; we should so love Him in return. He has freely forgiven us our sins: we should forgive others, if they have done us any wrong. Christ sacrificed Himself for our sakes; are we willing to sacrifice ourselves for the sake of others? When we consider how far Christ went for our sakes (see Phil. ii. 5-8) we feel that we fall far short of His standard. Christ's great love for us should evoke so great a response that our lives should be a reflection of His love, as we love Him and express our love to our fellow men.

As we read Eph. v. 1-21, we notice that this passage falls into three sections:

The threefold walk

Section	Key text
Verses 1-7	v. 2. Walk in love.
Verses 8-14	v. 8. Walk as children of light.
Verses 15-21	v. 15. Walk circumspectly, as wise.

Having given instructions about the kind of walk that should characterize our lives, it is remarkable that Paul gives a warning about the kind of life that is unacceptable and unworthy of our calling. Having told us to walk in love, he speaks of uncleanness and other evils, and says "let it not be once named among you". He mentions foolish talking (or uncleanness in word) and says that it is not fitting or consistent; rather we should give thanks. Further, he warns that uncleanness may result in a loss of an inheritance. Col. iii. 24 reads "Knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance", and Col. ii. 18 "Let no man beguile you of your reward". Thus it seems that uncleanness can result in a serious loss and Paul does not hesitate to write clearly on this important subject.

Again, in the second section, where we are enjoined to walk as children of light, we are warned against "the unfruitful works of darkness". The fruit of the light (A.V. spirit) is in all goodness and righteousness and truth. The light reveals what may be hidden in the darkness, and Paul says it is a shame even to speak of those evil things.

The third section tells us to walk circumspectly, or accurately, as wise but not as fools. The days are evil so we should redeem the time, or literally "ransoming the time". Stuart Allen translates it "buy up the opportunity" for Christian witness (Letters From Prison, page 100). There is a sense of urgency. We have at the present time an opportunity to witness: how long shall we be allowed to have this privilege? We have work to do for the Lord, but for how long? May we treat the business of the Lord as urgent. We are reminded of David when he said "the King's business required haste" (I Sam. xxi. 8).

The remainder of the section, Eph. v. 1 - vi. 9, is taken up with three types of personal relationships:

(1) Wives and Husbands
(2) Children and Parents
(3) Servants and Masters

In Eph. v. 21, after having reminded the Ephesians of the need to give thanks to God for all things in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ (verse 20), Paul tells them to submit themselves to each other in the fear of God. This humility must be worked out in every personal relationship.

The relationship between husband and wife should reflect the relationship between Christ and His church. As Christ is the Head of the church, so the husband is the head of the wife; and for this reason Paul says that wives should submit themselves to their own husbands. But he turns to the husbands and tells them to love their wives even as Christ loved the church and gave Himself for it. When Christ gave Himself for the church, we remember how He humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross. How many husbands love their wives with so great a love that they are willing to sacrifice themselves, even as Christ gave Himself for the church? If a husband so loved his wife, would it be a great hardship for her to submit to such a husband? When there is so great a loving relationship, the wife, while submitting to her husband, is able to talk about all things and to exert a good influence in making suggestions, even though the final decision is in the function of the husband.

Those who knew Charles Welch, say 30 years ago, will remember that he had a sense of humour, and would make his point in a way that would make us smile. When explaining the relationship between husband and wife he insisted that the husband is the head, but he recognized how helpful a wife can be to her husband. So he concluded, the husband is the head, but would it be unreasonable to suggest that the wife is the neck? After all, it is the neck that turns the head!

Children should obey their parents in the Lord. This again brings out the principle of submission. Paul quotes the commandment “to honour thy father and mother”, and adds that it is the first commandment with a promise (of long life). Fathers must be patient and should bring up the children in the instruction and training of the Lord.

Servants should obey their masters (submission again), and their service should be rendered as to the Lord. They should be conscious of doing the will of the Lord and doing it with the whole heart. Finally, masters should behave themselves, not threatening their servants, remembering that they have a Master in heaven.

So, in all things we must seek to do which is acceptable to the Lord. It reminds us of Micah who said that we should “walk humbly with thy God” (Micah vi. 8).

The Fourth Gospel

A Study of the Gospel according to JOHN

No.1. Introduction.

pp. 126 - 130

The four inspired records which we call the Gospels give us the basis of the finished work of the Lord Jesus Christ. These are historic facts, His birth, death, resurrection and ascension, and are fundamental to the Christian faith. In them we find recorded His words, work and witness, and presented in four different aspects. Doubtless God could have inspired a single complete account of that life and ministry, but He has not seen fit to do so.

The character of each Gospel determines for whom it was written. It is evident that Matthew was written for Jewish believers as witness its references to prophecies fulfilled, to the "city of the great King", to David, and so on. Mark and Luke had Gentiles in view; Mark specially for Romans, and Luke for Greeks, Mark emphasizing the ideal of power, and Luke the ideal of perfection.

As the Hebrews, the Romans, and the Greeks were the three great representative peoples of the world, we may ask for whom John could write. The answer is found in a consideration of the author, the date of the Gospel and its contents. It is certain that this Gospel was written after the other three and that the writer was acquainted with them.

There were aspects of Christ's ministry which had not been recorded by the Synoptic Gospels. John omits much which the Synoptists record, and records much that they omit. He is often full where they are concise and concise where they are full, and this gives the impression that the Evangelist intended to supplement the other Gospels. This is borne out by the early Fathers. Clement of Alexandria, quoted by Eusebius, says, "last of all, John, observing that in the other Gospels those things were related that concerned the Body (of Christ), and being persuaded by friends, and also move by the Spirit of God, wrote a spiritual Gospel". The witness of Papias, Irenaeus, Jerome, and Augustine is to the same effect.

Date and Place of Writing.

The consensus of reliable testimony points to the close of the first century as the time the Gospel of John was written. The evidence for an early date is poor and unreliable.

Dr. R. V. G. Tasker writes in The New Bible Dictionary on John the Apostle and ends his quotation in this way:

> "Westcott concluded that nothing is better attested in early church history than the residence and work of St. John at Ephesus. It is true that Westcott wrote before evidence > for John's early martyrdom had accumulated, but, as we have seen, the evidence is not adequate enough or reliable enough to confute the definite statements of the man who occupied the See of Ephesus at the close of the century" (i.e. John the Apostle) (our italics).

Dr. John A. Robinson in his recent book, Redating the New Testament, quotes a 9th century monk, Georgius Hamartolus, who asserted John's early martyrdom and says, "he is of interest because he claims to base the martyrdom of John on a statement made by Papias (one of the early church fathers), but this is notoriously doubtful" (page 158). Dr. Robinson further writes "it is necessary at this date to expose once again the weakness of the evidence for an early martyrdom of John, for it has ceased to be considered seriously as a factor in assessing the authorship or date of the Gospel (of John)" (p.258 our italics).

Dr. A. T. Robertson writes "there is no early martyrdom for the Apostle John" (Word Pictures in the New Testament, p.xii) and calls it "a worthless legend". "There is the theory that John died as a martyr at an early age, but this is rightly rejected by the majority of scholars" (Dr. I. H. Marshall, Aberdeen University, New Bible Dictionary).

Dr. Donald Guthrie (who was once head of the London Bible College) writes, "the cumulative effect of this evidence is very small, while the individual links in the chain become even weaker on examination" (New Testament Introduction, p.237). He further states that the monk Georgius Hamartolus "clearly did not take the Papias report seriously since he also speaks of the Apostle John's peaceful end". He adds, "the notion of John's early martyrdom may therefore be regarded as purely legendary".

The dating of John's Gospel.

Dr. Guthrie states "the majority of scholars are inclined to accept a date between 90A.D. and 110" (p.258). Dr. C. K. Barrett of Durham University, a scholar with a great reputation, gives a time between 90A.D. and 100 (ibid. p.263). Dr. J. H. Bernard in his Critical and Exegetical Commentary, states concerning the Gospel of John, "the use made of the fourth Gospel by Christian writers before 175A.D. enables us, therefore, to fix the time of its appearance within narrow limits. It is hardly earlier than 90A.D. and cannot be later than 125A.D. Probably the year 95 is the nearest approximation to its date that can be made" (p.lxxviii).

Dr. J. A. Robinson, as we have seen, suggests an earlier date in his Redating the New Testament, namely 65A.D., but as an honest scholar he feels compelled to write first of all quoting Kummel, "the assumption that John was written in the last decade of the first century is today almost universally accepted". Dr. Robinson proceeds, "*the span of 90A.D.-100 is agreed by Catholic and Protestant, by conservative and radical, by those who defend apostolic authorship, by those who believe that John used the Synoptists (Matthew, Mark and Luke) and those who do not. It includes virtually all those who have recently written commentaries on the Gospel, not to mention other interpreters. Indeed, many commentators scarcely bother to discuss the issue of dating*" (p.261 our italics).

And remember that this weighty statement was written by a scholar who wants to establish an earlier date for the Gospel!

Dr. Graham Scroggie states "the concurrent of testimony converges on the close of the first century as the time this Gospel was written, and we may regard the reasons for this belief as conclusive . . . . . it is safe then to assume this Gospel was written in the last decade of the first century and probably about 95A.D." (A Guide to the Gospels).

Professor F. F. Bruce in his work on the Gospel writes:

> "If, as seems probable, the Gospel was published in the province of Asia some sixty years after the events it narrates . . . . ." (p.2).
>
> "But it is a reasonable inference from the growth of the report that the beloved disciple lived on to an advanced age, probably surviving Peter by many years . . . . ." (p.215).

Dr. Robinson also writes:

> "C. H. Dodd ascribes the Gospel to an Ephesian elder writing between 90A.D. and 100" (Redating the New Testament, p.263).

Thus we can safely say that the majority of antiquity was against an early date for John's Gospel and the majority of present scholarship is also against it. There is uniformity of testimony of a late dating, and those who base doctrine on an early date are on a very insecure foundation.

Occasionally Mark x. 39 and John v. 2 are used to support an early date, but these texts, when rightly regarded, do not do this. Concerning Mark x. 39, the Lord Jesus not only said that the disciples would drink His cup, but also they would be baptized with the baptism He was baptized with, and this latter phrase speaks of suffering, not death, so either suffering or death would fulfil this prophetic statement. Dr. Tasker writes "not again does the reference to the sons of Zebedee drinking the cup, and being baptized with the baptism of Christ necessarily imply that they both were destined to come to a violent end" (New Bible Dictionary, p.602).

In John v. 2 the present tense is used of the verb to be, "there is at Jerusalem a pool", not "there was at Jerusalem a pool", but this does not support an early dating, because it refers to the time of the action being described, not the time when the Gospel was written. It was the time when the infirm man wanted to get into the pool for healing.

Even if we accept Dr. Robinson's earlier date for the Gospel, 65A.D., there was still five (5) years to run before the Romans destroyed the Temple and city in 70A.D., and yet the Gospel would have been written after the period covered by the Acts (Acts xxviii. is 62A.D.).

To whom was the Gospel addressed?

This can only be decided by considering the internal evidence of the Gospel. There are key words in it such as life, light, witness, glory, abide, world. The last word world (kosmos) occurs no less than 79 times and is therefore of great importance. It can mean the world as the sum total of everything here and now, the orderly universe (the foundation of the world), the earth on which we live. Sometimes it refers to the world system that is ruled temporarily by Satan, the prince of the world., the whole world lies in the power of the evil one (I John v. 19). It is used in the sense of everyone, "the world has gone after Him" (John xii. 19). But in the majority of occurrences in this Gospel it means mankind as a whole, and when it is used by the Lord, each statement is of great importance and should be carefully and prayerfully weighed over by the reader. We give some examples:

". . . . . The world knew him not" (i. 10).

"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (i. 29).

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (iii. 16).

"For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved" (iii. 17).

"Light is come into the world . . . . ." (iii. 19).

". . . . . we . . . . . know that this is indeed the Christ (Messiah), the Saviour of the world" (iv. 42)

"For the bread of God is He which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world" (vi. 33).

". . . . . My flesh, which I will give for the life of the world" (vi. 51).

"I am the light of the world" (viii. 12).

". . . . . whom the Father hath sanctified and sent into the world" (x. 36).

"I came not to judge the world, but to save the world" (xii. 47).

"But that the world may know that I love the Father . . . . ." (xiv. 31).

". . . . . that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me" (xvii. 21).

". . . . . that the world may know that Thou hast sent Me" (xvii. 23).

"He is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the whole world" (I John ii. 2).

One thing must be clear from the above references, that Christ's earthly work and witness cannot be restricted to Israel or any one nation. Some will quote Matt. xv. 24 "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel", but to get the whole picture we should read Mark's account which records words that Matthew omits. Christ said "Let the children (i.e. Israel) first be filled" (Mark vii. 27). The children, Israel, were to be first in God's kingdom purpose, but not first and last. The kingdom of heaven upon earth can never be finally restricted to Israel or Israel's land; it will be world wide and this was clearly implied in the first revelation promise, that Israel's seed should one day be a blessing to all families of the earth (Gen. xii. 3), and this was also stressed in the N.T. by Paul at Antioch when he quoted to the Jews Isa. xlix. 6 which refers both to Messiah and Israel, "I have set thee to be a light to the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth" (Acts xiii. 47), and with this agrees the Lord's resurrection commission to the Twelve ". . . . . and ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem, and in Judaea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (i. 8). Otherwise how can a prophecy like Hab. ii. 14 be fulfilled, "for the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea", and many other prophecies likewise? Once this is grasped we can understand why this emphasis on the world is given in the Gospel of John which records part of the Lord's earthly ministry to Israel. The Jew had forgotten the Divine reason he had been chosen. He finally imagined that God's kingdom purposes were restricted to themselves. Instead of being willing to be a channel of blessing the world over, they despised and hated the Gentile nations.

Christ's ministry in the synagogue at Nazareth gives a good example of this. At first the listeners were charmed with His words (Luke iv. 22), but when He widened God's purpose to include Gentiles (verses 25-27), their attitude immediately changed. They were filled with fury, seized him and tried to murder Him by throwing Him headlong from a cliff nearby. From this we can see that Israel, left to themselves, would never minister to the world at large. What a corrective the Lord's ministry as recorded in John must have been to them, stressing His love and purpose for the world of mankind, as well as themselves, so that His Kingdom could one day be realized over the whole earth and the prayer of Matt. vi. 10 become a reality.

No.2. The Author---John i. 1, 2.

pp. 145 - 149

The claim that John the Apostle was the author of the Gospel has overwhelming support from both external and internal evidence. Professor F. F. Bruce writes, "from Irenaeus onwards there is virtual unanimity in the church on the canonicity and authorship of the Fourth Gospel". Irenaeus, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and Eusebius who had access to many works which are now lost, all affirm that John the Apostle wrote the Gospel.

The internal evidence proves that (1) the author of the Gospel was a Jew; (2) that he was a Jew of Palestine; (3) that he was an eye-witness of what he describes; (4) that he was an Apostle, and (5) that he was the Apostle John. The argument in support of this by Bishop Westcott is massive and conclusive and the reader is referred to his work if further details are needed.

We shall therefore conclude from all this evidence that the Apostle John was the beloved disciple whom the Lord Jesus loved. He does not mention his name throughout the work, but then nor does Matthew, Mark or Luke. This was probably due to John's modesty and the wish not to be confused with John the Baptist, and also to avoid the too frequent use of the personal pronoun.

There are clearly three main sections of the Gospel: the Prologue i. 1-18, the Body of the Book (the external witness i. 19 - xii. 50, the witness of His own and finished work, the eight signs i. 19 - xx. 31), and the Epilogue chapter xxi. The purpose for which John wrote the book is clearly stated in xx. 30, 31: "Jesus did many other miraculous signs in the presence of His disciples, which are not recorded in this book. But these are written that you may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that by believing you may have life in His Name". The Evangelist avoids the normal word for miracles. He always calls them "signs"; in other words they all signified a message of truth and we shall find as we consider them that they were given with this object in mind all through, and in each case they led to a belief in Christ and a knowledge of salvation and eternal life (xx. 30, 31).

John's main object then is basic, not dispensational. Sin and death are not dispensational, they affect the whole human race. God's remedy for them is salvation and eternal life which by no means can be regarded as dispensational or be kept to any particular time or calling. It is quite amazing how some who profess to value true dispensational teaching, have never learned to distinguish between what is basic or foundational Scriptural teaching (i.e. sin and salvation), and what is dispensational (relating to the various callings of the redeemed). Consequently what is basic is confused with what is truly dispensational with disastrous results. There are those who by doing this go so far as to say the Gospel of John is not for today, but for the next age—the millennium! However, the facts of experience are against them, for the Holy Spirit has been using this Gospel all through this age of grace to save sinners. How many have been saved by responding to John iii. 16 is known only to Him, but it must be a very large number. All of us are sinners under condemnation and death. Therefore all need salvation, forgiveness and eternal life, and this is just what the Apostle John reveals right through His Gospel, to be found only in the Lord Jesus Christ and received personally by faith in Him.

The nation of Israel needs this just as much as the far-off Gentile, and this has been man's need ever since the fall of Adam. God has only one way of saving sinners, whoever they are, and this is through the redemption work of His beloved Son. We can therefore without hesitation proclaim John xx. 29-31 as being truth for today, and this is essentially the same as the gospel of grace and salvation made known later on through the Apostle Paul.

The Prologue.

In the prologue to the Gospel (i. 1-18) we have the purpose of the whole work disclosed, the making known of the great eternal God and His glory through the Son of God, the Lord Jesus Christ. To begin with, we must recognize that with God, the Source of divine truth, there are no categories of time and space, whereas we human beings can think only in terms of time/space relationships. The Gospel commences like Genesis, "in the beginning", but we must remember that with the eternal God there is no beginning of time nor space.

As someone has said, He is not a creature who must consult watches, clocks, calendars, yardsticks or other space and time measuring devices. Because the human mind cannot grasp the concept of unlimited time and space, John, through the Holy Spirit's guidance, accommodates his writing to our human limitations. He takes us back into the past unto a point arbitrarily called “the beginning” and it is immaterial how many millions of centuries we recede into the past before we mark a point on the calendar and say “this is the beginning of time”. The next word is the verb “to be”, “was”, and here John is guided to use the imperfect tense (en), which gives the concept of continuous existence in the past, and goes back before any point of time. Men can delve into history as far as they like, mark a point of time and call it “the beginning”, only to find at that moment the Word had already been in a continuous state of being. He existed before the beginning, since He always has existed. With Him there is no beginning, for He is eternal and everlasting.

John describes Him as the Word (Logos) and it may come as a surprise to learn that contemporary philosophers used this word frequently as the intermediary agent of creation, who stood between the non-material God and the material world. Such was Philo, the Alexandrian Jewish philosopher, and his writings give us the clearest views of what the development of Judaism was and aimed at. For Philo, to predicate any quality of God is to reduce Him to the sphere of finite existence, and so He could have no active relationship with the material world.

Philo was forced to say that the world was a kosmos, i.e. an orderly world, governed wholly by that which is reasonable, which is to say, natural law. The world is material, and since this is subject to qualification, is a negation of all true being. If this is correct, then God could not walk about, as Christ did, in human flesh, since to be human, one must be material. In order to determine the origin of evil, Philo, and contemporary philosophers, concluded that all matter is evil, since God is both immaterial and good. To them Logos must be non-material, so when John wrote that the Logos became flesh, he was committed to a view that neither Philo nor any of the Gnostics could accept.

For them Logos was a principle, not a Person, and this made the vast difference between the Greek and Alexandrian philosophies and the Christian revelation of God manifest in the flesh, the Lord Jesus Christ. This being so, we can see the divine wisdom that withheld this contribution to the New Testament literature until Gnosticism had arisen in the latter part of the century to challenge the central fact and foundation of the Christian faith. John’s writings confute Gnostic contentions from all angles. The title Logos for Christ does not occur again in the Gospel.

While we have the principle of reason and order immanent in the universe stressed by some Greek philosophical schools, we should not assume that these schools form the background to John’s conception of truth. Professor F. F. Bruce states “the true background to John’s thought and language is found not in Greek philosophy but in Hebrew revelation. The ‘word of God’ in the O.T. denotes God in action, especially in creation, revelation and deliverance”. He draws our attention to the beginning of Genesis where we read repeatedly “God said . . . . . and it was so”; also to Psa. xxxiii. 6 “by the word of the Lord were the heavens made”, and this opens the way to personify the “word of the Lord”.

"The Word was with God." "With" is a translation of the preposition pros, which with accusative means "near to". It presents a plane of equality and intimacy, face to face with each other. In I John ii. 1 a like use of pros occurs "we have a Paraclete with the Father", and in I Cor. xiii. 12 there is a triple use of pros, prosopon pros prosopon, "face to face".

Dr. Basil S. C. Atkinson in his The Theology of Prepositions states that pros gives the sense of home. "I will arise and go home to my father . . . . . and he arose and went home to his father" (Luke xv. 18, 20), "now I go home unto Him that sent Me" (John xvi. 5) . . . the idea of 'rest at home with' is found in the great Logos passage at the opening of John's Gospel. "The Word was in God's home" (p.19). This stresses again the closeness and intimacy between the Word and the Father.

"And the Word was God." We have exact and careful language here. The subject is made plain by the article (ho logos), and the predicate without it (theos). The emphatic position of theos (God) demands that we translate, "the Word was God". Only people who are not versed in Greek grammar and do not believe the deity of Christ sometimes translate "the Word was a God". John is certainly not saying as Jehovah's Witnesses do that Christ was only one of many gods. He is saying just the opposite. Christ, ho logos, is God in the sense that no one else is or ever could be. He is, as Paul describes Him, "our great God and Saviour, Jesus Christ" (Titus ii. 13, R.V. and N.I.V.).

For those who can appreciate N.T. Greek we append the following note. Some years ago Dr. E. C. Colwell of the University of Chicago pointed out that "a definite predicate nominative has the article when it follows the verb; it does not have the article when it precedes the verb".

In the lengthy appendix of the Jehovah Witness New World Translation which attempts to justify their rendering "a god", they quote 35 other passages in John where the predicate noun has the definite article in the Greek. These are attempts to prove that the absence of the article in John i. 1 requires the translation "a god"; but none of the 35 instances are parallel, for in every case (bearing in mind the rule stated by Dr. Colwell) the predicate noun standing after the verb, properly has the article. Furthermore, the additional references quoted in the above translation from the Septuagint, are exactly in conformity with the rule and show its accuracy. Other passages which they quote are not properly relevant to the question. Their evidence turns against themselves. Moreover they are completely inconsistent. In John i. 14 we have "the Word became flesh". Why not "the Word became a flesh"? or I John i. 5, "God is light; why not "God is a light"?

"He was with God in the beginning" (i. 2). This reinforces what has already been said, for before the beginning He existed in close relationship with the One Who is called the Father. He shared the nature and being of God. The N.E.B. renders the phrase "what God was, the Word was", a paraphrase which brings out the meaning of the words. Professor C. K. Barrett sums up in this way:

> "John intends that the whole of his Gospel shall be read in the light of this verse. The deeds and words of Jesus are the deeds and words of God; if this be not true, the book is blasphemous."

So when the heaven and earth were created, the Word of God already existed in close association with Him and partaking of the essence of God. No one can ever say with truth that there was once a time when He was not.

No.3. i. 3 - 14.
pp. 161 - 165

> "Through Him all things were made; without Him nothing was made that has been made" (i. 3, N.I.V.).

The Evangelist goes back to the beginning of creation and states, both positively and negatively, that the whole creation came into being through the almighty power of Christ. John frequently uses such antithesis throughout his Gospel. If we take the witness of Scripture as a whole regarding creation, then we shall have to say that this gigantic work came into being through the co-ordinate relation between the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. Other Scriptures also refer to creation through the Son (Col. i. 16, which not only reveals this, but states that creation was for Him as well. Heb. i. 2 is another reference). As the Creator God is the origin of the whole work, and not only this, the whole creation depends on Him ("in Him all things hold together", Col. i. 17, N.I.V.). "He spake, and it was done; He commanded, and it stood fast" (Psa. xxxiii. 9). Some say that all this requires too much faith, but the only alternative is eternal matter, and how is this easier to believe? The holy Scriptures reveal God as the eternal Creator of non-eternal matter and He is sovereign over it.

The Evangelist continues:

> "In Him was life, and that life was the light of men. The light shines in the darkness, but the darkness has not understood it" (i. 4 & 5, N.I.V.).

He continues to use the imperfect tense of the verb 'to be', and this conveys the concept of continuous existence in eternity past. Thus life is associated with Him, Who is eternal life (I John i. 1, 2). The Word shares that self-existent life with the Father and thus can impart life to others, and this life has special importance for the human race for it was and is "the light of men". The natural illumination of reason and spiritual illumination which accompanies the new birth, come from this light, but it is only the latter that can dispel the darkness of sin and unbelief. Life comes only from life. In creation there is no such thing as spontaneous generation, despite the views of evolutionists.

This light abolishes darkness. In the Genesis account, "darkness was upon the face of the deep" (Gen. i. 2) until God called light into being. In the same way the light of God's Word is the only force that banishes spiritual darkness:

> "For God, Who said, 'let light shine out of darkness', made His light shine in our heart to give us the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Christ" (II.Cor.iv.6, N.I.V.).

The meaning of the verb katelaben can only be decided from the context. It can mean "comprehend" as the A.V. and N.I.V., or "overcome" or "master" (R.S.V. and N.E.B.) and this suits the argument better. Light is stronger than darkness and darkness cannot prevail against it and John could say in his first epistle, "the darkness is passing away and the true light is already shining" (I John ii. 8). Here, and in many other contexts, light is synonym of goodness and truth, while darkness is a synonym of evil and falsehood.

> "There came a man who was sent from God; his name was John. He came as a witness to testify concerning that light, so that through him all men might believe. He himself was not the light; he came only as a witness to the light. The true light that gives light to every man was coming into the world" (i. 6-9, N.I.V.).

The Baptist came as a forerunner, to be a witness of the One Who is the light of the world. Christ described him as a "burning and shining lamp" (v. 35). He himself was not that light but was a true light-bearer. Christ is the Word, but John claims to be only "a voice" (Matt. iii. 3), yet what greater service can be rendered than that which is expressed in this verse? A voice to make the Word known, and a lamp through which His light may shine, a finger raised to point Him out as the Lamb of God! Faithful witness is one of the characteristics of this Gospel. It reveals the witness of the Father (v. 32, 37; viii. 18), of the Son (viii. 14, 18), of the Holy Spirit (xv. 26), the witness of the works of Christ (v. 36; x. 25), the witness of the Scriptures (v. 39), the witness of the disciples (xv. 27) and of the apostle John himself (xix. 35; xxi. 24).

The purpose of all this witness is given in i. 7, "that all might believe" (see also xx. 31). When all John's statement are taken into account, it is clear he is not restricting the Lord's ministry to Israel and this is further emphasized in the next verse:

> "The true light that gives light to every man was coming into the world" (i. 9).

The phrase "coming into the world" can be attached grammatically either to "light", or to "every man", but as this phrase is repeatedly applied to the Word in this Gospel it is better to render it as the N.I.V. does rather than the A.V. J.N.Darby comments here that "Christ's light is to every man, not enlightens, but sheds its light upon all". The testimony of the Lord is conclusive:

> "I have come into the world as a light, so that no-one believes in Me should stay in darkness" (xii. 46, N.I.V.).
> "This is the verdict: Light has come into the world, but men loved darkness instead of light because their deeds were evil" (iii. 19, N.I.V.).

A person can be in the light, and yet be unenlightened. There are some who refuse to come to the light (iii. 19). They choose to be in darkness and ignore the Light of the world; and yet this light is provided for all mankind and is for all without distinction.

We now come to the centre of the Prologue which makes known the great dividing of the ways, reception or rejection of the Saviour of the world:

> "He was in the world, and though the world was made through Him, the world did not recognize Him" (i. 10).

Someone has said "the most stupendous fact of human history is the fact that the Creator of the world paid it a visit": and yet it appears that comparatively few recognized this and gave Him a receptive ear. Man, capable of higher heights than the animals, is also capable of descending to deeper depths of atrocity and blasphemy and unbelief. When men had the opportunity to accept the Creator of the universe, they spat upon Him instead, and laughed at Him while He died.

> "He came to that which was His own, but His own did not receive Him. Yet to all who received Him, to those who believed in His name, He gave the right to become children of God" (i. 11, 12, N.I.V.).

The first "His own" is linked with the neuter plural ta idia; the second "His own" is attached to the masculine plural hoi idioi, hence a difference must be made in translation. When Christ was born at Bethlehem "he came to His own", for the land was peculiarly His, "the land shall not be sold for ever, for the land is Mine" (Lev. xxv. 23). At the same time He came to His own people, for we read, "the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto Himself" (Deut. vii. 6); and as the special people they had special revelation in law, prophecy and promise such as no other nation experienced (Psalm cxlvii. 20). Yet in spite of this great privilege, God's message was ignored again and again by them. He could say with truth:

> "From the time your forefathers left Egypt until now, day after day, again and again, I sent you My servants the prophets. But they did not listen to Me or pay attention. They were stiff-necked and did more evil than their forefathers" (Jer. vii. 25, 26, N.I.V.).

In spite of this there were some, a faithful remnant, who did receive and trust Him when He came to this earth, otherwise the great plan of redemption would have failed:

> "Yet to all who received Him, to those who believed in His Name, He gave the right to become children of God—children born not of natural descent, nor of human decision or a husband's will, but born of God" (i. 12, 13, N.I.V.).

Professor F. F. Bruce's words here are apt to the point:

> "These blessings and privileges which His coming was designed to impart . . . . . are summed up in this, that they were admitted to membership in the family of God. To enter God's family one must receive His Word—in other terms, one must believe in His Name. The name is much more than the designation by which a person is known; it means the real character, or sometimes, as here, the Person Himself. To receive Him Who is the Word of God, then, means to place one's faith in Him, to yield one's allegiance to Him and thus, in the most practical manner, to acknowledge His claims."

John's word emphasize that birth into the family of God is quite different from physical birth and his statements dispose of the idea that every human being is automatically in the family of God. This is never realized by blood-relationship. One "becomes" a child of God by receiving His Son by faith. One does not "become" something that he is already. Spiritual birth, which is elaborated in chapter iii., is the only way of entry and depends upon the receiving by faith of Him Who God has sent.

> "The Word became flesh and lived for a while among us. We have seen His glory, the glory of the one and only (Son), Who came from the Father, full of grace and truth" (i. 14).

The Apostle John now considers the great mystery (secret) of Godliness, "God was manifest in the flesh" (I Tim. iii. 16). The Logos added to His deity by taking perfect humanity. This, declares Paul, is a great secret and beyond our human comprehension. The Lord's incarnation is the Christian answer both to pantheism, which conceives God as totally immanent in creation, and to deism, which sees Him as totally transcendant from it. Without the incarnation redemption would be impossible, for death was the penalty for sin and this price had to be paid. God is immortal and cannot die, but the incarnate Son could become the Lamb of God and give His life a ransom for many.

Yet, at the same time, we must remember that no created being, however exalted, could be the sacrifice for sin and God has never entrusted this supreme work to archangels, angels, or any created being. "I, even I, am the Lord (Jehovah); and beside Me there is no Saviour" (Isa. xliii. 11). Thus only Jehovah can save and thus it was essential to blend deity with perfect humanity. In the early church it was not so much the deity of Christ that was the subject of attack, but rather His humanity. Today the pendulum has swung over to the other extreme, and the humanists have insisted on the essential humanity of Christ but they obscure or deny His deity. Neither the deity or humanity of Jesus Christ can be understood separately, and those who do so have a mutilated Christ Who could never be a Saviour of sinners in the Scriptural sense.

It is clear that John combats the false teaching of those who held docetism. They denied that Christ assumed bodily form. It only appeared to be real, they maintained. Hence the Evangelist in this Gospel and in his epistles warns those who denied that Christ had "come in the flesh" and disunited the earthly Jesus from the heavenly Christ (cf. I John iv. 1-3). It was a blow against Gnosticism which only accepted an impersonal Logos and looked on everything material as evil. In no sense could they accept that Christ took upon Himself a human body for his reason. The Lord Jesus said:

> "The bread that I will give is My flesh, which I will give for the life of the world" (John vi. 51), and that body was specially prepared by God. "Sacrifice and offering Thou wouldest not, but a body hast Thou prepared Me" (Heb. x. 5). "And you, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath He reconciled in the body of His flesh through death, to present you holy, unblameable and unreproveable in His sight" (Col. i. 21-22).

No.4. i. 15 - 28.
pp. 186 - 190

The Word came to the earth in "the likeness of sinful flesh" (Rom. viii. 3; note not "in sinful flesh"), and "dwelt among us" (John i. 14). The word "dwelt" expresses the meaning of the Hebrew shaken, "to dwell as in a tabernacle or tent": "He pitched His tent among us", and the Evangelist asserted. "we have seen His glory, the glory of the one and only (Son), Who came from the Father, full of grace and truth". The thought of the Tabernacle takes us back to the O.T. and the journeying of the children of Israel. There the Tabernacle or Tent was erected by the command of God, so that He might dwell with His people. He said, "Then have them make a sanctuary for Me, and I will dwell among them" (Exod. xxv. 8, N.I.V.), and His presence, symbolized by the cloud over the Tent by day, and the fire by night, was manifested among them. Now in a fuller sense God has again resided on earth in the Word made flesh.

Not only this, but John declares that "we have seen His glory". It was the glory of an only Son who came from the Father and was full of grace and truth. The word "glory" is very difficult to expound, for this is something outside human knowledge and experience. The word and its verbal form is found frequently in John's Gospel and is one of its key-words. In what sense did the Apostle see Christ's glory? He was not enshrouded with blazing light as He walked this earth, although intense light is sometimes linked with the glory of God. What he witnessed was the whole earthly career and ministry of the incarnate Word, His speech and His actions, as day succeeded day: fulfilling the will of the Father. In the high priestly prayer of John xvii., we read His words, "I have brought you glory on earth by completing the work you gave Me to do" (verse 4, N.I.V.). Here is the Lord's own explanation of glory—the complete fulfillment of the Father's will, concluding with the great sacrifice on the cross. This is what glory is all about. The believer in the N.T. is constantly reminded and urged to carry out the Lord's will in his life. It is in this way only that we can glorify our Saviour and Lord. There can be a lot of religious activity, but unless this is a true reflection of His will, whatever it costs, it cannot glorify or please Him.

The word monogenes, "one and only" is used of Isaac (Heb. xi. 17), of the only son of the widow of Nain (Luke vii. 12), of the only daughter of Jairus (Luke viii. 42). In the case of Isaac (Gen. xxii. 2), the fact that he was an "only son" does not mean that Abraham had no other children, but rather that he was specially loved and unique, and so the Septuagint recognizing this renders the Hebrew by agapetos, dearly loved.

The Lord Jesus was "full of grace and truth". In this gospel the word "true" often means what is real and antitypical in contrast to the shadow of the law, and this included more than the law could express, namely all the goodness, love and faithfulness that were found in God Himself so abundantly (Exod. xxxiv. 5, 6).

> "John testifies concerning Him. He cries out, saying, 'This was He of whom I said, He Who comes after me has surpassed me because He was before me'." (John i. 15, N.I.V.).

Note the present tense, "testifies", which shows that the Baptist's witness, although he was long dead by the time this Gospel was written, still remained and would always do so. Likewise the perfect tense "has cried" shows that while his proclamation was a past event, the substance of what he proclaimed was permanently true. When Christ appeared in public, John was able to point Him out and say "this is the One I have been talking about, He preceded me"; for He had existence before His earthly birth, and this is recognized by the N.E.B.'s translation, "for before I was born, He already was".

> "From the fullness of His grace we have all received one blessing after another" (i. 16, N.I.V.).

"One blessing after another" is the N.I.V. translation of the words "Grace for grace". Inasmuch as the N.T. consistently teaches that the antitype is greater than the type that illustrates it, the phrase could mean "the grace of gospel realities in place of grace of types and shadows". But the context stresses that this grace comes from God's fullness. This is indeed a rich and inexhaustible supply which has no limits and is placed at His people's disposal in Christ. So it could also mean that one supply of grace is being constantly replaced by a fresh one, hence the translation of the N.I.V. The Apostle Paul proved the truth of this when undergoing a special trial he had the assurance "My grace is sufficient for you" (II Cor. xii. 9).

> "For the law was given through Moses, grace and truth came through Jesus Christ" (i. 17).

There are references to Moses in this Gospel (i. 17, 45; iii. 14; v. 45, 46; vi. 32; vii. 19, 22, 23; viii. 5; ix. 28, 29). God's law given through Moses has a very important place in His dealings with Israel. It failed, not because it was faulty in itself. It was indeed "holy, just and good" (Rom. vii. 12), but the standard was too high for sinful human nature to keep. It was weak because of the sinful flesh (Rom. viii. 3) and so had to be superseded. Nevertheless, grace and truth were found in it because it came from a God Whose character was "abounding in steadfast love and faithfulness" (Exod. xxxiv. 6, and see Psa. lxxxvi. 15). But the fullness of this revelation awaited the coming of the incarnate Word and the better things that flow from His ministry which are summed up in "grace and truth", and are abundantly shown in His words and works which the Evangelist sets forth.

> "No-one has ever seen God, but God the One and Only (Son), who is at the Father's side, has made Him known" (i. 18, N.I.V.).

God is spirit and therefore invisible (I Tim. i. 17), yet the Old Testament declares in Exod. xxiv. 9-11 that "there went up Moses, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel: and they saw the God of Israel . . . . . they saw God, and did eat and drink". Is this a contradiction? No, before time began, the invisible God expressed Himself in a form of glory and became the Image of the invisible God, the firstborn of creation, because he created all things in heaven and earth (see Col. i. 14-18). It was in this likeness that Adam was created (Gen. i. 26). The Word was then the visible God and was the God of Israel seen by Moses and the 70. The invisible God humbled Himself by taking visible shape. But even then His glory was veiled, for unveiled it was too much for the human body to endure. Read Ezekiel's description in chapter i. of this God of glory and how he was at a loss to describe it—there were no human similes to set forth the vision. He could only say He looked like this, or like that, in earthly terms which utterly failed to represent Him adequately.

Moses too asked God to show him His glory; but unmediated, this was impossible, for God said "man shall not see Me and live" (Exod. xxxiii. 20). He added, "I will cover you with My hand until I have passed by; then I will take away My hand, and you shall see My back, but My face shall not be seen" (Exod. xxxiii. 22, 23). Instead of the word "back", one translation beautifully renders it, "you shall see My after-glow", that is after it had passed by, which must have been wonderful indeed.

In the fullness of time the One Who was the Image of the invisible God, left all that glory, stooped down and humbled Himself by becoming man and the obedient Servant of the Father, carrying out His will in every respect. Not only this, He stooped further and died the death of a criminal by crucifixion. Was there ever such humbling on the part of anyone? But all this was necessary for the penalty of sin to be paid and put away and salvation achieved.

In our context the weight of textual evidence favours the reading monogenes theos, "God only-begotten", or "the only begotten, God", and this agrees with John i. 1 that the Word was God, and no one who respects the inspired Word of God will ignore it or seek to explain it away. The incarnate Son is "in the bosom of the Father", and this is similar to iii. 13,

> "No one ever went up to heaven except the One Who came down from heaven Whose home is in heaven" (iii. 13, N.E.B.).

The translators have supplied the word "home" to make the meaning clearer. Christ, as the Son of man has gone back "where He was before" (John vi. 62), and it is as the only-begotten Who is in the bosom of the Father that John i. 18 now speaks of Him. He has taken back all the glory that He left to come to the earth (xvii. 5) with all the evidence of redemption accomplished. The only other reference to "bosom" in this Gospel is in xiii. 23 describing the disciple whom Jesus loved, leaning on Jesus' bosom (as they reclined at the table). This was not only a place of warm affection, but one where confidences could be received.

The incarnate Word has declared the Father (i. 18). Exegeomai is used only by Luke elsewhere, and means to tell or narrate. He is the true "interpreter" of God to man. He came from heaven to show us what the invisible God the Father was like, and as He said "He that has seen Me, has seen the Father" (John xiv. 9). Now we know what the love of God is, because we have seen it manifested in Christ. We know the patience, the peace, the mind, the will of the Father, for the only-begotten Son has given a complete exposition of Him. He is the One Who has shown us the Father.

The Prologue has now accomplished its purpose, and the Gospel which follows gives us the Son's manifesting, revealing, interpreting the Father to His children.

The Beginning of the Ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ.

> "Now this was John's testimony when the Jews of Jerusalem sent priests and Levites to ask him who he was. He did not fail to confess, but confessed freely, 'I am not the Christ'." (i. 19, N.I.V.).

John's witness is now given in more detail. A deputation had come from the religious establishment at Jerusalem to discover who he was. There was a general expectation at this time. Pious Israelites were "looking for the redemption of Jerusalem" (Luke ii. 38). "The people were waiting expectantly and were all wondering in their hearts if John might possibly be the Christ" (Luke iii. 15). So the deputation asked him to explain himself. His reply is in i. 19 and is stated to be part of his witness. He said definitely "I am not the Messiah". They pressed him further—"Who are you then?". He might have been the prophet Elijah who had been promised in Mal. iv. 5, and he certainly bore the marks of Elijah in his appearance and dress (Mark i. 6), and at his birth it had been declared that he would "go before Him (Christ) in the spirit and power of Elijah, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord" (Luke i. 16, 17). Anyone could imitate John's dress, but his ministry was peculiar to himself. Are you Elijah? they asked him and his answer was "No" (John i. 21). Yet Christ said he was. "Elijah is come, and they did to him whatever they pleased" (Mark ix. 13). In Matt. xi. 7-14 the Lord added a condition to His statement, "If you are willing to accept it, he is the Elijah who was to come". There is no "it" in the original. It could just as easily mean "if you are willing to accept Me". And had the nation done so, the Baptist would have been counted as the Elijah of Malachi's prophecy.

The deputation pressed John still further, for they said they must have an answer to those who sent them (i. 22). Having told them he was not Elijah as foretold in Malachi, he referred them to Isa. xl. 3 and declared he was nothing more than a voice preparing the way for none other than the Lord (John i. 23). Note he was just "a voice", not "the voice" as the A.V. The Baptist had no inflated ideas of his own importance, yet Christ declared he was the greatest of the prophets (Matt. xi. 11).

What was his authority for baptizing? The Pharisees who regulated the religious life of Israel were anxious to know. John explaining that his baptism was only an introductory ceremony. He was the forerunner of the Lord of Isa. xl., and of the Lamb of Isa. liii., and his ministry was to prepare the people for His reception.

No.5. i. 29 - ii. 11.
pp. 207 - 214

John the Baptist not only denied that he was Elijah or the Messiah, but also that he was the specially promised Prophet of Deut. xviii. 18 (John i. 21). His ministry and his baptism were unique. He gives the reason for the baptism. It was that He (Christ) "might be revealed to Israel" (i. 31). This was its main reason and we shall be wise if we keep it in this setting:

> "Then John gave this testimony: 'I saw the Spirit come down from heaven as a dove and remain on Him. I would not have known Him, except that the One Who sent me to baptize with water told me, The man on whom you see the Spirit come down and remain is He Who will baptize with the Holy Spirit'. I have seen and I testify that this is the Son of God" (i. 32-34, N.I.V.).

Up to this point John did not know who the Messiah was. But God had told him of the enduement by the Holy Spirit, and having seen this, he now was certain and stood before the One Whose sandal he was unworthy to unloose.

"Look", he said, "the Lamb of God Who takes away the sin of the world" (i. 29). Note the singular "sin", not personal sins (plural). The enduement of the Holy Spirit was given the Lord at the commencement of His public ministry. This was in line with the prophetic statements of Isaiah. Christ was the ruler of David's line marked out in Isa.xi.1-5, "The Spirit of the Lord will rest on Him". He is the divine Servant of Isa.xlii.1, "I will put my Spirit on Him", and also Isa. lxi. 1, "The Spirit of the Sovereign Lord is on Me . . . . .". Peter's words in Acts x. 38 confirm this, "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Spirit and power . . . . .". Thus He was now ready to accomplish the will and work of the Father in making Him known to men.

The calling of the first Disciples.

There follows now a witness given on four consecutive days, the record of which was as it were a spiritual diary:

1st day. The testimony of John to those sent to him from Jerusalem (i. 19-28).

2nd day. John's testimony to all who attended His baptism at Bethany beyond Jordan. The Lamb of God. The Son of God Who baptizes with the Holy Spirit (29-34).

3rd day. John's further testimony. The Lamb of God. The Messiah and Andrew (35-42).

4th day. The witness of Philip and Nathanael. Him of Whom Moses wrote. The Son of God, Son of Man and King of Israel (43-51).

John's commenting and pointing to the Lord as the Lamb of God, was heard by two disciples who were following Him (i. 37). He knew that their interest was quickened, so He turned round and asked them what they wanted. Hardly knowing what to say, they asked for His address. "Come", He replied, "and you will see". So they went where He was staying and spent the remainder of the day with Him. One of them was Andrew and the other was possibly John the Apostle. Andrew, keen to share the great discovery, goes to find his brother Simon in order to tell him. He said "we have found the Messiah (that is the Christ)". The Evangelist translates the Aramaic Messiah into Greek, as he does with other Jewish words, such as Cephas (i. 42), Siloam (ix. 7), Rabboni (xx. 16) and Rabbi (i. 38), and this was for the benefit of his Gentile readers, for no Jew needed to be told the meaning of these words for they were his own language.

Andrew and John had made the greatest discovery of the ages, their Messiah, Saviour and King! And wisely they sought to pass the tremendous news to others. What an example to all of us! When Simon came to Christ He looked at him and said, "You are Simon son of John. You will be called Cephas" (which, being interpreted, is Peter). Cephas is Aramaic (meaning rock). The word is Kepha, to which a final 's' is added to adopt it to the Greek tongue. This name is applied to Peter only by this Gospel and the apostle Paul (I Cor. i. 12; Gal. i. 18, etc.).

We then read in i. 43 "The next day (the fourth) Jesus decided to leave for Galilee. Finding Philip, He said to him, 'Follow Me'.". Where did Philip come from? Most likely from the activity of Andrew who had already brought his brother to the Lord. Philip, in his turn, passes on the thrilling message to Nathanael. One after another shares the news with someone else. This is the finest way of making disciples and spreading the truth! Nathanael means "God has given". The earthly disciples mentioned in these verses occur in the lists of the Twelve Apostles given by the Synoptic Evangelists. Nathanael appears there under the alternative name of Bartholomew (the son of Tholomai or Ptolemy), and is linked with Philip in Matt. x. 3, Mark iii. 18 and Luke vi. 14.

Instead of referring to Christ as the Messiah, Philip describes Him as the One of Whom Moses wrote and the prophets too; Jesus, son of Joseph, from Nazareth. For some reason unknown to us, Nazareth had a bad reputation. "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" Nathanael asked. He was a Galilean from Cana (John xxi. 2) and therefore knew something about Nazareth; which was an unimportant place anyway. Philip wisely said "Come and see (for yourself)". First hand knowledge is better than guesswork.

When the Lord saw Nathanael, He recognized straight away his sound character, and said, "Here is a true Israelite, in whom there is nothing false" (i. 47); a fine testimony indeed. Nathanael was amazed at Christ's words. He had obviously not seen the Lord before this. The Lord Jesus, as this Gospel testifies, knows infallibly what is in the mind of every person and He demonstrated this by saying to Nathanael, "I saw you while you were still under the fig-tree before Philip called you". Doubtless the large fig leaves hid him from view, but not from the all-seeing eyes of Christ. Nathanael's response was immediate. He said "Rabbi (Teacher), you are the Son of God; you are the King of Israel" (i. 49). His was a quick conversation, but nevertheless it was the real thing. Christ assured him that he would see greater things. "Verily, verily", He said, "you shall see heaven open and the angels of God ascending and descending on the Son of Man".

The double "verily" is a characteristic of the words of the Lord preserved in the Gospel of John (A.V.). In the Greek it is amen, amen; a Hebrew word transliterated into Greek and then into English, our "amen". There are no les than 25 of these double amens in this Gospel. The words are always used to introduce a statement of importance and each should be carefully and prayerfully pondered. It is not possible to quote them all in full, but we give the complete list so that the sincere seeker after truth may weigh them over: i. 51; iii. 3, 5, 11; v. 19, 24, 25; vi. 26, 32, 47, 53; viii. 34, 51, 58; x. 1, 7; xii. 24; xiii. 16, 20, 21, 38; xiv. 12; xvi. 20, 23; xxi. 18.

The Double Verities (Amens) of John's Gospel.

Verily, verily, I say unto you. Open heaven. Angels ascending and descending (i. 51).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. Without new birth, cannot see kingdom (iii. 3).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. Unless born of water and spirit, no entrance (iii. 5).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. We speak that we do know (iii. 11).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. The Son can do nothing of Himself (v. 19).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. He that heareth . . . . . hath . . . . . life (v. 24).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. The dead shall hear . . . . . and live (v. 25).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. Ye seek Me . . . . . because ye did eat . . . . . (vi. 26).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. Moses gave you not that bread from heaven (vi. 32).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life (vi. 47).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. Except ye eat . . . . . drink . . . . . no life (vi. 53).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. Whosoever commits sin is its servant (viii. 34).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. If keep My saying, never see death (viii. 51).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. Before Abraham was, I am (viii. 58).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. Thieves climb up some other way (x. 1).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. I am the door of the sheep (x. 7).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. Except wheat . . . . . die . . . . . abideth alone (xii. 24).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. Servant is not greater than his lord (xiii. 16).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. He that receiveth whom I send, receiveth Me (xiii. 20).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. One of you shall betray Me (xiii. 21).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. The cock shall not crow, before denial (xiii. 38).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. The believer shall do greater works (xiv. 12).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. Ye shall weep . . . . . but it will turn to joy (xvi. 20).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. Whatever you ask in My Name, The Father will give (xvi. 23).
Verily, verily, I say unto you. When young . . . . . guidest self . . . . . when old another guide thee (xxi. 18).

The Lord makes a direct reference to the dream of Jacob in Gen. xxviii. 12, 13, in which heaven and earth are brought together by a ladder which links them both and that ladder, as Christ asserted, was a picture of Himself and He is the only one in existence who can fulfil what the ladder represents. As God, He touches heaven. As Man, He reaches down to earth, and so He is the one Mediator between both that the apostle Paul deals with in I Tim. ii. 5-7. Those who deny His deity have a broken ladder that cannot reach to heaven. Those who deny His humanity, like the early followers of docetism, likewise have a broken ladder which cannot reach to the earth.

As we have seen, the philosophical use of logos by the philosophers and early gnostics of the first century and later, showed the utter failure of human wisdom to supply a perfect “go between” linking God and the needs of failing man. There was an immense gulf that yawned between the far-off Platonist God and the earthly things of time and sense, so we can understand why the Lord Jesus used the figure of Jacob’s ladder as representing Himself in John i. 51. God and man meet in Christ and can only meet in this way.

Chapter ii.

We now commence the body of the Gospel which extends from chapter ii. 1 - ii. 14 and prominent all through are the specially selected eight signs showing forth the glory of Christ, which in each case leads to the great object of the Gospel as stated in xx. 31, “but these (signs) are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through His Name”. We shall see that each of the signs leads to this result.

The Evangelist begins with the wedding at Cana of Galilee and relates it to the “third day”, which probably was counted from the call of Nathanael and would therefore be the seventh day of the record. It is not certain where Cana was situated. Kefr Kenna (about 3½ miles from Nazareth) has been suggested, also Ain Kana and Khirbet Kana are possible. The mother of the Lord was invited to the wedding although she is not named. It seems clear that she was an intimate friend, if not a relative of the family where the wedding took place. Christ and His disciples were invited too. The word “disciple” just means a learner. The term is sometimes restricted to the twelve apostles, but often has a wider circle in view (John vi. 60, 61, 66).

The eight selected miracles or signs have a wonderful correspondence which is set out in the next two pages. It is taken from Appendix 176 of The Companion Bible. The reader should take time to look at the correspondence between the miracles which are truly remarkable. The capital letters show the signs that correspond, and the whole is certainly an indication of the divine inspiration of the Word of God.

The EIGHT "SIGNS".

It was customary for a Jewish wedding to last for a week of celebration. We find Laban saying to Jacob at the marriage of Leah and also at his request for Rachel, "Fulfil her week". It will easily be understood that at a festivity extending over a period of seven days the supply of wine might prematurely run out. Such an experience would be embarassing to the host. Mary certainly realized that in such a difficulty she could turn to her Son for assistance. She had learned too that the former relationship of family life had changed. The Lord had now been endued with the Holy Spirit and commenced His public ministry. In this the Father's will alone was supreme and must take the first place over family ties.

His words to her may sound rough to the modern ear, but there is no disrespect in the original. Instead of "woman" (A.V.) it could be rendered "lady". His words "My hour has not yet come" were significant. There are 8 occurrences of this or similar expressions (see ii. 4; vii. 6, 8, 30; viii. 20; xii. 23; xiii. 1; xvii. 1 note also xii. 27; xvi. 25, 32). The phrase marks a crisis wherever it occurs. The advice Mary gave was wise, "do whatever He tells you", and this is true for all time.

> "Nearby stood six stone water jars, the kind used by the Jews for ceremonial washing, each holding from twenty to thirty gallons" (ii. 6, N.I.V.).

The servants, remembering Mary's directions, followed the Lord's instructions and filled them with water. Then He told them to draw some more water from the well and carry it to the master of the feast. The usual view is that it was the water in the six jars that was turned into wine, which would have been around 120 gallons. But the Lord said "draw out now" and He used the word antleo, which means to draw water from a well, not from the jars. It was this second drawing from the well that the Lord turned into wine, which is more reasonable. The chief steward was amazed at the superior quality of the wine and remarked about it (ii. 9, 10).

> "This, the first of His miraculous signs Jesus performed in Cana of Galilee. He thus revealed His glory, and His disciples put their faith in Him" (ii. 11, N.I.V.).

Christ had indeed come to change the old wine of "law" into the new wine of His earthly kingdom, and this miracle led to faith in Him (ii. 11), which is the very object of the writing of this Gospel (xx. 30, 31).

The Evangelist now records the fact that the Lord and His family moved from Nazareth to Capernaum, where He had His headquarters for the greater part of His Galilean ministry, which is recorded by the Synoptic Gospels. The family were there "for a few days", for Passover now intervened. The Apostle calls it the Jewish Passover, which again indicates that he is writing after the destruction of the Temple and for Gentile readers. Professor F. F. Bruce comments "our Evangelist repeatedly refers to festivals as festivals 'of the Jews', not because he himself was not a Jew by birth and upbringing (he was), but because many of his readers would be Gentile, unacquainted with the details of the Jewish sacred year".

Three Passovers are mentioned by John, the other two being those mentioned in vi. 4 and xi. 55. But for him we should not know that Christ's ministry was much over a year in length. During Passover, according to the law, all leaven had to be removed from each house. In the cleansing of the Temple which now took place this symbolic act was fulfilled. It was the first public act of Christ at Jerusalem, and the cleansing of the Temple, recorded in Matthew, Mark and Luke, came after His public entry into Jerusalem, riding upon the ass, and this was His last public act in the city. Some expositors contend for only one cleansing of the Temple, and conclude that either Matthew or John has made a mistake. But this is an obvious protest by the Lord at the beginning of His ministry against the desecration of God's House; even though the cessation of the trade in animals and money changing was only temporary in both instances.

The Temple was being turned into a supermarket in the court of the Gentiles, and so worship was being prevented. Some are surprised that Christ used force, but it is not said that He hit the sheep or oxen. A flourish of the whip would be probably all that was needed to move them out of the court. He said to the traders "Get these out of here! How dare you turn My Father's house into a market!" (ii. 16, N.I.V.). The Israelite who knew the O.T. prophecies would associate Christ's sudden appearance in the Temple with the prophecy of Malachi "the Lord . . . . . shall suddenly come to His Temple . . . . . He shall purify the sons of Levi" (Mal. iii. 1-3). The Lord's action was a public witness to His Messianic office and utter devotion to the Temple as His Father's house.

> "His disciples remembered that it is written, 'Zeal for your house will consume Me'."
> (ii. 17: see Psa. lxix. 9).

As the guardians of the Temple and its worship, the Jews demanded of Him "what miraculous sign can you show us to prove your authority to do all this?" (ii. 18). His answer was:

> "Destroy this temple, and I will raise it again in three days" (ii. 19).

The word "destroy" is the first aorist imperative of luo, to loosen or destroy. It is the permissive imperative, not a command to do it. The Jews, misunderstanding what He was saying, replied, "It has taken forty-six years to build this Temple, and you are going to raise it in three days? But the Temple He had spoken of was His body" (ii. 20, 21). Herod's Temple began with Herod the Great in B.C.19. The main part was completed and consecrated in ten years. Other parts were still being carried out, and the building was not finished until 63A.D., only 7 years before its destruction by the Romans. John explains that the Lord Jesus was referring to His own body, which was raised from the dead after three days and three nights in the grave. Christ often spoke in parables, especially when His hearers were opposing His teaching. The Evangelist gives us the real meaning of His words which were clear to him after the resurrection, and later on at the time of writing the Gospel. This language of the Lord is recalled and perverted at His trial, as "I will destroy" (Mark xiv. 58), "I can destroy" (Matt. xxvi. 61), neither of which He said. John tells us that the final result of all this was the realization of the object of his Gospel . . . "they believed the Scripture and the words that Jesus had spoken" (ii. 22) and this is emphasized again in verse 23:

> "Now while He was in Jerusalem at the Passover Feast, many people saw the miraculous signs He was doing and believed in His Name."

But Christ was able to distinguish infallibly between the true believer and the unbeliever:

> "But Jesus would not entrust Himself to them (kept refusing to trust Himself, imperfect tense)."

Why was this? "for He knew all men. He did not need man's testimony about man, for He knew (kept on knowing, again imperfect tense) what was in man" (ii. 24, 25). This knowledge was because of His deity, not because He was good at guessing.

Chapter iii.

Christ and Nicodemus.

"Now there was a man of the Pharisees named Nicodemus, a member of the Jewish ruling council. He came to Jesus at night and said, 'Rabbi, we know you are a teacher who has come from God. For no one could perform the miraculous signs you are doing if God were not with him'." (iii. 1, 2). Now, de, so often in John, is explanatory and transitional, not adversative as it generally is. Nicodemus is an instance of the Lord's knowledge of men (ii. 25) and was an example of a person He could trust. Nicodemus is a Greek name which means "conqueror of the people", not that we can deduce from this that he was overbearing. He was a man of position, "a ruler among the Jews", who had evidently been impressed by the miraculous signs which Christ had performed. His own prominence made it remarkable that he came at all to the Lord Jesus. We cannot cay positively why he chose the night to visit Him, as the Evangelist does not tell us. It could be that he wished to avoid comment by other members of the Sanhedrin, for Christ had already provoked some of the ecclesiastics by His assumption of authority over the Temple. But we cannot be sure about this; it is better not to guess. John refers to him on three separate occasions.

One thing is clear. Nicodemus was not blinded by prejudice as were other members of the Sanhedrin. He was a sincere seeker for truth and this is an absolute essential if anyone is ever coming to a knowledge of God and the truth of His Word. He said to Christ, "no one could perform the miraculous signs you are doing if God were not with him" (iii. 2). Although he as a leading teacher in Israel, he addressed Christ as an equal with the title "Rabbi", which was a mark of respect, coming from him.

> "In reply Jesus declared, 'I tell you the truth, unless a man is born again he cannot see the kingdom of God'." (iii. 3).

The solemn importance of this statement is emphasized by the double Amen (verily, verily) with which it begins. The word "again" is the Greek anothen, which is translated "above" in iii. 31 and xix. 11. This birth is not a physical or earthly one, but one from heaven. In other words it is spiritual. Nicodemus missed the point and took the Lord's words to refer to physical birth (iii. 4). The Lord therefore had to repeat His statement, but express it in a different way. Again He uses the double Amen (truly, truly) and says:

> "I tell you the truth, unless a man is born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the Kingdom of God" (iii. 5).

The doctrine of the new birth was not a new revelation; it belongs to the O.T. and as a teacher, Nicodemus should have known this. He should have gathered the necessity of the spiritual begetting from Ezek. xi. 19, 20:

> "I will give them an undivided heart and put a new spirit in them; I will remove from them their heart of stone and give them a heart of flesh. Then they will follow My decrees and be careful to keep My laws. They will be My people and I will be their God."

Without this new spirit, no man of Israel could "see" or "enter" the kingdom of God. God said "I will sprinkle clean water upon you and you shall be clean . . . . . and a new spirit I will put within you". This was amplified in the vision of the valley of dry bones who needed the breath of God to bring them to life (Ezek. xxxvii. 9) and it should be remembered that the noun, whether in Hebrew or Greek, can mean "breath", "wind" or "spirit" according to the context. The linking of water and spirit should make us careful in our interpretation, bearing in mind that this Gospel speaks of "living water" (iv. 10, 13, 14 & vii. 38) and in the context we are considering it is the word spirit that is being emphasized as can be seen by reading the next verse. Instead of translating pneuma 'wind', it can be rendered spirit, and then we have:

> "The Spirit breathes where He wills and you hear His voice, but you do not know where He comes or whither He goes: thus is everyone who has been begotten of the Spirit."

It is not the symbol that is important. It is what the symbol represents, the work of the Holy Spirit. The Word of God nowhere teaches that literal water can bring spiritual life, and to read water regeneration into these verses is to miss the way completely.

Nicodemus could well understand that a proselyte from paganism would need a new birth. As a matter of fact such were regarded as new-born children by the Jews. But he was a recognized and respectable teacher in Israel, a true descendant of Abraham — to think that he needed a spiritual birth from above! But it was so and is still true today. This is where we must all start and Christ enforced this by saying:

> "Flesh gives birth to flesh, but the Spirit gives birth to spirit. You should not be surprised at My saying 'You must be born again (or from above)'." (iii. 6, 7).

It is important to know that Christ's words hold good for others as well as Nicodemus. The word "you" in the phrase "you must be born from above" is not the second person singular, but second person plural, which then has the force "you must all be born from above". Note the "must"; this is absolutely necessary for all without exception. Those who remove this Gospel from the present age, remove this "must" of Christ, and not only this but other statements of His that are true for all time. Here then is the one necessary experience for personal entry into the plan and purpose of God.

> "I have spoken to you of earthly things and you do not believe; how then will you believe if I speak of heavenly things?" (iii. 12).

What are these "earthly things" which are placed in contrast with "heavenly things"? These "earthly things" must surely include the teaching that Christ had just given to Nicodemus, for this is the only way he could understand the words. It may seem peculiar that a birth from above could be classed with earthly things, but inasmuch as it takes place and is experienced on earth with earthly illustrations with the earthly kingdom in view, this is not so strange as it may appear. But we need to realize that the new birth is but the beginning. There is much more deeper truth of God that He wants us to learn from His Word. So many fail to understand this, and so do not grow and develop spiritually (compare Heb. v. 12-14).

> "No one has ever gone into heaven except the One Who came from heaven—the Son of Man" (iii. 13).

The N.I.V. has a footnote pointing out that some Greek manuscripts have "Man, who is in heaven". This is a difficulty which is removed when one realizes that these words may be an explanatory comment added by the Evangelist, like the phrase "Who has His being in the Father's bosom" of John i. 18.

Professor F. F. Bruce comments here, "by the time the Evangelist wrote, the only one who came down from heaven had ascended up where He was before; heaven, in any case, is where He belongs".

The Gospel according to MATTHEW.

No.15. viii. 1 - 20.
pp. 1 - 5

We now come to the second period of the Lord's earthly ministry which deals with miracles and the calling of the twelve Apostles. There are those who have problems with the performance of miracles. Dr. Plummer's words are appropriate here:

> "To those who believe that Jesus Christ was what He claimed to be, to those who believe in the Incarnation, there is no difficulty about miracles. They are the natural works of a supernatural Person. If He was not supernatural, then difficulty arises. But in that case, we tear up the New Testament, and the history of the Christian church becomes inexplicable" (Gospel acc. to Matthew, p.122).

However, it was not that the Lord worked miracles that proved the genuineness of His Messiahship, for, as we have seen, Satan can travesty the miracles of God. It was rather that He performed the very miracles that the O.T. had predicted centuries before. Isaiah records the visitation of the Messiah to Israel when even the desert and wilderness will be glad:

> "Then will the eyes of the blind be opened, and the ears of the deaf unstopped. Then will the lame man leap like a deer, and the tongue of the dumb shout for joy" (Isa.xxxv.5,6, N.I.V.).

Doubtless there were those in Isaiah's day, as there are today, who would think it impossible to interpret these verses literally. They would insist that the meaning was a spiritual one. But they would have been absolutely wrong, for the Lord's healing ministry did these very things day after day; giving sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, and completely restoring those who were crippled. In fact the divine record stresses that, when healed, they actually leaped (Acts iii. 8; xiv. 10), showing that it was not just improvement of their condition, but perfect healing.

Peter refers to these credentials of the Messiah in Acts ii. 22:

> "Men of Israel, listen to this: Jesus of Nazareth was a man accredited by God to you by miracles, wonders, and signs, which God did among you through Him, as you yourselves know" (N.I.V.).

The epistle to the Hebrews confirms this:

> "This salvation, which was first announced by the Lord . . . . . God also testified to it by signs, wonders and various miracles . . . . ." (ii. 3, 4, N.I.V.).

It should be noted that the healing of lepers is not mentioned in the summary of Christ's healing ministry given in iv. 24, and it may be that the one recorded in viii. 2-4 was the first instance of such an act. We have similar details given in Mark i. 40-45 and Luke v. 12-16. We should carefully weigh over whether the accounts in more than one Gospel always refer to the same event, always remembering that the Lord was constantly healing people with similar complaints, and we have only a selection of them recorded in the Gospels.

The Lord's words need not be necessarily different on every occasion, nor the words of the sick person to Him. This may explain the divergence of some of the details recorded by the Evangelists. If Matthew gives us the first record of the healing of a leper, then the man's great faith was the more remarkable. Leprosy, at this time, was incurable and Psa. li. 7 points to it as symbolical of sin. If the man had never heard of a cure, then his words, "Thou canst make me clean" show a wonderful trust in the Lord's power to heal.

How different this was from the case of the one who had a son possessed of a demon. He said to the Lord, "if you can do anything, take pity on us and help us" (Mark ix. 22). He was not sure whether Christ had the ability to heal the boy. The Lord immediately challenges him on this vital point, "If you can? . . . . . everything is possible for him who believe" (verse 23, N.I.V.). Unbelief always limits the Lord and the one who indulges in it.

Mark mentions the Lord's compassion which doubtless He felt towards all who were ravaged with disease (Mark i. 41). The Lord Jesus does not hesitate to touch the man even though his skin disease was highly contagious. The law of love is above the ceremonial law where the Lord is concerned and He touched the leper to assure him of His sympathy and readiness to help. Immediately the leprosy was cleansed; and the sudden cure was one of the outstanding features of these healing miracles.

In no case do we find that mere improvement takes place when the Lord uses His power to heal. It was complete restoration to health. In modern healing meetings we sometimes hear of those who receive some benefit, and this is taken to be a fulfillment of the healing of Scripture, which it certainly is not.

The Lord Jesus now commands the healed man to keep the law and present himself to the priest as an evidence that he had been cured. This shows that Christ did not disregard the law and he had made this clear by His statement in v. 17: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy but to fulfil".

It is quite evident from the Gospel records that healings formed a large part of the Lord's kingdom ministry to Israel and showed not only His compassion, but His concern for the mental and physical health of His people. We should most certainly have regard for this and realize the important place that health takes in the fulfillment of the kingdom of heaven upon earth. Some, with their spiritualizing, remove this entirely from their conception of God's Kingdom and so this comes considerably short of the reality portrayed in the holy Scriptures.

In the O.T. revelation of God's rule, health had an important place: God said, "I will put none of these diseases upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians, for I am the Lord Who healeth thee" (Exod. xv. 26). Later on God repeated this promise, "I will take sickness away from the midst of thee" (Exod. xxiii. 25), and this was repeated when Israel came to the borders of the promised land, "the Lord will take away from thee all sickness" (Deut. vii. 15).

We must not so stress spiritual realities that we forget how rich is the blessing of good health, both in this life and in the Kingdom yet to be on this earth. Hence the reason why healing miracles have such prominence in Christ's earthly ministry, for this is one of the characteristics of the Kingdom of heaven when it is finally realized. Then "the knowledge of the glory of the Lord will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea (Habakkuk ii. 14).

The next miracle recorded by Matthew is the healing of the centurion's servant at a distance. This is not included by Mark, but is found in Luke vii. 2-10, where the centurion sends first elders and friends to plead for his servant. In Matthew he comes himself. This need not be regarded as a discrepancy. Neither Evangelist sets out to give every detail.

It has been noted that in the N.T. centurions have a good character (Matt. xxvii. 54; Acts x. 22; xxii. 26; xxiii. 17, 23, 24; xxvii. 43). Roman training, with its stress on order, often produced excellent individuals such as this one recorded in Matthew. Luke tells us that he had built a synagogue for the Jews, because he loved them, which certainly indicates that he was of a generous character.

His faith was such that it did not need the Lord to be present in person to accomplish the healing. "You have only to speak the word", he said to Christ, which exhibited the quality and strength of his faith. This made the Lord marvel (viii. 10), so much so that He said "I have not found anyone in Israel with such great faith", which was praise indeed. The Lord made a similar comment concerning the Canaanitish woman (xv. 28). This was all the more remarkable because both of these people were outsiders and not Jews. But this did not hinder them from being subjects of the Messianic Kingdom, whereas many Jews who did not comply with the divine conditions for entering that kingdom would be shut out (verses 11, 12) even though they were "sons of the kingdom". This is a Hebrew idiom like "son of hell" (xxiii. 15), or "sons of this age" (Luke xvi. 8).

The Lord's words must have been a severe shock to Jews who considered that they had a natural right to the kingdom of heaven because they were descended from Abraham. John the Baptist had warned them in a similar way that physical descent alone was not sufficient. Their intense disappointment is expressed by the phrase "weeping and gnashing of teeth".

Now follows the third of Matthew's triplet of miraculous healings, that of Peter's mother-in-law, who was in bed with a fever. We are not told what kind of fever it was, but whatever was the cause the Lord Jesus touched her hand and she was cured at once, for Matthew goes on to say that she got up and began to wait on the Lord. The verb dickonai is in the imperfect tense. The N.I.V. recognizes this by translating "began to wait on Him", rather than "ministered" of the A.V.

The day, which was the sabbath (Mark i. 21), closed with a beautiful sunset scene. It was evening (Mark i. 33; Matt. viii. 14) and crowds came as the Lord Jesus stood at the door of Peter's house and healed all and delivered them from demon possession. Satan and the powers of darkness did their utmost to nullify the Lord's work at His first coming, as they will do so again at the end of the age just prior to His second coming (I.Tim.iv.1), hence the constant reference to demonism and the casting out of demons.

Matthew tells us that this was in harmony with Isa. liii. 4, "He took up our infirmities and carried our diseases" (Matt. viii. 17, N.I.V.). This does not mean that diseases were transferred to Christ, but that He removed the sufferings of those who were ill and showed His sympathy with them by healing. Dr. A. T. Robertson shows that bastazo occurs freely in the papyri with the sense of "lift, carry away". Moffatt translates: "He took away our sicknesses and bore the burden of our diseases".

After these three miracles of healing we have three miracles of power over the forces of nature, over evil spirits, and over sin and its consequences (viii. 23-34; ix. 1-8). But before this the Lord gives warnings to two would-be disciples. To the first who, with self-confidence, promised to follow Christ fully, he was reminded of the cost of doing so:

> "Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man has no place to lay His head" (viii. 20, N.I.V.).

At other times the Lord stressed this, reminding His hearers of not putting the hand to the plough and turning back (Luke ix. 62); taking up the cross with its suffering (Matthew xvi. 24), hating one's own father, mother and wife (Luke xiv. 26), and selling all one's possessions and giving to the poor (Matt. xix. 21). The pathway into the Kingdom was far from easy and this the scribe who addressed Christ had yet to learn.

No.16. viii. 21 - ix. 23.
pp. 21 - 25

Here, for the first time, the Lord describes Himself as the Son of Man, a title He uses over 80 times, 33 of these occurring in Matthew's Gospel. Its first occurrence in the Bible is in Psa. viii. referring to the type, Adam, and his dominion over the earth. The title as used by the Lord stresses His perfect humanity and is used by no one but Himself. How significant that the One Who made the earth (and the whole universe), when He came to it should have no permanent home! At His birth, there was no room for Him at the inn, only a cattle stall! And when adult He had no settled place to lay His head! As Dr. Plummer states, His life began in a borrowed stable and ended in a borrowed tomb! Here was humbling indeed. Yet all judgment has been committed unto Him because He is human as well as Divine (John v. 22, 27), and the time is coming when He shall reign over this earth as King of kings and Lord of lords; where He was once rejected.

To the other disciples, the Lord's enigmatic reply could only mean one thing, following Him meant putting Him first in everything, even before funerals, "Let the dead (i.e. spiritually) bury their own dead" (viii. 22). Following Christ means service for Him which must always have the first place. This is a lesson for all of us and probably the most important one. It certainly has the greatest challenge to all who profess to believe and fully follow the Saviour.

The second triplet of recorded miracles deal with the Lord's almighty power over natural, supernatural and spiritual forces, storm, demons and sin. He had apparently taken refuge from the crowds in a boat, and being wearied, possibly exhausted, He falls asleep and is unconscious of the severe storm which quickly followed. The disciples, accustomed as they were to the weather conditions on the lake, being fishermen, nevertheless were terrified at its violence, which was swamping the boat. They awaken the Lord, crying out, "Save us, we are perishing (or being destroyed; note the vivid present tense)". And the One Who recently marveled at the great faith of the centurion, has now to marvel at the smallness of His disciples' trust in Him. He said to them, "You of little faith, why are you so afraid?" It was not that He did not realize the severity of the sudden storm, but He was amazed at their lack of trust in Himself.

Though they did not realize it, they had the Creator of the winds and waves in their midst!

> "Then He got up and rebuked the winds and the waves, and it was completely calm" (viii. 26, N.I.V.).

This result amazed them (verse 27). Experienced men as they were, they had never seen anything like this before. Even if the wind suddenly stopped of its own accord, that would not at once calm the raging sea. The Sea of Galilee is 680 feet below the Mediterranean Sea and sudden squalls can come down from the summit of mount Hermon with terrific force. Both Mark and Luke term it a whirlwind (lailaps). Not only this, but Matthew uses the word seismos for tempest. Everywhere else in the N.T. it means an earthquake, and it could mean that there was an earthquake under the lake. Severe though the effects were from all this, yet they were safe under the control of the Creator, and the Lord gives a demonstration in each of these three miracles, different though they were, that His power was supreme.

Why should He address inanimate things like winds and waves? The possibility is that He was dealing with more than these, namely the devil and the powers of darkness behind the storm, whose constant aim was to murder the Lord. More than once His life was in danger through the activity of the powers of evil.

Matthew now gives us the second miracle of his second group of three, which deals with the Lord's authority over the unseen spirit world and the forces of darkness. The Evangelist links it with the region of the Gadarenes, whereas in Mark v. 1 and Luke.viii.26 it is the country of the Gerasenes (N.I.V.). Dr. A. T. Robertson refers to a village by the lake called Khersa or Gerasa. He then says "this village is in the district of the city of Gadara some miles southeastward so that it can be called after Gerasa or Gadara". Matthew speaks of two demoniacs, while Mark and Luke mention only one, the leading one. There is no need to make difficulty here. The tombs were caves cut into the mountainside and people shunned the region because of the madmen.

These men were demon-possessed and the whole subject of demonology is difficult because we know so little of the evil spirit forces under the control of Satan. But to explain this merely as disease will not do, for Christ treats the demons as having real existence apart from the human personality. The Gospels describe them as unclean spirits, yet they immediately recognize Christ and acknowledge His power. One thing that is mystifying about these evil spirits is that they apparently long for embodiment. Consequently, on realizing the Lord's intention to drive them out of the men, they plead with Him to allow them to enter a herd of pigs that were nearby. He then gives them His permission with the consequence that the pigs rushed down a steep slope into the lake and were drowned. The word abussos, abyss, is used in Revelation (ix. 1-11; xi. 7; xvii. 8; xx. 1, 3) as somewhere where evil spirits are confined. It is used of the deep sea in Gen. i. 2, and appears to be linked somehow with deep water. In Luke viii. 31 and Matt. viii. 32 it cannot refer to the sea, but could be the depths of the lake into which the pigs rushed, but Scripture does not reveal everything about it. Of course, the demons didn't know what the pigs were going to do—i.e. rush into the lake after they had entered them. Yet the people of the vicinity begged the Lord to leave the district. It was not only the loss of the pigs that disturbed them, for Luke tells us that they were filled with great fear (Luke viii. 37). But they forgot the healing of the demon-possessed men and what it must have meant to them. They cared more for pigs than the deliverance of enslaved human beings and this attitude so often happens today.

Chapter ix.

The third miracle of the second group of three is the healing of the paralytic man. This was at "His own city" (ix. 1), namely Capernaum (Matt. iv. 13; Mark ii. 1-4). The Lord Jesus recognized the faith of those who brought him on a mat. Mark and Luke record the fact that they could not reach the Lord because of the crowd, so they uncovered part of the roof and lowered him down before the Lord.

Realizing that the man had an uneasy mind, Christ commences with his spiritual need and tells him that his sins are forgiven (ix. 2). What joy this must have brought to his heart! But it had the opposite effect on the Scribes and Pharisees (Luke v. 17). This is the first collision between the Lord and the nation's leaders. In their hearts they said "this man is blaspheming". They did not say these words audibly, but the Searcher of hearts knew infallibly what was going on in their minds. He challenged them:

> "Knowing their thoughts, Jesus said, Why do you entertain evil thoughts in your hearts? Which is easier: to say 'Your sins are forgiven', or to say 'Get up and walk'? But so that you may know that the Son of Man has authority on earth to forgive sins . . . Then He said to the paralytic, 'Get up, take your mat and go home'. And the man got up and went home" (ix. 4-7, N.I.V.).

It is obviously easier to say "thy sins are forgiven", because no one can prove that they are or are not forgiven. The claim to heal can proved true or false at once. The word exousia means either power or authority and the Lord Jesus had both. The instantaneous healing of the man convinced the multitude that the charge of blasphemy had not been proved, for they "were filled with awe and praised God" (ix. 8).

Between the second and third miracles, Matthew inserts his calling by the Lord. He gives his name as Matthew. Mark and Luke call him Levi (Mark ii. 14; Luke v. 27). There is no difficulty in the double name. Simon was called Peter, and Thomas was called Didymus.

It may have seemed surprising that Christ should have chosen a man that belonged to a class that was the most despised and detested among the Jews. This was not only because he was a tax gatherer but also the fact that so many of them practiced graft.

It was indeed a mixed company at Levi's feast, four disciples and the former companions of Levi, publicans and sinners; with Pharisees and Scribes as onlookers, and disciples of John the Baptist who were fasting at this time (ix. 14). The religious leaders pretended to be shocked that the One they sarcastically called "your teacher" should keep such company. The Lord's cutting reply showed up their ignorance and bias:

> "It is not the healthy who need a doctor, but the sick. But go and learn what this means: 'I desire mercy, not sacrifice'. For I have not come to call the righteous, but sinners" (ix. 12 and 13, N.I.V.).

He bids them to learn the real meaning of Hos. vi. 6. This is repeated in Matt. xii. 7. Mercy was of far greater value than animal sacrifice, which after all was only a shadow (Heb. x. 1). Matthew's response was a real act of faith, for it was very unlikely that he would be accepted back into tax collection. Not like the fishermen who could return to their craft and actually did so after the crucifixion.

It was puzzling that John the Baptist's followers fasted while the disciples did not do so. John was languishing in prison and fasting may have been appropriate, but while the festivities of a wedding are going on, it is impossible to fast (ix. 15), but at this wedding, the Bridegroom would be "taken from them", a hint of His violent death. Then, in their sorrow, they would fast. The Lord identifies Himself with the divine Bridegroom of the O.T. (Isa. lxii. 5; Hos. ii. 10) and there the wife is clearly Israel. God never mixes His metaphors, and there is no Scriptural excuse for confusing the wife of Jehovah with the Body of Christ.

The parables of the new patch and the new wineskins clearly indicate the greater importance of the Lord's new ministry than anything that had gone before (ix. 15-17). We should remember that wine was not preserved in glass bottles, but in goat skins; also that a new piece of woolen cloth would shrink when wet and tear a bigger hole than ever when used as a patch.

There follows now yet a third group of miracles. a ruler of the synagogue, Jairus by name (Mark v. 22; Luke viii. 41) comes to the Lord, saying, "My daughter has just died: but come and put your hand on her and she will live" (Matt. ix. 18). As He goes with the ruler a woman who suffered from hemorrhage came behind Him and touched the fringe of His garment, for she said to herself, "if I only touch His cloak, I shall be healed". Here was great faith again, even if it was tinged faintly with superstition. The Lord Jesus encourages her with the affectionate term "daughter" and she is immediately healed.

He passes on to the ruler's home where a crowd of mourners were gathered. Some may have been hired and it was the custom to employ flute players as part of the mourning. The Lord dismisses them with the words "the girl is not dead but sleep" (ix.24). This resulted in derisive laughter. Luke, the physician, states that they knew she was dead (Luke viii. 53) and there is no reason to believe she had only fallen into a trance or deep natural sleep.

Their derision is up to date, for so few, even believers, accept the consistent teaching of the Word of God, both Old Testament and New, that death of the Lord's children is likened to sleep and resurrection like waking up again in the morning.

The Lord then takes the girl by the hand, and He Who is the Resurrection and the Life, restores her to natural life. Matthew tells us that His fame spread throughout that region.

No.17. ix. 24 - x. 23.
pp. 45 - 49

After the raising of the ruler's daughter, Matthew records the healing of two blind men (ix. 27-31), and again in xx. 30. Mark twice records the healing of one blind man (Mark viii. 22; x. 46). In view of the prediction of the Messiah's witness and work in Isa. xxxv. 5, 6, these are not the only occurrences of giving sight to the blind. This miracle was probably of frequent occurrence together with other healing miracles, and we have only a selection of them recorded in the Gospels. The Lord, in His wisdom, restricts the publishing of His healing work. He wished to avoid the cheap publicity and popularity that this would bring. The time for the complete revelation of Himself to the nation had not yet come.

After the giving of life to the dead and sight to the blind, we have the third miracle of this Triplet, the restoration of speech to the dumb (ix. 32, 33). The cause of the dumbness was demon-possession, which only goes to show that these evil spirit can affect the body as well as the mind.

One important result of this miracle was to increase the hatred of the Pharisees. Unable to deny the reality of the miracles, they were becoming desperate and could only discredit them by associating Christ with Beelzebub, the prince of demons, otherwise Satan himself. This occurs again in chapter xii. 24 and is linked with the unforgivable sin by the Lord (xii. 31 and 32). We shall have more to say on this matter when we reach chapter xii.

At this point in chapter ix. Matthew gives a summary of the Messiah's work as a whole:

> "Jesus went through all the towns and villages, teaching in their synagogues, preaching the good news of the kingdom and healing every kind of disease and sickness. When He saw the crowds, He had compassion on them, because they were harassed and helpless, like sheep, without a shepherd. Then He said to His disciples, 'the harvest is plentiful but the workers are few. Ask the Lord of the harvest, therefore, to send out workers into His harvest field'." (ix. 35-38, N.I.V.).

The Evangelist stresses the great compassion of the Lord as He regarded the crowds (ix. 36; xiv. 14; xv. 32; xx. 34). He realized that their leaders were not meeting their needs, either spiritual or temporal. Matthew uses a strong word (eskulmenoi) to express their distress. They were like sheep without a shepherd or pasture to feed upon, and were "harassed and helpless" (N.I.V.), not knowing where to get satisfaction. Not only this, but the numbers were so great that it was impossible to reach them all. They needed more workers, hence the Lord's call for prayer recorded in verses 37 and 38.

He Himself is going to meet this need; hence the calling of the Twelve recorded in the next chapter. It is to be noted that Mark puts a considerable interval between the selection of the Twelve and their being sent out to preach the gospel of the Kingdom (Mark iii. 13-15; vi. 7) and informs us that they were directed to go in pairs (vi. 7). Matthew does not mention this, but nevertheless lists them in pairs. It is noteworthy that there were 12 of them and this number has been connected with Israel since their beginning (12 sons of Jacob and the 12 tribes). Yet we know little about most of them as to where they worked, and where they lived and died. The traditions about them are not reliable. In spite of this we are quite sure that the Lord knew what He was doing when He chose them, and the message of the earthly kingdom must have received an added impetus from their witness. We should remember that in the heavenly Jerusalem, the wall has "twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve Apostles of the Lamb" (Rev. xxi. 14). This must refer to the Twelve as re-constituted in the Acts, Matthias taking the place of the traitor Judas Iscariot.

The Twelve were obviously chosen before their commission by the Lord, although Matthew does not record this. It was essential, if their ministry was to be successful, that barriers to its progress must be removed. We have seen that Satan and his hosts made a deliberate attempt, in more than one way, to nullify the Lord's witness and prevent the kingdom being realized. Demon possession was an evidence of this and the Lord continually countered it by casting out and conquering demons who were holding people in their grip.

This power He now gives the Twelve (Matt. x. 1) and also the capability of healing all diseases, showing that good health was to be an important feature of the Kingdom when it is realized. This transference of power was certainly without precedent in Israel's history. No Jewish leader, not even Moses, was able to hand over their miraculous powers to others. Elijah was allowed to transmit his powers to Elisha, but only when he himself was removed from the earth.

Matthew and Mark do not give the apostles' names in the same order, but Peter comes first in the four lists given in the Gospels and Acts i. 13. Judas comes last. "Iscariot" may mean "man of Kerioth" which is situated near Edom (Josh. xv. 21-25). Bartholomew is the name for Nathaniel. Thaddeus is Judas, the brother of James, and is differentiated from the traitor by the words "not Iscariot" in John xiv. 22.

These twelve were "sent forth" by the Lord. The word "sent forth" is cognate with "apostles" which means "sent ones". The Lord restricted their ministry to Israel and forbad them to go to the Gentiles. Just as, later on, He restricted His own ministry to Israel (xv. 24). It is astonishing how expositors miss the Scriptural reason for this. Some actually say that this restriction was kept to the first tour only. This is obviously wrong because it obtained right throughout the Lord's life and the Acts of the Apostles (see xxviii. 17-20). Paul on his missionary journeys always went to the Jew first. Both Peter and he stressed that this was necessary (Acts iii. 25, 26; xiii. 45-47).

One of the chief reasons for missing the Scriptural reasons for Israel's priority in the purpose of God, is the wrong conceptions of the kingdom of heaven and the failure to link it with the Messianic kingdom of the O.T. If this is avoided, then the prior place of Israel is obvious. We have shown the Scriptural reasons for this in previous chapters. It is essential that we grip these to understand Israel's priority in this glorious earthly kingdom. Not to do this means confusion and failure to comprehend the true place of the Church, the Body of Christ, with its destiny in the highest heavens.

The Gentile has not been forgotten by God in His earthly kingdom plans. At the beginning of the revelation by the Lord of this great purpose were not Abraham's seed to be the means of blessing to all families of the earth? (Gen. xii. 3).

The twelve apostles were to be heralds, proclaiming the good news of the nearness of this Kingdom, just as John the Baptist and the Lord Himself was doing.

> "These twelve Jesus sent out with the following instructions: do not go among the Gentiles or enter any town of the Samaritans. Go rather to the lost sheep of Israel. As you go, preach this message: 'The kingdom of heaven is near'. Heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse those who have leprosy, drive out demons. Freely you have received, freely give" (Matt. x. 5-8, N.I.V.).

The last sentence means that they must not take payment for healing or for their ministry. The power to heal had been given them for nothing, and they were not permitted to make a trade of their miraculous powers. This does not conflict with verse.10, "the worker is worth his keep" (N.I.V.) or the warning concerning money. Luke, in the charge to the 70, has the words "for the labourer is worthy of his hire" with misthou, reward (hire), instead of trophes, food (Luke x. 7, A.V.). It is significant that Paul in I Tim. v. 18 quotes Luke's form as Scripture.

The word "provide" in verse 9 is in the middle voice and means do not require or provide for yourselves money. To accept support from those to whom they ministered was permitted, but nothing more. They were not to accept financial remuneration for their service. In other words they were not like persons traveling for business or pleasure. There was no need to make elaborate preparations; they must travel in simplicity with their trust in the Lord. But they are to be careful what house they make their headquarters (x. 13-15). Good manners must not be forgotten, "as you enter the home, give it your greeting" (x. 12). It is amazing how many professing Christians forget that good manners are an essential part of sound Christian witness.

But a solemn warning was given to those who rejected them (x. 14, 15). It would be more tolerable for Sodom in the day of judgment than for such people. The inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrha had long since turned to dust in their graves when these words were given. And as they unmistakably refer to a future event, these must surely be raised from the dead in order to come under this divine judgment.

The Lord Jesus does not minimize the tests and dangers that awaited them. He said, "I am sending you out like sheep among wolves" (x. 16). They must combine "the shrewdness of snakes with the innocence of doves" (see Psa. lviii. 4, 5???). It was a combination of wariness and innocence that was necessary for the protection of the sheep and the upsetting of the wolves.

Not only this, but they must be prepared to be brought before local courts of justice such as existed in every Jewish town and the synagogues also. They would be falsely accused and even flogged (x. 17-20), but they were not to worry about preparing a defence for the Holy Spirit would speak through them (x. 20). They would be "hated of all men for My Name's sake" (A.V.) said the Lord. These words were probably surprising and mystifying to the Twelve who were expecting the speedy triumph of Messiah and the setting up of the Kingdom.

However, they must endure the persecutions to the end and then they would be saved (x. 22). Great care needs to be taken with this aspect of salvation otherwise we shall be contradicting holy Scripture. We shall see when we reach chapter xvi., that salvation from sin in the evangelical sense is not in view here otherwise we should have salvation by works and merit. We shall give this detailed consideration when this chapter is reached. In Luke xxi. 19 we have "shall win their souls" (literally) as equivalent to salvation in Matt. x.

Persecution and betrayal would even enter family life, a bitter experience indeed (verse 21). When persecuted in one place they were exhorted to flee to another (x. 23). "To stop and meet useless risks, because one is afraid of being called a coward, is one of the subtlest forms of cowardice", and "the desire to be thought brave is not a high motive for courageous action" (A. Plummer).

Verse 23 ends with a "verily I say unto you" (A.V.) which always introduces something of extreme importance. This verse is not easy to interpret:

> "I tell you the truth, you will not finish going through the cities of Israel before the Son of Man comes" (N.I.V.).

No.18. x. 23 - xi. 12.
pp. 65 - 69

It is important to notice that in the original, the element of doubt is expressed. What is this coming to which Christ refers? Some expositors refer it to the Transfiguration, or the coming of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost. Moffatt translates it "before the Son of Man arrives"; as if the Lord meant that He would overtake them in their tour of Galilee. This is most unlikely when one notes carefully how Christ uses the word "coming", and relates it in this Gospel to His Second Advent.

In the Greek we have the untranslatable particle an with the subjunctive:

> "A particle indicating that something can or could occur on certain conditions, or by the combination of certain fortuitous causes" (Thayer's Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament).

In The Companion Bible, Dr. E. W. Bullinger puts in the margin "be come = may have come. This is rendered hypothetical by the particle an (which cannot be translated), because His Coming depended on the repentance of Israel (Acts iii. 19-26). It would then have been (and will now yet be) the judicial coming of the Son of Man".

It was this possibility with tremendous consequences that dominated the period covered by the Acts of the Apostles. Those who are blind to this or reject it, are throwing away a divine key that solves many problems in connection with the epistles written during this period. In verse 25 we find the Lord Jesus using the term "Beelzebub" given to Him in sarcasm by His enemies. The origin of the word is unknown and has given a lot of trouble to expositors. It may mean "lord of flies", or "lord of dung", or "lord of idolatrous sacrifices". In xii. 24 it is evident that the Pharisees regarded the word as meaning "the prince of the demons", Satan in other words. This was an exceedingly serious charge as we shall see when the Lord deals with the sin against the Holy Spirit.

There follows a threefold "fear not" (verses 26, 28, 31). What has been taught them in private the disciples are to proclaim publicly (verse 27) and they are not to be afraid of the consequences, even though this meant persecution for them. The second "fear not" reads:

> "Do not be afraid of those who kill the body but cannot kill the soul. Rather, be afraid of the One who can destroy both soul and body in hell (gehenna)" (N.I.V.).

This is an awkward verse for those who believe the pagan doctrine of the immortality of the soul. The Bible knows of no such doctrine as a concordance can easily show if the occurrences of the words "immortal" and "immortality" are studied. God alone has immortality (I Tim. vi. 14-16). Note too the differences between "kill" and "destroy". Fire, both in human and divine spheres is not for the preservation of evil, but for its destruction and abolishment. Verses 29-31 were obviously meant to comfort and strengthen the disciples, even though they may be bitterly persecuted.

> "Are not two sparrows sold for a penny? Yet not one of them will fall to the ground apart from the will of your Father. And even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. So don't be afraid; you are worth more than many sparrows" (x. 29-31, N.I.V.).

It is amazing that, although God deals with millions, yet not one is lost in the crowd, but is known, protected, and guided by Him. Here is One Who has all knowledge and His loving care is beyond human comprehension. This is surely true for all time and gives us the reason for the third "fear not" (verse 31).

The verses that follow are challenging indeed. They concern those who publicly acknowledge Christ whatever the results may be in suffering and loss, and those who do not do so and thus disown the Lord before men (x. 32, 33). Such, in their turn, are disowned by the Lord at the judgment seat of God, "I will disown him before My Father in heaven". As Dr. Plummer says, these words are monstrous, if He Who makes them is not conscious of being Divine. Imagine any created being talking like this! These words were indeed solemn to the Twelve.

Verses 34 and 35 are problematic too. The Lord Jesus assures them that He has not come to bring in an easy time of peace and quiet, rather the opposite, symbolized by a sword (x. 35, 36) which would enter even into family life and cause division between those who receive His words and those who do not. This does not contradict the wondrous peace promise in John xiv. 27 which is the privilege of all who truly trust in the Lord for everything. This peace can be experienced at all times even though they may be difficult and challenging. It is not peace at any price, but a glorious experience of rest and calm for those whose faith causes them to rely entirely upon the Lord.

Christ's teaching goes on to deal with love in its relationship to others:

> "Anyone who loves his father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me; anyone who loves his son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me" (x. 37, N.I.V.).

Luke's Gospel states the same truth in a way that sounds puzzling:

> "If anyone comes to Me and does not hate his father and mother, his wife and children, his brothers and sisters—yes, even his own life—he cannot be My disciple. And anyone who does not carry his cross and follow Me cannot be My disciple" (Luke.xiv.26, N.I.V.)

This does not mean that men are to bear ill will to their families, but is strong language to emphasize that devotion to one's family must take second place to devotion to Christ. "In all things He must have the pre-eminence (first place)" (Col. i. 18). The believer must love the Lord in action more than his family, and this must constantly be shown by deeds rather than words.

We need to remember constantly that the love of the N.T. is not just an emotion, or exalted feeling, but is expressed by what we do. Our love for Him is measured by just how far we are prepared to go in loss and even suffering for the Lord.

When Christ talks about taking up the cross, He was using an illustration that would be familiar to all Jews. It was the custom for a condemned person to carry his own cross, as the Lord did Himself—until Simon the Cyrene was impressed for that purpose. The Jews were well acquainted with crucifixion since the time of Antiochus Epiphanes. One of the Maccabean rulers, Alexander Jannaeus, had crucified no less than 800 Pharisees.

When the Lord used this illustration, no one could be in any doubt of its meaning, namely suffering and loss. Mark (viii. 35), Luke (ix. 24; xvii. 33) and John (xii. 25) contain the same teaching.

It should be noted that the word of "life" in verse 39 is psuche, soul. The losing of the soul for Christ's sake, the salvation of the soul, are statements with a special doctrinal significance which we shall see when we consider xvi. 24-28. Any loss which follows faithful service for the Lord is respected by Him and honoured by reward, for He will be in no man's debt. The doctrine of reward has been misunderstood and misrepresented by some, but it runs through the length and breadth of Scripture and cannot be ignored by the faithful student.

We have seen that the great discourses of Matthew's Gospel are ended by the formula, "it came to pass when Jesus ended" (vii. 28; xi. 1; xiii. 53; xix. 1; xxvi. 1) and this occurs in verse 1 of chapter xi., which shows it is a wrong chapter division. Verse 1 should be the last verse of the preceding chapter. This verse makes clear that the Lord followed behind the ministry of the Twelve at a distance, very much like He did with the Seventy (Luke x. 1).

> "When John heard in prison what Christ was doing, he sent his disciples to ask Him, 'Are you the One Who was to come, or should we expect someone else?' Jesus replied, 'Go back and report to John what you hear and see: The blind receive sight, the lame walk, those who have leprosy are cured, the dear hear, the dead are raised, and the good news is preached to the poor. Blessed is the man who does not fall away on account of Me'." (Matt. xi. 2-6, N.I.V.).

John was in prison in Machaerus, east of the Dead Sea, which at this time belonged to the rule of Herod Antipas. It was more likely this affected John's faith, for, after loyally proclaiming the good news of God's earthly kingdom and its nearness, how was it that he was a prisoner, and the Lord had done nothing to rescue him?

We have seen that the Lord's miracles were confirmatory of His Messiahship. They were not just displays of miraculous power, but were actually those prophetically declared by the O.T. as marks of the true Messiah (Isa. xxxv. 5, 6; lxi. 1). The answer of the Lord Jesus to John's doubt amply confirms this (Matt. x. 4-6) and consists of three pairs of explanation which could only be understood literally.

Verse 6, with its warning, must have applied to the Baptist. "Blessed is he" shows it is John who is under consideration. Had it referred to others we should have had "Blessed are they". The words are a check on John, even though he was imprisoned, for unbelief is always the deadliest of sins in a believer, and if not eradicated, will certainly lead to falling away. Doubt is not, as some people think, a proof of superior intellect or piety. Rather is it the parent sin that has caused infinite trouble in the creation of God. It denies all that God stands for and even limits Him (Matt. xiii. 58).

In spite of this the Lord continues and speaks of John in terms of high praise (x. 7-15). He asks three questions concerning him (verses 7-9). Did they expect him to bend about like the reeds near the Jordan, shaken by the wind? If so, they were wrong. John had all the qualities of a great prophet, which were shown in his integrity, strength of will and fearless zeal for truth and righteousness, and the Lord declares that "among them that are born of women there has not risen a greater than John the Baptist" (verse 11). He was "more than a prophet", for, in addition to this office, he was the Forerunner of the Messiah and was His herald, pointing out Him as come (John i. 29, 35, 36). And the Lord does not hesitate to quote Mal. iii. 1 to prove this. It is significant that this Scripture was not spiritualized, but regarded literally. John is the end of one era and the beginning of another which is related closely to the earthly Kingdom. He has been likened to the mountain peak between the old and the new.

The words at the close of verse 11 are difficult. They probably mean the John is greater than all others in character, but the least in the kingdom of heaven surpasses him in privilege. Yet we must not forget that the Baptist, after the millennial reign of Christ, must have a place in the great wedding scene, which is described in Rev. xxi., pertaining to the new heaven and new earth, for he is the "friend of the Bridegroom", the equivalent of the "best man" (John iii. 29).

The words of verse 12 are likewise difficult. What are these violent ones who take the kingdom of heaven by force? "Suffereth violence" is biazetai which occurs only here and in Luke xvi. 16. It is difficult to decide whether the word is in the middle or passive voice. The probability is that it is middle and then has the meaning of "forces its way" like a strong wind. The N.I.V. takes this view and translate:

> "From the days of John the Baptist until now, the kingdom of heaven has been forcefully advancing, and forceful men lay hold of it."

The preaching of John had led to an impetuous thronging around the Lord wherever He went and behind it excitement and curiosity was mixed with true conviction.

No.19. xi. 13 - xii. 24.
pp. 81 - 86

The Lord Jesus now links the ministry of the Baptist with the prophetical statement concerning Elijah in Mal. iv. 5 by saying:

> "And if you are willing to accept it, he is the Elijah who was to come, He who has ears, let him hear" (xi. 14, 15, N.I.V.).

We remember that Luke's account of John the Baptist's birth and ministry likens him to Elijah (Luke i. 17). He was evidently like the prophet in appearance, temperament, and in his witness, although he did not realize this (John i. 21). The words of verse 15 are used by the Lord 14 times in the Gospel records, always emphasizing something weighty and serious.

The statement He made concerning John was conditional, "if you are willing to receive or accept it". The whole of the great kingdom teaching as to the time of its setting up, depended upon the attitude of the people of Israel to whom the Lord had come and who were the centre of its purpose. Had the nations repented as commanded and received Christ as Messiah and King, John would have been reckoned as fulfilling the prophecy concerning Elijah.

The Lord now shows the real condition of the people as a whole and their religious leaders:

> "To what can I compare this generation? They are like children sitting in the market places and calling out to others:
>
> 'We played the flute for you, > and you did not dance;
> we sang a dirge,
> and you did not mourn.'
> For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, 'He has a demon'. The Son of Man came eating and drinking, and they say, 'Here is a glutton and a drunkard, a friend of tax collectors and sinners'." (xi. 16-19, N.I.V.).

"This generation" is a significant expression, used by the Lord 16 times and described by Him as "evil and adulterous" (xii. 39), "faithless and perverse" (xvii. 17). They were the most favoured generation in the whole history of Israel, as they had the personal ministry of their Messiah. Hence their tremendous responsibility and terrible sin of rejecting Him.

The Lord had often watched children playing in the market place and the illustration is so apt and true that it could not have been manufactured by the Evangelist or anyone else. Israel's righteous leaders were like peevish children with narrow ideas of games, for whom nothing was right. The Baptist comes with his sternness and they want him to play at dancing and festivals. The Lord Jesus comes, taking part in social joy, and they want Him to play at funerals. In addition to this, they malign both John and the Lord, but "wisdom is proved right by her actions" (xi. 19). The asceticism of John and the lack of it in the Lord were equally right under the control of a God of wisdom.

The Lord Jesus now discusses the reactions of the cities in which He performed many of His mighty works:

> "Then Jesus began to denounce the cities in which most of His miracles had been performed, because they did not repent. 'Woe to you, Korazin! Woe to you, Bethsaida! If the miracles that were performed in you had been performed in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. But I tell you, it will be more bearable for Tyre and Sidon on the day of judgment than for you'." (xi. 20-22, N.I.V.).

Our knowledge of Palestine during the life of Christ is meager and nothing is known of Chorazin or of the Lord's ministry there, which goes to show that some of His great witness is unrecorded. Tyre and Sidon were wicked cities (Isa. xxiii.; Jer. xxv. 22; xlvii. 4; Ezek. xxvi. 3-7; xxviii. 12-22) and have passed into oblivion many centuries ago. Yet verse 22 assues us that there is a future experience for them on the "day of judgment".

No human being can judge another on the grounds of what he would have done if circumstances and conditions had been different. But a God of righteousness can and will do so, because He knows all the activities of the mind of a person as well as their words and actions, and just what their response would be under different conditions.

Christ goes on to treat with Capernaum, and this city was doubly blessed because it was the Lord's home as well as witnessing His miracles and signs. He makes the astounding statement that if these miracles had been performed in Sodom, it would have remained to the present time instead of being destroyed. Again, Sodom, in the future great judgment day will fare better than Capernaum (verse 24). It is very evident that God's standards of judgment are very different to man's, and they are the verdict of One Who is absolutely righteous.

The sins of Tyre, Sidon, and Capernaum were not those of hostility or ridicule. They were just indifferent. His mighty works made no impression on them. And this is the great sin of the present day—indifference. There is little or no spiritual need and therefore few care. One can be enthusiastic about anything except the things of Christ. People are prepared to suffer and put themselves to any lengths for their pleasures. They indeed are "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God" (II Tim. iii. 4). They become worshippers of pleasure and their own interests. It is not that they are violently anti-Christian. They just have no need of Christ and so they ignore Him and His claims.

The conditions were much the same during the earthly life of the Saviour. How wonderful that, in the following verses, He turns away from it all and makes the sublime statement recorded in verses 25-30 in His communion with the Father:

> "At that time Jesus said, I praise you, Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because you have hidden these things from the wise and learned, and revealed them to little children. Yes, Father, for this was your good pleasure. All things have been committed to Me by My Father. No one knows the Son, except the Father, and no one knows the Father except the Son and those to whom the Son chooses to reveal Him.
> Come to Me, all you who are weary and burdened, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you and learn from Me, for I am gentle and humble in heart, and you will find rest for your souls. For My yoke is easy and My burden is light" (xi. 25-30, N.I.V.).

What matchless words! And they have been precious to God's people all down the centuries. A. B. Bruce calls them "at once prayer, praise and self-communing in a devout spirit". Some expositors have felt that these words are manifestly Johanine in spirit and should have been found in John's Gospel. But we are wise if we do not try to correct the real Author, the Holy Spirit, Who, at this point in Matthew's writing, brought to his mind these wonderful words of the Lord Jesus. We should note the verb epiginoskei twice, which means "fully know". No one fully knows Christ except the Father. To hear some Christians talk one would think that they have no problems with His tremendous personality. They imagine they know all there is to know about Him, but they should reflect on verse 27 and also remember that Col. ii. 2 designates Him as the Mystery of God in Whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

The Lord calls us to take His yoke upon us and learn from Him. This yoke is "easy" because, being appointed and made by Him, it fits us perfectly and does not chafe. In this way we can be linked with Him and walk together. The "burden" then becomes light. He becomes the burden-bearer, and as a consequence we can find rest and peace, and not only that but refreshment too for the word used (anapausis) includes this. It means more than just rest; it is rather rejuvenation.

The Lord Jesus is a meek and humble Teacher (verse 29). How vastly different from the world around us. Humility was not a virtue among the ancients. It was ranked with servility. But the greatest Teacher this world has ever seen glorified real humility; and the apostle Paul remembered this when he wrote "in lowliness of mind each counting other better than himself" (Phil. ii. 3).

There is no place for the "big I" in service for Christ. How can we be yoked to the truly humble One and indulge in swank and self-esteem? His yoke is "kindly" (better than "easy") and His burden is light. What a contrast to the religious teachers of the day, "For they bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers" (xxiii. 4). What a terrible contrast! but it was. We can only thank and praise the Lord for this triplet of wonderful sayings (25, 26; 27; and 28-30). It is indeed a sublime prayer.

Chapter xii.

Chapter xii. commences with the incident of the Lord and His disciples passing through a field of grain, and the disciples, feeling hungry, plucked a few ears of wheat and ate them. This gave the Lord's enemies, the Pharisees, a golden opportunity as they thought to criticize them for violating the laws of the Sabbath. But it was not the laws of the O.T. that the twelve were breaking, but rather the narrow Pharisaic rules which these religious leaders had forced upon the people. To the Pharisees, plucking the ears of wheat was reaping, and rubbing them in their hands was threshing. This nonsense the Lord Jesus now exposes by quoting the action of David when he was hungry: also the priests in their ceremonial work on the sabbath day which was not only allowed by God, but commanded by Him. There were actually more sacrifices on the sabbath than on any other day of the week, and this meant work all the time.

The Pharisees were careful not to accuse the disciples of stealing grain by eating it, as this was allowed in Deut. xxiii. 25. But as the Lord of the sabbath Christ pronounces the twelve as being innocent of breaking of the Sabbatical law.

It is difficult to avoid Exod. xxxi. 12-18 here. The Lord of the Sabbath is Jehovah, as this context makes clear. The Lord Jesus Christ uses the title "Lord" without any apology whatsoever. He alone is the Lord and controller of the sabbath day and has the authority to determine the way in which the principle of the sabbath rest can best be carried out. This tremendous claim angered the Pharisees extremely and the situation was brought to a head by the Lord's healing of the man with a shriveled hand (xii. 9-14). Again they tried to find a reason for accusing Him (verse 10) by asking if it was lawful to heal on the Sabbath? His answer must have been devastating to them for He insisted that this rest day included doing good! (verse 12). Then we read:

> "But the Pharisees went out and plotted how they might kill Jesus" (xii. 14, N.I.V.).

Mark's account tells how they conspired with their hated rivals, the Herodians (iii. 6), so determined were they to murder the Lord and get rid of Him. Not only was He the giver and controller of the Sabbath, He was the great King-Priest, and as such was greater than the Temple with its earthly failing priesthood. The fact that the word "greater" is neuter in the Greek is not a problem, for, as Professor A. T. Robertson declares, it still refers to Christ and His superiority.

Realizing the plotting of the Pharisees the Lord Jesus withdrew from the place (Matthew xii. 15). Many still followed Him and He healed all their sick, thus fulfilling Isa. xlii. 1-4. He was the great Servant, Who was the special object of divine love and the anointing of the Spirit. He was the One who would finally bring justice to the nations. His tenderness is stressed. He will not extinguish any spark of real longing in human hearts. He will not break the crushed reed nor extinguish the flickering wick that is smoking and going out. These are vivid images which describe His tender and sympathetic work and witness.

A demon-possessed man was brought to Him and much to the astonishment of the bystanders He healed him straight-away. "Could this be the Son of David?" they ask (Matt. xii. 22, 23). The way the question is expressed in Greek, expects the answer "No", but doubtless they were afraid of the Pharisees. They were amazed and full of excitement. Directly the religious leaders noted this they decided that they must do something strenuous to counteract any possibility of the people recognizing the Lord as Messiah, the son of David. They could not deny the fact of the miracles, for the blind and dumb men both saw and spoke (verse 22), so in desperation they suggest that Christ worked His miracles through the power of Satan, and in doing this they committed the one sin that cannot be forgiven, as the context teaches.

No.20. xii. 25 - xiii. 19.
pp. 113 - 119

The Pharisees' terrible assessment of the Lord's miracles being done through Satan's power, so that He was just the tool of the evil one, is now exposed by Christ. If this accusation was true, then Satan was working against himself and the Lord asks "how shall then his kingdom stand?" (Matt. xii. 26). On the other hand, "if I drive out demons by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God has come upon you" (xii. 28, N.I.V.), for this practical evidence of His control over the spirit world corroborated His Messiahship.

Why is the sin against the Holy Spirit as committed by the religious leaders, regarded as being so terrible? If Christ was Satan's tool, then the whole redemptive plan of God for the universe collapses and comes to nothing.

We occasionally meet those who are so burdened with their failures that they imagine they have committed the unforgivable sin. But let us remember this is confined to one sin only; all other sin can be forgiven by God (verses 31, 32). This sin is believing that Satan is really God, and Christ was using the evil one's power to perform the miracles that He wrought. In all our experience we have never met a person with such a belief, although it is possible that such persons do exist.

The Lord Jesus now uses the terrible words that the Baptist had addressed to the Pharisees and Sadducees who came to his baptism (Matt. iii. 7):

> "You brood of vipers, how can you who are evil say anything good? For out of the overflow of the heart the mouth speaks . . . . . but I tell you that men will have to give account on the day of judgment for every careless word they have spoken" (xii. 34-37, N.I.V.).

The Pharisees had deliberately made their choice and had taken Satan's side against God, which only shows the evil heart within them.

Verse 36 is very searching. Christ asserts that every "idle word" is noted by God. Argon, the word translated "idle", literally means "not working". Such words are useless and do no good. Professor A. T. Robertson says:

> "Jesus Who knows our very thoughts (12:25), insists that our words reveal our thoughts and form a just basis for the interpretation of character (12:37). Here we have judgment by words, as in 25:31-46 where Jesus presents judgment by deeds. Both are real tests of actual character . . . . . and by the radio our words can be heard all round the earth. Who knows where they stop?".

To cap it all, the Pharisees and teachers of the law, in addition to the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, now demand a miraculous sign from Christ. "Teacher, we want to see a miraculous sign from you" (xii. 38, N.I.V.). And this, after all the miracles He had performed! Their request was impudent and hypocritical. The Lord replied:

> "A wicked and adulterous generation asks for a miraculous sign! But none will be given it except the sign of the prophet Jonah. For as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of a huge fish, so the Son of Man will be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (xii. 39, 40, N.I.V.).

We shall have more to say about the phrase "three days and three nights" when we come to the burial and resurrection of the Lord Jesus. Is it to be taken literally, or is it a loose expression denoting a shorter period of time? We shall weigh up the evidence for and against this when we reach the end of the Gospel.

As He had done before, Christ now asserts that there is a future in resurrection for the men of Nineveh and the queen of Sheba, who will condemn the favoured generation to whom the Lord came (xii. 41, 42). The men of Nineveh repented at the preaching of Jonah, but the wicked generation to whom the Lord came had been commanded to repent, and they refused. The Lord likens them to a demoniac who had been cured and then allows himself to be re-possessed by demons. The final condition was infinitely worse than the first (verses 43-45).

The verses that follow tell of the mother and brothers of the Lord who wanted to speak to Him. These were the younger sons of Joseph and Mary. The Lord's reply was not a censure on His relatives, but points to the fact that there was something more important than human relationships. He said:

> "Who is My mother, and who are My brothers? Pointing to His disciples, He said, Here are My mother and my brothers. For whoever does the will of My Father in heaven is My brother and sister and mother" (xii. 48-50, N.I.V.).

We should note that He does not refer to Joseph as His father for that would not have been true. He had no human father. His Father was "in heaven".

It may be that here Mary was getting concerned about the Lord's health and wanted to take Him home for rest and refreshment. Mark tells us that the multitude surrounding Him made it impossible to eat, and some of His brothers actually thought the strain was so great that He was "beside Himself" (Mark iii. 20, 21) and they tried to detain Him. But the Lord the same day went out of the house and sat beside the lake (Matt. xiii. 1).

Chapter xiii. which follows is one of great importance and the correct interpretation cannot be made unless we remember the context in which it is placed. The 12th chapter records a climax, recording the rejection of Christ in a three-fold capacity. He was greater than the Temple with its priesthood (xii. 6), greater than Jonah the prophet (41), and greater than king Solomon (42), and as Prophet, Priest and King He was set aside by the leaders of Israel and this in spite of His mighty works which proved His Messiahship (chapter xi.).

From this point the Lord begins to veil His teaching in parables, which was evidently something new in His ministry for His disciples came and asked Him why He was speaking in parables (xiii. 10).

To anyone who adopts the popular idea about parables, the Lord's reply must be puzzling indeed. He had sometimes used stories as illustrations, but none of them were called parables. They are often regarded as simple anecdotes for beginners in the Christian way, but a practical acquaintance with them gives a very different view. The Lord Jesus quotes from Psa. lxviii. 2 in Matt. xiii. 35. The Psalm commences with the words:

> "Give ear, O My people, to my law:
> Incline your ears to the words of My mouth.
> I will open My mouth in a parable:
> I will utter dark sayings of old."

"Dark sayings" are hardly an expression of simple truth, and the Psalm with its history of Israel from Moses to David does not merely record external events, but gives the inner reasons of their failures which were so often unperceived. Parables deal with the deep ways of God with His people, much of which are veiled from those who are uninstructed, or who oppose the truth.

Linked with the word "parable" in Matt. xiii. is the word "mystery" or secret. It is important to realize that this word does not denote something that is mysterious or puzzling, but a fact that has been kept secret. The word is from mustes, one initiated, coming from mueo, to close or shut, and thus hide. The mystery religions of the East had various secrets and signs, as secret societies do today. We have in this chapter the secrets of the kingdom of heaven, and Christ asserts that the knowledge of these secrets had been given to the disciples, but not to the people as a whole:

> "The knowledge of the secrets of the kingdom of heaven has been given to you, but not to them . . . . . this is why I speak to them in parables. Though seeing, they do not see; though hearing, they do not hear . . . . . but blessed are your eyes because they see, and your ears because they hear" (xiii. 11-16, N.I.V.).

In verse 14 the Lord explains why His opposers in Israel did not see (understand). It was because they had firmly closed their eyes and deafened their ears, and made their minds so hard in their opposition to God that understanding of His truth relating to the kingdom was impossible. And to prove this Christ quotes the momentous prophecy contained in Isa. vi. 9, 10. This was the cause of Israel's failure in Isaiah's day. It also explained why the leaders of the people and others associated with them rejected the Messiah at His first coming. There are three quotations of this prophecy given in the N.T. that occur at times of great crisis in Israel's history, namely here, in John xii. and Acts xxviii. To ignore this is to throw away a divine key that explains so much of the purpose of God contained in the N.T., and gives the reason why the chosen earthly people failed so badly, and also throws light on their spiritual condition today.

The parables revealed the truth to those who were spiritually hungry, but veiled it from those who opposed. From this time of rejection onwards the Lord maintained parabolic teaching in public for "without a parable spake He nothing to them" (xiii. 34).

There are eight parables given in Matt. xiii., not seven as is sometimes taught, and they are in perfect balance as the following structure by C. H. Welch shows:

A | 1-9. The SOWER. The sowing of the seed into four kinds of ground.
13. They (Israel) did not understand.
B | 24-30. The TARES. Good and bad together.
Separated at the harvest (the end of the age);
the bad are cast into a furnace of fire,
there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.
C | 31, 32. The MUSTARD TREE. One tree.
D | 33. The LEAVEN. Hid in three measures of meal.

These first four parables spoken outside the house to great multitudes.

D | 44. The TREASURE. Hid in a field.
C | 45, 46. GOODLY PEARLS. One pearl.
B | 47-50. The DRAG NET. Good and bad together.
Separated at the end of the age;
the bad are cast into a furnace of fire,
there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.
51. They (disciples) did understand.
A | 52. The SCRIBE. The treasure opened to those in the house.

These last four parables were spoken inside the house to the disciples.

The Sower.

The first parable, that of the Sower, is given in the three Synoptic Gospels. It is, in a sense, a key parable, for Mark records the words of the Lord, "Know ye not this parable? and how then will ye know all parables?" (Mark iv. 13). The chief point stressed is the condition of the soil, rather than the seed. Perhaps it is truer to call this parable, the parable of the soils, rather than the parable of the sower. In each of these Gospels we have four kinds of ground which the Lord interprets, and we must take great care to note this and adhere to it.

Much heresy and confusion has resulted from the fanciful explanations of these parables and this must be avoided. Those who listened knew the O.T. Scriptures, and moreover had no church doctrine in their minds for this was then unrevealed. The student of the Scriptures should carefully compare the parable as stated in Matt. xiii., Mark iv., and Luke viii., and note where they differ in detail, but the picture as a whole is the same in the three accounts.

We must keep to the Israelitish setting, remembering the Lord limited His own ministry and that of the Twelve to the lost sheep of the house of Israel (x. 5, 6; xv. 24). The Lord's first explanation is that "the sower (not a sower) went out to sow" (xiii. 3). It is important not to add our ideas to the Lord's. He does not say here, "the sower is the Son of Man". That is reserved for the parable of the Tares. The sower is not named, but he sows the word of the kingdom of heaven.

Again it does not tells us here that the "field is the world". Luke informs us that the various sowings in different kinds of ground had reference to the hearts or minds of those who heard the Word. The seed of the kingdom of heaven had more than one sower. John the Baptist was the first, as we have seen. It was followed by the sowing of the Lord Jesus Christ, and then Peter and the Apostles during the Acts period. They proclaimed the immanent coming back of the King on the repentance of Israel (Acts iii. 19-26). In spite of this, the ministry from a human standpoint was a failure and we must notice the same thing regarding the first 3 sowings of the kingdom seed in the parable now before us.

However, the earthly kingdom purpose of God cannot finally fail, hence the parable and prophecy in general indicates that the fourth sowing of the gospel of the kingdom seed will finally be fruitful and this will take place at the end of the age.

The Baptist preached the good news of the coming Kingdom, but its realization depended upon the command to Israel to repent and turn to the Lord. It is true of course that each sowing had something of the four kinds of ground among its hearers, nevertheless each had its special characteristics.

No.21. xiii. 20 - 32.
pp. 121 - 125

John the Baptist's sowing of the Kingdom seed fell upon hearts which, like the wayside, had become hardened with continual treading and tradition. Thus it was easy for the Wicked One (Satan) to catch away that which was sown in their minds (xiii. 19).

We should note that there is a double application in the parable, for the seed sown not only represents the word of the Kingdom, but the sons of the Kingdom as well. When the Lord Jesus interprets the parable, He says "this is he that was sown by the wayside . . . . . he that was sown upon rocky places, this is he that heareth the word . . . . . he that was sown among thorns", and the same intermingling is seen in Mark iv. and Luke viii.

When the application relates to those who are the real children of the Kingdom, their identity is lost in that of the seed sown, and they are thus linked with the truth that is being set forth.

The great majority of the Baptist's hearers, which included the Pharisees, failed to understand his message, clear though it was. He likened them to a generation of vipers and warned them to flee from the wrath to come (Matt. iii. 7). Later on the Lord Himself called them "the children of the devil" (John viii. 44), although they themselves claimed to be the "children of Abraham" (John viii. 33). It was not hard therefore for Satan to snatch the seed away from them.

We come now to the stony ground hearers. These were in rocky places which evidently consisted of ledges of rock with thin layers of soil on them. The seed shot up at once. There were immediate results, but they did not last. These hearers received the message with joy, but only "for a while". Christ said to them "he (John the Baptist) was a burning and shining light and ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light" (John.v.35). When the hot sun of persecution came on them, they were "scorched" and "withered away because they had no root" (Matt. xiii. 6). Their shallowness became only too evident; quick to believe, apparently, but quick also to take offence when trouble arose.

Such were some of the disciples who first of all walked with the Lord, but soon were saying concerning Christ's teaching, "this is a hard saying; who can hear it?.....from that time many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him" (John vi. 60-67). Similarly, in Luke iv. we have the record of those who heard the Lord's discourse in the synagogue and we are told, "all bear Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth" (Luke iv. 22). Within a few minutes the same people "were filled with wrath, and rose up and thrust Him out of the city, and led Him unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast Him down headlong" (Luke iv. 28, 29).

Herod exhibited the same character. "When Herod saw Jesus he was greatly pleased . . . . . he hoped to see Him perform some miracle" (Luke xxiii. 8). Yet when Christ refused to do this "Herod and his soldiers ridiculed and mocked Him" (verse 11, N.I.V.).

Another example were the multitudes just before the Crucifixion who were crying in excitement, "blessed is He Who cometh in the name of the Lord; hosanna in the highest". Yet within a few days, urged by the priests and elders, they screamed "Crucify Him, crucify Him" (Matt. xxvii. 19-25). This shallowness and fickleness was typical of those to whom the Lord witnessed, and thus His ministry can be likened to the stony ground hearers.

The ministry of Peter and the Twelve follow that of the Lord Jesus. Peter uses the key word of the gospel of the Kingdom, "repent" and the external ordinances of the Kingdom "be baptized" (Acts ii. 38; iii. 19-26). The trouble here was not hardness of heart and shallowness, but the failure to progress spiritually and go on to maturity (A.V. perfection). The things that prevented this are likened to "thorns" in the parable, and they stand for the cares of this life and the deceitfulness of wealth that choke the progress of the Word, making it unfruitful (Matt. xiii. 22).

The Epistle to the Hebrews is the Scriptural commentary on this condition. The illustration of the thorny ground is repeated in Heb. vi. 8, "but that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected". In Luke's accounts we are told that the thorny ground hearers are choked with the riches and pleasures of this life and bring no fruit to perfection (maturity, viii. 14), and we find the echo of this in Heb. vi. with the exhortation "leaving . . . . . let us go on to perfection (maturity)". Ananias and Sapphira are examples of those who were choked by the "thorns", money, the material things of this life.

It is not until we reach the fourth sowing of the Kingdom seed that we get the full results of "good ground", for God will not allow His great purposes for the establishment of His Kingdom on earth to founder. He gets the real fruit at last.

Finally, this gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached for a witness unto all the nations, and then shall the end come (Matt. xxiv. 14). This final witness leads on to the fulfillment of the commission of Matt. xxviii. 19, 20:

> "Therefore go and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, and teaching them to obey everything I have commanded you. And surely I am with you always to the very end of the age" (N.I.V.).

The world-wide proclaiming of the Kingdom and discipling of all the nations is linked by the Lord Jesus to a time preceding His Second Coming, as the whole of Matt. xxiv. teaches. This last sowing will be fruitful. At the end, "Israel shall all be righteous" (Isaiah lx. 21). "All Israel shall be saved" (Rom. xi. 26). Up to this point the heart of Israel had "waxed gross" and become so hard that the word of the Kingdom did not penetrate. The condition of the heart of mind is at the centre of the New Covenant which God has made with the nation (Jer. xxxi. 31-37). His promise to them is "I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh" (Ezek. xi. 19).

This is the great blessing of the New Covenant with Israel which is sealed by the blood of Christ (Luke xxii. 20, N.I.V.), and upon this covenant of grace the future of Israel rests and the establishment of the Messianic Kingdom on earth.

Charles H. Welch helpfully sums up the four sowings, thus:

John the Baptist	Wayside hearers	"They seeing, see not, neither do they understand".
The Lord Jesus, the Twelve, and the Seventy	Stony ground hearers	"Nothing but leaves . . . it withered away".
Peter and the Twelve	Thorny ground hearers	"No fruit to perfection (Maturity)". "Riches, pleasures, the lust of other things" (Heb. vi.).
The Final Witness	Good ground hearers (the heart of the New Covenant)	"The honest and good heart". "Some a hundredfold".

The parables of the Fig Tree (Luke xiii.) and the Great Supper go along the same lines as the Sower. It is important to realize that the main object of these parables is not to give easy spiritual lessons to beginners, but to depict the secret course of the earthly Kingdom through its apparent defeat owing to human failure, right on to its glorious close. All the parables of Matt. xiii. give further details of this great theme which resulted from the rejection of Christ by Israel as their Messiah and King.

The Wheat and the Tares.

The object of this parable is to underline why the Kingdom should be so long rejected. This has been partly dealt with in the former parable of the Sower. The first three sowings failed because of unsuitable ground, which was reflected in the hostile mental attitude of those in Israel who heard the gospel of the Kingdom.

But the parable of the Wheat and Tares gives a deeper reason. The failure was also due to the working of an enemy, Satan, and this greatly complicated matters. We still have a wheat field before the mind, but this time the Lord interprets it as representing the world and Himself as the Sower. The enemy who sowed weeds among the true wheat is Satan. The weeds are the children of Satan, and the harvest is the end of the age (Matthew xiii. 36-40), and the harvesters are the angels.

Great care should be taken here to get clear every detail of this inspired explanation. So many commentators and expositors ignore the interpretation given by Christ Himself and thus they become positively harmful, however well intentioned they may be. The real cause of the failure and apostasy of Israel was due to the antagonism and work of Satan which has characterized his attitude since his fall. His aim has been to overthrow the redemptive work of God and so bring to nought His great Kingdom purposes. This colossal conflict of the ages has gone on without intermission since the time that Satan first aspired to take God's place. It is all the more difficult to perceive because it is spiritual, behind the scene, and not apprehended by the senses.

It can be traced throughout the Old and New Testaments. The primeval promise of Gen. iii. 14, 15 introduces this age-long conflict as far as it relates to the human race, "I will put enmity between thee (Satan) and the woman, between thy seed and her seed. It shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise His heel". The antagonism of Satan is bitter and intense and worsens as time proceeds, and comes to a colossal climax at the end time described by the Book of Revelation.

The doctrine of the two seeds, though denied by some, cannot be ignored if one seriously studies the sacred Scriptures, nor can the slowness (from a human standpoint) of the realization of the great plan of God for His universe be understood without it. We have seen in these studies that many of Israel's religious leaders were declared to be the children of Satan by both the Baptist and the Lord, although in their own estimation they were the children of Abraham. Externally this was true. Outwardly they appeared to be the true wheat, but inwardly they were the "chaff" of John's denunciation (Matt.iii.11,12) and the "tares" or "darnel" of the parable before us, whose end was to be burned up and destroyed. This darnel was a bastard wheat which resembles the true except that the grains were black. In its earlier stages of growth it was indistinguishable from real wheat and remained so until the harvest. Hence the Lord's prohibition of the disciples attempting to weed it out, lest they inadvertently pulled up the true wheat with it.

Later on, in His argument with the Pharisees, He told them plainly that they were of their father, the devil (John viii. 39, 41, 44). We ought not to forget the Lord's opening words of this parable "the Kingdom of heaven has become like . . . . .", and this was the result of the rejection of Christ given in chapters xi. and xii.

The two seeds are still in existence today and await the Second Coming of the Lord to judge and separate them, nor can His Kingdom become a reality until this takes place. One thing we do not find is tares converted into wheat or any hope of such a thing happening.

The Mustard Tree.

It is not quite certain what plant is meant by the mustard, but it is obviously one which grows to a large size from a very small seed. In verse 32 it is described as the smallest of all seeds. There is no need to make a difficulty of this when we remember it is seed sown in fields which is being described. "Small as a mustard seed" was a Jewish proverb.

The word "tree" does not necessarily mean a timber tree. After all, we speak of a rose tree or gooseberry tree without misunderstanding. When Mark records this parable he gives the Lord's words "What shall we say the Kingdom of God is like, or what parable shall we use to describe it?" (Mark iv. 30, N.I.V.), suggesting that the analogy was difficult to express. The history of the earthly Kingdom was taking such a strange turn that it needed great skill to express what was taking place.

The first thing stressed is the smallness of the mustard seed; the Kingdom purpose of God commenced with the call of one man, Abram, and later on Moses declared that "the Lord did not set His love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people" (Deut. vii. 7). So the words of illustration were "less than all the seeds". But God's plan revealed to Abram was that his posterity would be numberless like the stars of heaven and the sand of the sea.

But this was not realized without reverses. The curses of a broken law of God had this warning:

> ". . . . . and ye shall be left few in number, whereas ye were as the stars of heaven for multitude; because thou wouldest not obey the voice of the Lord thy God" (Deuteronomy xxviii. 62).

This came to pass first by the removal of the ten northern tribes, and afterwards the two which formed the southern kingdom were removed by Nebuchadnezzar. With him and the world kingdom of Babylon the "times of the Gentiles" commence which then degenerated through Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome, and reached to the earthly time of our Lord. The kingdom or dominion over the earth had taken an abnormal twist, as it were, which certainly did not form part of God's original kingdom purpose.

The mustard, instead of becoming a normal herb, had now become a tree in which the birds of the heaven could settle, and these are designated by the Lord Jesus as the agents of Satan.

We can set it out in this way:

The mustard seed sown:	\	The Kingdom viewed
"least of all"—its beginning small.	\	from Abram
"When it is grown, it becomes greatest of herbs."	/	to its final establishment.
Its real end—a large herb.	/

The Hidden Leaven.

The parable of the leaven is the last of the four spoken by Christ outside the house to the multitudes. It gives us the external history of the kingdom of heaven in its final phase. But how do we interpret the word "leaven"? Expositors are sharply divided here, many interpreting it of the gospel of grace which finally extends everywhere, and this is deduced from the words "the whole was leavened" (Matt. xiii. 33).

We should however ask ourselves, how is this word used in holy Scriptures? Is it ever used in a good sense? And how did the Lord Jesus employ the word elsewhere in His teaching? In the O.T. we read in connection with the Passover, "ye shall put leaven out of your houses" (Exod. xii. 15). Exod. xxxiv. 25 and Lev. ii. 11 state, "thou shalt not offer the blood of My sacrifice with leaven" and "no meal offering, which ye shall bring unto the Lord, shall be made with leaven". These offerings represented typically the purity and sinlessness of the Lord Jesus Christ.

When we come to the N.T. we find the Apostle Paul speaking of "the leaven of baseness and wickedness", contrasting it with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth (I Cor. v. 6-8). "Know ye not that a little leaven doth leaven the whole lump? Purge out therefore the old leaven", and this ends with the words "Remove ye the wicked man from among yourselves" (I Cor. v. 6-13).

How does Christ use the word? He warns by saying "take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees . . . . . then understood they how that He bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees" (Matt. xvi. 6-12). In Mark viii. 15 we read, "beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod". Luke xii. 1 reads, "beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy". The Lord Jesus uses it consistently of evil and not once of good, and this accords too with its O.T. usage. The phrase "the leaven of the gospel" used by modern preachers is a contradiction.

If Christ was using the word in a good sense in Matt. xiii., then surely some clear statement would have been made that this was so, otherwise He would have been contradicting Himself and causing confusion in His hearers. The consistent Scriptural usage right throughout the Bible gives this word a bad meaning, but all this is ignored by those who interpret the word as referring to the gospel of salvation.

What these teachers fail to realize is that these kingdom parables show the working of Satan as well as the purposes of God, and as we have seen with the Sower parable, the first three sowings are failures due to the activity of the evil one and the bad state of the soil. If they want to show the triumphant conclusion of the parabolic teaching, then it is to the last four parables, spoken inside the house, which, giving the inner meaning and purpose, assure us of the final success and establishment of the kingdom of heaven.

What are the "three measures of meal"? (verse 33). This is yet another of Matthew's "threes". We must not make the mistake of trying to find a spiritual equivalent of every detail in a parable. All sorts of peculiar ideas result from this practice, and many have been the guesses as to what the three measures represent. It may be that it was merely the usual amount used to bake bread or other food, or it could refer to the evil doctrine of the Pharisees, Sadducees and Herodians.

The teaching of the first four parables gives us the proclaiming of the Kingdom message and the delay in its realization through the failure of Israel and the working of an enemy, namely Satan. Not only this, instead of the small seed of Israel flourishing and filling the earth with fruit, we find that through their apostasy the sovereignty changed hands and was deposited with the Gentile nations.

Nebuchadnezzar was assured that God had made him "the head of gold" and given him world wide power even though he was a pagan. This condition of things lasts until "the fullness of the Gentiles comes in" as revealed through the apostle Paul in Rom.ix.-xi. when Israel will be taken up by God again and "all Israel will be saved" (Rom. xi. 25-29).

The present "times of the Gentiles" are exceptional and only came into being because of the gross defection of Israel. This stage is marked by the words of the parable "it becometh a great tree and the birds lodged in its branches" (the agents of Satan). That which should have been pre-eminently the kingdom of righteousness, becomes the habitation of Satan and his angels. He is now the "god of this age" (II Cor. iv. 3, 4), "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now works in the children of disobedience" (Eph. ii. 2). This will go on and work its course until the rise of Antichrist, his worldwide deception and the general corruption of the visible witness for God which will finally be dealt with by the glorious Second Advent of Him Who is "King of kings, and Lord of lords" (Rev. xix. 11-20; see II Thess. ii. 7-10).

It is obvious then that the Lord, contrary to popular teaching, was not portraying the permeating influence of the gospel of grace and the kingdom being set up as a consequence. Both in these first kingdom parables and in His prophetic teaching (Matt.xxiv.) the Lord makes it quite clear that the end of the age is one of apostasy and world-wide trouble which can only be remedied by His Second Coming (Matt. xxiv. 11, 12, 21, 22, 24, 27-30). "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" (Luke xviii. 8), and the answer is certainly not yes!

Yet in spite of this, God has His treasure, as the next four parables show, and at last the good seed of the kingdom, sown on good ground, will produce the fulfillment of His great kingdom purposes.

After giving the parable of the leaven, the Lord leaves the multitude and goes inside the house. There He explained the parable of the tares to the disciples and then proceeded to unfold the inner aspect, the Godward side of the kingdom of heaven, in the second set of 4 parables. These are related as follows:

A | The Treasure hid in a Field.
The nation of Israel as distinct from the nations.
B | The One beautiful Pearl.
The faithful remnant of Israel as distinct from the nations.
B | The many fish.
The Gentile nations as distinct from Israel.
A | The Treasure in the house.
Israel, viewed as a missionary nation redeemed and restored, sent to the nations.

The Hidden Treasure.

It is clear that the hidden Treasure balances and is in direct contrast to the hidden Leaven. This Treasure is hidden in the field (not "a field" as the A.V.) and this field has already been interpreted by the Lord as meaning the world (xiii. 38).

We are not left to guess who are meant by the Treasure for Scripture makes it quite clear that Israel were specially chosen by the Lord and separated to Himself for the carrying out of His earthly kingdom purposes, and as such they were precious to Him.

> "The Lord hath chosen thee (Israel) to be a peculiar people (s'gullah) unto Himself above the nations that are upon the earth" (Deut. xiv. 2; xxvi. 18).
>
> "The Lord hath chosen . . . Israel for His peculiar treasure (s'gullah)" (Psa. cxxxv. 4).
> "And they shall be Mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up My jewels (s'gullah)" (Mal. iii. 17).

Israel had a higher calling and a special glory that was greater than any other nation on the earth. Through their disobedience they have become scattered all over the world. They are now mixed with the Gentile nations, so that no-one today can know for certain just who are true Jews and who are not, for now "they are not all Israel, that are of Israel" (Rom. ix. 6-8). But the true ones, although hid, are all known to the Lord, Who will regather them back to their land at the end of the age (Isa. xliii. 5-7; Jer. xxiv. 6, 7; Ezek. xx. 41, 42; xxviii. 25, 26; Amos ix. 13-15). Not only this, but we must remember that they will be redeemed. They cannot be a kingdom of priests by virtue of their own deeds. The New Covenant ratified by the blood of Christ will ensure this redemption (Jer. xxxi. 31). In many Scriptures the Lord has declared His love for them and they are precious (a treasure) to Him. The day will come when the triumphant words will be known all over the earth: "the kingdom of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. xi. 15). This parable shows that in spite of all opposition, human or Satanic, God's purpose for Israel and the Kingdom will be fulfilled and at last Israel will be a glorious diadem in the hand of their God (Isa. lxii. 3).

The Pearl of great Price.

While the whole nation of Israel is beloved by God, even now during this age, when they still reject Christ, they are "beloved for the fathers' sake" (Rom. xi. 25-29). How much more must this be true of the faithful remnant in Israel. The doctrine of the remnant is of great importance. God never leaves Himself without a witness. The Scripture shows that at the blackest times of Israel's history, there was always a remnant, a few who remained absolute faithful to the Lord. They are designated as "the remnant according to the election of grace" (Rom. ix. 27; xi. 5). Heb. xi. gives a list of those in O.T. times who were proved faithful despite all difficulties, opposition and suffering. Many of them have given their lives for God and there will be those in the future days when Antichrist reigns who will also do this. Surely all these are very precious to the Lord and come under the symbolism of the "pearl of great price"; who like faithful Abraham will finally find their place in the heavenly Jerusalem, the city whose builder and maker is God and whose glory and wonder are described in detail in Rev. xxi.

These two parables graphically set forth these two companies in Israel. We have the elect nation as distinct from the Gentile nations, and the elect remnant, faithful even to death, who are distinct from the Nation as a whole.

Once more we see the Lord showing the disciples how God's plan for Israel will run its course, and in spite of all hindrances will reach its glorious goal when the kingdoms of this world are at last claimed by Christ and become subject to His righteous rule.

The Drag Net.

In this parable we find two kinds of fish, good and bad, and this is parallel to the Wheat and Tares, as the structure given earlier shows. There is one difference however. The tares were the Satanic counterfeit of the true wheat, but in the drag net the bad fish do not counterfeit the good, but nevertheless they are separated from them at the end.

One point we must not miss. When the fish are brought to the shore they are living and not dead. This shows clearly they typify living people and do not represent the judgment of those who are raised from the dead. Scripture reveals that at the end time, not only will Israel be dealt with, but also the living nations, whose relationship with the kingdom must be settled.

A gathering of the nations of the world is to be expected as the age reaches it close (Joel iii. 1, 2, 11, 12; Zeph. iii. 8; Zech. xiv. 1, 2). It is this that leads to the battle of Armageddon. And then, after the Second Coming of Christ, we read:

> "When the Son of man shall come in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him, then shall He sit upon the throne of His glory: and before Him shall be gathered all nations: and He shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd his sheep from the goats" (Matt. xxv. 31, 32).

The context teaches that this separation is decided by the way each nation has treated the "brethren" of the King. Those nations who have treated them well, go into the Kingdom; those who have ill-treated them are shut out. It must be realized that this judgment does not deal with the behaviour of individuals, as to whether they have been kind to others or not. It is national judgment. As nations they enter the kingdom, or as nations they are debarred. The people of Israel are in the centre of world affairs at the end of this age, as prophecy makes perfectly clear, and also shows that they will go through the greatest persecution of all their history. They will be "hated of all men" (Matt. xxiv. 9). Anti-semitism will be rife everywhere.

The animosity against the Jew will be world-wide prior to the Lord's Second Advent. The judgment of Matthew xxv. is incipient in the Lord's first promise to Abram in Gen.xii.3, ". . . . . and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed". Thus it is that the nations of the earth at the end time will have to give account to the King of Israel as to how they have treated His earthly people. They do not consciously serve Christ as the Lord Jesus in Matt. xxv. clearly shows, but their attitude to the Jew and their behaviour towards him is crucial to their having a part in the Messianic kingdom when it is set up after the Second Advent of the Lord.

There are therefore two great siftings by the Lord at the end time; first of all in Israel, as indicated by the Wheat and Tares, and then with the Gentile nations as shown in Matthew xxv.

No.23. xiii. 51 - xiv. 36.
pp. 165 - 169

After explaining the parable of the drag net, the Lord pauses to ask the disciples "have you understood all these things?" (Matt. xiii. 51), for understanding is vital to the reception of truth. Hundreds may read the Word of God, but if there is no understanding how much are they benefited? Happily the disciples could answer "Yes". How different they were to the nation of Israel of whom the Lord declared in verses 10-16 that because of their willful blindness and rejection they did not understand.

The last parable, that of the householder, follows on from the perception of the disciples, as the first word "Therefore" shows:

> "He said to them, Therefore every teacher of the law who has been instructed about the kingdom of heaven is like the owner of a house who brings out of his storeroom new treasures as well as old" (Matt. xiii. 52, N.I.V.).

The word "instructed" occurs four times in the N.T., (Matthew xiii. 52; xxvii. 57; xxviii. 19; Acts xiv. 21). It is the word translated "make disciples" in Matt. xxviii. 19 of the N.I.V., and this relates not to individuals, but nations. How often is this verse misquoted and misunderstood! Before they can disciple all nations, they themselves must have been "discipled into the kingdom". In other words, they must be learners themselves. The scribes were the teachers of the law, hence the word scribe in the A.V. For the most part, instead of being occupied with the greatness of the divine law, they wasted their time debating about such trifles as mint, anise and cummin, the length of fringes, the breadth of phylacteries, the washing of cups and platters, and the particular quarter of a second when new moons and sabbaths began. In His denunciation of the Scribes and Pharisees the Lord Jesus uncovered these trivialities (Matt. xxiii. 23) and showed the utter emptiness of their teaching.

As a complete contrast, the scribe of this last parable will have the word of the Kingdom hidden in his heart. Those he represents will have "learned of Him" and out of the kingdom Treasure will be able to bring things new and old, the contrast between the old and new covenants, with their fullness of teaching and many other facets of truth.

With this parable the Lord Jesus finished His instruction in the secrets of the kingdom of heaven in that particular locality, and from there, we are told, He moved to His home town; the region around Nazareth, and taught in the synagogue. The people were astonished at the fullness and wisdom of His teaching, so absolutely different from the shallowness of the ministry of the Scribes and Pharisees.

They asked themselves how He had acquired this? After all, was He not just a carpenter's son and one of themselves? As a result they took offence at Him (xiii.54-57), instead of being proud of Him and glorifying God for His wonderful ministry. The last verse of the chapter gives the sad consequence:

> "And He did not do many miracles there because of their lack of faith (unbelief)" (xiii. 58, N.I.V.).

Mark is even more definite:

> "He could not do any miracles there except lay His hands on a few sick people and heal them. And He was amazed at their lack of faith" (Mark vi. 5, 6, N.I.V.).

So unbelief even nullifies the work of God and caused the Lord to look upon their attitude of rejection and opposition with amazement.

This was a prophetic intimation of His rejection by the whole nation at Jerusalem, and the account of John the Baptist's murder which follows, a prophetic type of His own murder later on. All three Gospels tell us that Herod Antipas had heard of Christ's mighty works. Herod was the ruler of Galilee and Peræa, which was a fourth of the dominion of Herod the Great. A guilty conscience quickened his fears, and he imagined that the Baptist has risen from the dead and would now confront him (xiv. 2).

Luke informs us that this idea was put into his mind by others (Luke ix. 7). John had aroused Herod's animosity by telling him that it was not lawful for him to have Herodias as his wife, for her first husband was alive, and even had he been dead marriage with a sister-in-law was forbidden (Lev. xviii. 16). Antipas had put away his own lawful wife, who was the daughter of king Aretas, and the gross immorality was the cause of the Baptist's sharp rebuke. Not only did this arouse the enmity of Herod, but also Herodias for trying to induce Antipas to put her away. Her hatred of the Baptist was implacable, hence her pressure on Herod to murder him. Now that Herod needed much urging, but he was afraid of the people (Matt. xiv. 5).

Thus the greatest of the prophets met his end through being faithful to the Lord and His Word. The account is given in verses 6-12, and we can imagine the fiendish delight of Herodias, for a woman scorned can be a veritable demon.

When the Lord Jesus heard this, He withdrew to a desert place apart, crossing the lake. But the people evidently were not to be put off, for they must have gone round by land to find Him once more. There were more than 5,000 of them and the disciples were concerned that they needed food, but the Lord's concern was even greater and He puts the disciples to the test by saying:

> "They do not need to go away. You give them something to eat" (xiv. 16, N.I.V.).

All the four Gospels relate this miracle, each adding details; and it is the only one that occurs in all the four. It is John who tells us that there was a lad who had five loaves of barley bread, and it was Andrew who pointed him out. The disciples tell the Lord that all the food they had was "five loaves and two fishes". One can almost feel that they thought, what is the use of this to feed the crowd of people? They did not realize that they had the Creator of the universe standing in their midst. The Lord then bids them to bring the food to Him. He then tells the people to recline on the grass in groups. Mark tells us they were groups of hundreds and fifties. This orderly arrangement made it easier to feed them and also to count their number.

The Lord now gives thanks, breaking the thin Jewish loaves and giving them to the disciples, and the disciples to the multitude. While the Lord's miraculous power multiplied the food it was not distributed miraculously, although He could have made this to happen if He had so willed. The disciples have a part to play and they distribute the food, which increased as long as increase was needed.

In all the four narratives the fragments of food are gathered up for future use. Nothing was wasted. This was done by Christ's command, as John relates, and thus He who could feed thousands does not countenance waste. This can never be justified even when the need was supplied so superabundantly.

What effect had this stupendous miracle on the crowd that was present? It was mixed, for John records the action of some of them:

> "Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did, said, This is of a truth that prophet that should come into the world" (John vi. 14).

But the next day the Lord had to say to many of them:

> "Verily, verily I say unto you, Ye seek Me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled" (John vi. 26).

Then follows the great discourse which gives the spiritual meaning of the food and the manna of the O.T. (verses 27-59). Both these foods were typical of Himself Who was the Bread of life, the One Who alone can completely satisfy (verses 35, 48), and just as that earthly bread had to be broken before it was eaten, so He had to be broken (except His bones) in death so that he could be assimilated by faith, and give eternal life to the believer (verses 47, 51).

Unbelievers have gone out of their way to discredit this miracle; but there is no sensible alternative to simple faith in the reliability of the records given. All explanations that deny them require a greater stretch of credulity than is needed to believe what is written. Some have said that the loaves and fish were exceptionally large! Do such people realize that the fish would needed to have been about half a ton in weight, apart from the loaves, to feed 5,000 people!

Others say that the Lord filled them with spiritual food, and if this was so what did the disciples collect in baskets? The evolutionist cannot except the record, for they must believe in the uniformity of natural law as an explanation of all physical phenomena, and this miracle involved special creation, which is taboo to evolutionary theories.

What happened is perfectly clear. He Who was the Creator of the universe, created enough bread and fish on the spot to feed at least 5,000 hungry people, so much so that twelve baskets full remained afterwards. He thus foreshadowed His own death on the cross as the true Bread from heaven, broken to feed and satisfy the needs of multitudes of sinners.

The Walking on the Sea.

Christ now commands the disciples to go by boat to the other side and meanwhile, having satisfied the physical needs of the crowd, He dismisses them. After this He retired to a nearby mountain to pray and have fellowship with the Father. Several times it is recorded that He did this (Luke vi. 12; ix. 28) and if the blessed Son of God felt this to be a need, what about ourselves and the need for quiet devotion?

There was another reason why He desired to be free from the crowd. In John's account we are told that it was at this time that the multitude tried to take Him by force to make Him a king. They recognized that He was that Prophet foretold in the Old Testament (John vi. 14, 15) and in their excited enthusiasm they tried to compel Him to become Israel's King. On the surface this appeared as though the great kingdom message was getting through, for had He not come to take David's throne? But He could see through their empty zeal, for a few verses later He said to them, "I tell you the truth, you are looking for Me, not because you saw the miraculous signs but because you ate the loaves and had your fill" (vi. 26, N.I.V.). It was all nothing more than excitement of the senses.

Meanwhile a stormy wind had arisen on the lake, making rowing difficult for the disciples, as it caused the boat to be buffeted against the waves (Matt. xiv. 24). The Lord had rescued them once before on the lake which was subject to sudden storms. Remembering their fear, He started to walk out to them on the water. Job ix. 8 tells us that one of the characteristics of God is that "He treadeth upon the waves of the sea". Once again we have a demonstration of the Lord's sovereign superiority over the laws which He, in creation, ordained and here supercedes. He treads the waves beneath His sovereign feet, and what buffeted the disciples provided as it were a carpet for Him. Moreover, we must remember that the last time He calmed a storm on the lake it was daylight, and He was with them. Now it is night and they are alone.

When the disciples saw Him approaching they were terrified (A.V. "troubled" is not nearly strong enough), and they cried out for fear, thinking they saw a ghost (xiv. 26). The Lord then calls out to them "take courage", and surely they had heard that voice before!

Impulsive Peter cries out, "Lord, if it is you, tell me to come to you on the water" (verse 28). The Lord replied in one word, "Come". Peter obeys and does something that no human being had ever done before; he walked on water towards the Lord: and this was accomplished because, at this moment, he had faith in the Lord Jesus and the word that He had given. While he looked at the Lord all was well, but, looking away to the stormy elements, he became afraid and started to sink, crying out "Lord, save me". Immediately Christ did this very thing and pulled him up while still walking on the water, but had to say "You of little faith, why did you doubt?" (verses 29-31).

There is a profound lesson here for all of us. There is only one way that our difficulties can be overcome and that is by constantly looking, trustingly, to the Lord and relying on Him to help, strengthen, guide and deliver us from them, if it is His will.

The result of this miracle was that, after climbing into the boat, they worshipped Him and the Lord accepted it. If He was not God, then this would have been blasphemy. They added "truly you are God's Son". The definite article is omitted before the word "Son", as the centurion did in Matt. xxvii. 54. Perhaps they had not yet realized fully the implications of His deity, but their appreciation was growing when compared with their statement in viii. 27.

Then they landed at Gennesaret, which was a rich plain four miles long and two broad. The Lord was recognized immediately and the whole neighbourhood were informed of His presence (xiv. 34, 35), with the consequence that many sick people were brought to Him and once again He healed them all. So urgent were some of the cases that they begged Him to allow them just to touch Him, and this was sufficient to bring them healing and complete restoration.

The heirarchy at Jerusalem were obviously watching every movement of the Lord and the results that followed from His work and witness. So they send Pharisees and teachers of the law to question Him about His attitude to the tradition of the elders. This was the oral law with its vast number of precepts and prohibitions formulated by past elders, which was supposed to be a sort of protective fence around the written law. The evitable result was that this oral or traditional law became more important than the written law, and brought its adherents into terrible bondage.

No.24. xv. 1 - xvi. 12.
pp. 181 - 186

The question that the Pharisees from Jerusalem put to the Lord concerning their tradition was:

> "Why do your disciples break the tradition of the elders? They don't wash their hands before they eat!" (Matt. xv. 2, N.I.V.).

We must bear in mind that these religious leaders were not concerned with hygiene, but with ceremonial cleanness.

> "Jesus replied, And why do you break the command of God for the sake of your tradition? For God said, 'Honour your father and mother' and 'Anyone who curses his father or mother must be put to death'. But you say that if a man says to his father or mother, 'Whatever help you might otherwise have received from me is a gift devoted to God', he is not to 'honour his father' with it. Thus you nullify the word of God for the sake of your tradition. You hypocrites! Isaiah was right when he prophesied about you:
>
> 'These people honour Me with their lips, > but their hearts are far from Me.
> They worship Me in vain;
> their teachings are but rules taught by men'." (Matt. xv. 3-9, N.I.V.).

These stinging words laid bare their empty quibbles about hand washing. We should note that Christ stresses the fact that the author of the O.T. law was not Moses but God. What Moses gave to Israel was the word of God (verse 6), not his own opinions, so that when the Pharisees contradicted this law by their traditions they were breaking nothing less than God's Word. A man could dodge his duty to his parents by saying that he had devoted all his money to God, and the Pharisees and Scribes permitted him to do this. They well merited the stinging rebuke, "you hypocrites", and the quotation from Isaiah fitted them perfectly.

The Lord then calls the crowd to Him to explain further:

> "Listen and understand. What goes into a man's mouth does not make him unclean, but what comes out of his mouth, that is what makes him unclean." (xv. 10, 11, N.I.V.).

The disciples inform Christ that He had offended the Pharisees, but He replied, "Every plant that My heavenly Father has not planted will be pulled up by the roots. Leave them; they are blind guides" (xv. 13, 14, N.I.V.). At the final great sorting out at the end of the age the weeds, like the tares of the parable, will be permanently removed by divine agency. When weeds are rooted up, they are not preserved, but rather destroyed.

Peter now asks the Lord to explain further, which caused Christ to say "are you still so dull?", that is, like the religious leaders are? He tells him that what enters the mouth passes through the body in the normal way. But spoken words come from the heart or mind, and so are a true index of character.

> "For out of the heart come evil thoughts, murder, adultery, sexual immorality, theft, false testimony, slander. These are what make a man unclean; but eating with unwashed hands does not make him unclean" (xv. 19, 20, N.I.V.).

In Mark's account (vii. 21, 22) the list of sins is extended and six more are added, guile, licentiousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride and folly. Matthew adds one, false testimony. In Mark they are given in no particular order, but in Matthew they are evidently arranged according to the decalogue, "murder, adultery, fornication, thefts and false witness" represent the sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth commandments. This would make a great impression on the mind of a Jew who was familiar with the law given through Moses.

The great faith of the Canaanitish woman.

The Lord Jesus now moves northward to the region of Tyre and Sidon, and a woman of Canaan comes to Him and implores Him to rescue her daughter from demon possession. The woman was a Greek speaking descendant of the old inhabitants of Phoenicia, and in dealing with her we have a startling contrast to the multitudes He had recently fed miraculously. Up to this point, we have no record of any sick or needy person being turned away by the Lord. He healed them all, is the constant statement. But now He apparently ignores her. He answers her not a word. But she persists and it began to annoy the disciples. "She keeps crying out after us" they said.

Then the Lord spoke, but what He said was far from encouraging as far as the woman was concerned:

> "I was sent only to the lost sheep of Israel" (xv. 24, N.I.V.).

She was a pagan, certainly not a descendant from Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Yet she had addressed Him as the "Son of David" (xv. 22). But as an outsider, she had no claim upon Him. She had evidently heard Him addressed in this way as such. Her great need and her great faith encouraged her to persist. She now kneels before Him and pleads, "Lord, help me", and now uses the all-embracive title "Lord". Again Christ speaks, testing her even further. He said:

> "It is not right to take the children's bread and toss it to their dogs" (xv. 26, N.I.V.).

The children were obviously Israel, and she was certainly not a true Israelite. But there was a ray of hope in the Lord's words which her faith recognized. "Yes, Lord" she said, "but even the dogs (little dogs) eat the crumbs that fall from the master's table (verse 27). In Palestine dogs were scavengers and looked upon as unclean, but puppies were sometimes allowed into houses and of course ate anything that accidently dropped from the table during a meal.

This woman could not have any claim on the Lord Jesus as an Israelite, but she was willing to take the place of a dog and get what crumbs she could! Her great faith greatly impressed the Lord. He answered her:

> "Woman, you have great faith! Your request is granted. And her daughter was healed from that very hour" (xv. 28, N.I.V.).

What a contrast this was to the tiny faith of the disciples! Those who were near to Him had the small faith, while the poor pagan outsider had the great faith!

There is an important lesson underlying the Lord's words which we must not miss. We have seen that the earthly kingdom which John the Baptist and the Lord Jesus preached was none other than the great Messianic Kingdom of the O.T. which had been explained by the prophets.

In that kingdom purpose of God Israel had premier place as a channel of blessing to all nations, and this was enshrined in the divine promise made to Abraham and his posterity (Gen. xii. 1-3) and confirmed in Deut. xv. 6; xxvi. 18, 19; xxviii. 1, 13 and Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20. When we come to the N.T. this is still stressed, and the Lord's earthly ministry is primarily concerned with Israel (Matt. xv. 24; Rom. ix. 3-5; xv. 8) but not wholly, for the Gentile world was finally in view. God's kingdom is not limited to the Jewish nation, but will finally be world-wide (Rev. xi. 15).

With this in view we can understand why the Lord limited His own ministry and that of the Twelve to the people of Israel. As the channel of blessing and the recipients of knowledge of the kingdom, they come first in importance. It is interesting that in Mark's account of the healing of the Syro-Phoenician's daughter, he gives words of the Lord which Matthew does not include. Christ said "Let the children first be filled . . . . ." (Mark vii. 27) and the children were undoubtedly Israel. Israel's place in the kingdom plan of God as it relates to the earth is that of being first.

To ignore this and substitute the idea that Christ came to bring in and establish the church, the Body of Christ, is unscriptural and completely misleading. This is one of the popular ideas which are often propagated but it is destructive of correct understanding of the great plan of the ages which is centred in Christ. The revelation of the heavenly aspect of the kingdom of God awaits the later ministry of the Apostle Paul.

For the moment Israel must have all the divine attention to prepare her for her great role of introducing the kingdom teaching to all the nations. Meanwhile, the Gentile must be willing to take the lowly place and be content with the crumbs of blessing until this is accomplished. Those who wish to introduce the church at this point can have little conception of the exceeding riches of grace and glory that are revealed later on in the prison ministry of the Apostle Paul, who was the minister, by divine appointment, of the Body of Christ (Col. i. 23-28). All this cannot be compared to crumbs!

The feeding of the 4,000.

Verses 29 and 30 tell us that Christ moved on along the Sea of Galilee and as usual the crowds followed Him, bringing disabled and sick ones for healing. Their immediate restoration to health and fitness amazed the people, and, we are told, "They praised the God of Israel" (verse 31). The Lord looked on the multitude and realized that, after being with Him for 3 days, they were very hungry, and He had compassion on them as He had before with the crowd that numbered around 5,000. He tells the disciples that He does not want to send them away in this famished condition as they might collapse on the journey. The disciples immediately asked:

> "Where could we get enough bread in this remote place to feed such a crowd?" (Matthew xv. 33, N.I.V.).

Could it be that they had so soon forgotten the previous miraculous feeding? It hardly seems possible, but it looks as though this was the case.

As before, He told the crowd to sit down on the ground, and taking all the food they happened to have, seven loaves and a few small fish, He multiplied them with His creative power so that finally all ate and were satisfied (verse 37). There were seven basketsful of broken pieces of food left over, collected by the disciples. Once more He gave evidence that He could meet all physical needs, and this was an illustration of what He could do spiritually for all who look to Him.

Some Bible scholars do not accept the idea of two miracles so similar as the feeding of the 5,000 and 4,000, but they seem to forget that both Matthew and Luke give them in detail, and they were confirmed as separate miracles by the Lord Himself (xvi. 8-10).

Christ now dismisses the crowd and gets into a boat and goes to the vicinity of Magadan, which was probably Magdala, as many manuscripts have it.

Chapter xvi.

Chapter xvi. commences with a party of Pharisees and Sadducees coming to Christ "to tempt Him" and trip Him up if possible. This is the first time we have the combination of these two groups who detested one another. A common enmity united traditional foes. They asked Him for a sign from heaven (xvi. 1). The Lord had healed many and given earthly signs of His Messiahship, but the enemies thought they could defeat Him by asking for a special sign from heaven. The inference is that this would really impress people. The Lord replies to their cunning by reminding them that they could interpret weather portents (and we do the same today with red sky in the morning and evening), but they were totally unable to interpret the signs of the times. He continued:

> "A wicked and adulterous generation looks for a miraculous sign, but none will be given it except the sign of Jonah" (xvi. 2-4, N.I.V.).

On saying this He left them and went away, refusing to argue with them. The sign of Jonah meant death and resurrection, but this was beyond the understanding of the carnal minds of the Lord's enemies.

The Lord Jesus and the disciples proceed across the lake and He warns them of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees (verses 5, 6). The disciples began to discuss among themselves the meaning of this statement, and they decided it was because they had forgotten to bring bread with them (7).

It was quite pathetic that they should have come to this conclusion after the miraculous feeding of the multitudes. Surely they should have had no anxiety about food so long as He was with them! Christ reminds them of this (verses 9, 10). "How is it", He said, "that you do not understand that I was not talking to you about bread?". He was warning them to be on their guard against the evil doctrine of the Pharisees and Sadducees and at last they realized this, but merited the rebuke "you of little faith" (8). This is another instance of yeast or leaven being used as an illustration of something evil and not good, this being its consistent meaning in Scripture.

The dullness of the Twelve shows how slowly the education of the Lord's most intimate disciples was progressing. We have no stones to throw at them for we are often slow pupils in God's school and have to learn a lesson the second time, because of our failure to grip His teaching the first time in His dealings with us.

No.25. xvi. 13 - 19.
pp. 201 - 207

The Lord Jesus now goes northward to Caesarea Philippi, which was situated on a spur of Mt. Hermon and was under the rule of Herod Philip. He questions the disciples concerning the current gossip relating to Himself:

> "When Jesus came to the region of Caesarea Philippi, He asked the disciples, Who do people say the Son of Man is?" (Matt. xvi. 13, N.I.V.).

They tell Him that some considered Him to be John the Baptist, others thought He might be Elijah, Jeremiah or another of the prophets. Matthew alone records the belief that He was Jeremiah. Jeremiah was not much esteemed during his life, but came to be regarded as one of the greatest of the prophets afterwards.

The Lord Jesus now turns to the disciples and puts the crucial question:

> "But what about you? He asked, Who do you (emphatic) say I am?" (verse 15, N.I.V.).

This is what really mattered, what was their real estimate of Christ? It is still the most important question and comes down to the present day to each one of us as the greatest of challenges

Peter, the disciples' usual spokesman, answers:

> "You are the Christ (Messiah), the Son of the living God. Jesus replied, Blessed are you, Simon son of Jonah, for this was not revealed to you by man, but by My Father in heaven" (verses 16, 17, N.I.V.).

Peter had once before made this great confession (John vi. 69), but possibly he had not realized its fullness then. Now, by the Father's revelation, he understands that Christ is truly the great Messiah promised by the O.T. Scriptures.

The Lord Jesus accepts this and thereby claims the statement to be true. He now says:

> "And I (emphatic) tell you that you are Peter (petros), and on this rock (petra) I will build My church, and the gates of Hades will not overcome it. I will give you the keys of the kingdom of heaven; whatever you bind on earth will be bound in heaven, and whatever you loose on earth will be loosed in heaven" (verses 18, 19, N.I.V.).

Christ says in effect, "the Father has revealed one truth to you, and I also tell you another". We now come to statements which have caused volumes of controversy and endless theological strife. The Lord calls Peter (petros), the name He said he would have (John i. 42), and then adds "and upon this rock (petra) I will build My church". Petros means a detached stone or boulder, whereas petra, the feminine form of the word, means a mass of rock like that of Matt. vii. 24 on which a wise man built his house, or a rock in which a tomb is hewn (xxvii. 60).

Some have said that too much must not be made of this distinction because probably Christ spoke Aramaic, which draws no such distinction. We cannot be sure whether Christ spoke in Aramaic or Greek and therefore weighty doctrine cannot be placed on the Aramaic word, whereas this verse in Greek is part of God-breathed Scripture (II.Tim.iii.16), and the Evangelist is therefore expressing the mind of the Holy Spirit. The petra cannot refer to Peter personally, for if so, there was no need of the word petra after Petros. It would have read "upon you I will build My church". Petra pointed to something solid and immovable in contrast to a stone, a solid foundation upon which this assembly can safely rest. The designation rock is used in the O.T., but it is never given to men: but always to Jehovah. "He is the Rock" (Deut. xxxii. 4). "Who is a rock, save our God?" (II Sam. xxii. 32). "In the Lord Jehovah is the rock of ages" (margin, Isa. xxvi. 4). "I will say unto God my rock" (Psa. xlii. 9). He says Himself, "Is there a God beside Me? Yea, there is no Rock (A.V. margin, see R.V. & N.I.V.), I know not any" (Isa.xliv.8). This is likewise emphasized by the Apostle Paul in I Cor. iii. 11 "other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ".

God then, God in Christ and His Word (see Matt. vii. 24-27), is the only rock foundation upon which the redeemed can rest. Peter's person, Peter's faith, or Peter's confession are really altogether out of the question. No human being, however eminent, can be the Rock of ages! Later on Paul asserts that the smitten rock that gave Israel water in the wilderness was a picture of Christ, ". . . . . and that petra was Christ" (I Cor. x. 4).

Allied to this figure is that of a chief corner stone of a building (Eph.ii.20; I.Pet.ii.4-6) and this again is a picture of the Lord Jesus as the foundation of His Body, the church. It has been said that in Matthew Christ cannot be part of the building because He is the Builder (xvi. 18). Why not? He can call, save and build up those whom He has chosen, and at the same time be their sure foundation.

Peter was only a stone resting upon this mighty rock foundation of Christ, and in himself, in spite of his earnestness, was the weak vessel who denied his Saviour and Lord three times and later on had to be rebuked by Paul for his weakness in witness (Gal. ii.); certainly not a very sure foundation to rest on!

We come now, in our consideration of Matt. xvi. 18 to the words, "My church". From this it is clear that this assembly does not belong to Peter or any other human being; Christ claims it as His property. Reams have been written as to who constitute this church, but we must keep one thing in mind all the time, and that is to avoid reading modern conceptions of the church into this passage of Scripture.

The word ekklesia, church, means any called-out assembly of people, whether for religious purposes or not. It is even used of the Ephesian mob in Acts xix. 32, 39, 41. One great hindrance to spiritual knowledge of the plan of God revealed in His Word is the idea that the word "church" in the Bible can only refer to the Body of Christ. Many talk about 'the one church' which is an unscriptural expression. There is "one Body" but that is a different matter. Stephen does not hesitate to call the nation of Israel "the church in the wilderness" (Acts vii. 38).

Dr. F. V. Filson has words to the point here:

> "The word 'church' has deep roots in its Old Testament use to designate the congregation of Israel. Jesus does not think of a church which rejects all ties with Israel, but of a congregation within Israel which represent what all Israel should be and seeks to win all Israel. It accepts Jesus as the Christ and tells all Israel that He is their Christ" (Commentary on Matthew, p.187).

We should realize that the word "church" as related to Israel was a fact well known to the Jew. The Greek translation of the O.T., the Septuagint, was in common use in the N.T. era and was freely used by the Lord and the Apostles. In it the word occurs no less than 96 times. It is usually the translation of the Hebrew qahal, rendered "congregation" in the A.V., and is used also for four other Hebrew words.

We give several examples of the Septuagint usage:

> "And Solomon stood before the altar of the Lord in the presence of all the church of Israel" (I Kings viii. 22).
>
> "And at that time Solomon held a feast, and all Israel with him, a great church . . . . ." (I Kings viii. 65).
>
> "And David said unto all the church of Israel . . . . ." (I Chron. xiii. 2).
>
> "Therefore thou shalt have none that shall cast a cord by lot in the church of the Lord" (Micah ii. 5).

It is interesting to note that Heb. ii. 12 quotes the Septuagint version of Psa. xxii. 22:

> "I will declare Thy Name unto My brethren; in the midst of the congregation I will praise Thee" (Psa. xxii. 22).

The quotation in Hebrews read:

> ". . . . . I will declare Thy Name unto My brethren, in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto Thee" (ii. 12).

In the Scriptural sense there is more than one assembly of God's people in the Bible, though there is only One Body, and that is the company ministered to by the apostle Paul (Col. i. 23-25).

Coming back to Matt. xvi., we may ask what Peter and the eleven would understand by the word "church"? As we have seen, it was well-known to them and they could have understood it only in the way used in the O.T. If Christ was referring to the church as revealed to Paul later on (Eph. iii. 1-11) then Peter and the disciples would have needed the same revelation that Paul was given, to receive and understand it (cp. Eph. iii. 1-7 and note verse 3), for at this time it was still a secret (mystery) hid in God (Col. i. 23-28).

There is no indication whatsoever that Peter and the other disciples had such a revelation. Moreover, if Peter's epistles are studied, he never refers to the Body of Christ or uses the word "mystery" or "secret" so intimately joined to it in Paul's ministry.

We should remember at the time covered by Matt. xvi., that the leaders of Israel had already rejected Christ in His capacity of Prophet, Priest and King (Matt. xi. & xii.), and in chapter xiii. Christ quotes the solemn verses from Isa. vi. and rejects them. The old nation was coming to its spiritual end, but God's plan was not wrecked, for He had commenced building a new nation based upon the faithful remnant that still existed. There had always been a faithful remnant right throughout the nation's history, which the Scriptures make perfectly clear.

The Lord was building and would continue to build a new nation of Israel and this is the argument of Rom. xi., "Hath God cast away His people", the Apostle asks, and the answer is decidedly 'No', "God hath not cast away His people" (Israel, verse 2). Paul's conclusion is "Even so this present time also (that of the Roman epistle) there is a remnant according to the election of grace" (verse 5).

This company was predominantly from Israel, but, during the Acts period the Lord's purpose widened to include Gentile believers; and it was certainly a church in the Biblical sense. Those who had responded under the ministry of John the Baptist and of the Lord Jesus, together with the faithful saints of previous centuries, belonged to this company and we believe they formed the church that Christ declared to Peter He would go on building. This does not conflict with any other Scripture and fits into the purpose of God as far as it had been revealed at that time. Dr. A. Plummer states in his Introduction, page 32:

> "The famous utterance 'on this rock I will build My church' must not be judged by the ideas that have gathered round it. 'On this rock I will build My Israel, the new Israel that is to grow out of the old one', is the meaning quite in accordance with thoughts that were current in the first generation of Christendom."

The opposition of death and Hades could not overcome this assembly because it was for ever linked with the conqueror of death (Rev. i. 18).

In addition to this the Lord said to Peter:

> ". . . . . I will give you the keys of the kingdom of heaven . . . . ." (Matt. xvi. 19).

Here is a figure of a building with keys to open from the outside, and we have seen that the kingdom of heaven is not the Body of Christ, nor was Peter given any power to include or cast out any who form this church, for its membership had already been decided by God before the creation (Eph. i. 4). Peter used the keys of the kingdom in the early chapters of the Acts as he declared how entry to that kingdom could be obtained. Peter had no peculiar prerogative in this matter, for it applied to other ministers of the circumcision. It is clear that neither Peter nor the other disciples understood Christ to say that he was to have supreme authority permanently. The "binding" and "loosing" in the words that follow was given to all the disciples (xviii. 18), and also after the Resurrection (John xx. 23). This assumes that the use of the keys and the power of binding and loosing will be in accordance with the teaching and mind of Christ.

Peter was simply the first among equals, because he was the spokesman for the faith of the other disciples. Binding and loosing does not refer to the forgiveness of sins. To 'bind' is to forbid; to 'loose' is to permit, and the expressions belonged to the technical rabbinical language which was well understood at that time. It is important to notice that it is "whatsoever thou shalt bind", not "whomsoever thou shalt bind", and there is no indication that Peter was able to pass this power on to his successors, in spite of the advocates of papal supremacy.

Not only must we be careful not to go further than the plain meaning of the words, but also we must give due regard to the tense of the verbs here. On the surface it looks as though Peter was given power to influence heaven as well as earth, "whatever you bind one earth will be bound in heaven, and whatever you loose on earth will be loosed in heaven" (xvi. 19, N.I.V.), and this is what Roman Catholic doctrine teaches. Both verbs here are in the future perfect passive. Dr. J. R. Mantey in "The Misinterpretation of the Perfect Tense in John 20:23, Matthew 16:19 and Matthew 18:18" states:

> ". . . . . according to the unanimous testimony of all Greek grammarians, the perfect tense pictures a past action, the result of which was present to the speaker or writer", and this is supported by many reputable grammarian. Accordingly Dr. R. O. Yeager translates verse 19:

> "I will give you the keys of the kingdom of the heavens, but whatever you bind on earth is that which shall already have been bound in the heavens, and whatever you loose on earth is that which shall already have been loosed in the heavens."

Dr. Mantey points out that at the beginning, when the church fathers were thoroughly familiar with koine Greek, there was no question about this verse, but later, when Latin influence was brought to bear, the translation as contained in the A.V. was allowed to creep in, that God's actions in heaven are contingent upon what Peter and his successors do on earth in deciding whether men shall be saved or lost, bound or set free. The opposite is true; the Lord's representatives on earth bring about those situations which have already been determined in the heavens. God's decrees antedate man's decisions. This is surely made clear in Rom. viii. 28-30 and I Pet. i. 2. The purpose expressed is God's; the knowledge is God's; the predestination is an act of God; the pattern is God's; justification and glorification are acts of God. All is of God in the final sense. Though man has a function of proclamation, it is God Who is the origin and the final authority.

At the same time we realize that God uses human means in the execution of His will, and men are not treated as machines, otherwise they would have no responsibility. In reverse we see the human side in Rom. x. 13-15 and this complements the revelation given in Matt. xvi. 18, 19.

Young's Literal Version reads:

> "whatsoever thou mayest bind upon the earth shall be having been bound in the heavens, and whatsoever thou mayest loose upon the earth shall be having been loosed in the heavens."

The Amplified New Testament reads:

> ". . . . . whatever you bind—that is, declare to be improper and unlawful—on earth must be already bound in heaven, and whatever you loose on earth—declare lawful—must be what is already loosed in heaven."

See also Dr. R. H. Gundry's Commentary on Matthew, page 331:

> ". . . . . and whatever you bind on earth will have been bound in heaven, and whatever you loose on earth will have been loosed in heaven."

C. B. William's translation reads:

> "Whatever you forbid on earth must be what is already forbidden in heaven, and whatever you permit on earth must be what is already permitted in heaven."

The New American Standard Version reads:

> "whatever you shall bind on earth shall have been bound in heaven, and whatever you shall loose on earth shall have been loosed in heaven."

It is greatly to be regretted that here our Authorized Version and others give a translation that supports priestcraft.

No.26. xvi. 20 - xvii. 8.
pp. 225 - 230

Dr. A. Plummer sums up these difficult verses by saying:

> ". . . . . nor can we assume that what Peter decides for the visible church is binding on the church invisible; or that what he decides for the visible church of his day holds good for ever, however much the conditions may change; or that his power of prohibiting or permitting has passed to his successors."

The Lord concluded this episode by charging them to tell no one that He was the Messiah (xvi. 20). The time had not yet come for Him to present Himself publicly to the whole nation as their Messiah and King. Had he been announced as such at this point, it was inevitable the people would have taken it in a political sense. In fact they had already done so (John vi. 15).

At verse 21 we have the second time division of the Gospel. The first commenced with iv. 17. Now we read:

> "From that time on Jesus began to explain to His disciples that He must go to Jerusalem and suffer many things at the hands of the elders, chief priests and teachers of the law, and that He must be killed and on the third day be raised to life" (xvi. 21, N.I.V.).

This was the first time He had mentioned His death and it obviously came as a great shock to His disciples. The word "began" is important for it shows us that the Lord's words were a summary of what went on for some time. It was only a little over 6 months before the cross and the disciples must know it now in order to be ready then. But how could the Lord be the Messiah and Israel's King if he was going to be killed? This must have been a shattering blow to the Twelve. It was too much for impulsive Peter. He "took the Lord aside". The verb is in the middle voice; "he took Him to himself" aside and apart, almost as though he had a right of his own, and he said to Him:

> "Never, Lord! This shall never happen to you" (verse 22, N.I.V.).

The Lord's reply, on the surface cursing, was absolutely necessary:

> "Jesus turned and said to Peter, Out of my sight, Satan! You are a stumbling block to Me; you do not have in mind the things of God, but the things of men" (verse 23).

This recalls the dismissal of Satan after the temptations in the wilderness. What is astounding is the fact that a little while earlier Peter was voicing the revelation of God the Father! Now he becomes Satan's catspaw even though he did not realize it. This should be a warning to all of us.

It was the old temptation of a short and easy way to the Throne without suffering. But upon that death rested the whole purpose of God for redemption and the bringing in of His Kingdom. In no way could it be avoided and Peter had not learned this fundamental lesson yet. Christ must go to Jerusalem and suffer many things (verse 21). Dr. Plummer points out how necessary was the charge that the apostles should be silent about the Lord's Messiahship. If the first of the apostles could commit so disastrous an error as was involved in his rebuke to Christ, what might not the ignorant multitude do?

The lesson that followed had already been mentioned by the Lord in x. 38, 39, but He expands it here:

> "Then Jesus said to His disciples, 'If anyone would come after Me, he must deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Me. For whoever wants to save his life will lose it, but whoever loses his life for Me will find it. What good will it be for a man if he gains the whole world, yet forfeits his soul? Or what can a man give in exchange for his soul?'." (verses 24-26, N.I.V.).

Care must be taken here with the words thelo and psuche. The A.V. is not helpful here, nor is the N.I.V. "If anyone wishes or wants (thelo) to come after Me" (verse 24), and in the next verse "whoever wants (thelo) to save his life will lost it". Hence the N.I.V. correctly translates thelo. Why is thelo (24) rendered differently? This is misleading. Again in verses 25 and 26 psuche is rendered "life" in verse 25, and "soul" (twice) in verse 26. Why is there not a consistent translation? The New American Standard Version (NASV) renders thelo "wishes" correctly. Psuche means life, or soul, and whichever word is chosen, should be kept in these verses. J. B. Rotherham does this consistently, and so does The Berkeley Version, both translations keeping to the word "life".

But what does "saving the life" and "losing the life" mean to those who are already saved? Let us not forget that these words were not spoken to the unsaved multitudes but to the saved disciples who were true believers in the Lord, and therefore received the promise of everlasting life (John iii. 15, 16) which means they would never perish (x. 28).

Unless we are very careful here we shall get into severe difficulties and make Christ contradict Himself. A careful consideration of this context will show that the word "life" is used in two senses. It refers (1) to the present life, and (2) to the resurrection life to come, which in Matthew's Gospel refers to a place in the kingdom of heaven when this is finally set up by the Lord.

We have seen in this Gospel that this is in the nature of reward, for reward is one of the key-words, particularly in the Sermon on the Mount. We must not lose sight of the teaching regarding reward in the context we are considering, specially as it is stressed in the closing words of the Lord in this section:

> "For the Son of Man is going to come in His Father's glory with His angels, and then He will reward each person according to what he has done" (Matt. xvi. 27, N.I.V.).

"Each person" must refer to saved people. Christ does not reward unbelievers who reject Him. However, Scripture teaching is quite clear that not every believer will be rewarded, for this depends on faithfulness to the Lord, even to the point of suffering and loss. In the parables at the close of Matthew it is the faithful servant that receives the "well done" from the Saviour and enters into the joy of the Lord in resurrection at His Second Coming, which is parallel to "entering the Kingdom".

The two senses of the word "life" come out in C. B. Williams' translation. He has added the words "higher" and "lower" to designate them:

> "Then Jesus said to His disciples, If anyone wants to be My disciple he must say 'no' to self, put his cross on his shoulders and keep on following Me. For whoever wants to save his higher life, will have to give up the lower life and whoever gives up the lower life for My sake will find the higher life. For what benefit will it be to a man, if he gains the whole world and loses his higher life? What price would a man pay to buy back his life?" (xvi. 24, 26, C. B. Williams).

The figure of cross bearing would be well known by reason of the crucifixion of criminals in Palestine. It is clear that God does not force any disciple of His to take up the cross. This is decided by the believer himself as to whether he chooses to do so or not. There is always the easy way to take which avoids suffering and loss which is typified by the cross.

Losing the life or soul means to forfeit voluntarily many of the pleasures and good things of this life for the truth's sake, and looking forward in faith to a resurrection life which is infinitely better and permanently satisfying. Abraham experienced this loss when he left the pleasures and attractions of Ur of the Chaldees, giving up kith and kin to become a dweller in tents in a far off undeveloped country. But Heb. xi. tells us that this was done with the eye of faith, looking forward to that "better country", heavenly in character, to be enjoyed in resurrection (Heb. xi. 13-16).

Moses likewise gave up much that was attractive and enjoyable in Egypt, for he had been brought up in Pharaoh's palace, surrounded by tremendous wealth and power. Yet he let it all go, and chose to suffer affliction with the people of God (Israel), esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward (Heb. xi. 24-26).

Paul had the same experience when he voluntarily gave up the gains of this present life with all their seeming advantages, for the far better spiritual treasures to be found only in Christ (Phil. iii. 7-11).

Peter, in his first epistle, referred to the sufferings that those to whom he wrote were undergoing. It was indeed "a fiery trial" of faith for them, but they were urged to looked forward to receiving "the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls" (I Pet. i. 7-9) which would be experienced "at the appearing of Jesus Christ" (verse 7). The Hebrew believers likewise had endured much suffering and loss (Heb. x. 32, 33). They were reminded that they belonged to those who have believed to "the saving (or gaining) of the soul" and that the Rewarder would come in a "little while" and then they would have "great recompense of reward" from Him (verses 35, 37).

The same truth is illustrated in the book of Revelation where those living under the dominion of the Antichrist at the end of the age, choose to die rather than receive the mark of the Beast. As far as this present life is concerned, they had given up everything, but the Apostle John, in a vision, sees them raised from the dead later on, not only living in the millennial kingdom, but on the throne with Christ, reigning with Him (Rev.xx.4-6). But verse 5 reads "the rest of the dead did not come to life again until the thousand years were ended" (R.S.V.). So here we have a clear illustration of what being shut out of the kingdom means in the Sermon on the Mount.

Taking up the cross is a voluntary act of a believer who is willing to suffer pain and loss now for Christ Who takes note of this, and gives immense gains in the life to come for eternity. Thus we see that the phrase "the saving of the soul" in the N.T. applies to faithful believers, not to the unsaved. Moreover, we can now distinguish between coming to Christ as sinners needing salvation, and choosing to come after Christ (literally behind Christ, that is with Christ in front, leading). This can only be experienced after being saved.

"To deny himself" (xvi. 24) means more than what we mean by "self-denial". It means to say 'no' to self, to refuse to make our aims, our pleasures, our wills the laws of life, thus giving them the first place. For these we must substitute the claims of Christ, His Truth, and the well-being of others. Such a choice is far from easy, but we dare not alter or tone down the conditions laid down by the Lord.

All this section of the Gospel must be seen in its context of reward for faithfulness in service. It does not refer to salvation. If this is introduced here we create difficulties that are insoluble. The Lord Jesus at this point reveals that His coming back to the earth is in great glory with the accompaniment of the angels of heaven, and He concludes with the words:

> "I tell you the truth, some who are standing here will not taste death before they see the Son of Man coming in His kingdom" (xvi. 28, N.I.V.).

Once more we have the untranslatable particle an with the subjunctive mood which implies some uncertainty of the timing, not the fact of the Lord's return. By His own statements that we have considered, the Lord Jesus brought His Second Coming near to the first, and we know that the conditions that obtained in the Acts period showed that this second coming was an imminent possibility, for all the epistles written during this period show that it was near. (See the author's The Unfolding Purpose of God, p.43).

We note that the next chapter commences with an account of the Transfiguration. Some expositors feel that this is the fulfillment of the verses we have been considering, for Peter, James and John witnessed it, and the three Evangelists, Matthew, Mark and Luke record it (Matt. xvii. 1-8; Mark ix. 2-8; Luke ix. 28-36) in exactly the same context. Before we reject this, we should consider Peter's testimony in his second epistle which refers to his experience at the Transfiguration of Christ:

> "We did not follow cleverly invented stories when we told you about the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but we were eye-witnesses of His majesty. For He > received honour and glory from God the Father when the voice came to Him from the Majestic Glory, saying, 'This is My Son, Whom I love; with Him I am well pleased'. We ourselves heard this voice that came from heaven when we were with Him on the sacred mountain" (II Pet. i. 16-18, N.I.V.).

Peter declares here that he saw the power and coming (parousia) of Christ. He was an eye-witness of the majesty and coming of the One Who was not only Israel's Messiah, but Israel's King. This parousia ('coming', or better 'presence') is going to be described by Christ in Matt. xxiv., and there can be no doubt that this is His Second Advent.

These verses then must not lightly be set aside, for they concern the Transfiguration which is being detailed in the chapter of Matthew's Gospel we are studying. In any case there is no need to make a problem of the Lord's statement in xvi. 28. If we compare the accounts of the three Evangelists we shall find they vary slightly, and in this way add more detail.

Prison Experiences

No.1. "because the Lord was with him . . . . ." (Gen. xxxix. 23).

pp. 237 - 240

In this series, we propose to use as a guide the many references to prison in both the Old and New Testaments. We might expect that many of them would be records of those who were being punished for their wrong-doing but this is not so.

Although we are studying the circumstances that lead to prison experience, we bear in mind that some people (and probably more than we realize) have experiences which do not lead to being bound or being confined to a prison cell, but which are similar to prison experience. Some of the references in scripture to prison relate to "restraint" so that there are limitations to the freedom of the individual although they are not in chains. How many people suffer from limitations that restrict their freedom? People may be severely limited owing to problems connected with their health, or their financial situation or other disabilities. One can be unable to visit friends, if a car is not available and if public services are withdrawn. Those who live in the country find travel more and more difficult and such environment conditions could lead to a type of "prison experience". In fact, we may go further and say that each one of us is limited to some extent by our circumstances, our responsibilities, our occupation, our environment, our financial situation, our obligations, our health, and many other factors. A young and healthy person could be "imprisoned" by the responsibility of caring for an infirm and aged parent. A Christian wishing to help in a witness in a certain locality may be prevented from so doing, because he is employed in a different locality and cannot get "time off" to travel to and from the other locality, or the distance may be so great that the time and the cost involved make the journey impossible.

The limitations which we have tried to illustrate are of a physical nature but there is the spiritual dimension. How many times do we hear of the need for "fellowship"? How many Christians for one reason or another cannot meet with others for fellowship and worship? How many members of the church which is His Body find themselves isolated and have little or no opportunity to meet and talk with others of like precious faith. They feel "shut up" or "imprisoned". They are lonely and want fellowship.

We are aware of this need and that is why we have arranged for the Tape Recording Service, which enables the lonely ones to apply for cassettes and by that means they can share with others the message that was delivered at the Chapel, or elsewhere. We also encourage such isolated ones to share with others in prayer and we issue Joints and Bands for this purpose, asking the lonely ones to contact us and exchange their experiences with others.

Examples of Suffering.

The Apostle Paul certainly knew that to follow Christ faithfully was costly. How he suffered for his faith! He lists the characteristics of his life in II Tim. iii. 10-12, "But thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, longsuffering, charity, patience, persecutions, afflictions . . . . . what persecutions I endured; but out of them all the Lord delivered me". He adds in verse 12, "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution".

In Heb. xi., where we have that wonderful account of those who lived by faith, in verses 33-38 we have a long list of the tremendous trials and afflictions that were endured. In verse 36, we read, "and others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment".

Of Christ, we read in Isa. liii. 8:

> "He was taken from prison and from judgment: and who shall declare His generation? for He was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of My people, was He stricken."

So in days of old, trials, persecutions, and afflictions had to be endured and Paul included prison experiences among those trials. Conditions may be different today, and in this country, we are greatly favoured. But in some countries, Christians are suffering prison sentences and even torture for their faith. We propose to consider some examples of those who had prison experiences and we will commence with the life of Joseph.

Joseph (Introduction).

We read the account of the life of Joseph in Gen. xxxvii.-l. It is a long but thrilling story. In addition to its own intrinsic interest, it contains much valuable material for Bible study. A number of O.T. characters are types of Christ and a study of Joseph's life, watching for similar events in the life of Christ, can be very rewarding.

In Volume XII of The Berean Expositor, Charles H. Welch sets out on page 5 a little structure which he calls "Seven great types of Christ". We reproduce it here.

A | ADAM.—Sin forfeits life.
B | ABEL.—The accepted offering.
C | SETH.—Substitution.
D | NOAH.—Atonement ("pitch").
C | ISAAC.—Substitution.
B | JUDAH.—Suretyship.
A | JOSEPH.—Sufferings lead to preservation of life.

In view of the length of the whole story, we must restrict ourselves to the main features, leaving the reader the pleasure of studying the complete narrative.

Reuben was the eldest son and Joseph was a younger brother; Rachel was the mother of Joseph and Benjamin. When the story opens in chapter xxxvii., Joseph was 17 years old. Now one would expect the family of brothers to be described as "Reuben and his brethren". But this is not so. We read of "Joseph . . . . . with his brethren". Joseph takes the central position and Israel loved Joseph more than all his children because "he was the son of his old age". He made him a coat of many colours. This must have been an embroidered coat and it was significant for two reasons. It indicated that Joseph was the heir. Further, the garment was evidence of a priestly office. Aaron had embroidered garments of blue, purple and scarlet as symbols of his priestly office. So Joseph was the priest of the family. C. H. Welch comments "Throughout scripture, clothing has a symbolic value. The result of Joseph's pre-eminence is prophetic of Christ".

Joseph had two dreams, one about sheaves in the field, and the other about the sun, moon and stars; in each dream, obeisance was made to Joseph. The brothers of Joseph were furious when he recounted his dreams and this increased the hatred that was building up in the hearts of the brothers against Joseph.

We read that "his father observed the saying" (Gen. xxxvii. 11) and this comment reminds us of the mother of Jesus, who "kept all these things and pondered them in her heart" (Luke ii. 19).

The rejection of Joseph as ruler foreshadows the refusal of the Jews to accept their Messiah. We may compare:

> "Shalt thou indeed reign over us?" (Gen. xxxvii. 8).
>
> "We will not have this man to reign over us" (Luke xix. 14).

C. H. Welch points how the career of Joseph is associated with pairs of dreams.

1st pair.		Joseph's dreams of pre-eminence lead to prison and suffering.
2nd pair.		The prisoners' dreams being interpreted lead to deliverance from prison.
3rd pair.		Pharaoh's dreams being interpreted lead to glory and honour.

Having introduced Joseph and his background, we are ready to study the life of Joseph and this we hope to do in our next article.

Random Thoughts

No.1. "Such knowledge is too wonderful for me" (Psalm cxxxix. 6).

pp. 158 - 160

In the first verse of this Psalm the writer expresses the fact that the Lord has absolute and complete knowledge of us, "O Lord, Thou hast searched me and known me". Young's Analytical Concordance gives the meaning of "search" as "to search out or investigate". The Companion Bible contains a note, "to search out as for treasures or secrets". It is evident that the Lord knows all about us, even our secret thoughts.

The Companion Bible also points out that "known" has the meaning "seen so as to understand". So the Lord sees us and understands us. According to The Companion Bible the structure of the Psalm is as follows:

A | 1. Divine searching
B1 | 2-5. Omniscience
C1 | 6. Admiration
B2 | 7-16. Omnipresence
C2 | 17, 18. Admiration
B3 | 19. Omnipotence
C3 | 19-22. Detestation
A | 23, 24. Divine searching

So if we look at verses 2-5, David says that the Lord knows and sees our every movement and understands our every thought. He follows us wherever we go, and hears all we say. It is impossible to go beyond the extent of His knowledge, for there is no limit to His vision and understanding.

Can we flee from the presence of God? Verses 7-16 show that God is everywhere and we cannot get beyond His care.

For the traveler, verses 9 and 10 are very comforting, "If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall Thy hand lead me, and Thy right hand shall hold me". The writer remembers reading these words after flying to New Zealand. It seemed impossible to be further from home. And being alone in an hotel, the Psalmist's assurance that the Lord was present was a source of comfort. His protecting hand was always there.

The Psalmist extends his survey of God's knowledge and His protection to the time even before we were born:

> "For Thou hast possessed my reins: Thou hast covered me in my mother's womb. I will praise Thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvelous are Thy works; and that my soul knoweth right well" (verses 13 and 14).

Even before the limbs were formed, a record was written in God's book. So as the body gradually took shape and grew, the eye of the Lord was observing and His providential care brooded over the unborn child. No wonder the Psalmist exclaims:

> "How precious also are Thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them! If I should count them they are more in number than the sand: when I awake, I am still with Thee" (verses 17 and 18).

Verses 19 to 22 refer to the wicked. The Lord has the power to deal with them, as stated in the first part of verse 19. David then goes on to express his hatred of those who hate the Lord, and he counts the enemies of the Lord as his enemies.

Throughout the Psalm there is a sense of wonder at the knowledge of the Lord, for He knows every detail of our lives, our birth, our every thought and desire: where we go and what we plan. And He is always thinking about us, watching over us and protecting us. He is always with us, and we never pass beyond the bounds of His love and care. John Greenleaf Whittier expresses it in verse:

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

As we meditate on this Psalm we have to echo the words of David:

> "Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it" (verse 6).

At the beginning, David says "O Lord, Thou hast searched me and known me", but after thinking about the omniscience, omnipresence, and omnipotence of the Lord, he begins to feel a sense of unworthiness. So he prays:

> "Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting" (verses 23, 24).

The Psalm does indeed tell us of God's wonderful knowledge, but before we close let us read of an even more astounding revelation. In the letter to the Ephesians, Paul blesses the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Who has blessed us with all spiritual blessings in the heavenly places in Christ. He then continues:

> "According as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love: having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to Himself . . . . ." (Eph. i. 4, 5).

In Psa. cxxxix. we read "My substance was not hid from Thee, when I was made in secret . . . . .". In Ephesians we read of what the Lord did "before the foundation of the world". So, long ago, the Lord chose us and prepared a place for us in His divine purpose and plan. May the eyes of our understanding be enlightened that we may know what is the hope of His calling (Eph. i. 17-20)*.

The Epistle to the ROMANS.

No.20. xi. 17 - 36.
pp. 5 - 9

Coming therefore to the parable of the olive tree, we must remind ourselves that the Israel of chapter xi. must be the same as the Israel of chapter ix. An exegesis that makes Israel the literal nation in the ninth chapter and then changes it by spiritualizing into another people when one reaches the chapter we are dealing with is not acceptable. We must also get quite clear in our minds what grafting into Israel actually means.

Is this only another way of expressing the salvation of Gentiles, or is more than this intended? Let us give Paul's words:

> "If some of the branches have been broken off, and you, though a wild olive shoot, have been grafted in among the others and now share in the nourishing sap from the olive root, do not boast over those branches. If you do, consider this: you do not support the root, but the root supports you. You will say then, 'branches were broken off so that I could be grafted in'. Granted. But they were broken off because of unbelief, and you stand by faith. Do not be arrogant, but be afraid. For if God did not spare the natural branches, He will not spare you either" (Rom. xi. 17-21, N.I.V.).

We may ask ourselves, why does the Apostle introduce the theme of the olive tree at this point? We may be sure of one thing, he did not do so to introduce theological argument. He has been showing the purpose of the Lord in introducing Gentile believers was to "provoke" Israel to emulation. This "provocation" is the theme of this context and its object was to stir the nation up spiritually, to make them realize what they were losing through unbelief. This is the real reason for the figure of the olive and its grafts and to miss this is to miss the whole point of the parable. It should be obvious, after the clear teaching of chapter viii., that no Gentile could be justified or saved by being placed in the position forfeited by one of the natural branches of the olive tree. Chapter viii. has stressed that no believer who is justified by faith can ever be separated from the love of God, or can ever be condemned and lose eternal life, so the threat of excision in Rom.xi.22 cannot refer to this, otherwise we have absolute contradiction.

Firstly, let us get the Scriptural answer as to what the olive tree represents. The Apostle quotes Jeremiah in this chapter and it is this prophet who gives us the clue. In chapters xi. and xii. we read:

> "The Lord thy God called thy name, a green olive tree, fair and goodly fruit . . . . . the branches of it are broken" (Jer. xi. 16).
>
> "But if they will not obey, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, saith the Lord" (Jer. xii. 17).

The broken branches are very much like the olive tree of Rom. xi. Yet we must not misread these verses into thinking this would be the end of the nation, for the prophet makes it abundantly clear that Israel will be preserved as a nation for ever under the terms of the New Covenant of grace (Jer. xxxi. 31-37). God says:

> "If those ordinances (the sun by day and the moon and stars by night) depart from before Me, said the Lord, then the seed of Israel shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever. Thus said the Lord; if heaven above can be measured and the foundations of the earth search out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the Lord" (Jer. xxxi. 36, 37).

Israel then represent the olive tree of Rom. xi. and the branches that were broken off were the unbelieving among Israel. The remaining branches were the faithful elect remnant, and when the unbelieving Israel had been "broken off" the believing Gentile had been "grafted in", although Paul describes this as "contrary to nature" for normally, in grafting, the choice is grafted on to the wild and not vice versa. There are critics who say that Paul's knowledge of gardening was minimal but Paul had a contemporary, Columella, who wrote that when an olive tree ceases to bear well, a wild olive slip grafted in gives new vigour to the tree (Columella, De re rustica, v.9). So perhaps he was not so ignorant as these critics think. Sir William Ramsay states that it was customary in Palestine 60 years ago to re-invigorate an olive tree which was ceasing to bear fruit, by grafting it with a shoot of the wild olive, "so that the sap of the tree ennobles this wild shoot, and the tree now again begins to bear fruit" (Pauline and Other Studies, p.223). But what does the Apostle Paul mean by stating this was "contrary to nature"?

We must remember that it was God's purpose that the Gentile should be blessed through Israel, and not the other way round. This is clear in the first great promise to Abraham, "in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xii. 3). But when we reach the period covered by the Acts of the Apostles, through Israel's repeated failures and disobedience, this abnormal condition of things caused God to reverse the process and bless the Gentile "before the time" as it were, and so seek to stimulate the nation that was so rapidly declining into apostasy and darkness.

"The root and fatness of the olive tree" belonged to Israel and if Israel had repented there would have been no need for Gentile grafting, but the nation could have gone on to accomplish what had always been God's will for them and take the knowledge of Himself to the ends of the earth. Gentile blessing would have followed the repentance of Israel and not been a human factor in its accomplishment.

What does the "root and fatness of the olive tree" represent? It cannot be just salvation or justification by faith for, as we have seen, no one is justified by his works or by being joined with another nation, and cannot be "cut off" from this; for Rom. viii. stresses that such separation is impossible (Rom. viii. 35-39). Paul has already described in detail what the "root and fatness of the olive tree" represents. This he gives at the opening of this section of the epistle in chapter ix. 3-5, listing the tremendous national blessings that God had bestowed on Israel in His plan for the establishment of His kingdom on earth. It gave them a unique position over the nations, so much so that Psalm cxlvii. 20 asserts that God had not dealt so with any nation in bestowing on them such privileges and blessings relating to adoption (the position of the heir), the glory of God, the many covenants wherein God's purpose was so clearly revealed, the giving and guidance of the law, the great privilege for service, the many vital promises relating to the will of God for them, and then the greatest Gift of all, their Messiah, Saviour and King, the Lord Jesus Christ.

These were the tremendous and unique blessings which God had showered on Israel, concerning which the O.T. is so full. It was these great blessings into which the Gentile believer was grafted in to share, and it was from this that he could be "cut off" if he acted in a high-handed way like most of Israel had done. Gentile nations cannot be in view in Rom. xi., for such cannot be addressed as "brethren", neither do they stand "by faith" (Rom. xi. 20).

Once this is seen there is no problem about being cut off from salvation, and in order to show that this cannot be true, Paul concludes by teaching that the One Who had broken the natural branches off through their unbelief was able and willing to graft them in again, in other words, to restore them once more to the position He wills for them in His earthly purpose, for their blindness is only temporary "until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in" (xi. 25).

There were several excisions of the branches of Israel between Matthew xiii. and Acts xxviii.; what happened at Antioch and Corinth being two of them (Acts xiii. 45-47; xix. 8, 9) for the record makes perfectly clear that the opposition to Paul came continually from the Jews, not the Gentiles, who often received the gospel gladly. The "hope of Israel" dominates the Acts and obviously was related to the twelve tribes (Acts.xxvi.6,7). What would happen to the olive tree if the grafting in of Gentile believers failed is not revealed in Romans. Now that we have the light of all Scripture, we know that unbelieving Israel were to be "plucked up" and "scattered" to the ends of the earth as the O.T. had repeatedly warned them, yet had so clearly spoken of their ultimate restoration and gathering back to the land of promise because of God's grace and His unconditional promises to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and David. Israel's blindness or hardness was a mystery (secret, xi. 25) for although the O.T. revealed the nation's laying aside in unbelief there was no revelation of the length of time this would last. Thus it is that Paul ends his parable of the olive tree by stressing this great goal of God for the nation. The One Who has disciplined them and scattered them is the One Who will gather them (Jer. xxxi. 10).

The O.T. prophets give ample evidence of this (see Isa. xliii. 5-7; Jer. xxiv. 6, 7; Ezek. xx. 41, 42; xxviii. 25, 26; Amos ix. 13-15; Micah iv. 1-8; Zeph. iii. 19, 20). (The reader is recommended to the author's The Kingdom of God in Heaven and on Earth, pp.58-66, where this is discussed in detail.). The day is coming when the Redeemer shall come to Zion (Isa. lix. 20; Rom. xi. 26) and Israel shall be restored and enter into the fullness of God's purpose for them:

> "The nation and kingdom that will not serve thee (Israel) shall perish, yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted" (Isa. lx. 12).
> "But ye (Israel) shall be named the Priests of the Lord: men shall call you Ministers of our God: ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles" (Isa. lxi. 6).

The Redeemer's coming to Zion relates to His second coming. At no other time can the glories of these prophecies be fulfilled—certainly not by any activities of men, Christian or otherwise. The olive tree was a parable of truth that fitted the Israel of the Acts period. This is its divine setting; but to pull it out and try to make it fit the church today is to attempt the impossible if the details of holy Scripture are carefully followed.

The olive tree cannot represent the Israel of today, for since Acts xxviii. their blinded condition, through God's judgment, is the very negation of the New Covenant, which relates to a new heart implanted by the Lord to keep his Truth. In no sense can a believer be grafted into the hardened Israel of today. Neither can the olive tree be linked with any of the denominations of Christendom, for if this was true, it would follow that the denomination concerned would, according to Rom. xi., receive back the broken-off branches of Israel, which is impossible.

It has been objected that in Rom. xi. Paul says nothing about the restoration of an earthly Davidic kingdom, or about natural reinstatement in the land of Israel. But why should he? Had he done so it would have turned the Roman epistle into a lengthy treatise and strayed away from his great subject, justification by faith. The restoration of the nation of Israel has been given in great detail in the O.T., and no Jew needed this.

If the view of God's kingdom in the N.T. is completely different from that presented in the O.T., then it was incumbent on the N.T. to make this perfectly clear. But we find no such statement in the Gospels (where we would expect it) nor anywhere else. The olive tree cannot be an illustration of the church which is the Body of Christ, for this church consists of a new creation taken from both Jew and Gentile (Eph. ii. 11-16) and blessed in perfect equality in the sphere of the highest heavens and seen to be enthroned there in Christ (Eph. ii. 6), and its members are urged to set their minds there and not on things on the earth (Colossians iii. 1, 2), for there is where our heavenly citizenship exists (Phil. iii. 20). The olive, as we have seen, represents the nation of Israel and in it the Jew still has priority (Rom. xi. 18) and this cannot be a fit illustration of a company where the Jew nationally does not exist and its blessing placed in an exalted sphere where Christ now reigns in the highest heavens.

The Apostle Paul now ends this section with a doxology:

> "O, the depths of the riches of the wisdom and the knowledge of God! How unsearchable His judgments, and His paths beyond tracing out! Who has known the mind of the Lord? Or who has been His adviser? Who has ever given to God that God should repay him? For from Him and to Him are all things. To Him be the glory forever! Amen" (xi. 33-36, N.I.V.).

The matchless wisdom, knowledge and judgments of God are untraceable by man unless they are revealed, yet they all contribute to the carrying out and fulfillment of His great redemptive plan which will come to a glorious conclusion in spite of Satan and all human failure.

No.21. xii. 1 - 18.
pp. 25 - 29

Chapter xii. begins the practical section of the epistle. To the apostle Paul doctrine alone was not sufficient. God's teaching always brings responsibility. Consequently we find in Paul's epistles doctrine balanced by practice. It could be said concerning all doctrine, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them" (John xiii. 17). Everyone who rejoices in the truth of justification by faith must be concerned about his practical response, and in these last chapters of Romans we find guidance concerning our daily lives. Our concern should be that of the Psalmist when he said "What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits towards me?" (Psa. cxvi. 12). It is significant that Paul not only talks about faith, but the obedience of faith, and it is to this that true faith always leads.

Romans xii. 1 reads:

> "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

Christian scholars have noticed the resemblance in this section with some of the statements of the Sermon on the Mount, but this should cause no surprise when we remember that sometimes the Lord is giving teaching that applies to all men at all times, whatever their differences in birth and upbringing.

The "mercies of God" are given here in Romans as the compelling reason as to why we should now yield ourselves back to Him, so there is a depth here which can easily be missed. Surely the Apostle uses this term to cover and sum up all the tremendous teachings of chapters i.-xi. Because of all this, there can only be one suitable response by the believer and that is to "yield" (same Greek word "present, A.V." as vi. 13, 19) his body to the Lord, which is equivalent to yielding himself. This is a "sacrifice", but not one of outward ritual. Modern translations render "your reasonable service" of the A.V. as "your spiritual worship". Latreia has already occurred in ix. 4 where it is translated 'service'; the verbal form occurs in Phil.iii.3 and is there rendered 'worship' in the A.V. Logikos can mean "reasonable" or "spiritual". It is perfectly true to say that the believer's service is the only reasonable response to God's infinite grace. It is equally true that it is "spiritual worship" in contrast with the externalities of Israel's temple ritual. It is the response of the believer's inward being rather than outward rites. This widens our view of worship which is too often confined to regular attendance at a church building.

The logical service or spiritual worship leads on to the next verse:

> "And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God" (Rom. xii. 2).

The word "world" is aion, age. While this age is full of the exploits of man and his considerable attainments, yet the word of God reminds us that it is "evil" (Gal. i. 4). It is dominated by the "god of this age" who blinds the mind (II Cor. iv. 4), in consequence of which Christ is still rejected. To be conformed to this age is therefore dangerous and always to be avoided by the believer. In contrast he should be "transformed". This word metamorphoo is translated "transfigure" in the Gospel records, and this transfiguration comes about through the work of the Holy Spirit. In II Cor. iii. 18 we have believers being "changed" into the likeness of Christ from one degree of glory to another by the work of "the Lord Who is the Spirit" (N.I.V.). The mind is far from being continually good; it must be constantly "renewed". Without this it would be impossible to test and approve what the will of God is. It is always good and perfect coming from Him, but is it always acceptable to us? It is only so when we are prepared to submit our will to His. The renewed mind constantly needs divine instruction, hence the detailed advice and guidance in the following chapters of the epistle.

The Apostle now deals not only with diversities of personalities, but diversities of gifts, yet insists that all should co-operate for the good of the witness as a whole. He once more uses the illustration of a human body as He had already done when writing to the Corinthian church. Each member of the human body has its own particular work to perform, yet all the parts work together harmoniously otherwise good health would be impossible. In the same way, an assembly of God's people should function together in love and harmony.

> "For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith" (Rom. xii. 3).

The Apostle gives the ground for his authority, the grace and power God had bestowed on him for the teaching and building up of the churches (cp. II Cor. xiii. 10). He starts by warning against pride and self-esteem which would lead to some imagining themselves to be superior to others. God had given each a measure of faith and this word is used in a somewhat different sense from that which it has in the rest of the epistle. Here, it refers to the spiritual power which each believer had received for the discharge of his special responsibility.

Although this responsibility is stressed, yet all must work in harmony, for they were "one body IN Christ" (Rom. xii. 5). The phrase, the Body of Christ does not occur in the epistle to the Romans. The word body to describe a group of people was of common occurrence in early times.

> "The metaphor of the body, used to describe a group of men who have common interests and activities, was not infrequent in antiquity. An example often quoted is the speech put by Livy (2:32) into the mouth of Menenius Agrippa on the occasion of the secession of the Roman plebs. Senate and people, Agrippa argued, could no more dispense with each other than stomach and limbs; they formed a unity within one body" (C. K. Barrett, The Epistle to the Romans, p.236).

Professor F. F. Bruce writes:

> "In I Corinthians and Romans the human body is used simply as an illustration of the corporate life of Christians, but the idea is carried much farther in Colossians and Ephesians. In these later epistles emphasis is laid on the relation which the church, as the Body, bears to Christ as the Head. In them there is no possibility for an ordinary member of the church being compared to the Head, or to part of the Head (as is done in I.Cor.xii.16,21). In them, too, the Body ceases to be a mere simile, and becomes the most effective term which the Apostle can find to express the vital bond which unites the life of believers with the risen life of Christ" (Romans, p.228).

It is vital that we understand this and do not try to force the later teaching concerning the great revelation of the Mystery (Secret) of Ephesians and Colossians into these earlier epistles.

The apostle Paul continues by bringing forward 7 of the Pentecostal gifts:

> "We have different gifts, according to the grace given us. If a man's gift is prophesying, let him use it in proportion to his faith. If it is serving, let him serve; if it is teaching, let him teach; if it is encouraging, let him encourage; if it is contributing to the needs of others, let him give generously; if it is leadership, let him govern diligently; if it is showing mercy, let him do it cheerfully" (xii. 6-8, N.I.V.).

The N.E.B. renders the last phrase "if you are helping others in distress", which gives the sense of the words used. The Apostle had already dealt with these confirmatory gifts in the first canonical letter to the church at Corinth. The reader is referred to the author's The Early and Pastoral Epistles of Paul, chapters 12 to 14, where they are dealt with in detail, specially the gift of tongues.

At verse 9 there is a transition from faith to love, and verse 12 mentions hope. Faith, hope, and love are often seen together in Paul's epistles. They are a trinity of graces that cover the Christian walk so admirably. In this section the injunctions are reminiscent of the Sermon on the Mount. Something more than the mutual love of Christians is required, namely practical love and forgiveness to those outside the fellowship, specially to those who persecute and injure them. It is noteworthy that whenever God wants truth carried over into another dispensation, He repeats it. It is not left to us to pull texts out of their context, because we feel they are of practical importance.

We continue with this section of the epistle as rendered in the N.I.V.:

> "Love must be sincere. Hate what is evil; cling to what is good. Be devoted to one another in brotherly love. Honor one another above yourselves. Never be lacking in zeal, but keep your spiritual fervour, serving the Lord. Be joyful in hope, patient in affliction, faithful in prayer. Share with God's people who are in need. Practice hospitality. Bless those who persecute you; bless and do not curse. Rejoice with those who rejoice; mourn with those who mourn. Live in harmony with one another. Do not be proud, but willing to associate with people of low position. Do not be conceited. Do not repay anyone evil for evil. Be careful to do what is right in the eyes of everybody. If it is possible, as far as it depends on you, live at peace with everyone" (xii. 9-18).

These verses cover a wide field of Christian practice touching the order and conduct of church life and for the most part are direct and clear. We comment on each verse. Verse 9: Love must be literally "without hypocrisy". It must be absolutely sincere and not "put on". Verse 10: Others must be counted as better than themselves. Here we have the spirit of Phil. ii. 3, "in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves". Verse 11: "Fervent in Spirit". This expression is used of Apollos in Acts.xviii.25. It is difficult to decide whether the word "spirit" should have a capital and refer to the Holy Spirit or a small 's' referring to the believer. Probably the former is correct. The R.S.V. renders it "be aglow with the Spirit". Verse 12: Hope is the sure fulfillment of faith and so should surely produce lasting joy. Affliction should be patiently endured and there must be perseverance in prayer.

No.22. xii. 14 - xiii. 14.
pp. 41 - 44

Verse 14: Here the Apostle echoes the Sermon on the Mount. Compare Luke vi. 28, "Bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you", and also Matt. v. 44 "Love your enemies . . . . . and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you". Verse 15: An exhortation to show true sympathy with others, so avoiding being self-centred. Verse 16: "Be of the same mind one toward another". This is like Phil. ii. 2 "to be high-minded", which is ensured when each one has "the mind of Christ" as explained in the verses that follow. "Mind not high things": this is repeated from chapter xi. 20 where we read "Be not highminded", and this is a warning against conceit and "men of low estate", that is, "humble folk" should not be avoided. Verse 17: Again, a reference to the Sermon on the Mount. The second sentence in this verse is a quotation from Prov. iii. 4 (LXX) and is an exhortation to lead an honest life before all men. Verse 18: This, again, reflects the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. v. 9). Verse 19: This is a warning against taking revenge. There is only one Person Who can do this righteously and that is God. No one has a right to imagine that his own revengeful feelings will carry out the will of God. Paul is quoting here from Deut.xxxii.35. Verse 20: The meaning here being that if an enemy is treated kindly, it may make him ashamed and repentant and become a friend, so "overcoming evil with good" (see verse 21).

Chapter xiii.

Chapter xiii. commences a new section dealing with the relation of believers to the ruling powers. Attempts have been made to confine the meaning of "powers" to those in authority in the churches, but this is not a satisfactory exposition of the passage as a whole. The believer's attitude to authority was one of extreme importance. The position of Jews in the Roman empire was regulated by a number of imperial edicts. They enjoyed many privileges, for their religion was registered as a lawful one, religio licita, and these included the sabbath law, food regulations, and the prohibition of graven images.

After the death of Christ, Roman law tended to regard Christianity as a variety of Judaism, yet it started with a great handicap in the eyes of Rome for its Founder had been convicted and executed by the sentence of a Roman magistrate. He had led a movement which challenged the authority of Caesar.

This was often a trump card with the enemies of Christ (see the argument in Actx.xvii.6,7 against Paul). It was therefore necessary that Christians should take care with regard to their actions as they affected the governing authorities. The Lord Jesus Himself—in His wisdom—had already done so in His words "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's" (Matth.xxii.21; Mark.xii.14-17). These words related to the paying of taxes while God Himself ordained human government, and Prov. xxi. 1 assures us that "the king's heart is in the hand of the Lord, as the rivers of water: He turneth it whithersoever He will", yet we must not assume that human government constantly reflects the mind of God. The opposite is the truth and cries out for the return of Christ and the commencement of His righteous rule which will give justice to all. Yet with all its imperfections it is better than anarchy, which would arise if there was no restraint on human behaviour.

But another problem follows: what if human government is contrary to God and His laws? What if Caesar claims not only things that are his, but the things that belong to God? The N.T. provides the answer. If the decrees of authorities conflict with the commandments of God, then the Christian must refuse to comply with them. The ruling powers are then exceeding the authority delegated to them by God and trespassing on the sphere that belongs to God alone. Thus we have the answer of the apostles in Acts v. 29 "we ought to obey God rather than men". This problem becomes acute in totalitarian countries. Yet it is significant that Peter echoes the words of Paul that the normal attitude of Christians to governments is one of obedience:

> "Submit yourselves for the Lord's sake to every authority instituted among men; whether to the king, as the supreme authority, or to governors, who are sent by him to punish those who do wrong and to commend those who do right. For it is God's will that by doing good you should silence the ignorant talk of foolish men" (I Pet. ii. 13-15, N.I.V.).

Thus it is that Paul commences the 13th chapter of Romans by writing:

> "Everyone must submit himself to the governing authorities, for there is no authority except that which God has established. The authorities that exist have been established by God" (xiii. 1, N.I.V.).

Thus, in the providence of God, He has provided for everyone civil rulers as a restraint against uncontrolled sin and failure, just as He has provided them with sun and rain. The obedience of this verse is only within the limits of the purposes for which it has been divinely instituted and cannot override the obedience which is due to God alone.

The apostle continues:

> "Consequently, he who rebels against the authority is rebelling against what God has instituted, and those who do so will bring judgment on themselves. For rulers hold no terror for those who do right, but for those who do wrong. Do you want to be free from fear of the one in authority? Then do what is right and he will commend you. For he is God's servant to do you good. But if you do wrong, be afraid, for he does not bear the sword for nothing. He is God's servant, an agent of wrath to bring punishment on the wrongdoer. Therefore, it is necessary to submit to the authorities, not only because of possible punishment but also because of conscience" (xiii. 2-5, N.I.V.).

The teaching of these verses is perfectly clear. The person whose conscience and actions are right, has nothing to fear. The opposite is true for the wrongdoer. "Bearing the sword" can only mean capital punishment and moreover shows that the authorities must be civil powers and cannot refer to angels, which some have taught: nor is any problem felt with the Christian way of love. Those who have are confusing the preservation of mankind with the salvation of mankind (which many do these days). The authority of human rule is to protect from evil, but in no sense is this a spiritual work, doing away with the need of salvation which has grace and love at its root.

The submission to authorities includes the paying of taxes:

> "This is also why you pay taxes, for the authorities are God's servants, who give their full time to governing. Give everyone what you owe him; if you owe taxes, pay taxes; if revenue, then revenue; if respect, then respect; if honour, then honour" (xiii. 6, 7, N.I.V.).

No one enjoys paying taxes. Most think this is to be avoided as far as possible, yet we remember that the Son of God did not consider Himself to be free from this duty (Matthew xvii. 24-27). Moreover He gave the injunction, as we have seen, to "render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's", and the paying of taxes once again proves that we are not dealing with angels or spiritual powers, but with human beings.

Having dealt with the relation of the believer to the State, the Apostle continues his theme of Christian practice by returning to the all-inclusive command of love:

> "Let no debt remain outstanding, except the continuing debt to love one another, for he who loves his fellow man has fulfilled the law. The commandments, 'do not commit adultery' (Exod. xx. 14), 'do not murder' (13), 'do not steal' (15), 'do not covet' (17), and whatever other commandment there may be, are summed up in this one rule: 'love your neighbour as yourself'. Love does no harm to its neighbour. Therefore love is the fulfillment of the law" (xiii. 8-10, N.I.V.).

Here Paul gets to the very heart of the law of God given through Moses. It is really perfect love in action. The first five commandments deal with our love to God, and the second five our love to our neighbour. The problem is that man, by becoming a sinner, cannot love properly in the sense that God uses the term. The word becomes besmirched with uncleanness, selfishness and sentimentality. The word "fulfillment" is the important word pleroma, often rendered "fullness" (see xi. 25; xv. 29).

We must not imagine that the Apostle is teaching that a believer in loving fulfils the law and therefore does not need the salvation or justification. One breach alone of the law is sufficient to come under its condemnation, as this epistle and Galatians clearly testify, and the Apostle here is certainly not contradicting himself.

Dr. C. K. Barrett writes:

> "Love is not the completion but the performance of the law. Verse 9 shows that by the law Paul means the Old Testament law in its preceptual character. Love fulfils all the negative and positive commandments inclusively, from Lev.19:18 downwards. When Paul says this, however, he is not instituting a new, though simplified, legalism. He does not say that a man is justified by fulfilling the law through love, rather he is pointing out the ethical expression of the true meaning of the law, which, when rightly understood, itself points the way of faith which expresses itself in love (Gal.5:6) . . . . . it is not a means of salvation, but the ethical channel through which the new life in Christ Jesus flows" (The Epistle to the Romans, p.251).

The next practical section of the epistle is coloured by the nearness of the end of the age which culminates in the Second Advent of Christ:

> "And do this, understanding the present time. The hour has come for you to wake up from your slumber, because our salvation is nearer now than when we first believed. The night is nearly over; the day is almost here. So let us put aside the deeds of darkness and put on the armour of light. Let us behave decently, as in the daytime, not in orgies of drunkenness, not in sexual immorality and debauchery, not in dissension and jealousy. Rather, clothe yourselves with the Lord Jesus Christ, and do not think about how to gratify the desires of the sinful nature" (xiii. 11-14, N.I.V.).

We must never forget that Romans is an Acts period epistle when the Second Advent of Christ was a glorious possibility according to the divine offer of forgiveness to Israel and the promise to send back the Lord Jesus Christ if only the nation would turn back to God and repent (Acts iii. 19-26). It is significant that all the epistles written during this time mention the nearness of the Lord's Second Coming as the hope of the churches. For further details the reader is referred to The Unfolding Purpose of God by the author, pp.42-44.

No.23. xiv. 1 - xv. 13.
pp. 61 - 64

The next section in this epistle relates to the duties of one Christian to another, bearing in mind that all had not attained to the same level of spiritual growth. There were those who were "strong" and those who were "weak" in the faith, and their attitude to food and the religious observance of certain days was not the same. The Jew would be scrupulous concerning meat, which had for him to be slaughtered according to O.T. rules, otherwise he would abstain. The Gentile would not be so particular. Some would insist certain religious days should be observed. Others might think this was not important. Believers at this time needed some advice as to their behaviour to each other, and the Apostle gives this:

> "Accept him whose faith is weak, without passing judgment on disputable matters. One man's faith allows him to eat everything, but another man, whose faith is weak, eats only vegetables. The man who eats everything must not look down on him who does not, and the man who does not eat everything must not condemn the man who does, for God has accepted him. Who are you to judge someone else's servant? To his own master he stands or falls. And he will stand, for the Lord is able to make him stand" (xiv. 1-4, N.I.V.).

It is not for one believer to judge or criticize another. Once again we are reminded of the Sermon on the Mount, the Lord's "judge not, that ye be not judged" (Matt. vii. 1, 2).

The habit of criticizing others is a sin that is very prevalent among Christians, who seem to act as though they had a divine right to do this. The act of one sinner criticizing another sinner is absurd and unedifying, and the Apostle's conclusion is given in Rom.xiv.13, "Let us not therefore judge one another any more". What we can do is to "judge ourselves", which may not be pleasant, and if we do "we should not be judged" (I.Cor.xi.31).

> "One man considers one day more sacred than another; another man considers every day alike. Each one should be fully convinced in his own mind. He who regards one day as special, does so to the Lord. He who eats meat, eats to the Lord, for he gives thanks to God; and he who abstains, does so to the Lord and gives thanks to God. For none of us lives to himself alone and none of us dies to himself alone. If we live, we live to the Lord; and if we die, we die to the Lord. So, whether we live or die, we belong to the Lord. For this very reason, Christ died and returned to life so that He might be the Lord of both the dead and the living. You, then, why do you judge your brother? Or why do you look down on your brother? For we will all stand before God's judgment seat. It is written: 'As surely as I live', says the Lord, 'Every knee will bow before Me; every tongue will confess to God'. So then, each of us will give an account of himself to God" (xiv. 5-12, N.I.V.).

In verse 7 Paul is not just teaching that our actions affect our fellowmen with whom we come into contact, but that we live in relation to God, and are accountable in our actions to Him as Lord. This makes our relationship to each other important, for finally we have to answer to Him for this, as well as all other aspects of our witness day by day.

This final interview no Christian will escape. We must all give an account of ourselves to God (12). "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son" (John v. 22). It is He Who is "the righteous Judge" (II Tim. iv. 8); He it is Who is the Lord of both the dead and the living (Rom. xiv. 9), and to stress the solemnity of His judgment-seat the Apostle quotes from Isa. xlv., and the One Who speaks here declares "I am the Lord, and there is none else" (verse 18); "a just God and a Saviour; there is none beside Me" (21). Without hesitation Paul applies this Scripture to Christ. The judgment seat of Christ is the judgment seat of God (Rom. xiv. 10). In Phil. ii. the Apostle, quoting the same context from Isa. xlv., applies it to Christ, and if Christ is not God then words have no meaning at all. Yet there are those who declare that the apostle Paul did not teach the deity of Christ! Those who make such statements must be very ignorant of his witness. "Every one of us shall give account of himself to God" (12), and that is the One Who has been "manifest in the flesh".

The problems concerning "food" and "days" were very real in the early days of Christianity, and the fact that the Lord Jesus had abrogated the food laws of the O.T. by pronouncing all kinds of food to be "clean" (Mark vii. 18, 19) seems to have been little understood at the beginning. Peter needed a special vision from God at Joppa to realize that he was not to count as unclean what God had cleansed, so that he could conscientiously visit the Gentile Cornelius and accept his hospitality, and it is significant that shortly afterwards, when the Council of Jerusalem agreed that Gentiles could be admitted to fellowship on the basis of faith in Christ, a regulation was made that Gentile converts should abstain from foods which were still abhorrent to Jewish brethren and conform to their O.T. food laws (Acts xv. 20, 29). In other words, while the Apostle taught the freedom of Christians in Christ, yet voluntary limits should be placed on this freedom, in order to avoid strife and disunity. This was not to be regarded as bondage but a practical expression of love and concern for someone else who may be weaker in the faith.

Consequently, in the next section of Romans, this is stressed:

> "Therefore let us stop passing judgment on one another. Instead, make up your mind not to put any stumbling-block or obstacle in your brother's way. As one who is in the Lord Jesus, I am fully convinced that no food is unclean in itself. But if anyone regards something as unclean, then for him it is unclean. If your brother is distressed because of what you eat, you are no longer acting in love. Do not by your eating destroy your brother for whom Christ died. Do not allow what you consider good to be spoken of as evil. For the kingdom of God is not a matter of eating and drinking, but of righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Spirit, because anyone who serves Christ in this way is pleasing to God and approved by men. Let us therefore make every effort to do what leads to peace and to mutual edification. Do not destroy the work of God for the sake of food. All food is clean, but it is wrong for a man to eat anything that causes someone else to stumble. It is better not to eat meat or drink wine or to do anything else that will cause your brother to fall" (xiv. 13-21, N.I.V.).

The drift of this long section then is clear. The "strong" must not flaunt their liberty before weaker Christians and upset them. These problems were bound to arise at Rome as they had done at Corinth, where the Apostle gave guidance in I Corinthians relating to meat offered to idols. Those who were more mature should be prepared to restrict their liberty in the interests of others who were not so advanced. Only in this way would practical love and consideration prevail, and the unity between believers be maintained.

In this respect the Apostle had set an example himself. He said, "For though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more" (I.Cor.ix.19). He was always willing to restrict his liberty so that others might be helped and encouraged. After all, the kingdom of God is not concerned with food and drink and other subservient matters, but the really important things as "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit" (Rom. xiv. 17).

To sum up, let us repeat verse 13, "let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumblingblock or an occasion to fall in his brother's way". Note the two senses of the word 'judge' (krino in the original). In the former clause it means 'criticize', and in the latter 'decide'. As in English, the Greek word can be used for both senses.

Paul concludes the section:

> "So whatever you believe about these things keep between yourself and God. Blessed is the man who does not condemn himself by what he approves. But the man who has doubts is condemned if he eats, because his eating is not from faith; and everything that does not come from faith is sin" (xiv. 22, 23, N.I.V.).

Here the Apostle is saying that if a person does something which makes his conscience uneasy, he is condemned at heart. The one who does it knowing that it is permissible according to the Word of God is doing right and he does it "of faith". Whatever is not "of faith" is sin, because the action does not arise from conviction. Thus it is that the believer has the teaching of the holy Scriptures, the revelation of God's character to exercise the Christian spirit indicated in Rom. xiv. Added to this the apostle Paul now brings forward the example of Christ Who "pleased not Himself".

> "We who are strong ought to bear with the failings of the weak and not to please ourselves. Each of us should please his neighbour for his good, to build him up. For even Christ did not please Himself but, as it is written: 'The insults of those who insult you have fallen on me'. For everything that was written in the past was written to teach us, so that through endurance and the encouragement of the Scriptures we might have hope" (xv. 1-4, N.I.V.).

To those who follow Christ's example in practice, there can be only one result: they will aim first to please the Lord; second their neighbour, with the aim to edify or build him up in the truth, and thirdly they will be ready to receive all true believers without discrimination, even though they may be weak in the faith.

> "May the God Who gives endurance and encouragement give you a spirit of unity among yourselves as you follow Christ Jesus, so that with one heart and mouth you may glorify the God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.
> Accept one another, then, just as Christ accepted you, in order to bring praise to God. For I tell you that Christ become a servant of the Jews on behalf of God's truth, to confirm the promises made to the patriarchs so that the Gentiles may glorify God for His mercy, as it is written:

‘Therefore I will praise you among the Gentiles;
I will sing hymns to your Name.’
Again, it says,
‘Rejoice, O Gentiles, with His people’.
And again,
‘Praise the Lord, all you Gentiles, and sing praises to Him, all you peoples’.
And again, Isaiah says,
‘The Root of Jesse will spring up,
One Who will arise to rule over the nations;
the Gentiles will hope in Him’.
May the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace as you trust in Him, so that you may overflow with hope by the power of the Holy Spirit” (xv. 5-13, N.I.V.).

In Rom. xiv. the apostle dealt with problems concerning food and religious days that had to be faced by the early churches. For the most part these problems do not exist today, although some may have a difficulty regarding days. It seems quite certain that the regulations concerning the Jewish sabbath, the seventh day of the week, could not have existed then, otherwise Paul could not have written Rom. xiv. 5, 6 or Col.ii.15-17. It will be helpful to quote Dean Alford here. Regarding the observance of days, he says:

> “He (Paul) classes the observance or non-observance of particular days, with the eating or abstaining from particular meats. In both cases he is concerned with things which he evidently treats as of absolute indifference in themselves. Now the question is, supposing the divine obligation of one day in seven to have been recognized by him in any form, could he have thus spoken? The obvious inference from his strain of arguing is, that he knew of no such obligation, but believed that all times and days to be, to the Christian strong in faith, ALIKE. I do not see how the passage can be otherwise understood. If any one day in the week were invested with the sacred character of the Sabbath, it would have been wholly impossible for the Apostle to commend or uphold the man who judged all days worthy of equal honour,—who, as in verse 6, paid no regard to the (any) day. He must have visited him with his strongest disapprobation, as violating a command of God. I therefore infer, that sabbatical obligation to keep any day, whether seventh or first, was not recognized in apostolic times” (The Greek Testament, p.452).

We must surely distinguish the commands of God contained in the Scriptures from the institutions of Christian men, and realize that the first day of the week is always so designated in the N.T. and never called the Sabbath.

It is also essential to recognize the pre-eminence of Israel in Romans. “To the Jew first” is written all over it. While, from the standpoint of sin, there was no difference between Jew and Gentile, yet from the standpoint of the earthly phase of God’s kingdom purpose, Israel is pre-eminent as the Scriptures make abundantly clear, for it was through the posterity of Abraham that all families of the earth were to be finally blessed (Gen.xii.) and Paul does not depart from this, as chapters ix.-xi. show, as also does the present context in chapter xv. The Apostle brings forward 4 O.T. Scriptures to prove that Gentile blessing was in the purpose of God (Psa. xviii. 49; cxvii. 1; Deut. xxxii. 43; Isa. xi. 10) but always the Gentiles is seen in his relationship to Israel. The Gentile was to be blessed in, through, and with Israel, but never independently of Israel.

It is a pity that the A.V. in quoting Isa. xi. 10 uses the word 'trust' in Rom. xv. 12 and 'hope' in the next verse; it is the same word expressed as a verb and then as a noun and should be rendered "hope" in both cases, thus linking the two together and showing that the hope of the believer at this time was related to the millennial hope of Isa. xi., looking forward to Messiah's reign on earth at His Coming.

Here, in Rom. xv., the Lord Jesus is brought forward as the "minister of the circumcision (the Jew) to confirm the promises made to the fathers" (verse 8), that is Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. He Himself declared to a Gentile woman in need that He was only sent to Israel (Matt. xv. 24), and moreover He restricted the ministry of the Twelve to Israel (Matt. x. 5, 6). All this is incomprehensible to those who have no Scriptural insight into the earthly kingdom purposes of God in which Israel is at the centre from the human standpoint. But the message was not to Israel exclusively. It was rather that through Israel all the Gentile world would finally be blessed. As we have seen when considering chapters ix.-xi., Israel had not been laid aside by God and Acts.iii.19-26 was still possible of fulfillment, and the hope at this time was that it would be fulfilled, that the Lord would return and set up His kingdom of righteousness and peace. Then Deut. xxxii. 43, as quoted here by Paul would become true, "Rejoice ye Gentiles (nations) with His people (Israel)". This would be specially so when at last "all families of the earth" would be blessed through Abraham's posterity (Gen. xii.).

The Apostle now contemplates the plan of God as it affected himself:

> "I have written to you quite boldly on some points, as if to remind you of them again, because of the grace God gave me to be a minister of Christ Jesus to the Gentiles with the priestly duty of proclaiming the gospel of God, so that the Gentiles might become an offering acceptable to God, sanctified by the Holy Spirit. Therefore I glory in Christ Jesus in my service to God. I will not venture to speak of anything except what Christ has accomplished through me in leading the Gentiles to obey God by what I have said and done—by the power of signs and miracles, through the power of the Spirit. So from Jerusalem all the way around to Illyricum, I have fully proclaimed the gospel of Christ. It has always been my ambition to preach the gospel where Christ was not known, so that I would not be building on someone else's foundation. Rather as it is written:
>
> 'Those who were not told about Him will see, > and those who have not heard will understand (Isa. lii. 15, LXX)'."
> (Rom. xv. 15-21, N.I.V.).

It was in his Christ-given capacity as the Apostle of the Gentiles that he had written to the believers at Rome. The other apostles, led by Peter, had been sent by Christ to the circumcision, Israel (Gal. ii.). Paul had faithfully discharged his Gentile ministry for well over 20 years. The words that he used (such as leitourgos and leitourgei) always denote religious service in the N.T. How many professing Christians realize that Christ-directed service is worship? The sphere his gospel ministry had covered began at Antioch and taken him round the eastern end of the Mediterranean to the Adriatic sea. The Acts does not mention the Roman province of Illyricum nor any of Paul's epistles up to this time. From Macedonia the Via Egnatia crossed the Balkans to the coast of the Adriatic and it is possible that Paul had traversed this as far as Illyricum. At this point he could say that he had completed the preaching of the gospel of Christ (see the N.E.B.) and this was confirmed by the evidential miracles which abounded in the Acts period. He does not mean by this that every individual had heard the gospel, but that he had preached it in every province in that part of the Gentile world and so fulfilled his ministry in that region. He tells us that he avoided treading on someone's toes, but to cover as wide an area as possible for the truth of God. This he had done at the eastern end of the Mediterranean. What remained for his ministry? There was left the north coast of Africa, Gaul and Spain. Paul makes no mention of Africa, though this was doubtless in his mind. He does express his intention of visiting Spain, probably taking Gaul on the way.

> "But now that there is no more place for me to work in these regions, and since I have been longing for many years to see you, I plan to do so when I go to Spain. I hope to visit you while passing through and to have you assist me on my journey there, after I have enjoyed your company for a while" (Rom. xv. 23, 24).

Did the Apostle ever reach Spain? There is no further reference to Spain in the N.T., nor certain evidence that he did so, but it was not impossible. However, he had a more immediate task. He was concerned to organize a collection from the Gentile churches for the poor saints living at Jerusalem. This not only recognized the indebtedness of the Gentile churches to the mother church, but it also helped to cement the bond between the Jerusalem believers and the churches of the Gentiles. It was a practical expression of brotherly love.

At the same time Paul realized that the stricter brethren at Jerusalem looked on his Gentile ministry with suspicion and he therefore had misgivings as to the sort of reception he would receive from them:

> "Now, however, I am on my way to Jerusalem in the service of the saints there. For Macedonia and Achaia were pleased to make a contribution for the poor among the saints in Jerusalem. They were pleased to do it, and indeed they owe it to them. For if the Gentiles have shared in the Jews' spiritual blessings, they owe it to the Jews to share with them their material blessings. So after I have completed this task and have made sure that they have received this truth, I will go to Spain and visit you on the way. I know that when I come to you, I will come in the full measure of the blessing of Christ. I urge you, brothers, by our Lord Jesus Christ and by the love of the Spirit, to join me in my struggle by praying to God for me. Pray that I may be rescued from the unbelievers in Judaea and that my service in Jerusalem may be acceptable to the saints there, so that by God's will I may come to you with joy and together with you be refreshed. The God of peace be with you all. Amen" (Rom. xv. 25-33, N.I.V.).

This collection for Jerusalem was not an innovation on Paul's part, for eleven years previously Barnabas and he had brought a similar gift from believers at Antioch in Syria to the church at Jerusalem in a period of famine (Acts xi. 30; xii. 25). At that time the Jerusalem leaders could add nothing to Paul's ministry in the way of instruction, but advised him to "remember the poor", which, the Apostle tells us, he was ready to do (Gal.ii.10). The details of this collection are found in I Cor. xvi. 1-4; II Cor. viii. 4; ix. 1, 12, and while this was the recognition of a debt, it was a moral one, not a legal one.

Paul ends this section of the epistle, and one edition of the epistle ends here. There are five doxologies, or benedictions, in the A.V. (xv.13; xv.33; xvi.20; xvi.24; xvi.25-27). In each of these God or Christ is besought to do something for the readers. For those who want full details we refer them to the works of Prof. F. F. Bruce, Dr. C. K. Barrett and other scholars. It is only with the last doxology (xvi. 25-27) that doctrine is affected. It is found in various places in the ancient manuscripts. The Alexandrian textual family, and the Manuscript D from the Western textual family have it at the end of chapter xvi. Some manuscripts place it after xiv. 23. A few put it both after xiv. 23 and xvi. 25-27. One of them (G) omits it altogether. The papyrus manuscript P46 puts it after xv. 33.

There may be several reasons for this. Origen, in his commentary on Romans, declare that the heretic, Marcion (138-150A.D.) cut away all of the epistle from xiv. 23 to the end. His followers would produce copies ending at this point. It has been suggested that other Christians shortened the end of the epistle when it was circulated to other churches. Whatever the reasons, we can be thankful that we have the complete epistle today.

Chapter xvi. consists mainly of personal greetings and a short section of warning and encouragement. The greetings are addressed to 26 individuals and five households. On the surface it seems improbable that he knew so many people in a city he had never visited. Dr. C. K. Barrett comments:

> "The view has often been maintained (on grounds partly textual) that 16:1-23 was not addressed to the church at Rome. It is said (a) that Paul is unlikely to have known so many members of the Roman church, which he had never visited and (b) that some of the names mentioned point rather to Ephesus (which Paul knew well) than to Rome. Neither of these nor textual arguments are convincing: (a) In writing to a strange church Paul might very naturally include as many personal greetings as he could in order to establish as close contact as possible; (b) The possibility of movement on the part of members of the Pauline churches must be reckoned with" . . . . . as regards Prisca and Aquila, "they had been expelled from Rome, made their way to Corinth, and thence to Ephesus. There is no reason why they should not have returned to Rome, specially if Romans was written after the death of Claudius (13 October 54A.D.). That 'all the churches' had reason to be grateful to them confirm that they had numerous contacts over a wide area" (The Epistle to the Romans, pp.281-283).

No.25. xvi. 1 - 27.
pp. 101 - 109

When we consider the names of the believers which are brought forward in Rom.xvi., there are two things we must remember: (1) arguments based on names are worth little in view of the fact that men of all races met in Rome. All roads led to Rome, and (2) most of the names are common ones which could be borne by a number of individuals. We give the first sixteen verses as rendered in the N.I.V.:

> "I commend to you our sister Phoebe, a servant of the church in Cenchrea. I ask you to receive her in the Lord in a way worthy of the saints and to give her any help she may need from you, for she has been a great help to many people, including me.
> Greet Priscilla and Aquila, my fellow-workers in Christ Jesus. They risked their lives for me. Not only I but all the churches of the Gentiles are grateful to them.
> Greet also the church that meets at their house.
> Greet my dear friend Epenetus, who was the first convert to Christ in the province of Asia.
> Greet Mary, who worked hard for you.
> Greet Andronicus and Junias, my relative who have been in prison with me. They are outstanding among the apostles, and they were in Christ before I was.
> Greet Ampliatus, whom I loved in the Lord.
> Greet Urbanus, our fellow-worker in Christ, and my dearest friend Stachys.
> Greet Apelles, tested and approved in Christ.
> Greet those who belong to the household of Aristobulus.
> Greet Herodion, my relative.
> Greet those in the household of Narcissus who are in the Lord.
> Greet Tryphena and Tryphosa, those women who work hard in the Lord.
> Greet my dear friend Persis, another woman who has worked very hard in the Lord.
> Greet Rufus, chosen in the Lord, and his mother, who has been a mother to me too.
> Greet Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermes, Patrobas, Hermas and the brothers with them.
> Greet Philologus, Julia, Nereus and his sister, and Olympas and all the saints with them.
> Greet one another with a holy kiss. All the churches of Christ send greetings" > (Rom. xvi. 1-16, N.I.V.).

The first two verses commence with Phoebe, a Christian who was traveling to Rome from Cenchreae, the eastern port of Corinth. She is described as a "deaconess" of the church there. The word "servant" is diakonos, deacon. This was a form of Christian service which could be performed by men or women. In I Tim. iii. 11 (A.V.) "their wives" is more likely to be "women" (R.V., R.S.V.), i.e. women-deacons.

Phoebe was then a trusted servant of the church, and so the Roman believers are exhorted to receive her warmly and help her in any matter in which they could render assistance.

Paul's first greeting is sent to two outstanding Christians, Priscilla and Aquila, to whom we have already referred. Paul calls her Prisca (II Tim. iv. 19), whereas Luke uses the more familiar form Priscilla (Acts xviii. 2, 18, 26). They had gone so far as to risk their lives for the Apostle, though when this happened we do not know, but it was most likely at one of the critical phases of his ministry. So loyalty was a joy and stimulus to Paul. Their home was a glad meeting-place for believers, a privilege which many provided, as there were no recognized buildings for worship like we have today. We can therefore understand why the home of a leader had to be such as becomes one who is a believer and witness for Christ (I Tim. iii. 2-6).

Verse 5. Epenetus was a valued friend and was the first convert to Christ in Asia (not Achaia A.V.).

Verse 6. Mary, who bestowed much labour, or worked hard. She was a devoted worker who did not spare herself. Mary was a common name, and there are six mentioned in the N.T. We have no means of knowing who she was.

Verse 7. Andronicus and Junia. Paul's reference to them as "my kinsmen" may mean no more than that they were Jewish Christians. They had evidently shared one of the Apostle's frequent imprisonments, but it is impossible to say which one. They were "of note among the apostles", which probably means they were apostles themselves and outstanding ones among the others.

Verse 8. Amplias was an abbreviated form of Ampliatus. He was dear to the Apostle.

Verse 9. Urbanus and Stachys. Urbanus means "belonging to the city (urbs)", a common name in Rome, whereas Stachys (literally an "ear" of grain) was uncommon.

Verse 10. Apelles had the commendation that his Christian profession had stood the test. He was a genuine and faithful believer. Aristobulus, again, is unknown to us.

Verse 11. Herodion, my kinsman, may mean he was a relative, or no more than a Jewish believer as in verse 7. The household of Narcissus—Calvin and others identify him with Tiberius Claudius. Narcissus, a wealthy freedman of the Emperor Tiberius.

Verse 12. Tryphena and Tryphosa, possibly were twin sisters. Their names are derived from the same root. They were hard workers, like Mary of verse 6. Persis (means Persian woman) possibly a freedwoman. The name appears on Greek and Latin inscriptions.

Verse 13. Rufus (meaning red, or red-haired). Again, he was an outstanding Christian. A Rufus is mentioned in Mark xv. 21 as one of the sons of Simon of Cyrene. The name may be mentioned here for identification only as he has no part in Mark's Gospel. As to when the mother of Rufus "mothered" Paul we have no means of knowing, but her affectionate care of him was precious to the Apostle.

Verse 14. This verse contains names of persons also unknown to us. Hermes and Patrobas are abbreviations of longer names. Hermes was the god of good luck and this name was very common among slaves.

Verse 15. Philologus and Julia are probably man and wife. Nereus was possibly a freedman of Nero. Olympas is an abbreviated form of Olympiadorus.

Paul now exhorts them to greet one another with a holy kiss. This became a feature of Christian fellowship (see I Cor. xvi. 20; II Cor. xiii. 12; I Thess. v. 26; I Pet. v. 14) and answers to the handshake of greeting today.

One important name is absent from the list, and that is Peter. If he was leading the church at Rome at this time it would be unthinkable for Paul to miss him out.

All the churches under Paul's leadership sent their greetings. At this point the greetings break off and four serious verses of admonition follow. Some scholars regard them as an interpolation, but this is not necessary. As Dr. C. K. Barrett states, "Such parenthetical remarks are in Paul's style. They may reflect additional information brought to him before the letter was completed" (The Epistle to the Romans, p.284).

> "I urge you, brothers, to watch out for those who cause divisions and put obstacles in your way that are contrary to the teaching you have learned. Keep away from them. For such people are not serving our Lord Christ, but their own appetites. By smooth talk and flattery they deceive the minds of naïve people. Everyone has heard about your obedience, so I am full of joy over you; but I want you to be wise about what is good, and innocent about what is evil" (xvi. 17-19, N.I.V.).

The Lord creates unities (Eph. iv. 1-6, 13, 16); the devil seeks to break them and cause friction and division among the people of God. The course of church history has made this abundantly clear. These trouble-makers should be avoided, declares the Apostle. They were probably the same as the evil workers he denounces in Phil. iii. 18 who were tainted with incipient gnosticism and possibly preoccupation with food laws, rather than gluttony. But Paul reiterates his confidence in the Roman Christians (xvi. 19) and assures them that the Lord would give them victory over Satan and his works:

> "The God of peace will soon crush Satan under your feet" (xvi. 20, N.I.V.).

This is surely an allusion to Gen. iii. 15 where God declares that the seed of the woman will bruise the serpent's head and the fact that it could be "soon" shows that this was linked with the imminence of the Lord's Second Coming which is stressed in all the epistles written during the Acts period, as we have seen. The Apostle is looking forward to that glorious coming which would mean victory for His people and defeat for Satan and all his hosts.

Paul then gives his usual reference to the grace of God with which he finishes all his epistles (verse 20). He now resumes the greetings that were broken off in verses 17-20 and gives the names of those believers who were with him.

> "Timothy, my fellow-worker, sends his greetings to you, as do Lucius, Jason and Sosipater, my relatives" (xvi. 21).

The epistles make perfectly clear Paul's special relationship with his son in the faith, Timothy. Jason: This could possibly be the Jason who gave hospitality to Paul on his first visit to Thessalonica (Acts xvii. 6, 7, 9). Sosipater is probably Sopater of Berea, who, according to Acts xx. 4 (R.V.) was with Paul at this time. Then comes a reference to the amanuensis who had written this letter, namely Tertius:

> "I, Tertius, who wrote down this letter, greet you in the Lord" (xvi. 22).

The Apostle regularly employed amanuenses for the writing of his letters, but Tertius is the only one whose name is given in the N.T. He was a believer and was evidently glad to include his greeting with the others. Lucius may be the Lucius of Cyrene (Acts.xiii.1). On the other hand there are some expositors who think this is Luke, the writer of the Gospel and the Acts, who frequently accompanied Paul on his travels. The Apostle certainly refers to Luke in Col. iv. 14, Philemon 24, and II Tim. iv. 11, and in these references calls him Lucas (Loukas), but this spelling can be an equivalent to Lucius. The matter must be left undecided.

Gaius seems to be the Titius Justus of Acts xviii. 7 who gave hospitality to Paul and the church members of Corinth who were expelled from the synagogue next door. Erastus was the city treasurer of Corinth who had evidently been touched by the truth of the gospel preached by Paul.

The doxology of verses 25-27 which follows bristles with difficulties:

> "Now unto Him Who hath power to establish you, according to my glad message—even the proclamation of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of a sacred secret in age-past times kept silent, but now made manifest, and through means of prophetic scriptures, according to the command of the age-abiding God, for obedience of faith unto all the nations made known" (J. B. Rotherham).

Many translations insert the definite article before the word "mystery", or secret, but it is not in the original. The addition of the article creates a problem, for it makes the phrase parallel with Eph. iii. & Col. i., and appears to be a reference to the great "mystery" revealed in those two epistles. But neither of them had been written when Romans was composed, and therefore the revelation of the secret concerning the Body of Christ, and Christ's headship in relation to it, had not yet been made known.

Some get over the difficulty by the suggestion that this doxology was added at a later date by Paul after he had written Ephesians and Colossians. This was put forward by John B. Lightfoot in his Biblical Essays. But after the Mystery had been revealed, what need was there to add this doxology to the epistle to the Romans, and that in an enigmatic way which does not reveal the details of this great Secret? Just what purpose would this serve? We should note that the time elements concerning the secret of Rom. xvi. do not agree with Ephesians and Colossians. In Romans the secret was hushed in age times, whereas in the prison epistles the secret was hidden from the ages and generations (Col.i.26) and related to a period "before the age times" (Titus i. 2; II Tim. i. 9). This hidden subject had "its own season" of manifestation, which manifestation was through "preaching" and "according to a commandment" (Titus i. 3). This manifestation is now in this present age of grace.

Paul was a steward of the mysteries (secrets) of God (I Cor. iv. 1), some of which were made known through his ministry during the Acts, like the secret of Israel's blindness (Rom. xi. 25) and the instantaneous change of the believer in resurrection (I.Cor.xv.51,52), so there is no need to try to fit the later revelation of Eph.iii. & Col.iii. into Rom.xvi.

What is the meaning of "prophetic writings"? We should bear in mind that a prophet was not confined to revealing future events. He was a forth-teller as well as being a foreteller. This phrase must not be confined to such books as Daniel or the Revelation. There is a sense in which all the Scripture can be classed as prophetic writings, making known the mind and will of God (II Pet. i. 20, 21). As there were N.T. prophets as well as O.T. ones, the title "prophetic writings" could be applied to the New Testament as well as the Old Testament.

Let us state what the mystery of Rom. xvi. cannot mean. (1) It cannot refer to the gospel of grace and salvation for this was never hidden, but made known "by His prophets in the holy Scriptures" (Rom. i. 2), i.e. the O.T. (2) It cannot refer to the blessing of the Gentile with the Jew, for this likewise had been revealed in the O.T., namely that "all families of the earth" should be blessed through Abraham's seed (Gen.xii.1-3). It must refer to truth not previously revealed.

There are those who look on the doxology of Rom. xvi. as superfluous to the epistle as a whole. But the structure of the epistle is defective without it (see Vol. LI, p.83).

The doxology balances chapter i.:

Rom. i. 1 - 17	Rom. xvi. 25 – 27
The gospel of God . . . concerning His Son Jesus Christ our Lord, promised afore by prophets in the holy Scriptures.	The preaching of Jesus Christ, kept silent in age times, now made known through prophetic writings.
Grace . . . from God our Father	Praise to the eternal and only wise God
To the end ye may be established	To Him Who is able to establish you
The power of God unto salvation	To Him Who is of power
Righteousness revealed . . . as it is written	Revelation of a mystery Scriptures, the prophets

Professor F. F. Bruce says:

> "there is in the doxology a recognizable echo of dominant themes of the opening salutation; in particular the mention of the scriptures of the prophets recalls 'which He had promised afore by His prophets in the holy Scriptures' and make known to all nations 'for the obedience of faith' is practically a repetition of 'for obedience of faith among all nations' (1:5). This rounding off of the epistle on the same note as was struck at its commencement suggests the author himself" (Epistle to the Romans, p.282).

We come back to our original question, what is this secret, hushed since age-times commenced, but now made known through prophetic writings? The answer must be made from the Scriptures themselves and we believe the best explanation is given by Charles H. Welch in his exposition, Just and the Justifier. He writes:

> "The mystery of Rom. xvi. is not said to be related to a period 'before age-times', but 'silenced in age-times'. This theme is the secret of the central section of Romans (chapters v.-viii.) and its subject is Adam, not Abraham; man, not Israel or Gentile; the law of sin, not the law of Sinai; the dominion of sin and death, not the domination of Canaanites or Babel."

He points out that:

> "the period covered by the Scriptures from Gen. xii. - Matt. i. is as long as that covered by Gen. i .3 - xi. If Israel should finally fall and fail, the prophets had nothing to tell us of how God would cope with the resulting problem. It is accordingly the purpose of the central section of Romans (chapter v.-viii.) to reveal the relationship of man, as such (i.e. neither Jew nor Gentile) to Adam and to Christ, irrespective of the promises made to the fathers, and the failure or success of the chosen people (Israel). But this is not the theme of the O.T. prophecy in general . . . . . much important truth latent in Gen.i.-xi. was 'hushed' until the time to speak had arrived . . . . . in that small space of eleven chapters is written all that can be known of the first 2,000 years of this present creation. What is written is pregnant with truth, but it must await its appointed time, and just as the gospel itself revealed teaching hidden in O.T. Scriptures . . . . . so these early chapters of Genesis hold much basic teaching, throwing light on the position of the believer who is saved and justified without reference to the law of Moses" (Just and the Justifier, pp.350-352).

Once again we point out the secret of Romans xvi. was silenced in age-times. Part of the divine purpose which relates to the highest heavens concerns a period "before age-times" (Titus i. 2; II Tim. i. 9). This concerns the great mystery or secret of the prison epistles of Paul which was hidden "from the ages" and "from the generations (of people)" (Col. i. 26) and is linked to a divine purpose "before the foundation of the world" (Eph. i. 3, 4). Rom. xvi. refers to a mystery (secret) not related to a period "before age-times" but silenced "in age-times". This secret is the theme of the central chapters of Romans (v.-viii.), and its subject is Adam, not Abraham; man, not Israelite or Gentile; the law of sin, not the law of Sinai; the domination of sin and death, not the domination of the Canaanites, the Egyptians or Babel.

When the apostle Paul was inspired by God to write the epistle to the Romans, the prophetic writings, which for generations held their secret, began to speak. The fact that Rom. xvi. was for "the obedience of faith to all nations" links it with Rom. i. 5 and establishes the unity of God's purpose.

The final doxology is given in verse 27 (R.V.):

> "To the only wise God, through Jesus Christ, to Whom be the glory for ever Amen."

The glory must finally be the Lord's, not that of any created being. As we come to the end of this wonderful epistle, let us constantly praise and thank the Lord for the heights and depths of truth revealed in it. Let us hold fast to its teaching, for it is absolutely fundamental to the Christian faith, and it also gives the foundation for the glorious truth of the Mystery (secret) to be revealed later in Eph. iii. and Col. i.

The N.T. warns us that at the end of the age there will be a great departure from the truth of God (Matt. xxiv. 11, 12; II Tim. iv. 1-4). This will not affect or mislead those who are grounded and constantly cling to the teaching of Romans.

To God be all the praise and glory.

The Book of RUTH

No.4. Summary.
pp. 13 - 18

The tiny Book of Ruth so clearly illustrates how a forfeited inheritance can be redeemed by the next of kin; that only the nearest kinsman (redeemer) can do this, and that it involves perpetuating the dead man's name in Israel. The question that arises in our minds is "how does that affect you and I?" The answer to that is that redemption can only be understood when we come to know two things:--

(1) the nature of sin
(2) the character of God.

When Adam and Eve disobeyed God's command and ate of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, they had to be prevented from eating of the tree of life, for if they did do this, they would be preserved in their sinful state. So a guard was set upon it, and they were expelled from the garden, and God's plan for their redemption was put into effect. Sin had entered His perfect creation, and man could no longer communicate direct with his creator.

We see therefore that sin separated man from God, and involved the forfeiture of an inheritance. As the result of Adam and Eve's sin God's creation was affected, the ground was cursed, and the sentence of death was pronounced.

In the provision of clothes for the fallen man and woman an animal was slain. So through the shed blood of that sacrifice God provided protection and covering, and this indicates to us at the very beginning His plan and His purpose for the salvation of mankind.

In the Book of Ruth, we find that only the kinsman-redeemer, the next of kin, had the right to redeem and to raise up an inheritance in Israel. In Isaiah however, we read of this title "Kinsman-Redeemer" used of Jehovah Himself.

> "Fear not, thou worm Jacob, and ye men of Israel; I will help thee, saith the Lord, and thy redeemer, the Holy One of Israel" (Isa. xli. 14).
>
> "Thus saith the Lord, your redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; For your sake I have sent to Babylon, and have brought down all their nobles, and the Chaldeans, whose cry is in the ships" (Isa. xliii. 14).
>
> "Thus saith the Lord the King of Israel, and his redeemer the Lord of hosts; I am the first, and I am the last; and beside me there is no God" (Isa. xliv. 6).

When we remember that the same Hebrew word "GAAL" means not only redeemer, but also "the kinsman who has the right to redeem", these titles become doubly important. If Jehovah, the Creator, the God of the whole earth is to be also the Kinsman-Redeemer of the sons of Adam, then God Himself must become man.

As we would expect, in Scripture the prophet that gives these titles and creates this problem, also supplies the answer.

In Isa. vii. 14, we find both brought together in the wonderful name "Immanuel"—"God with us". This amazing prophecy was fulfilled as we read in Matt. i. 18-25. When Jesus was born Immanuel came. Hundreds of years before His birth Isaiah records in ix. 6:--

> "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given . . . His name shall be called . . . The mighty God."

John writes in the first verse of chapter i. in his gospel ". . . . . The Word was God" and in verse 14, "The Word became flesh". That is just what God has done.

Paul says in his letter to the Galatians ". . . . . when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made unto law, to redeem . . . . ." (iv. 4, 5). In Phil. ii. 5-8, Paul tells us that this divine kinsman emptied Himself of His divine attributes and condescended to take upon Himself the outward fashion of a man in order to give His life and shed His blood as the One offering for sin for ever, and so make salvation possible for the human race. God loved the world like this, "He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16).

Boaz not only redeemed the forfeited inheritance, he married Ruth. Our security for ever is that we are not only redeemed by His precious blood, but made one with Himself. So we see the wondrous theme of resurrection implied in this Book, and that Boaz became a type looking forward to the blessed Person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ.

As Psa. xlix. 7-9 tells us no man can redeem his brother from the bondage of sin and realize his forfeited inheritance, that he should live for ever. Our salvation and resurrection necessitated the coming of the Lamb of God, Who alone could take away the sin of the world.

Having by faith accepted God's offer of salvation, in newness of life, and sealed by His Spirit, the redeemed are reinstated, the adoption is realized, the inheritance secured, the bondage removed, and the way made clear for the outworking of the original purpose of God.

It is the Book of Ruth that illustrates this amazing grace so beautifully. The Book itself is so small, and the words just a record of a seemingly charming romance. Yet beneath its surface revealing to us the loving condescension of our God in the Provision of His Son, Who came born of a woman, and so flesh and blood, to become our Kinsman-Redeemer. In the Lord Jesus Christ alone we have salvation and resurrection life.

To the believing Jews Paul writes his letter to the Hebrews endeavouring to strengthen their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. He has to contend against the bitter hatred of the bigoted religious leaders of the nation who strenuously opposed the claims made both by the Lord Himself, and by the words and actions of the apostles during that period covered by the Book of the Acts. In Heb. ii. 15, 16 Paul quotes from Psa. viii. showing that the One Who came as Jesus of Nazareth took upon Himself human flesh in order to destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

> "For verily He took not on Him the nature of angels; but He took on Him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behoved Him to be made like unto His brethren, that He might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succour them that are tempted" (Heb. ii. 16-18).

Here was One Who was infinitely greater than angels, yet Who willingly condescended to be made lower than the angels for the suffering of death. Angels have no blood, and it was necessary that blood should be offered, that is, death, for the salvation of mankind. Redemption which is God's way of getting rid of all barriers between Himself and us, could be made possible no other way. All the offerings and sacrifices of the animals that were without blemish as worship, look forward to the One Offering made by the Lord Jesus Christ, when He came to lay down His Life for His friends, made like the children of flesh and blood; made like unto His brethren, His object in coming the first time was to deal with sins. To make a propitiation for the sins of mankind, that God might have mercy upon the descendants of Adam and wipe out, obliterate for ever, that which separated Himself from His creation. So the glorious hope of resurrection was made possible, and our salvation and life with Him made absolutely secure.

In the Book of Ruth we saw that it was the eldest brother who had the right to redeem the inheritance and marry Ruth. The firstborn son, the heir, the one who occupies the position of privilege and responsibility; so in Scripture he holds a unique position.

Israel was the Lord's son, even His firstborn. In Egypt, God warned Pharaoh that if he would not let His people go, He would slay Pharaoh's first-born son.

The passover lamb was not selected "for sin", but "a lamb for a house", and if the household were too small to be represented in this way, they were to join with another. The house was not connected with death. "There was not a house where there was not one dead" (Exod. xii. 30), which was as true of Israel as of Egypt. The difference was that in Israel's home the lamb died instead of the firstborn son.

So we see that the passover lamb really sets forth the Kinsman-Redeemer, the great firstborn Son, the Lamb of God. ". . . . . Joseph being raised from sleep did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife: and knew her not till she had brought forth her firstborn son . . . . ." (Matt. i. 24, 25). John writes concerning this amazing birth, "In this manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent His only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through Him" (I John iv. 9). But see who This One was in the beginning, This One Who came as our Redeemer: Col. i. 14-17 tells us He was "the firstborn of every creature". This title of Christ must not be misunderstood however. It does not mean that Christ was the first of all created beings, for we go on to read "for by Him were all things created". In verse 17 we read "And He is before all things, and by Him all things consist (or hang together)". There is nothing untidy about the cosmos, everything moves in an orderly fashion and is absolutely ship-shape. This preposition translated "before" is the Greek 'pro' and indicates priority of position or dignity—"that in all things He might have the pre-eminence".

The fact that Christ is the Creator of all things is stated many times in the N.T. It was not the Father, but the Son. When we say "all things", it is well to remember that He did not create anything evil, poisonous or mis-shapen. These became so after creation, and were the direct result of sin. We also understand that He assumed a shape in order to create, for we read that man was made "in our image, after our likeness". This fact is borne out in John i. and Heb. i.

We know too, that He assumed human form in order to redeem. Through the death of His Son, when His blood had been shed all who by faith accept Him as Saviour, become a redeemed people. Redemption goes back beyond our own personal sins to the one sin of Adam that involved us all in death. In the Scriptures the first ray of hope for sinful man is found in Gen. iii. After Satan had beguiled the woman in the garden, the Lord God said in pronouncing his ultimate destruction, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it (i.e. Christ, the seed of the woman) shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel" (verse 15).

This prophecy foretells the temporary sufferings of Christ, but His final victory. Christ has come and suffered. Satan's overthrow awaits fulfillment.

Incredible as it may seem to us, the Hebrew word "GAAL" which is translated so many times by the word "kinsman-redeemer", has also another meaning and office. It also means "avenger", and we find it so used in connection with the cities of refuge. These havens of safety were provided by the Lord Himself, for the nation of Israel when they entered Canaan, and were given as a means of escaping from retribution from the next of kin. They could not be used by the cold blooded killer, but only when the killing was unintentional, an accident, an act that was not premeditated. This man it was who could find safety in one of these cities; but the murderer "shall be surely put to death" (Numb. xxxv. 31).

One aspect of the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ was that "He might destroy him that had the power of death . . . . . and deliver them . . . . . to bondage" (Heb. ii. 14, 15). The double office of the Saviour is again suggested in Isa. lxiii. 4, ". . . . . the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come".

In I John iii. 8 ". . . . . the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil". In Heb. ii. 14 the devil himself is said to be destroyed by the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

In Paul's letter to the Colossians, chapter ii. verse 15 the avenger is clearly seen:

> "And having spoiled principalities and powers, He made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it (i.e. His cross at Calvary)."

Evidently therefore we must understand that by that very same cross some were "reconciled", and some were 'spoiled'.

> "For it pleased the Father that in Him should all fullness dwell; and, having made peace through the blood of His cross, by Him to reconcile all things unto Himself; by Him, I say, whether they be things on earth, or things in heaven. And you, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath He reconciled in the body of His flesh through death, to present you holy and unblameable and unreproveable in His sight" (Col. i. 19-22).

The O.T. type most definitely reveals to us that the Kinsman-Redeemer could not be avenged upon those who were redeemed by him, neither could he redeem those who were the objects of his wrath.

> "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire" (Rev. xx. 15).

So Christ fulfills both aspects of the Kinsman-Redeemer, just as the name of the dead was raised up and perpetuated in Israel, so all who look to Him for salvation shall be raised up in resurrection glory.

Boaz not only redeemed the forfeited inheritance, he married Ruth. Our security for ever is that we are not only redeemed by His precious blood, but made one with Himself.

The Book of Ruth helps us to understand more fully just what Christ has done, and sheds light on many references to the glorious things that Christ has done as The Kinsman-Redeemer.

In Eph. i. 13, 14, we read ". . . . . in Whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of His glory".

The Greek word used for "the purchased possession" is also used to translate two Hebrew words in the O.T. whose meanings include "recover", "a peculiar treasure", "a peculiar people", "beyond the ordinary", "an acquisition". Mr. Charles Welch points out that in no one instance is Israel promised that they shall inherit a peculiar treasure, an acquisition; they are told they will be taken by the Lord for His peculiar treasure, His acquisition, a special people unto Himself. The blessing is to be on the earth.

Regarding the church that is the body of Christ, however, we read that the sphere of blessing is "in the heavenlies", that is in the glory where Christ now sits. Of this company of believers Paul writes in Eph. i. 1, "in Whom also we have obtained an inheritance", which could be more accurately translated by "in Whom we have been taken by God for His inheritance". What a unique and blessed position this church occupies in the purposes of God! We can only with wonder humbly praise Him, and pray for strength and wisdom to walk worthily of such a blessed hope.

I SAMUEL

No.1. Introduction and i. 1 - 20
pp. 32 - 40

The book of Ruth establishes a link between the days of the Judges in Israel and the days of David. The opening book of Samuel begins with the days of the Judges, and ends with the death of Saul, preparatory to the anointing of David as king in the opening chapters of the second book of Samuel.

The books of Samuel, Kings and Chronicles form a complete whole, and were apparently written by Samuel, Gad and Nathan (I Chron. xxix. 29, 30). It is evident the prophets often wrote the history of their own times, for we read, "Then Samuel told the people the manner of the kingdom and wrote it in a book, and laid it up before the Lord" (I Sam. x. 25).

The prophet Gad first appears in association with David when he had escaped to the cave Adullam, and warns David not to stay in the hold but to depart into the land of Judah (I Sam. xxii. 1-5). In I Chron. xxi. 9 he is called "David's seer".

Nathan also was closely associated with David, and continued on into the days of Solomon (II Chron. ix. 29).

A seer was an earlier name for prophet, as we see in I Sam ix. 9. The Hebrew word for 'prophet' means "one who spoke for, or was moved by God", or "God's mouthpiece". In The Companion Bible under the heading "The First Book of Samuel", we read "otherwise called 'The First Book of Kings'.". Under the heading "The Second Book of Samuel" we read "otherwise called 'The Second Book of Kings'.". For I & II Kings Dr. Bullinger states "commonly called the 3rd and 4th Book of the Kings". The reason for this is because the book that we now call I & II Samuel were always reckoned by the Hebrew as one Book. They were first divided and treated as two by the Septuagint translators of the O.T. Scriptures in the B.C. 3rd century. This sub-division has been followed ever since.

Scrolls were probably more or less equal in length. As Greek writing required at least a third more space than Hebrew, one scroll was filled up and another necessary long before the 55 chapters of I & II Samuel had been completed. That there was originally no break between the two books is evident from the Sedarim, i.e. the divisions or portions laid down for public reading. In the original, which was one long book, there were 34 Sedarim, and the 20th begins with I Sam. xxx. 25, and ends with II Sam. ii. 6, without showing the slightest break. Exactly the same thing applies to the book of Kings.

As to the purpose of these records, we are assured that beyond the mere preservation of the historical facts, there was a more important intention served. Peter, speaking of the rejection of Christ by the nation of Israel at His first coming, and of His offer of forgiveness and willingness to return again provided they repented (i.e. changed their minds concerning Him), and were converted (i.e. turned again to Him) in Acts iii., refers to the testimony of the prophets and says "Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days" (Acts iii. 24).

So these Books in the O.T. Scriptures are not put into God's Word for their historical interest. They are vital to an understanding of the N.T. They foretell (and those that have eyes to see, and hearts to understand) the coming of Israel's mighty Deliverer, their Messiah, God's Anointed One. Guided by the Spirit of God they wrote down, to their utter dismay, that this Coming One would be afflicted and slain. That He would offer Himself as the one sin-offering for all mankind, that all might be saved from the penalty of sin and death. That in the end He would come in power and majesty and set up His Kingdom on the earth in the city of Zion.

The message that Peter and the other disciples proclaimed in Jerusalem in Acts ii., iii. and iv. was that this Deliverer had come. That Jesus Christ of Nazareth, the man they had crucified, whom God has raised from the dead, would return if they repented of their wickedness and believed in Him as their risen and glorious Saviour.

As we now know, the Jewish people rejected the message of the disciples, even as they rejected Jesus of Nazareth Himself as their Deliverer when He came among them fulfilling all the signs and wonders foretold by the prophets. Every sabbath day the O.T. prophets were read to the Jewish people in their synagogues. The doctors of the law who were the religious leaders of the day were steeped in these books. Yet they failed to heed the words of both Christ Himself and Peter and the other apostles. Their eyes were blind and their hearts were hard: they refused even the second opportunity God offered them to accept the One Who came and fulfilled all the O.T. prophecies that they were supposed to know so well.

So temporarily they became set aside at the close of the Book of Acts, and will be until they do acknowledge the Lord Jesus Christ as their Messiah. We, today, are living in this dispensation of Grace, this interim period, and have the opportunity of accepting by faith, not an inheritance on the earth, but one "far above all", as members of that church which is the Body of Christ.

In several ways Samuel stands to David as John the Baptist does to the Lord. Both the mothers of Samuel and John were naturally barren and waited a long time before their sons were born. Samuel was dedicated as a Nazarite all his days (I Sam. i. 11), while of John it was said "He shall drink neither wine nor strong drink" (Luke i. 15). Samuel anointed David as king, while the special office of John the Baptist was to testify at the baptism of the Lord at Jordan that the Messiah, Israel's King, had come. Samuel was rejected by the people, while John similarly "decreased" until his final death in prison.

Hannah's song at the birth of Samuel is strikingly similar to the song of Zacharias at the birth of John (I Sam. ii. 1-10; Luke i. 67). Of Samuel it is written: "And the child Samuel grew before the Lord" (I Sam. ii. 21). Of John: "And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit" (Luke i. 80).

As Samuel was the last of the judges and the first of the prophets, so John was the last of the prophets and the first of the disciples. There is a notable similarity indeed between these two great men of God.

From the period commencing with the death of Eli related in the early chapters of the first book of Samuel, for more than 800 years the prophetic order continued an enduring public power among the people of Israel. The prophet acted as the mediating agency between God and His own peculiar people and nation. He was the organ of the Spirit of the Lord, His mouthpiece during the whole period of the monarchy, the captivities, and right up to the coming of the Son of God, the Messiah Himself.

It was not the high priest, as perhaps one would have thought, would be the most likely medium for the Lord to choose; though there were individual members of the priesthood during certain periods who faithfully fulfilled their office.

Turning now to the 1st Book of Samuel, and commencing at verse 1, we have here an account of the state of the family into which Samuel was born. His father's name was Elkanah, a Levite, of the family of Kohath, the son of Levi, the son of Jacob. The name means "acquired by God", perhaps indicating the position of a firstborn son (see Numbers iii. 11-13).

Elkanah is recorded as dwelling in the city of Ramathaim-zophim. The name Ramathaim means literally "the double Ramah", the old city and the new being built side by side—a dual city. The word zophim means "watchmen", so possibly the old city was built on two hills, and watch-towers built on them would enable the citizens to guard against surprise attacks by their foes. Ramah lay among the mountains of Ephraim which extended into the territory of Benjamin, in which tribe the city lay.

In verse 2 we read the Elkanah had two wives, Hannah and Peninnah. It was God's original ordination that a man should have one wife: Gen. ii. 24 makes that clear. The first man who violated this command was Lamech, the son of Cain (Gen. iv. 19). This practice apparently had spread throughout the East, and while in the Mosaic Law polygamy was accepted, it was never approved. The inspired writer in this narrative of the home life of Elkanah, quietly shows up the curse which almost invariably attended this miserable violation of the relations of home life to which in the days of Eden God had given marriage His sanction and blessing.

Hannah signifies "grace, or favour", and together with its abbreviation "Anna" has ever been a favourite name among the women of the East.

Peninnah signifies "pearl" or "coral", and we have adopted the same name in our language—Margaret.

It is evident from verse 3 that they were a devout family. The yearly pilgrimage to the Tabernacle of the Lord would be the celebration of the Feast of Unleavened Bread, the Passover. It was the great national day of remembrance of the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, the land of bondage, by their God, Jehovah. There were comparatively few at that time who honoured the name of the Lord like Elkanah. Many of the rulers and priests openly ignored their God, and worshipped idols, so the people fell away and worshipped the gods of the heathen nations around them.

It is interesting to note that here, for the first time in Scripture, we read the title "the Lord of hosts", Jehovah Sabaoth. It occurs some 260 times in the O.T., but only once in the New in the epistle of James. It is a glorious title: Isaiah uses it about 60 times and Jeremiah about 80. The implication is that Jehovah was the God of all the hosts on earth and in the heavens. What a tremendous inspiration this would be to the few and feeble host of Israel when their enemies were strong and powerful. It would be a great encouragement to know their God to be the Eternal One, Whose sovereign power extended over all men, angels, sun, moon, and stars, the earth, and the heavens themselves. The Lord of Hosts: what a mighty title that Name implies!

Shiloh was the sacred city in Ephraim where Joshua had the Tabernacle pitched when he took possession of the land of Canaan. It would be considered the safest place, and protected by the mightiest tribe. The priests, the tribe of Levi, lived here, and Israel should have obeyed the command of the Lord to come up yearly to worship and to sacrifice. Few did at this time, but Elkanah remained faithful to his God. Whatever others did or did not do, his resolution was that he and his household should obey and serve the Lord. So this pilgrimage to Shiloh was made every year.

Eli was the High Priest at this time, and his two sons Hophni and Phinehas were among the priests. Both were notoriously evil men, debasing the high office they held and a prime cause of the indifference of the children of Israel towards Jehovah during this period of their history. Eli must have suffered terribly because of the conduct of these sinful sons of his. His efforts to correct them fell on heedless ears, and serves to illustrates the terrible state of corruption into which the priesthood had fallen.

Outwardly Elkanah's household was quiet and orderly, yet it was a divided family, and the divisions within it carried with them both guilt and grief. The two wives were bitterly opposed to each other. Peninnah, like Leah the wife of Jacob, had many children, but she was always very much the second wife and the less beloved. Hannah, like Rachel, was childless, but she was very dear to Elkanah, and he let her and others know that she was held so in his regard. Because of her advantage, Peninnah grew haughty and insolent; Hannah, on the other hand, melancholy and discontented. Elkanah did all he could to raise Hannah's spirits under her affliction. He invariably served her the choicest portion on feast days; but it was an unhappy household.

After one of these sacrificial meals, Hannah left the table and went alone into the courtyard of the Tabernacle, and in great bitterness of spirit she prayed that the Lord might give her a son, and we read that she "vowed a vow". This vow contained two solemn promises. One pledged the son she prayed for to the service of God all the days of his life; the second undertook that he should be a Nazarite. A Nazarite was committed to undertake three things: (1) Never to take intoxicating drink. (2) Never to cut his hair. (3) To avoid all ceremonial defilement by corpses, even of the nearest of kin.

These restrictions and customs had an inner significance among the nation of Israel. The abstinence from intoxicating drink typified that the Nazarite determined to avoid all sensual indulgence which might cloud the mind, and so render him unfit for prayer or work for the Lord. The untouched hair, unlike today, was an outward symbol that the consecrated one had determined to give up the pleasures of the world, and to devote himself wholly to the service of the Jehovah. The avoiding of contact with the dead was a public avowal of all moral defilement and indicated that a Nazarite gave up everything which could stain or soil the life dedicated to the covenant God of Israel.

Hannah had left the sacrificial Passover meal alone and sought the sanctuary of the Tabernacle courtyard. It is very likely that she was the only one that had come to pray there, for as we have said already, few in Israel were faithful to Jehovah at that time. The high priest, Eli, was very old, and sat on his chair of state overlooking the whole of the precincts. His eyesight was fading, and as he watched this young woman he became convinced that she was intoxicated: that she had, as so many would do that day, taken too much wine at the table and abused the celebration of the feast that commemorated God's deliverance of the people from the bondage of Egypt.

So Hannah prayed, and mingled tears with her petition. It was indeed an earnest prayer that really came from her heart. She was unconscious of anyone around her, concentrated as she was in expressing the one great desire that filled her thoughts day after day. This intensity of prayer is illustrated again in the N.T. by the example of Epaphras, a fellow-prisoner with Paul at Rome, who apparently was greatly convinced about the group of believers at Colosse. The apostle Paul writes in Col. iv. 12:

> "Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God."

"Fervently" brings before us "an urgent, burning desire for": the exact opposite of "being half-hearted" or "luke-warm". God must have looked with favour upon the intensity of spirit of Epaphras as he prayed, especially as they were words that sought blessing for others and not himself.

Prayer must be sincere and fervent. We must avoid repetitions and hurriedly gabbled phrases. The Lord Jesus taught his disciples to avoid outward show and pretence and in Matt. vi. 6, 7 said to them:

> "When you pray, go into your room, close the door and pray to your Father, Who is unseen. Then your Father, who sees what is done in secret, will reward you. And when you pray, do not keep on babbling like pagans, for they think they will be heard because of their many words. Do not be like them, for your Father knows what you need before you ask Him" (N.I.V.).

The apostle Paul writing to the Thessalonians exhorted them to "Pray without ceasing" (I Thess. v. 17). We should not misunderstand him and think, as some do, that it is necessary to shut oneself up in prayer and meditation all day long. What he meant was that we should be constantly lifting our hearts to Him in thanks or praise, or in any matter that arises during the course of the day.

It is also essential for us to remember concerning prayer that the Spirit helps our infirmity (that is, our weakness, or inability), for we do not know what we should pray for as we ought, but the Spirit Himself makes intercession for us (see Rom. viii. 26). The next verse goes on to say "And He that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because He maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God". How reassuring it is to know that our prayers are monitored by the Holy Spirit, so that they become acceptable to our heavenly Father, and used by Him in the furtherance of His own will.

In Hannah's case, the old priest was wrong. His eyes deceived him, for she was praying, as we are exhorted to do, with her whole heart. Her entire being mouthed the words of her petition, but her feelings were so intense that no sound was audible. The words were choked by her emotion and her earnest desire.

Hannah's prayer was for a son. Her husband Elkanah, a good and kindly man, had taken another wife because of her inability to have children. The second wife, Peninnah, had borne him sons and daughters and as a result continually showed her scorn and contempt for Hannah, particularly at the time when they went up to the house of the Lord year by year, and Hannah's prayers had once again received no answer:

> "And her adversary also provoked her sore, for to make her fret, because the Lord had shut up her womb. And as he did so year by year, when she went up to the house of the Lord, so she provoked her; therefore she wept, and did not eat" (I Sam. i. 6, 7).

In reply to the accusation of Eli that she was drunk with wine, Hannah responds pitifully:

> "No, my lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit: I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink, but have poured out my soul before the Lord. Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial: for out of the abundance of my complaint and grief have I spoken hitherto" (i. 15, 16).

Eli's reply to this must have been very reassuring. She must have felt that the blessing of the Lord's high priest would give her at last the answer to her prayers, for we read in verses 17 and 18:

> "Then Eli answered and said, Go in peace: and the God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of Him. And she said, Let thine handmaid find grace in thy sight. So the woman went her way, and did eat, and her countenance was no more sad."

The character of Eli is a deeply interesting one. Weak and over-indulgent as a father, a lover of ease rather than action perhaps. Yet we catch a glimpse of a noble streak in him, sterling patriotism, a devotion to Jehovah, real generosity, and a touching gentleness. These qualities light up not a little a life that ended in failure and disaster. Here, the old man is quick to understand that he had been insulting a blameless woman. He at once retracts his cruel accusation, and silently accuses himself and his unjust thoughts and words in his gracious words of blessing. As we have seen, Eli's benediction evidently reassured her that her prayers would be answered, and she went away with a strange peace in her heart willing to leave her affliction in the hands of the Lord.

In verse 19 we read "and the Lord remembered her; wherefore it came to pass, when the time was come about that Hannah had conceived, that she bare a son, and called his name Samuel, Because I have asked him of the Lord" (-19, 20). We should pause here and reflect that the Lord does not always answer prayer immediately, even if it is in line with His own will. For reasons of His own, and doubtless for our own good as well, we are made to wait until the right time comes along. It is only then that fullness of blessing follows.

So Hannah's fervent prayers were answered and she at last bears a son. She and Elkanah must have been overjoyed. At last her reproach had been taken away, no longer would she have to bear the scorn and derision so long poured upon her by Peninnah. In the midst of her happiness, however, she did not forget the One Who had made it all possible, and so she gives her son the name Samuel. Some say this means "Asked of God", others "Heard of God": perhaps both are true for without asking there can be no hearing. Whichever is correct, however, the choice of Hannah would remind her every time she used it of the gracious mercy of her God. Not only that, the boy himself, and later when he became a man, would be perpetually reminded that he had been given by the Lord and dedicated to the Lord.

No.2. i. 21 - ii. 3.
pp. 53 - 58

In verses 21 and 22 we read:

> "And the man Elkanah, and all his house, went up to offer unto the Lord the yearly sacrifice, and his vow. But Hannah went not up; for she said unto her husband, I will not go up until the child be weaned, and then I will bring him, that he may appear before the Lord, and there abide for ever" (I Sam. i. 21, 22).

The age of Samuel which was taken to be the fulfillment of this vow varies considerably according to Hebrew scholars. Some say the weaning of a son in Israel went on until he was three years of age. Others say that the weaning here is "weaning from childish things", which would have meant Hannah waiting until he was about twelve (12) years of age. From verse 24, however, it would appear that Hannah brought Samuel to the Tabernacle when he was still a young child, and thus probably about three years old:

> "And when she had weaned him, she took him up with her, with three bullocks, and one ephah of flour, and a bottle of wine, and brought him unto the house of the Lord in Shiloh: and the child was young."

He was now to be brought up with the children of the priests to serve in the sanctuary, as Hannah had promised. Three bullocks were said to have been brought by the mother at the presentation of Samuel. The LXX reads "a calf of three years old". Dr. E. W. Bullinger refers back to Gen. xv. 9, where God makes the covenant with Abraham concerning his descendants and the land, and commands him to "take an heifer of three years old". On the other hand some scholars say that one bullock would have been the burnt offering by which the child would have been consecrated to the Lord, and the other two the yearly festival offerings brought at the time of the Passover. Whichever is true the fact remains that Hannah offered her son as a living sacrifice to the Lord through the shed blood of that one offering according to the law. Today we have no need for an animal sacrifice, but can offer ourselves in service to our heavenly Father through the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ which is far more effective and acceptable.

The narrative continues in chapter i. as follows:

> "And they slew a bullock, and brought the child to Eli. And she said, O my lord, as thy soul liveth, my lord, I am the woman that stood by thee here, praying unto the Lord. For this child I prayed; and the Lord hath given me my petition which I asked of Him: therefore also I have lent him to the Lord; as long as he liveth he shall be lent to the Lord" (I Sam. i. 25-28).

Hannah here in a wonderful acknowledgement of God's gracious answer to her prayer resigns the son that was given her. No tears, no mention of the hard tussle that must have gone on in her heart in having to part now from the son she had so long awaited. Hannah is a shining example of one who kept her word, no matter what the cost. The promise that was wrung from her heart was faithfully fulfilled. It certainly needed courage and resolution of a high degree to bring the son she cherished to Shiloh, and to leave him behind. All true service to the Lord must at some stage involve some degree of sacrifice like this.

The word 'lent' in verse 28 is not a true translation of the original text. It is the same Hebrew word which is used in verse 20, where we read, "Because I have asked him of the Lord", and also in verse 27 "the Lord hath given me my petition which I asked of Him". The sense of this passage would be "The Lord gave him to me, and now I have returned him whom I obtained by prayer, as one asked". The only other occurrence where this word is translated 'lent' in Scripture is Exod. xii. 36:

> "And the Lord gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they lent unto them such things as they required. And they spoiled the Egyptians."

Here, once again, it does not mean that the Egyptians loaned the Israelites their jewels and clothes, for they could never hope to have them returned. The Israelites 'asked' and the Egyptians gladly gave them: they pressed them even upon their one time slaves in their anxiety to be rid of them. So Hannah gladly surrendered the boy she had prayed for into the service of the Lord, and surely this is the spirit in which all true service and sacrifice should be offered to our great God and Heavenly Father. Not in a spirit of resignation or martyrdom, but in a spirit of joy which should characterize all our walk and witness. Whatever we give to God has first been received from Him, and gladsome giving is surely the moral of this story.

Chapter i. closes with the following words:

> "And he (i.e. Samuel) worshipped the Lord there" (I Sam. i. 28).

The child played his part beyond that which could have been expected from one so young. He was no doubt exceedingly forward for one of his years. Hannah would have trained him up most carefully and instructed him for what was to be his life's work. Among the Proverbs written for Solomon we find the words "Train up a child in the way he should go: (i.e. in the beginning of his way. Spurgeon applied it 'in the way you wish you had gone yourself') and when he is old, he will not depart from it" (Prov. xxii. 6). In Samuel's case this was indeed so, though not, alas, in Solomon's. God has given to each one of us the freedom of choice. None of us are puppets. But once we make the first step—He comes to meet us.

In the first epistle written by John we find the wonderful words:

> "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent His only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through Him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins" (I John iv. 9, 10).

The word 'propitiation' takes us back to Paul's letter to the Romans, chapter iii., verses 23-26, where we read:

> "For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God. To declare, I say, at this time His righteousness: that He might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus."

The same Greek word for 'propitiation' is used in the Septuagint translation of the O.T. where we find the word 'mercy seat'. In the Tabernacle the 'mercy seat' was found in the Holy of Holies. In Exod. xxv., we read God's instructions to Moses concerning the making of the Tabernacle and its furniture. In verse 17 he was told to make a mercy-seat of pure gold. Unlike the ark of wood which was overlaid with gold; it had to be of pure gold. It had to be made in one piece together with the cherubims with their wings stretched forth on high covering the mercy seat, and with their faces turned inwards. In verse 22 we read these amazing words:

> "And there I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy-seat, from between the two cherubims . . . . ." (Exod. xxv. 22).

What divine condescension is made known to us here. That the Almighty God should desire to meet with and commune with His earthly people Israel: this is beyond our comprehension.

The Hebrew word used for mercy seat is kapporeth, which is derived from the word kaphar, always translated "to make atonement". Atonement is an essential part of the great sacrificial work of Christ. The meeting place, a beautiful symbol of the result of atonement, contains within itself the ideas of entrance, access, and acceptance. God spoke to Moses, and Moses spoke to God before the blood-sprinkled mercy seat.

Through the shed blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, which He offered on Calvary's Cross, He has made possible to all who trust in Him a Meeting Place, so that we, sinners though we are, may not only speak with God but may one day live in His presence. The N.I.V. translates Rom. iii. 25 "God presented Him (the Lord Jesus Christ) as a sacrifice of atonement, through faith in His blood". Propitiation—i.e. mercy on the grounds of a sacrifice. What a God! What a Saviour! Surely we, like Samuel, must worship the Lord Who has done such great things for us.

Chapter ii.

Hannah and Elkanah had brought their son, Samuel, probably about three years of age, to the Tabernacle at Shiloh, and given him into the care of Eli the high priest. This is what Hannah had promised to do. She had kept her word and here in chapter ii. we have recorded her prayer, or rather her song of thanksgiving for the gift of her son. It is, however, not only a hymn of praise, but also a prediction of the preservation and blessing of all in Israel who remain faithful to their God, and the destruction ultimately of all His, and their enemies. It closes with a prophetic reference to the glory of the coming Messiah, the Anointed One, the Christ.

The chapter opens with the words: "And Hannah prayed . . . . .". It is rather a song of thanksgiving, dictated not only by the spirit of prayer, but by the spirit of prophecy. While its origin is the birth of Samuel, its burden is prophetic. She had returned to Shiloh to fulfil the promise she had made, and to give thanks for the mercy God had bestowed upon her in giving her a son. Unlike the nine lepers who were healed (Luke xvii. 12-17) and promptly forgot the One Who had made them whole, Hannah remembered. Thanksgiving is surely an essential part of prayer when we lift up our hearts to our heavenly Father.

Verse 1 of chapter ii. continues "My heart rejoiceth in the Lord, mine horn is exalted in the Lord". The trumpet, or the horn, was blown by the priests on the Day of Atonement in the Jubilee year of the Jewish calendar. Does the word 'horn' here refer to this, or could it be a reference to the strength and protection afforded, as by the horns of animals?

In the prayer or thanksgiving made by Zacharias after the birth of John the Baptist, which has much in common with Hannah's hymn of praise, he speaks of "the horn of salvation in the house of His servant David". This expression can only refer to the Lord Jesus Christ, David's greater Son. In fact, at the end of Hannah's prayer she speaks prophetically (under the direct inspiration of the Holy Spirit) of the glory of the coming Messiah (verse 10). The prophet Ezekiel says "In that day will I cause the horn of the house of Israel to bud forth . . . . . and they shall know that I am the Lord" (xxix. 21). Hezekiah in Psa. cxxxii. writes "There (in Zion) will I make the horn of David to bud: I have ordained a lamp for Mine Anointed" (verse 17). The Lord was of the house and lineage of David, and these four occurrences of the word 'horn' refer to Him; so we know exactly what Hannah meant when we read the words "mine horn is exalted in the Lord". Surely we understand her to say, "my spirit is lifted up—because I rejoice in the salvation of the Lord".

We come now to verse 2 where she speaks of the supreme holiness of Jehovah:

> "There is none holy as the Lord: for there is none beside Thee: Neither is there any rock like our God."

Here we have the peerless Being of unparalleled perfection. Not only is there none like Him, but there is also none beside Him. All others are pretenders. This is the One Who Isaiah saw in the year that the leprous king Uzziah died, and heard the seraphims cry, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of His glory" (vi. 3).

> "Neither is there any Rock like our God" (I Sam. ii. 2).

It was a favourite simile among the inspired song-writers of Israel. The image, doubtless, is a memory of the long desert wandering; the steep precipices, and the strange, menacing, fantastic rocks of Sinai towering up in the midst of the shifting sands. This supplied an ever present picture of unchangeableness, of majesty, of security, and strength.

The title of the "Rock" as applied to Jehovah is first found in the book of Deuteronomy. The song of Moses recorded in chapter xxxii. just before his death on the very boundary of the promised land speaks of Jehovah as the "Rock" six times. It was the command of God that every child was to be taught this song in every family in Israel. Hannah, therefore, would know it well.

It is a good thing to learn portions of Scripture by heart. They can be a source of infinite comfort and joy, no matter where one may be. Enforced idleness can be enriched and turned into a period of profit as some of the amazing passages of Scripture which have been memorized are quietly turned over in the mind. We all have a song we can sing to the Lord, for all can say, "I rejoice in Thy salvation".

> "Talk no more so exceedingly proudly; let not arrogancy come out of your mouth: for the Lord is a God of knowledge, and by Him actions are weighed" (I Sam. ii. 3).

Was Hannah here referring to Peninnah, who had so cruelly humbled her, and maligned her so maliciously before Samuel was born? Or is she speaking to the people of Israel, who had forsaken their God and turned away from Him to worship, against His express command, the gods of wood and stone that the heathen nations around them bowed down to? She could, of course, be thinking about those idolatrous enemies of Israel who continually raided the tribes of Israel in Canaan, and kept them in a state of subjection and fear. The iron heel of the Philistines was hard pressed on the people at this particular time.

No.3. ii. -3 - ii. 10.
pp. 73 - 80

The phrase in the latter half of this verse which reads "for the Lord is a God of knowledge" actually reads in the Hebrew "A God of knowledge is the Lord". The Talmud somewhat quaintly remarks, "Knowledge is of great price for it is placed between the two Divine Names".

Speaking of Israel's enemies, Isaiah says:

> ". . . . . for it is a people of no understanding: therefore He that made them will not have mercy upon them, and He that formed them will shew them no favour" (Isa. xxvii. 11).

In other words, they had a knowledge of God, but did not acknowledge Him in their hearts and lives. Knowledge can be a head affair obtained from books, but if it does not lead on to action it remains abortive. True knowledge affects the heart. The apostle Paul, writing from his prison in Rome to the Ephesian believers, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus, prays for them, "that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of Glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him . . . . ." (i. 17). The word 'knowledge' here is not the Greek noun gnosis, which is the usual word for the knowledge which is acquired by learning, effort, or experience. It has the prefix epi attached, epignosis, which implies "the acknowledgement" of Him.

Paul leaves us in no doubt as to what this acknowledgement meant to him. He had suffered the loss of all things he once held dear. The traditions of his fathers, of his race. He was an Israelite, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews, a Pharisee who would go to any length to obey, and to see that others obeyed, the tenets of that faith. But he gave them all up, and why?—"that I might win Christ, and be found in Him" (Phil. iii. 8, 9). This is the meaning of "acknowledgement". It is the canceling out of self, and the enthronement of the Lord Jesus Christ in heart and life. Moreover, this was the secret of Paul's strength: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me" (Phil. iv. 13).

We now come to the next part of I Sam. ii. 3:

> "For a God of knowledge is the Lord (literal), and by Him actions are weighed."

To weigh is to consider, with a view to the choice of rejection or preferment. To estimate relative values. To balance in the scales. Job, in seeking to justify himself, cried:

> "If I have walked in ways of falsity, or if my foot has hasted to deceit; then let Him weigh me in just balances, and let Eloah know my blamelessness" (Job xxxi. 5, 6, The Companion Bible).

But later on Job repented of these arrogant words, and confessed:

> "Lo! I am vile! What shall I answer Thee? Rather, I lay my hand upon my mouth . . . I abhor myself. In dust and ashes I repent" (Job xl. 4 & xlii. 6, The Companion Bible).

When Job finally came to know himself, and to acknowledge that all the ways of God were just and true, he then received a double portion. Truly, by Him (the Lord) actions are weighed.

In Dan. v., the mighty king Belshazzar gave a huge feast, and had brought into his palace the sacred vessels of gold which Nebuchadnezzar, his grandfather, had plundered from the Temple in Jerusalem. He wanted to use them as drinking vessels for himself and his guests. Immediately after he had done so, the king saw the fingers of a hand write on the wall, "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin", Chaldee words for "Numbered, Weighed, Divided (or Split, or Broken)". Completely shattered and unnerved, Daniel was sent for and asked to explain. God gave Daniel the key to this riddle, and he boldly gave the interpretation: "God has numbered your kingdom and it is finished. You are weighed in the balances and found wanting. Your kingdom will be given to the Medes and Persians" (Dan. v. 25-28). Just as when you or I go shopping and expect to receive 16 oz. to the pound (or grams to the kilo now), so does a righteous and just God expect the same. From those to whom much has been given, more is expected than those who have not received so much.

In Prov. xvi. 2 we read: "All the ways of a man are clean in his own eyes; but the Lord weigheth the spirits (Hebrew ruach, mind)". He not only weighs our actions, but also our thinking. In other words he weighs the thinking or reasoning behind those actions.

We come now to verse 4 of I Sam. ii.:

> "The bows of the mighty men are broken, and they that stumbled are girded with strength."

Here we see that God reverses human conditions, bringing low the proud and wicked, and raising up the righteous. One ancient writer quotes this verse as follows:

> "Every power which will be something in itself is destroyed by the Lord. Every weakness which despairs of itself is transformed into power."

The bow at this time was the symbol of human power. While therefore the power of these mighty ones is shattered, the weak and puny ones are by Him made strong. Israel's history was an abundant illustration of these words, both before and after they were uttered. A typical David and Goliath saga. So the Psalmist sang at a later date:

> "Their sword shall enter into their own heart, and their bows shall be broken . . . . . for the arms of the wicked shall be broken: but the Lord upholdeth the righteous" (Psalm xxxvii. 15, 17).
> "He breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; He burneth the chariot in the fire. Be still, and know that I am God" (Psa. xlvi. 9, 10).

Verses 5 to 8 of I Samuel ii. speak of the manner in which the Lord reverses the estate and condition of men, despite all their endeavours. The poor man can be raised up overnight to sit among princes, while the riches of another disappear overnight. Luke.xii.16-21 is an example of this: the rich man with much abundance of wealth said to himself, "This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater", but God has the final word:

> "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided? So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God" (Luke xii. 20, 21).

Here, in Hannah's hymn of praise, the Lord is dealing with earthly riches. On the other hand the apostle Paul, as the prisoner of Christ for we Gentiles, in his letter addressed to the Ephesians, speaks of riches that are not earthly, but heavenly; of the "glory of the inheritance" which is to be seated with Christ at the right hand of God in heavenly places (Eph. i. 18-20; ii. 6). Is there anything this world can offer us today that can compare with such riches, remembering that He Who was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through His poverty might become rich. Moreover, from Eph. ii. 7 we learn that it is His intention to shew "the exceeding riches of His grace in His kindness toward us through Christ Jesus". These riches can never be earned or worked for, for they are beyond price:

> "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast" (Eph. ii. 8 & 9).

Incredibly as it may seem, they are the gift of God to His children that are members of that church which is the Body of Christ. No wonder the apostle Paul prays:

> "That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge (acknowledgement) of Him: the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of His calling, and what the riches of His inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of His power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of His mighty power, which He wrought in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at His own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come" (Eph. i. 17-21), and again in chapter iii.:

> "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that He would grant you, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and > height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God" (Eph. iii. 14-19).

Let us make these prayers of Paul our own, believing that God will answer them so that we too, like Hannah, will burst out in a hymn of praise and thanksgiving for His amazing love and grace.

Returning again to I Sam. ii. 5 we read:

> "So that the barren hath born seven; and she that hath many children is waxed feeble."

Hannah here is evidently referring to her own experience. She mentions the number "seven", which is the perfect number in Scripture. It will be remembered that in the last chapter of Ruth, after she had borne a son, the friends of Naomi said to her "your daughter-in-law who loves you, who is better to you than seven sons . . . . .". This is an evident comparison in perfection. The number "seven" will be found to represent the perfect work of God right throughout the Scriptures, from Genesis to Revelation.

Hannah actually had five more children., three sons and two daughters (chapter ii. 21), so the sacrifice that she made when she gave Samuel up to the service of the Lord was richly rewarded. Tradition says Hannah bore one child, Peninnah buried two, but there is no evidence that this is true.

In verses 6, 7 and 8 Hannah sings of the enemies of the Lord being silenced. She also brings out His sovereign power over life, death and resurrection:

> "He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes."

We find these words repeated in Psa. cxiii. 7, 8. This is one of the three "hallelujah" Psalms that commence with "Praise ye the Lord" (Psa. cxi., cxii. & cxiii.). Psa. cxiii., together with Psa. cxiv. were always sung before the Passover meal, and as a result must have been very well known throughout the whole of the nation of Israel. They bring to mind men such as Joseph; sold as a slave and imprisoned in Egypt, yet suddenly raised to be the equal with Pharaoh in the greatest nation on earth at that time. Daniel was another, taken into captivity, yet raised by the great king Nebuchadnezzar to be second only to himself throughout the dominion of his mighty empire of Babylon. David, a shepherd boy, taken from his flocks and herds to be the deliverer of his people Israel, and to become their powerful king. These illustrate the truth of the words of Hannah's song of praise, "He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory".

We have a much better illustration, however, close to home in our own day; described for us by the apostle Paul in Eph. ii. We, as Gentiles, were outcasts in the flesh, children of disobedience (verse 2), children of wrath (verse 3), without Christ, aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise. Having no hope, and without God in the world (verse 12). Literally written off and lying in the dust. But now, made nigh by the blood of Christ (verse 13), and believing in the glorious hope have been sealed with the holy Spirit of promise (chapter i.), and reckoned to be buried, quickened, raised, and seated together with Him in the glory at the right hand of God. A most remarkable and glorious transition indeed!

Hannah's song continues in verse 9, "He will keep the feet of His saints . . . . .". We are reminded of similar words in David's song, after the Lord had delivered him out of the hand of Saul, and out of the hand of the Philistines:

> "God is my strength and power: and He maketh my way perfect. He maketh my feet like hinds' feet . . . . . Thou hast enlarged my steps under me; so that my feet did not slip" (II Sam. xxii. 33, 34, 37).

The Psalms have many references to the feet of saints:

> "Mine eyes are ever toward the Lord; for He shall pluck my feet out of the net" (Psalm xxv. 15).

Another Psalm of David reads:

> "(Thou) hast not shut me up into the hand of the enemy: Thou hast set my feet in a large room" (Psa. xxxi. 8).

The setting of feet "in a large room" is quaint English in our A.V. The Septuagint reads "Thou hast set my feet in a wide place" which illustrates better the greater freedom of movement enjoyed by David when delivered by the Lord from his enemies.

We constantly need to be reminded of the words of Asaph in his Psalm, i.e. lxxiii., where he reflects on the prosperity of the wicked, of their corrupt words, oppression and violence, yet they themselves do not seem to be troubled. He says in verse 2:

> "As for me, my feet were almost gone; my steps had well-nigh slipped, for I was envious at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked" (Psa. lxxiii. 2, 3).

These thoughts were too painful for him, until he went into the presence of the Lord:

> "When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me; until I went into the sanctuary of God; then understood I their end. Surely thou didst set them in slippery places" (lxxiii. 16-18).

In verses 22 to 24 Asaph acknowledges his foolishness and now can rejoice that the Lord is holding him by his right hand, guiding his steps to glory:

> "So foolish was I, and ignorant: I was as a beast before Thee. Nevertheless I am continually with Thee: Thou hast holden me by my right hand. Thou shalt guide me with Thy counsel, and afterward receive me into glory."

It would be negligent to finish this thought without a reference to Psa. cxix. 105:

> "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."

It is His Word that shines light upon our dark pathway here. It gives counsel and guidance. It points the way and 'rightly divides' our paths for us. It assures us that all enemies of righteousness, all evil powers both earthly and heavenly, worldly and spiritual, will be put under the feet of the Lord Jesus Christ and destroyed. Conversely, He will keep the feet of His saints and guide them into paths that are right paths. He will lift them up into a wide place and walk hand in hand with us, always at our side. Though our flesh and heart may sometimes fail, yet like Asaph we may say, ". . . . . but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever" (lxxiii. 26).

Hannah finishes her song with the prophetic words:

> "The adversaries of the Lord shall be broken to pieces; out of heaven shall He thunder upon them: the Lord shall judge the ends of the earth; and He shall give strength unto His King, and exalt the horn of His Anointed" (I Sam. ii. 10).

This is the first time that we read in the O.T. of "His King" and "His Anointed". The Greek translation of the Hebrew O.T., the Septuagint (LXX) reads for Anointed, "Christos", which is Christ. We can say then that this verse is Messianic in character, for it speaks of the glory that will come upon the earth when the Lord Jesus Christ returns a second time, this time to rule as King. In this verse those who would oppose Him are called "the adversaries of the Lord". These, we read, "shall be broken in pieces; out of heaven shall He thunder upon them: the Lord shall judge the ends of the earth". David's victories and dominions reached far, but "the uttermost parts of the earth" are promised to David's greater Son, the Messiah. Men will either rejoice to acknowledge Him as King, or will be destroyed by His iron rod. God will "exalt the horn of His Anointed". Every knee to Him shall bow:

> "I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto Me, Thou art My Son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of Me, and I shall give Thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for Thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; Thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Be wise therefore, O ye kings, be instructed, ye judges of the earth. Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest He be angry, when His wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him" (Psa. ii. 7-12).

Eleven centuries later Mary and Zacharias praise God, and prophesy under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. The link with Hannah's song of praise is unmistakeable. Mary sings:

> "His mercy is on them that fear Him (i.e. God my Saviour, verse 47) from generation to generation. He hath showed strength with His arm; He hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts. He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree. He hath filled the hungry with good things; and the rich He hath sent empty away" (Luke i. 50-53).

In the same chapter Zacharias at the birth of his son John, praises the Lord, saying:

> "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for He hath visited and redeemed His people, and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of His servant David; as He spake by the mouth of His holy prophets, which have been since the world began; that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us, to perform the > mercy promised to our fathers . . . . . that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies might serve Him without fear" (Luke i. 68-74).

It is not surprising, therefore, that Hannah takes her place alongside Mary and Zacharias. All three sing similar songs of praise and triumph at the birth of their sons, Samuel, the Lord Jesus, and John the Baptist. The theme of their songs centres around Mary's Son, Who has already faithfully fulfilled the O.T. prophecies of Redemption in His crucifixion, death, burial, resurrection and ascension. When He comes to the earth the second time it will be in power and majesty to fulfil the remainder of these songs in His triumph as King of kings, Lord of lords.

No.4. ii. 11 - 25.
pp. 95 - 99

Hannah and Elkanah, having left their son Samuel with Eli at the door of the Tabernacle in Shiloh, returned to their home at Ramah. We read in verse 11, "the child did minister unto the Lord before Eli the priest". Again in verse 18, "But Samuel ministered before the Lord, being a child, girded with a linen ephod". The ephod was one of the sacred garments that the Lord had commanded Moses to make, which Aaron (and his successors) were to wear when they performed the service of the Lord in His Tabernacle. The linen ephod that Samuel was allowed to wear was but a simple replica, but it was a visible sign that though Samuel was but a child, he was dedicated to the Lord's service. Undoubtedly Eli arranged this, and it is evident that he took a keen personal interest in the lad and kept him close to himself.

Elkanah's faithfulness in presenting himself and his household every year at Shiloh to commemorate the Passover feast now had an added incentive. Together with Hannah they would see their son:

> "Moreover his mother made him a little coat, and brought it to him from year to year, when she came up with her husband to offer the yearly sacrifice" (I Sam. ii. 19).

How natural it was that Samuel's mother would ensure that the boy had the clothes he needed. These little human touches recorded in the Scriptures are often very moving, and show that we do not have a God that is concerned with great things of this world only, but also of those little things which affect our comfort, welfare, or protection.

The sacrifice and devotion of Hannah were evidently rewarded, for we read in verse 21:

> "And the Lord visited Hannah, so that she conceived, and bare three sons and two daughters. And the child Samuel grew before the Lord."

The meaning of the words "And the child Samuel grew before the Lord" is made clear in verse 26, "And the child Samuel grew on, and was in favour both with the Lord, and also with men". When Luke the apostle writes of the youth and boyhood of the Lord Jesus, he uses almost identical words:

> "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man" (Luke.ii.52)

It is evident that Eli realized that Samuel was destined for some great work in connection with the people of Israel, and that the Lord intended to use him in His service. In contrast to this boy was the baseness of his own two sons, Hophni and Phinehas. These must have been a tragedy to the saintly old man. Brought up in the shadow of the Sanctuary, to be the successors to their father in the position of high priest, instead of being honoured they are called "sons of Belial" (ii. 12). The word Belial simply means "worthlessness", and does not signify either Satan or any pagan deity. It is used 9 times in I & II Samuel, but only 7 times in the remainder of the O.T., and once only in the N.T. by the apostle Paul in II Cor. vi. 15. "They knew not the Lord" cryptically sums up the condition of these two who, as priests of God, should have been the ministers of His holy law to the people.

Unbelievers base the conduct of their lives according to the dictates of their hearts. Some are good and some are bad. Some have strong sense of duty to society, others have none. Unrelieved by the light of the knowledge of the love and grace of God, some seek mental relief through good works. Others through selfish indulgence, and this was the course taken by Hophni and Phinehas. Despite their godly rearing and education, and the exalted position they came to occupy as sons of the high priest, it would have been expected that the atmosphere of the Tabernacle would have permeated their being and seeped into their hearts and minds. On the contrary, they used their sacred office merely as affording an opportunity for selfish extortions; their unbelief was the source of their moral worthlessness.

These two were evil men indeed, who basely abused the high office they held and the privileges they were entitled to under God's generous provision as commanded by Moses. Hophni and Phinehas, not satisfied with the share of the peace offerings to which they were entitled, robbed the officers and seized for themselves some of the part of the sacrifice that belonged to the offerers:

> "And the priests' custom with the people was, that, when any man offered sacrifice, the priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a fleshhook of three teeth in his hand; and he struck it into the pan, or kettle, or cauldron, or pot; all that the fleshhook brought up the priest took for himself. So they did in Shiloh unto all the Israelites that came hither" (I Sam. ii. 13, 14).

The priests were allowed by the Law to keep the "wave breast", that is, the portion of the breast of the animal that was waved before the Lord. It was waved to the four quarters of the compass. The right shoulder of the sacrifice, called the "heave shoulder" was also lifted up to Jehovah. Both these portions were the legitimate rights of the priests. Not content with this, these two men sent their servants to demand more, both before and after the offerings had been made. Such was the veneration of the people who came to worship and observe the feast days, that they allowed this extortion to become a custom:

> "Also before they burnt the fat, the priest's servant came, and said to the man that sacrificed, Give flesh to roast for the priest; for he will not have sodden flesh of thee, but raw. And if the man said unto him, Let them not fail to burn the fat presently, and then take as much as thy soul desireth; then he would answer him, Nay; but thou shalt give it me now; and if not, I will take it by force. Wherefore the sin of the young men was very great before the Lord: for men abhorred the offering of the Lord" (ii. 15-17).

Evidently Hophni and Phinehas went further, and stepped in before God Himself by demanding a cut from the carcass of the animal (which included the fat) before the sacrifice was offered to the Lord. This was a direct affront to Jehovah, for His express command given to Moses was that the priest should offer all the fat upon the altar. In fact we find in Leviticus, chapter vii., that the Lord said the fat was holy to Himself alone, and if any ate of it—that person would be cut off from Israel.

To the honour of those that came up to the Tabernacle to worship on the feast days, it would appear they only agreed to do this under protest, and endeavoured to ensure that Jehovah would not be robbed. We read in I Sam. ii. 16, "Let them (i.e. Hophni and Phinehas) not fail to burn the fat presently". They knew that unless God had the fat, they could feast with little comfort upon the flesh. In cases where the worshipper raised an objection, the demands of the priests were made by force. There could not be a greater insult to God, nor abuse of the people, and we read in verse 17:

> "Wherefore the sin of the young men was very great before the Lord: for men abhorred the offering of the Lord."

So the life of the nation became corrupted at its heart. Worship was brought into disrepute through the conduct of its leading ministers. Was it likely that piety, justice, and purity would be honoured and loved in the land of Israel when the whole ritual of the sacrifices was openly scoffed at and made a mockery in the great Sanctuary by the chief priests themselves?

Inevitably their lives became evil, and they took advantage of their position among the women that came to the Tabernacle, and so immorality follows in the footsteps of their greed in desecrating their high office. Eli at lasts stirs himself to rebuke them:

> "And he said unto them, Why do ye such things? for I hear of your evil dealings by all this people. Nay, my sons; for it is no good report that I hear: ye make the Lord's people to transgress. If one man sin against another, the judge shall judge him: but if a man sin against the Lord, who shall intreat for him? Notwithstanding they hearkened not unto the voice of their father, because the Lord would slay them" (ii. 23-25).

The book of Proverbs should be noted here:

> "Correction is grievous unto him that forsaketh the way: and he that hateth reproof shall die. Hell and destruction are before the Lord: how much more then the hearts of the children of men? A scorner loveth not one that reproveth him: neither will he go unto the wise" (Prov. xv. 10-12).

There are transgressions which may receive pardon and divine forgiveness again and again, but there comes a time when this may be withheld.

In Matt. xii. 23-25 we have the sin that can never be forgiven. After healing one who was possessed of a demon, blind and dumb, we read the people were amazed and said, "Is not this the Son of David?". When the Pharisees heard this they scornfully replied "This fellow casts out demons by Beelzebub, the prince of demons". Here is a sin that can never receive the Lord's forgiveness. Blasphemy, impious or evil speaking, even against the Son of Man, Yes, but against the Holy Spirit, No:

> "Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come" (Matt. xii. 31, 32).

One cannot help feeling that the reprimand of Eli was not severe enough. The blasphemy of his sons demanded drastic action, but instead of that his mild and gentle censure fell on unheeding ears. Instead of saying "it is no good report that I hear", something like "It is a shameful, scandalous behaviour, and not to be tolerated" that may have had some effect and caused a change of heart. Alas, the censure fell on deaf ears: their unbelieving hearts were unrepentant, and so no shame was felt.

Discipline is vital in every family, community, and nation, if crime and vice are to be kept in check. There is no doubt that discipline is necessary for each one of us if we are to order our lives in some measure of harmony and smoothness. We see lack of discipline all around us today and there seems little doubt that this is the cause of the fearful conditions of which the apostle Paul wrote in his second letter to Timothy:

> "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away" (II Tim. iii. 1-5).

In his epistle to the Hebrews, chapter xii., Paul speaks of the "chastening", or disciplining, needful not only for sons from their earthly fathers, but also for believers as sons from their heavenly Father. If our feet need to be channeled into a right path by our earthly father, how much more is it necessary that our heavenly Father should do likewise for us in the matter of the heavenly and eternal things. May the Lord give us grace to accept such chastening.

In direct contrast to the unbelieving, self-seeking, and undisciplined sons of Eli, Samuel's faith and faithfulness is introduced:

> "And the child Samuel grew on, and was in favour both with the Lord, and also with men" (I Sam. ii. 26).

This child was the direct opposite to these priests. As the petals of a flower unfold in the rays of the sun, so the heart of this boy absorbed the spirit of the Lord. As the years passed, so he grew in knowledge and in grace, so that all who came up to Shiloh to worship became aware that he was indeed a child of God.

Suddenly, there appears at Shiloh a messenger who delivers his message and disappears from the record. Of this messenger we know nothing, except that from his special title "a man of God", and also from the character of his communication, we must regard as one of the prophets:

> "And there came a man of God unto Eli, and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Did I plainly appear unto the house of thy father, when they were in Egypt in Pharaoh's house? And did I choose him out of all the tribes of Israel to be My priest, to offer upon Mine altar, to burn incense, to wear an ephod before Me? And did I give unto the house of thy father all the offerings made by fire of the children of Israel? Wherefore kick ye at My sacrifice and at Mine offering, which I have commanded in My habitation; and honourest thy sons above Me, to make yourselves fat with the chiefest of all the offerings of Israel My people" (ii. 27-29).

The term "man of God" was given to Moses first, who was undoubtedly the greatest of all the prophets of the O.T. In Deut. xviii. he speaks of himself as a type of that great Prophet that was to come, the Messiah, in the amazing words:

> "I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put My words in His mouth; and He shall speak unto them all that I shall command Him" (Deut. xviii. 18).

This "man of God" as the spokesman for God came to Eli because he had failed in his duties as father, judge and priest. He had been slack and careless, and over-indulgent. Eli was descended from Aaron, the first high priest, through the fourth son Ithamar, and his sons should have carried on the privileges and responsibilities of their father Eli's exalted position. The words "Wherefore kick ye at My sacrifice and at Mine offering" are a reminder of the song of Moses in Deut. xxxii., where we read the ominous words:

> "But Jeshurun (the 'Upright One'—the ideal Israel as the chosen of God) waxed fat, and kicked . . . . . then he forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation" (Deut. xxxii. 15).

The figure is one drawn from the pastoral life of the people; one they could well understand. The ox, or the ass, overfed, pampered and indulged, becomes unmanageable, and refuses obedience even to his master. Verse 29 then goes on to reveal that Eli bore an equal responsibility with his sons in this matter:

> "Why do you honour your sons more than Me by fattening yourselves on the choice parts of every offering made by My people Israel" (I Sam. ii. 29, N.I.V.).

The messenger from God to Eli then continues:

> "Wherefore the Lord God of Israel saith, I said indeed that thy house and the house of thy father, should walk before Me for ever: but now the Lord saith, Be it far from Me; for them that honour Me I will honour, and they that despise Me shall be lightly esteemed" (ii. 30).

This is surely true of every dispensation. If the Lord by His Spirit has opened our eyes to those spiritual blessings that are in heavenly places (Eph. i. 3; ii. 6), and we lightly esteem them, are we likely to receive His commendation? It is only those who seek to honour Him by searching His Word and trying by His help to walk worthily of the truth that will receive His "well done" in that day.

From what we read about Eli it seems inconceivable, however, that this God-fearing old man shared in the illicit wealth that his sons accumulated by their extortionate demands from those who came up to Shiloh to worship. On the other hand, he must have been aware of what they were doing and his fault lay in his weakness in allowing it to continue. So in verses 31 to 34 God's judgment falls:

> "Behold, the days come, that I will cut off thine arm, and the arm of thy father's house, that there shall not be an old man in thine house. And thou shalt see an enemy in My habitation, in all the wealth which God shall give Israel: and there shall not be an old man in thine house for ever . . . . . and this shall be a sign unto thee, that shall come upon thy two sons, on Hophni and Phinehas; in one day they shall die both of them."

So "the arm" that signifies "power and strength" will be cut off. His descendants would die at an early age, and Eli would see "an enemy in My habitation", or literally, "you shall see the affliction (or distress) of the Tabernacle My dwelling place". As the Psalmist records:

> "He . . . . . greatly abhorred Israel: so that He forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh, the tent which He placed among men; and delivered His strength into captivity, and His glory into the enemy's hand" (Psa. lxxviii. 59-61).

Hophni and Phinehas, Eli's two sons, were to be cut off, both of them in one day. This would be the evidence to Eli that the sons of his descendants would die in the flower of their youth. Thus none would become eminent in Israel. A certain Bishop Patrick records that a great while after this, certain Jewish historians wrote of a family in Jerusalem, none of whom commonly lived over 18 years of age. Upon search being made it was discovered that they were descended from the house of Eli. The literal fulfillment of the death of Hophni and Phinehas, and the capture of the sacred Ark of the holiest of all confirms the Lord's judgment upon Eli and his two sons.

> "And I will raise Me up a faithful priest, that shall do according to that which is in Mine heart and in My mind: and I will build him a sure house; and he shall walk before Mine Anointed for ever" (I Sam. ii. 35).

Here is the rainbow shining through the clouds. Here is salvation and hope. Jehovah will raise up a faithful priest. Because Samuel, though a Levite, was not of the sons of Aaron, some commentators say this could not refer to him. Yet, after Eli's death and the capture of the Ark of the Lord by the Philistines, when the regular exercise of the Levitical ritual was suspended, Samuel for a long period stood as mediator between Jehovah and His people. In sacrifice, prayer and intercession, he carried out the duties of the priesthood. He certainly walked before the Lord's anointed King. This prophecy, then, surely relates to Samuel, and there can be little doubt that Eli recognized this too.

The prediction "I will build him a sure house" did not come to pass in Samuel's own sons, Vashni (also known as Joel) and Abiah. It did, however, in Vashni's son Heman. He became "the king's seer in the words of God" and was placed by king David over the instrumentalists and choir in the house of God (I Chron. vi. 28, 33; xv. 17, 19; xvi. 41, 42; xxv. 1, 5). He certainly became an eminent man in Israel, and had fourteen sons and three daughters (I Chron. xxv. 5). God's promises never fail. It gives assurance for us today that the promises made by God to the apostle Paul as the prisoner of the Lord for we Gentiles will likewise be fulfilled:

> "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of sons by Jesus Christ to Himself, according to the good pleasure of His will . . . . . Having made known unto us the secret of His will according to His good pleasure which He hath purposed in Himself . . . . . In Whom we have been taken for His inheritance, being predestinated (foreordained) according to the purpose of Him Who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will" (Eph. i. 5-11).

No wonder Paul could exclaim, "Everything I once held dear in the traditions of the fathers of Israel, I count as nothing, in order that I might win Christ, and be found in Him: not having my own righteousness, but His". To "win Christ", and be "found in Him", should surely be the aim of all of us who walk this pilgrimage journey, day by day.

We now come to chapter iii. of I Samuel:

> "And the child Samuel ministered unto the Lord before Eli. And the word of the Lord was precious (rare) in those day; there was no open vision" (iii. 1).

It is evident that Eli watched over Samuel with a tender, watchful care. He would keep him away from his two sons and their evil companions. Samuel would surely have benefited much from the loving care, wisdom, and experience freely given him by Eli, whose own sons had spurned his advice and not heeded his warnings. Josephus tells us that Samuel had reached the age of twelve by this time. If this is so it is worthy of note, for it was at the age which the child Jesus disputed with the doctors of the law in the Temple of Jerusalem (see Luke ii.). It was at this age that every Jewish boy became "a son of the law", a practice which is continued to this day. It was a very significant step in the life of every Jewish boy.

Thus, when Samuel came of age, we read that the "word of the Lord was precious in those days; there was no open vision". The word "precious" is the Hebrew yagar, rare, therefore of high value. It occurs in Lam. iv. 2 where we read that "The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold" had become worthless and likened to earthly pottery. The word of the Lord was withheld from Israel, it became rare; there was no open vision. As a nation Israel no longer served the Lord. The impurity that prevailed in the Tabernacle had added to the corruption that pervaded the people. The eyes of their understanding were shut and darkness covered the land. Only a remnant remained faithful. As a nation God had been cast out, dethroned, forgotten, and ignored.

Vision in a nation necessitates communion with God. When that breaks down the result is blindness. Because sin is inherent in our nature, we by nature prefer darkness to light. Instead of the desire to look up to the light and seek the word and will of God, we close our minds and deliberately bury our heads in the sand. There is nothing strange about this, for where there is no vision, where the word of the Lord is not heard, the people perish, spiritually and morally.

With this background, with no open vision, the Lord comes to Samuel. Eli, whose eyes were becoming so weak that he could barely see, was lying down in his usual place. Samuel was lying down in the tabernacle of the Lord. The lights of the 7-branched lampstand had not yet gone out when Samuel hears a voice calling:

> "Then the Lord called Samuel. Samuel answered, 'Here I am'. And he ran to Eli and said, 'Here I am; you called me'. But Eli said, 'I did not call; go back and lie down'. So he went and lay down. Again the Lord called, 'Samuel!' And Samuel got up and went to Eli and said, 'Here I am; you called me'. 'My son', Eli said, 'I did not call, go back and lie down'.
> Now Samuel did not yet know the Lord: the word of the Lord had not yet been revealed to him. The Lord called Samuel a third time, and Samuel got up and went to Eli and said 'Here I am; you called me'. Then Eli realized that the Lord was calling the boy. So Eli told Samuel, 'Go and lie down, and if He calls you, say, 'Speak, Lord, for your servant is listening'.' So Samuel went and lay down in his place" (iii. 4-9, N.I.V.).

There seems to have been no animosity or jealousy on the part of Eli. The word of the Lord had passed him by and was being directed to the boy, Samuel. If he was grieved at this divine call coming to Samuel and not to himself, and envious of the honour bestowed, he certainly did not show it. Perhaps in his heart he knew that he had forfeited the Lord's favour and was unworthy of receiving it.

> "The Lord came and stood there, calling as at other times, 'Samuel! Samuel!'." (verse 10, N.I.V.).

This time it was not just a voice, it was a Person. It might have been thought that the voice would have come from the Shekinah glory in the holiest of all beyond the veil, but here we read that it was the Lord Who came and stood there, and called "Samuel! Samuel!". His name being called twice. In the O.T. there were only three others who were called this way: Abraham, when he was about to slay his son Isaac (Gen. xxii. 11); Jacob, after the news was broken to him that his son Joseph was still alive and had invited him down to Egypt to live (Gen. xlvi. 2); and Moses, when he turned aside to see the burning bush in the wilderness, and received from God his great commission (Exod. iii. 4).

Samuel now obeys Eli's instructions, but not quite. He forgot to say the word "Lord", but as verse 7 tells us "he did not yet know the Lord, neither was the word of the Lord yet revealed unto him". From this time forth, however, Samuel was to know Him well, and to hear His voice often, for he became God's mouthpiece to the nation of Israel. At the time he first heard that Voice, however, he would be uncertain who was speaking to him. Later, when he had come to know the Lord we are sure he would have given Him His rightful title as all true men of God have done. This is something we should all remember when we speak to Him or of Him, and honour Him with His rightful title "Lord".

The message that the Lord had for Samuel was a very painful one:

> "And the Lord said to Samuel, Behold I will do a thing in Israel, at which both the ears of everyone that heareth it shall tingle. In that day I will perform against Eli all things which I have spoken concerning his house: when I begin, I will also make an end. For I have told him that I will judge his house for ever for the iniquity which he knoweth; because his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not, and therefore I have sworn unto the house of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever" (I Sam. iii. 11-14).

The statement in verse 11, "I will do a thing in Israel, at which both the ears of everyone that heareth it shall tingle" are repeated twice elsewhere in Scripture, and both references are a prophecy of the judgment of Jerusalem at the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. The first reference is found in II Kings xxi., where Manasseh, though his father Hezekiah was one of the greatest kings of Judah, he himself was one of the infamous. Not only had he done wickedly above all that the Amorites did, but he made Judah also to sin with his idols:

> "Therefore thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Behold, I am bringing such evil upon Jerusalem and Judah, that whosoever heareth of it, both his ears shall tingle. And I will stretch over Jerusalem the line of Samaria, and the plummet of the house of Ahab: and I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish, and turning it upside down" (xxi. 12-13).

The second reference is found in Jer. xix.:

> "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle. Because they have forsaken Me, and have estranged this place, and have burned incense in it unto other gods, whom they nor their fathers have known, nor the kings of Judah, and have filled this place with the blood of innocents" (Jer. xix. 3, 4).

These two prophecies concerning Jerusalem were tragically fulfilled later when the army of Nebuchanezzar systematically reduced the city to a heap of rubble. When the Author of the Scriptures spoke through the men that wrote them and used the phrase "that whosoever heareth it both his ears shall tingle", He is drawing the attention of all who read these words to the cataclysmic events which left so indelible a mark upon the history of the nation of Israel. Tragically, the event was repeated once again in 70A.D. when Titus and his Roman legion razed the Temple and the city of Jerusalem to the ground, after the Jews at Rome had manifested Israel's final rejection of the King and the kingdom and the apostle Paul had pronounced upon them the sentence of blindness at Acts xxviii. 23-29.

To return to I Sam. iii. 13, the enormity of the sin of Eli and his sons which was to be punished so fearfully, resulted in their death and the capture of the ark of God by the Philistines. For a period of 20 years the Glory of Jehovah departed from among His people. The ceremonial service that should have enabled Israel to see the truth of atonement and sanctification was no longer possible. The priests and the people degenerated to the unclean heathen superstitions of the nations around them. This was the extent of the mischief that must be measured against the punishment meted out to Eli and his sons.

It is no wonder that Samuel feared to divulge to Eli the terrible message that the Lord had given him. Here was his first experience of a prophet's responsibility. We are reminded of the terrible persecutions that Jeremiah endured because of the messages God gave him to declare to the people of Judah. He was derided and goaded almost to distraction, so that he cried out "I will not make mention of Him, nor speak any more in His name. But His word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I became weary with forbearing, and I could not stay" (Jer. xx. 9).

> "And Samuel lay until the morning, and opened the doors of the house of the Lord. And Samuel feared to show Eli the vision" (I Sam. iii. 15).

The abominable behaviour of Hophni and Phinehas was not hidden, and though he was only 12 years of age, Samuel must surely have wondered how it was that the great Jehovah allowed such behaviour to continue. Nevertheless he undoubtedly loved and revered the old priest who had been a second father to him, and dreaded to show him the vision. When pressed by Eli, however, not to hide anything from him, Samuel concealed nothing and in the words of our A.V., "told him every whit".

> "Then Eli called Samuel, and said, Samuel my son. And he answered, Here am I. And he said, What is the thing that the Lord hath said unto thee? I pray thee hide it not from me: God do so to thee, and more also, if thou hide anything from me of all the things that He said unto thee. And Samuel told him every whit, and hid nothing from him. And he said, It is the Lord: let Him do what seemeth Him good" (iii. 16-18).

Eli's reception of the terrible news and his reply indicated that in spite of his weakness and foolish partiality for his sons, at heart he was a devoted servant of the Lord. He must have seen, as he looked back, how deeply he had failed in his high office and allowed worldly considerations to influence his conduct. Now he had been tried and found wanting. Without murmurings or disputings he submits himself to the righteous judgment of his God, not trying to justify himself and his past conduct. He wisely realized he had sown the wind, and must now reap the whirlwind.

One of the major causes of the sickness in the world today is the over-indulgence of parents toward their children. Lack of discipline in the home inevitably leads to rebellion and disruption, and lack of respect and regard for others. Young people grow up suspicious and resentful of any restraint. Thinking they have freedom to do as they please they fall victim to the many abuses and snares that entangle the feet of many of the young and unwary today. Following the example of their elders they show little respect for God and His Word and account it foolishness. The words of the apostle Paul to the Corinthians reveal why there exists so much indifference to the things of God, and especially of the Lord Jesus Christ:

> "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (I Cor. ii. 14).

In other words, it is necessary to have the mind and Spirit of Christ to discern the things of God.

Eli is an example to be noted by all who are believers, for he fell from a position of trust and responsibility. His zeal for God oozed away as he grew older. It was not his eyes only that became dim, but his mind and will as well. As we read in the epistle to the Hebrews, "if any man draw back, My soul shall have no pleasure in him" (x. 38). On the other hand "let us go on unto perfection" (vi. 1), where the thought behind the word "perfection" is likened by the apostle Paul in Phil. iii. 12-15 to a runner in a race pressing towards a goal, finishing the course and touching the tape. In other words, pressing on to the end and not giving up.

The conduct of Samuel was quite a contrast to that of Eli:

> "And Samuel grew, and the Lord was with him, and did let none of His words fail to the ground. And all Israel from Dan to Beersheba knew that Samuel was established to be a prophet of the Lord. And the Lord appeared again in Shiloh: for the Lord revealed Himself to Samuel in Shiloh by the word of the Lord" (I Sam. iii. 19-21).

What a contrast is here! As Samuel grew to manhood the Lord was with him, giving him strength and wisdom, guiding and guarding him, and Samuel let none of His words fall to the ground. He caught them all and absorbed them in his heart and mind. In those dark days of sin and shame in God's house, Samuel stood firm, having nothing to do with them; his life a perpetual protest against covetousness and iniquity. Then from Dan to Beersheba, all Israel came to know of the relationship between Jehovah and this young man. A prophet of the Lord had appeared among the people once again. There spread throughout the nation the universal acknowledgement that in Samuel there was the hope of a future deliverer. So Jehovah came to Samuel and revealed Himself, and gave him information concerning events that would take place, perhaps soon after. His reputation as a prophet gradually took shape, and we read in chapter iv. 1, "And the word of the Lord came to all Israel". He became the first of the prophets and the last of the judges.

No.7. iv. 1 - 22.
pp. 153 - 158

Although Hannah and Elkanah now disappear from the Scripture record, having served their purpose as far as the plan of God was concerned, yet one would hope that they had the satisfaction of living long enough to see their son rise to greatness in Israel, and have the joy of seeing their devotion and sacrifice rewarded when they brought Samuel to Shiloh to the service of the Lord. This was the leading of the Lord who foreknew the man that would develop from the small child, and doubtless also give joy and comfort to the mother and father who had waited so long for their son after years of a barren womb.

We now come to Chapter iv., the opening sentence of which in verse 1 present us with a problem:

> "And the word of Samuel came to all Israel. Now Israel went out against the Philistines to battle, and pitched beside Ebenezer: and the Philistines pitched in Aphek. And the Philistines put themselves in array against Israel: and when they joined battle, Israel was smitten before the Philistines: and they slew of the army in the field about four thousand men" (I Sam. iv. 1 and 2).

To which portion of the narrative does the statement "And the word of Samuel came to all Israel" belong? Is it part of the Lord's dealings with Samuel which closed at chapter iii. 20 and 21? Or does it close that brief narrative which tells of the Divine voice which called Samuel, and the vision seen by the young chosen servant? On the other hand, does it tell us that acting upon the word of Samuel and under his advice, Israel commenced this disastrous conflict with the Philistines? Again, does the "word of Samuel" refer back to the prophecy given him by the Lord against the house of Eli? If this was the case, Eli may have made known to his two sons Hophni and Phinehas the judgment of God revealed to Samuel in a further effort to restrain their abominable behaviour. One thing is certain, although Eli still remained the judge, or head, of Israel, his word was no longer heeded by the princes of the nation. It seems this was mainly due to the scandalous infidelity of Hophni and Phinehas and the apathy of their father Eli, and thus the people had forsaken the God of their fathers, and only a remnant remained faithful. So it was that the Lord gave them up, withheld His power and allowed their enemies to smite and defeat them and over-run the land. For twenty years, since the days of Samson, the Philistines had made themselves supreme in Canaan. This effort on the part of Israel to shake off the iron heel of their oppressors was doomed from the start, for it was done without seeking the advice or guidance of Jehovah. Immediately misfortune falls upon them, however, they lay the cause of it upon the Lord and forget their disregard of Him in former time.

> "And when the people were come into the camp, the elders of Israel said, Wherefore hath the Lord smitten us today before the Philistines? Let us fetch the ark of the covenant of the Lord out of Shiloh unto us, that, when it cometh among us, it may save us out of the hand of our enemies. So the people sent to Shiloh, that they might bring from thence the ark of the covenant of the Lord of hosts, which dwelleth between the cherubims: and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were there with the ark of the covenant of God. And when the ark of the covenant of the Lord came into the camp, all Israel shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again" (iv. 3-5).

What hypocrisy it is when the elders of Israel cry "Wherefore hath the Lord smitten us before the Philistines"? For twenty years they had spurned the Lord, disobeyed His express commands, and sinned most grievously against Him. They boldly dispute the matter with Him, and seem unaware of the great provocation they had given Him. This wild and unreasonable attitude seems to have been in the mind of the writer of the book of Proverbs when he wrote:

> "The foolishness of man perverteth his way ('leads him astray' is not strong enough, for the word includes the idea of 'destruction'); and his heart fretteth against the Lord (fretteth = 'is angry with')" (Prov. xix. 3).

The defeat brings no realization, or change of heart. It did not bring them to their knees to seek Divine forgiveness. They did not consider whether they themselves were at fault. Instead, in their blindness, the rulers of the nation suddenly remember the ark of the covenant within the holiest of all of the Tabernacle. It had always been the symbol of God's Presence among His people to their fathers, and they unwisely thought that they could oblige Jehovah to fight for them by wresting it from its alloted place in the Sanctuary without His express command or permission. It was a curious delusion that led the rulers to think that the unseen God was inseparably linked with that strange and beautiful symbol of His Presence. That coffer of wood overlaid with gold, upon which was the mercy seat and cherubims of pure gold, had many hallowed memories for it was the place to which the high priest once every year brought the blood of the sin offering, first for himself and then for the people, and where enquiry was made of God "There I will meet with the children of Israel" (Exod. xxix. 43). But it was not an object of reverence or worship in itself, like the idols of other nations.

There is no doubt that in the minds of the elders of Israel lay the memory of the days of old when glorious victories were gained in the heroic days of Moses and Joshua, but they never stopped to consider the fact that Jehovah was then worshipped and revered by the nation. It was different now. The Lord had been forsaken for many a year now, and His sanctuary had become a place of corruption and vice: his ministers prime examples of covetousness and immorality. The ark of the covenant was now a symbol of a broken covenant. The custodians of the ark were of course Hophni and Phinehas, and there was obviously no resistance from them that it should be removed from its sacred resting place and carried outside. They may indeed have even suggested it, thinking it might add to their prestige and glory.

> "And when the Philistines heard the noise of the shout, they said, What meaneth the noise of this great shout in the camp of the Hebrews? And they understood that the ark of the Lord was come into the camp. And the Philistines were afraid, for they said, God is > come into the camp. And they said, Woe unto us! for there hath not been such a thing heretofore" (I Sam. iv. 6, 7).

So the ark was brought into the camp, and the men of Israel gave a triumphant shout as if the battle was already won. So close were the Philistines that they heard the commotion, and when they learned that the ark of the Lord had come into the camp of the Hebrews they were much afraid:

> "Woe unto us! who shall deliver us out of the hand of these mighty Gods? these are the Gods that smote the Egyptians with all the plagues in the wilderness" (iv. 8).

They evidently remembered the days gone by, but there was some confusion in the minds of the Philistines concerning the history of Israel, for the plagues were inflicted before the ark was constructed. It certainly represented the presence of the Lord God among His people Israel, but to look upon it as a personification of God Himself as they did with their own idols was of course a misunderstanding on their part.

The Philistines were doubty warriors, however, for we read they nevertheless prepared themselves for battle:

> "Be strong and quit yourselves like men, O ye Philistines, that ye be not servants unto the Hebrews, as they have been to you: quit yourselves like men, and fight" (iv. 9).

The apostle Paul uses similar stirring words when writing to the church at Corinth, "quit you like men, be strong" (I Cor. xvi. 13). The context there, however, is not one of fighting, but of standing fast and remaining faithful under adversity and persecution.

> "And the Philistines fought, and Israel was smitten, and they fled every man into his tent: and there was a very great slaughter; for there fell of Israel thirty thousand footmen. And the ark of God was taken; and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were slain" (iv. 10, 11).

So Israel was smitten. This defeat at the hands of their idolatrous foe was strictly in accordance with those immutable laws which applied between Jehovah and His covenant people during that dispensation. As long as they remained faithful to their invisible Preserver, and served Him with their whole heart, and kept themselves pure from the pollution of the heathen nations around them, so long was He in their midst. So long were the people of Israel invincible. When they forsook Him, then God forsook them. To use the words of Asaph in Psa. lxxviii.:

> "When God heard this, He was wroth, and greatly abhorred Israel: so that He forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh, the tent which He placed among men; and delivered His strength into captivity, and His glory into the enemy's hand . . . . . their priests fell by the sword" (Psa. lxxviii. 59-64).

So the Ark of God was taken. This was perhaps the greatest calamity that had yet happened to Israel. It was now apparent to the whole nation that their King had withdrawn His Presence from them. They stood alone. The Ark which Moses had made by God's command at Sinai, and in which the Divine Presence was enshrined within the Holy of Holies in the Sanctuary, which had accompanied Israel through the wilderness and before which the waters of Jordan had fled backward, and the walls of mighty Jericho had fallen down: that Ark was taken possession of by idolators. It had become a dead thing to Israel, and the living God does not bind His Presence to a dead thing. One is reminded of the words of Paul:

> "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. vi. 11).

The two sons of Eli were slain. The word of God given to Samuel was fulfilled. They had polluted the Sanctuary and been the prime cause of the continued idolatry of the nation, and finally had betrayed the symbol of the Divine Presence in their midst by bringing it into danger without a warrant from Jehovah. This surely filled the measure of their iniquities. So God's judgment fell upon the house of Eli as the man of God had foretold in chapter ii. 34.

The prophecies made by the Lord always come to pass. We need have no fear, therefore, concerning those spiritual blessings that He has promised through the apostle Paul which refer to that church that is the Body of Christ, of which He is the Head. This hope of ours today is based on the words of the One true God, and whatever He has promised, He will most surely perform.

> "And there ran a man of Benjamin out of the army, and came to Shiloh the same day with his clothes rent, and with earth upon his head" (I Sam. iv. 12).

Jewish tradition relates that this messenger was Saul. Without modern means of communication swift runners were the usual means of passing messages and information at this time. Occasionally we have their names recorded in the Scriptures. Cushi and Ahimaz were the messengers sent by Joab to king David with the news that his son Absalom was dead (II Sam. xviii. 19-23). The rent clothes and earth upon the head were the usual indications that the information brought were tidings of evil.

> "And when he came, lo, Eli sat upon a seat by the wayside watching: for his heart trembled for the ark of God. And when the man came into the city, and told it, all the city cried out. And when Eli heard the noise of the crying, he said, What meaneth the noise of this tumult? And the man came in hastily, and told Eli. Now Eli was ninety and eight years old; and his eyes were dim, that he could not see" (I Sam. iv. 13-15).

Some make the original text to read "Eli sat by the side of the way of the watchers", that is, the street or way in Shiloh so named from the watch-tower situated in it. Others translate "by the side of the gate watching the way". The old judge was naturally anxious for news from the army. They had already suffered one major defeat at the hands of the Philistines, and his chief anxiety now was for the safety of the sacred ark. Quite probably he had sought to stay his sons from taking it from the Sanctuary. Blind and feeble as he was, he had no means of stopping them, so he waited with sorrowful forebodings the coming of a messenger. The words of the man of God in chapter ii. 27-34 which prophesied judgment on him and his two sons would doubtless come vividly before his mind. He then hears the tumult and the noise of grief and consternation, and the messenger comes before him:

> "And the man said unto Eli, I am he that came out of the army, and I fled today out of the army. And he said, What is there done, my son? And the messenger answered and said, Israel is fled before the Philistines, and there hath been also a great slaughter among the people, and thy two sons also, Hophni and Phinehas, are dead, and the ark of God is taken" (iv. 16, 17).

The grim news is bluntly given, the army utterly routed, Hophni and Phinehas slain, and the Ark taken.

> "And it came to pass, when he made mention of the ark of God, that he fell from off the seat backward by the side of the gate, and his neck brake, and he died: for he was an old man, and heavy. And he had judged Israel forty years" (iv. 18).

The ruin and degradation of the nation and his house, he could endure, but it was when he learned of the Philistines capturing the ark of God that the awful realization of this calamity sent him reeling backwards on his seat. He could bear the judgment of Jehovah in the ruin and degradation of his house and descendants. He could bear to see another preferred before him and his family as the judge in Israel. He could endure the defeat in battle at the hands of the heathen. Even the news of the death of his sons. But when his ears caught the words from the messenger that the ark of God was taken, that was the calamity that caused his death. This was the fulfillment of the prophecy made known to the boy Samuel by the Lord "at which both the ears of every one that heareth it shall tingle" (I Sam. iii. 11).

The grief and consternation in Shiloh would be echoed in every town and village throughout Israel. Not only those faithful men and women who had remained loyal to the God of their fathers during the apostasy of the nation over the past twenty years, but the people as a whole would be filled with a strange foreboding that must have caused apprehension and fear. Yet nowhere do we read that repentance was felt, or that the nation turned back from their idolatry. Such is the blackness of the human heart when the mind is darkened by sin. Unless the light of the glorious gospel of grace had shined into our hearts and minds, we too would have treated the Lord Jesus Christ with the indifference which we see around us.

> "And his daughter in law, Phinehas' wife, was with child, near to be delivered: and when she heard the tidings that the ark of God was taken, and that her father in law and her husband were dead, she bowed herself and travailed; for her pains came upon her. And about the time of her death the women that stood by her said unto her, Fear not; for thou hast born a son. But she answered not, neither did she regard it. And she named the child Ichabod, saying, The glory is departed from Israel: because the ark of God was taken, and because of her father in law and her husband. And she said, The glory is departed from Israel: for the ark of God is taken" (I Sam. iv. 19-22).

This singular and circumstantial account of the death of the widow of Phinehas, the evil prior, the son of Eli, which follows directly after the great national disaster is recorded on the pages of Scripture because of the name she gave her son—Ichabod. Her concern for the death of her husband and of her father-in-law was an evidence of her natural affection, but her greater concern for the loss of the ark of God is made clear by the meaning of the name she gave to the son that was born. "I", an exclamation of bitter sorrow, “Alas!”, and “chabod”, glory; “Alas, the Glory”. No glory while the Presence of the Lord is removed from Israel.

Chapter v.

Israel had been heavily defeated by the Philistines at Aphek, and the Ark of God taken by this heathen foe. We read something of the punishment meted out on Israel by them in Psa. lxxviii. 56-64. Jeremiah also makes reference to this occasion in Jer. vii. 12 and xxvi. 1-9. The loss of the Ark of God meant that He no longer dwelt among His people. The mighty covenant God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob had forsaken them. The Ark was then taken in triumph to Ashdod, one of the five great cities of the Philistines. Built on a hill close to the Mediterranean Sea, it was known as Azotus in N.T. times. In Acts viii. Philip, having led the Ethiopian nobleman into the way of salvation, was caught away by the Spirit of the Lord and found at Azotus (Acts viii. 40).

The Philistines considered the capture of the Ark to be their greatest achievement. They carried it with care and placed it in the huge temple of their most popular god, Dagon. They attributed their success in battle to the gods they worshipped, so when they returned in triumph they placed their trophies before their altars, or hung them upon the temple walls. Dagon, and his so-called wife Derceto, were the chief divinities worshipped by the Philistines. The upper part of this idol Dagon was shaped like a man, and the lower part like the tail of a dolphin. In addition there was an Assyrian Dagon, and among the priceless treasures dug from the burning sands of Iraq, the old Assyrian empire, is a sculptured figure of this idol. It is depicted swimming through the sea in front of the Assyrian warships; evidently cleaving a way for them and leading them on to victory. Dagon was the “Baal of the sea, the Neptune of the ancient East”. When we remember that the Philistines were a maritime people, going down to the sea in ships and invading foreign lands with their fleets, we can well understand how the worship of Dagon had won the chief place among Philistine idols.

The Ark of Jehovah was accordingly placed at the feet of this venerated image as an acknowledgement of his superiority over the God of Israel. They would remember the humiliation this god suffered in the temple at Gaza when Samson called upon the name of his God, and when superhuman strength came upon him, he dislodged the central pillars which brought the mighty building crashing down, pulverizing to dust the huge figure of their god, Dagon. The insulted Dagon could now be avenged by the perpetual subservience of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

The men of Ashdod, however, were about to receive a shock, for on the morrow, when their priests entered the temple to pay their devotions to Dagon’s image, they found their god prostrate on the floor before the desecrated sacred coffer of the Israelites. In Isa.xli. we read of the great care taken by the heathen peoples when setting up the idols that they worshipped. They were fastened down with great care so that they should not be moved (Isa. xli. 7), yet the fastenings of this huge figure were of no avail: it had fallen before the Ark, lying as though in subjection and constrained to yield and do homage. The consternation and amazement of these men can be imagined; how they would speedily summon the work force to restore it to its place in great haste. The image did not seem to have sustained any injury, so the incident would no doubt be noised abroad in the city as an accident, or due perhaps to faulty workmanship in its fixing.

On the following morning, however, that explanation would be swept to the winds. Dagon again lay prone before the Ark, but not as before. This time the head and the hands of the image were severed; not broken off, but cut off and thrown upon the threshold of the temple—the entrance upon which the foot of every priest or worshipper as he passed into the temple must tread. We read in verse 4, "only the stump of Dagon was left to him", i.e. the fish part. What an ignoble sight for these devotees to behold! Without head or hands, surely here was a chunk of stone without wisdom or power.

One would have thought that this incontestable proof of the impotence of their god would have convinced the Philistines of their folly in worshipping a man-made effigy, and turn instead to the worship of the God of Israel Who had so evidently shown forth His power. Alas, this was not so, for in verse 5 we read "Therefore neither the priests of Dagon, nor any that come into Dagon's house, tread on the threshold of Dagon in Ashdod unto this day". So the threshold became holy, and strange as it may seem, this humiliation of their god was perpetuated, so that when their children asked their parents why they should leap over the threshold, the power of Israel's God would be recounted.

There is an interesting reference to this superstition in the prophecy of Zephaniah. This man of God was probably the great-great-grandson of Hezekiah and prophesied during the early years of king Josiah in Judah. He speaks of the numerous idolatrous observances, which he condemns, and among them "On that day I will punish all who avoid stepping on the threshold" (Zeph. i. 9, N.I.V.). When men withhold their allegiance to God, it would appear they lose their wits as well.

If the Philistines had considered the downfall of Dagon and been brought to repent of their idolatries and humble themselves before the God of Israel, it might have prevented the punishment that now fell upon them for the indignities done to the Ark. A painful and distressing plague raged throughout the city. The princes of Ashdod therefore summoned the council of the nation and insisted that the Ark be removed immediately. So Gath was the city chosen. The Philistines must have built a new temple here and installed a new image of Dagon, for this was the place that Samson had previously destroyed with his God-given strength.

For the second time, therefore, judgment falls upon this city, and the shameful and humiliating disease sweeps through the populace of Gath also. The Ark of God was then pressed upon the citizens of Ekron who quite understandably were absolutely furious:

> "Therefore they sent the ark of God to Ekron. And it came to pass, as the ark of God came to Ekron, that the Ekronites cried out, saying, They have brought about the ark of God of Israel to us, to slay us and our people. So they sent and gathered together all the lords of the Philistines, and said, Send away the ark of the God of Israel, and let it go again to his own place, that it slay us not, and our people: for there was a deadly destruction throughout all the city; the hand of God was very heavy there" (v. 10, 11).

To faithful ones in Israel, this Ark, with its tables of the law, the golden pot of manna, and the rod of Aaron that budded, was a savour of "life unto life". To the uncircumcised Philistines, that persisted in enmity to God and hostility to His people, it was a savour of 'death unto death'. Their triumph in capturing the Ark was short-lived. It turned into fear, and the burning question now was what should be done with it. To destroy it was obviously not the way out. Jehovah was watching over this sacred emblem of His Presence, so no harm would come to it.

Chapter vi.

The Philistines were a superstitious people, so we read in this chapter of the curious way in which they dealt with this problem:

> "And the ark of the Lord was in the country of the Philistines seven months. And the Philistines called for the priests and the diviners, saying, What shall we do to the ark of the Lord? tell us wherewith we shall send it to his place" (vi. 1, 2).

They had grown up with an undefined awe of the golden chest which, as they supposed, had so often in the days of Moses and Joshua led the armies of Israel to famous victories. To yield it up now would be a sore blow to them, yet to retain it would only lead to plague, misery and death. This God of Israel was undoubtedly a powerful God and must be appeased. The advice of the heathen priests and diviners is given in vi. 3-6.

It was the general custom among nations of antiquity to offer to the deity a gift say for recovery from a broken leg of an offering in the shape of a leg, which seems to have influenced their decision:

> "Then said they, What shall be the trespass offering which we shall return to Him? They answered, Five golden emerods (tumours N.I.V.), and five golden mice, according to the number of the lords of the Philistines: for one plague was on you all, and on your lords" (vi. 4).

This verse, together with verse 5, gives intimation for the first time of a plague of mice in the land. This was a serious affliction which could result in famine. It affected not only the five capital cities, but also the entire land of the Philistines. In the warm countries that border the Mediterranean vast hordes of mice would sometimes arise and covering the land would devour the crops. In Egypt the mouse was considered so dangerous that it was made an emblem of destruction.

The reference to Pharaoh, the Egyptians, and the Exodus of Israel from Egypt in verse 6 must have made a deep impression upon the surrounding nations. Hence the value they set upon the Ark as the visible symbol of the mighty Hebrew God. The argument therefore of the priests and diviners could therefore be stated thus: 'You will remember the well-known story of the obduracy of the powerful Egyptians in connection with these Israelites, yet even they in the end had to let them go. You Philistines have had experience of two plagues, will you now, like those foolish Egyptians harden your hearts, till you like them have been smitten by ten'.

These 'diviners' in the counsels of this nation of antiquity occupied a distinguished place. We read of them under different names: magicians, sorcerers, soothsayers, oracles, etc. They plied their trade with the aid of arrows, the entrails of animals, observance of the stars, the flight of birds and dabbled in occult sciences. They could well have been aided by evil spirits, for Satan wields great power above the earth in the realms of darkness. To the question "What shall we do with the Ark of God?", their advice was to propitiate with gifts the powerful Hebrew Deity, and send it back before greater calamity followed.

> "Now therefore make a new cart, and take two milch kine, on which there hath come no yoke, and tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them: and take the Ark of the Lord, and lay it upon the cart; and put the jewels of gold, which ye return Him for a trespass offering, in a coffer by the side thereof; and send it away, that it may go. And see, if it goeth up by the way of its own coast to Bethshemesh, then He hath done us this great evil: but if not, then we shall know that it is not His hand that smote us; it was a chance that happened to us" (I Sam. vi. 7-9).

Honour must be given. A new cart must be used. No ordinary oxen, the customary beasts of burden, nor is it to have a driver. Milch cows, entirely untrained for the yoke must draw it. Their calves are to be kept at home, and the cows themselves left to their own devices.

Everything was done that would make it almost impossible for the cart to leave Philistia and ascend the heights to the land of Israel. The cows were bound to the calves they nourished, and to the crib where both were fed. They would be unacquainted with the road, and moreover it meant a long steady climb from the Philistine plain. It would be reasonable to expect them to turn home again. This was a test for the God of Israel. These diviners were not sure whether the plagues had been sent by Him, or whether they had fallen upon their land in the ordinary course of nature. This strange experiment would satisfy the minds of the Philistine people. If the cows, contrary to all expectation, kept on the road upwards to Bethshemesh, then this would be a sign that they were driven by a Divine power. It would be clear that this Ark was a very dangerous possession, and that they would be well rid of it. So the Ark with the golden images of both the plagues were loaded on to the cart and the kine hitched up:

> "And the men did so; and took two milch kine, and tied them to the cart, and shut up their calves at home, and they laid the ark of the Lord upon the cart, and the coffer with the mice of gold and the images of their emerods. And the kine took the straight way to the way of Bethshemesh, and went along the highway, lowing as they went, and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left; and the lords of the Philistines went after them unto the border of Bethshemesh. And they of Bethshemesh were reaping their wheat harvest in the valley: and they lifted up their eyes, and saw the ark, and rejoiced to see it. And the cart came into the field of Joshua, a Bethshemite, and stood there, where there was a great stone: and they clave the wood of the cart, and offered the kine a burnt offering unto the Lord" (I Sam. vi. 10-14).

Bethshemesh means "house of the sun", and as one of the cities given to the Levites by the tribe of Judah. It was thus a priestly city, a fitting place for the Ark to come to, and especially to a farm owned by a man with the name of Joshua. The Philistines must have watched it all the seven miles from Ekron to the border in amazement, but now quite sure that they could return to their homes knowing that they had removed the cause of all their recent sufferings.

Bethshemesh is today identified with a village called Ain Shems in the valley of Sorek, on the slopes of the mount of Judah. On the western side there are ancient ruins which shows that the place was once a town of considerable size. The fruitful plains still yield their harvests of wheat. When the cart appeared most people were apparently in their fields reaping, and their joy must have been great when they recognized the Ark upon it. The day probably turned into one of sacrifices, offerings and feasting. Perhaps the people feasted too well and lost all sense of reverence for the sacred Ark, for they took the opportunity of lifting the lid and peering inside. They looked upon those contents which no profane eyes in Israel had done since the day it was sealed up in the wilderness. The judgment of the Lord was swift:

"And He smote the men of Bethshemesh, because they had looked into the ark of the Lord, even He smote of the people fifty thousand and threescore and ten men: and the people lamented, because the Lord had smitten many of the people with a great slaughter. And the men of Bethshemesh said, Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God? and to whom shall He go up from us? And they sent messengers to the inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim, saying, The Philistines have brought again the ark of the Lord; come ye down, and fetch it up to you" (I Sam. vi. 19-21).

The number of slain here, 50,070, has been the subject of considerable research among commentators. The translators of the Greek O.T. (LXX) wrote, "and the Lord smote among them seventy men, and fifty thousand men". The Jewish Chaldee writers explain that the odd 70 were elders, and the 50,000 ordinary people. Josephus, the Jewish historian, in his account of this incident does not mention the larger number, but records that 70 men died. Bible scholars have asked, would this be counted as a great slaughter? Apparently the original texts are not quite clear, but there are some who believe that there are two smitings recorded, as follows:

(1) And He smote the men of Bethshemesh, 70 men.
(2) And He smote the people, 50,000 men.

The first judgment fell upon the men of Bethshemesh who had profaned the Ark, and the second upon the whole nation because there was no national humiliation, no confession of sin or entreaty of the Lord's forgiveness: no national prayer for His gracious Presence to return and dwell among them. This could well be so. It is not to be marveled at that when God Himself seeks His people, and they reject Him and disobey His commands, that there should come punishment from Him "Who is a consuming fire".

The Lord is a righteous Judge, One Who delights in mercy and has infinite patience, but this people were stiff-necked and entirely committed to going their own way. We have already seen that the loss of the Ark had been due to the fact that they were a permissive society, with no restraining irksome rules. Discipline was absent, and they felt free to enjoy the pleasures of their community as they thought right. How similar this is to today. We are fortunate that no judgment falls upon us as it did upon the chosen people of Israel.

We must remember that in I Sam. vi. God is dealing with His earthly people with whom He had a covenant relationship. With them He is JEHOVAH, the covenant God. They had entered into a special relationship with Him:

> "Now therefore, if ye will obey My voice indeed, and keep My covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto Me above all people: for all the earth is Mine: and ye shall be unto Me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation" (Exod. xix. 5, 6).
> "Behold, I have taught you statutes and judgments . . . . . keep therefore and do them; for this is your wisdom and understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people. For what nation is there so great, who had God so nigh unto them, as the Lord our God is in all things that we call upon Him for?" (Deut. iv. 5-7).

All the covenant and promises made to them could be summed up in the words: "If you remain faithful to Me, I will abide in your midst. I will dwell in the sanctuary in the Holiest of All, beyond the veil. If you obey My laws I will watch over you and you will be My special people. But if you turn away from Me and as a nation blot Me out of your life, I will forsake you and give you up". This was to be a special relationship between Jehovah and the nation of Israel and has no connection with the present dispensation of Grace. Although we Gentiles are no better than Israel, because of this no judgment falls upon us as it did upon them.

Israel today is temporarily blinded. During this interim period until they are restored once again to their earthly kingdom to be a blessing to the nations, we Gentiles, once foreigners and strangers to covenants and promises, are offered an inheritance in heavenly places "far above all" (Eph. i. 21; ii. 6). We worship at no earthly sanctuary, but there, where Christ is seated at the right hand of God. He is denoted as the Head of the Church which is His Body, a perfect Man (Eph. i. 22, 23; iv. 13). Its members are being built up into Him for a habitation of God, through the Spirit (Eph. ii. 21, 22).

In order to appreciate in all its fullness this holy calling, we have need, as good workmen, to rightly divide the Scriptures in order that understanding may be given concerning the hope of this calling (II Tim. ii. 15; Eph. i. 17, 18). The vast majority of Christians may not have had this particular hope and calling brought to their notice, or if it has they may not have had the spiritual insight to receive it. They have the inestimable gift of resurrection into eternal life, and of being in one of the many "abiding places" referred to by the Lord (John xiv. 2), but may not have been specifically chosen by God to be placed in the church which is the Body of Christ, a calling kept secret until revealed to the apostle Paul (Eph. i. 4, 11; iii. 1-10).

We are today all saved by grace, but it is a question of accepting by grace a hope and inheritance which is "better". There is a parallel to this in the epistle to the Hebrews, where the apostle exhorted his hearers to follow the example of those indicated in chapter xi., who had looked beyond earthly promises and blessings to one which was heavenly, the heavenly city, New Jerusalem (Heb. xi. 16, 39, 40).

There is a further striking parallel in Numb. xvi. Korah, and some 250 others of the elect tribe of Levi, took a stand against Moses and Aaron, leaders chosen by God, saying "Ye take too much upon yourselves, seeing all the congregation are holy". It is true that Israel was an elect nation, but they failed to see that there was an "election within an election" as ordained by God. The awful result of this rebellion was that they were judged and destroyed by God. This episode, and others related to it, are dealt with very fully by Charles H. Welch in his first hardback volume entitled Dispensational Truth, pages 223 to 233. It is our sincere hope, therefore, that the reader may be able to perceive the peculiar hope as revealed in the epistle to the Ephesians (and in the companion epistle Colossians) and rejoice in the acknowledgement of Christ as Head of the Church which is His Body, the Fullness of Him that filleth all in all.

The Philistines had been forced by God to return the Ark they had captured from the army of Israel. They had sent it back to Bethshemesh, the nearest town across the border. The people here, however, had desecrated the sacred coffer and the Lord had punished them for their sin. As a result of this they ask the men of Kirjath-jearim to come and take it. Kirjath-jearim means "the city of woods", so it must have been surrounded by forests. Situated only 8 miles west of Jerusalem, before Joshua's conquest of Canaan the city had been a seat of the worship of Baal, and a notable "high place".

> "And the men of Kirjath-jearim came, and fetched up the Ark of the Lord, and brought it into the house of Abinadab in the hill, and sanctified Eleazar his son to keep the Ark of the Lord" (I Sam. vii. 1).

So the Ark found a resting place in the house of Abinadab, and his son Eleazar was commissioned to keep it. He was "sanctified" for this work. In other words, set apart to give constant attendance to it and to act as a watchman over it. The faithful in the city would no doubt wish to worship before it, and perhaps the curious would want to go and see it. This young man's job was to guard it and keep it in safety.

> "And it came to pass, while the Ark abode in Kirjath-jearim, that the time was long; for it was twenty years: and all the house of Israel lamented after the Lord" (vii. 2).

There is something very touching in these words: a sense of sadness for the length of time. Those twenty years must have been a period of strenuous service on the part of Samuel.

The destruction of Shiloh had laid all Israel at the feet of there Philistine enemies, and we know that they made their supremacy felt. The restoration of the Ark in no wise signified that they had loosed their hold on the conquered people. The long years when the iron heel of their heathen foes pressed so heavily upon them was an important period in Samuel's life. During those twenty years he must have laboured incessantly to wake up the people to the old worship of Jehovah, and the purity of life ordained by Him for the nation He had called out to be His people. The fatal battle at Aphek, the capture of the Ark, the tragic death of the great old man Eli and of his sons, the devastation of the beloved Sanctuary at Shiloh, the continued terrible oppression of the Philistines, had opened his eyes. Taught by the bitter lessons of adversity, Samuel recognized that the only hope of salvation for Israel lay in their repentance as a nation before God. It was a change of heart that was needed before the lion standard of Judah could be unfurled, or the people be rid of the yoke that choked them. What means he used, or what his mode of life was, we are not told. Surely, however, he would travel the length and breadth of the land, visiting the twelve tribes. He would have sought to stir up all Israel to a sense of the greatness of their sins, and to the necessity of renewed trust in Jehovah and the vital need of returning to the faith of their fathers: to acknowledge their sins and failures and seek His forgiveness. Twenty years is a long time, but in the end the Lord rewarded His faithful servant's endeavours, for we read that "all Israel lamented after the Lord". A singularly happy turn of phrase, implying that the people as a whole had come to realize the blackness of their sinful manner of life and were prepared to do something about it. The words "lamented after" implying that they had now cast themselves down before their God, seeking His forgiveness. They realized the need for His cleansing, and looked to Him Whom they had so basely forsaken, and mourned as a nation.

In the prophecy of Zechariah we read that the children of Israel, in a future time, will yet again be estranged from Him, but will be brought to acknowledge their sin of the slaying of the Son of God, and of crucifying the One Who came as their King and rejecting His offer of restoration. They also refused to accept the word of His disciples when another opportunity was given to them during the Book of Acts. When the realization of what they have done draws upon them as a nation, they will repent, and at last accept Him as their Messiah. The Second Coming of Christ to His earthly people will then take place. This, of course, is still in the future; but here, buried in the past, is a turning back that was undoubtedly the result of Samuel's unwearied efforts during those twenty years.

> "And Samuel spake unto all the house of Israel, saying, If ye do return unto the Lord with all your hearts, then put away the strange gods and Ashtaroth from among you, and prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and serve Him only: and He will deliver you out of the hand of the Philistines. Then the children of Israel did put away Baalim and Ashtaroth, and served the Lord only" (I Sam. vii. 3, 4).

'Baalim' is the plural form of Baal, referring to the numerous images dedicated to this god. 'Ashtaroth' is the plural form of the female goddess Astarte. They represented the productive power of nature and were generally worshipped throughout the East, usually with wild, evil, and degrading rites and ceremonies. Throughout the twelve tribes of Israel, therefore, these graven images and idols were thrown down and smashed, and once more throughout the land the Invisible and Eternal One was acknowledged as the one true God. Samuel's faithfulness and tireless enthusiasm had at last been rewarded by the Lord. He had succeeded in opening the eyes of the people, unstopping their ears and softening the hardness of their hearts, so that they saw at last the real cause of their sufferings. He had made them as a nation hunger for the lost Presence of Jehovah.

> "And Samuel said, Gather all Israel to Mizpeh, and I will pray for you unto the Lord. And they gathered together to Mizpeh, and drew water, and poured it out before the Lord, and fasted on that day, and said there, We have sinned against the Lord. And Samuel judged the children of Israel in Mizpeh" (vii. 5, 6).

Samuel now assumed the role of judge in Israel, and some rank him as their greatest leader, with the exception of Moses. Mizpeh was a city in the plain of Judah, some eight miles west of Jerusalem. Representatives from every tribe came at Samuel's command and water was poured out before the Lord. On this day of national mourning they fasted and confessed the sins of the nation against Jehovah. The pouring out of the water symbolized the pouring away of their old manner of life, the emptying of their hearts and minds of their former evil way of living, and neglect of the One True God. In humble repentance they acknowledged the God of their fathers, and recognizing the faithfulness of Samuel publicly acknowledged his leadership over the nation.

The sudden destruction of the Phoenician shrines throughout Israel, and the assembly of the people of Israel at Mizpeh immediately aroused the war-like Philistines. They promptly gathered a powerful force and marched to the plain of Judah. The men of Israel would be no match against this powerful foe, for they were poorly armed and ill equipped for battle. To their credit the people's new resolution held firm, and they remembered how Jehovah's power was given to Moses and Joshua in days of old. So in the supreme hour of testing and danger they turned to Samuel. Their cry was not 'what hope have we got, look what you have done for us now'. They did not turn to murmuring against Samuel as their fathers had done against Moses and Aaron during the wilderness journey; instead we read:

> "And the children of Israel said to Samuel, Cease not to cry unto the Lord our God for us, that He will save us out of the hand of the Philistines" (vii. 8).

Israel's repentance was now most surely being put to the test. Their new-found profession of faith was being proved and tried by the Lord. Was it sincere and complete? Would it crack when there was danger, and mortal fear held them in its grip? Samuel had evidently done his work well. The army was willing to go and meet the foe, unprepared as they were for battle; providing their leader continued to intercede for their deliverance to Jehovah. Let him not be silent, but instant in prayer on their behalf. This was real faith at last; complete trust in the power of the Lord.

> "And Samuel took a sucking lamb, and offered it for a burnt offering wholly unto the Lord: and Samuel cried unto the Lord for Israel; and the Lord heard him. And as Samuel was offering up the burnt offering, the Philistines drew near to battle against Israel: but the Lord thundered with a great thunder on that day upon the Philistines, and discomfited them; and they were smitten before Israel. And the men of Israel went out > of Mizpeh, and pursued the Philistines, and smote them until they came to Beth-car" (verses 9-11).

So Samuel offered the lamb as a sacrifice and cried unto the Lord, and we read that the Lord heard his prayer and answered it, thus Samuel became the mediator between the Lord and His people. What a wonderful picture again of the one sacrifice that the Lamb of God made on our behalf, to procure deliverance and salvation and to deliver us from the power and dominion of sin.

Once more in His mercy the covenant God of Israel responded to the cry of His earthly people in their extremity. When they sincerely repented of their denial of Him and turned back from their evil ways, His Arm protected them. The Philistine ranks were beaten back by the fury of the storm (Josephus mentions an earthquake, Antiquities of the Jews, Book VI.II.2.). Israel hurl themselves upon the enemy and the rout is complete.

We then read that "Samuel took a stone, and set it between Mizpeh and Shen, and called the name of it Eb-en-ezer, saying, Hitherto the Lord helped us" (I Sam. vii. 12). "Shen" means "Tooth", and was probably a prominent rock formation such as a crag or peak. Samuel set up a memorial to commemorate this great victory over the Philistines by Jehovah. This stone at Mizpeh would revive their remembrance of the mighty power of their God and cause them to be thankful. On the other hand it would remain a standing witness against them for their unthankfulness if Israel ever hardened their hearts against Jehovah again.

Samuel publicly acknowledges that the victory was wrought by the arm of the Lord alone. Eb-en-ezer means "the stone of help", representing the timely help that was given as a result of fervent prayer. It must be noted that this prayer was answered only because the nation as a whole had thrown down the heathen images they had worshipped for so long. Having given up their idolatrous practices and wholly returned to the Lord in heart and life, He now turned to them and gave His mighty help in time of trouble.

> "So the Philistines were subdued, and they came no more into the coast of Israel: and the hand of the Lord was against the Philistines all the days of Samuel. And the cities which the Philistines had taken from Israel were restored to Israel, from Ekron even unto Gath; and the coasts thereof did Israel deliver out of the hands of the Philistines. And there was peace between Israel and the Amorites" (vii. 13, 14).

This new spirit in Israel remained constant during the lifetime of Samuel. The petty jealousies between the tribes disappeared and gave place to the desire for unity. The power of the Philistines decayed, and the strength and prosperity of the people under the leadership of Samuel increased. The surrounding Canaanite tribes were content to submit quietly to the former limitations imposed upon them by Joshua, even also the mighty Amorites. No mention is made, however, of the brilliant statesmanship of Samuel, nor of his powerful influence for good that he exercised over the nation. Without any doubt whatsoever he is to be numbered among the very great characters of the O.T., and his name naturally finds honourable mention among those heroes of faith in Heb. xi.

> "And Samuel judged Israel all the days of his life. And he went from year to year in circuit to Bethel, and Gilgal, and Mizpeh, and judged Israel in all those places. And his return was to Ramah; for there was his house; and there he judged Israel; and there he built an altar unto the Lord" (I Sam. vii. 15-17).

For probably another 20 years Samuel judged Israel, dealing with the more complex cases of the law that baffled the local magistrates; having the final say in all the important affairs of state both internal and external. Shiloh having been destroyed during the war with the Philistines, he now lived in Ramah, his home town where his mother and father, Hannah and Elkanah, had lived and died. There he built an altar, as was the custom of the patriarchs, there being no formal seat of worship and no high priest of Israel until the end of his days, a position that was unique unless we are mistaken in the Scriptures. He was therefore a true type of the One Who is to come as Prophet, Priest and Judge, and Who alone can hold those titles.

Bethel, Gilgal, and Mizpeh, were all cities of holy memory to the children of Israel, where events had taken place that stirred the hearts of the nation. Bethel would always be associated with Jacob and his vision of Jehovah, and later the place where his name was changed from Jacob (supplanter) to Israel (prince with God). Gilgal was near Jericho on the river Jordan, where the nation spent their first night after crossing the river on their entry into the promised land under the leadership of Joshua. Twelve stones had been laid there in commemoration of that historic occasion. Mizpeh would be remembered for their recent triumph over the Philistines, given them by the mighty arm of the Lord. These three places were all in the southern half of the country and pilgrims from all over Israel would crowd there at different times of the year, so Samuel would be able to mingle with vast numbers of the people from all over the land.

"And it came to pass, when Samuel was old, that he made his sons judges over Israel. Now the name of his firstborn was Joel; and the name of his second, Abiah: they were judges in Beersheba" (I Sam. viii. 1, 2).

These were splendid names, for Joel signifies "Jehovah is God", and Abiah "Jehovah a Father". In I Chron. vi. 28 we read that the sons of Samuel were Vashni, the firstborn, and Abiah; so evidently the eldest son had two names. Vashni incidently means "Jehovah is strong".

"And his sons walked not in his ways, but turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment" (viii. 3).

The glorious traditions of Samuel were quickly forgotten by these unworthy sons of Samuel. It is probable that when old age was beginning to enfeeble his strength, many of his duties devolved upon his sons. Their infamous conduct must have grieved him sorely. It would appear that he had had good hopes of their proving worthy of responsible positions in Israel, for they were made his deputies in Beersheba. This city was far away from Ramah, in the extreme south of Canaan. We often read the expression "from Dan to Beersheba", meaning from north to south.

How many good and honest men have been spoiled through preferment and power. It does not seem that Samuel's sons were quite so profane or vicious as the sons of Eli, but love of money was their downfall. Whatever they were in other respects they became corrupt judges by accepting bribes. This base sin made a mockery of justice, and has been in the past fatally common, particularly in the eastern countries. In both the books of Exodus and Deuteronomy the command of God to Moses was "Take no gift, for the gift blinded the minds of the wise and perverteth the words of the righteous". Samuel himself could say, "Behold, here I am; witness against me before the Lord, and before His anointed: whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it you. And they said, Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken ought of any man's hand" (I Sam. xii. 3, 4).

This honourable testimony to the integrity of Samuel throughout his long public ministry is left as a record concerning the character of this great servant of God. The apostle Paul, when writing to his young "son in the faith" Timothy, says also "For the love of money is the root of all evil, which while some have coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows . . . . . men of corrupt minds and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness . . . . . but godliness with contentment is great gain". It is impossible for any Christian to sincerely love the Lord and be covetous. If we put Him first in our heart and life we shall always be equal to this temptation. To do this, however, we have to know Him well, and love and believe His Word.

Despite his splendid life of service, even Samuel seems to have failed at the end of his life in relation to his sons. Aaron had a similar tragedy with his two sons Nadab and Abihu (Lev. x. 1, 2). Has there ever been in the history of our race so much sadness as there is today among families because of the disregard of the children for their parents? Brought about largely by the war, the desire for freedom from all restraints, and the neglect of the Word of God and turning away from the Lord Jesus Christ. We have only to think of Cain, the firstborn son of Adam and Eve. Then Noah whose faith and righteousness brought him and his family through the wrath of God, yet whose progeny included such evil people as Canaan, Cush and Nimrod. Further we have Abraham's son Ishmael, Isaac's son Esau, and finally the sons of Jacob who sold their brother into slavery for envy. So the Scriptures reveal that no man other than the Son of God was ever perfect. The O.T. characters with their outstanding typical qualities reveal the frailty, failure, and sin of even the greatest men that have ever lived.

In the book of Samuel we find illustrated another principle that is revealed in the Scriptures as being characteristic of God's dealing with men. Contrary to what we may expect, God takes the second place, not the first. Note, we said "in his dealings with men": thus we have Adam, the first man, before Christ, the second Adam: Cain "who was of that wicked one" before Abel, Ishmael before Isaac, Esau before Jacob; Saul is made king over Israel before David, Antichrist before Christ Himself, and finally the kingdoms of this world before the Kingdom of God. Charles Welch explained it in this way: in the Scriptures we find that God is dealing with men as responsible moral creatures. In other words, being created "in His own image and likeness", man has been given a brain, a most marvelous and intricate mechanism that unlike the remainder of creation enables him to think, reason things out, to judge and weigh up, and to create. It enables him to make decisions and so have a mind of his own. Had Adam never been allowed to exercise his choice of action the human race would probably have been convinced that man could stand unassisted against all temptation. Had Israel not failed so lamentably man would doubtless have believed that it was possible to accomplish a righteousness by works. Had rule and government never been entrusted to the nations of the earth, they would never have been convinced that the only true ruler and king appointed by God to establish righteousness and judgment on this earth is the Lord Jesus Christ. This lesson is yet to be learned.

In the Book of Samuel we have this illustrated most strikingly as Israel place Saul upon the throne, and anoint him as their king, whereas David, God's chosen man, the man after God's own heart, came second:

> "Then all the elders of Israel gathered themselves together, and came to Samuel unto Ramah, and said unto him, Behold, thou art old, and thy sons walk not in thy ways: now make us a king to judge us like all the nations" (I Sam. viii. 4, 5).

The two sons of Samuel followed him in his office, but did not walk in his ways and serve the Lord as splendidly as he did. Taking advantage of their exalted position they sought to line their pockets by taking bribes, and by extortion of money from the people they abused the privilege God had laid down to be given to His servants who had been given authority. This failure on the part of the sons of Samuel was undoubtedly a contributory factor in the iniquitous demand by the people of Israel for a man to be appointed as their king like the nations around them. This was a rebuff to God, for He Himself was their king. As Jehovah, the Covenant God of Israel, He was the One Who should rule and reign over them. The blessings He had heaped upon them and their fathers were without number, yet such is the hardness of the human heart and the tendency of man to trust in himself and go his own way, that these people forgot their true King, and blindly demanded an earthly ruler, and so He says to Samuel:

> "Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee: for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected Me, that I should not reign over them" (viii. 7).

Sin separates from God. It removes Him from His rightful place in our hearts and from the centre of our lives. We become warped and twisted, and not desiring fellowship with Him we become, as a consequence, the willing dupes of Satan.

No.11. viii. 6 - 18.
pp. 230 - 233

Samuel was now old and his two sons had turned out to be utterly unworthy to carry on the leadership of Israel. As a result the elders of the people now came to Samuel and demanded that he anoint them a king. Their words are: "Make us a king to judge us like all the nations" (viii. 5). These words must have been a severe blow to Samuel. All his life his one aim had been to keep Israel faithful to Jehovah, their covenant God. He recognized the sinfulness of this demand. It was in direct opposition to the will of the Lord, for His word was clear that HE, Jehovah, was Israel's King. So the desire to anoint one of their number as king was to depose Israel's true King, and put in His place one "like unto the nations".

The Lord who knows the hearts of all men had foreseen this, however, for He had made provision for such a request in His instructions to Moses:

> "When thou art come unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, and shalt possess it, and shalt dwell therein, and shalt say, I will set a king over me, like as all the nations that are about me; thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee, whom the Lord thy God shall choose: one from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee: thou mayest not set a stranger over thee, which is not thy brother. But he shall not multiply horses to himself, nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses: forasmuch as the Lord has said unto you, 'Ye shall henceforth return no more that way'. Neither shall he greatly multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away: neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold. And it shall be, when he sitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, that he shall write him a copy of this law in a book out of that which is before the priests the Levite: and it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life: that he may learn to fear the Lord his God, to keep all the words of this law and these statutes, to do them: that his heart be not lifted up above his brethren, and that he turn not aside from the commandment, to the right hand, or to the left: to the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom, he, and his children, in the midst of Israel" (Deut. xvii. 14-20).

Jehovah would not allow a foreigner to reign over His people. Polygamy and wealth to excess were not to be permitted. He must not rely on horses and chariots, and he must write out a copy of the law and meditate upon it all the days of his life. The prophetic words of Deuteronomy we shall see were going to be fulfilled with unfortunate consequences as Israel's kings failed to comply with these requirements. We read that Solomon had 40,000 horses and 12,000 grooms in his stables. No wonder his heart was lifted up. It was David, the Lord's anointed who wrote "Some trust in chariots and horses: but we will remember the name of the Lord our God" (Psa. xx. 7), and "The king shall joy in Thy strength, O Lord; and in Thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice!"

(Psa. xxi. 1). What a pity Solomon did not heed the wise words of his father. We do well to remember this today; salvation and true happiness can only be found in God's provision for our peace, the Lord Jesus Christ. To look elsewhere for salvation and strength is useless.

It takes a great deal of courage to remain faithful to the Lord when all around are heedless of His love and grace. The apostle Paul, writing to believing Hebrews, said: "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard lest at any time we should let them slip" (Heb. ii. 1). The R.V. reads "drift away from them". Others make the words read "lest we should fall or stumble". Another "lest we forgot". How absolutely vital it is for us today to keep close to the Lord Jesus Christ, and to keep His Word. Not to become so engrossed in the things of this world that we neglect the spiritual things, and let them "drift away" from us.

Though Samuel was greatly displeased, as his custom was he brought the matter before the Lord:

> "But the thing displeased Samuel, when they said, Give us a king to judge us. And Samuel prayed unto the Lord. And the Lord said unto Samuel, Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee: for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected Me, that I should not reign over them. According to all the works which they have done since the day that I brought them up out of Egypt even unto this day, wherewith they have forsaken Me, and served other gods, so do they also unto thee. Now therefore hearken unto their voice: howbeit yet protest solemnly unto them, and shew them the manner of the king that shall reign over them" (I Sam. viii. 6-9).

These three features: (1) the demand for a king, (2) the rejection of the Lord, and (3) the significant reference back to Egypt, are repeated again in x. 18, 19, and again in xi. 15, and finally in xii. 1, 6-12. In this way the root of Israel's failure is emphasized. Yet despite this evidence in Israel's history, no action was taken by them or by later generations to learn the lesson that so patently stands out. This initial rejection of the Lord as their king, therefore culminated in His final rejection when their descendants uttered the tragic word to Pilate, "We have no king but Caesar".

Nevertheless, the Scriptures show us that the Lord is long-suffering and very gracious, not quenching the smoking flax. So another chance is given to the nation to repent during the Acts period, when once again times of refreshing and restoration would come. But hardness of heart and opposition continued. There is nothing that God can do when heart and minds are completely shut out to Him, so the book of Acts ends at chap.xxviii. with the sentence of blindness and deafness foreshadowed so many years before in Isa.vi.9-13, and warned by the Lord in Matt. xiii. 13-15. Just as their fathers were turned back into the wilderness for 40 years wandering, so Israel has wandered among the nations of the earth, persecuted and hated, and will find no rest until they recognize the Lord Jesus Christ as their King, and at last cry "Blessed is He that cometh in the Name of the Lord" (Luke xiii. 35).

Consequent upon the instructions given him by the Lord, Samuel tells the people plainly what they must expect if a king of their own choice is placed over them. Their sons and daughters would be taken as servants. Taxes would be levied on seed, crops and cattle, and after a long list of such extortions Samuel warns them: "And ye shall cry out in that day because of your king which ye shall have chosen you; and the Lord will not hear you in that day" (I Sam. viii. 18). Thus the "manner" of the king they shall have chosen in verse 11 corresponds to the "manner of the kingdom" which Samuel refers to in x. 25.

A Word in Season

"All power is given unto Me, in Heaven and in Earth" (Matthew xxviii. 18).

p. 80

The oft quoted verse 19 "Go ye . . . . . and teach all nations" etc. frequently omits the word 'therefore'. Because "all power" was His, therefore could they go. Whilst Christ lived on earth, He told them not to go into the way of the Gentiles, but only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, but, in Resurrection Power, He now includes the nations. Heaven and earth are worlds linked together very often with reference to the Millennial Kingdom, and Christ stands here, in the consciousness of the fact that He is yet to be the King on God's Holy Hill. The word "power" is frequently connected with Resurrection and the Second Coming, see Matt. vi. 13; xxiv. 30; xxvi. 64; Mark ix. 1; Romans i. 4; I Cor. xv. 43; II Cor. xiii. 4; Eph. i. 19; Phil. iii. 10 (these passages use a different word); Luke iv. 6; John x. 18; Eph. i. 21; iii. 10; vi. 12; Col. ii. 10, 15 (in these passages the same word is used as in Matt. xxviii.).

Oh for grace, even now, to remember with Whom all power is found and to "cease from man" and "lean" upon the Lord.

"What time I am afraid, I will trust in Thee" (Psalm lvi. 3).

p. 100

The above words were uttered by David in the midst of daily conflict (verses 1, 2). Trust in the Lord, is very closely related to trust in His Word. Immediately after David says "I will trust in THEE", he adds, "In God I will praise His WORD" and balances it with "In God I have put my trust" (4). Trust in the Lord and His Word dispels fear, even before deliverance itself comes. This was David's experience as may be seen from verses 10 and 11:

> "In God will I praise His Word; in the Lord will I praise His Word. In God have I put my trust; I WILL NOT BE AFRAID what man can do unto me."

We commence with "what time I am afraid", we end with "I will not be afraid". There is also a direct effect upon the cause of David's fear, as well as upon David himself:

> "When I cry, then shall mine enemies turn back" (9).

The very cry for help becomes a weapon of defence. Trust begets trust, even as fear begets fear. David's confidence grows stronger as prayer leads him to the Most High (2). He looks at what God has done in the past, and makes an Ebenezer of it, a starting point for future deliverances:

> "For Thou hast delivered my soul from death; wilt not Thou deliver my feet from falling that I may walk before God in the light of the living?" (13).

The "soul" is greater than the "feet", and 'death' is more than 'falling'. He Who delivered from death and translated into life will surely continually deliver from falling that we may walk in the light.

Psalm lvi. should be read through, noting the progress of thought. David's opponents are spoken of as 'man' and 'flesh'. David's deliverer is called "God", "The Most High", "The Lord". There are many things that occur around us that send the chill of fear into our hearts, but let us take courage and say with the Psalmist:

> "What time I am afraid, I will trust in Thee."

The Ministry of Consolation

"If the foundation be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" (Psa. cii. 7).

he Companion Bible points out that the foundations here refer not to much to buildings as to "the settled order of truth or institutions". In Isa. 19:10 the word is translated "purposes".

It is not our intention here to discuss the evident prophetic character of the Psalms, but there are few who have received the illumination of Scripture who do not realize that the foundations are being destroyed at this present time. There is also no scriptural warrant to make us expect that these foundations will ever be restored before the Lord Himself comes.

"What can the righteous do?"

It is exceedingly difficult not to attempt to do something. One will feel stirred to great activity in witness, another will seek to form a league or a crusade. All these things may be perfectly right, yet on the other hand they may be wrong. The Psalmist seems to supply the first great answer to his question "What can the righteous do?" in the very next verse. What does he say?:

"The Lord is in His holy temple, the Lord's throne is in the heavens" (verse 4).

It is evident tat something is implied between verses 3 and 4. It is as though the Psalmist said, What can the righteous do? Well, before he "does" anything let him remember this. First, his utmost "doing" is vain except the Lord deign to own it. Secondly, the crumbling foundations here do not by any means indicate that the foundations of the Lord's throne are crumbling. Heaven is higher than the earth. At the very time when the earth will be seething cauldron, ruled by a man possesses by the Devil, the throne of God will be surrounded by a sea as smooth as though made of glass. When therefore you feel that the time has come for you to "do" something in view of the breaking down of the very foundation of truth, of society, of order; just take your place in spirit for a moment there where the temple still stands unsullied and the throne unshaken.

In correspondence with the words "What can the righteous do?" come the words of verse 5, "The Lord trieth the righteous". The breaking up of the foundations is the work of the wicked (verse 6), but the Lord is overruling the work of the evil one to purge and try His people.

Think twice and thrice therefore before plunging into anything that may, after all, prove but a snare of the wicked one. Our testimony will not be less decisive because we have weighed our plans in the balance of the sanctuary:

"If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do? The Lord is in His temple. The Lord's throne is in heaven".

A word in season (Isa. 50:4)

One of the most enviable gifts that we can possess when seeking to minister to those in distress or sorrow is the ability to speak a word “in season” to him that is weary. There are many weary hearts that cry out for comfort, yet how many are rebuffed and chilled simply because the word of comfort has not been spoken “in season”. The word in season cannot be learned by rote, neither can it be acquired by an artificial means. Words that reach the heart must come from the heart.

In Isaiah 50:4 we may learn the precious secret.

1. The Tongue

> “The Lord God hath give me the tongue of the learner, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary”

The gift of tongues surely never included a more precious gift than this. It is most important for us to observed that the word rendered “learned” in the A.V. should be “learner”. Of all the people most unfit to speak to sorrowing ones is the “learned” on as such. Isaiah uses the word so rendered, four times. “Disciples” (8:16); “Taught of” (54:13); and “learned” (50:4 twice).

The learner, the one who has passed through the school of experience, is alone fitted to minister comfort to the weary. How is the tongue of the learner obtained?

2. The Ear

> “He wakeneth morning by morning, He wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learner” (Isa. 50:4)

Here is the blessed secret. The tongue is influenced by the ear. This is so in the physical world. There are many who are dumb solely because they are deaf. They do not know that they can make an articulate sound, therefore they never speak. It is the same in the spiritual world. Many a believer is dumb in testimony, in prayer, in proclamation, because he is deaf. To have the tongue of the learner we need the wakened ear. The wakened ear means more than merely “hearing”, for “to hearken” in the Scriptures includes obedience. So, in Isaiah 50:5, the opened ear is associated with meek subjection:

"The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back".

3. The Face

The tongue can only speak as the ear is opened, and the opened ear cannot be disassociated from suffering and reproach:

> "I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting" (Isa. 50:6).

The words reveal the Saviour here. He was and is the One Who preeminently has the tongue of the learner. As the great High Priest He is able to succour the tempted and tried, because He has suffered, being tempted, Himself: He does give a "word in season" to the weary. In Matthew 11:28, 29 we have those memorable words:

> "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls".

The context is instructive. The cities wherein the Lord had done many mighty works repented not. Humanly speaking His ministry had bee most discouraging. Yet:

> "AT THAT TIME Jesus answered and said, I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because Thou has hid these things from the wise and prudent, and has revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in Thy sight" (Matt. 11:25, 26).

Here is the glorious illustration of Isaiah 50. He Who was so meek and lowly that He could look up under these circumstances and say, "Even so", He was the One Who could say "Learn of Me". He could speak a word "in season" for He was not rebellious. He had the tongue because He had the ear and the heart.

Shall we not learn this lesson, and in our pilgrimage be better fitted to pour oil and wine of comfort, speaking a word in season to the weary ones whom we meet, and learning not only what but how to speak the word that shall minister true consolation?

"Fret not thyself" (Psa. 37).

The English word "fret" comes from the Anglo-Saxon fretan = to gnaw. The Hebrew word used here means to burn, to kindle (Gen. 44:18, Num. 11:33). The LXX translates the Hebrew parazeloo. This word is also used in the Greek translation of Deuteronomy 32:21, 1 Kings 14:22, and Psalm 78:58, and in the New Testament in Romans "Fret not thyself" in Psalm 37 must not be rendered by the English idea of to fret, to be peevish, to mourn, or to grieve.

One has only to look at the context of the command in Psalm 37 to see that the word contains the thought of envy and jealousy. It is not the fretting because of the wickedness of men, but fretting because of their prosperity. It is not the overburdened mourner that is addressed, but the believer, tempted by the temporal successes of the ungodly, to leave the pilgrim pathway. In verse 7 this thought finds expression:

> "Fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of they man who bringeth wicked devices to pass".

This kind of fretting leads to evil. Verse 8 shows this by immediately following with:

> "Cease from anger, and forsake wrath; fret not thyself in anywise TO DO EVIL".

This kind of fretting is the result of forgetting, and of shortness of vision. David assures us that those successful wicked men,

> "shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb" (verse 2).

Later, in verses 35 and 36, he enlarges upon this saying:

> "I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. Yet he passed away, and lo, he was not; yea, I sought him, but he could not be found".

Instead of envying the wicked and their successes, the Psalmist urges the more excellent way of trust in the Lord:

> "Delight thyself also in the Lord; and He shall give thee the DESIRES OF THINE HEART, Roll thy way upon the Lord; trust also in Him; and He shall BRING IT TO PASS…Be silent to the Lord, and wait patiently for Him" (verses 4-7)

What words are here! How they breathe the very atmosphere of quiet confidence and simple trust! "Delight thyself"; how much better this than "fretting thyself"! "Roll they way" instead of bearing the burden alone. "Be silent"; "wait patiently"; what holy calm!

Peace with God is unalterable. The enjoyment of that peace is another thing. Philippians 4:5-7 is a far-off echo of Psalm 37:

> "Be anxious for nothing, in everything by prayer...with thanksgiving…AND THE PEACE OF GOD…"

WILL OF THE LORD, THE 4

WORSHIP 189

The Will of the Lord.

Understanding what the will of the Lord is (Eph. v. 17).

pp. 59, 60

The daily walk of the Christian requires wisdom, and the A.V. says that we should walk "circumspectly", whereas the R.V. reads "carefully" (v. 15). The apostle Paul adds "Redeeming the time, because the days are evil" (16). It is suggested that this might be translated "buying up the opportunities". The present day is full of dangers, seen and unseen, and we know not for how long we shall be given opportunities to serve the Lord. Hence, the urgency to redeem the time by continued, loyal service. We should not be unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is.

Each of us needs to ask the Lord to reveal His will to us. He takes a personal interest in us, for He chose us in Him before the foundation of the world (i. 4), and He has blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ. We require wisdom so that we do not "lean on our own understanding" (Prov. iii. 5) but we desire that He will show us His will and purpose. He has planned and prepared the good works He wishes us to do (Eph. ii. 10), so we can be confident that God's plan for each one includes service to the Lord in this present day, using our God given ability.

While we are concerned to walk with the Lord and do His will, we should remember that the will of God includes both things on earth and things in heaven. Much of Eph. i. is a description of the will of the Father.

(1) We learn in Eph. i. 5 that we have been predestinated unto the adoption of children (sons) by Jesus Christ to Himself, according to the good pleasure of His will.

(2) Then, in verse 9, He has made known unto us the mystery (secret) of His will according to His good pleasure; and in the following verse, we learn that in the dispensation of the fullness of times He will gather together in one all things in Christ, both things in heaven and things on earth.

(3) This leads to a statement that we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of Him Who worketh all things after the counsel (or purpose) of His own will (11).

(4) There is a sudden change as we come to Eph. ii. 1-3. Here, Paul takes us back to "in time past". We once were children (sons) of disobedience and followed the desires (literally, the will) of the flesh. Verse 4 commences, "But God"—what a big change! For God is rich in mercy and has great love for us. He has quickened us, raised us up, and made us sit together with Christ in heavenly places.

(5) Paul was an apostle by the will of God. We are not apostles, but we can be the Lord's servants, who do the will of God from the heart (Eph. i. 6 and vi. 6).

The Greek word thelema, meaning “will”, occurs seven times in Ephesians, and forms the following outline:

A | i. 1. Apostle. By the will of God.
B | i. 5. Adoption. Good pleasure of His will.
C | i. 9. Secret of His will. Fullness of times.
D | i. 11. The counsel of His own will.
C | ii. 3. Will of the flesh.—in time past.
B | v. 17. Understanding what the will of the Lord is.
A | vi. 6. Servants of Christ. Doing the will of God.

Charles H. Welch has set out his structures on page 85 and 86 of In Heavenly Places in the following manner:

Thelema*. (will)

A1 | i. 1. Apostleship.
A2 | i. 5, 9, 11. Doctrine.

It is surprising, in one sense, to note the emphasis which the apostle Paul puts upon "joy". When we come to think of the life he lived, the nature of the revelation made known to and through him—the stewardship of the Mystery—his bonds and imprisonment, the loneliness and the abuse that seemed his daily meat, we should not be surprised, speaking after the manner of men, if "joy" never entered his vocabulary.

But, thank God, we do not speak after the manner of men, having seen enough of the grace of God to be prepared for songs in the night and psalms from the innermost prison. Again and again in the epistles to the Philippians Paul bids his readers "rejoice", even though some brethren (not merely pagan enemies) were endeavouring to add affliction to his bonds.

The ministry for which The Berean Expositor was first called into existence, and which justifies its continuance, is one so fraught with problems, and which makes such demands upon both reader and writer, that it is absolutely necessary that into all the hard study, and in some cases isolation that the truth entails, should be brought the remembrance that faith is not cold but warm and living, and that there is a "joy of faith" (Phil. i. 25), as well as the subject-matter of the faith, the fight of faith and steadfastness in the faith. Faith not only leads to justification, acceptance and life, blessings indeed beyond computation, but to "joy and peace in believing" (Rom. xv. 13) with which we should be as much filled, as "with the spirit".

Charles H. Welch

How should we esteem the authority of the Bible?

"Not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the Word of God" (I Thess. ii. 13).

A Castaway?

"… but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire" (I Cor. iii. 15).

pp. 151 - 155

The heading "A Castaway?" may possibly remind us of a popular radio programme called Desert Island Discs. It is based on the idea that the person interviewed suffers shipwreck and is a castaway on a desert island. Shipwreck is mentioned in Scripture (either factually or figuratively), and the factual example is described in detail in Acts xxvii. and xxviii. 1. But Paul says in II Cor. xi. 25 that he suffered shipwreck three times. Shipwreck is mentioned as a figure of speech in I Tim. i. 19 where Paul encourages Timothy to be faithful to the charge given to him, so that he might "war a good warfare" (18), and he gives examples of Hymenaeus and Alexander who "having put away concerning faith have made shipwreck". When one fails to hold fast to truth, this experience of shipwreck not only affects the unfaithful person, it influences others who then share spiritual shipwreck.

The castaway who reaches land despite the danger of being shipwrecked, does not carry with him all his possessions. He is saved, but suffers loss. When Paul was shipwrecked and escaped to Malta, the ship and all its cargo were lost.

The only time we read the English word "castaway" in the N.T. is in I Cor. ix. 27. Paul had been comparing the Christian life with a race. He does not run "in an uncertain" manner (26). All his energy is concentrated in an effort to win the race. His final words were "lest by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway".

This words castaway is a translation of the Greek adokimos, which means "disapproved". It is translated "rejected" in Heb. vi. 8. There are six passages where it is translated "reprobate", for example in Rom. i. 28 and II Cor. xiii. 5, 6 & 7. We quote two passages in detail:

> "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away … Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith" (II Tim. iii. 5, 7, 8).
> "They profess that they know God; but in works they deny Him, being abominable and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate" (Titus i. 16).

These two passages describe those who make a profession of faith, but who have not received and believed the truth. Their lack of faith is reflected in their manner of life. They are "corrupt, abominable, reprobate". These men are "disapproved" so that all their works are wasted. Like the castaway, they may be saved but all their work is lost.

Before we leave adokimos (disapproved) we should mention the reverse dokimos (approved), and the example that comes readily to mind is II Tim. ii. 15:

> "Study (be diligent) to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

We commented that when a traveler is shipwrecked, he usually loses all his possessions, yet he is saved. We come to a parallel passage in I Cor. iii. 10-15. Paul says he was like a wise master-builder, and he laid a good foundation. That foundation was Jesus Christ. But he warned that every man who builds on that foundation should take care, for whatever is built on it would be tested by fire.

(1) If a man built with gold, silver or precious stones, when the test of fire came, his work would abide and he would receive a reward.
(2) If the builder used wood, hay, or stubble, the fire would destroy his work and the builder would suffer loss.
(3) The builder who suffered loss through building with the wrong materials, would himself be saved, "yet, so as by fire" (I Cor. iii. 15).

Here is a picture of the Christian who believes in the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour, whose salvation is secure, but whose life of service (or lack of approved service) is tested, as it will be when we meet our Lord and Saviour face to face. In another article we have emphasized that our standing in the Lord Jesus Christ is not affected by our 'feelings', but we rely on the finished and complete work of Christ. We cannot add to His work. We are saved by grace through faith, which is the gift of God. "Not of works, lest any man should boast". But Eph. ii. 10 continues:

God has a plan for each one of us. He looks to us to serve Him with good works according to His plan. These works are not to secure our salvation, but are the fruit of our salvation. We should be like the builder who builds with gold or silver or precious stones. If we serve Him faithfully, we shall have His approval, and there is a reward for faithful service.

There is the danger that in this busy life our minds may be occupied with the things of earth, and activities of service for the Lord may be crowded out. Paul gave the Philippians a solemn warning:

> "Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an ensample. For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ: whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things" (Phil. iii. 17-19).

Their end is "destruction". This means waste, but is translated in various ways. They are not enemies of Christ, but of the cross of Christ. They do not take up the cross; they do not suffer for His sake. They will not be "destroyed", but saved "so as by fire". All their work will be wasted. There will be no reward for there will be no faithful service.

We have insufficient space to examine this word in detail, but should any reader wish to study it by examining the context where it is used we give the references below in tabular form:

Occurrences of the Greek 'apoleia'.

Translated as "Perdition" (8 times): John xvii. 12; Phil. i. 28; II Thessalonians ii. 3; I Tim. vi. 9; Heb. x. 39; II Pet. iii. 7; Rev. xvii. 8, 11.

"Destruction" (5 times): Matt. vii. 13; Rom. ix. 22; Phil. iii. 19; II Pet. ii. 1; iii. 16.

"Waste" (twice): Matt. xxvi. 8; Mark xiv. 4.

Damnable, pernicious, damnation: II Pet. ii. 1, 2, 3.

We will quote the reference in Timothy in full:

> "And having food and raiment let us be therewith content. But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition" (I Tim. vi. 8, 9).

In preaching the gospel, it is right to emphasize the great love wherewith He loved us (Eph. ii. 4). We can never be thankful enough to our God and Saviour, Who left His heavenly home and took upon Himself the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men; He became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross (Phil.ii.7,8). Why was this necessary? Disobedience had brought sin into the world. God does not view disobedience, or sin, lightly. He could not say "I forgive you" unless the debt had been paid first. So, while thanking God for His love, let us remember that sin and all that goes with it is hated by God. So in Eph. ii. there is reference to the children of disobedience and children of wrath.

Surely, as God sees our Christian lives, He must be pleased when He sees loyal and faithful service. But must He not also be displeased if He sees us slipping or failing in our witness and service?

If we study the Scripture in those places where God is said to be angry, we may be surprised. Such men as Moses, Aaron, and Solomon were loyal men serving the Lord, and we hold them in high esteem. Would we class them as men who failed? We realized that Israel as a nation often provoked the Lord and incurred His anger. It would take too much space to describe in detail the examples we have quoted, but we give a brief summary:

MOSES. "I am not eloquent … slow of speech … And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Moses" (Exod. iv. 10, 14).

MOSES. Entry into the promised land. "Also the Lord was angry with me for your sakes" (Deut. i. 37).

AARON. "And the Lord was very angry with Aaron to have destroyed him: and I prayed for Aaron also the same time" (Deut. ix. 20).

MIRIAM and AARON. "And the anger of the Lord was kindled against them" (Numbers xii. 9).

SOLOMON. "And the Lord was angry with Solomon, because his heart was turned from the Lord God of Israel" (I Kings xi. 9).

If we read Eph. v. 3-6 we are reminded of a list of evil practices which God hates, even as much as idolatry. We quote Eph. v. 6:

> "Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience."

Paul then wrote about the walk "as children of light" and verse 10 is a welcome guide:

> "proving what is acceptable unto the Lord."

This word "acceptable" is the Greek euarestos and occurs seven times. Here is another passage containing this word:

> "And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God" (Rom. xii. 2).

May we be given wisdom to walk in a way that is acceptable to the Lord, doing His will, and being obedient to Him and His word. So, when our work is tested, we may not suffer loss, but rejoice as we receive His approval.

Conduct.

pp. 121 -126

"That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man …" (Eph. iv. 22).

Some of our readers may not have seen the series of articles by Stuart Allen entitled "Archaic and Obsolete Words of the Authorized Version" which appeared in The Berean Expositor about ten years ago. In Volume XLVIII, page 197, there is a paragraph headed "conversation", in which he points out that in 1611 conversation always referred to conduct or manner of life, and not merely to talking.

The Greek word anastrophe occurs thirteen times in the New Testament, of which six are in I Peter, two in II Peter, and five in other epistles. Both Dr. Robert Young and Dr. E. W. Bullinger agree that this word should be translated behavior, or manner of life, or conduct. In fact, it has been translated "conversation".

Another word anastrepho occurs eleven times, and in two passages it is translated "have one's conversation". An examples may be seen in II Cor. i. 12.

As I Peter contains most of the occurrences of "conversation" we will look at those first. To appreciate the context, we observe that I Pet. i. 7 speaks of the "trial of your faith", though it be "tried with fire", and in I Pet. iv. 12 "think it not strange concerning the fiery trial". There are frequent references to suffering, and in I Pet. iv. 13 Peter writes of being partakers of Christ's sufferings.

When Peter addressed the people in Solomon's porch of the temple, after the lame man had been healed, he called on them to repent, and promised that their repentance would be followed by the return of Jesus Christ. Peter therefore expected that the day of the Lord would come soon. There would be judgment and a time of testing or trial. This should be kept in mind when reading all the epistles written during the "Acts period". Let us now review the six passages in I Peter:

> "But as He which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation (conduct); because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy" (i. 15, 16).

The verses leading up to this quotation exhort that "having girded up the loins of your minds", the readers should be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to come at the revelation of Jesus Christ. In their conduct they should be obedient, and discourage those desires that they used to have through ignorance.

> "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation (conduct) received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ" (i. 18, 19).

These verses speak for themselves. The Jews were educated to respect their traditions handed down from generation to generation, but now their salvation depended on the finished work of Christ. The effect on their conduct should be "to love one another with a pure heart fervently" (22, 23).

> "Having your conversation (conduct) honest among the Gentiles: that, whereas they speak against you as evildoers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation" (ii. 12).

They may be wrongly accused of evil, but if their conduct is honest and good, their good works would be evidence which enemies could not ignore, and in the end God would be glorified. In verse 13 Peter states that they should submit to every human institution for the sake of the Lord.

> "Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation (conduct) of the wives" (iii. 1).

Thus, if a wife has been converted but the husband remains an unbeliever, the faithful conduct of the wife may be a means that the Lord may use in the conversion of the husband.

> "While they behold your chaste conversation (conduct) coupled with fear" (iii. 2).

This verse of course follows on from our previous quotation. In the verses that follow, we have a more detailed description of the kind of conduct that Peter advises, and he gives examples of O.T. characters such as Sarah. The Christian wife should avoid outward show, in dress, hair style, or wearing of jewels. What matters is the inward part, the heart, and in God's sight a meek and quiet spirit is "of great price" (4).

> "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts … having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation (conduct) in Christ" (iii. 15, 16).

Peter goes on to say that it is better to suffer for well doing than for evil doing. Christ Himself suffered for our sins, the jut for the unjust (18).

It is interesting to compare these six passages to ascertain any pattern. Probably there are alternative structures, but the following introversion may be one solution:

A | i. 15. Obedient children.
Be holy in all conduct.
B | i. 18. Vain conduct, tradition.
Redeemed. Precious blood of Christ.
C | ii. 12. Conduct among Gentiles.
Submit.
C | iii. 1. Conduct of wives.
Submit.
B | iii. 2. Chaste conduct—fear.
Meek and quiet spirit "of great price".
A | iii. 16. Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts.
Your good conduct in Christ.

We will now refer briefly to the two passages in II Peter:

> "And delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation (conduct) of the wicked" (II Pet. ii. 7).

In verse 8, Peter gives a picture of righteous Lot, hearing and seeing the unlawful and wicked deeds of the dwellers in Sodom and Gomorrha, who was vexed (or tormented) thereby. In the present day we live in an immoral world, and to some extent share with Lot the vexation that comes through seeing in the newspapers, or on television, the evil practices that have become commonplace. Surely we live in perilous times.

> "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation (conduct) and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God" (iii. 11, 12).

Peter gives a picture of the destruction of the heavens and earth by fire. As there are various hopes, we may meet Christ and acknowledge Him as Head of the Church which is His Body, or we may have a place in the Heavenly Jerusalem (Christ being the chief corner stone). Others may meet Him as King in His Kingdom ("Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven"), but whatever our hope or relationship with Christ may be, we all share the hope that we shall see Him face to face. And when we see Him face to face, shall we rejoice or shall we be ashamed? What manner of conduct is worthy of our hope? If we live in close communion with our Lord Jesus Christ, we should become more like Him and others should see the reflection of Christ in us. What manner of persons should we be? Let us remember that God foreknew us, and He predestinated us to be conformed to the image of His Son (Rom. viii. 29).

To complete our study, we now turn to the remaining five passages:

> "Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the Word of God: whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation (conduct)" (Hebrews xiii. 7, A.V.).
>
> "Remember your leaders, those who spoke to you the Word of God; consider the outcome of their life, and imitate their faith" (R.V.).

We should support our spiritual leaders both in prayer and in practical ways. The ministry of our leaders is based on the Word of God, but here Paul is saying that ministry consists firstly of spoken ministry of the Word, and secondly, of a manner of life or conduct which is a vital part of ministry. The behaviour of our leaders should be such that we should endeavour to imitate them and glorify God in our manner of life, or conduct.

> "Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? let him show out of a good conversation (conduct) his works with meekness of wisdom" (James iii. 13).

In this chapter, James has been writing about the unruly tongue. It is a small member, but what great things it can achieve! How much damage can be caused by a little fire! (James iii. 5, 6). The tongue gives expression to our thoughts, both good and bad. May God give us wisdom which may bear fruit in our lives and produce a manner of life and good conduct which shall be to the honour and glory of Christ.

> "For ye have heard of my conversation (conduct) in time past in the Jews' religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God, and wasted it" (Gal. i. 13).

Paul was always conscious of his past life, for he had been an ardent Pharisee. He wrote in I Cor. xv. 9 "For I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God". The phrase "in time past" in the quotation from Galatians above reminds us of Eph. ii. 2, where it says that in time past we walked according to the course of this world. We can all praise God for His grace, for His redemption, for the forgiveness of sins, and pray that we may in our conduct or walk, live worthily of our calling.

> "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation (conduct), in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity" (I Tim. iv. 12).

Paul encourages Timothy and gives helpful advice. As we have seen in other references, the manner of life (conduct) should be an example to others, and should exhibit love and faith. The Word of God is the basis of his spiritual life and his ministry.

> "That ye put off concerning the former conversation (conduct) the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts" (Eph. iv. 22), and Paul continues "and be renewed in the spirit of your mind". Then he adds "and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness".

Ephesians iv.-vi. deals with the practical aspect of truth for the present day, and in these few verses we have the very basis of our salvation and our faith. Our conduct in time past was according to the old nature, or the old man. Now, we are renewed by the Holy Spirit and we put on the new man, which is a new creation. As we live by God's grace and are enjoying the renewal of the spirit of our mind, our lives should reflect that grace to His honour and glory. So our conduct should be to His praise.

This article would be incomplete if we failed to mention that there are two Greek words translated "conversation" with a meaning different from the passages we have been studying. Politeuma occurs only once and is translated conversation. It means citizenship or commonwealth:

> "For our conversation (citizenship) is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ" (Phil. iii. 20).

The other word, politeuo, means "to act as a citizen" and we quote:

> "Only let your conversation (action bearing in mind your citizenship) be as it becometh the gospel of Christ" (Phil. i. 27).

Our hope is to be realized in the heavenly places where we sit at the right hand of God. We are citizens of heaven, and we therefore should not live as citizens of earth, but of heaven. We rejoice in the blessings that the Scriptures describe, but the greater our knowledge, the greater our blessing, then, the greater is our responsibility. Our conduct should balance our vocation. If the vocation is great, so must our conduct be. How we need to pray for all-sufficient grace, that we may conduct ourselves worthily of our high calling.

(II Cor. i. 12) For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward.

(Gal. i. 13) For ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews' religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God, and wasted it:

(Eph. ii. 3) Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others.

(Eph. iv. 22) That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts;

(I Tim. iv. 12) Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

(Heb. xiii. 7) Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God: whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation.

(James iii. 13) Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? let him shew out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom.

(I Pet. i. 15) But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation;

(I Pet. i. 18) Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers;

(I Pet. ii. 12) Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles: that, whereas they speak against you as evildoers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation.

(I Pet. iii. 1) Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives;

(I Pet. iii. 2) While they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear.

(I Pet. iii. 16) Having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ.

(II Pet. ii. 7) And delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked:

(II Pet. iii. 11) Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness,

(Phil. i. 27) Only let your conversation (politeuo) be as it becometh the gospel of Christ: that whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel;

(Phil. iii. 20) For our conversation (politeuma, citizenship or commonwealth) is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ:

Election, and God's Kingdom Purpose.

pp. 126 - 132

The doctrines of election and predestination have always given rise to difficulties among Christians. The endless debates about election and free will have led to divisions between the children of God, yet we have to face the fact that serious study of the Word of God is impossible when election is ignored, for it occurs frequently in both the Old and New Testaments and occupies a most important place in the purposes of God. A serious mistake has been made in teaching that the Word of God restricts election to one thing only, namely salvation. Those who assert this should use a concordance and note the number of times the word election is connected directly with salvation alone, and they will certainly be surprised at what they find.

We need to recognize that the Bible is not just a haphazard collection of books under one cover. It is a divine unity revealing a tremendous plan that God is carrying out. Once this is perceived, one has a solid basis for understanding the Word of God. With this we must link God's almighty power and His sovereignty. It is so easy to make plans and then be unable to carry them out for various reasons, inability being one of them. With His plan, God has made certain promises and these are absolutely secure because He is almighty and omniscient, knowing all the future as well as the past.

We need to be like Abraham who, as Paul tells us, was fully convinced that God was able to do what He had promised (Rom. iv. 21) even though the outward circumstances seemingly made the fulfillment impossible, for God had promised him a son, yet he himself was physically incapable of having one.

God revealed Himself to Jacob at Bethel in a dream and finished by promising "I will not leave you until I have done all that I have promised" (Gen. xxviii. 15, N.E.B.). Job knew that God always kept His word, for he said "I know that you can do all things; no plan of yours can be thwarted" (Job xlii. 2, N.I.V.). Later on, the prophets gave witness to the same thing. God says, "I am He … Who confirms the word of My servant and makes the plan of My envoys succeed" (Isa. xliv. 26, Jerusalem Bible). Also in this prophecy He is recorded as saying "Have you not heard long ago? I did it all. In days gone by I planned it and now I have brought it to pass" (Isa. xxxvii. 26, N.E.B.). And further on we read that God said "I am God, and there is no one like Me. I reveal the end from the beginning, from ancient times I reveal what is to be. I say, My purpose shall take effect … I have spoken and I will bring about it. I have a plan to carry out and carry it out I will" (Isa. xlvi. 10, 11, N.E.B.). We may remember too the well known words of Isa. lv. 8-11, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways … So is My word that goes out from My mouth; it will not return to Me empty, but will accomplish what I desire and achieve the purpose for which I sent it" (N.I.V.).

God told Jeremiah at the beginning of his ministry after he declared that he had seen the vision of the almond tree, "The Lord said to me, you have seen correctly, for I am watching to see that My Word is fulfilled" (Jer. i. 12, N.I.V.). "For I know the plans I have for you", declares the Lord, "plans to prosper you and not to harm you, plans to give you hope and a future" (Jer. xxix. 11, N.I.V.). Ezekiel records the words of God, "I the Lord have spoken, and I will do it" (Ezek. xxii. 14; xxxvi. 36).

These Scriptures make it abundantly clear that God is not working in a haphazard way. He has a master plan which He conceived in past eternity. It is centred in Christ and what He would accomplish in His earthly life and witness. Eph. iii. 11 A.V. refers to it as "His eternal purpose which He purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord", literally the "plan of the ages", the ages being the time when the gigantic plan is being worked out by God. He has the power, the wisdom and the foresight to bring this plan to a certain and glorious goal, and not all the opposition of Satan, the powers of darkness, and the unbelieving world energized by him, can prevent this from being accomplished. Even the pagan king of Babylon, Nebuchadnezzar, had to learn this lesson. When God had finished dealing with him, he declared, "He does according to His will in the host of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth; none can stay His hand or say to Him 'What doest Thou?'." (Dan. iv. 35).

God never needs to modify His plans, nor can anyone accuse Him of wrongdoing in carrying them out. Moses certainly stated the truth when he said "Oh, praise the greatness of our God! He is the Rock, His works are perfect and all His ways are just. A faithful God Who does no wrong, upright and just is He" (Deut. xxxii. 3, 4, N.I.V.). It is this One Who, later on, was revealed in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ, Whom the apostle Paul described as "our great God and Saviour, Jesus Christ" (Titus ii. 13), and it is His master plan we are considering, and we shall find that this plan is eternally linked with God's great kingdom which finally finds its complete expression in the "new heavens and a new earth" which God will create when this present universe ceases to exist (II Pet. iii. 10-13). However, we must be very careful not to exceed the revelation of holy Scriptures concerning this kingdom, nor on the other hand to lessen what is revealed therein.

We may be sure that the fall of Satan and his angels, and then the fall of Adam, greatly complicated matters, for sin and death would certainly find no place in the great kingdom of God; and death is an enemy till the last (I Cor. xv. 26). Hence the need for the redemptive work of the Lord Jesus to remove these barriers to God's purpose:

> "For God designed Him to be the means of expiating sin by His sacrificial death, effective through faith" (Rom. iii. 25, N.E.B.).

Protithemi, a verb meaning to purpose or plan (translated "designed") shows us that this all-necessary redemption was an essential part of God's plan, otherwise any sinner could never have a place in God's perfect kingdom.

> "… God, Who hath saved us and called us to a holy life—not because of anything we have done but because of His own purpose and grace …" (II Tim. i. 8, 9).
> "We know that in all things God works for the good of those who love Him, who have been called according to His purpose" (Rom. viii. 28).

It is important to realize that the kingdom of God is wider than rule over the earth. Too often it is restricted in this way. But the Word of God reveals that this great kingdom includes the heavens (see the author's The Kingdom of God in Heaven and on Earth). In considering the kingdom theme we shall discover that election is connected with each phase of the kingdom. In the earthly part of the kingdom of God, the people of Israel dominate, but God's purposes cannot be restricted to them, for God wills that Gentile nations will be blessed with them so that finally God will be King of all the earth (Zech. xiv. 9), "…For the earth shall be full of knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Isa. xi. 9, A.V.).

To attain this, God plans to use Israel as a channel to reach the nations, so first of all He chooses or elects them:

> "The Lord did not set His love upon you, nor choose (elect) you, because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people" (Deut. vii. 7, A.V.).
>
> "The Lord has declared this day that you are His people, His treasured possession as He promised … He has declared that He will set you in praise, fame, and honour high above all the nations He has made and that you will be a people holy to the Lord your God as He promised" (Deut. xxvi. 18, 19, N.I.V.).
>
> "If you fully obey the Lord your God and carefully follow all His commands that I give you today, the Lord your God will set you high above all the nations on earth" (Deut. xxviii. 1, N.I.V. and see verse 13).
>
> "He (God) has revealed His word to Jacob, His laws and decrees to Israel. He has done this for no other nation; they do not know His laws" (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, N.I.V.).

See also Deut. iv. 37; xiv. 2; Psa. cxxxv. 4; Isa. xli. 8; xlv. 4; lxv. 9, 22.

God's plan in all this was expressed by Paul when he warned the opposing Jews at Pisidian Antioch that he would turn from them to the Gentiles because of their opposition. Yet concerning their Messiah and them he quoted:

> "I have made you a light for the Gentiles that you may bring salvation to the ends of the earth" (Acts xiii. 47, N.I.V.).

But it may be objected that these promises to Israel were conditional. So they were, and if this summed up God's dealings with Israel, there would be no future for them. But through Jeremiah, God revealed His purposes of grace to this undeserving people, by making a New Covenant with them. This was to take the place of the Old Covenant of Law given through Moses (Jer. xxxi. 31-37). This is a long passage and the reader should carefully ponder over these verses. God says He will make a New Covenant with the house of Israel and Judah. It would not be conditional like the Old Covenant of Law, because God would impress His law (His truth) on their minds and they would get to know Him from the least to the greatest. He would forgive their wickedness and remember their sins no more. He makes the challenge and says that if the creation of day and night, earth and heaven, could be made to vanish; then the descendants of Israel would cease for ever to be a nation before Him. Or if the foundations of the earth could be searched out and the heavens above be measured, then, says God, "I will reject all the descendants of Israel because of all they have done".

The covenant was ratified by the shed blood of Christ:

> "In the same way, after the supper He took the cup, saying, This cup is the new covenant in My blood, which is poured out for you" (Luke xxii. 20, N.I.V.).

And the reader should carefully note what is written about the New Covenant in the epistle to the Hebrews (chapters ix. and x.).

There can be no doubt there must be a future restoration of Israel, for this rests on the New Covenant of grace and the shed blood of Calvary. Rom. xi. seals all this by the Apostle telling us that all Israel will be finally saved because of this covenant with them (Rom. xi. 25-29) and the fact that God's gifts and His unconditional promises are irrevocable. They cannot be changed or wiped out. All this cancels the idea held by many that because of their failure, there is no future for the nation of Israel and all their blessings have now been handed over to the church and they are the spiritual Israel. Such teaching is quite unscriptural and therefore wrong. What we must not miss is the fact that Israel were an elect people and although they have failed in the past and spiritual blindness has come upon them, this is not for ever, but only "until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in" (xi. 25, 26). At the Lord's Second Coming, the blindness will be taken away, the nation will be saved and become a channel of blessing to all the earth.

There is another Scriptural fact we must not forget, and that is God never leaves Himself without a witness. In the darkest times of Israel's apostasy there was always a godly remnant who were faithful. This is what Elijah had to be reminded of (xi. 2-5), and this was true during the period covered by the Acts of the Apostles during which Israel, in the mercy of God, was given another opportunity to repent, in which case their sins (including the killing of their Messiah and King) would be forgiven and He would return to them and the kingdom promises, spoken of by all the holy prophets, could then be fulfilled (Acts iii. 17-26); a passage of Scripture of great importance which is usually overlooked. It is noteworthy that election is linked with this remnant, "even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace" (Rom. xi. 5).

After the failure of Israel at the end of the Acts, we have the revelation of a new creation, a new Man (Eph. ii. 11-16) consisting of a number taken from Jews and Gentiles. They were elected by the Father before the foundation of the world (Eph. i. 4) and are identified with Christ in His death, resurrection and ascension (Eph. ii. 4-6), for they are seen here as enthroned with Christ in the highest glory "far above all". No wonder they are exhorted to set their hearts on things above where Christ is seated at the right hand of God and not on earthly things! (Col. iii. 1, 2).

Thus we see that the wide plan of god embracing the highest heavens down to earth is under-girded as it were by God's elective choice, for He has not only conceived this great plan which embraces the whole universe of a new heaven and a new earth, but He has selected those who take their part in the establishment of this plan and we can be sure that an all-wise God has chosen the right people to do this!

As an earthly example, it is like a person owning a piece of land which he wants to develop. So he plans to do this, and to carry it out he employs others to assist in the work. He chooses (elects) certain firms whom he feels will produce the best work for him, and provided that he does not infringe the law in what he plans, he cannot be criticized. He cannot employ everybody! Yet, when God does something similar to this He is judged to be unfair because He elects some and leaves out others! Not only this, but these critics confine election to salvation and nothing else, whereas we have seen that it goes far wider. Of course it includes salvation, for those whom God has selected have become involved in sin and death and these must be removed, otherwise the divine kingdom plan can never be realized.

This realization awaits the creation of new heavens and earth wherein dwelleth righteousness (II Pet. iii. 13). These are spotless and perfect with spotless and perfect beings in them and so it is here that the final kingdom of God is realized and God's perfect rule and control will be supreme with nothing to spoil it.

We must not confuse the 1,000 year reign of Christ (the millennium) with this final phase of the kingdom of God for the millennium takes place in the present heaven and earth at the return of Christ and can be called the most favoured age since the fall of man. There will be universal peace, but sin and death are still there, so it cannot be the fulfillment of the perfect kingdom.

Ephesians i. looks forward to a time when all in heaven and on earth will be brought under the headship of Christ and then there will be perfect unity. The N.I.V. renders it "to bring all things in heaven and on earth together under one Head, even Christ" (i. 10). "Gather together in one" of the A.V. is literally "head up again" in Christ. Phil. ii. 5-11 N.I.V. reveals the time when Christ is exalted to the highest place and then when every knee shall bow in heaven, earth, and even under the earth and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord (Jehovah). This will be to the glory of God the Father.

Here the divine plan comes to a glorious conclusion. As Ezekiel was told, God is carefully watching over His plan as it is fulfilled step by step. His sovereignty allows nothing to frustrate it. The eternal reign of God will fulfil to His eternal glory.

Election, and God's Kingdom Purpose.

But the Word of God reveals that this great kingdom includes the heavens (see the author's The Kingdom of God in Heaven and on Earth). In considering the kingdom theme we shall discover that election is connected with each phase of the kingdom. In the earthly part of the kingdom of God, the people of Israel dominate, but God's purposes cannot be restricted to them, for God wills that Gentile nations will be blessed with them so that finally God will be King of all the earth (Zech. xiv. 9), "…For the earth shall be full of knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Isa. xi. 9, A.V.).

To attain this, God plans to use Israel as a channel to reach the nations, so first of all He chooses or elects them:

> "The Lord did not set His love upon you, nor choose (elect) you, because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people" (Deut. vii. 7, A.V.).
>
> "The Lord has declared this day that you are His people, His treasured possession as He promised … He has declared that He will set you in praise, fame, and honour high above all the nations He has made and that you will be a people holy to the Lord your God as He promised" (Deut. xxvi. 18, 19, N.I.V.).
>
> "If you fully obey the Lord your God and carefully follow all His commands that I give you today, the Lord your God will set you high above all the nations on earth" (Deut. xxviii. 1, N.I.V. and see verse 13).
>
> "He (God) has revealed His word to Jacob, His laws and decrees to Israel. He has done this for no other nation; they do not know His laws" (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, N.I.V.).

See also Deut. iv. 37; xiv. 2; Psa. cxxxv. 4; Isa. xli. 8; xlv. 4; lxv. 9, 22.

God's plan in all this was expressed by Paul when he warned the opposing Jews at Pisidian Antioch that he would turn from them to the Gentiles because of their opposition. Yet concerning their Messiah and them he quoted:

> "I have made you a light for the Gentiles that you may bring salvation to the ends of the earth" (Acts xiii. 47, N.I.V.).

But it may be objected that these promises to Israel were conditional. So they were, and if this summed up God's dealings with Israel, there would be no future for them. But through Jeremiah, God revealed His purposes of grace to this undeserving people, by making a New Covenant with them. This was to take the place of the Old Covenant of Law given through Moses (Jer. xxxi. 31-37). This is a long passage and the reader should carefully ponder over these verses. God says He will make a New Covenant with the house of Israel and Judah. It would not be conditional like the Old Covenant of Law, because God would impress His law (His truth) on their minds and they would get to know Him from the least to the greatest. He would forgive their wickedness and remember their sins no more. He makes the challenge and says that if the creation of day and night, earth and heaven, could be made to vanish; then the descendants of Israel would cease for ever to be a nation before Him. Or if the foundations of the earth could be searched out and the heavens above be measured, then, says God, "I will reject all the descendants of Israel because of all they have done".

The covenant was ratified by the shed blood of Christ:

> "In the same way, after the supper He took the cup, saying, This cup is the new covenant in My blood, which is poured out for you" (Luke xxii. 20, N.I.V.).

And the reader should carefully note what is written about the New Covenant in the epistle to the Hebrews (chapters ix. and x.).

There can be no doubt there must be a future restoration of Israel, for this rests on the New Covenant of grace and the shed blood of Calvary. Rom. xi. seals all this by the Apostle telling us that all Israel will be finally saved because of this covenant with them (Rom. xi. 25-29) and the fact that God's gifts and His unconditional promises are irrevocable. They cannot be changed or wiped out. All this cancels the idea held by many that because of their failure, there is no future for the nation of Israel and all their blessings have now been handed over to the church and they are the spiritual Israel. Such teaching is quite unscriptural and therefore wrong. What we must not miss is the fact that Israel were an elect people and although they have failed in the past and spiritual blindness has come upon them, this is not for ever, but only "until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in" (xi. 25, 26). At the Lord's Second Coming, the blindness will be taken away, the nation will be saved and become a channel of blessing to all the earth.

There is another Scriptural fact we must not forget, and that is God never leaves Himself without a witness. In the darkest times of Israel's apostasy there was always a godly remnant who were faithful. This is what Elijah had to be reminded of (xi. 2-5), and this was true during the period covered by the Acts of the Apostles during which Israel, in the mercy of God, was given another opportunity to repent, in which case their sins (including the killing of their Messiah and King) would be forgiven and He would return to them and the kingdom promises, spoken of by all the holy prophets, could then be fulfilled (Acts iii. 17-26); a passage of Scripture of great importance which is usually overlooked. It is noteworthy that election is linked with this remnant, "even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace" (Rom. xi. 5).

After the failure of Israel at the end of the Acts, we have the revelation of a new creation, a new Man (Eph. ii. 11-16) consisting of a number taken from Jews and Gentiles. They were elected by the Father before the foundation of the world (Eph. i. 4) and are identified with Christ in His death, resurrection and ascension (Eph. ii. 4-6), for they are seen here as enthroned with Christ in the highest glory "far above all". No wonder they are exhorted to set their hearts on things above where Christ is seated at the right hand of God and not on earthly things! (Col. iii. 1, 2).

Thus we see that the wide plan of god embracing the highest heavens down to earth is under-girded as it were by God's elective choice, for He has not only conceived this great plan which embraces the whole universe of a new heaven and a new earth, but He has selected those who take their part in the establishment of this plan and we can be sure that an all-wise God has chosen the right people to do this!

As an earthly example, it is like a person owning a piece of land which he wants to develop. So he plans to do this, and to carry it out he employs others to assist in the work. He chooses (elects) certain firms whom he feels will produce the best work for him, and provided that he does not infringe the law in what he plans, he cannot be criticized. He cannot employ everybody! Yet, when God does something similar to this He is judged to be unfair because He elects some and leaves out others! Not only this, but these critics confine election to salvation and nothing else, whereas we have seen that it goes far wider. Of course it includes salvation, for those whom God has selected have become involved in sin and death and these must be removed, otherwise the divine kingdom plan can never be realized.

This realization awaits the creation of new heavens and earth wherein dwelleth righteousness (II Pet. iii. 13). These are spotless and perfect with spotless and perfect beings in them and so it is here that the final kingdom of God is realized and God's perfect rule and control will be supreme with nothing to spoil it.

We must not confuse the 1,000 year reign of Christ (the millennium) with this final phase of the kingdom of God for the millennium takes place in the present heaven and earth at the return of Christ and can be called the most favoured age since the fall of man. There will be universal peace, but sin and death are still there, so it cannot be the fulfillment of the perfect kingdom.

Ephesians i. looks forward to a time when all in heaven and on earth will be brought under the headship of Christ and then there will be perfect unity. The N.I.V. renders it "to bring all things in heaven and on earth together under one Head, even Christ" (i. 10). "Gather together in one" of the A.V. is literally "head up again" in Christ. Phil. ii. 5-11 N.I.V. reveals the time when Christ is exalted to the highest place and then when every knee shall bow in heaven, earth, and even under the earth and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord (Jehovah). This will be to the glory of God the Father.

Here the divine plan comes to a glorious conclusion. As Ezekiel was told, God is carefully watching over His plan as it is fulfilled step by step. His sovereignty allows nothing to frustrate it. The eternal reign of God will fulfil to His eternal glory.

"They took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus" (Acts iv. 13).

It is unlikely that we realize the extent to which we influence the lives of others. We move in several circles; if we are in business or employed in some way, we meet with certain people every day and others less frequently. So we have opportunities of influencing people and they may influence us. What we say might influence others, but what we are is more likely to exert a strong influence. Indeed our very personality creates an atmosphere, even if our minds are concentrating on the business in hand. Similarly, in our home life, we affect those at home not only by our words but by our actions.

Christians have need of fellowship, so that they are built up and together the group becomes stronger in faith. As we grow in grace, our influence becomes stronger and we witness to our faith, and to the Lord Jesus Christ, our Saviour and Lord. In Hebrews we read:

> "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; (for He is faithful that promised;) And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching" (Heb. x. 23-25).

Some of us do not have the opportunity of assembling with others of like precious faith and it may be that age or health prevents us from meeting together. We should bear in mind the need of fellowship and ask the Lord for guidance. We should be careful as we choose our friends, for our spiritual life may be affected by them. James wrote, "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God" (James iv. 4).

Peter, writing to the dispersion, was anxious that the Jews should exert a good influence on the Gentiles:

> "Maintain good conduct among the Gentiles, so that in case they speak against you as wrongdoers, they may see your good deeds and glorify God on the day of visitation" (I.Pet.ii.12, R.S.V.).

Although Jesus Christ had told His disciples that He must suffer, be killed and on the third day rise again, when He was betrayed, arrested, crucified and buried, the disciples were bewildered (Matt. xvi. 21). Two disciples walking to Emmaus, described their feelings (Luke xxiv. 19-21), but the risen Christ appeared to the disciples and promised that they would receive "power after the Holy Ghost is come unto you" (Acts i. 8). So, after the day of Pentecost the disciples were no longer weak and dispirited, but were strong and full of the Holy Ghost.

Peter, who previously had denied his Lord, was boldly declaring that Jesus Christ, the Messiah, had risen from the dead and he called on the nation to repent (Acts ii. 38). The bold witness of Peter and John worried the priests, the authorities of the Temple and of the Sadducees (Acts iv. 1), and they observed that they were "unlearned and ignorant men" (13). They were amazed at their witness but they "took knowledge that they had been with Jesus". The council had to admit that a wonderful miracle had taken place as the lame man was healed, so they could only threaten Peter and John.

This is a special example of the power which came upon Peter and others as they witnessed to the resurrection of Jesus Christ, but in a lesser manner we in our turn may be witnesses to our Lord and to the faith.

Peter exclaims, "What manner of persons ought we to be?". He had been writing about the Day of the Lord, and then we read:

> "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness" (II Pet. iii. 11).

Two other Scriptures are worthy of mention. Christ was with His disciples in a boat when He fell asleep. A terrific storm arose and the boat began to sink, for it was overwhelmed by the sea. The disciples woke up the Lord saying, "Lord, save us: we perish". He rebuked the wind and the sea and there was great calm. The men marveled and said, "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey Him!" (Matthew viii. 27). The disciples still regarded Christ as a man and did not at that time realize that He was God, manifest in the flesh.

Paul uses a similar phrase to show with what power the gospel was preached and its effect. His own words speak for themselves:

> "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance; as ye know what manner of man we were among you for your sake. And ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost: so that ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia" (I Thess. i. 5-7).

The word "ensample" is archaic and we do not use it today. We can replace it by the common word "example". There are four Greek words, sometimes translated example and sometimes ensample. One of these Greek words is tupos, which is interesting as it is translated in the A.V. as example, ensample, pattern, figure, print, fashion, form and manner. It is recorded that Thomas said of the risen Lord, "Except I shall see in His hands the print of the nails …", and here "print" is the Greek tupos (John xx. 25). Another example of its use is in Titus ii. 7 where Paul exhorts Titus, "In all things shewing thyself a pattern of good works".

Peter gave advice to servants to be subject to their masters, whether good or overbearing. If a servant does wrong, and takes his punishment with patience, can he claim any credit? But if the servant is caused to suffer for doing well, he will have God's approval if he endures it patiently:

> "but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable to God. For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow His steps" (I Pet. ii. 20, 21).

The Lord Himself is our supreme example. He suffered for our sakes, "Who did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth" (22). Paul described how Christ left His heavenly home and gave His all for us, humbling Himself and becoming obedient unto death (Phil. ii. 5-11). He was an example to His disciples when He washed their feet:

> "For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you" (John xiii. 15).

Peter advised the elders to feed the flock, but to keep humble as they did the Lord's work. They should be an example to others:

> "Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock" (I Pet. v. 3).

The example to which Paul refers in his First Epistle to Timothy is not to his own conduct, but to God's mercy and grace. He was deeply conscious of the evil he had done in persecuting the church, but God knew he did it through ignorance, and He was merciful. Paul asserted that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, adding, "of whom I am chief" (I Tim. i. 15). He was an example (or pattern, for hupotuposis is used) to all sinners who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour:

> "Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all longsuffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on Him to life everlasting" (I Tim. i. 16).

But in Paul's Epistle to the Thessalonians, he does use the Greek word tupos in the context of his own conduct being an example for others to follow. He writes about the need to be honest and orderly, and working to provide for daily needs. "If any would not work, neither should he eat", he wrote (II Thess. iii. 10-12). He explains how he made himself an example to others:

> "Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but wrought with labour and travail night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you: Not because we have power, but to make ourselves an ensample unto you to follow us" (II Thess. iii. 8, 9).

Paul gave similar advice to Timothy, that his conduct might be an example to believers. Again he uses the Greek word tupos:

> "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. Till I come, give attendance to reading …" (I Tim. iv. 12, 13).

There is one more reference to complete our study of examples or patterns. In Phil.iii., Paul explains how he was pressing toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus (iii. 10-15). Should our minds not be fully in line with the will of God, He will reveal even this, Paul declares:

> "Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing. Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an ensample" (Phil. iii. 16, 17).

Once again Paul uses the Greek tupos and we should regard him as our pattern, and run the heavenly race as he did.

In Phil. ii. 12 Paul urges, "work out your own salvation with fear and trembling". He encourages them by adding, "For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure", and that they should shine as lights in the world. The margin gives the alternative, "shine ye as lights …". The whole verse reads:

> "That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world;" (Phil. ii. 15).

In Matt. v. 14-16, in the course of the sermon on the mount, Christ told His disciples that they were the light of the world: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (16). The truth that believers should shine as lights in the world extends to all, and is not restricted to one dispensation. It is "basic truth".

What manner of persons should we be? What difference does it make if Christ dwells in our hearts by faith? We are like lamps, carrying the light. Surely if we are light bearers, at least a glimmer of that light should show in our personality! If we are conformed to "the image of His Son", we should in some measure reflect the image of our Lord (Rom. viii. 29). Are we living so close to our Lord and Saviour, and our Head, that those who meet us "take knowledge" that we are Christians?

The First Place.

pp. 155 - 159

"that in all things He might have the pre-eminence" (Col. i. 18).

The above quotation is taken from the A.V. Paul expresses his conviction that in every thing the Lord Jesus Christ should be pre-eminent. If we are able to look up the passage in The Englishman's Greek New Testament, with interlinear literal translation, we will find the following:

> "And He is the Head of the body, the assembly; Who is (the) beginning, first born from among the dead, that He might be in all things holding the first place; because in Him all the fullness was pleased to dwell" (Col. i. 18, 19).

In Letters From Prison, page 129, Stuart Allen gives "the first place" as a suitable translation.

In the context, we have the reasons set out which we will consider later, but first let us remind ourselves of other passages of Scripture which provide a useful background. There are other Scriptures which show that Christ is supreme, and which refer to Him before He appeared on the earth. In John's Gospel we read that the Word was God. All things were made by Him, so He was the Creator. The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us (John i. 1, 3, 14). Then if we refer to John xvii. 1-5, and read our Lord's wonderful prayer, we observe the prayer commences "Father, the hour is come; glorify Thy Son, that Thy Son also may glorify Thee …".

> "And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was" (xvii. 5).

Here we have a glimpse of the glory which the Word had even before the world was made. John i. reveals that all things were made by the Word and without Him was not any thing made that was made. So we have a view of a supreme Creator Who laid aside His glory and came down to this earth for our sakes that we might be redeemed.

Another passage which is important is Phil. ii. 5-11. Here we find Christ's humiliation described in some detail. Christ Jesus, being in the "form of God" (or having the status of God), took upon Him the "form of a servant" and was made in the likeness of men. He humbled Himself even more, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Then we read of His exaltation, and how He will be supreme. "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given Him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus, every knee should bow, and … every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father".

We will now consider the context of Col. i. 18:

> "In Whom (Christ) we have redemption through His blood, even the forgiveness of sins: Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: for by Him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, > whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by Him and for Him: and He is before all things, and by Him all things consist. And He is the Head of the body, the church: Who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things He might have the pre-eminence" (Col. i. 14-18).

We notice that Jesus Christ is the image of the invisible God. Jesus said that no man has seen the Father (John vi. 46). Philip asked the Lord on another occasion, "Shew us the Father and it sufficeth us" (John xiv. 8), and in reply our Lord said that he that had seen the Lord had seen the Father. Another reference is in John i. 18 which reads:

> "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him."

Although we cannot see the invisible God, we can rejoice that He sent His Son, and as we look on Him, we see the Father. God loved us so much that He sent His only begotten Son for our salvation. So we see the love of God in the life and death of His Son, Jesus Christ. But as we read Col. i. 15, "Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature", we find a problem. The meaning of "firstborn" needs some explanation. At first we might think it means that Christ was the first to be created. Some words change their meaning in the course of time, and we therefore follow the example of Stuart Allen by quoting from The Deity of Christ by Professor F. F. Bruce and Dr. W. J. Martin:

> "The word 'firstborn' had long since ceased to be used exclusively in its literal sense, just as 'prime' (from the Latin primus=first) with us. The Prime Minister is not the first minister we have had, he is the most pre-eminent. A man in his 'prime' of life has long since left the first part of his life behind. Similarly, 'firstborn' came to denote not priority in time, but pre-eminence in rank" (Letters From Prison, page 127, by Stuart Allen).

Thus the conclusion is that firstborn does not refer to time, but indicates the rank or primacy. Christ is not 'downgraded' to the level of a created being, but He is entitled to the high rank that should be accorded to the one Who created all things.

This word "firstborn occurs twice: "The firstborn of all creation" (Col. i. 15). "The firstborn from the dead" (18).

In verse 18 we pass from Christ's rank as first in the material world (first in creation) to His rank as first in the spiritual realm, the new creation. He was the firstfruits of them that slept (I Cor. xv. 20). Thus He was the first in resurrection. In Col. i. 18 we also have the title "the beginning". We find this in Rev. xxi. 6 (also xxii. 13). He that sat upon the throne said "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end". These titles confirm the Deity of Christ. He is the Head of the body, the church.

In Col. i. 16 there is another point which should not be overlooked. "All things were created by Him and for Him." We see His supreme position, for He is not only the Creator, but in the act of creation He had an object or goal, and all things relate to this goal. Then in verse 17, "He is before all things and by Him all things consist". It is true that He was before all things, but what is written is that He is before all things, indicating His status, rather than the timing of events. By Him all things consist or held together.

The Omnipotent One, having an object in view, holds the universe together and is in full control.

Having seen how the Lord Jesus Christ is first in the material and the spiritual orders, having a goal in view and holding all things under His control, it is for us to give Him all the glory and honour due to Him and to give Him the pre-eminence, or first place in our lives. What have we omitted? In all things He might have the pre-eminence. Let us not be content with giving Him the first place in some things. He must have the first place in all things.

This brings us to the point where we consider how we can live up to this standard. Do we put our Lord first in our lives? How easy to say or sing certain words, but how hard to maintain them in practice. We sing "All for Jesus" or "Take my silver and my gold, not a mite would I withhold". Yes, we enjoy the tune, but can we put into practice what we sing?

Our prayers may be offered in sincerity, but have we given sufficient thought to the words we pray? In Eph. iii. 14-21 Paul prays "that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith". What demands might be made if this prayer were answered? It is true that he also prays,

> "that He would grant you, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man" (Eph. iii. 16).

We certainly need to be strengthened with might by His Spirit if we are to face up to the consequences of the indwelling of Christ.

By way of a simple illustration, it is usual when receiving a friend who will stay in our house for a few days, to say "Make yourself at home". Suppose this was taken literally, and the friend changed everything in the home to suit his ideas? The furniture might be moved around -- even a room might be redecorated to give effect to a different colour scheme. If Christ dwells in our hearts, what changes would He make? Our thoughts, intentions and plans would be subject to His direction.

But we might be disturbed when we think of our daily needs. When we think of the indwelling of Christ, do we imagine that our thoughts would always be on spiritual matters? Our Lord Jesus Christ certainly said "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon". He told His disciples not to take anxious thought for the daily needs, and in Matt. vi. 33 He added:

> "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Paul write a similar word of encouragement:

> "But my God shall supply all your need according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus" (Phil. iv. 19).

We can be sure that if we give the Lord Jesus Christ the first place in our lives, He will supply all our needs (although this may not cover all the things we would like to have, i.e. our 'wants') and He will guide us in the right way. When we are concerned about choosing the right path, the proverb is always in our minds:

> "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths" (Prov. iii. 5, 6).

Our Foundation.

"Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone" (Eph. ii. 20).

pp. 172 - 178

Each year in the month of May, we hold special meetings in London on a Saturday which is called "Foundation Day". The notice announcing the meetings usually contains a brief note, thus:

THE BEREAN FORWARD MOVEMENT

Our basis

(1) Full inspiration of the Scriptures.
(2) Right division of the Scriptures.
(3) Deity of the Lord Jesus Christ.
(4) All sufficiency of His one sacrifice.

Two Trusts were formed in 1944, The Berean Forward Movement and The Berean Publishing Trust and both Trust Deeds contain the four basic tenets. Charles H. Welch suggested that once a year we should remind ourselves of these basic tenets. We hold Foundation Day so that they will not be forgotten.

In 1943 we were granted the use of Wilson Street Chapel for a trial period of one year, and since then permission has been extended for an indefinite period. The Chapel which was closed at the beginning of the war was reopened in September 1943 and named "The Chapel of the Opened Book".

In 1909 C. H. Welch became the Editor of The Berean Expositor which was produced with the support of Frederick P. Brininger and other friends. The two Trusts were formed to put the work on a more formal footing. Only a few books and booklets had been published but C. H. Welch had written many MSS, which awaited an opportunity of publication. The Berean Publishing Trust took over the MSS and most of these writings were in print by the time Mr. Welch died in 1967.

Some friends feared that the use of Wilson Street Chapel might lead to the formation of a sect or denomination, but C. H. Welch and the Trustees were opposed to any such development. Nevertheless, the witness of the Berean Trusts is distinctive in character in that it emphasizes the dispensational aspect of truth, while adhering to the need to study basic truth, practical truth, as well as prophetic truth.

In the Trust Deed Scripture references are given for each tenet and these are given for the information of our readers:

(1) Full inspiration of the Scriptures.

> "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" (II Tim. iii. 16).

COMMENT. We believe unreservedly in the full inspiration of Scripture. Peter supports Paul in II Pet. i. 21 which reads:

> "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

The Greek phero here translated "moved" is translated "driven" in Acts xxvii. 17.

(2) Right division of the Scriptures.

> "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth" (II Tim. ii. 15).

The Trust Deed then gives Acts xxviii. 17-31 as the second reference, but as it is a long passage, we quote only Acts xxviii. 28. The reader may refer to the whole passage in view of its importance:

> "Therefore I want you to know that God's salvation has been sent to the Gentiles, and they will listen" (Acts xxviii. 28, N.I.V.).

COMMENT. The reference to "right division" leads us to consideration of dispensational truth. Writing to the Philippians, Paul says:

> "And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment; that ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ" (Phil. i. 9-10).

In the margin, instead of "approve things that are excellent" there is the alternative rendering "try the things that differ". In our search for knowledge we have to observe differences. For example, if I say I have an animal with four legs, you do not know whether it is a donkey, or cat, or dog, or cow… unless further information is given which will identify it. The fact is that a donkey has four legs, but everything with four legs is not a donkey. So in our study of the Scriptures, we learn by observing differences. Does Peter's ministry differ from that of Paul? We quote a short passage:

> "But contrariwise, when they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter; (for He that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was mighty in me toward the Gentiles:" (Gal. ii. 7-8).

(3) Deity of the Lord Jesus Christ.

> "And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God" (Matt. xvi. 16).
>
> "And we believe and are sure that Thou art that Christ, the son of the living God" (John vi. 69).
>
> "And Thomas answered and said unto Him, my Lord and my God" (John xx. 28).

COMMENT. We add the following important references:

> "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God" (John i. 1).
>
> "while we wait for the blessed hope—the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour, Jesus Christ" (Titus ii. 13, N.I.V.).
>
> "We know also that the Son of God has come and has given us understanding, so that we may know Him Who is true. And we are in Him Who is true—even in His Son Jesus Christ. He is the true God, and eternal life" (I John v. 20, N.I.V.).

Stuart Allen has written an excellent and lucid booklet on this subject entitled "The Lord Jesus Christ, God or only Man" and this is recommended reading. There are many other references such as Matt. i. 23 and Phil. ii. 5-11.

(4) All sufficiency of His one sacrifice.

> "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts iv. 12).
> "For by one offering, He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified" (Heb. x. 14).

COMMENT. We suggest that the whole passage of Heb. x. 10-14 be read. The all sufficiency of His one sacrifice is a vital tenet because this covers the basis of our salvation. While we recognize our duty to study dispensational truth, we must be clear about the gospel of our salvation. If we are to build up our doctrine, we must start with a sound foundation. Paul's prison epistles set out the basis in a few words. Eph. i. 6-7 tells us that we are accepted in the Beloved and in Him we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins. Verse 4 says "…that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love". The gospel is expressed in simple terms in Eph. ii. 8-10:

> "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."

Paul speaks of "my gospel", and we are sure that Paul's gospel includes salvation through the grace of God. We should take every opportunity of making God's grace known to others. Paul did this all through his life to the end. He wrote:

> "For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" (I Cor. ix. 16).

In writing to the Galatians he says:

> "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed. For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ. But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of men, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ" (Gal. i. 8-12).

In An Alphabetical Analysis Part 6, pages 202-207, C. H. Welch has written an article headed "Foundation". He makes the remarkable statement that foundation is a relative term. In searching the Scriptures for its use we find that sometimes it must be taken literally, and in other cases foundation must be regarded as a figure of speech. We find the following examples of its use:

Foundation of the house of the Lord (I Kings vi. 37) (Numerous references).
Foundation of the earth (Psa. lxxxii. 5; Isa. xxiv. 18; xl. 21; xlviii. 13).
Foundation of the hills (Psa. xviii. 7).
Foundation of heaven (II Sam. xxii. 8).
Foundation of the world (II Sam. xxii. 16; Psa. xviii. 15).

The excitement when the foundation of the Temple was finished is recorded in Ezra.iii. Some sang, others shouted for joy, while older people wept as they were overcome by emotion.

C. H. Welch points out that a foundation may be of no value if it does not support a building. So, in various passages there are descriptions of different kinds of building that may be erected.

In Matt. vii. 24-27 Jesus Christ speaks of a wise man who built a house on a rock foundation, while the foolish man built his house on sand. The storm tested the houses and only the house built on rock survived. Christ used the example of the wise man to show that after hearing the words of the Lord, action needs to be taken. The foolish man is one who hears the word, but ignores it. So we may take this to mean that to preach doctrine and so lay a foundation is of little value, if faith and a practical Christian life do not follow the preaching.

Paul also uses the figure of the builder. He describes himself as a wise master builder who laid a good foundation. Others built on that foundation, some using gold, silver, or precious stones while some used wood, hay, or stubble. The buildings were tested by fire. Paul comments on his foundation in I Cor. iii. 11:

> "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

So Paul affirms that Christ is the only and the true foundation.

This leads us to an important verse which Peter quotes in his first epistle:

> "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious stone, a sure foundation" (Isa. xxviii. 16).

In the context the corner stone appears to be a part of the foundation, but we have a problem. Peter quotes Isa. xxviii. 16 and the Greek for corner stone means a stone "at the extreme angle" (Young's Concordance). The chief corner stone may therefore be the head stone, the keystone, or the topmost stone. Is it correct to view Christ as the true foundation, and at the same time the head stone or keystone? Psa. cxviii. 22 says that the stone which the builders rejected is become the head stone of the corner. Do we have difficulty in reading that Jesus Christ is the beginning and the ending, the Alpha and Omega? As we view the complete building, Christ is the foundation, and completes the building like the keystone. As the glory of the Lord filled the Temple, so the whole building is filled with the glory of the Lord.

We have said that Peter quotes Isa. xxviii. 16. We will quote what he wrote in his first epistle:

> "To Whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, ye also as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. Wherefore also it is contained in the Scripture, Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious … the same is made the head of the corner" (I Pet. ii. 4-7).

Peter goes on in verse 9 to remind his readers that they are a chosen nation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation… and here we see that Peter is faithfully dealing with his ministry to the circumcision.

We will observe how Paul writes, for he also writes of a spiritual house. We must save space so we ask the reader to look up Eph. ii. 19-22. The fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God are like a building, based on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone. We are living stones in this building and are fitly framed together, growing into a holy temple, and in this temple God Himself will dwell through the Spirit. This temple differs from the one described by Peter, but Jesus Christ is the corner stone of each building.

So in Ephesians we have the figure of the Body of Christ, we being members of His Body, the church, and He being its Head. We also have the figure of a holy temple, we being stones fitted together to make a dwelling place for God Himself.

> "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (I Cor. iii. 11), and it is this foundation that is the basis for the gospel of grace, & also for the "new man" (Eph. ii. 15, 16), the Body of Christ of which He is the Head.

Foundation Truth.

No.1. The types of Scripture.
pp. 141 -145

The whole of the Word of God is Truth, but we need to distinguish between Truth that has a temporary significance (e.g. animal sacrifice), and Truth that is eternal. When this is not done, confusion results. There is distinction between dispensational truth and basic or foundation truth. The former may be limited to a certain period and certain people; the latter does not change but remains eternally the same for all God's family. God's remedy for sin and death is not dispensational, but depends on the basic truth of redemption by the One Offering of the Lord Jesus Christ. God has not one way of saving sinner in O.T. times, and a completely different one in the N.T. Nor is the salvation of a Jew any different from that of a Gentile.

It is a good and reassuring thing for us to consider the certain and unchanging foundations upon which our faith rests. God taught His earthly people, the nation of Israel, basic truth by illustration or "types", as the N.T. calls them. I Cor. x. 11 states, "now all these things happened unto them (Israel) for ensamples" and the margin shows that the Greek word translated "ensamples" means "types". Many were the types or pictures of truth in the O.T. and they were prophetic, they looked forward to their fulfillment in the Person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The rich teaching of the Scriptural types is well nigh forgotten today to our great loss. An hundred years ago that great Christian barrister, Sir Robert Anderson, who was a first-rate expositor of the Word of God, lamented the fact that the doctrine of the types was little known in Christian circles. One wonders what he would have thought of the state of things today! In these studies we hope to bring forward truth which he presented so ably.

He wrote of the apostasy which existed at that time. The spiritual declension that has set in since then has made this all the more evident. Today the foundations of the Christian faith are being attacked from all quarters. And for the most part this attack does not just come from the unsaved world. Prominent leaders of churches are denying the truth of the virgin birth of Christ and His resurrection. "When the foundations are being destroyed, what can the righteous do?" (Psa. xi. 3, N.I.V.).

The best thing is to keep sounding out the truth of God's Word. This is the only lasting remedy; and a careful consideration of the types of Christ in Scripture will help to this end. The book of Genesis closes by informing us how Israel came to be dwellers in Egypt. As we open the book of Exodus, we find that they had become slaves, oppressed by hard and cruel bondage from the Egyptians.

Their struggles for freedom only made their lot worse. It was impossible for the nation to serve the Lord while they were subject to the taskmasters' whip. The only thing they could do was to cry to the Lord for deliverance and the Lord heard their cry.

At the burning bush, Jehovah revealed Himself to Moses and said to him:

> "And the Lord said, I have surely seen the affliction of My people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry by reason of their taskmasters; for I know their sorrows; and I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land unto a good land and a large, unto a land flowing with milk and honey …" (Exod. iii. 7, 8, R.V.).

Moses was commanded by God to go to Pharaoh and say to him:

> "… Thus saith the Lord, Israel is My Son, My firstborn, and I have said unto thee, let My son go that he may serve Me; and thou hast refused to let him go: behold, I will slay thy son, thy firstborn" (Exod. iv. 22, 23).

One of the first lessons we learn from the typical teaching of the Passover is that we have to be free in order to serve the Lord acceptably. The epistle to the Romans makes it clear that man by nature is a sinner, and his sin brings him into bondage.

> "Knowing this, that our old man was crucified with Him…that so we should no longer be in bondage to sin" (Rom. vi. 6, R.V.).

The result of this is freedom:

> "And being made free from sin ye became servants of righteousness" (Rom. vi. 18, R.V.).
>
> "But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto sanctification …" (Rom. vi. 22, R.V.).

Redemption and salvation mean freedom from the bondage and slavery to sin, so that one can become a servant of God and carry out His will in practice.

> "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed" (John viii. 36).

Man loves to talk about liberty and one of his cherished aims is to experience it, but little does he realize that unless he comes under the redemptive work of the Lord Jesus Christ, he is a slave, and always will remain so. When we are saved by complete faith and trust in Christ, He cancels the slavery and then we are free, not to please ourselves, but to please Him and render acceptable service and witness out of gratitude for all He has done for us.

So in Israel's case of old; they had to be delivered from Egyptian slavery and this could only be done by the power of God. But before they could be redeem by power, they must needs be redeemed by blood. The redemption story is perfect in its details. Being in Egypt they came under Egypt's doom, for the divine decree to Pharaoh was that all the firstborn in the land of Egypt would die. There was no exemption for Israel, but a way of salvation and deliverance was proclaimed. A paschal lamb was to be killed for every house and its blood sprinkled upon the lintel and side posts of the door. This was a gospel message which Moses brought from God to Israel, "When He seeth the blood upon the lintel and on the two side posts, the Lord will pass over the door and will not suffer the destroyer to come into your houses to smite you" (Exod. xii. 23).

Note well that the blood was not sprinkled on the door step, for not even in type will God allow what represents the precious blood of Christ to be trampled under foot. Hebrews x. 29 warns us of those who had "trodden under foot the Son of God" and we live in a day that is ignorant of "the first principles of the oracles of God", the very ABC of the divine revelation to mankind. Today, sin is regarded merely as a defect, inevitable in the progress of the human race toward perfection which is man's natural destiny. Sir Robert Anderson wrote nearly a hundred years ago:

> "We have come to such a pass that the most elementary truths of Scripture need to be re-stated—man's utter ruin and hopelessness, consequent upon the spiritual depravity that is his heritage from the Fall; and his need of "redemption by blood"—salvation through the death of Christ" (For us Men, pp. 25-27).

Let us consider further the story of Israel's redemption as typified by the Passover. There was a time when practically everyone knew this, because the Bible was better known and regarded as the Word of God. Not so today, and even those who do regard it as such would probably sum it up by saying that God passed through the land of Egypt in judgment, and when He came to the blood sprinkled door of the Israelite, He passed over it instead of entering in to slay the firstborn.

But what if we should find that this is not what the record teaches? The word "passover" is pasach and occurs 3 times in Exod. xii. (13, 23, 27). In I Kings xviii. 21 it occurs in Elijah's address to Israel, "How long halt ye between two opinions?". They were hesitating to take the decisive step to one side or the other. It is also used of the prophets of Baal who leaped up and down about their altar (I Kings xviii. 26). They did not "pass away" from it. The action of a bird fluttering over its nest to protect it illustrates the meaning of pasach (Isa. xxxi. 5). The Lord preserves His people from harm and danger. He hides them under the shadow of His wings (Psa. xvii. 8), and it was in this way He preserved the Israelites on that awful night when the destroying angel was abroad in the land of Egypt.

The words were He "will not suffer the destroyer to come in unto your houses to smite you" (Exod. xii. 23). The Lord stood on guard at every blood-sprinkled door. He became their Saviour. This is the real meaning of the Passover. No wonder they sang later on "the Lord Jehovah is my strength and song: He also has become my salvation" (Exod. xv. 2).

The divine religion of Israel was marked by festivals based on sacrifice, and joy based on atonement for sin. Paul, centuries later, emphasized the same fact when he wrote to the Corinthians, "For our Passover also hath been sacrificed, even Christ: wherefore let us keep the festival" (I Cor. v. 7, 8, R.V. margin). This is joy based firmly on eternal realities which nothing can shake. Sorrow cannot quench it. "Sorrowful, yet always rejoicing" is one of the paradoxes of the Christian life (II Cor. vi. 10).

The story of the Passover teaches the great truth that salvation is God's work altogether. A sinner cannot save himself or anyone else. God alone can be the Saviour of sinners. Passover also teaches that a sinner can only be saved as he is and where he is in his guilt and ruin. If a sinner could not be saved in his sins, salvation would be impossible. God alone can take him out of the horrible pit and out of the miry clay and set his feet upon a rock and establish his goings, and put a new song in his mouth (Psa.xl.2,3).

Not only was Israel delivered from the slavery of Egypt, but also from its doom. Redemption by blood was followed by redemption by power. They were brought out by "a strong hand and a mighty arm" which symbolized the almighty power of God, and their deliverance was not complete until they stood on the wilderness side of the sea and saw all their enemies dead upon the shore. The slavery was then at an end. Their praise was full and heart-felt. "I will sing unto the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath He thrown into the sea" (Exod. xv. 1).

But all this does not exhaust the fullness of redemption. Christ not only saves us from the penalty of sin which is bondage and death, but His salvation puts us in the position in which we can approach a thrice holy God. Forgiveness of sins could give neither title nor fitness to draw near to Him. Redemption is more than forgiveness. As we shall see, the Lord Jesus Christ, through the offering of Himself, satisfies the sinner's need in all its variety and depth.

The Fourth Gospel

A Study of the Gospel according to JOHN

No.7. iii. 14 - 30.
pp. 5 - 10

> "Just as Moses lifted up the snake in the desert, so the Son of Man must be lifted up, that everyone who believes in Him may have eternal life" (iii. 14, 15).

In order to assist the understanding of Nicodemus, Christ gives him a practical illustration from Israel's past history. It is recorded in Numb. xxi. The nation was plagued by fiery serpents whose bite was fatal. Moses was instructed by God and made a bronze serpent and placed it on a pole. All who were bitten were cured if they looked at this serpent. The Lord was teaching that just as the metal serpent was raised aloft on a pole and placed where everyone could see it, so He must be lifted up too on the cross. The Greek hupsoo always refers to the cross (John viii. 28; xii. 32, 34) and includes the Ascension (Acts ii. 33; v. 31), and so the Lord Jesus was not only glorified on the cross but also when He was raised and received back into glory with the Father.

Note the "must" in the phrase "the Son of Man must be lifted up"; this is parallel with the insistence that "the Son of Man must suffer". In no case could these two experiences be avoided. It was the "must" of divine purpose, so clearly foretold in the O.T. (Isa. liii.), upon which the whole great work of redemption rests.

It should be obvious too from this context that the Lord Jesus Christ believed in the historical truth of Moses and the brazen serpent. It will not do to say that He accommodated Himself to the ideas of His day. Such language only shows that it is rooted in unbelief. The Lord not only asserted the truthfulness of the O.T. Scriptures, but claimed to be the Truth itself (xiv. 6).

When we come to John iii. 16, we arrive at what is probably the best known verse of the New Testament, and has been instrumental in leading thousands out of spiritual death unto life eternal all through this age. As C. H. Welch says: "It stands so arrestingly supreme in comprehensive scope, simple grandeur, and clear issues" (Life Through His Name, p.103). He speaks of the unity of testimony throughout Christendom and says: "We do well to hesitate long and meditate deeply before setting aside such a unity of testimony".

One of the problems of John's Gospel is to decide where the words of Christ end and the comments of the Evangelist begin. There is no need to make a problem out of this, for Christ is giving us the truth of the Father, and John is being guided by the Holy Spirit in what he writes, so that we have divine truth in both cases.

Professor F. F. Bruce writes "with verse 15 Jesus' conversation with Nicodemus probably comes to an end (cf. R.S.V.); in verses 16-21 we have the application to the reader of the significance of that conversation", and with this we agree.

> "For God so loved the world that He gave His one and only Son, that whoever believes in Him shall not perish but have eternal life . . . . . Whoever believes in Him is not condemned, but whoever does not believe stands condemned already, because he has not believed in the Name of God's one and only Son" (iii. 16-18).

Professor Bruce's further comment on verse 16 is to the point:

> "It is not the Evangelist's intention to gratify our curiosity about Nicodemus's response to Jesus' words; readers may draw their own conclusions from Nicodemus's two further appearances in this Gospel (vii. 50; xix. 39). His intention is rather to set forth in terms of universal applicability the lesson that Nicodemus was taught. If there is one sentence more than another which sums up the message of the Fourth Gospel, it is this. The love of God is limitless; it embraces all mankind. No sacrifice was too great to bring its unmeasured intensity home to men and women; the best that God had to give, He gave—His only Son, His well-beloved. Nor was it for one nation or group that He was given: He was given so that all, without distinction or exception, who repose their faith in Him . . . . . might be rescued from destruction and blessed with their life that is life indeed" (The Gospel of John, pp. 89, 90).

In verse 16 we have possibly the simplest and clearest expression of the gospel of salvation and it is no wonder that more have found the way of eternal life through this verse than through any other Biblical text. Every word should be weighed over so that its clarity and wonder may not be missed. What is the force of the little word "so"? Some may read it as meaning God loved the world so much that He gave His only Son, but hontos is demonstrative and means God loved the world like this, He gave His only Son. God demonstrated His love for mankind, a love that was always constant, and therefore not subject to gradients of intensity, by giving His Son; and what else could He give that was extra to this?

Did not the Saviour Himself say:

> "Greater love has no-one than this, that he lay down his life for his friends" (John xv. 13).

One may give generously in many ways to show one's love, but the greatest expression of all is to give one's life for the person loved, for in doing this, one gives one's all. It is of the very nature of love to give. Words by themselves, however beautiful, are not sufficient. And the wonder of it all is that the love of God did not wait for our response. Christ died for His enemies:

> "But God demonstrates His own love for us in this: while we were still sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. v. 8).

The apostle John in his first epistle expands what he writes in his Gospel:

> "This is how we know what love is: Jesus Christ laid down His life for us" (I John iii. 16).
>
> "This is how God showed His love among us: He sent His one and only Son into the world that we might live through Him" (I John iv. 9).

> "This is love: not that we loved God, but that He loved us and sent His Son as an atoning sacrifice for our sins" (I John iv. 10).

To these verses may be added:

> ". . . . . the Son of God, Who loved me and gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii. 20).
>
> "Christ loved the church, and gave Himself for it" (Eph. V. 25).

And to crown it all, we read for the believer:

> "For I am convinced that neither death, nor life, neither angels nor demons, neither the present nor the future, nor any powers, neither height nor depth, nor anything else in all creation, will be able to separate us from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus" (Romans viii. 38, 39).

What wonderful assurance this gives us if we have placed our trust in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Evangelist continues:

> "For God did not send His Son into the world to condemn the world, but to save the world through Him. Whoever believes in Him is not condemned, but whoever does not believe stands condemned already because he has not believed in the Name of God's one and only Son" (John iii. 17, 18).

The Authorized Version uses the word "judge" and clearly here it is adverse judgment or condemnation. Krino does not necessarily imply condemnation, for it is used in Matthew xix. 28 in the phrase "judging the twelve tribes of Israel" and in Rom. xiv. 5 where it is translated "esteemeth". But here in the Gospel it certainly means condemnation, but Christ did not come into the world in order to condemn, but to save it. John ix. 39 appears to contradict this, but in chapter ix. it is the effect of His coming in the response or non-response of those who hear Him.

He who rejects Christ passes judgment on himself, not on Christ. He need not wait for the future day of judgment; he is condemned already. The Evangelist now sums this up in terms of light and darkness. One of John's characteristics is shown in the way he uses contrasting terms, good and evil, love and hatred, life and death, salvation and condemnation, light and darkness, truth and falsehood.

> "This is the verdict: Light has come into the world, but men loved darkness instead of light because their deeds were evil. Everyone who does evil hates the light, and will not come into the light for fear that his deeds will be exposed. But whoever lives by the truth comes into the light, so that it may be seen plainly that what he has done has been done through God" (iii. 19-21).

Christ Himself is the light. Chapter i. has told us that He came into the world to illuminate each one. But at the same time we are taught that not every one is prepared to come to the light; they prefer darkness, because the light shows up their sins. And if they reject the light of God in Christ, what hope have they? The answer is none, for in turning away from light, they turn away from life, and this life of God is eternal, not bounded by time. There is only one alternative, the opposite of living for ever with God and that is perishing, and there is no middle position.

The apostle Paul uses the same figure as John:

> "Have nothing to do with the fruitless deeds of darkness, but rather expose them . . . . . But everything exposed by the light becomes visible, for it is light that makes everything visible" (Eph. v. 11-13).

The light of God's truth contained in His Word, the holy Scriptures, is His standard by which everything must be measured. Eternal life is a tremendous gift and is found only in Christ:

> "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. vi. 23).

To receive the gift of eternal life by faith and trust in Christ is to be saved in the N.T. sense. Charles H. Welch's summing up will help here:

> "To receive the gift of eternal life . . . . . is to be saved. Salvation includes both life and deliverance from condemnation, the subjects of which will not perish, but, as another passage has it, have 'passed from death into life' (John v. 24). Thus, all who are redeemed, whatever their calling, sphere and destiny, can rejoice as they contemplate the love, the gift, and the deliverance revealed in verse 16 (of chapter iii.)."

Verses 25-29 record a dispute between some of the Baptist's disciples and a Jew about purification. Previous verses (22-24) tell us that the baptizing ministry of the Lord and John the Baptist went on side by side. There was no real rivalry except in people's minds. However, some of John's disciples seemed to resent that Christ was attracting more followers than John. They came to him and said, "Rabbi, that man who was with you on the other side of Jordan—the one you testified about—well, He is baptizing, and everyone is going to Him" (iii. 26). They were evidently jealous of the Lord as a rival of John. They did not approve of the growing crowds with the Lord and the dwindling crowds with John. And so jealousy began to creep in and this, alas, has occurred from time to time in subsequent Christian history.

The Baptist remained true to his testimony about Christ. He answered them:

> "You yourselves can testify that I said, I am not the Christ but am sent ahead of Him. The bride belongs to the bridegroom. The friend who attends the bridegroom waits and listens for him, and is full of joy when he hears the bridegroom's voice. That joy is mine, and it is now complete. He must become greater; I must become less" (iii. 28-30).

No.8. iii. 28 - iv. 24.
pp. 25 - 31

To express his joy, the Baptist used the figure of a wedding, in which he was in the place of "the friend of the bridegroom" or as we should say, "the best man". It is noteworthy that Scripture does not mix its metaphors like men do. John the Apostle is the only N.T. writer that uses the word "bride"; once in his Gospel, and three times in the Revelation (xxi. 2, 9; xxii. 17). The terms "bride" and "wife" when used figuratively are always connected with Israel. Israel, as the chosen nation, were the wife of Jehovah, when they entered into covenant relationship with God at Sinai. God refers to the time when He:

> "took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which My covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord" (Jer. xxxi. 32).

Israel was charged by God for her unfaithfulness, yet He pleads with her to come back and be restored (Jer. iii. 1, 20-22). This restoration is the theme of Isaiah's prophecies (Isa. lxii. 4). Charles H. Welch points out that the restoration of a divorced woman and the betrothal and marriage of "the chaste virgin" spoken of by Paul in II Cor. xi. 2, which John speaks of as the "bride", must not be confused. Israel, the restored nation, is the restored wife, but a faithful remnant of Israel with some believing Gentile constitute the bride of the Lamb. There is also another company who are invited to the marriage of the Lamb. They represent guests and cannot be the Bride. They also are primarily taken from Israel (Matt. xxii. 3) but they rejected God's invitation, so the invitation was widened by Him (verse 10) to include Gentiles (from the illustration used). In the Acts period the company was enlarged because the door was opened to the Gentiles to join with saved Jews, and then there was the possibility of becoming a partaker of the heavenly calling connected with the New Jerusalem, seen as the Bride of the Lamb (Revelation xix. 9; xxi. 1-3).

The heavenly city finally comes down to the new earth (Rev. xxi. 2, 10, 23, 24). This company represents the election of grace of Rom. xi. 5. It is not possible to go into more detail as such a discussion is getting away from our context in John's Gospel. We should not be dismayed as we read of the greatness of God's kingdom purposes, but nothing can be gained by ignoring divine distinctions and confusing the various strands of the great plan of the ages. Those who have Charles H. Welch's book Life Through His Name are directed to pages 120-124 where this is dealt with from the Scriptures in more detail.

Just as in verses 16-21 we have the comments of the Evangelist on the words of Christ, so here in verses 31-36 John meditates on the words of the Baptist. The Word Who "comes from above" and is "above all" must grow greater, while all others must grow less (verses 30, 31) and to Him was given the Holy Spirit without measure. Other messengers from God had received the measure of the Spirit that was necessary each one for his work, but there was no limit of the Spirit for the Son of God. This is taken further by declaring:

> "The Father loves the Son and has placed everything in His hands" (iii. 35, N.I.V.).

We are told twice in this Gospel that the Father loves the Son, here and in v. 20, and this love is beyond our comprehension. Not only this, but He has placed everything in the Son's hands (verse 35). This the Lord claimed in Matt. xi. 27 and Luke x. 22, "all things have been delivered to Me by My Father". There is therefore no limit to the Son's possession.

Verse 36 sums everything up:

> "Whoever believes in the Son has eternal life, but whoever rejects the Son will not see life, for God's wrath remains on him."

It is clear that life is one of John's key words, for he uses this word zoe 34 times, alternating "life" with "eternal life":

A | LIFE (i. 4).
B | ETERNAL LIFE (iii. 15, 16, 36).
A | LIFE (iii. 36).
B | ETERNAL LIFE (iv. 14, 36; v. 24).
A | LIFE (v. 24, 26, 39).
B | ETERNAL LIFE (v. 39).
A | LIFE (v. 40).
B | ETERNAL LIFE (vi. 27).
A | LIFE (vi. 33, 35).
B | ETERNAL LIFE (vi. 40, 47).
A | LIFE (vi. 48, 51, 53).
B | ETERNAL LIFE (vi. 54).
A | LIFE (vi. 63).
B | ETERNAL LIFE (vi. 68).
A | LIFE (viii. 12; x. 10).
B | ETERNAL LIFE (x. 28).
A | LIFE (xi. 25).
B | ETERNAL LIFE (xii. 25, 50).
A | LIFE (xiv. 6).
B | ETERNAL LIFE (xvii. 2, 3).
A | LIFE (xx. 31).

A consideration of all these passages will surely show that not once does John use "life" as pertaining to this present life. The life of which the Evangelist speaks is eternal and resident only in Christ (John xiv. 6; I John v. 11) and is experienced only by the regenerate. This is the eternal life that the unsaved will not see or enjoy (John iii. 36). The Word of God makes it perfectly clear that there can be a resurrection to the present natural life (the resurrection of Lazarus and those who were raised from the dead after the resurrection of Christ, and also those mentioned in Heb. xi. 35). But resurrection to the life of John's Gospel is to unending life, eternal life, and there is no Scripture that teaches this will ever be experienced by those who reject the Son of God. Yet the One Who called Himself the Truth (John xiv. 6) declared that all that are in the graves shall hear His voice and this must be universal or words are useless for revelation. But this resurrection affects two classes, one to eternal life and the other to condemnation. The latter cannot possibly refer to the unsaved because Christ states plainly that the saved person has eternal life and "shall not come into condemnation but is passed from death unto life" (v. 24). In this, as in all things, the only safe thing to do is to believe all that God reveals in His Word. We shall then be saved from error and disappointment.

Chapter iv.

The chapter commences with Christ withdrawing from Judaea and returning to Galilee. This was possibly in order to avoid a cleavage over the baptism of John and His own, carried out by the disciples, which we have been considering, and also to avoid bringing the coming conflict with the Pharisees to an issue yet. Thus He mainly avoids Jerusalem and Judaea till the end. The authors of the Synoptic Gospels give us no details of this early work in Perea (John i. 19-51), Galilee, or Judaea (ii. 13- iv. 2). The apostle John supplements their records purposely:

> "Now He had to go through Samaria. So He came to a town in Samaria called Sychar, near the plot of ground Jacob had given to his son Joseph. Jacob's well was there, and Jesus, tired as He was from the journey, sat down by the well. It was about the sixth hour" (iv. 4-6, N.I.V.).

Samaria lay between Judaea and Galilee and the direct route to Galilee was through Samaria, unless one was prepared to make a detour through Transjordan. In coming south from Galilee travelers usually crossed the Jordan and came down through Perea to avoid the hostility of the Samaritans to people who passed through their land to go to Jerusalem for the Feasts. The Lord Jesus once experienced this bitterness on going to the Feast of Tabernacles (Luke ix. 51-56).

At the disruption of Israel's kingdom after the death of Solomon, the ten tribes made their capital city, Samaria, and built a rival Temple on Mount Gerizim. This made a deep split between north and south which explains the statement, "Jews have no dealings with Samaritans", especially as a Jew would run the risk of incurring ceremonial defilement by having dealings with Samaria and its inhabitants.

It was about midday, if reckoned by sunrise, and Christ, feeling tired out by His long walk, sat down on the well-side and feeling thirsty as well, asked a woman who had come to draw water if she would give Him a drink (iv. 7). The request amazed the woman, for He would have to drink from her vessel, having none of His own, and this would have risked ceremonial pollution, apart from the fact that no Jew would have bothered to speak to a woman, and a Samaritan at that.

How wonderful to realize that here was the "Word Who became flesh" and this episode shows His genuine humanity "touched with the feeling of our infirmities" (Hebrews iv. 15).

> "Jesus answered her, 'If you knew the gift of God and Who it is that asks you for a drink, you would have asked Him and He would have given you living water'." (iv. 10).

Water was always precious in Palestine, but the Lord Jesus wanted to interest her in a gift from God that transcended any earthly spring. Water had already figured in a spiritual sense with Nicodemus (John iii. 5), and here it is used again to denote the gift of the Spirit that lasts eternally. In the O.T. the God of Israel describes Himself as "the fountain of living waters" (Jer. ii. 13), describing His satisfying grace and goodness which they were forsaking for the earthly cisterns they had made themselves, which could never satisfy.

Like Nicodemus, the Samaritan woman failed to understand the words of the Lord. She evidently thought that Christ meant specially pure water. She could not imagine that any water could be of better quality than that from Jacob's well. This well still exists today and is over 100 feet deep. The woman was puzzled by the fact that the Lord seemed to imply He was greater than her forefather Jacob.

> "Jesus answered, 'Everyone who drinks this water will be thirsty again, but whoever drinks the water I give him will never thirst. Indeed, the water I give him will become in him a spring of water welling up to eternal life'." (iv. 13, 14).

The woman's curiosity was aroused concerning this peculiar kind of water. She evidently missed the last three words of the Lord "unto life eternal" for she was still thinking in terms of earthly water and the fact that this new kind of water would save her keep coming to this well. But the Lord abruptly changes the subject in order to lead on to a deeper unfolding of the heavenly truth already hinted at:

> " 'Go, call your husband and come back'. 'I have no husband', she replied. Jesus said to her, 'you are right when you say you have no husband. The fact is, you have had five husbands, and the man you now have is not your husband. What you have just said is quite true'." (iv. 16-18).

The woman was taken aback with this sudden change of subject, and all the more so as this stranger touched on an intimate phase of her life that she did not want to discuss. However, she was honest enough to admit that the Lord's words about her were correct and not only this, but she was convinced that the stranger was no ordinary man. He must be a prophet. And the conversation, having now taken a religious turn, she ventures on one great point of difference between Samaritans and Jews, the correct place of worship. Deut. xii. 5 emphasized the place of worship must be that of God's choice, but where had He chosen to dwell and be worshipped?

> " 'Sir', the woman said, 'I can see that you are a prophet. Our fathers worshipped on this mountain (Gerizim), but you Jews claim that the place where we must worship is in Jerusalem'." (iv. 19, 20).

Christ's reply to this was quite different from what she expected. Doubtless she thought there would be an argument over the rival claims of Jerusalem and the foot of Mount Gerizim. Abraham and Jacob set up altars at Shechem, near Gerizim (Gen. xii. 7; xxxiii. 20). On Gerizim the blessings were proclaimed recorded in Deut. xxviii. In the Samaritan Pentateuch there is a record of an altar set up on Gerizim and in this vicinity the Samaritan temple stood.

But Christ said to her:

> "Believe Me, woman, a time is coming when you will worship the Father neither on this mountain nor in Jerusalem. You Samaritans worship what you do not know, for salvation is from the Jews. Yet a time is coming and has now come when the true worshippers will worship the Father in spirit and truth, for they are the kind of worshippers the Father seeks. God is spirit and His worshippers must worship in spirit and in truth" (iv. 21-24).

The new order of the kingdom of God was being proclaimed and this, when believed, would extend over the world, far beyond Palestine. While Jerusalem would be the greatest city in this kingdom, it could never be the only place of worship. The important question was not now where people worship God, but how they worship Him.

Saviour, where'er Thy people meet,
There they behold Thy mercy seat;
Where'er they seek Thee, Thou art found,
And every place is hallowed ground. (William Cowper).

No.9. iv. 25 - v. 15.
pp. 45 - 50

One thing which is quite amazing is that the Lord Jesus gives a lesson on true worship to an outsider, whereas to Nicodemus, a well known leader and teacher of Israel, he deals with the fundamentals of the new birth! But the Saviour makes no mistakes. He reveals to the Samaritan woman that God himself is pure Spirit and can only accept spiritual worship, worship that is humble, grateful, and adoring. This is a divine "must" (iv. 24). Such worship is primarily not from the senses, but deeper from the mind that has been touched by God's saving grace. Material things can only be at best the vehicle of true spiritual worship; of themselves they are not its essence. And we should never forget the tremendous statement that the Father is seeking such to worship Him (verse 23). As He seeks the world over with all its religion, how many true worshippers does He find? This should be a real challenge to everyone who claims to be a Christian.

The Lord's words were working deeply in the mind of the woman. While the Samaritans' expectation was not connected with the Messiah of Israel, it did look forward to the coming of the great Prophet as foretold by Moses in Deut. xviii. 15. Could this stranger be more than an ordinary prophet? Could He be this great Spokesman?

The disciples who had gone to the city to buy food, now returned and were greatly surprised that He was talking with a woman. But they did not question Him, for they knew He always had good reason for what He did.

The woman had heard that the Jews expected a Messiah, so she said to the Lord,

> "I know that Messiah (called Christ) is coming. When He comes, He will explain everything to us" (iv. 25, N.I.V.).

Then, with wonderful simplicity and yet with power Christ's reply was:

> "I Who speak to you am He" (iv. 26).

What a revelation! We are not told what she said, but her following actions showed the tremendous impression this had made on her, for she left her water-pot and returned to the city and told them, "Come, see a man who told me everything I ever did. Could this be the Christ?". Being impressed by her story, they decided to see for themselves.

> "Meanwhile His disciples urged Him, 'Rabbi, eat something'. But He said to them, 'I have food to eat that you know nothing about'." (iv. 31, 32).

This made the disciples think that someone had given Him a meal (33). Like the woman, they misunderstood the Lord's words, taking them in a material sense. But He replied:

> "My food is to do the will of Him Who sent Me and to finish His work."

He likens this witness to the sowing of seed ending with a harvest. He had already sown the seed of truth in the woman's mind and already a harvest was in view for enquiring people were approaching from Sychar. The result was that "many of the Samaritans from that town believed in Him because of the woman's testimony, 'He told me everything I ever did'. So when the Samaritans came to Him, they urged Him to stay with them, and He stay two days. And because of His words, many more became believers" (39-41). They said to the woman, "We no longer believe just because of what you said; now we have heard for ourselves, and we know that this Man really is the Saviour of the world" (42). This was a harvest indeed and John is inspired by the Holy Spirit to record these words of the Samaritans because they accord with the wider purpose of his Gospel, bearing in mind that God sent His Son into the world "in order that the world might be saved through Him" (John iii. 17).

On the surface there is a discrepancy in the Gospel records, for the Lord, when commissioning the Twelve Apostles, forbade them to go to Samaria with their message. "Go not" (Matt. x. 5) and "He must needs go through Samaria" (John iv. 4) appear contradictory, but we must always recognize the sovereignty of the Lord in His actions and also, as pointed out before, that though the Jew comes first, the earthly kingdom purposes of God involve the whole world of mankind and can in no way restricted to Israel. Yet, God had determined Israel should be "first" and be the earthly channel through which a knowledge of Himself as Redeemer and King should be spread to all mankind, so that "the knowledge of the Lord will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea". Charles H. Welch's comment is helpful:

> "John the Baptist not only said 'Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand' (Matthew iii. 2), but 'Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world (John i. 29). The former utterance was made known by Matthew, who did not include the latter, whereas John ignores the former and include the latter. It is therefore suggestive of the non-Jewish trend of the Gospel of John that he is inspired to record the ministry of the Lord in Samaria. Moreover, it is in entire accord with the confessed purpose of John in writing this record, which was: 'That ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through His name' (John xx. 31)" (Life through His Name, p.127).

After two days, the Lord left Samaria for Galilee, which was his main object.

The Healing of the Nobleman's son.

The evangelist tells us that Christ Himself bore testimony that a prophet has no honour in His own home (44). This proverb is quoted by all three Synoptists (Matthew xiii. 57; Mark vi. 4; Luke iv. 24) with reference to His home town of Nazareth (Mark vi. 6). Here His home district was not Nazareth but Judaea and more particularly Jerusalem where He received the same treatment of indifference and rejection (John xii. 37). But with Galilee it was different. They welcomed Him (iv. 45), and as chapter ii. informs us, news of His wonderful "signs" had been spread throughout Galilee by those returning from the recent Passover.

Having reached Cana where the water was made wine, He was met by a nobleman whose son was desperately ill. The father was evidently one of the staff of Herod the tetrarch of Galilee.

> "When this man heard that Jesus had arrived in Galilee from Judaea, he went to Him and begged Him to come and heal his son, who was close to death" (iv. 47).

The Lord seemed to be unsympathetic by saying "unless you people see miraculous signs and wonders, you will never believe". Yet, speaking generally, this was true. He may have said this to stimulate the faith of the nobleman and the Lord could see that this had happened, for He said to him, "you may go; your son will live" (50). The verse goes on to say "the man took Jesus at His word and departed". So this was real faith. If only all of us could always take the Lord Jesus at His word, what difficulties we should avoid! Before he reached home, his servants met him with the news that his boy was living. Having asked the time when his son got better, they told him it was at the seventh hour, and then the father realized that this was the exact time at which Christ had said to him "your son will live". The joyous result was that both he and his household believed and put their trust in the Lord. "This", said the Evangelist, "was the second miraculous sign which Christ performed" (49-54).

Chapter v.

The central chapters of the Gospel are related to the various festivals of the Jewish year: Passover (vi. 4), Tabernacles (vii. 2), Dedication (x. 22) and Passover again (xi. 55). But the feast mentioned in v. 1 is not identified, and there have been many guesses. Passover (Irenaeus, Luther, Lightfoot), Pentecost (Chrysostom), Purim (Kepler), others suggest Trumpets, but surely it is wiser to leave the matter as John records it:

> "Some time later, Jesus went up to Jerusalem for a feast of the Jews" (v. 1).

At the sheep gate there was a pool called in Hebrew Bethesda (place of outpouring). There were five colonnades in which lay a crowd of infirm people. Professor F. F. Bruce comments here "Jerusalem may have been in ruins for several years when this gospel was written, but the Evangelist envisages it as it was when he knew it and describes its natural features in the present tense". No wise person will therefore build doctrine on the tense of the verb here, for to do so would be building on a shaky foundation. The belief at this time was that an angel of the Lord came down to the pool and disturbed the water. The person who stepped in first after this was healed.

There was a man there who had suffered for 38 years, possibly with paralysis, since he was unable to get into the water unaided (v. 2-4). The Lord Jesus saw him and learned that he had been a sufferer for a long period. He asked him, "Do you want to get well?" The man explained that he had no one to help him get into the pool. Someone else always got in first.

> "Then Jesus said to him, 'Get up! Pick up your mat and walk'. At once the man was cured; he picked up his mat and walked. The day on which this took place was a Sabbath, and so the Jews said to the man who had been healed, 'It is the Sabbath; the law forbids you to carry your mat'." (v. 8-10).

This was the first of the violations of the Jewish Sabbath rules that led to so much bitterness and opposition from the religious leaders (cf. ix. 14, 16). There are 13 occurrences of the word "sabbath" in this Gospel and 13 references to Moses. The Sabbath, with all the added legalism of the Rabbis added to it, occupied a dominant place in the life and heart of every orthodox Jew. Dean Farrar writes:

> "It had become the most distinctive and the most passionately reverenced of all ordinances which separated the Jew from the Gentiles as a peculiar people. It was at once the sign of their exclusive privileges, and the centre of their barren formalism. Their traditions, their patriotism, even their obstinacy, were all enlisted in its scrupulous maintenance . . . . . their devotion to it was only deepened by the universal ridicule, inconvenience and loss which it entailed upon them in the heathen world."

The Rabbis had added scores of commands to the Scriptural teaching, and these commands formed a heavy weight on the people. There were 39 "primitive" kinds of work (including ploughing, sowing, and reaping) which, if done presumptuously on the Sabbath, rendered a man liable to death. "Derivative" work was, for example, "digging", for that was a kind of ploughing; and "plucking" ears of corn, for that was a kind of reaping. We remember the upset caused by the disciples plucking corn on the sabbath day, even though they were hungry. Christ had to remind the legalists of the example of David and the priests (Matt. xii. 3-5), and also the fact that the Sabbath was made for man as a refreshing rest, not man for the Sabbath (Mark ii. 27). Under the yoke of the Pharisees the day, instead of being a blessing, became a terrible burden.

The man who had been healed defended himself against the charge of sabbath breaking, by the plea that he was acting under another's command.

> "Later Jesus found him at the Temple and said to him, 'See, you are well again. Stop sinning or something worse may happen to you'. The man went away and told the Jews it was Jesus Who had made him well" (v. 14, 15).

Christ did not take the attitude that all illness and physical suffering were caused by sin (cf. the blind man in John ix. 2), but in this case He knew what was the cause of his infirmity and warned him about it.

From this time onwards the religious leaders launched a campaign against the Lord which grew in intensity as they planned His death, which came to pass about 18 months later.

At this point, three signs had been given by the Lord Jesus in witness. The first sign made up a deficiency, and ministered to the people's joy. The second ministered life, "thy son liveth"; the third sign ministered health. Each miraculous sign reflects some phase of the Lord's fullness and contributed its evidence to the fact that this was indeed the Christ, the Son of God, the King of Israel.

No.10. v. 16 - 47.
pp. 61 - 65

The reply of the Lord Jesus to the Pharisees who criticized Him for healing on the sabbath day, which they regarded as "work", was:

> "So, because Jesus was doing these things on the Sabbath, the Jews persecuted Him. Jesus said to them, 'My Father is always at His work to this very day, and I, too, am working'." (v. 16, 17, N.I.V.).

The activity of God over the creation was continuous. It was impossible for Him to have a day off every week. The sabbath was made for man, not the reverse, so that he could experience rest and refreshment spiritually and physically. Christ does not hesitate to stress His unity with the Father, and justifies His action on the ground that He was following His Father's example. But worse than this, from the Pharisees' standpoint, was His reference to God as His Father which He was claiming in an exceptional sense, thus making Himself equal with God.

> "For this reason the Jews tried all the harder to kill Him; not only was He breaking the Sabbath, but He was even calling God His own Father, making Himself equal with God" (v. 18).

John repeats the clause "they sought to kill Him" in vii. 1, 19, 25; viii. 37, 40, so this was not just a temporary upset, but a cold-blooded plotting to murder Him.

> "Jesus gave them this answer: 'I tell you the truth, the Son can do nothing by Himself; He can do only what He sees His Father doing, because whatever the Father does, the Son also does'." (v. 19).

Those who deny the deity of Christ love to pick this verse out because they imagine it proves their point, but it does nothing of the kind. Verses 19-47 substantiate Christ's claim of complete unity and equality with the Father when they are taken as a whole.

The Lord Jesus had become incarnate to perform the redemptive purpose of the Father. This meant a voluntary submission in every detail to the Father's will, thus, He avoided doing or saying anything on His own initiative. The Father initiated, and the Son carried this out fully and faithfully. Hence the words, "the Son can do nothing on His own initiative". He only does what He sees the Father doing. In the following verses this relates to two things, the impartation of life and the execution of judgment, and in dealing with these the Lord showed His equality with the Father. Whatever the Father does, the Son does likewise. Neither is there any limit to what the Father shows the Son, for the Father shows Him all things, "all He does" (20). Here is equality indeed, and this is reinforced in the verses that follow:

> "For just as the Father raises the dead and gives them life, even so the Son gives life to whom He is pleased to give it."

Here is equality again and not only so but:

> ". . . . . the Father judges no-one, but has entrusted all judgment to the Son, that all may honour the Son just as they honour the Father. He who does not honour the Son does not honour the Father Who sent Him" (v. 21-23).

The One Who will judge all men has been man Himself! The Lord's enemies denied His equality with the Father (and they still do) but real faith relies solely on what God had said and accepts it, even though this goes beyond one's powers of apprehension and understanding. If we honour the Son just as we honour the Father, we shall certainly avoid belittling Him because of His self-dedication and self-restriction to all the Father willed. If we do not, then Christ asserts we neither honour the Father, nor the Son, and are in a sorry state indeed.

The Lord Jesus continues:

> "I tell you the truth, whoever hears My word and believes Him Who sent Me hast eternal life and will not be condemned; he has crossed over from death to life" (v. 24).

The word of Christ is a life-giving word which is applied by the Holy Spirit to the believing one. He then "hears" in a way that he did not experience before. Later on the Lord likens His people to sheep, and "hearing" is a characteristic of His sheep—see x. 3, 8, 16, 27 "My sheep hear My voice"—and the result is "they believe on Him that sent Me" (v. 24). In this Gospel Christ is pre-eminently the Sent One to carry out the Father's purpose. There are 28 occurrences of pempo and 17 of apostello (45 in all) that speak of Christ being sent. He is THE APOSTLE of Heb. iii. 1 and the Father's purpose is declared in I John iv. 14:

> "The Father sent the Son to be The Saviour of the world."

Hearing the voice of the Son of God affects two classes, those who are spiritually dead and those who are physically dead:

> "I tell you the truth, a time is coming and has now come when the dead will hear the voice of the Son of God and those who hear will live. For as the Father has life in Himself, so He has granted the Son to have life in Himself. And He has given Him authority to judge because He is the Son of Man. Do not be amazed at this, for a time is coming when all who are in their graves will hear His voice and come out—those who have done good will rise to life, and those who have done evil will rise to be condemned" (v. 25-29).

Resurrection from physical death is mentioned in verse 28 and refers to the future. But the dead of verse 28 dealt with those who were listening at that time to the Lord's words. "And now is" (A.V.) or "has now come" (N.I.V.) of verse 25 prove this. They are the "spiritually dead", "dead in trespasses in sins" (Eph. ii. 1; v. 14). The quickening voice of the Son of God brings them to spiritual life. Eph. ii. 10 tells us what follows. Such are "created in Christ Jesus unto good works which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them" (see also Titus iii. 8). Hence those "who have done good" of John v. 29, produce those "good works" which are the fruit of the spiritual life in Christ. As this resurrection deals with all mankind, "for all that are in the graves" can only refer to the place of physical death which is the lot of all mankind, because all are sinners under condemnation and death (Rom. iii. 19).

For the believer, salvation means being transferred by grace out of the kingdom of Satan, death and condemnation, into the kingdom of God's dear Son (Col. i. 13), where condemnation is unknown, for Christ has atoned for all his sins, and eternal life now reigns. We are dealing with basic truth here, not dispensational, and are not surprised to find that the apostle Paul stresses the same truth in Rom. viii. 1, for to be "in Christ Jesus" means no condemnation now. The rest of the verse does not have sufficient MSS backing but is found in verse 4 where it accompanies the walk of the believer after salvation. Condemnation is a legal term as used in Romans, and God does not put any believer "into the dock" a second time. A believer may sow to the flesh and reap corruption by so doing, but that is another matter.

The resurrection to life in John v. 28, is to eternal life, and this is only for the believer in Christ, as he is granted immortality found only in the Lord.

The Lord Jesus now deals with witness. He said:

> "If I testify about Myself, My testimony is not valid. There is another Who testifies in My favour, and I know that His testimony about Me is valid" (v. 31, 32).

As Professor F. F. Bruce says, "a testimonial to oneself is no testimonial. No one can witness his own signature". "Self-praise is no recommendation" says the adage, and this is true. In God's law the testimony of a witness was not received in his own case (Deut.xix.15). The Lord's opponents accused Him of exalting Himself (John viii. 13), but He could answer, "even if I do bear testimony of Myself, My testimony is true", for it was confirmed by the Father's testimony (John viii. 14, 18). In addition to this He had the witness of the Baptist (v. 33), the witness of the Scriptures (v. 39), and the witness of Moses in particular (v. 45), so His witness was amply confirmed by others who were utterly reliable.

As Christ referred to the faithful witness of John the Baptist, He described him as a lamp that gave light (v. 35). The Baptist was not the light. Only the Lord Himself was that light, but John was like a lamp whose wick is fed with oil and this shone in the darkness. Every believer is called to be a light-bearer in a world of darkness and unbelief. No child of God is excused for not letting the light of testimony to Christ and the Truth shine out.

The Lord now refers to the testimony of the Father which eclipsed the witness of the Baptist, for it was the Father Who had given the Son the mighty works or signs to accomplish, and these testified to the fact that He was the Sent One of God (Acts ii. 22). The religious leaders had never seen the Father nor heard His voice and Christ asserted that they had not His Word remaining in them, and this was proved from the fact that they did not believe the One Whom the Father had sent (John v. 37, 38).

This was so, notwithstanding that they considered themselves the guardians of the holy Scriptures, all of which pointed to Him Who was their Saviour and Messiah. The Lord Jesus had to tell them:

> "You diligently study the Scriptures because you think that by them you possess eternal life. These are the Scriptures that testify about Me, yet you refuse to come to Me to have life" (v. 39, 40).

The word "study" (search A.V.) can be either present active indicative or present active imperative. Either make sense here, but the reason given "because you think by them you possess eternal life" supports the indicative rather than the imperative, although, read as a command, it is certainly good advice.

The tragedy was that the religious leaders searched the Scriptures (the Old Testament), the Word of God, but missed the living Word, the Lord Jesus Christ. The Scriptures are able to make the readers wise as regards salvation, but this salvation comes only "through faith in Christ Jesus" (II Tim. iii. 15).

> "I do not accept praise from men, but I know you, I know that you do not have the love of God in your hearts" (John v. 41, 42).

Christ did not expect mere honour and praise from men. His great motive was to proclaim the glory and fellowship of the Father. Those who wish to be faithful witnesses to the Saviour, likewise must not expect pats on the back from men. The apostle Paul certainly did not (I Thess. ii. 6). "The love of God" is better seen as an objective genitive, "Your love toward God". These leaders did not really love God and hence they did not love Christ.

> "I have come in My Father's Name, and you do not accept Me; but if someone else comes in his own name, you will accept him" (v. 43).

Seven times in this Gospel the Lord speaks of the Name of the Father (v. 43; x. 25; xii. 28; xvii. 6, 11, 12, 26), but they still rejected Him Who made the Father known. Yet they would readily follow others who claimed to be messiahs. History records several of these between 30-70A.D., and Christ has foretold this will again happen at the end of this age to aid the devil's deception (Mark xiii. 6, 22).

> "But do not think I will accuse you before the Father. Your accuser is Moses, on whom your hopes are set. If you believed Moses, you would believe Me, for he wrote about Me. But since you do not believe what he wrote, how are you going to believe what I say?" (v. 45-47).

In God's law court there was no need for Christ to be their prosecutor, or chief witness against them. There was one already, one whom they venerated, namely Moses. Their rejection of Christ showed that, despite their pretensions, they did not believe Moses either, for Moses wrote of Him. The leaders did not accept this, like many present day teachers who do not. But see Deut. xviii. 18 which is quoted by Peter (Acts iii. 22) as a prophecy of Christ, and also by Stephen in Acts vii. 37. Note also John iii. 14 about the brazen serpent and viii. 56 about Abraham foreseeing Christ's day. The Lord Jesus clearly states the fact that Moses wrote portions of the O.T. (and see also Luke xxiv. 27, 44 for the same idea). There was no answer from the rabbis to this conclusion of the Lord. Nor is there any effective one from the religious critics of today.

The Feeding of the 5,000, and the Walking on the Water.

> "Some time after this, Jesus crossed to the far shore of the Sea of Galilee (that is, the Sea of Tiberias), and a great crowd of people followed Him because they saw the miraculous signs He had performed on the sick" (vi. 1, 2, N.I.V.).

The lake is called Gennesaret in Luke v. 1, and the Sea of Tiberias in John xxi. 1. This was because Herod Antipas in 22A.D. built Tiberias to the west of the Sea of Galilee and made it his capital. Luke ix. 10 explains that it was eastern Bethsaida to which Christ took His disciples, not the western Bethsaida of Mark vi. 45 in Galilee. He went up on the high ground and sat with His disciples. The place is well known today as the Golan heights, which overlook the plain east of the river and the lake. The feeding of this large crowd is related in all the four Gospels, and to get the whole picture the four accounts should be studied.

To test Philip, the Lord asked him how the multitude could be fed (vi. 5, 6) and he replied,

> "Eight months' wages would not buy enough bread for each one to have a bite!"

The Greek reads "two hundred denarii" and a denarius was the day's wage for a casual labourer (Matt. xx. 2), and this would probably buy a day's supply of bread for an average family. To reckon this in English money today is practically impossible, for owing to inflation the modern equivalent soon goes out of date.

Andrew draws attention to the fact that a boy had brought his lunch with him consisting of five small flat barley loaves, or cakes, and two small fish, probably salted. Such a tiny meal was hardly worth mentioning, for it was absolutely inadequate to feed so many hungry people.

The Lord Jesus was in no way disconcerted. He said, "Make the people sit down"; there were about 5,000 of them (John vi. 10, 11). John's parenthesis here tells us that there was much grass in the place, and Mark, in his account, note that they sat down on green grass. It was spring time and the grass would not yet be burnt brown by the summer heat. Both these statements are words of an eyewitness. "The people" (anthropoi) included men and women, but John adds that the men (andres) sat down. Matthew emphasizes this by using the phrase "apart from women and children" (xiv.21). Mark tells us that, according to the Lord's instructions, the large number was arranged in groups of fifty and a hundred. This made the distribution of the food easier.

Then the Lord performed His creative miracle and multiplied the small cakes and fish so that there was not only enough for all to eat and have plenty, but twelve basketsful of food were left over when all were satisfied. There was abundance of food, but no waste. This should be a lesson to all of us today when there are so many grievous famines all over the world. There are spiritual lessons too. The Lord is not impoverished with all His generous giving. As the hymn writer says, "for His grace and power are such, none can ever ask too much" and when we give in like manner, Prob. xi. 24 comes true, "one man gives freely, yet grows all the richer".

This miraculous sign made a great impression on the crowd and they began to say, "surely this is the Prophet Who is to come into the world" (Deut. xviii. 15-19). They thought that this could be a second Moses who would deliver them from Rome's oppression as Moses had done for their ancestors in delivering them from the bondage of Egypt. Hence the next verse:

> "Jesus, knowing that they intended to come and make Him king by force, withdrew again to a mountain by Himself" (John vi. 15).

On the surface this looked as though it might be the fulfillment of the purpose for which He had come to this earth; to be king of Israel and bring in His kingdom. But no, this was not the Father's way. It was the easy way that cut out the cross and all it meant and was a recurrence of one of His wilderness temptations. The question of sin and death must be dealt with, for without this there could be no lasting kingdom of heaven upon this earth.

The people were now afire with political zeal and if Christ would not take the initiative, they would try to force Him to do so. So He goes into solitude on the nearby Golan hills and withdraws from them.

The time had now arrived for the fifth miraculous sign to be performed by the Lord Jesus. While Christ was above on the hills, the disciples attempted to reach Capernaum by boat. However, being overtaken by darkness and rising sea, after rowing about twenty to thirty furlongs, they became afraid, for they could see someone walking on the sea and coming towards the ship. They themselves were struggling with a contrary wind and had rowed about three miles. Some commentaries suggest that the ship was near the shore and that Christ was walking by the sea. This cannot be true for the ship was in the midst of the sea (Matt. xiv. 24; Mark vi. 47) and the Lord was coming towards them. In any case there would have been no need of fear if He was walking by the sea. The fact of His walking on the sea caused the problem, for they thought it must be an apparition and they were terrified.

The Lord Jesus spoke and quietened them:

> "But He said to them, 'It is I; don't be afraid'. Then they were willing to take Him into the boat, and immediately the boat reached the shore where they were heading" (John vi. 20, 21).

John omits the account of Peter walking on the water (Matt. xiv. 28-31). As the disciples thought about it afterwards one wonders if their minds went back to two O.T. scriptures:

> "(God) which alone spreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the waves of the sea" (Job ix. 8).
>
> "O Lord God of hosts, Who is a strong Lord like unto Thee? . . . . . Thou rulest the raging of the sea: when the waves thereof rise, Thou stillest them" (Psa. xxviii. 8, 9, A.V.).

Both these verses stress Deity.

John vi. 22-24 are an explanation of the action of the crowd. They were determined to find Him. Doubtless their ambition to make Him the leader and the fine meal they had enjoyed were still fresh in their minds. Other boats from Tiberias had arrived, and deciding that He was not in the vicinity, they crossed to the west side to look for Him. When they reached Capernaum, they found Him there. They were puzzled as to how He had got there, but the Lord did not gratify their curiosity. Instead He said to them:

> "I tell you the truth, you are looking for Me, not because you saw miraculous signs but because you ate the loaves and had your fill. Do not work for food that spoils, but for food that endures to eternal life, which the Son of Man will give you. On Him God the Father has placed His seal of approval" (vi. 26, 27, N.I.V.).

They had been largely taken up with physical satisfaction, but these miraculous signs were not just displays of power for satisfying physical needs. They were illustrations of much deeper teaching. This used to be called the doctrine of the types, and numbers of helpful books were written on the subject. They have all but vanished today. In the discourse that follows, the Lord Jesus shows the importance of the spiritual values lying behind the signs. He had already shown the contrast between natural and spiritual water in His conversation with the woman at the well. Now He compares natural food which was perishable with spiritual food which had eternal values, and this food He was ready to give them if they would only believe Him. God the Father had "sealed" Him for this very work, that is, He had been prepared and sent by the Father for the task.

> "Then they asked Him, 'What must we do to do the works God requires?'." (vi. 28), and the Lord's reply was right to the point:

> "Jesus answered, 'The work of God is this: to believe in the One He has sent'. So they asked Him, 'What miraculous sign then will you give that we may see it and believe you? What will you do? Our forefathers ate the manna in the desert; as it is written; He gave them bread from heaven to eat'." (vi. 29-31).

Westcott states that the Lord's reply "contains the complete solution of the relation of faith and works". In the same way Paul, in writing to the Thessalonians, mentions their "work of faith" (I Thess. i. 3). The Lord Jesus declares that belief in Him is the work of God. The Greek verb has the force of "that you may keep on believing".

In spite of the gigantic miracle of the feeding of the 5,000, they ask for a further sign and quote Psa. lxxviii. 24 "He gave them bread from heaven to eat" and doubtless they ascribed all this to Moses. Yet a greater than Moses had just fed them in a stupendous way!

Christ now corrects their attitude:

> "Jesus said to them, 'I tell you the truth, it is not Moses who has given you the bread from heaven, but it is My Father who gives you the true bread from heaven. For the bread of God is He Who comes down from heaven and gives life to the world'." (vi. 32, 33).

The phrase "coming down" is used seven times in this discourse (vi. 33, 38, 41, 42, 50, 51, 58). The real donor of the manna was God, not Moses. God met all the needs of His people both in the wilderness and in the promised land. But there was an infinitely greater gift of spiritual food which the Lord was now offering them. Even the manna was perishable (Exod. xvi. 20), but this food was of another kind. It had everlasting effects and gave eternal life. It was indeed the "true bread" out of heaven, for it represented Christ and His atoning work. John sets forth the Lord as "the true Light" (i. 9), "the true Bread" (vi. 32), and "the true Vine" (xv. 1). The word "true" here is not meaning true as opposed to false, but real as opposed to shadow or type. It is the relationship of type to antitype. Here Christ explains the difference between the typical manna and Himself, the true Bread from heaven, giving life to the world, not just to Israel.

Like the Samaritan woman who asked the Lord to give her the living water that He spoke about, so now His hearers eagerly request the gift of this bread for always (vi. 34). They were still thinking of His words in a material sense, so the Lord Jesus replies with a statement which they must have found astounding:

> "Then Jesus declared, 'I am the Bread of life. He who comes to Me will never go hungry, and he who believes in Me will never be thirsty'." (vi. 35).

This is the first of the great "I am" (ego eimi) sayings of the Lord, recorded in this Gospel, ego eimi. Normally the pronoun is not expressed separately from the verb in Greek. When it is, there is always emphasis. Carefully note the further occurrences of these two words in vi. 41, 48, 51; viii. 12, 58; x. 7, 9, 11, 14; xi. 25; xiv. 6; xv. 1, 5. They are all very important statements and take one back to the great I AM title of God in Exod. iii. 13, 14.

Especially is this so in chapter viii. in the Lord's argument with the Pharisees. We shall give further consideration to this when we read this chapter.

No.12. vi. 36 - 71.
pp. 101 - 105

After the tremendous statement that He was the Bread of life, which, if received by faith, would give eternal satisfaction, the Lord had to say to His hearers:

> "But as I told you, you have seen Me and still you do not believe. All that the Father gives Me will come to Me, and whoever comes to Me I will never drive away" (vi. 36, 37, N.I.V.).

"All that the Father gives Me" is the death knell of universalism. Note how this is stressed by Christ (see vi. 39, 65; xvii. 2, 6, 9, 12, 24; xviii. 9). Whether this is a large company or small is not revealed and it is fruitless to guess. However many make this number, they are all eternally safe (x. 29), and all will come to Him by constraining grace and never will He turn any away. This is the Father's will which the Son had come to carry out, and it will most certainly be fulfilled to the letter.

Professor F. F. Bruce comments here, "In the first part of verse 37 the pronoun 'all' is neuter singular, pan, denoting the sum-total of believers. In the second part ('the one who comes'), each individual member of this sum-total is in view".

> "For I have come down from heaven not to do My will, but to do the will of Him Who sent Me. And this is the will of Him Who sent Me that I shall lose none of all that He has > given Me, but raise them up at the last day. For My Father's will is that everyone who looks to the Son and believes in Him shall have eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day" (vi. 38-40).

We are assured here that the Father and Son and Holy Spirit are engaged in the salvation of all believers and they will be safely guarded by them until the "last day" and then the Son, by His divine power, will bring them back to life if they have died. This He had emphasized before, as we have seen. To a large extent the resurrection of the believer is ignored today. Death is glamourized and this is what so many Christians are looking forward to, rather than the life-giving power of the Conqueror of death. "The last day" occurs four times (vi. 39, 40, 44, 54) and is evidently this very time of resurrection, when "all who are in the graves will hear His voice and come out" (v. 28) with eternal life ahead of them if they are believers. These are the two things which God has joined together for the believer's hope and it is sure and certain.

> "At this the Jews began to grumble about Him because He said, 'I am the Bread that came down from heaven'. They said, 'Is this not Jesus the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? How can He now say, 'I came down from heaven'?'." (vi. 41, 42).

The people were well acquainted with His family. He was known as "the son of Joseph", and in Mark vi. 3 "the son of Mary". How then could He talk of "coming down from heaven"? They had no conception of Him as the eternal Word.

> " 'Stop grumbling among yourselves', Jesus answered. 'No one can come to Me unless the Father Who sent Me draws him, and I will raise him up at the last day'." (vi.43,44)

In these verses those who come to Christ are described as being drawn to Him by the Father. In John xii. 32 it is Christ, when He is lifted up from the earth Who draws all (without distinction) to Himself.

Sin has so blinded the mind, so corrupted the faculties, that if God did not "draw", men would not respond at all. The Father draws and this may or may not result in salvation, for the next step is to "hear" and "believe", and in this way such come to Christ.

As the hymn writer expressed it:

> "He loved me ere I knew Him.
> He drew me with the cords of love
> And thus He bound me to Him."

Christ now quotes Isa. liv. 13 which says that all Israel's children shall be taught of God, but they have to come to Him first for such teaching. This does not mean that such will see God. Only the Son is able to do this. But they could see the Father in Him (the Son) with the eye of faith (John xii. 45; xiv. 9). Hence the Lord Jesus stresses its necessity. He who believes has eternal life (vi. 47).

> "I am (ego eimi) the Bread of life. Your forefathers ate the manna in the desert, yet they died. But here is the Bread that comes down from heaven, which a man may eat and > not die. I am (ego eimi) the living Bread that came down from heaven. If anyone eats of this Bread, he will live for ever. This Bread is My flesh, which I will give for the life of the world" (vi. 48-51).

Christ is the life-giving Bread which delivers all who receive Him by faith from the power of death. This the manna was unable to do. All the Israelites fed on the manna during their wilderness journey, yet they all died, for although this was a heavenly provision, it could not impart eternal life. But those who "eat" of Him, that is appropriate Him by faith, are guarded from eternal death and receive everlasting life. The Lord further explains that this Bread represents His flesh which He is to give for the life of the world. "For" is the Greek huper, "in behalf of", which implies sacrifice. To give one's flesh means death. The Baptist had pointed to Christ as the Lamb of God Who takes away the sin of the world. This is by His death which is voluntary ("I will give") and vicarious ("for the life of the world").

It is this Gospel that emphasizes the world-wide scope of the Lord's saving work. He was sent "that the world should be saved through Him" (iii. 17 R.V.). He is the "Saviour of the world" (iv. 42), not merely the Saviour of Israel, for unless this was true, His earthly kingdom would never be realized in its fullness. There are dispensationalists upon whom these verses make little or no impression. But one thing is certain, no one can adequately expound this Gospel who has missed its world-wide teaching which of course includes Israel, but is not confined to that nation.

> "Then the Jews began to argue sharply among themselves, 'How can this man gives us His flesh to eat?' Jesus said to them, 'I tell you the truth, unless you can eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood, you have no life in you. Whoever eats My flesh and drinks My blood has eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day. For My flesh is real food and My blood is real drink. Whoever eats My flesh and drinks My blood remains in Me, and I in him. Just as the living Father sent Me and I live because of the Father, so the one who feeds on Me will live because of Me'." (vi. 52-57).

These words not only puzzled Christ's hearers, they sharply divided them and worked up bitter enmity. They fought (emachonto) a war of words, if not muscularly. It may be that a few sensed that He was speaking figuratively, but it is obvious that the majority did not do so. They must have known that Christ was not seriously implying cannibalism, yet they could not fathom His meaning. The law given through Moses imposed a ban on any drinking of blood. The idea of drinking the blood of Christ was utterly abhorrent. And to make matters worse, in verse 54 and following this, the normal word to eat, phagein, is not used, but trõgein, which in earlier Greek meant "to munch" like animals eating!

Today we sometimes use the figure of eating and digesting, to express understanding. We talk about "digesting" a fact, and this is similar to the figurative language the Lord was using. If we look back to verse 40, we find the Lord expressing the same truth without figures:

> "For My Father's will is that everyone who looks to the Son and believes in Him shall have eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day."

Those who see Him and believe in Him are the same as those who eat His flesh and drink His blood, for they both have eternal life and will be raised by Christ at the last day.

Figures of speech are a vivid way of presenting facts, and the Lord Jesus uses them here to strongly stress the need of coming to Him, believing in Him and appropriating Him by faith. This language is not a prophetic forecast of the Lord's Supper. It is absolutely untrue to teach that salvation comes through partaking the bread and wine of the communion service. The words of the Lord Jesus here can only have a spiritual meaning as He unfolds Himself as the true Manna. The fact is that the fourth Gospel has no record of the institution of the Lord's Supper in the upper room.

> "He said this while teaching in the synagogue in Capernaum. On hearing it, many of His disciples said, 'This is a hard teaching. Who can accept it?'." (vi. 59, 60).

The verses that remain in this chapter are an appendix to this great discourse, giving the reaction of many of those who claimed to be His disciples. They found the Lord's language crude and hard to understand. Not only this, but His words implied that He was greater than Moses whom they revered; in fact that He was equal with God.

> "Aware that His disciples were grumbling about this, Jesus said to them, 'Does this offend you? What if you see the Son of Man ascend to where He was before! The Spirit gives life; the flesh counts for nothing. The words I have spoken to you are spirit and they are life. Yet there are some of you who do not believe'. For Jesus had known from the beginning which of them did not believe and who would betray Him. He went on to say, 'This is why I told you that no-one can come to Me unless the Father has enabled him'. From this time many of His disciples turned back and no longer followed Him" (vi. 61-66).

From these verses it is clear that there were varied opinions about Christ, yet they are all called "disciples" or learners. But what is the mark of a true disciple of Christ? He Himself gives it in viii. 31, "Jesus said, If you hold to My teaching, you are really My disciples". This is what many did not do, and thereby showed that there was no real depth in their understanding or loyalty. They were disciples only in name.

As John ii. 24 assures us, the Lord knew the unspoken thoughts of those who were listening to Him. He adds to His teaching. He had declared more than once of His descent from heaven. Would they believe if they saw Him ascend back to heaven? (vi.62). Doubtless the answer was 'no'. If they were not feeding on Christ and abiding solely in Him, then their profession would not last and they would turn aside. And so it has always been. Those who are the true disciples will hold fast to Christ notwithstanding the difficulties and doubts that sometimes arise.

The Lord turns to the Twelve and says, "you do not want to leave too, do you?". From the negative used in the Greek, the answer is 'no' and this is confirmed in Peter's answer:

> "Lord, to whom shall we go? You have the words of eternal life. We believe and know that You are the Holy One of God" (vi. 68, 69).

Peter was obviously voicing the belief and feelings of the others, except one, showing indeed that they were true disciples who were prepared to go on with the Lord whatever the cost. They had been chosen (elected) by Him. The exception was Judas Iscariot and the Lord describes him as a devil, but "adversary" would be a more suitable description of him, who finally gave himself over to Satan. This is the first mention of him here and he is identified as the one who was to turn traitor. So also with the other Evangelists (Matt. x. 4; Mark iii. 19; Luke vi. 16). The shadow of this terrible act was cast before. Twelve months later it actually happened.

No.13. vii. 1 - 44.
pp. 132 - 137

> "After this, Jesus went around in Galilee, purposely staying away from Judaea because the Jews there were waiting to take His life."

The Lord Jesus had been avoiding Judaea because, as He expressed it, "His hour had not yet come" and there was no point in putting Himself into danger before that crucial time arrived. The religious leaders had been planning to kill Him for some while (v. 18).

This avoidance of Jerusalem was puzzling to the Lord's brothers (or rather half-brothers). Although they did not believe in Him (vii. 5) until after His resurrection, yet they felt that if He really was the Messiah, or a great leader, He should be in the capital city or thereabout, where all could see His miracles and hear His teaching. They said to Him:

> "You ought to leave here and go to Judaea, so that your disciples may see the miracles you do. No one who wants to become a public figure acts in secret. Since you are doing these things, show yourself to the world. For even His own brothers did not believe in Him" (vii. 3-5).

Verse 2 tells us that the Feast of Tabernacles was near. This was the seventh and last of the Jewish yearly feasts. It was the time of harvest, a time of rejoicing, the end of their agricultural and religious year. It was a time of pilgrimage from the outlying parts of Palestine and also for Hebrews living abroad. All made a great effort to attend the chief festivals at Jerusalem.

With such a gathering of people, the Lord's brothers evidently thought it would be a fine opportunity for Him to do something spectacular there to impress the people. Many thought that the Messiah when He came would perform such an act. What they did not realize was that outward signs meant little without appreciation of the inward truth they were intended to convey.

It appeared incredible to them that the Messiah should deliberately avoid publicity, especially after the wonderful signs He had given in Galilee.

> "Therefore Jesus told them, 'The right time for Me has not yet come; for you any time is right. The world cannot hate you, but it hates Me because I testify that what it does is evil. You go to the Feast. I am not yet going up to this Feast, because for Me the right time has not yet come'. Having said this, He stayed in Galilee. However, after His brothers had left for the Feast, He went also, not publicly, but in secret" (vii. 6-10).

Christ had testified to His mother that His hour had not yet come (ii. 4) and He gives a similar reply to His brothers. The time of His public showing as Messiah and King was decided by the Father and it was certainly coming, but not until the right moment arrived. Until then He would remain as He was. Six months later it would be proper for Him to make His public entry into Jerusalem. Now He bids farewell to Galilee, never to see it again before His death, and makes a secret journey to Judaea.

> "Now at the Feast the Jews were watching for Him and asking, 'Where is that man?'." (vii. 11).

The scene now moves to Jerusalem. The Jewish leaders were watching for Him, hoping they might have an opportunity to arrest Him. He had been in Galilee for a year, but Galilee was ruled by the tetrarch Herod Antipas and was not under the jurisdiction of the religious leaders. However, in Jerusalem they held chief executive power in Jewish affairs, subject to the authority of the Roman governor. Now perhaps was their opportunity.

> "Among the crowds there was widespread whispering about Him. Some said, 'He is a good man'. Others replied, 'No, He deceives the people'. But no one would say anything publicly about Him for fear of the Jews" (vii. 12, 13).

Among the people there were varying opinions about Christ. Some, remembering His acts of mercy, said He was a good man. Others thought the opposite, but whatever their views, they did not talk about them too publicly, lest the leaders should be displeased.

> "Not until halfway through the Feast did Jesus go up to the Temple courts and begin to teach. The Jews were amazed and asked, 'How did this man get such learning without having studied?'." (vii. 14, 15).

The Lord Jesus arrived quietly halfway through the Festival and began to teach in the outer court of the Temple. As the people listened they were amazed at His powerful exposition of the Scriptures. Where did He get His knowledge from, seeing that He had not been trained in any of the great rabbinical schools? The Sanhedrin later had the same problem with Peter and John (Acts iv. 13). The scribes and Pharisees usually based their teaching on and quoted from some past teacher of repute, but this was not so with regard to Christ. He spoke with authority without reference to anyone. Where did He get this authority from?

The Lord's reply to them was:

> "My teaching is not My own. It comes from Him Who sent Me. If anyone chooses to do God's will, he will find out whether My teaching comes from God or whether I speak on My own. He who speaks on his own does so to gain honour for himself, but he who works for the honour of the One Who sent him is a man of truth; there is nothing false about him. Has not Moses given you the law? Yet not one of you keeps the law. Why are you trying to kill Me?" (vii. 16-19).

Like the men of God of the O.T. who were God's spokesman, the greatest Prophet of all came to make known the Father and declare His Truth. Behind it all was the willing mind so to do. It is important for us to distinguish between the word "will" relating to the future, and the word thelo to will or to wish. The A.V. often does not make this clear. There must be harmony between man's purpose and God's will. Here it is rendered in the N.I.V. "if anyone chooses to do God's will". Such readiness of heart leads to the knowledge of God and His purpose. The leaders made much of the law of God given through Moses. Yet their actions proved this to be an empty profession. The law commanded, "thou shalt not kill". Why then were they constantly breaking it by seeking to murder Him?

> "The crowd answered, 'You are demon-possessed. Who is trying to kill you?'." (vii. 20).

The Lord now returns to the false accusation of sabbath breaking. He tells them that they circumcise a child on the sabbath day and if they could do this without breaking sabbath regulations, how much more could He perform a miracle of healing on the sabbath day without infringing the law! Their judgment was absolutely superficial; there was no righteousness in it. "Stop judging by mere appearances and make a right judgment" He said (24).

This needs to be sounded abroad today. How much unfair criticism and misrepresentation there is in this age. And this is not confined to non-Christians. Many believers indulge in this sort of thing with other believers. They need to be reminded that judgment of others (criticism) should be avoided. This is the clear teaching of the Sermon on the Mount and the epistles (Matt. vii. 1, 2; I Cor. xi. 31). One sinner criticizing another sinner is not very edifying.

> "At that point some of the people of Jerusalem began to ask, 'Isn't this the man they are trying to kill? Here He is, speaking publicly, and they are not saying a word to Him. Have the authorities really concluded that He is the Christ? But we know where this man is from; when the Christ comes no-one will know where He is from" (vii. 25-27).

The crowd were obviously concerned with the attitude of their leaders to Christ. We must remember that the Galilean Jews knew Him only as from Nazareth, not as born in Bethlehem.

The Lord answered them:

> "Then Jesus, still teaching in the Temple courts, cried out, 'Yes, you know Me, and you know where I am from. I am not here on My own, but He Who sent Me is true. You do not know Him, but I know Him because I am from Him and He sent Me'." (vii. 28, 29).

This statement is like that recorded in Matt. xi. 27, "no-one knows the Father except the Son". Again the Lord asserts His unique relationship with the Father and those who are listening do not miss the implication of His words.

> "At this they tried to seize Him, but no-one laid a hand on Him because His time had not yet come. Still, many in the crowd put their faith in Him. They said, 'When the Christ comes, will He do more miraculous signs than this man?'." (vii. 30, 31).

This attempt to arrest Him came to nothing, because God, Who is sovereign, knew that the hour for His arrest, followed by the suffering and the cross, had not yet come.

But the people debated whether, when Messiah arrived, He would perform greater miraculous signs than Christ was continually performing. The Galileans in the crowd would remember the feeding of the 5,000 six months ago, just as the natives of Jerusalem would recall the healing of the cripple at the Bethesda pool.

> "The Pharisees heard the crowd whispering such things about Him. Then the chief priests and the Pharisees sent Temple guards to arrest Him" (vii. 32).

The Pharisees and Sadducees represent the Sanhedrin, the ruling court. The Temple guards were the Temple police who were responsible for the maintenance of law and order within the precincts of the Temple. They were a picked body of Levites and their commanding captain wielded high authority, next only to the high priests.

> "Jesus said, 'I am with you for only a short time, and then I go to the One Who sent Me. You will look for Me, but you will not find Me; and where I am, you cannot come" (vii. 33, 34).

Those who were listening could not understand Him. Did He mean that He would leave Palestine and go to the dispersion abroad where there were Jewish colonies? (vii.35,36). Here, Professor F. F. Bruce aptly says, "little did the speakers know that, while Jesus was not to go in person among the Greeks, His followers would be numbered in tens of thousands in the Greek lands in a few years time".

> "On the last and greatest day of the Feast, Jesus stood and said in a loud voice, 'If anyone is thirsty, let him come to Me and drink. Whoever believes in Me, as the Scripture has said, streams of living water will flow from within him'. By this He meant the Spirit, whom those who believed in Him were later to receive. Up to that time the Spirit had not been given, since Jesus had not yet been glorified" (vii. 37-39).

The "short time" (33) related to the six months on to the last Passover, and then the offering of Himself on the cross. Christ had already told the woman of Samaria of this "living water" (iv. 14), and this in reality was the gift of the Spirit, which could not be imparted in its fullness until the Lord Jesus was glorified. This tremendous gift is expanded in the sixteenth chapter (xvi. 7). His death and resurrection was His glorification (xii. 23).

> "On hearing His words, some of the people said, 'Surely this man is the Prophet'. Others said, 'He is the Christ'. Still others asked, 'How can the Christ come from Galilee? Does not the Scripture say that the Christ will come from David's family and from Bethlehem, the town where David lived?'. Thus the people were divided because of Jesus. Some wanted to seize Him, but no-one laid a hand on Him" (vii. 40-44).

The various ideas among the people are brought out in these verses. There was clearly a split in their conception of the Prophet and the true Messiah. Some said He came from Galilee and therefore could not be the Messiah. They quoted Micah v. 2 which gave the truth, but they were ignorant of the fact that Christ was born in Bethlehem. The confusion here is with the Jews, not the author of the Gospel as some have erroneously maintained.

> "Finally the Temple guards went back to the chief priests and Pharisees, who asked them, 'Why didn't you bring Him in?'. 'No-one ever spoke the way this man does', the guards declared. 'You mean He has deceived you also?' the Pharisees retorted. 'Has any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed in Him? No! But this mob that knows nothing of the law—there is a curse on them'." (John vii. 45-48, N.I.V.).

The leaders were evidently waiting for the police to return with Christ as a prisoner. Now even the police had fallen under His spell! Police officers are not usually carried away by public speech, but these had been gripped by the power of the Lord's words. They asserted that no human being ever spoke as He did, with such authority (Matt.vii.29).

The Pharisees were outraged, and they sneered at the police by accusing them of being deceived. "Have any of the Pharisees believed in Him?" they said, and in the Greek the question expects the answer "No". Surely if He was genuine, some of the leaders would have accepted Him!

The common people, ignorant of the law, might believe His claims, but that was to be expected. Their argument was quite unsound, because as the next verses tells us, one of the rulers evidently was impressed by Him.

> "Nicodemus, who had gone to Jesus earlier and who was one of their own number, asked, 'Does our law condemn a man without first hearing him to find out what he is doing?'. They replied, 'Are you from Galilee, too? Look into it, and you will find that a prophet does not come out of Galilee'." (vii. 50-52).

Nicodemus was last mentioned in chapter iii., when he came to the Lord by night. Now he boldly protests against the injustice of condemning Christ unheard. He was a ruler of the Jews and as a teacher he knew the law and could quote it authoritatively. The leaders had no legal answer. They had a contempt for the Galileans and their statement that no prophet ever came from Galilee was certainly wrong, for Jonah, Hosea, Nahum, Elijah, Elisha and Amos could be traced from Galilee. In their rage the Pharisees were regardless of the true facts.

Chapter viii.

The first twelve verses of chapter viii. are missing in the N.I.V., R.S.V. and N.E.B. as they are not found in some of the earliest manuscripts. As this involves the Greek texts, we give the comments of Professor F. F. Bruce. He writes:

> "These twelve verses are missing from a wide variety of early Greek manuscripts from the earliest forms of the Syriac and Coptic Gospels, from several Armenian, Old Georgian and Old Latin manuscripts, and from the Gothic Bible. They constitute, in fact, a fragment of the authentic gospel material not originally included in any of the four Gospels. Its preservation (for which we should be thankful) is due to the fact that it was inserted at what seemed to be a not inappropriate place in the Gospel of John or Luke. Among the manuscripts of John which include it, the majority place it between 7:52 and 8:12; others place it after 7:36, after 7:44, or after 21:25. One family of manuscripts (family 13) places it after 21:38. Many of the witnesses which do contain it mark it with asterisks or daggers, to indicate the uncertainty of its textual attestation. In style it has closer affinities with the Synoptic Gospels than with John. One reason for its being placed in this context in John may have been the idea that it served as an illustration of Jesus' words in 8:15, 'I judge no-one' (Appendix, The Gospel of John)."

Those who possess The Companion Bible, should read the comments on this passage. The reader will note the various places in which this section occurs and also that some manuscripts put it in Luke, but, as Professor Bruce says, it is authentic gospel material for which we should be thankful, and we need have no doubts as to its truth. We give it in the translation of J. N. Darby:

> "And early in the morning He came again into the Temple, and all the people came to Him; and He sat down and taught them. And the Scribes and Pharisees bring (to Him) a woman taken in adultery, and having set her in the midst, they say to Him, 'Teacher, this woman has been taken in the very act, committing adultery. Now in the law Moses has commanded us to stone such: Thou, therefore, what sayest Thou?'. But this they said proving Him, that they might have (something) to accuse Him (of)" (viii. 2-6).

As the last words show, those critics were not primarily concerned with the offence, but rather they introduced it to trip Christ up if possible. In any case, where was the guilty partner? Why was he allowed to escape? It appears that the old law was not rigorously applied in the first century. But in some parts of the East it is still upheld today.

What is your opinion? the Scribes and Pharisees asked the Lord, hoping that He might rule differently from Moses and so become a breaker of the law. Again we see Christ's matchless wisdom in the way He dealt with the situation:

> "But Jesus, having stooped down, wrote with His finger on the ground. But when they continued asking Him, He lifted Himself up and said to them, 'Let him who is without sin among you first cast the stone at her'. And again stooping down He wrote on the ground" (viii. 7, 8).

This is the only mention of writing by the Lord. The question was like the one dealing with the tribute money; whichever way He answered, He could be caught on the horns of a dilemma. What was it He wrote on the ground? Many have been the guesses. It has been suggested that He was writing the words He uttered in verse 7, but we cannot know for certain. One thing is clear, the Lord did not modify Mosaic law, but He ruled that only those who were guiltless of this particular sin, could justly carry out the sentence. And the fact that none of the accusers could face up to this showed their hypocrisy, for they went out one by one. They were asked to judge themselves rather than the woman.

> "But they, having heard (that), went out one by one beginning from the elder ones until the last; and Jesus was left alone and the woman standing there. And Jesus, lifting Himself up, and seeing no-one but the woman, said to her, 'Woman, where are those thine accusers? Has no-one condemned thee?'. And she said, 'No-one, Sir'. And Jesus said to her, 'Neither do I condemn thee; go, and sin no more'." (viii. 10, 11).

There is no evidence that the woman knew who He was, and the Lord accepted the charge of her accusers as being true, yet, knowing all the facts about her, Christ refuses to condemn her, for He came not to judge the world, but to save the world (xii. 47). He discharges her without condoning her sin. The warning He gave her was similar to the one He gave to the man who was cured at the Bethesda pool (v. 14).

Professor Bruce concludes this section by saying, "Whatever textual problems are raised by this passage, the account has all the earmarks of historical veracity. We may safely recognize the incident as taking place in the Temple precincts during Holy Week".

> "When Jesus spoke again to the people, He said, 'I am the light of the world. Whoever follows Me will never walk in darkness, but will have the light of life'." (viii.12, N.I.V.).

This is another of the great "I am" (ego eimi) statements by the Lord Jesus. Christ had called His followers "the light of the world" (Matt. v. 14), but that was light reflected from Him. He Himself was the true light (John i. 9; iii. 19). The Psalmist called God his light (Psa. xxvii. 1) and all is darkness without Him. When will people learn that to ignore Christ and walk without Him is to stumble along in darkness? And in the darkness there can be so many falls that cause hurt and disappointment.

He Who is the Light of the whole world must include Gentiles as well as Jews. This was doubtless startling to the Pharisees and Sadducees who despised the Gentile world and had forgotten why they had been placed among them. The light which springs from the Lord Jesus issues in life that is eternal.

> "The Pharisees challenged Him, 'Here you are, appearing as your own witness; your testimony is not valid'. Jesus answered, 'Even if I testify on My own behalf, My testimony is valid, for I know where I came from and where I am going. But you have no idea where I come from or where I am going. You judge by human standards; I pass judgment on no-one. But if I do judge, My decisions are right, because I am not alone. I stand with the Father, Who sent Me. In your own law it is written that the testimony of two men is valid. I am one Who testifies for Myself; My other witness is the Father, Who sent Me'." (viii. 13-18).

Whatever the Lord Jesus says about Himself is not unsupported. The Son was speaking the Father's words and by His authority. It was quite a false charge to accuse Christ of speaking of and from Himself. In v. 31, the Lord acknowledged the need of further witness outside His own claims (19-30), and proceeded to give it (32-47), as we have seen in the testimony of John the Baptist, of the Father, of His works, of the Scriptures and of Moses in particular. He goes on to refer to His words recorded in v.37. A charge could only be sustained if supported by two or three witnesses (Deut. xvii. 6; xix. 15), and these had to be true separately. If they disagree, the testimony collapses. But the Father had abundantly confirmed the witness of the Son, as Christ had already shown (v. 37).

> "Then they asked Him, 'Where is your father?'. 'You do not know Me or My Father', Jesus replied. 'If you knew Me, you would know My Father also'. He spoke these words while teaching in the Temple area near the place where the offerings were put. Yet no-one seized Him, because His time had not yet come" (viii. 19, 20).

Christ had already told His critics that they had never heard the Father's voice nor seen His form (v. 37). Similarly He tells them now that they are incapable of knowing the Father or knowing where He is. They probably knew where Christ came from an earthly standpoint, but they were blind and utterly ignorant of His eternal origin or His relationship with the Father.

These words were spoken in the treasure-chambers of the Temple joining the Court of the women.

> "Once more Jesus said to them, 'I am going away, and you will look for Me, and you will die in your sin. Where I go, you cannot come" (viii. 21).

The Lord's words were still beyond the grasp of His hearers. He was going away and they could not follow Him. While He was with them it was the day of opportunity. If they believe and accept Him, then they would have the right to become the children of God with eternal life to follow. If they do not, they would die in their sin, without having the sin removed. Note sin in the singular (21), but plural in verse 24, (that is sin in its essence and sin in its acts).

Recently when He spoke like this, they thought He might be planning to go to the lands of the Dispersion. Now they wonder if He means suicide—'will He kill Himself?'. He was indeed going to meet a violent death but at their hands, not His own. The Lord makes a sharp distinction between two realms:

> "But He continued, 'you are from below; I am from above. You are of this world, I am not of this world. I told you that you would die in your sins; if you do not believe that I am (the One I claim to be), you will indeed die in your sins'." (viii. 23, 24).

Christ came from the heavenly realm, the heaven above. They were limited to the earthly realm, with no possibility of reaching that upper realm by their own ideas or efforts. The Lord Himself was the only Way by which they might ascend there, and this way they refused to take. They would rather remain in the darkness than come to the One Who was the Light of the world.

No.15. viii. 25 - 48.
pp. 181 - 186

The rendering of the N.E.B. of verse 24 is "If you do not believe that I am what I am (ego eimi), you will die in your sins". These very important words occur in verses 28 & 58 and have more than one shade of meaning in this Gospel. The Lord uses them when He identifies Himself to the disciples on the lake and says "It is I". In other instances, as we have seen, He uses them of Himself in His relationship to the Father and the Father's redemptive purpose, and this takes us back to God revealing Himself to Moses at the burning bush, making known His purpose for Moses to go to Pharaoh. When asked for a name, God said "Tell them that I AM has sent you" (Exod. iii. 14) and here the Septuagint has ego eimi, (the One Who is). These words are repeatedly used in Isaiah in the Greek of the Septuagint [Isa. xli. 4; xliii. 10, 25 (twice); xlvi. 4; xlviii. 12] and relate to God Himself, the great Yahweh or Jehovah. The Lord Jesus does not hesitate to use these two words for Himself and if He is not God, then He must be a blasphemer.

Verse 25 is a difficult sentence in the original which has been rendered in varying ways by translators. The answer to the question "Who are you?" has this sense, "even that which I have also spoken unto you from the beginning", or possibly "primarily". The N.I.V. has "just what I have been claiming all along", or F. F. Bruce, "I am what I have been telling you all along". The Lord follows this by saying, "He Who sent Me is reliable, and what I have heard from Him I tell the world" (26). Again the message goes further than Israel. It is basic truth for mankind as a whole.

> "They did not understand that He was telling them about His Father. So Jesus said, 'When you have lifted up the Son of Man, then you will know that I am and that I do nothing on My own but speak just what the Father has taught Me. The One Who sent Me is with Me; He has not left Me alone, for I always do what pleases Him'. Even as He spoke, many put their faith in Him" (viii. 27-30, N.I.V.).

In iii. 34 we are assured that "He Whom God has sent speaks the words of God", and this important fact is stressed constantly by the Lord Jesus. The student should consult the following verses—viii. 26, 28; xii. 49, 50; xiv. 10, 24; xvii. 8, 14. Christ's words are God's words, and must always be treated as such. Faithfulness will not allow any other attitude towards them.

As a result of these words of the Lord, the Evangelist tells us that "many put their faith in Him", and so once again the main object of this Gospel was realized: "but these (signs) are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through His Name" (xx. 31 A.V.). The lifting up of the Son of Man (hupsoo) is used several times in John of the cross of Christ (iii. 14; viii. 28; xii.32,34).

This is where the glorification started of the One Who always did what pleased the Father. It is the result of His complete sinlessness, for no human being since the Fall of Adam always pleases God in every thought, word and deed.

> "To the Jews who had believed Him, Jesus said, 'If you hold to My teaching, you are really My disciples. Then you will know the truth, and the truth will set you free'." (John viii. 31, 32, N.I.V.).

The word "abide" or "remain" (meno) is one of John's characteristic words. It is one thing to believe a person; it is another to continually hold fast to that belief. Christ is saying to His hearers, your future loyalty to My teaching will prove the reality of your present profession. Discipleship is continuous; it is a way of life. Only those who truly believe or trust will hold fast permanently. False belief can only result in bondage, but God's truth can free them and these are the words of One Who personified truth (xiv. 6). This freedom is real and precious, but it never means licence. We are free to accomplish all that God wants us to be and do, free from the slavery of sin, and free to do His will, which is the only state that can give us lasting satisfaction. Paul was the apostle of freedom (Gal. v. 1), and without such freedom, it is impossible to serve the Lord; for slaves are for ever bound and in shackles and as such can do nothing of themselves.

The Pharisees who were listening to Him replied:

> "They answered Him, 'we are Abraham's descendants and have never been slaves of anyone. How can you say that we shall be set free?'. Jesus replied, 'I tell you the truth, everyone who sins is a slave to sin. Now a slave has no permanent place in the family, but a son belongs to it for ever. So if the Son sets you free, you will be free indeed. I know you are Abraham's descendants. Yet you are ready to kill Me, because you have no room for My word. I am telling you what I have seen in the Father's presence, and you do what you have heard from your father'." (viii. 33-38, N.I.V.).

A. T. Robertson rightly says, "Freedom (intellectual, moral and spiritual) is attainable when we are set free from darkness, sin, ignorance, superstition, and let the Light of the World shine on us and in us" (Word Pictures in the New Testament). The listeners said, "We are Abraham's seed" and this was their proudest boast. Yes, but the Jews came to rely solely on mere physical descent (Matt. iii. 9) and what they said was not true, for at that moment they were under the Roman yoke as they had been in the past under Assyria, Babylon, Persia, Greece, the Ptolomies, the Syrian (Seleucid). They completely missed the point of Christ's words about real freedom. The Lord's teaching here is similar to Paul's in Rom. vi. 12-23.

The illustration now changes to the contrast between the positions of the son and the slave in the house, and we should remember that slavery obtained at this time. A slave had no permanent standing in the master's home. He could be cast out at any moment, while the son and heir had a permanent place—once a son, always a son.

But Christ could free slaves from the bondage of sin and death, and if He did so, they were really free, it was no sham thing.

Christ agreed that, from a natural standpoint, they were physically descended from Abraham:

> "I know you are Abraham's descendants. Yet you are ready to kill Me, because you have no room for My word. I am telling you what I have seen in the Father's presence, and you do what you have heard from your father" (viii. 37, 38, N.I.V.).

The Lord Jesus differentiates between "My Father" and "your father". By the time this address is finished we shall see that Christ is teaching that there are two families with two fathers which are utterly opposed to one another, and the implications of this we must consider.

> " 'Abraham is our father', they answered. 'If you were Abraham's children' said Jesus, 'then you would do the things Abraham did. As it is, you are determined to kill Me, a man who told you the truth that I heard from God. Abraham did not do such things. You are doing the things your own father does'. 'We are not illegitimate children', they protested. 'The only Father we have is God Himself'." (viii. 39-41, N.I.V.).

Romans ix. 1-8 makes it quite clear that physical descent from Abraham does not prove that such are the real children of God.

"For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel: neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children: but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called" (Rom. ix. 6, 7, A.V.). Abraham had children by other women, but they did not constitute the true seed. Physical descent was not enough. The real seed only came through Isaac, and in this way were linked to special promise of God made to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

The Jews whom Christ was addressing were not the true seed of Abraham, for had they been so they would have followed Abraham's example and proclaimed it by their actions. The Lord told them that if they had been Abraham's children, they would have performed Abraham's works. Instead of this they were doing their father's works (John.viii.39-41) and that father, as the context makes clear, was none other but Satan, the murderer from the beginning (viii. 44). In their mad desire to murder Him, they were acting like their father. Abraham welcomed and believed the Word of God and obeyed His commandments. God said of him, "Abraham obeyed My voice, and kept My charge, My commandments, My statutes and My laws" (Gen. xxvi. 5). The acts of the Pharisees were totally contrary to this. They did not exhibit Abraham's character. Nor was there anything of the heavenly Father's character to be seen in them, however much they might protest that they were Abraham's real children. All the time the Pharisees were failing because their carnal minds were limited to the physical side of things. And because of this they did not understand what Christ was saying to them, nor did they show any love for Him Who had come from God to make Him known to them and at great cost to be their Redeemer and King (John viii. 42, 43).

Now the Lord in plain language says to them:

> "You belong to your father, the devil, and you want to carry out your father's desire. He was a murderer from the beginning, not holding to the truth, for there is no truth in > him. When he lies, he speaks his native language, for he is a liar and the father of lies" (viii. 44, N.I.V.).

If these words are true, and they surely are, terrible thought they may be, then they indicate that there are two seeds among mankind. At the very beginning, after the fall of Adam, God indicates that there would be two seeds, one from Adam and the other from the serpent (Satan). He said, "I will put enmity between thee (Satan) and the woman (Eve), and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel" (Gen. iii. 15 A.V.). This terrible revelation had been given by Christ in parabolic form (Matt. xiii. 24-30, 36-42); the wheat and the tares represent these two companies. "The good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of (ek) the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil" (Matt. xiii. 38, 39 A.V.). There is not the slightest hint in this parable that the good seed were ever tares, nor could tares ever become wheat. The only end for the tares was to be burned up and finally completely destroyed (40-42). The aim of the enemy (Satan) here was to make a sowing of that which would look exactly like the true seed so the false seed could not be distinguished from it. Thus the true sowing would be corrupted and ruined.

We see this working out with our first parents. In spite of her sin, God promised Eve that her seed should bruise the serpent (Satan), and evidently she thought her first child, Cain, was the answer to this promise:

> "Now the man having come to know Eve his wife,—she conceived and bare Cain and said 'I have gotten a Man, even Yahweh (Jehovah)'." (Gen. iv. 1, Rotherham).

It is noteworthy that Cain was not said to be begotten in Adam's likeness. This was reserved for Seth (Gen. v. 3).

When we come to John's first epistle, we get further light on Cain. In iii. 12 we read, "Do not be like Cain, who belonged to the evil one and murdered his brother. And why did he murder him? Because his own actions were evil and his brother's were righteous". We should note here that the words "belonged to" expressed the Greek ek (out of, expressing origin). It is a preposition that John uses frequently. Cain's origin was linked with Satan the murderer, and no wonder he became a murderer himself. The same proposition is used by Christ when he says to the Pharisees, "you are of (ek) your father the devil" (you originate from him). John makes a clear distinction between the seed of Satan and the seed of God, the tares and the wheat.

All this is part of the great conflict of the ages which primarily is not between Satan and the human race, but between Satan and God, the enemy constantly seeking to overthrow God's redemptive plan, so that in the end he (Satan) can triumph, take God's place, and rule all creation. The Pharisees who opposed the Lord Jesus were the dupes of Satan in their blindness and hardness of heart, however much they imagined themselves to be the true seed of Abraham. Actually the Lord is telling them that they are not Abraham's seed but part of the seed of the serpent and at the end, instead of receiving the gift of eternal life, they would get eternal death.

No wonder they hated Christ and poured contempt on Him. They accused him of being demon-possessed (John viii. 48, 52). In spite of this insult, the Lord finishes His debate with them by claiming to be the great I AM, the Jehovah of the Old Testament.

No.16. viii. 49 - ix. 39.
pp. 201 - 205

Instead of being demon-possessed, the Lord asserted to the Pharisees that He honoured the Father, and they dishonoured and insulted Him by rejecting the Son Who was His mouthpiece. Again He stressed that all who trusted and followed Him faithfully would not experience eternal death, for His word was life-giving that would never have an end. The enemies chose to take the words as referring to death of the body.

> "At this the Jews exclaimed, 'Now we know that you are demon-possessed! Abraham died and so did the prophets, yet you say that if anyone keeps your word, he will never taste death. Are you greater than our father Abraham? He died, and so did the prophets. Who do you think you are?'." (viii. 52, 53, N.I.V.).

Of course Abraham and the prophets were dead physically, but the Lord was meaning spiritual death and in no sense was He exalting Himself. He said:

> "If I glorify Myself, My glory means nothing. My Father, Whom you claim as your God, is the One Who glorifies Me. Though you do not know Him, I know him. If I said I did not, I would be a liar like you, but I do know Him and keep His word. Your father Abraham rejoiced at the thought of seeing My day; he saw it and was glad" (viii. 54-56).

On no occasion did Christ praise Himself (v. 31). His constant desire was to glorify the Father. The leaders, on the other hand, in spite of all their religious activities, did not really know God or glorify Him, as their actions clearly testified. Their father Abraham rejoiced to see by faith the day when Christ would come into His own. He was among those in Heb. xi., who saw the promises "afar off" by faith, but did not receive them in his lifetime. He knew they were sure and certain nevertheless.

The Lord ends with the astounding statement,

> " 'I tell you the truth, before Abraham was born, I am!'. At this they picked up stones to stone Him, but Jesus hid Himself, slipping away from the Temple grounds" (viii. 58, 59).

Here is a climax statement, again using ego eimi, "Before Abraham was, I AM". The words are not grammatical as they stand, compelling the reader to realize that "I am" is much more than the present tense of the verb "to be". As we have seen before, all these great I AM statements take one back to the great title of God in Exod. iii. 14, "I am that I am", "thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM has sent unto you". The same title is used again in Isa. xli. 4 and several more times in this context.

Modern readers may doubt this, but the Jews who were listening to the Lord, certainly did not, for they immediately took up stones to stone Him. They knew that I AM was a title of Jehovah and that Christ was therefore claiming to be God. If the Lord's deity is not true, then they were correct, for such language is blasphemous if made by any human being. There is no middle position. We either worship Him as God or we reject and stone Him. Hundreds of religious people today do the latter in their blindness and ignorance of the Word of God. [Those who wish to test this for themselves should consider the author's book The Lord Jesus Christ, God or only Man?.]

In spite of the threatening attitude of the Pharisees the Lord Jesus went out of the Temple. "His hour had not yet come." Once again, three months later, the Pharisees will try to kill Him, but He will pass out of their hands (x. 39).

Chapter ix.

We now come to the sixth of the miraculous sign, the healing of the man born blind.

> "As He went along, He saw a man blind from birth. His disciples asked Him, 'Rabbi, who sinned, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?'. 'Neither this man nor his parents sinned', said Jesus, 'but this happened so that the work of God might be displayed in his life. As long as it is day, we must do the work of Him Who sent Me. Night is coming when no-one can work. While I am in the world, I am the Light of the world'." (ix. 1-5).

From the disciples' question, one can see that they had the idea that physical congenital troubles were caused either by the sin of the person concerned, or his parents. It is sometimes true that disease is the result of personal sin as in the case of the man at the Bethesda pool (v. 14), and parents can hand on the effects of sin to the third and fourth generation. In this instance it was not so, as the Lord made clear. Rather it was that the works of God might be manifested in him, and God's glory again revealed. This was the purpose behind it all, but we must not think that God deliberately caused the man when a child to be born blind, so that this miracle might be performed. God overruled the blindness so that by recovering his sight through the power of Christ, he might realize that this was the work of God and so would turn to the true Light of the world and put his faith in Him.

Christ said in effect, we must work while it is day, while we have the opportunity. Darkness was coming, for He Who was the world's Light was soon to leave it and return to the glory of heaven's holiest of all which He had left.

Then the light would be mediated through His faithful followers. But apart from this the world would become an exceedingly dark place under the control of the prince of darkness, Satan. The believer would be exhorted to let his light shine (Phil. ii. 15, 16), but this would not be equal to the One Who was the Light of the world. Even electric lights do not turn night into day.

> "Having said this, He spat on the ground, made some mud with the saliva, and put it on the man's eyes. 'Go', He told him, 'wash in the Pool of Siloam (this word mean Sent)'. So the man went and washed, and came home seeing" (ix. 6, 7).

The Jews believed that saliva was efficacious for eye trouble, but forbade it on the Sabbath. We do not know why Christ acted along this line. It was not necessary to the cure of blindness and in other case of blindness He did not use it. Perhaps it was to encourage the man to believe. John gives us the meaning of the Hebrew word Siloam, for he constantly had Gentiles in mind who did not understand the language. It means "sent" and would link the mind with Christ as the Sent One from the Father, though the man was not in the position to understand this yet.

> "His neighbours and those who had formerly seen him begging asked, 'Isn't this the same man who used to sit and beg?'. Some claimed that he was. Others said, 'No, he only looks like him'. But he himself insisted, 'I am the man'. 'How then were your eyes opened?' they demanded. He replied, 'The Man they call Jesus made some mud and put it on my eyes. He told me to go to Siloam and wash. So I went and washed, and then I could see'. 'Where is this man?' they asked him. 'I don't know', he said" (ix. 8-12).

There were differences of opinion among the neighbours concerning the beggar who had been healed. In the verses that follow we can see a growing appreciation of the Lord on his part. First of all Christ was "A man called Jesus" (11). On being asked the second time he said, "He is a prophet" (17) and then, a little later, "if this man were not from God, He could do nothing" (33). Then the Lord spoke to him and asked if he believed on the Son of God. "Who is He, Lord, that I might believe on Him?". "It is He that talketh with thee" Christ replied. And then the final saving response is, "Lord, I believe", and he worshipped Him (35-38).

By these steps this man comes through darkness to light in more than one sense, and so fits in with the purpose of this Gospel (xx. 30, 31). In between these verses the Evangelist records the words and actions of the religious leaders when the man was brought to them for their verdict, and the fact that the healing had taken place on the Sabbath complicated matters still further, for this was largely the bone of contention between the Pharisees and the Lord as we have seen. In their false estimation they construed the healing of the blind man as work on the Sabbath day! These leaders had made their own list of what actions were permissible on the Sabbath and what were forbidden. On this list was kneading, and the making of mud or clay with earth and saliva was reckoned to be work, and so was not allowed!

They first of all question the man who tells them that Christ had put mud on his eyes, and he washed and found he could see! This was not sufficient for them, so they summon other witnesses (ix. 18). Not only the crowd was divided (vii. 43) but the Pharisees were as well (ix. 16). Some of them asked the man again:

> "Finally they turned again to the blind man, 'What have you to say about Him? It was your eyes He opened'." (ix. 17).

The man's answer was "He is a prophet". This did not satisfy the leaders:

> "The Jews still did not believe that he had been blind and had received his sight until they sent for the man's parents. 'Is this your son?' they asked. 'Is this the one you say was born blind? How is it that now he can see?'." (ix. 18, 19).

The parents confirmed the fact that he had been born blind, but they did not know how he had received his sight. They were afraid to say more lest they were put out of the synagogue (20-22). Once more the Pharisees summoned the man and said that they knew "this man (Christ) is a sinner". The reply they received was beyond argument:

> "Whether He is a sinner or not, I don't know. One thing I do know, I was blind but now I see!" (ix. 25).

The Pharisees were doing their best to find some loophole that they could seize on to trip the Lord up. They put further pressure on the man who now decides to resist them, and the rest of the incident consists of sharp repartee between the two sides. The leaders hurled insults at him (ix. 28, 29). They said, "You were steeped in sin at birth; how dare you lecture us!" (34). They were the great and mighty scholars and interpreters of the Mosaic law in their estimation, and this man was a complete ignoramus.

But he stated something that was beyond argument. He said, if this man were not from God, He could do nothing" (33). The leaders, realizing they were getting the worst of the argument, lost their tempers and drove the man out of the place where they were, and doubtless expelled him from the synagogue too. But as we have already seen, the Lord found him, spoke the words of eternal life, and the man responded and said, "Lord, I believe" and prostrated himself before Him in reverence.

The giving of the sight to the blind was one of the actions of Messiah foretold by the prophets (Isa. xxxv. 5; xlii. 7). At His coming "then the eyes of the blind shall be opened" and the ears of the deaf unstopped too. These were signs of the coming of the earthly kingdom. When John the Baptist's faith began to fail in prison and he sent a message asking the Lord if He fulfilled the office of Messiah, Christ's answer was:

> "Go back and report to John what you hear and see: The blind receive sight, the lame walk, those who have leprosy are cured, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, and the good news is preached to the poor. Blessed is the man who does not fall away on account of Me" (Matt. xi. 4-6).

The kingdom miraculous sign were happening and the King was present. No wonder the message was constantly given out by the Lord and the Twelve, "the kingdom of heaven is near".

No.17. ix. 39 - x. 21.
pp. 221 - 225

The Lord Jesus concluded His healing work with the blind man by saying:

> "For judgment I have come into this world, so that the blind will see and those who see will become blind" (ix. 39, N.I.V.).

There appears to be a contradiction between this verse and iii. 17, xii. 47, where the Lord declares that He did not come to this world to judge but to save it. These verses state that He did not come to execute judgment. That lies in the future. Verse 39 which we are considering is linked to the reaction of those who witnessed His mighty works and words. Some will see and some will become blind. This is decided by themselves, whether they are for or against Him. They are not forced either way, but they have to come to a decision. As we have seen before, they cannot remain neutral. The Pharisees blinded their own eyes, yet they professed to see. In which case Christ declared that their guilt remained (41). Later He called them "blind guides" (Matt. xxiii. 16).

Chapter x.

This chapter begins with a double Amen which emphasizes its importance. Its great theme is the activity and concern of the true Shepherd for the sheep under His care. Israel, the people of God, are often called "sheep" in the O.T. and God Himself was their Shepherd (Psa. lxxix. 13; c. 3). He appointed under-shepherds, but many of them proved to be false teachers who looked after their own interests rather than the sheep entrusted to their care. This is clearly shown in Ezek. xxxiv. which the reader should consult. The Jews, listening to Christ, would therefore have no difficulty with the illustration He used of Himself as the Good Shepherd. Whether they accepted Him as such was another matter.

The Good Shepherd commences by saying:

> "I tell you the truth, the man who does not enter the sheep pen by the gate, but climbs in by some other way, is a thief and a robber."

The sheep pen was a large enclosure, square shaped, having one entrance on one side. This enabled someone to act as watchman to guard and regulate whoever came into the fold. If anyone was seen climbing in some other way, it was obvious that he was not a friend, but an enemy who had come to damage and to steal. There was a close link between the shepherd and his sheep. The sheep would follow him and recognize the voice of the shepherd, and this is still true today in the East (x. 3, 4). A stranger made no impression on them, for they could not recognize his voice (5).

> "Jesus used this figure of speech, but they did not understand what He was telling them" (x. 6).

The word "parable" of the A.V. is not parabole, the usual word, but paroimia, a proverb, a deep saying. His listeners could not see the point of His story.

The Lord now adds another figure in verse 7:

> "Therefore Jesus said again, 'I tell you the truth, I am the gate for the sheep. All who ever came before Me were thieves and robbers, but the sheep did not listen to them. I am the gate; whoever enters through Me will be saved. He will come in and go out, and find pasture. The thief comes only to steal and kill and destroy; I have come that they may have life, and have it to the full" (x. 7-10).

The Pharisees and others did not understand the Lord's words, so to make them clearer, He adds the figure of the gate or door. There was only one door into the sheepfold, and that door or gate was an illustration of Christ Himself, for there is no other way to obtain salvation and the gift of everlasting life except through Him, and later He will describe Himself as the Way (xiv. 6). Others come and declare themselves to be the solution to all human troubles. Israel had had false leaders and false Messiahs who had led them to disaster (Acts v. 36, 37), hence the words of John x. 12 & 13, and the Lord will predict that there will be many more (Matt. xxiv. 23). They were like the worthless shepherd who deserts the flock (Zech. xi. 17). The true Shepherd on the other hand continually cares for the sheep, meeting all their needs. He is even willing to risk His life for them (John x. 11), and His one object is that they might have not ordinary life, but life to the full or in abundance, and that eternally:

> "I am the good Shepherd; I know My sheep and My sheep know Me—just as the Father knows Me and I know the Father—and I lay down My life for the sheep" (x. 14, 15).

Not only is He alone the way into God's sheepfold, but there is an intimacy between Him and His sheep. They know and love each other. Some may protest at the so-called narrowness of these verses of Christ and they point out that there is good in all religions and they all worship the same God. But has any one of these religions someone who like Christ had taken upon Himself the sin of the world and paid the penalty for that sin by dying in their place? Not only this, but is raised from the dead and has the power to raise from the dead all who believe and trust Him also, and guarantee to them everlasting life?

There is only one way to this, and that is through Christ by faith. Narrow it may be, but it is the narrowness of truth nevertheless, and it was this that the Lord was emphasizing to those who were listening to Him, some of whom were His enemies.

The Lord goes on,

> "I have other sheep that are not of (ek) this sheep pen. I must bring them also. They too will listen to My voice, and there shall be one flock and one shepherd" (x. 16).

Who are the "other sheep"? Some say they are the Jews of the dispersion, but this cannot be true for a number of reasons. The Lord Jesus says they are not of (ek) this fold. John uses this preposition many times to express origin. The "other sheep" do not originate from this fold, which is certainly Israel. Jewish nationality was not decided by where a person lived, that is in the land of Israel or outside it. It was reckoned by whether he was a true descendant of Abraham through Isaac (Rom. ix. 7), and it mattered not where he resided. Hence the great influx of true Israelites from abroad to Jerusalem at the great annual feasts. These certainly belonged to the fold of Israel, but the "other sheep" do not. Much has been made of a distinction between the two Greek words meaning "other", allos and heteros, allos meaning another of the same sort, and heteros meaning others of a different sort in classical Greek. Let us put this to the test in the N.T. and compare the parable of the sower in Matthew and Luke. In the following references it is the same act that is referred to in both Gospels. Compare Matthew xiii. 5-8 with Luke viii. 6-8:

Matt. xiii. 5-8	Luke viii. 6-8
Some (allos) fell on stony ground.	Some (heterps) fell on rock.
Some (allos) fell on thorns.	Some (heteros) fell on thorns.
Some (allos) fell on good ground.	Some (heteros) fell on good ground.

It is obvious there is no distinction between allos and heteros here.

In I Cor. xv. 41 we read that one star differs from another in glory. If the above rule of a difference between allos and heteros is correct, then here is surely a case for heteros, for difference is stressed. But what do we find? Another in glory is allos, another glory of the moon (allos), another glory of the stars (allos).

If we look at the up to date Greek Lexicon, that of Arndt & Gingrich under 'heteros', section J, we are told that heteros is used interchangeably with allos, its equivalent. The truth is that these words are equivalent in the late koine Greek of the N.T., no matter what meaning they had in classical Greek.

Professor F. F Bruce comments on John x. 16,

> "His sheep who belonged to 'this fold' were of Jewish stock, but He had other sheep who must be brought to Him who never belonged to that fold and indeed could not be accommodated within it."
>
> "John here repeats in different language what Jesus said in His discourse, about the good shepherd; that He was to bring His 'other sheep' who did not belong to the Jewish fold, and join them (with their fellow-believers of Jewish birth) into one flock under one shepherd. Once again the Gentile mission is foreshadowed" (Italics ours: The Gospel of John, pp.227 & 251).

At the end of this age there will be a great influx of Gentiles with Israel. Note Zechariah ii. 11, and the phrase "the uttermost parts of the earth" in Acts i. 8, and the gospel of the kingdom preached to all nations (Matt. xxiv. 14; Luke xxiv. 47), and the great commission of Matt. xxviii., thus fulfilling the original purpose expressed in Genesis xii. 3 where Abraham's seed should be a blessing to all families of the earth; and Isa. lvi. 7 will be true that "Mine house shall be called a house of prayer for all people". This must be so if God's kingdom will one day cover the earth as the Scriptures predict.

It is surely true then that the "other sheep" cannot refer to true Israelites who lived outside Palestine. It must refer, as Professor Bruce says, to Gentiles. It is important to get this clear, otherwise wrong deductions will be made which can only lead to wrong interpretation of the passage.

> "The reason My Father loves me is that I lay down My life—only to take it up again. No-one takes it from Me, but I lay down of My own accord. I have authority to lay it down and authority to take it up again. This command I received from My Father" (John x. 17, 18).

The Father's love for the Son is drawn by the voluntary offering of the Son for the sin of the world (Heb. ix. 14). There was no compulsion from the Father. The Son willingly gave Himself as a sacrifice for His people's sins which were laid upon Him, the sinless One (Isa. liii. 5, 6). But this was not done just to exhibit His unselfish love, but also in order to resume His life, for a dead Saviour is useless. He laid down His life in order to receive it again, and He had the power to do this that no human being ever possessed (John x. 18). We have noted before that the whole Godhead was involved in the stupendous miracle of Christ's resurrection; the Father (Gal. i. 1), the Son Himself (in the context we are studying), and the Holy Spirit (I Pet. iii. 18). He had power to lay it down and power to take it again (John x. 18). This reminds us of His statement concerning the temple of His body, "in three days I will raise it up" (John ii. 19), and all this was in line with the Father's will.

> "At these words the Jews were again divided. Many of them said, 'He is demon-possessed and raving mad. Why listen to Him?'. But others said, 'These are not the sayings of a man possessed by a demon. Can a demon open the eyes of the blind?'." (John x. 19-21).

Division of opinion about the Lord is a common thing in John's Gospel (vi. 52, 60, 66; vii. 12; viii. 22; ix. 16; x. 19, 24, 41; xii. 19, 29, 42). This has always been so and is still true today. It is either worshipping Him or stoning Him; there can be no neutral position, as the Saviour has clearly taught.

The Gospel according to MATTHEW.

No.27. xvii. 1 - xviii. 9.
pp. 1 - 5

It is important to get the setting of the Transfiguration. It was evidently night, for Luke tells us that the disciples were "heavy with sleep" (Luke ix. 32 and compare ix. 37). The Lord had ascended a mountain to spend the night in communion with the Father, as was His habit (28).

There, in the nocturnal darkness, as He prayed, a glorious transformation took place which words cannot properly convey, and it must have been all the more overwhelming because of the darkness all around (Luke ix. 29). The Lord's face became inexpressibly radiant. To a lesser extent the same thing happened to Moses when he communed with God, also on a mountain; his face reflected the glory he had seen, even after he had descended and mingled with the people (Exod. xxxiv. 29-35).

Not only His face, but the Lord's clothes glistened with light, so that His whole Person was brilliantly radiant. The sight must have been overwhelmingly grand and overpowering. We can well understand that the effect on the three disciples was almost to bemuse them. This was a foretaste of the glory of His second Coming, as Peter has expressed it in his second epistle.

The word "transfiguration" was Tyndale's, and from this time the word has kept its place in the English versions. He got it from the Latin Vulgate. Others use the word "transform", and Paul used the same word in Rom. xii. 2. It was a change in the form or appearance of the Lord's outward Person. This glory must have been inherent in the personality of the Saviour, for He was "God, manifested in the flesh". It was veiled by His humanity, but here His glory came through and enveloped Him.

> "Just then there appeared before them Moses and Elijah, talking with Jesus" (Matthew xvii. 3, N.I.V.).

These men were two great representatives of the Jewish nation and stood for the Law and the Prophets. Luke not only informs us that they were talking, but also what they were discussing:

> "They spoke about His departure, which He was about to bring to fulfillment at Jerusalem" (Luke ix. 31, N.I.V.).

The word "departure" is literally exodus. The Lord Jesus was about to accomplish a far mightier exodus than Israel had experienced in Egypt. That was a release from slavery, but the Lord's mighty work on the cross was the means of deliverance from sin and death, far greater enemies than Pharaoh and the Egyptians.

We must remember that Elijah did not die, but was translated to heaven by God (II.Kings.ii.11) and Moses was evidently raised from the dead, an act that Satan disputed God's right to perform (Jude 9).

In this tremendous experience Peter is again the spokesman:

> "Peter said to Jesus, 'Lord, it is good for us to be here. If you wish I will put up three shelters—one for You, one for Moses and one for Elijah'." (Matt. xvii. 4, N.I.V.).

We may wonder why Peter uttered these words, but we must remember that he had been awakened from sleep (Luke ix. 32) and was still drowsy. In addition to this the overwhelming glory dazzled him, so it was no wonder that he did not realize fully what he had said (Luke ix. 33; Mark ix. 6).

But it may be that, in spite of all this, he had a reason for his words. It has been suggested that this was the time of the feast of Tabernacles and Peter was saying that they could celebrate it just where they were on the mountain. Or perhaps Peter, realizing that it was night, felt it would be desirable for them to have shelters to stay in. Whatever the real reason, the experience they were undergoing, though tremendous, was intensely wonderful and he wanted it to last. He said, "it is good (kalos) for us to be here". Kalos means beautiful or delightful. Had any human being ever had such an uplifting and astounding experience before?

> "While he was still speaking, a bright cloud enveloped them, and a Voice from the cloud said, 'This is My Son, Whom I love; with Him I am well pleased. Listen to Him!'." (Matt. xvii. 5, N.I.V.).

Even the cloud that surrounded them reflected the glory that they were beholding, and the Voice spoke the very words which were uttered at the Lord's baptism. They most certainly bore repetition, in fact they could not be repeated too often. "Hear ye Him", "Listen to Him"! They were words which would have reminded Peter of his recent failure to do this when Christ had spoken about His death. The Voice was the Voice of God and fear now overtook them, for they fell down, terrified (xvii. 6).

The Lord in His compassion, now tenderly touches them and says, "don't be afraid", and when they looked up, the vision was ended and they were alone with the Lord.

As they descended from the mountain the Lord charged or commanded them to keep silent about what they had seen (9). He knew that it would be completely misunderstood by His enemies. After His resurrection, when His Godhead would be demonstrated, it was allowable.

The disciples had a problem about the promise of Elijah's coming in Mal. iv.

There he is represented as coming before the Messiah with his work of restoration. But the King was here and Elijah had not come. Had the scribes who taught the law been wrong?

> "The disciples asked Him, 'Why then do the teachers of the law say that Elijah must come first?'. Jesus replied, 'To be sure, Elijah comes and will restore all things. But I tell you, Elijah has already come, and they did not recognize him, but have done to him everything they wished. In the same way the Son of Man is going to suffer at their hands'." (Matt. xvii. 10-12, N.I.V.).

Three of the disciples had just seen Elijah, but the Messiah had come first and the prophet had not come in person. Yet the Lord insisted that he had come in the purifying and restoring ministry of John the Baptist, thus identifying him with the promise in Malachi. John was Elijah in spirit and ministry as foretold at his birth.

This is another example of how the fulfillment of prophecy can be contingent as regards time. It must be fulfilled if a God of truth has spoken it, but the timing may depend upon the reactions of those to whom it is addressed. At last the disciples understood (13) and the Lord adds that He is going to be treated in the same way as John. They killed the Baptist as shortly they will the Son of Man.

As they approached the crowd, a demon-possessed boy, who had symptoms like epilepsy, was brought to the Lord. It was evidently a severe case, so much so that the disciples could not heal him. And yet, at their commission, the Lord Jesus had given them the ability to cast out demons (x. 8), so what had gone wrong?

The Lord first addresses the crowd, "O unbelieving perverse generation". They were a fair representation of the nation at large. The word translated perverse means distorted, twisted in two. How could such ever understand the truth that He was making known? "How long shall I stay with you? How long shall I put up with you?" He asked. Here was weariness and a small insight given as to the cost of someone Who is utterly holy having to live and have dealings with sinful and perverse men. This is something that we can never fully appreciate. The Lord now casts out the demon and delivers the boy. The disciples want to know why they had failed to do so. They ask the Lord, Who puts His finger on the reason straight away and says "because of your unbelief". The word means "little faith". The fault lay in their minds. They were trusting too much in themselves and their own ability, and therefore too little in Christ. How easy it is for self-confidence to come in suddenly and dominate our thoughts! The Bible makes perfectly clear how destructive unbelief can be. It limits God; no wonder then that we read "without faith it is impossible to please Him" (Heb. xi. 6).

The disciples' faith was so small that it could not be represented by the tiny mustard seed (xvii. 20). Had they had this, they could have removed mountains of difficulties. Nothing would then be impossible and this reminds us of Phil. iv. 13 "I can do everything through Him Who gives me strength" (N.I.V.).

The Lord now tells them again of His approaching death and resurrection (xvii. 22, 23) with the result that they were filled with grief. Not yet had they appreciated or understood the fact of His resurrection and what it involved. This was not fully grasped until after this mighty event.

The Temple Tax.

Half a shekel was payable annually to the Temple by every Jew over twenty years of age. This was based on Exod. xxx. 11-16, originally, for the support of the Tabernacle and then reinstated after the Exile (Neh. x. 32) for the Temple. Christ shows by illustration that the children of kings are exempt from tax (Matt. xvii. 25, 26). As the Son of God He was not compelled to pay tribute to support God's house, but if He had not paid it might have been regarded as disrespect, so, in order to avoid causing misunderstanding, He instructs Peter to fish and he would find the exact amount of money for the Lord and himself in a fish. He Who created all things, for our sakes became poor (II Cor. viii. 9), so much so that He had not enough money to pay this small tax!

Chapter xviii. opens with the question of precedence which had been raised by the disciples on the journey from Caesarea Philippi to Capernaum (Mark ix. 33). Evidently jealousy had been growing in their hearts. They had seen Peter, James and John singled out by the Lord for the experience of the Transfiguration. What a devastating sin jealousy can be! And this is not the only occurrence (Matt. xx. 20-28; Luke xxii. 24).

The Lord's answer was to set a child in their midst and to point out that unless they became child-like (not childish) they would never enter the kingdom of heaven (xviii. 2, 3), let alone have big places in it.

> "Therefore whoever humbles himself like this child is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven. And whoever welcomes a little child like this in My Name welcomes Me" (Matthew xviii. 4, 5).

True humility is one of the most important Christian virtues. It is the opposite of pride and self-sufficiency and is the basic mental attitude of the worthy walk of the believer detailed in Eph. iv.-vi.—(note iv. 2). The reception of such a character "on the basis of My Name", means that he is like the Lord Jesus "meek and lowly of heart", with a sense of dependence upon a parent's wisdom and love.

The saying about humbling oneself must have been repeated by the Lord many times (see Matt. xxiii. 12). Surely this is one of the most difficult things to do, for it goes right against human nature with its tendency to exalt self. Yet it is absolutely fundamental to a life that is fruitful and well-pleasing to the Lord. Such a life will take care to avoid being a stumbling block to others—especially the young (xviii. 6-8).

The language that follows is metaphorical, but there is no doubt as to its meaning. If we have to make a choice, it is better to sacrifice important elements of our being, than be guilty of conduct that would incur the loss of the whole. The hand speaks of doing and making. The foot speaks of movement and walking. The eye speaks of seeing and regarding. If any or all of these things cause us to violate the standards of the holy Scriptures, they must be given up. The decision must rest with ourselves; no one can decide for us, nor can we adopt the attitude that we cannot help our failures, for we are not helpless machines. God's grace and strength are always at our disposal.

No.28. xviii. 10 - xix. 8.
pp. 21 - 25

The Lord Jesus continues His object lesson with the little child by saying:

> "See that you do not look down on one of these little ones. For I tell you that their angels in heaven always see the face of My Father in heaven" (Matt. xviii. 10, N.I.V.).

It is a Scriptural fact that angelic beings have been placed by God over nations (Daniel x. 13; xii. 1) and evidently Satan has his spiritual emissaries in opposition, as this chapter reveals. Is it true to say, from Matt. xviii., that children have their guardian angels? This could be deduced from the Lord's words and the Jews certainly believed in guardian angels. What is clear is that God is concerned about children in their helplessness and also child-like believers.

Verse 11 is omitted by several important authorities. It occurs in Luke xix. 10 and seems to have been inserted in Matthew by a copyist to make an introduction to the parable of the lost sheep which follows (Matt. xviii. 12-14). This reveals that every single sheep is known to the Lord. If only one strays, He is greatly concerned and will make every effort to recover it and will rejoice when it is restored. Individual believers are not lost in a crowd where God is concerned and one is amazed how He knows and cares for each one individually.

The way God deals with the erring sheep leads on to the way that a person should deal with his erring brother:

> "If your brother sins against you, go and show him his fault, just between the two of you. If he listens to you, you have won your brother over. But if he will not listen, take one or two others along, so that every matter may be established by the testimony of two or three witnesses. If he refuses to listen to them, tell it to the church; and if he refuses to listen even to the church, treat him as you would a pagan or a tax collector" (15-17, N.I.V.).

This advice is very necessary, for it is a sad experience that believers do disagree, often with disastrous results. The first thing that the wronged person should do is to meet the offender privately and discuss the matter. Talking about him behind his back is useless. The advice given by the apostle Paul is much to the point here (Gal. vi. 1). The next step is to take others as witnesses if the private meeting is without result, and if this does not solve the matter then the appeal is to the "church".

We ask the reader to turn back to the exposition of chapter xvi. regarding the word "church". It certainly cannot mean the Gentile church of today which was not in existence, but refers to the synagogue or local court (see Acts xix. 39).

The conclusion, given by the Lord Jesus, is given in verse 18. The grammatical construction is the same as in xvi. 19 and the reader is again referred back to this verse and its rendering of the future perfect passive periphrastic. We give the rendering of The Amplified Version:

> "Truly, I tell you, whatever you forbid and declare to be improper and unlawful on earth must be what is already forbidden in heaven, and whatever you permit and declare proper and lawful on earth must be already permitted in heaven."

C. B. Williams translates this verse:

> "I solemnly say to you, whatever you forbid on earth must be already forbidden in heaven, and whatever you permit on earth must be already permitted in heaven."

Robert Young gives it literally:

> "Verily I say to you, whatever things ye may bind upon the earth shall be having been bound in the heaven, and whatever things ye may loose on the earth shall be having been loosed in heaven."

These translations are true to the original Greek and show clearly that believers can only do what God has already determined shall be done. Their action is contingent upon God's will. He is certainly not waiting in heaven to see what believers on earth decide to do before He ratifies their action. This would grossly over-emphasize the importance of human beings and make almighty God subservient to them and is entirely contrary to the revelation of holy Scripture.

Unfortunately, from time to time, God's people on earth have failed to carry out God's decrees and have authorized what He has not willed. Needless to say, such activity is null and void so far as God is concerned. He will carry out on the earth what He has determined and not all the forces of Satan and men can finally stop it, although they may hinder its realization for a while. Matt. xviii. 18 declares that God's people can only ratify what God has already purposed. The faulty rendering of the A.V. and other versions have only led to priestcraft and bondage to men.

The Lord Jesus goes on to declare:

> "Again, I tell you, that if two of you on earth agree about anything you ask for, it will be done for you by My Father in heaven. For where two or three come together in My Name, there am I with them" (xviii. 19, 20, N.I.V.).

These two verses must not be separated; otherwise truth will be jeopardized. Verse.19 does not give an invitation to ask anything we choose or want with the assurance that we shall receive it. If this was so, it would mean that two people could demand anything from God, even if it was contrary to His will, whereas I John v. 14 declares:

> "And this is the confidence that we have in Him, that, if we ask anything according to His will, He heareth us", and as the holy Scripture cannot contradict Scripture, Matt. xviii. 19, 20 must be interpreted with this in mind. There are three essentials in these verses, (1) the presence of Christ; (2) full agreement among those gathered, and (3) the requests must be "in My Name".

How good it is to realize that God's blessing is not regulated by numbers! We may be impressed by large gatherings but the Lord has respect to the twos and threes, and if they fulfil the conditions of these verses they can accomplish more than big meetings which are not so regulated. The word "agree" sumphonesosin gives us our word "symphony", and when we have two or three gathered in the Name of Christ with Him presiding and all things subject to His will, we have "symphonic prayer" which will most certainly be answered. The words "in My Name" are parallel with I John v. 14 "according to His will", for how can one sincerely ask in the Name of Christ for things which are not "according to His will"?

There now follows Peter's question concerning forgiveness of others:

> "Then Peter came to Jesus and asked, 'Lord, how many times shall I forgive my brother when he sins against me? Up to seven times?'. Jesus answered, 'I tell you, not seven times, but seventy -- seven times'." (xviii. 21, 22, N.I.V.).

Peter possibly thought he was being magnanimous in saying seven times, as the Jewish rule was three times and this was based on Amos i. 6. But the Lord's reply meant more than expressed by 490 times; it meant unlimited forgiveness, and to enforce this Christ gave the parable of the unmerciful servant (xviii. 23-35). This occupies quite a long passage of Scripture and the reader is asked to consider it carefully.

Actually it could occur at any time in history. A man owed a very large sum of money to his king, and as he could not pay the king ordered that he, his wife, children and property should be sold to repay the debt. The man pleaded for mercy and time to pay, and the king took pity on him, generously cancelled the debt and let him go.

However, he met someone who owed him quite a trifling sum of money and instead of giving him the same generous treatment that he had experienced, he handled him roughly, demanded immediate payment and on finding that the debtor could not repay at once, had him thrown into prison.

His mean and unmerciful conduct came to the ears of the king who sent for him and said:

> " 'You wicked servant. I cancelled all that debt of yours because you begged me to. Shouldn't you have had mercy on your fellow-servant just as I had on you?'. In anger his master turned him over to the jailers to be tortured, until he should pay back all he owed. 'This is how My heavenly Father will treat each of you unless you forgive your brother from your heart'." (xviii. 32-35, N.I.V.).

We must remember that this parable was addressed to Peter and the Twelve who were saved men, and the solemn conclusion of the last verse applied to them as much as the rest of the parable. But the Lord was not teaching new truth, for this was embodied in the Sermon on the Mount (v. 23-26; vi. 14, 15), where He taught that an unforgiving spirit would lead to exclusion from the kingdom when set up. We have seen that this Gospel revolves around the conditions for entry into the kingdom of heaven or being shut out of it.

When we come to the later revelation concerning the Body of Christ, we are assured that each member has complete forgiveness by God, "having forgiven you all trespasses" (Col. ii. 13), and Eph. iv. 31, 32 teaches:

> "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

Here we are not asked to forgive because otherwise we shall forfeit God's forgiveness, but rather to forgive because we already have complete forgiveness by God. If an unforgiving spirit is cherished by any member of the Body of Christ, then this is "walking after the flesh", the sinful old nature that we all possess, and no one can do this with God's approval. Loss is bound to occur and the prize or reward is endangered.

The next section of Matthew's Gospel (chapter xix.) deals with the knotty question of divorce. The Pharisees again attempt to trip up the Lord Jesus by asking Him if it was lawful to divorce a wife for any and every reason (xix. 3). He refers back to the creation of Adam and Eve and the fact that God had joined them together and it was not for any man to separate them (6). They replied by quoting Moses' permission to divorce. The Lord answered:

> "Moses permitted you to divorce your wives because your hearts were hard. But it was not this way from the beginning. I tell you that anyone who divorces his wife, except for marital unfaithfulness, and marries another woman commits adultery" (xix. 8, 9, N.I.V.).

This agrees with His teaching in v. 31. At this time there was a dispute between two theological schools over the meaning of Deut. xxiv. 1. The school of Shammai took the strict and unpopular view of divorce for adultery alone, while the school of Hillel took the liberal and popular view of easy divorce for practically any reason real or imagined by the man. It is clear that the Lord agreed with the Shammai school and there is no doubt that, at the beginning, God's will for marriage was that it should be permanent, for life. He made one man and one woman, each for the other. He did not create more women than men so as to provide for divorce. But the weakness of the flesh spoils God's original purpose and we cannot believe that Moses who was faithful to God, would have been allowed to have modified it without the Lord's permission. The law originated from God, not Moses, and breaking the law in any particular was counted as disobedience to God, not Moses.

It is clear then that, in Matthew's account, the Lord Jesus allowed divorce for adultery, although this sank below the standard of marriage that God had in view at creation. There is a group of scholars who deny the genuineness of this exception, which is recorded by Matthew alone. Thus, Dr. A. Plummer says "it is improbable that Jesus taught this; and we suspect that 'except for fornication' and 'for every cause' are insertions made either by the Evangelist or the authority which he is using". Dr.Plummer asserts that the truth is only to be found in Mark and Luke's account. Apart from the blow this gives to verbal inspiration, how do Dr. Plummer and his friends know for certain that Matthew is merely stating his opinion of what Christ taught? Professor A. T. Robertson says that they are unwilling to accept Matthew's report because it disagrees with their views on the subject of divorce.

We believe that Matthew's Gospel is part of the inspired Word of God equally with the other Evangelists.

If the above criticism is true, one might just as well omit the remarkable passage that follows on celibacy, because Mark and Luke do not contain it! This is certainly an exception to the general rule about marriage and the Lord goes so far as to say "not everyone can accept this word (teaching), but only those to whom it has been given. For some are eunuchs because they were born that way; others were made that way by men; and others have renounced marriage because of the kingdom of heaven. The one who can accept this should accept this" (xix. 11, 12, N.I.V.). John the Baptist, the apostle Paul and others remained single because they judged that they could render better service to the Lord without the ties and obligations of marriage. Each one must seek the Lord's will in this matter and make one's own decision apart from the opinion of others.

The question of divorce is a pressing problem when one considers that it has been estimated that every third marriage in Great Britain today ends in divorce. This is an appalling situation, utterly disastrous for children and the family life, and this is what happens when men slip away from the standards that God has given. Few seem to care or realize that if they are being married in a place of worship, they are making solemn vows to God involving a life-long union. Eccles. v. 4, 5 reads:

> "When you make a vow to God, do not delay in fulfilling it. He has no pleasure in fools; fulfil your vows. It is better not to vow than to make a vow and not fulfil it" (N.I.V.).
>
> "If you make a vow to the Lord your God, do not be slow to pay it, for the Lord your God will certainly demand it of you and you will be guilty of sin" (Deut. xxiii. 21, N.I.V.).

It is obvious then from the law of God given through Moses, that vows are taken very seriously by the Lord. It is therefore incumbent upon every believer who contemplates marriage to remember this. Marriage is not only a time of great joy, but great responsibility too and this must never be forgotten.

As regards remarriage after divorce, Christ allows remarriage of the innocent party, but not of the guilty one (Luke xvi. 18). Modern divorce laws do not square with His teaching and believers must decide whether they are going to follow man-made conceptions and rules.

There follows then the account of the Lord blessing little children. Such were brought to Christ "for Him to place His hands on them and pray for them" (Matt. xix. 13). There can be no doubt that the Lord loved young children and this is shown by the fact that, as Mark states, He was indignant when the disciples rebuked those who brought them to Himself (Mark x. 14). Matthew's account reads:

> "Jesus said, 'Let the little children come to Me, and do not hinder them, for the kingdom of heaven belongs to such as these'. When He had placed His hands on them, He went on from there" (Matt. xix. 14, 15, N.I.V.).

"Stop hindering them", such is the force of me with the present imperative. Christ had already stressed the child-like attitude of mind of those who were concerned to enter the kingdom of heaven (xviii. 3).

The Evangelist now relates His encounter with the rich young man who asked Him, "Teacher, what good thing must I do to get eternal life?" (xix. 16, N.I.V.). In the account of Mark and Luke the word 'inherit' is used by the young man. The Lord's answer, after correcting his idea of being "good", was "If you want to enter life, obey the commandments" (17). The young man was able to say after the Lord had specified what He meant by "commandments", "all these I have kept". Some have thought that this was very boastful, but the Lord did not correct him, because it was evidently true. After making this reply, Mark tells us that, "Jesus beholding him, loved him and said, 'one thing thou lackest . . . . .'.". The Lord certainly would not have loved him had he been telling lies. There was yet something he must do in order to enter into life.

We have seen in the earlier chapters of Matthew that one of the key-words is enter—those who can enter the kingdom and those who are shut out. It is very important to recognize that, in the Synoptic Gospels, entering into life and entering the kingdom are parallel. It is the life in the great Messianic kingdom, and the conditions are laid down for believers, not unbelievers, and are an explanation of reward for faithful service for those already saved. Hence the continual stress on works and not faith alone.

The same truth is emphasized to the lawyer who asked a question similar to that put by the young man, "Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?". The Lord immediately refers him to the law of Moses—"What is written in the law?" (Luke x. 25, 26). The lawyer quotes from the ten commandments and Christ's reply is "Thou hast answered right: this do and thou shalt live" (28).

The same teaching is given to the Twelve after they had asked the Lord what they would receive after faithfully following Him. His reply was:

> "I tell you the truth, at the renewal of all things, when the Son of Man sits on His glorious throne, you who have followed Me (and the Lord had previously made clear what this would cost in suffering and taking up the cross) will also sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And everyone who has left houses or brothers or sisters or father or mother or children or fields for My sake will receive a hundred times as much and will inherit eternal life" (Matt. xix. 28, 29, N.I.V.).

Here again inheriting eternal life is connected with works.

In the same way when we come to the judgment of the living nations at the Second Advent of Christ recorded in chapter xxv., those entertaining eternal life are connected with actions, not faith alone. They had fed, clothed, attended to the Lord in sickness, although they had no consciousness of actually doing these things with the Lord in view. It is such who inherit eternal life in Matthew's Gospel.

Nothing is clearer than eternal life is parallel to entering the kingdom when set up by the Lord in the future, and this is connected with faithful service. Eternal life in Matthew, Mark and Luke, is linked with doing, keeping, forsaking and following the Lord.

This makes problems, of course, because it does not agree with the revelation given later connected with the Body of Christ, as made known in Paul's ministry. Once we see the distinction between the earthly phase of God's kingdom purpose where redeemed Israel is in the centre, and the heavenly phase of that same kingdom purpose which is connected with the Body of Christ, the problems vanish. It is a question of "distinguishing the things that differ" (Phil. i. 10 margin). We must also recognize that entering the kingdom is in the nature of reward as we have seen and as the Sermon on the Mount clearly teaches, and rewards can be won or they can be lost by actions, obedience, or disobedience.

One thing that can militate against faithful response to the Lord's claims is money, as the young man found, whom we have been considering. "If you want to be mature", the Lord told him, "go, sell your possessions and give to the poor, and you will have treasure (reward) in heaven. Then come, follow Me" (Matt. xix. 21). The Lord was touching a vital point with him, for he was rich (22). He had progressed so far, but here was one thing that was blocking the way, as it has been doing ever since, that is, the love of money. There is nothing wrong with money. It is the fascination of money that grips the human mind and controls it that is the danger. It becomes the most important thing in life and therefore an idol; consequently the Scripture warns us that it is the love of money which is dangerous, for the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil. "Some people, eager for money, have wandered from the faith and pierced themselves with griefs" (I.Tim.vi.10, N.I.V.), and in the context we are studying, the Lord Jesus stated:

> "I tell you the truth, it is hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. Again I tell you, it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God" (Matt. xix. 23, 24, N.I.V.).

Christ had already warned that it was impossible to serve God and mammon (riches) at the same time (vi. 24), and this warning was never more needed than today, when the principal aim of the average life appears to get more and more money, which never brings complete satisfaction, no matter how much is acquired. It is a delusion that controls and enslaves millions.

There is no need to interpret the "camel" and the "needle's eye" other than literally. In order to emphasize His point, the Lord Jesus is contrasting the largest beast of burden in Palestine with the smallest aperture known at that time. The explanation that the eye of the needle represents a small door in a city gate is a guess, and no ancient expositor ever adopts this method of explanation. The love of money grips the human mind like a vice, but God can break it, for with Him all things are possible (xix. 26), and He had done it in Matthew's case and also in that of Zacchaeus (Luke xix. 1-10).

After the Lord's dealing with the young man and His statement as to what he must give up (his riches), Peter naturally thinks that he and the other disciples had made sacrifices for the Lord. How would they fare? (Matt. xix. 27). The Lord gives His tremendous reply in verses 28, 29 which we have already quoted.

It is obvious from this that no one who voluntarily gives things up for Christ's sake will finally lose. God will not be a debtor to anyone and all such will be gloriously rewarded. This is true for all time, and those who attempt to eliminate reward from God's dealing with His children, either earthly or heavenly, are going against Scripture and the righteousness of God, for it is the righteous Judge Who awards the crown at the end (II Tim. iv. 8), and we are wise if we do not forget this.

The Parable of the workers in the Vineyard.

This parable is linked with the last verse of the previous chapter. It commences with the word "for". The last verse reads:

> "But many who are first will be last, and many who are last will be first. For the kingdom of heaven is like . . . . ." (Matt. xix. 30 and xx. 1, N.I.V.).

This last verse is somewhat enigmatic and needs the parable to explain it. If we judge by ordinary human standards a number of difficulties may appear. The parable is contained in verses 1-16 and the reader should carefully study them. Workers are engaged at different times during the day, early in the morning and again at the 6th, 9th and 11th hour. The actual amount to be paid for the day's work was made with the first ones only, namely a denarius (verse 2) which was the common wage for a day labourer at that time, and it would seem that they would have been satisfied with this had it not been for the graciousness shown to the last comers.

God keeps His promise to those who serve Him. He is the sole judge of what each labourer ought to receive. No one receives less than had been promised and some receive more, though in man's eyes this seems to be unfair. At the time of payment only those with whom an agreement had been made and kept found fault. If they had been paid and sent away there would have been no grumbling. The master was the sole judge of what the work of the others was worth to him. As the day wore on, time was precious and their labour became more and more valuable, and possibly they worked harder because of this. At the end of the day they received the same pay (a denarius) as the early workers and this cause these people to grumble, but the master's reply to them was:

> "I want to give the man who was hired last the same as I gave you. Don't I have the right to do what I want with my own money? Or are you envious because I am generous? So the last will be first and the first will be last" (xx. 14-16, N.I.V.).

This reminds one of the argument of the apostle Paul in Rom. ix. 18-21, where the natural mind questions the fairness of God's dealings. In spite of all our feelings, we can be sure of one thing—the absolute rightness and fairness of a righteous and holy God. If we adopt the false system of "measuring ourselves by ourselves", and adopting human standards of reckoning, we shall always have problems with the ways of God. God is not only a God of fairness and justice, but He is generous too and knows not only the amount of work done, but the difficulties and problems of each worker behind the scenes, and His verdict allows for this.

In verse 17, on His way to Jerusalem, the Lord Jesus takes the Twelve aside and again makes an effort to get them to understand the fact of the cross and resurrection that lay ahead. This was the fourth time He had referred to it:

> "Now as Jesus was going up to Jerusalem, He took the twelve disciples aside and said to them, 'We are going up to Jerusalem, and the Son of Man will be betrayed to the chief priests and the teachers of the law. They will condemn Him to death and will turn Him over to the Gentiles to be mocked and flogged and crucified. On the third day He will be raised to life!'."

Then follows the account of the mother of Zebedee's sons, who in her ambition for her children wanted them to have the best places in the Kingdom. This is a repetition of the same spirit shown by the disciples earlier.

She asked the Lord:

> "Grant that one of these two sons of mine may sit at your right (hand) and the other at your left in your kingdom" (xx. 21, N.I.V.).

They had already been promised that they would eventually sit on thrones and rule the tribes of Israel, but this apparently was not enough. They still had not realized that the sufferings and death which the Messiah had predicted for Himself were the road to the Kingdom. He must suffer in order to reign. Still less did they understand that those who were to reign with Him must be ready to suffer with Him. No wonder He replied:

> "You don't know what you are asking. Can you drink the cup I am going to drink?" "We can", they answered (xx. 22, N.I.V.).

Little did they realize what this cup of suffering involved. They would certainly drink of it, the Lord affirmed. In James's case it happened when he was put to death by Herod Agrippa (Acts xii. 2). In John's it was fulfilled in various ways: imprisonment (Acts iv. 3; v. 18), beating (v. 40), and possibly exile (Rev. i. 9). John evidently died a natural death in his old age:

> "There is no sufficient evidence to cast serious doubt on the universal tradition that John died peacefully at Ephesus in extreme old age. The attribution of Papias of the statement that John and James were killed by the Jews rests on very slender authority" (The Historical Character of St. John's Gospel by J. Armitage Robinson).

The other disciples were indignant with James and John when they learned of their ambitious request, and once more the Lord enforces His teaching concerning real humility. Those who desire to rule must first learn to serve. This is a complete reversal of the common idea concerning greatness and authority both then and now. The Lord said:

> ". . . . . whoever wants to become great among you must be your servant, and whoever wants to be first must be your slave—just as the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His life as a ransom for many" (xx. 26-28, N.I.V.).

As one studies the Word of God it is a constant wonderment to realize that He Who is God almighty stoops to such humility. It is important to know that the word "ransom" (lutron) was used in contemporary literature as the price paid for a slave who was then set free by the one who bought him. The word "for" ("for many") is anti, which has the meaning of exchange. The Lord Jesus gave His own life as the price of freedom for the slaves of sin. There are those who seek to minimize the thought of a substitutionary death for sinners by pointing out that the word ransom only occurs here and in the corresponding passage in Mark x. 45. But as Professor A. T. Robertson says, this is an easy way of trying to get rid of passages that contradict one's theological opinions. Christ knew the fullness of what He was saying and certainly meant what He said. The central fact of redemption is that the penalty for sin has been paid, not by the believer who is a sinner, but by the Lord Jesus in his place and stead (Isa. liii. 5, 6).

We do not know the total number of the redeemed, but it must be a large one otherwise the word "many" would not have been used.

The final verses of chapter xx. deal with the healing of the two blind men which is recorded in the three Synoptic Gospels. In some respects the accounts differ. Mark and Luke have one blind man; Matthew has two. Matthew and Mark place the miracle when Christ was leaving Jericho; Luke has it when the Lord was approaching the city. The unbelieving mind loves to point out these seeming discrepancies, but when we know all the facts we find that there are no discrepancies at all. It is clear that there was no copying one another.

The main city of Roman Jericho (the remains of which have been discovered) was occupied by poorer Jews, and lay about a mile east of Herod's winter headquarters, also called Jericho. This contained the palace, fortress and houses of Herod's wealthy friends. The miracle evidently took place between the two Jerichos, hence the approaching and departing depends upon which town one is referring to, and of the two men, one was more prominent than the other (Bartimaeus, Mark x. 46) and there is no reason why Mark and Luke should not concentrate on one of them.

They were obviously Israelites, for they addressed Christ as the Son of David, thus recognizing His Messiahship. The Lord graciously healed them at a touch.

The Triumphal Entry into Jerusalem.

With chapter xxi. we come to a crisis point in this Gospel and it centres around the holy city, Jerusalem. Verse 1 tells us that they approached the city and came to Bethpage on the Mount of Olives. Bethpage means "house of figs". We know little of this place, for it is not mentioned in the O.T. or the Apochrypha and only occurs in the first three Gospels. It apparently lay on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives or at its foot, and was larger than Bethany.

The Passover was at hand and there would be immense numbers of pilgrims that had come to Jerusalem for the Feast. In addition to this, many of the dispersed Jews living abroad would be present too. The Lord's ministry had been attracting great crowds. In Matt. xix. 2 we are told that "great multitudes followed Him". Luke tells us that "the crowds increased" (xi. 29), and in xii. 1 "many thousands had gathered so that they were trampling on one another" and "large crowds were traveling with Jesus" (xiv. 25), and "a large crowd followed Him" (Matt. xx. 29). Thus the overruling of God saw to it that a large and important section of the chosen nation was assembled at Jerusalem to witness the final events of Messiah's ministry, which first of all consisted of the regal entry of the Messiah into the capital city as the King of Israel.

The great time of final decision had now come for this favoured people. The leaders had already rejected Him but now the nation had to make up its mind either to accept or reject Him as their King.

The Lord Jesus gives instructions to two disciples to go to the nearby village where they would find a donkey with her colt and the owner would be willing to part with them (xxi. 1-3). The possibility was that this person had already been blessed under Christ's ministry, and so would raise no objection. The Evangelist tells us that this fulfilled the prophecy of Zech. ix. 9:

> "Say to the Daughter of Zion,
> 'See, your King comes to you, > gentle and riding on a donkey, > on a colt, the foal of a donkey'." (xxi. 4, 5, N.I.V.).

Up to this time the Lord had enjoined silence upon His followers concerning His claims as Messiah. Now He declares "if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out" (Luke xix. 40). The time of official presentation had arrived. Thus occurred the most outstanding day of Israel's history, when the Lord came in triumph to the capital city of Jerusalem, thus literally fulfilling Zechariah's prophecy.

The people's actions showed their awareness of the occasion: "A very great multitude spread their garments in the way" (Matt. xxi. 8), thus forming a carpet, an act reserved only for those of the highest rank (cp. II Kings ix. 13). In addition to this they strewed His path with palm branches (John xii. 13), a demonstration in the East to welcome a king or conqueror.

Their joyous cries are recorded by each of the Evangelists. "Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Mark xi. 10). "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord; peace in heaven, and glory in the highest" (Luke xix. 38). "Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord" (John xii. 13). These represent the various cries of the crowd. The whole of Jerusalem was stirred (literally "agitated") (Matt. xxi. 10 and 11), but how deeply did they feel? The following days were to make that clear.

The Lord now enters the Temple precincts and drives out the money changers and dove sellers who had commercialized the place. The Temple was the house of God which was being defiled. Christ described them as having made it a "den of robbers" (xxi. 13). He referred to Isa. lvi. 7 which teaches that God's house was one of prayer, not a place of cheap business practices.

The blind and infirm still came to Him and in each case they were healed. This, together with the joyous shouts of the children in the Temple area, stirred up the jealousy and fear of the religious leaders. They remonstrated with the Lord and His answer to them was to quote from Psa. viii. 2, "from the lips of children and infants You have ordained praise" (N.I.V.), which was a stinging rebuke to those who professed to know and teach the O.T. Scriptures.

No.31. xxi. 18 - xxii. 14.
pp. 85 - 91

Christ now leaves the Temple and the city and passes the night at Bethany (xxi. 17). Bethany was the home of Martha, Mary, and Lazarus, and possibly He stayed with them. Early in the morning He returns to the city, and feeling hungry, He goes to a fig tree on the side of the road, but instead of figs He found nothing but leaves (xxi. 18, 19).

> "Then He said to it, 'May you never bear fruit again!'. Immediately the tree withered" (xxi. 19, N.I.V.).

Mark, in his account, adds that "the time of figs was not yet" (Mark xi. 13 A.V.), in which case it seems unreasonable for the Lord to have expected fruit on it. But we should know that the Palestinian fig tree normally produces fruit before the leaves. The main fig crop was early autumn, but as this tree had leaves on it, there should have been figs as well as the leaves, but the Lord Jesus found none there. The tree was a deceiver and a hypocrite, so to speak. How well this typified the "evil and adulterous generation" of Israel to whom the Lord came. There was plenty of religious show (leaves), but no fruit (sincere faith in Him and His teaching). They would certainly not "enter the kingdom of heaven". And so the fig tree immediately withered away, and this caused amazement among the disciples (xxi. 20).

The Lord Jesus uses this to stress the efficacy of prayer which He had stressed at other times. Verses 21 and 22 must be interpreted with the whole of His teaching on this most important subject. It is easy to wrest these verses from their context and make them mean that anything we ask the Lord will be granted. God is far too wise to act in this way. How often we may be requesting things that will harm us, but for the moment we do not realize this!

The verses that follow record another occasion when the leaders tried to trap the Lord, like the question about tribute:

> "Jesus entered the temple courts, and, while He was teaching, the chief priests and elders of the people came to Him. 'By what authority are you doing these things?' they asked. 'And who gave you this authority?'." (xxi. 23, N.I.V.).

The Lord counters this by asking a question Himself, and this would lead to an answer to their query:

> "Jesus replied, 'I will also ask you one question. If you answer Me, I will tell you by what authority I am doing these things'." (xxi. 24, N.I.V.).

John's repentance baptism represented his position as the forerunner of the Messiah. The people had hailed John as a prophet (26). This was known to the Sanhedrin and these leaders should have decided by now whether he was a true prophet or not. If he was a prophet (and they did not dare to say he was not, for had they done so the people would have stoned them, Luke xx. 6); in that case there was no doubt as to the Lord's authority, for John, as a prophet, had declared Him to be the Messiah.

They were on the horns of a dilemma. If they once admitted that John was a prophet, then Christ would say "why didn't you believe him?" (25). And if the Baptist's proclamation of Him did not convince them, what effect would He own assertion have?

There was only one answer they could make to the Lord's query, namely "we don't know" (27), which was a disgrace after all the evidence that John had given them. The Lord Jesus dismisses them with the words "neither will I tell you by what authority I am doing these things" (27).

The Gospel of Mark follows this with one parable, that of the wicked husbandmen. Matthew gives us another triplet of parables (xxi. 28, 33; xxii. 1). These were also addressed to the Pharisees who had just criticized Him. The first is the parable of the two sons. One refused to obey his father's order to go and work in the vineyard. Afterwards he changed his mind and went. The second son had the same charge and said he was willing, but he did not go. Which son did what his father wanted? the Lord asked, and the leaders were forced to answer, "the first son" (xxi. 28-31).

This young fellow became sorry for his refusal to obey his father and changed his mind and became obedient. The A.V. says he repented and went. But the Greek verb is metamelomai, to be sorry, whereas "repent" is metanoeo. The two words should be distinguished, as in the English repentance and penitence. The former word means in the Greek a change of mind, and the latter, sorrow or penitence. The apostle Paul makes this difference in II Cor. xii. 9 between these words. Mere sorrow is not a change of mind (repentance). It can be just remorse as it was in the case of Judas Iscariot.

The Lord Jesus applies the meaning of the parable to the religious leaders:

> "Jesus said to them, 'I tell you the truth, the tax collectors and the prostitutes are entering the kingdom of God ahead of you. For John came to you to show you the way of righteousness, and you did not believe him, but the tax collectors and the prostitutes did. And even after you saw this, you did not repent and believe him'." (xxi. 31, 32, N.I.V.).

This is a reversal of human judgment. Not only the Pharisees, but Jewish opinion generally would have believed that the prospects of this sort of people entering the kingdom of heaven were of the best, while those of the toll collectors and harlots were infinitesimal. Truly the first are last and the last first, as the Lord asserted. The latter made no profession of religion, but accepted John's teaching and were entering the kingdom, whereas the leaders refused and paid no heed to the Baptist's instruction, and were being shut out.

Without pause, the Lord Jesus puts to them the parable of the wicked tenants of the vineyard. The conduct of these husbandmen towards the householder's servants portrays the behaviour of the nation of Israel and their religious leaders towards the prophets and now toward Christ.

In the O.T. Israel is often spoken of as a vineyard (Isa.v.1-7; Jer.ii.21; Ezek.xv.1-6; xix. 10-14; Hosea x. 1), so the imagery would be understood. The treatment that the prophets received is made clear in I Kings xix. 10; xxii. 24; II Chron. xxiv. 21; Jeremiah xx. 1, 2; xxxvii. 15; xxxviii. 6, etc. The uniform hostility of the kings, priests and people to the Prophets is one of the remarkable features in the history of Israel. And now, in the presence of their Messiah and King, they are no better than their fathers. The climax is reached when they take the Son, throw Him out of the vineyard and kill Him.

What will the owner of the vineyard do to these wicked tenants, the parable asks? The Pharisees are bound to say that they would be destroyed and the vineyard let to others, and in saying this they uttered their own condemnation. The Lord Jesus reinforces this by saying:

> "Have you never read in the Scriptures: 'the stone the builders rejected has become the capstone; the Lord has done this, and it is marvelous in our eyes'? Therefore I tell you that the kingdom of God will be taken away from you and given to a people who will produce its fruit. He who falls on this stone will be broken to pieces, but he on whom it falls will be crushed" (xxi. 42-44, N.I.V.).

The imagery is suddenly changed from the vineyard of Isa. v. to the builders of Psalm cxviii. 22 who rejected the foundation stone. The Lord Jesus is pictured by the stone in three different ways. (1) To Israel to whom He came, He was a stumbling stone and rock of offence (Rom. ix. 32, 33). Instead of being the mighty Conqueror Who would free them from the domination of Rome, He came as a lowly Servant Who was willing to be crucified (I Cor. i. 23) and as such was a stumbling-block to the Jew. (2) In spite of this, He was the foundation stone on which the whole of God's redemptive plan for His kingdom rests (Acts iv. 11; I Pet. ii. 4, 5) and (3) He is yet to be the great smiting stone portrayed by Daniel which smashes the Gentile world-power and brings in His kingdom world-wide (Dan. ii. 34). This occurs at His Second Advent.

But the Lord warns the murderous religious leaders that the kingdom will be taken from them and given to those who do produce fruit. We must not make the mistake here that the Lord is teaching that the whole of Israel is now rejected and have lost their place in the great kingdom purpose. Still less that Gentile nations or the church will now take Israel's place. The Lord Jesus is still talking to the rejecting Pharisees and telling them once more that they will not have a place in the kingdom of heaven.

However, a faithful remnant has responded, and grows during the period that follows which is covered by the Acts. They are definitely given the title of "a remnant according to the election of grace" (Rom. xi. 5). At the same time we are reminded in Rom. xi. 1, 2 that God had not cast away His people. He had already started to build a new nation from the faithful remnant of Jewish believers and with the Abrahamic promise in view Gentile believers were being added. And just as Israel was definitely chosen by God—they were an elect people—so this faithful remnant is called "the elect" (Rom. xi. 5-7). Thus God could reject a "wicked and adulterous generation" of Jews, without breaking His promise to Abraham of an eternal posterity through Isaac (Rom. ix. 6, 7).

In Matt. xxi. 45, 46, the Evangelist informs us that the chief priests and Pharisees recognized that these parables were directed to them. They looked for a way to arrest the Lord, but dared not do so, because they feared the reaction of the people (45, 46) who regarded Him as a prophet. In spite of this, Christ continue to speak to them in parables (xxii. 1) and gives them the story of the marriage of the King's Son (xxii. 1-4). A king had prepared a wedding banquet for his son and sent his servants out to those who had invited, telling them to come, but they refused. In spite of this, the king graciously sends out more servants and renews the invitation to these people. But they were rude and rebellious and again rejected the royal invitation to the wedding. Not only this, but they seized the king's servants, ill-treated and killed them.

This enraged the king, who sent his army, destroyed the murderers, and burnt up their city (xxii. 7).

Up to this point the interpretation is clear. The two invitations correspond to (1) the ministries of John the Baptist and Christ, who announced the imminence of the kingdom, and (2) the ministry of the twelve and Paul to the same people in the period covered by the Acts of the Apostles. The destruction of the city was fulfilled in the destruction and burning of Jerusalem in 70A.D. Between the two invitations comes Calvary and we notice the sacrificial element in the story in verse 4, "the fatlings and the cattle have been killed and everything is ready (for the wedding banquet)".

But the king is still determined to invite others to the marriage feast, so his servants are sent out into the streets to gather others into the dining hall.

Where is this to be placed in the interpretation? At least it must be future to 70A.D., which brings us to this present age which has already lasted nearly 2,000 years. The people who are gathered in are from the streets of the city (Jerusalem) and therefore must be primarily Israelites as the first group were.

When the revelation of the N.T. does not give minute details, it is unwise to dogmatize, and in any case it is a mistake to try to find doctrinal significance in every small detail of a parable. Many fanciful ideas arise when this is done. Parables have a main point to emphasize. In the verses that follow we find the king enters to meet the guests, but immediately notices a man there who was not wearing wedding clothes.

The story does not tell us whether the king supplied these to the guests, or whether they were expected to provide and use them. The king confronts the person who was evidently an intruder. He was speechless and the king orders him to be bound and cast outside into the darkness, and the story ends "for many are invited, but few are elected" (xxii. 14).

We now have to ask ourselves what the wedding garment represents? Obviously it must be something of great importance, for without it, it was impossible to partake of the royal wedding feast. There have been many guesses by expositors, but we must have solid Scriptural basis for our view of the meaning. Surely the last verse of the parable gives us a clue. After stating the intense disappointment and possibly impotent rage of those outside who are shut out ("weeping and gnashing of teeth") we read "FOR many are invited, but few elected". Election is the key here and decides whether a person shall be admitted or excluded, and this must be what the wedding garment represents, just as fine linen represents the righteous acts of the saints (overcomers) in Rev. xix. 8.

Whether we like the doctrine of election or not, there can be no doubt that it ramifies right throughout the purpose of God. It is a great mistake to limit it to salvation as many Calvinists have done. God has a great plan which will surely be fulfilled, and He has decreed how it shall be carried out and who will be His instruments in doing so. The Lord is dealing here with the faithful "remnant according to the election of grace" (Romans xi. 5).

No.32. xxii. 15 - xxiii. 32.
pp. 113 - 117

Yet again Christ's enemies, the Pharisees and Herodians, attempt to entrap Him. Although these two groups had little in common, they had united in their opposition to the Lord. After flattering Him by calling Him a man of integrity, who is not influenced by others, they say:

> "Tell us then, what is your opinion? Is it right to pay taxes to Caesar or not?".

The Lord, Who could read their inmost thoughts as well as their outward words and actions, knew of their evil intent and replied:

> " 'Show Me the coin used for paying the tax.' They brought Him a denarius, and He asked them, 'whose portrait is this? And whose inscription?' "Caesar's", they replied. Then He said to them, 'Give unto Caesar what is Caesar's, and to God what is God's'." (xxii. 17-21, N.I.V.).

The matchless wisdom of the Lord was too much for His opponents. They were amazed and could only leave Him and go their way. But the day had not finished before another group tried to ensnare Him. This time it was the rationalists, the Sadducees, who denied the resurrection. They presented to Him the hypothetical case of a man who having six brothers who all in turn married his widow, according to the law of the O.T. "At the resurrection whose wife will she be?", they asked.

The Lord Jesus replied:

> "You are in error because you do not know the Scriptures or the power of God. At the resurrection people will neither marry nor be given in marriage; they will be like the angels in heaven. But about the resurrection of the dead—have you not read what God said to you, 'I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob'? He is not the God of the dead but of the living. When the crowds heard this, they were astonished at His teaching" (xxii. 29-33, N.I.V.).

In the first sentence of His reply, Christ puts his finger on the cause of the opposer's ignorance. "You are in error because you do not know the Scriptures, or the power of God." This is still the chief cause of ignorance and declension from Christian standards today. Few, even among professing Christians, seriously study the Word of God and when one considers the lack of expository teaching in the pulpits, the Bible is largely an unknown Book.

When will people learn that if they turn away from this Book of God, they can never know God or His truth? Being religious is no substitute for a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. If this book could be blotted out, Christianity would not exist, for a knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ would be impossible.

All sorts of ideas are proposed to remedy the spiritual coldness that we see all around us and the moral declension that abounds. Some insist that we need a revival by the Holy Spirit, but how can this take place if the Word of God is ignored or banished from our lives? It is the office of the Holy Spirit to work upon God's Word, to convict, enlighten and convince. If we want a revival of interest in the Truth of God, then the sooner we put the Word of Truth in its rightful place, the sooner this may come.

But if it doesn't, it is still the duty and privilege of all who call themselves Christians to hold fast to the Word of God and seek by every legitimate means to make it known. Paul's last command to Timothy was to "preach the Word" (II Tim. iv. 2) and to pass on that Word of Truth to "faithful men who shall be able to teach others also" (ii. 1, 2). There can be no substitute for this if we want Christian truth maintained and spread, and it is the greatest antidote to error.

The Lord Jesus constantly set the example to us by His constant appeal to the written Word, the O.T. Scriptures. In the passage before us He does so to combat the shocking ignorance of the Sadducees. Matt. xxii. 32 is often misinterpreted. It certainly deals with life after death, but stresses the only thing that makes this possible, that is, resurrection. "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living" (32), thus verse 31 states "as touching the resurrection of the dead" God said He was not the God of the dead but of the living.

Luke's account also makes this clear:

> "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord 'the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob', for He is not the God of the dead, but of the living . . . . ." (Luke xx. 37, 38).

To introduce any other reason for life beyond the grave is to ignore the words of Christ and substitute fallible human opinion (see the booklet by the author, Resurrection and the Purpose of the Ages).

The Evangelist records another problem addressed to the Lord Jesus by a Pharisee who was a specialist on the law given through Moses:

"Teacher, which is the greatest commandment in the Law?" (xxii. 36, N.I.V.).

Christ sums it up, as the apostle Paul did later, by giving the word that covers it all, namely love (Rom. xiii. 8-10). The first five commandments show what love to God comprises, and the second five, love to one's neighbour. "All the Law and the Prophets hang on these two commandments" (xxii. 40). And so there is not one supreme commandment but two of equal importance.

In the last verses of the chapter we find the position reversed, and the Lord Jesus questioning the Pharisees:

> "Who do you think about the Christ? Whose Son is He? 'The Son of David', they replied. He said to them, "How is it then that David, speaking by the Spirit, calls Him 'Lord'? For he says, 'The Lord said to my Lord: Sit at my right hand until I put your enemies under your feet'." If then David calls Him Lord, how can He be his Son?". (xxii. 42-45, N.I.V.).

They were asked about the Sonship of the Messiah. They correctly answered "the Son of David", but Christ is going to show them that the truth is much wider than this and then He refers them to Psalm cx. This Psalm is evidently of great importance, for it is quoted in the N.T. seven times (Matt. xxii. 44; Mark xii. 36; Luke xx. 42; Acts ii. 34; Heb. i. 13; x. 13; I Cor. xv. 25). It is obvious that the Lord Jesus believed that David wrote the Psalm under the influence of the Holy Spirit (Matt. xxii. 43). One would have thought that this would be enough for anyone who reverenced the Son of God. But no; the critics say the Davidic authorship is not true. Dr. A. Plummer gives the reasons of three critics, and assumes they are correct. It is quite pathetic to read how these people try to extricate themselves from problems of their own making. It is far safer to believe Christ than man, even though the critic is religious!

The title "the Son of David" gave Christ the right to the throne, but it did not cover all the truth related to the Messiah, for Messiah was more than just a remarkable man. This becomes evident in the second question the Lord put to the Pharisees.

Referring to Psalm cx. Christ says:

> "If then David calls Him 'Lord', how can He be his Son?" (xxii. 45, N.I.V.), and the problem is only resolved when one accepts the fact of the Lord's Deity as well as His Humanity. As God He was David's Lord; as Man He was David's son; and this the Pharisees had not realized, for they could not answer the question. In the same way the Revelation gives Christ the title of "the Root and the Offspring of David" (Rev. xxii. 16) which, on the surface, is a contradiction, but not if His Deity and Humanity are held in balance. Thus we see that the Lord Jesus was victorious in putting questions as well as replying to them. We should note the climax in three stages, (1) "marveling" (xxii. 22 A.V.), (2) "amazement" (astonished, A.V. & N.I.V.) (33), and (3) "not daring to ask any more questions" (46).

Coming now to chapter xxiii. we are not surprised to find that it is in three parts: (1) Criticisms and exhortations addressed to the mixed multitude and the disciples. (2) Seven woes addressed to the Rabbis and Pharisees. (3) Judgments on the nation and upon Jerusalem. We now come to a crisis point in the relationship of the Lord and the religious leaders. It is a situation of open hostility. They continue in their determination to destroy Him and He publicly denounces them in terribly solemn words (xxiii. 13-33).

Verse 3 needs care. Omit the word 'that' in the A.V. as it is not in the Greek and it is better to treat the verb as indicative rather than imperative. The Lord Jesus is unlikely to command the disciples to obey the scribes and Pharisees, when He so severely criticizes them, calling them hypocrites. Verse 3 then reads, "all therefore whatever they bid you, you observe and do, but do not after their works . . . . .". They do not practice what they preach, but go in for just outward show and the praise of men (5-7). They wore phylacteries (which were boxes containing verses of the O.T. on the forehead and arm). They even believed God wore them! They came to be regarded as nothing more than charms.

The disciples were warned that they must not use exalted titles like Rabbi (master), or Father (a title that was kept for Rabbis). They had one Father in heaven and one teacher, Christ Himself, and they must learn to keep humble, because only such would be owned and exalted by God (8-12).

The Lord goes on to denounce their hindering of those who were keen to enter the kingdom, and the fact that they themselves refused to do so (13). Verse 14 is omitted by some of the principal texts and put in the margin in some translations. The truth is repeated in Mark xii. 40 and Luke xx. 47 where they prey on widows and for a show make lengthy prayers. In their fanaticism they go to any length to make converts to their empty traditions (15). They made false differences in vows (16-22). They stressed tiny unessentials, like tithing herbs, but the weighty matters, justice, mercy and faithfulness, they neglected (23). They "strained out a gnat and swallowed a camel" (an unclean animal), not "strained at a gnat" as in the A.V.: a mistake made in all editions of the A.V. All the former translations had "out". Their ceremonial cleanliness merely related to externals. Inside, said the Lord, they were full of greed, self-indulgence (25). They were like whitewashed tombs, beautiful on the outside, but full of foulness within (27, 28). (It was the custom to whiten tombs a month before Passover, so that people might not touch them and become ceremonially unclean).

They decorated the tombs of the prophets and said they would not have associated themselves with the forefathers who killed them (29, 30). Yet they were plotting to murder the greatest Prophet! No wonder the Lord Jesus called them hypocrites.

No.33. xxiii. 33 - xxiv. 14.
pp. 145 - 150

In the terrible words that follow, the wrath of the Lamb is manifested, and we have no right to apologize for them or to tone them down. Christ, as the perfect Man, was capable of righteous anger, which is impossible to the human race involved in sin and death. The book of The Revelation reveals the wrath of God, but it is not the wrath of the Father or the Holy Spirit, but the wrath of the Lamb (Christ) (Rev. vi. 15-17). There are those who hold human and sentimental conceptions of Christ and do not believe that He can indulge in anger. This may be true of human anger which is tainted with injustice and spite. But He is utterly holy and righteous and His anger is but the reverse side of the coin. We have to choose whether we believe the inspired Word of God or human opinion.

He said:

> "You snakes! You brood of vipers! How will you escape being condemned to hell? Therefore I am sending you prophets and wise men and teachers. Some of them you will kill and crucify; others you will flog in your synagogues, and pursue from town to town. And so upon you will come all the righteous blood that has been shed on earth, from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of Zechariah, son of Berakiah, whom you murdered between the Temple and the Altar. I tell you the truth, all this will come upon this generation" (xxiii. 33-36, N.I.V.).

Both the Lord and John the Baptist had likened many of the people to dangerous snakes (Matt. iii. 7). The Lord foretells their murderous activities (xxiii. 34, 35) and their vicious persecution of the people of God.

Verse 35 presents a problem. Each generation that condemns the wickedness of its predecessors, yet repeats the wickedness, is more guilty than its predecessors and has more responsibility for which it must answer to the Lord. Christ declares that all the righteous blood shed on earth from righteous Abel to Zechariah whom they murdered between the Temple and Altar would rest on this wicked generation. This seems to be a reference to II Chron. xxiv. 20-22, but there he is called the son of Jehoiada, not Berakiah (as Matthew states). Jehoiada possibly had Berakiah as a second name and it is significant that in Luke, "the son of Berakiah" is omitted (Luke xi. 51). If it refers to the prophet (Zech. i. 1) then we have no record of him being murdered in this way.

We must remember that in the Jewish Bible, Chronicles comes last in the O.T. canon, and therefore "the blood of Abel" is the first murder of the O.T. and "the blood of Zechariah" is the last recorded, though in point of time that of Uriah by Jehoiakim (Jeremiah xxvi. 23) took place later. It should be noted too that in both cases a reckoning for them would be made. "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto Me from the ground" (Gen. iv. 10); "The Lord look upon it and required it" (II Chron. xxiv. 22). Three times blood is mentioned in Matt. xxiii. 35, and if the student studies this chapter carefully he will find other triplets which are in line with Matthew's style.

The chapter ends with the Lord's lament over Jerusalem. The tragedy of the city had reduced the Lord to tears (Luke xix. 41) and here again He shows His love for the city of His choice. "How often I have longed to gather your children together, as a hen gathers her chicks under her wings, but you were not willing" (Matt. xxiii. 37). The depth of love and feeling is wonderfully expressed here, "I would", I longed to gather and protect you, but "ye would not", you were not willing for this to happen. This contradiction has been enacted thousands of times since this date, always ending with loss and tragedy, as it must do if God's will is resisted and set aside. This is a wonderful example of the One Who is God and at the same time truly human, with the exception of sin.

The Lord Jesus said sorrowfully, "Look, your house is left to you desolate". At the beginning of this Gospel the Temple was God's house. Now, because of their apostasy it was just their house, without God's presence.

He finishes by saying that they would not see Him again until they could say "blessed is He Who comes in the name of the Lord" (Psa. cxviii. 26). So, in spite of all the sorrow and rejection, they had a future which is based on His Second Coming and this time, when they see Him, they will truly repent and accept Him (Zech. xii. 8-14; Rev. i. 7).

The prophecy concerning the end of the age.

There is no doubt that in the prophetic Scriptures the 24th chapter of Matthew is of great importance. If this chapter is wrongly interpreted, confusion is bound to occur as regards future events in this age.

Many modern expositors have difficulties with this chapter and this is largely because they misinterpret the kingdom of heaven, fail to identify it with the great Messianic kingdom prophesied in the O.T., confuse it with the church and then spiritualize its teaching to fit their ideas. They spiritualize all obvious meaning out of the plain Greek, with the result that we have just a spiritual coming of Christ, Who administers only spiritual matters in a spiritual kingdom. This is a travesty of what the Bible teaches on this great subject.

The truth given in this chapter resulted from the disciples drawing the Lord's attention to the magnificent Temple of Herod the Great (Matt. xxiv. 1; Mark xiii. 1). It was not even yet complete and they had already spent forty-six years in re-building it (John.ii.20). It was doubtless one of the most wonderful buildings of the ancient world and made a dazzling sight.

The Lord's reply was startling in the extreme:

> "Do you see all these things?" He asked. "I tell you the truth, not one stone here will be left on another; every one will be thrown down" (xxiv. 2, N.I.V.).

The stones were of polished marble and the thought that the whole building would be reduced to rubble and its beauty destroyed was almost unbelievable, as was the idea that God would allow such a thing to happen to His house.

We can well imagine how great the shock must have been to the disciples, for, as Christ was sitting on the Mount of Olives, the disciples came to Him to get further information about this tremendous event:

> "Tell us", they said, "when this will happen, and what will be the sign of your coming and of the end of the age?" (xxiv. 3, N.I.V.).

This threefold query the Lord answers in the reverse order, (1) the end of the age (xxiv. 4-24), (2) the sign of His coming (parousia) (25-31-), and (3) when it will take place (-31-42). It is important to notice that the disciples were not concerned as to when the end of the world would take place (as A.V.). The word is age, and the end of the age would coincide with the conclusion of Daniel's seventy weeks of years (Dan. ix.) which contain the fulfillment of God's plan for Israel.

Before the Lord commences His reply, He sounds a note of warning, which He repeats over and over again, hence its importance:

> "Jesus answered, 'Watch out that no one deceives you. For many will come in My Name, claiming, I am the Christ, and will deceive many'." (xxiv. 4, 5, N.I.V.).
>
> "and many false prophets will appear and deceive many people" (11, N.I.V.).
>
> "For false Christ and false prophets will appear and perform great signs and miracles to deceive even the elect—if that were possible. See, I have told you ahead of time" (24, 25, N.I.V.).

The apostle Paul, when treating of the same time, also stresses deception:

> "That wicked one shall be revealed . . . . . even him whose coming is after the working of Satan . . . . . with all deceivableness of unrighteousness . . . . ." (II Thess. ii. 8-10).

This period then is going to be a time of great danger. These false prophets and false Messiahs obviously originate from the religious world and are just tools of Satan, the father of lies. All this is confirmed in the book of Revelation which deals with the same period as Matt. xxiv.:

> "The wild beast 'doeth great wonders . . . . . and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth, by reason of those miracles'." (Rev. xiii. 13, 14).

The two great opposing systems of the Lie and the Truth come out into the open at last, and we have the final clash between them before the Second Coming of Christ and the inauguration of His kingdom on earth. It is the time of the greatest difficulty and danger recorded in history, as Matt. xxiv. 21 clearly teaches, and the only place of safety is keeping close to the guidance of His Word, not adding nor taking away a fraction of what is written there concerning this great climax.

Wars and rumours of wars will come, but these are not the indications of the end, but rather "the beginning of sorrows" (xxiv. 8). The Lord quotes Isa. xix. 2 as an illustration of this, and it is one of seven quotations from the O.T. that He makes in this address, which we shall note as we consider its details. The word "sorrows" in the Greek is “birth-pains” and is correctly rendered in the N.I.V. In this blackest of contexts, perhaps this is a ray of hope looking forward to the light of the kingdom which is soon to come when the Lord returns.

He goes on to predict many false Messiahs, false prophets, international conflict, famines, earthquakes, persecution, betrayal, abounding sin, but in spite of all this, “the end is not yet”. As regards earthquakes, it seems they are increasing in number and intensity. What is absolutely sure is one will occur in the last seven years of this age that will eclipse all others. “And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great” (Rev. xvi. 18). God will terribly shake the earth.

This terrible condition of the world is a prelude to the fulfillment of prophecy which deals with the closing years of the age, and is ended by the return of Christ and the angels of God in great glory and power. In other words this final working out is set in the last seven years of Daniel’s “seventy—sevens” (chapter ix.), as we have stated before. Any attempt at trying to make all the details given here by the Lord fit a time prior to this is bound to fail. During this period there can only be a partial fulfillment at the most. Let us not forget it is the end time that perplexed the disciples, and the Lord is dealing with this particular time, and it is wrong interpretation to ignore this and try to make it fit the age in general.

Once we know and understand the prophecies which deal with the end time (largely Daniel and The Revelation), we have the key to unlock the prophecy that the Lord is giving and many problems then vanish. Too often we make our own difficulties by ignoring to whom the Scripture is addressed and its time setting. The more this is seriously considered the more one wonders at the once popular teaching that the Second Advent cannot occur until the world is converted.

This idea has certainly not clear Scriptural foundation and must be rejected. The world situation as described by the Lord Jesus is as black as can be painted, and leading to a time of trouble the intensity of which has never occurred in past history nor ever will again in the future (Matt. xxiv. 21 and 22).

It will be a tremendous testing time for the people of God. Hence the Lord’s statement “but he who stands firm to the end will be saved” (13). If this verse is taken out of its context it can be made to teach that salvation can be attained by human effort, and this is directly opposed to the constant testimony of holy Scripture that salvation is by grace alone, apart from works or human merit. Kept in its Scriptural setting of overwhelming difficulty and danger, it teaches that the faithful one (aided by the Lord) will surmount it all and this is given for strengthening and encouragement.

The Lord Jesus continues:

> “And this gospel of the kingdom will be preached in the whole world as a testimony to all nations, and then the end will come” (xxiv. 14, N.I.V.).

In view of the bewildering ideas that exist in the religious world as to what this gospel is, we do not add any ideas of our own, but go directly to the fountain head, the Word of God for instruction. One expositor writes "if we could settle the question as to what the gospel of the kingdom is, in the event that it is something other than the gospel which the apostles began to preach at Pentecost, and which the church has preached since, the eschatological problem would be solved" (Dr. R. O. Yeager). And its importance is stressed by the fact that the end of the age cannot come until this gospel has been preached in the whole world (14).

The fact remains that it has been dealt with and its terms made clear in the N.T., and for this we must turn to the Gospel of Mark:

> "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God and saying, the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel" (Mark i. 14, 15).

This good news is surely not complex and difficult to understand provided we are prepared to believe what it says without adding ideas of our own. Up till now the kingdom had been made known through the prophetic Scriptures of the O.T. The waiting time had now passed and the time of its realization or fulfillment had come. The King was present and therefore this kingdom was "at hand" or near. Only two other things were necessary, (1) to change one's attitude of mind (repent), and (2) to believe this tremendous news, and one needs to have one's mind refreshed with the greatness of the kingdom in all its detail given in the O.T. Scriptures to appreciate the good news (gospel) that it contained.

No.34. xxiv. 15 - 33.

It is important to note that in this gospel of the kingdom there is no reference to Calvary or to Christ as the all-sufficient sacrifice for sin, and this should prevent us from confusing it with the gospel of grace that was later revealed by the ascended Christ to the apostle Paul (Gal. i. 11, 12) and preached by him (I Cor. xv. 3, 4). This is made even more clear when we remember that the Twelve who were commissioned to preach this kingdom gospel (Matt. x. 5-7), did not realize that Christ had to die and were even opposed to the idea (Matt. xvi. 21-23).

Even though this is so, we should always remember that redemption underpins the whole purpose of God in Christ, and this must include His kingdom purposes. The gospel of the grace of God upon which this rests was proclaimed by Paul and had spread to "every creature which is under heaven" (Col. i. 23), and so had gone world-wide before Paul's martyrdom. The chief point in Matthew's gospel is that the earthly kingdom was near. When we consider Matt. xxiv. this is particularly evident, because we are in Daniel's seventieth week of years, the last seven years of the age, which is ended by Christ's return in glory. Consequently once more the nearness of the kingdom will be proclaimed throughout the world for a witness.

Who will proclaim it? Rev. xi. 3-12 reveals that two witnesses are raised up by God and miraculously sustained and protected by Him until they have finished their testimony. There is also the sealed remnant of Israel (Rev. vii.) who remain faithful to the end. God never leaves Himself without a witness even during the worst apostasy recorded in history. The world will then be without excuse during this time.

The Lord goes on to add:

> "So when you see standing in the holy place the abomination that causes desolation, spoken of through the prophet Daniel—let the reader understand—then let those who are in Judea flee to the mountains. Let no-one on the roof of his house go down to take anything out of the house. Let no-one in the field go back to get his cloak. How dreadful it will be in those days for pregnant woman and nursing mothers! Pray that your flight will not take place in winter or on the Sabbath" (xxiv. 15-20, N.I.V.).

The word "abomination" is always linked with idolatry in the O.T. This idol is referred to in Dan. ix. 27; xi. 31; xii. 11, and is linked with the antichristian wild beast of the end time. Some expositors try to find the fulfillment in the action of Antiochus Epiphanes who erected an altar to Zeus on the altar of Jehovah (1Macc.1:54; 59:6,7; 2Macc.6:1-5). But this was past history when Christ was speaking, and He was undoubtedly referring to the future.

The act of Antiochus foreshadowed the final abomination. The one described by Daniel occurs in the middle of the 70th week of years (Dan. ix. 27) and this leaves another 3½ years to run, variously described as "42 months" (Rev. xi. 2; xiii. 5), "1,260 days" (Rev. xii. 6), or "time, times, and half a time" (Dan. vii. 25; xii. 7; Rev.xii.14).

This idol is connected with worship, and from other passages it evidently refers to the image of himself that the Antichrist sets up in the restored Temple of the end time and commands universal homage (Rev. xiii. 5-8; II Thess. ii. 1-4). There are expositors who link the whole of Matt. xxiv. with the catastrophe of 70A.D. which records the destruction of Jerusalem and its Temple, but this again is impossible, for Matt. xxiv. is linked by the Lord to the greatest time of tribulation for the world which has not been equaled in past history, nor will be in the future (Matt. xxiv. 21). What happened to the Jews at 70A.D. was terrible as Josephus relates, but it was not the greatest tribulation of all time involving the whole earth.

If we note carefully the words which Christ uses, we are bound to relate them to Daniel xii. 1:

> "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people (the Jews): and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book" (A.V.).

This squares with the Lord's words in Matt. xxiv. 21. The temporal adverb tote, "then, at that time", occurs here and many times in this chapter and the next one. It occurs seven times in chapter xxiv. and seven times in the 25th chapter, and is the answer to the disciples' query "when?". The terrible persecution of the great whole dictator of the end time will make immediate flight necessary. It must be done with all speed (xxiv. 20), which winter traveling and Sabbath regulations might hinder.

The time is so dangerous that, unless the Lord intervenes, it would result in universal annihilation (22). Man at last has discovered how to exterminate not only himself but the human race, and the Lord reveals that this is what will happen unless he is prevented from doing so. God will shorten this terrible time to 3½ years, the second half of Daniel's last years of seven, and end it by the sudden coming of the Lord Jesus in great glory and power which brings Satan's great dictator to his end (II Thess. ii. 8-10).

In the verses that follow, the Lord Jesus again warns against deception by false Messiahs:

> "At that time if anyone says to you, 'look, here is Christ!' or 'there He is!' do not believe it. For false Christs and false prophets will appear and perform great signs and miracles to deceive even the elect—if that were possible. See, I have told you ahead of time" (xxiv. 23-25, N.I.V.).

Satan, the great deceiver of mankind, will see to it that these spurious Christs and prophets are able to perform spectacular miracles. The word tote (at that time) again ties the events of verse 23 with those that have gone before in the previous verses. Satan knows only too well that when anything that appears to be miraculous occurs, the average person ascribes it to God. But the Bible reveals that Satan and the forces of darkness under his control can work miracles and this is one of his most dangerous weapons. The book of Revelation and II Thessalonians make this clear:

> "Then I saw another beast . . . . . and he performed great and miraculous signs, even causing fire to come down from heaven to earth in full view of man. Because of the signs he was given power to do on behalf of the first beast, he deceived the inhabitants of the earth" (Rev. xiii. 11-17, N.I.V.).
>
> ". . . . . the coming of the lawless one will be in accordance with the work of Satan displayed in all kinds of counterfeit miracles, signs and wonders, and every sort of evil that deceives those who are perishing" (II Thess. ii. 9, 10, N.I.V.).

If the elect scarcely are saved from deception, it is obvious that the unregenerate will be completely deceived by these miracles. This is Satan's counterfeit of the true miracles that confirmed the ministry of the Lord Jesus:

> "This salvation, which was first announced by the Lord, was confirmed to us by those who heard Him. God also testified to it by signs, wonders and various miracles, and gifts of the Holy Spirit distributed according to His will" (Heb. ii. 3, 4, N.I.V.).

The fact that Christ was able to perform miracles did not prove that He came from the Father. Rather it was that He performed the specific miracles that the O.T. had predicted of Messiah (Isa. xxxv. 4-6). Thus the Lord has forewarned His people, and to be forewarned is to be forearmed.

The Lord Jesus now deals with the sign of His coming which had been requested by the disciples (Matt. xxiv. 3). This tremendous event is not going to be announced from heaven days before it takes place, for it will be sudden, like a flash of lightning (27) and come like a thunderbolt upon an unprepared and deceived world. The apostle Paul describes it in II Thess. i. 7-10:

> ". . . . . when the Lord Jesus is revealed from heaven in blazing fire with His powerful angels. He will punish those who do not know God and do not obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus. They will be punished with everlasting destruction and shut out from the presence of the Lord and from the majesty of His power on the day He comes . . . . ." (N.I.V.).

The Lord continues:

> "Immediately after the distress of those days (the great tribulation) the sun will be darkened, and the moon will not give its light; the stars will fall from the sky and the heavenly bodies will be shaken" (xxiv. 29, N.I.V.).

Spiritualizers will not take these words literally. Thus the moon is the Church, which will receive no light from Christ Who is the sun, because of her carnal desires. The stars are the saints who then lose their influence, and so on. How much more simple and satisfactory it is to take what the Lord said as literal guidance to the disciples regarding the immediate future, and then end-time information for the end-time believers. How near this was the Lord gave no indication, for Israel had to be tested again (in the Acts period) and this could not be revealed at this moment.

That these signs in the heavens are literal is borne out by the O.T.:

> "Behold the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and He shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it. For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine. And I will punish the world for their evil . . . . ." (Isa. xiii. 9-11, A.V.).

See also Joel ii. 10, 30-32 (quoted in Acts ii. 19-21) and Rev. vi. 12-17. Those who want to spiritualize must do so with every detail here. Applying this only to some items will not do. One should note how the book of Revelation chapter vi. gives symbolically the same truths in the same order as Christ has stated. The first seal gives false peace which will be replaced by war (second seal). In turn this is replaced by famine (third seal) and by pestilence (fourth seal). All this leads to the Second Advent of the Lord and the great day of His wrath with its catastrophic effect on mankind, especially His enemies. Drastic disturbances in the heavens will accompany these events.

Then follows the overwhelming coming of the Lord in tremendous glory, with the angels of heaven accompanying Him. Read the vivid description of it in Rev. xix. 11-16. Then (tote) the tribes of the land (better than "earth") will mourn, when they see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory (Matt. xxiv. 30). The tribes are those of Israel. The Bible does not designate the nations of the earth as tribes.

Revelation i. 7 reads:

> "Look, He is coming with the clouds, and every eye will see Him, even those who pierced Him (Israel)."

Here at last is the real mourning of Israel for their sin of rejection of their Messiah and King. They will at last be convicted and realize that this One in all His glory is the One that they refused and crucified. They will at last come to their real day of atonement which now they keep typically every year. This repentance of Israel which should have taken place at the Lord's first coming, and if not then, when Peter commanded it in Acts iii. 19-26, is described by Zech xii. 10-14:

> ". . . . . I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon Me Whom they have pierced and they shall mourn for Him, as one mourneth for his only son . . . . .".

The Scriptures even tell us where Christ comes to on the earth. It is the last place that His feet touched when He ascended, namely the Mount of Olives, outside Jerusalem. One reason for His coming is to rescue Israel in the land from all the nations who have gathered against Jerusalem and themselves. This is Armageddon (Rev. xvi. 13-16).

Zechariah writes:

> "On that day His feet will stand on the Mount of Olives, east of Jerusalem, and the Mount of Olives will be split in two from east to west, forming a great valley . . . . . Then the Lord my God will come, and all the holy ones with Him" (Zech. xiv. 4-5, N.I.V.).

This splitting of the Mount of Olives will be done by a great earthquake, forming an escape route for the persecuted Jews of that time.

The Lord Jesus goes on to inform the disciples:

> "They (the earth's inhabitants) will see the Son of Man coming on the clouds of the sky with power and great glory. And He will send His angels with a loud trumpet call, and they will gather His elect from the four winds, from one end of the heavens to the other" (Matt. xxiv. 30, 31, N.I.V.).

This glorious coming on the clouds of the sky, has already been prophesied in Dan.vii.13,14:

> "In my vision at night I looked, and there before me was one like a son of man, coming with the clouds of heaven . . . . . He was given authority, glory and sovereign power; all peoples, nations and men of every language worshipped Him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion that will not pass away, and His kingdom is one that will never be destroyed" (N.I.V.).

The gathering of His chosen ones (elect) world wide is surely fulfilled in the many Scriptures that predict the regathering of Israel to the land promised then unconditionally by God, from the Nile to the river Euphrates (Gen. xv. 18). See Isa. xi. 11, 12; xliii. 5-7; Jer. xxiv. 6, 7; xxxi. 10; Eze. xx. 41, 42; xxviii. 25, 26; Amos ix. 13-15; Micah iv. 1-8; Zeph. iii. 19, 20 (see The Kingdom of God in Heaven and on Earth by the author).

All this takes place at the great sound of a trumpet in heaven, and it is significant that, at the last trumpet, the seventh, in Revelation, we read:

> "And the seventh angel sounded; and there was great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. xi. 15, A.V.).

Continuing to answer the disciples' query as to the time of His Second Coming, the Lord gives the parable of the fig tree:

> "Now learn this lesson from the fig tree: As soon as its twigs get tender and its leaves come out, you know that summer is near. Even so, when you see all these things, you know that it (or 'he' -- footnote) is near, right at the door. I tell you the truth, this generation will certainly not pass away until all these things have happened. Heaven and earth will pass away, but My words will never pass away" (xxiv. 32-35, N.I.V.).

The vine, the olive and the fig tree were frequent Biblical symbols of the nation of Israel (for the fig see Jer. xxxiv.; Joel i. 6, 7; Hosea ix. 10). Christ had used the illustration of a fig tree before in Luke xiii. 6, 7. The owner of the vineyard (a picture of Himself) had expected fruit for three years and found none. He told the man in charge to cut it down as it was occupying soil to no advantage, but the man pleaded with the owner to spare it and he would give it special treatment, and if this did not result in figs then he would remove it.

The teaching is obvious. The three years represented the earthly ministry of the Saviour to Israel. On the whole it was fruitless, but Israel was not cut off at the end but given another opportunity of responding. This is represented by the ministry of the Acts which followed, when the nation was commanded once again to repent and turn to the Lord, in which case their sins would be forgiven, Christ would return to them, and the "times of refreshing" of the Messianic kingdom would then set in. This time of "sparing" covered some 35 years, and Israel did not repent. The tree was cut down at Acts xxviii. and the nation entered its long condition of spiritual blindness and hardness of heart which has lasted till the present time. But this will not be for ever, as Rom. xi. 15-29 clearly teaches. It is ended by the glorious Second Coming which our context in Matthew deals with (and note Rom. xi. 26, 27).

In Luke's account, he includes "all the trees", as well as the fig, producing leaves of spring and summer after the winter. Thus the nations as a whole are included showing nationalistic life demanding recognition. This has been one of the characteristics of the end of this century all over the world, but specially so in Israel. This is a sure sign, the Lord taught, that His coming was near.

No.35. xxiv. 34 - xxv. 30.
pp. 186 - 192

We must pause to consider Matt. xxiv. 34, "this generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled". Is the Lord Jesus referring to the generation He was addressing, or the nation as a whole in the future, or concentrating on the generation at the end time who will witness all He has revealed of the period just before the Second Coming, and the Coming itself?

The word used for generation is genea, and we are sometimes told that this cannot mean a nation as a whole but must be kept to the concept of a generation of people. This is not true. Arndt & Gingrich in their lexicon give as the first meaning, "those descended from an ancestor, a clan, then race", and therefore it can mean the nation of Israel here. But we feel that the Lord is meaning more than this. It is essential that we interpret this verse in the setting that we find it.

Once again we remind ourselves that Christ is dealing with the end of the age, as He had been asked vivid details of this time which leads, without a break, to His Coming in glory. Genea has a secondary meaning of generation, and surely if this is the meaning of the word here, it most naturally refers to the generation of that special time of the last seven years of the age. We can then understand why that particular generation will not pass away till all these events have been fulfilled. What it cannot mean is the generation of the disciples to whom the Lord was speaking. The generation certainly passed away without the fulfillment of the Lord's prophecy.

The early Christians had enough sense to see that this interpretation was impossible, for Christ had not returned and the apostles and their contemporaries had died. Nevertheless they still expected the Lord's Second Coming and held to the belief for a long period. Thus we can say that the group of people who live to see these things (the events of Matt. xxiv.) come to pass, will live to see the end of the prophecy fulfilled. There is therefore no problem such as is made by those who insist that "this generation" must mean the one that the Lord addressed, and the idea has caused endless controversy which is quite needless.

If Matt. xxiv. is referring to the destruction of Jerusalem in 70A.D. as some teach, then (1) the Lord did not come with His holy angels; (2) nor did the kingdom of everlasting righteousness foretold by Daniel come to pass. This was to take place at the smashing of the Gentile image and domination (Dan. ii. 34, 35, 44, 45) by the stone cut without hands (Christ) which was scheduled at the end of the last week of years, at Christ's return.

These are only some of the problems caused by wrong interpretation and should be a lesson to all of us.

The Lord Jesus asserts that the solemn predictions He has made will certainly be fulfilled without the slightest alteration:

> "Heaven and earth will pass away, but My words will never pass away" (xxiv. 35, N.I.V.), also:

> "No-one knows about that day or hour, not even the angels in heaven, nor the Son, but only the Father" (36, N.I.V.).

The phrase "neither the Son" is omitted by the A.V., but is found in Mark xiii. 32. There is strong textual evidence for its inclusion in Matthew. This need not cause a problem when we remember that the perfect knowledge shared by the members of the Godhead as part of that which Christ voluntarily refrained from using during His earthly ministry, except in those instances when such knowledge was needed for His purpose.

If we really believe the words of Christ, then no scheme of date setting of the day and hour for the Second Advent is possible. Yet people who are attracted by numbers still attempt to do this. We have known two or three such predictions by believers come to grief. The pity of it is that not only do these people look foolish, but they bring into contempt the teaching of the prophetic Scriptures and this is serious indeed. The only people who will be helped by dates will be those who live in Daniel's last week of years. They will have two historical facts to guide them, (1) the Antichrist making a covenant with Israel (Dan. ix. 27), and (2) halfway through this time (after 3½ years) breaking it. This leaves another 3½ years to run which covers the Great Tribulation and is ended by Christ's Coming and the destruction of the man of sin.

Therefore those living at this time can compute the year but not the day or hour of Christ's Coming. In the same way Noah knew exactly seven days before the Flood commenced (Gen. vii. 4). Everyone else had better leave time computation alone if they do not want to be deceived and deceive others.

The Lord now, as a warning, likens the end time to the days of Noah—"as it was in the days of Noah, so it will be at the Coming of the Son of Man" (Matt. xxiv. 37). He had already described it as a terrible time of darkness, apostasy and sin (xxiv. 10-12); and this is confirmed in II Tim. iii. 1-4 and Gen. vi. In an age of great wickedness (Gen. vi. 5) men were living without any thought of God and His warnings (Matt.xxiv.38,39) and were utterly unprepared. Suddenly the overwhelming judgment of the Flood took place. The time in Genesis was one of being "filled with violence" (Geneses vi. 11-13). It was therefore world wide. This too is characteristic of the end of this age, and is certainly a prominent feature of the present time. The murders, rapes, mugging and violence of all kinds are constantly happening all over the world and are not being controlled.

The great wickedness of Gen. vi. is being repeated today. The Flood took away all the wicked, the Second Coming of Christ and the judgments at that time will do a similar work. There will be a division even between workers in a field or those grinding with a hand mill—"one will be taken and the other left" (Matt. xxiv. 40, 41). What does "taken" and "left" mean? Some interpret the words as taken for judgment and left for blessing. Others reverse this. Paralambano "taken" is generally used in a good sense (see Matthew i. 20, 24; xvii. 1; John xiv. 3 translated "receive"). It is better therefore to understand it to mean "taken" (for blessing). The word "take" in Matt. xxiv. 39 is not the same. Luke's addition "in that night there shall be two men in one bed" (xvii. 34) completes the whole day and night.

The Lord now stresses the need for readiness:

> "Therefore keep watch, because you do not know on what day your Lord will come" (Matt. xxiv. 42, N.I.V.).

The word "keep watch" literally means "keep awake". This is no time to be drowsy, but rather to be constantly on the alert. The world around sleeps the sleep of the drugged and is impervious to the solemnity of the times, with their many signs pointing to the nearness of the end. The Lord's people in this period will be in two classes, those who are watchful and ready, and those who are not. It is this all-needed readiness that is now going to be stressed by the Lord Jesus. He gives two illustrations, the first of the house owner who failed to keep watch and therefore gave the burglar the opportunity to thieve (43, 44). The second is that of the servants who are put in charge of their master's property when he is absent. Some are loyal and on the alert; others are careless and indulge in drunkenness and fail to do their duty, so when the master returns suddenly they are severely punished, while the loyal ones are rewarded (45-50).

The same stress on readiness is found in I Thess. v. 4-7; Rev. iii. 3; xvi. 15, and it is the key to the parables of the Virgins and the Talents in the next chapter which now follows.

The Parables of the Ten Virgins.

It is very important that we are not led astray by the chapter division. Once more the adverb tote appears, which means "then", "at that time", and refers back to the times of the day of Noah and the events described by the Lord in the 24th chapter. It does not refer to this age of grace and the history of the Christian church, or teach that this is the setting for the parable of the Ten Virgins. Rather it says "then, at that time" (when Antichrist is dominating and the Great Tribulation a terrible reality), "the kingdom of heaven will become like ten virgins". We must remember that the Lord Jesus is still answering the threefold question of the disciples raised in xxiv. 3 concerning His Second Coming, and the end (sunteleia, harvest) of the age.

At this time the parable states that ten virgins took their lamps and went out to meet the bridegroom. There is no suggestion that the five foolish virgins were unsaved or hypocrites. The whole point is that they were unready, unprepared for meeting the bridegroom. This was a warning, not to unsaved sinners, but rather to saints. Hence the stress of preparedness to the disciples.

We must not make the mistake of identifying them with the Bride. They are rather the "bridesmaids" at the wedding and are among those who are invited to it. These are distinguished from the Bride in Psa. xlv. 13-15 and Rev. xix. The virgins are among those who are desirous of entering the kingdom of heaven, and this, as we have seen, is one of the chief features of this Gospel.

Some are wise and some are foolish and as such would not be a suitable picture of the Bride who consists of the "overcomers", those who are consistently faithful (such as those listed in Heb. xi. And others who are so described in the book of Revelation).

There is no need to interpret the oil as representing the Holy Spirit. The chief thought in the parable is readiness or the lack of it. It was readiness that gave the entrance to the wedding festivity. "The virgins who were ready went in with him (the bridegroom) to the wedding banquet" (Matt. xxv. 10 N.I.V.), and this is surely what the oil represents. The foolish virgins were never ready. Their lamps had no oil (3), so that when they tried to light them when the call to the marriage occurred, the wicks, being dry, just flickered and went out. "Our lamps are going out" they said, as with horror they realized they were without oil. The verb is in the present tense, which is missed by the text of the A.V. They put "going out" in the margin. It was now too late, even to get oil from the wise ones, who in any case were not in a position to supply it. No one can give readiness to someone else! The consequences of their folly could not be averted at the last moment, even though they cried and begged to be admitted (11). The reply of the bridegroom was severe, "I do not acknowledge you" (Rotherham footnote), or as Knox translates it, "I do not recognize you". This is parallel with the statement in vii. 23. Of course he knew them in the sense that they existed, but he didn't recognize them as keen expectant attendants at his wedding. The Lord ends this parable by again stressing watchfulness and readiness. "Therefore keep watch, because you do not know the day or the hour" (xxv. 13 N.I.V.).

The entrance of the wise virgins to the wedding is parallel to entering the kingdom of heaven, "enter" being one of Matthew's key-words (see the Sermon on the Mount). This is "reward" teaching which is also stressed in that great Sermon. We should remember that Scripture teaches that rewards can be won or lost, but not salvation.

The Parable of the Talents.

If readiness is the key thought of the parable of the Ten Virgins, then faithfulness is the key thought of the Talents.

This parable is similar to the parable of the Pounds in Luke xix. 11-28 but they are not variations of the same story. They have their differences. In the former one the lord divides his goods "according to their several ability", so that the servants can say "I have gained five talents", but when the lord gives to each the same, that is one pound, the servant says, "Thy pound has gained . . . . .". In terms of doctrine we have this difference expressed in Philippians. "Work out your own salvation" (Phil. ii. 12, 13) gives us the Talent aspect, the "several ability", the "I have gained" position, followed by "For it is God that worketh in you", that is the "one pound" aspect, "Thy pound has gained", with no reference to the individual ability. The word "gain" is an important word in Philippians.

Once more gain or reward is the theme in the second parable (of the Pounds). In both parables the unprofitable servant hides the money; the one in the earth, the other in a napkin. His words that he knew his lord "reaped where he had not sown" was false as an excuse, yet there was truth there, for the Lord reaps where He has not sown in the loving service of His people, for they "work out" what He has "worked in".

The faithful servant in each case is rewarded according to the amount gained. In both cases they are made rulers and this is parallel to the reigning with Christ expressed in II Tim. ii. 11, 12 for those who suffer and endure with Him. Living with Christ is one thing; reigning and ruling with Him is another, that associated with the faithful overcomer which can be lost by unfaithfulness or slackness.

The punishment of the lazy servant is severe, like the one who is "saved so as by fire" (I Cor. iii. 14, 15), the fire of God's holiness consuming all his service so that he has nothing left to offer to the Lord.

The standard of judgment when the master returned was the same for each of the three men, even though they were entrusted with differing amount of money. Each man received an amount commensurate with his ability to handle it, and the judgment of the master was how well he had done relative to that ability. The point here is faithfulness, not just volume or quantity.

There is no substitute ever for faithfulness or loyalty. "It is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful" (I Cor. iv. 2), not necessarily successful as the world counts success. God is wanting servants on whom He can place complete reliance. Each of the three servants received praise from his master, "Well done, good and faithful servant!". We do not employ persons we cannot trust who prove to be unreliable. Why should any expect God to do it?

In the parable, the lord wanted those to whom he had given the talents, to use them and make them productive for him while he was away. The first two did this, the third did not because he imputed to his lord unworthy motives, and even when he did this he was not consistent, for if the lord was a hard man, then this servant should have invested the money to have something to offer on his return. The real reason why he did nothing was because he was basically lazy. He did nothing and therefore he had nothing to offer.

We do well to remember that we have nothing but what we have been given. Even time is a precious gift. Oh to be concerned to use it primarily for the Lord's glory and not our own! There will be a last day of service for the Lord for all of us. While we have time and opportunity, may we constantly make it fruitful for Him!

Christ concludes the parable with the Lord's order to take the talent from the lazy servant and give it to the one who had ten talents (xxv. 28, 29). It had not been productive in the hands of the third servant, but would be so when given to the one who had already used the gift entrusted to him to accumulate for his master.

No.36. xxv. 31 - 46.
pp. 206 - 212

The Lord Jesus continues His foreview of the time just prior to His Second Coming, the Coming itself, and what will happen immediately afterwards:

> "When the Son of Man comes in His glory, and the all the angels with Him, He will sit on His throne in heavenly glory. All the nations will be gathered before Him, and He will separate the people one from another as a shepherd separates the sheep from the goats. He will put the sheep on His right (hand) and the goats on His left" (xxv. 31-33, N.I.V.).

The throne which is His, is the throne of David which was promised at His birth:

> "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David: And He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke i. 32, 33, A.V.).

At His resurrection this was again stressed:

> "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David . . . . . therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, He would raise up Christ to sit on his (David's) throne . . . . ." (Acts ii. 29-31, A.V.).

This throne was now transformed by the returning Lord Whose sole possession it is. Around Him will be twelve thrones for the twelve Apostles who will sit on them, as He promised, to judge the twelve tribes of Israel (Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 30).

The question now is how we interpret ethne (nations) in verse 31. Does it here mean nations in the nationalistic sense, or Gentile people in an individual sense? If it is the former, does it mean that the whole human race is assembled before the Lord in the district around Jerusalem? It would mean that individuals are not dealt with as such but judged solely by the nation to which they belonged. This would mean that God would judge an individual because he happened to be born in and a citizen of a "goat" nation. Thus every individual in the goat nations would be condemned whatever their characters and actions were, and this would run into millions. It would not seem possible for a nation which consisted of millions of people to be wholly one or the other. It could be predominantly one or the other. We should remember that this is not the assembling of individuals in a group who are "sheep" or "goats", but nations.

We are probably making problems here by interpreting ethne in a rigid nationalistic sense, whereas if we take the word to mean Gentile people in an individual sense the problem is eased. In Gal. ii. 12 we are told that Peter ate "with the Gentiles (ethnon)". This certainly does not mean that Peter ate with nations, but with individuals who were Gentiles not Jews.

The separation here of sheep from goats reminds us of the similar separation of wheat from tares and good fish from bad (Matt. xiii. 40-43, 48-50). The separating is often done by the "goats" themselves in the present age (Luke vi. 22), but the reverse happens when the Lord Jesus returns in glory. He does the separating. The standard here is externally of "works". It is the way they have treated "these My brethren" (xxv. 40) that decides their end. We have noted before that works dominate the Sermon on the Mount. They are crucial when the question of forgiveness is considered (vi.14,15; xviii.32-35), but this does not mean that people are saved by works or merit. The works are the external fruit of those who are born again (John iii. 5) and then produce acceptable service which the Lord can reward by entry into the great Messianic kingdom.

This is the position of those reckoned as "sheep" by the Lord. They "inherit the kingdom prepared for them by Him from or since the foundation of the world" (xxv. 34), that is, since creation. (We do not enter here into the argument as to whether the correct translation is "foundation" or "overthrow", as this would make too big a digression).

We should also note that there was a redeemed calling in the mind of God the Father "before the foundation of the world" (Eph. i. 4), that is before He created, so we have a revelation here of part of His great purpose and it shows how extremely important this must be if this occupied His thoughts before He commenced to create.

The illustration of "sheep" is usually kept to Israel (Psa. lxxix. 13; xcv. 7; c. 3; Ezek. xxxiv. 11, 12), but here in Matthew it designates Gentiles. Further, we should remember that the Lord revealed that He had "other sheep" to bring who were not of (ek) Israel (John x. 16), that is they did not originate from Israel; this is the force of the preposition and therefore these must be saved Gentiles whom the Lord will unite with Israel to become "one flock" (not "fold" A.V.).

As we regard the kingdom of the future, we must therefore allow for a strong Gentile element linked with redeemed Israel, and this is all in line with the revealed purpose of God from the beginning, for it was declared to Abraham that his posterity would finally be a blessing to "all families of the earth" (Gen. xii. 1-3). The divine order was to be Israel first and the nations second. If this seems to be a contradiction to the Lord's statement in the Sermon on the Mount that only few were entering (Matt. vii. 14), we should remember He was dealing with the lack of response to the ministry of John the Baptist and His own, whereas in Matt. xxv. the Lord is dealing with what is yet future after His Second Coming.

Another important fact we must not overlook is the doctrine concerning the two seeds, one of God and the other of Satan which is clearly taught in the parable of the wheat and the tares. The tares are sown, not by God, but by "the enemy" (Matt. xiii. 25), and these are designated by the Lord as representing "the children of the wicked one" (38) and the one who sowed them was the devil (xiii. 39, and see Gen. iii. 15; John viii. 44, 47, and note the preposition ek again). We must distinguish what originates from God and what originates from Satan. They must never be confused, otherwise we shall be led into erroneous doctrine.

We must also understand that when God judges, it is the mind He examines first. The Lord's words to Samuel stated truth for all time when He said "man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart (mind)" (I Sam. xvi. 7). Like Himself, His Word is "a discerner of the thoughts and intents (intentions) of the heart (mind)" (Heb. iv. 12), whereas man can only judge by the external action which may not accurately reflect the mind.

God is therefore a perfect discriminator and all is open to Him. Because of this, He can righteously discriminate between the sheep and the goats. He mentions their outward actions which express their inward attitude of mind. In the case of the sheep, their minds had been touched by the Lord, as they had been in His purpose since creation and He had prepared the kingdom for them (xxv. 34-36). That great purpose wrought the works mentioned in the lives of those who are counted as the sheep. The Lord calls them "the righteous ones" (37) even though they had not realized that the physical actions of mercy and kindness mentioned, were accepted by Christ as though they were done to Him:

> "The King will reply, 'I tell you the truth, whatever you did for one of the least of these brothers of Mine, you did for Me'." (xxv. 40, N.I.V.).

Who are "these brothers of Mine"? The Lord was surrounded by Jews and was a Jew Himself. He, as it were, pointed to "these brothers" which can only be the Jewish people. In spite of their failing, Israel were certainly the people of God, chosen by Him, and those who minister to their physical and spiritual needs are serving the One Who chose and redeemed them, Christ Himself. We must remember that at the beginning God stated He would bless those who blessed Israel and curse those who cursed Israel (Gen. xii. 3).

In Matt. xxv. the Lord did not mean any needy person anywhere. This should be clear from the fact that He would have been teaching that the fatherhood of God relates to all men. Although this is popular in religious circles, it is certainly not Scriptural and therefore not true. This is proved from the teaching of John i. 11, 12 and other Scriptures. It is easy to base a social gospel on this parable, that if people are kind to everyone else and help them in their difficulties, they will be saved. This produces a gospel of works and human merit which is completely foreign to the sacred Scriptures, and definitely is not the teaching of the parable of the sheep and the goats.

From this story Christ not only deals with a prepared people and a prepared place for them in His kingdom, He shows clearly the destiny of the goat nations. They go to a prepared place too, but not originally for them, but for "the devil and his angels" (Matthew xxv. 41). His conclusion is:

> "Then they will go away to eternal punishment, but the righteous to eternal life" (Matt. xxv. 46, N.I.V.).

The word used for punishment is kolasis. Moulton and Milligan's Vocabulary shows that it was used at the time for pruning, or cutting out of dead wood. It reminds one of Moses' frequent phrase "shall be cut off from His people". The words "everlasting" and "eternal" translate aion and aionios, and we need to take great care here. It has been the tendency of evangelists to oversimplify the destiny of the unsaved. Aion has the equivalent of olam in the O.T. where the concept of everlasting seems to be almost absent. Basically it suggests something hidden, an age of indefinite length, indefinite but not infinite. It is used many times in the O.T. where eternal permanence was not in view, that is a city was to be utterly destroyed and this was described as being punishment for ever. We must remember therefore that punishment might be terminated, but the effects could last for ever.

G. Abbot Smith in his Manual Greek Lexicon of the New Testament says of aion, "a space of time, as a lifetime, generation, period of history, an indefinitely long period. In the New Testament of an indefinitely long period, an age . . . . .".

Dr. E. W. Bullinger states ". . . . . the course of life, time of life, ... space of human life, an age. Aion always includes a reference to the life, filling time or space of time, hence the unbounded time past and future . . . . . immeasurable time (Gen. plural of ages)" (Critical Lexicon and Concordance).

The word indicates time stretched out so far that we cannot see the end, but it does not necessarily mean endless. In fact it often has a defined sense of restricted time by its use with such prepositions as before and during and also such phrases as the end of the age (aion). There are quite a number of verses where this word cannot mean "eternity". In Luke i. 70 the prophets have not been speaking since eternity. The A.V. has here "world". In John ix. 32 the A.V. uses the word "world" again, "since the world began", but it is aion, and cannot be rendered "since eternity was it not heard that any man opened the eyes of one born blind". Here it clearly means "within the memory of man", or "for a very lone time". When referring to the past, the word aion cannot mean everlasting and it is unwise to dogmatize as some do and assume it always does so when referring to the future. Professor A. T. Robertson declares that "aionios (from aion) means either without beginning or without end or both. It comes as near to the idea of eternal as the Greek can put it in one word. It is a difficult idea to put into language". Here we get another opinion by a great scholar.

With regard to olam, occasionally the word is followed by the compounds le (to), and adh which is practically equivalent to the English beyond. But how can one have eternity and beyond that? We are certain that aion can mean age and we note in Scripture (Romans xvi. 25; II Tim. i. 9; Titus i. 2) we have chronos (time) and aion together, translated in the A.V. "before the world began"; literally it is "before the age-times". Gal. i. 4 reads "this present evil world" in the A.V., but literally it is "the now age", the present evil age. In Eph. ii. 7 we read "that in the ages to come" (here the A.V. avoids its usual rendering of aion as "world").

Thus we see the ages had a beginning, yet an aspect of God's wonderful purpose goes back before this time. We live in an age at the moment, but it is evil in spite of its scientific achievements, for it rejects Christ. There are ages yet to come, how many is not revealed. It may be that the phrase "ages of ages" (rendered "ever and ever") means the closing ages when God's redemptive purpose comes to a glorious conclusion, though there are some (like the A.V. translators) who think it refers to eternity. There are expositors who limit the word "age" to one in the future, that is the Millennial age, but this is contrary to Eph. ii. 7.

God has certainly appointed the ages of time during which He is working out His supreme plans. In Eph. iii. 11 "the eternal purpose" is literally "purpose of the ages". We have a striking title of God in I Tim. i. 17, "Now to the King of the ages (see margin), incorruptible, invisible, only wise God, honour and glory to the ages of the ages". The ages, appointed by Him, are most certainly under His sovereign control; but they will have a conclusion when the divine purpose is fulfilled. What follows is not revealed in Scripture; neither eternity in the past or future is the subject of revelation, possibly because what eternity comprises is entirely beyond our comprehension.

We have a vast period of time divided into ages, and beyond this we cannot go.

Let no one think that if these things are true, the eternal security of the believer in endangered. This security does not rest on one Hebrew and one Greek word. It rests on Christ, the One Who "only hath immortality" (I Tim. vi. 15, 16), the One Who, having defeated death, "dieth no more, death hath no more dominion over Him" (Rom. vi. 9). This, together with the fact that the believer is eternally linked with Him Who said "because I live, ye shall live also" (John xiv. 19), means that he is eternally secure and nothing can alter this glorious fact.

The whole subject, relating to aion and olam is a difficult one, and ignorant dogmatism should be avoided. Whatever research is done on this subject, great care must be taken not to go further than is clearly revealed, for if this happens we come into the realm of fallible human opinion which can only lead to difficulty and error.

We do not take the matter any further, for its exposition does not come within the scope of the Matthew's Gospel.

No.37. xxvi. 1 - 28.
pp. 233 - 240

The 26th chapter opens with the words:

> "When Jesus had finished saying all these things, He said to His disciples, 'As you know, the Passover is two days away -- and the Son of Man will be handed over to be crucified'." (N.I.V.).

His hour was approaching at last (John ii. 4). This was the crucial time upon which redemption was going to rest, anticipated by the Godhead before creation (Rev. xiii. 8) and often predicted by the Lord Jesus Himself (Matt. xvi. 21). It now was less than forty-eight hours away, and once again He tells the disciples that He will be betrayed and crucified. At the same time His enemies were meeting and craftily plotting how to get rid of Him, thus carrying out His prediction:

> "Then the chief priest and the elders of the people assembled in the palace of the high priest, whose name was Caiaphas, and they plotted to arrest Jesus in some sly way and kill him. 'But not during the Feast', they said, 'or there may be a riot among the people'." (xxvi. 3-5, N.I.V.).

Caiaphas was high priest 18A.D.-36A.D. His father-in-law Annas had been high priest 6A.D.-15A.D. and was still called high priest by many. This explains why two men at this time had the title.

The meeting was nothing less than a meeting of the Sanhedrin and they realized that their plan must be postponed till after the Feast was over and the crowds dispersed. They noted Christ's popularity with the people and judged it would not be safe to act before this.

While these activities were going on, the Lord arrived at the home of Simon whom He had obviously cured of leprosy. Simon was a very common name and it is useless to try to identify him as some have done. In the same way they have tried to identify the woman that approached the Lord Who was reclining at the table. Some have said she was Mary Magdalene, or the sinful woman in Luke. vii. These are just guesses. What is stressed is the very expensive ointment she brought with her and anointed the Lord's head. This must have involved a great personal sacrifice, and was an indication of her devotion and gratitude for what the Lord had done for her.

However, the effect on the disciples was very different. They became angry and said "Why this waste?". It is interesting to note here that "waste" is apoleia, sometimes translated destruction, perdition, perishing, and here used in a non-doctrinal sense. It is evident that the values of the disciples and the woman were very different. To the disciples the ointment was measured in terms of money; for the women it expressed the value of the Lord to her. It does not say much for the effect on the disciples of three years fellowship with the Lord, if they judged that to anoint Him in this way was just "waste"!

At least Christ recognized the woman's gift at its true value. He said:

> "She has done a beautiful thing to Me . . . . . When she poured this perfume on My body, she did it to prepare Me for burial. I tell you the truth, wherever this gospel is preached throughout the world, what she has done will also be told, in memory of her" (Matt. xxvi. 10-13, N.I.V.).

The woman alone had understood what the Lord had repeatedly said about His approaching death. The lesson for all of us is that real love is expressed by deeds not just words. What a different place this world would be if this were constantly put into action!

The Betrayal of Judas.

While this was happening, Judas Iscariot slipped away and went to the high priests to try to strike a bargain with them to betray the Lord. This was a gift to Christ's enemies, for it would make the arrest of the Saviour easier. Judas asked what they would be willing to give him and they agreed upon thirty pieces of silver (see Zech. xi. 12). If an ox gored a servant, the owner had to pay this amount (Exod. xxi. 32). It was the current price for a slave. What a contrast this was to the woman we have just considered! She poured the most expensive oil upon the Lord's head, whereas Judas sold his Master for a sum that was paltry by comparison. From this moment, Judas watched for a suitable opportunity to carry out this treacherous deed (Matt. xxvi. 16).

In dealing with the last week before the crucifixion, we are faced with a number of difficulties. According to some expositors the events as detailed in the four Gospels cannot be reconciled. But before we decide that this is so, we should take care that the difficulties are not of our own making. There are a number of facts to be considered. Those who have The Companion Bible should consult Appendix 156. The researches of Dr. Graham Scroggie are helpful too.

In Matt. xii. 40 the Lord Jesus asserted that as Jonah was three days and three nights in the sea monster, so the Son of Man would be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. One must also consider the phrase "after three days" (Matt. xxvii. 63, 64; Mark viii. 31; ix. 31, R.V.; x. 34, R.V.; John ii. 19), and also the passages which speaks of "the third day" (Matthew xvi. 21; xvii. 23; xx. 19; xxvii. 64; Luke ix. 22; xiii. 32; xviii. 33; xxiv. 7, 21, 46; Acts x. 40; I Cor. xv. 4). These two expressions mean the same thing as is clear from Matt. xxvii. 63, 64 which says, "We remember that that impostor said while He was yet alive, 'after three days I will rise again'. Command therefore that the sepulcher be made sure until the third day".

We must remember that the Jews reckoned any part of a day as a whole day, and this is used to explain how Christ was reckoned to be in the tomb three days, starting with Friday. However, when the number of nights is stated as well as the number of days, the expression ceases to be an idiom and becomes a literal statement of fact. There were not three nights between Friday evening and Sunday morning by any process of reckoning. The expressions "after three days" which occurs five times (see above occurrences), and "three days and three nights" cannot be explained by this Jewish custom.

We must also remember that the Jewish days are reckoned from sunset to sunset, 6p.m. to 6p.m., not midnight to midnight as ours are. Taking the above facts into consideration we arrive at the following:

Wednesday,	Nisan (April) 14th,	the crucifixion.
Thursday,	Nisan 15th,	the Passover Sabbath.	(???)
Friday,	Nisan 16th,	the embalmment.
Saturday,	Nisan 17th,	the weekly Sabbath.
Sunday,	Nisan 18th,	the Resurrection.

This gives "three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matt. xii. 40).

14th Nisan	15th Nisan	16th Nisan	17th Nisan
Passover and Preparation. The Lord crucified. Body hastily buried.	A High Day. A Sabbath. No servile work. "The Sabbath past" (Mark xvi. 1).	Preparation Day. The spices bought and prepared when the Sabbath was past.	Weekly Sabbath. The women rested on this Sabbath day and went to the sepulcher soon after it had passed.

Hebrew day	1st night	1st day	2nd night	2nd day	3rd night	3rd day	4th(???) night

Every Sabbath had its Preparation Day, so we must be prepared for two Preparation Days. One refers to the "high day", the Sabbath immediately following the Passover, the other referring to the regular weekly Sabbath.

There are other facts to be considered. If it is true that Christ died on Friday at 3p.m. and was buried before 6p.m. because the weekly Sabbath began at 6p.m. on Friday and lasted until 6p.m. on Saturday—then, within those three hours the following twenty events must have taken place:

(1) The deputation of the Jews to Pilate (John xix. 31).
(2) Pilate heard their request and must have verified it.
(3) Soldiers came and brake the legs of the two thieves and pierced the side of Christ (John xix. 32, 34).
(4) After this Joseph of Arimathaea went to Pilate and asked for the Lord's body (John xix. 38; Mark xv. 43).
(5) Pilate called a centurion and asked if Christ had been dead any while (Mark xv. 44).
(6) The centurion made enquiries, reported to Pilate who then gave a permit to remove the body (Mark xv. 44, 45).
(7) Joseph went to the market and bought fine linen, which could not be done with speed (Mark xv, 46).

(8) Joseph then went to Golgotha with linen and permit and presented the latter to the centurion on duty—.
(9) Having received permission to move the body, Joseph with help took down and covered the body with the cloth and carried it to Joseph's tomb (Mark xv. 46; Matt. xxvii. 59, 60; Luke xxiii. 53).
(10) Women from Galilee followed after (Luke xxiii. 55).
(11) Joseph, with help, would remove the much soiled cloth and wash the body of its blood stains, after which it was wrapped in a single clean linen cloth without spices (Matt. xxvii. 59; Mark xv. 46; Luke xxiii. 53).
(12) The body was then laid in Joseph's new tomb (Matt. xxvii. 60; Mark xv. 46).
(13) During these operations the women watched, but did not help (Matt. xxvii. 61).
(14) Joseph and his friends rolled a great stone across the mouth of the tomb and departed (Matt. xxvii. 60; Mark xv. 46).
(15) The women returned to the city, having seen how the body was laid without embalming (Luke xxiii. 55).
(16) Nicodemus, unknown to the women, had procured a great quantity of expensive spices and with these made contact with Joseph (John xix. 39).
(17) The women went to the market and bought raw materials for spices which they prepared (Luke xxiii. 56).
(18) Joseph and Nicodemus returned to the tomb, rolled away the stone, took off the single linen cloth in which the body was wrapped and wound the limbs and the body in a number of bandages with spices (John xix. 40). Then they wrapped the whole corpse in a single linen sheet and the head separately in a napkin, and put the body back in place (John xx. 7).
(19) The stone was rolled again across the mouth of the tomb, and the men departed.
(20) The women, having prepared the spices, rested on the Sabbath (Friday 6p.m. to Saturday 6p.m.) (Luke xxiii. 56).

On the first day of the week (Saturday after 6p.m.) very early in the morning*, the women came, bringing the spices they had prepared (Luke xxiv. 1). [very early in the morning* -- this can only refer to Sunday 5a.m.+/- onwards—DHC.]

Surely it must be admitted, all this could not have taken place within three hours. No part of it could be done on Saturday, for that was the weekly Sabbath. The markets were all closed and nothing could be bought and no labour hired.

We must remember that the Sabbath of John xix. 31 was not the weekly Sabbath, but one earlier in the week connected with Passover, a "high day". So there were two Sabbaths in that week and the high day Sabbath being confused with the weekly Sabbath, has led to all the confusion as to when Christ was crucified. Exod. xii. 3-8 regulates that the Passover must be offered on the 14th day of the month. Straight away followed the Feast of Unleavened Bread on the 15th day, and this day was a Sabbath (Lev. xxiii. 6, 7). By this calendar, instead of having three hours only, from 3p.m. to 6p.m. on Friday for these twenty events, there were the three hours on Wednesday and the whole of Friday. Thursday and Saturday could not be used being Sabbaths. Joseph must have hurriedly buried the Lord's body on Wednesday before 6p.m. and he, with Nicodemus, would embalm it on Friday. The markets were open on this day and the women would be able to buy what spices they wanted.

The above facts do not solve all the problems of Holy Week, but they clear up several which occur in the orthodox view.

There is another interesting point. In the New Testament passages which record the taking of the body from the cross and wrapping it in linen cloth, the word sindon is used which was one piece of linen (Matt. xxvii. 59; Mark xv. 46; Luke xxiii. 53; and compare Mark xiv. 51, 52). But in the passages which describe the embalming, the word othonion is used, which means a linen bandage, and in each occurrence it is plural, linen cloths (othonia) and is associated with the spices (Luke xxiv. 12; John xix. 40; xx. 5-7). The Lord's head was bandaged separately, consequently at the resurrection the risen Lord passed through the bandages leaving them in their separate places. It was this that struck the Apostle John when he first came into the tomb and convince him of the resurrection (John xx. 6-9).

The tradition of Good Friday as the crucifixion day has provided much capital for infidel arguments and many apparent contradictions which undermine confidence in the truth of the Word of God. We can be thankful to be released from this tradition. Of course the day of the Lord's death in no way affects its virtue. What matters first and last is that He died for us who are believers and this is the solid and unalterable ground of our salvation and certain hope.

The Passover Meal.

We must be careful not to confuse the Paschal Supper with the festival that followed it as is so often done. The Supper was a memorial of the redemption of the firstborn of Israel on the night before the Exodus; the Feast of the next day was the anniversary of their actual deliverance from the bandage of Egypt. The Supper was not part of the Feast, but was the basis on which the Feast was founded. The word "Passover" became a popular designation of this period of time which includes the preparation day (the term used for the day before the Sabbath or the Passover Feast), the Feast itself and Unleavened Bread that followed it. Mark xiv. 12 records, "And on the first day of unleavened bread, when they sacrificed (killed) the passover . . .". Luke xxii. 7 confirms this and so does Josephus (Ant. 14:2,1 and 17:9,3), "the feast of unleavened bread which we call the Passover".

Passover and Unleavened Bread, although two separate feasts, were traced as one. Unleavened Bread followed immediately after Passover. The disciples came to the Lord and asked Him where they should prepare the Passover (Matt. xxvi. 17). Christ's answer was to direct them to a certain man, who, according to Mark xiv. 13 and Luke xxii. 10 was carrying a pitcher of water, and to tell him that He wished to celebrate Passover with His disciples at the man's house (Matt. xxvi. 18, 19).

While they were reclining and eating the meal, the Lord Jesus made a statement that must have been like a bolt from the blue:

> ". . . . . And while they were eating, He said, 'I tell you the truth, one of you will betray Me'." (xxvi. 21, N.I.V.).

The disciples were shocked. They evidently did not suspect Judas Iscariot for they asked, "Surely it is not I?". (The Greek expected the answer, No). The Lord's reply was, "The one who has dipped his hand into the bowl with Me will betray Me". They had all done this, but the language means that one of these who had eaten bread with Him had violated the rules of eastern hospitality by betraying Him. Eastern people are emphatic on this point. Eating someone's bread ties the hands and compels friendship. (Compare Psa. xli. 9 with David's similar experience and note the words "did eat of my bread"). Judas tried to bluff it out by asking the same question (Matt. xxvi. 25). Christ's reply seems indeterminate, "thou hast said" (A.V.). But in the original it means, as the N.I.V., "Yes, it is you". We are not told of Judas' reaction, for he evidently left the room at this point (John xiii. 24-30).

The Lord now proceeds with the meal. He takes one of the hard flat Jewish loaves and breaks it so that each might have a piece, saying, "Take and eat; this is My body" (Matt. xxvi. 26). "Then He took the cup, gave thanks and offered it to them, saying, Drink from it, all of you. This is My blood of the covenant, which is poured out for many for the forgiveness of sins." The N.I.V. in a footnote says, "some manuscripts have the new (i.e. before the word "covenant"). In Luke's account (xxii. 19, 20), the words are inserted, as they are in I Cor. xi. 24, 25. There can therefore be no doubt that the Lord used the words "the new covenant", and this can only refer to Jer. xxxi. 31-37. A covenant is an agreement between two parties and here they are clearly stated—Jehovah on the one hand and Israel and Judah on the other, just as they were when the old covenant of law was instituted (Exod. xxiv. 8).

In seeking to expound this passage, the churches have forgotten this and mountains of wrong doctrine have been erected on their varying ideas. The Lord Jesus asserts that His shed blood is "for the forgiveness of sins". The words of Prof. A. T. Robertson are to the point here:

> "This clause (the remission of sin) is in Matthew alone, but it is not to be restricted for that reason. It is the truth. This passage answers all the modern sentimentalism that finds the teaching of Jesus only pious ethical remarks or eschatological dreamings. He had the definite conception of His death on the cross as the basis of forgiveness of sin." (Word Pictures in the New Testament, pp. 209, 210).

The bread and the wine symbolized His body and blood. The figure Metaphor is used here, for He held the bread and wine in His hands. Obviously His physical body was already present so that the bread and wine could only be symbols of that body. Yet the ritualist ignores this fact and invents the myth of these symbols being His literal body and blood, thus not only deceiving himself, but millions of other people as well. The figure of speech used here is very common. When we point to a map and say "this is America", or to a photograph and say "this is my father", no one misunderstands. The Lord Jesus used this figure many times when He said, "I am the door", "I am the true vine", "You are the salt of the earth", etc., where in each case the verb to be means "represents".

The New Covenant made with Israel is ratified here by His shed blood (His atoning death), and it is the solid basis for Israel's redemption in the future and the setting up of the Messianic kingdom (Rom. xi. 26-29).

New Things.

"Behold, I make all things new" (Rev. xxi. 5).

pp. 75 - 79

In the old days we were told to 'make do and mend'. Certainly, things were made to last, and as money was scarce we could not afford to throw things away if they would serve after repair. Times have changed, and to keep the wheels of industry turning businessmen must sell more and more. So there is the term 'planned obsolescence', and we are encouraged to throw things away and buy new. Even if they are not worn out they are out of date. However, we are now beginning to realize how great is the waste, and thought is being given to a way of using the material instead of losing it. We hear of 'recycling'; for example, we collect waste paper which can be used to make new paper.

Jeremiah was told to go down to the potter's house where he saw the potter at work. A vessel he had made was marred, so he made another vessel out of the clay (Jer.xviii.4). The word of the Lord came to Jeremiah:

> "Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in Mine hand, O house of Israel. At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it; if that nation … turn from their evil, I will repent … if it do evil in My sight … I will repent of the good …" (Jer. xviii. 6-10).

The history of the children of Israel shows how often they departed from the Lord to serve idols. How often the Lord had to punish them! The promises of the covenant still hold good, but as the time passes, as Peter says, many ask the question "Where is the promise of His coming?" (II Pet. iii. 4). When will the kingdom be set up? When will the promises made to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob fulfilled?

The need of Israel is a change of heart. When John the Baptist preached, he called for repentance. How will the kingdom come? If we refer to Jer. xxxi., we can learn how the Lord will work. In the past the Lord has had to pluck up, or throw down, or destroy, but a change of heart will make such a big difference. The Lord will watch over Israel to build, and to plant (Jer. xxxi. 27, 28). Instead of a conditional covenant, the Lord will make a new covenant with Israel, which will be an unconditional covenant. He will put the law in their inward parts and write it in their hearts. "I will be their God and they shall be My people" (Jer. xxxi. 31-33). When David sinned, he prayed "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me" (Psa. li. 10). This is a picture of what will happen to Israel.

In the O.T. for example, in the Psalms, Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, there are prophecies telling of God's intentions for Israel. In the N.T., particularly in Revelation, we see pictures of how those prophecies will be fulfilled.

Ezekiel speaks of the new heart which Israel will be given:

> "And I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you: and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh" (xi 19).

"Cast away from you all your transgressions, whereby ye have transgressed; and make you a new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel?" (xviii.31).

"A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart …" (xxxvi. 26).

The word "new" occur four times in Jeremiah. The outline of the four references is interesting:

A | xxvi. 10. The new gate of the Lord's house. Jeremiah's prophecy rejected.
B | xxxi. 22. The Lord hath created a new thing in the earth.
B | xxxi. 31. I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel.
A | xxxvi. 10. The new gate of the Lord's house. Jeremiah's prophecy rejected.

The meetings at the new gate, where the prophecy of Jeremiah was considered, led up to statements by the Priests in the first case showing their rejection of Jeremiah's message, and in the second case, when a book containing a record of Jeremiah's prophecies was presented to the king, it resulted in the king throwing the book on the fire. But in Jer. xxxi. 17 we read, "And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord", and as we have seen, God will make a new covenant with Israel and give them a new heart and a new spirit.

The prophecy that there will be a complete change, and that Israel after returning to the Lord will be restored and be God's people, is a cause for rejoicing and thanksgiving. So the Psalmist reacts by exhorting Israel to sing a new song and to praise the Lord. Psalms xcvi.-xcix. in each case show that the picture is the return of the Lord to this earth and God's reign beginning:

A | xcvi. 1. O sing unto the Lord a new song.
B | xcvi. 13. He cometh to judge the earth.
C | xcvii. 1. The Lord reigneth.
A | xcviii. 1. O sing unto the Lord a new song.
B | xcviii. 9. He cometh to judge the earth.
C | xcix. 1. The Lord reigneth.

See other references: Psalms xxxiii. 3; xl. 3; cxliv. 9; and Isa. xlii. 10.

We quoted Jer. xxxi. 22 above, "for the Lord hath created a new thing in the earth", and as we study the book of Isaiah we find other similar statements. "Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them. Sing unto the Lord a new song …" (Isa. xlii. 9, 10). Then, in Isa. xliii. 19, he says again "Behold I will do a new thing: now it shall spring forth; shall ye not know it? I will even make a way in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert".

Another reference is in chapter xlviii., but the whole chapter needs to be read. Although Israel is obstinate God still pleads with them, and for His own name's sake He will not cut off Israel. We will quote a few verses:

> "Because I knew that thou art obstinate, and thy neck is an iron sinew, and thy brow brass; I have even from the beginning declared it to thee; before it came to pass I shewed it thee: lest thou shouldest say, 'Mine idol hath done them and my graven image and my molten image, hath commanded them'. Thou hast heard, see all this; and will not ye declare it? I have shewed to thee new things from this time, even hidden things, and thou didst not know them. They are created now, and not from the beginning; even before the day when thou heardest them not; lest thou shouldest say, 'Behold, I knew them'." (Isa. xlviii. 4-7).

So Isaiah emphasizes that the new things that will be declared are entirely new, and those new things are a creation of God. Israel would like to pretend that they knew those things from the beginning, but God will keep them secret until the right time comes, when He will reveal the new things that He will create.

It is in Isaiah that we read that Israel will be given a new name, "which the mouth of the Lord shall name" (lxii. 2). We read that God's people will not be called "Forsaken" neither will the land be called "Desolate":

> "… but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah: for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married" (Isa. lxii. 4).

Lastly, there are two references in Isaiah to new heavens and a new earth. The first is Isa. lxv. 17 and the second in Isa. lxvi. 22. We quote lxv. 17:

> "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind", and the following verses describe the blessing and the joy which will be enjoyed. There will be no more weeping nor the "voice of crying" (19).

In the N.T. we find that the "overcomers" will be given a white stone in which is written a new name (Rev. ii. 17). In Rev. iii. 12 the overcomers will become pillars of the Temple, and the name of God and of the city of God (New Jerusalem) will be written on them. The verse ends "and I will write upon him My new name".

In Revelation we also read of a new song, a new heaven and a new earth, and the last statement is "Behold, I make all things new". The outline of the use of the word "new" in Revelation is as follows:

A | ii. 17. A new name (overcomers).
  B | iii. 12. New Jerusalem (comes down from heaven).
    C | iii. 12. My new name.
      D | v. 9. A new song (Worthy is the Lamb).
      D | xiv. 3. A new song (144,000).
    C | xxi. 1. A new heaven and a new earth.
  B | xxi. 2. New Jerusalem (coming down from God out of heaven).
A | xxi. 5. I make all things new (overcomers, verse 7).

We see in II Pet. iii. 13 reference to a new heaven and a new earth. In John xiii. 34 our Lord said, "a new commandment I give unto you that ye love one another: as I have loved you, that ye also love one another". See also I John ii. 8.

The apostle Paul, writing to the Corinthians, declares that God "hath made us able ministers of the new testament (covenant)" (II Cor. iii. 6). He also writes about our being reconciled to God by Jesus Christ and about the ministry of reconciliation. He states that if we are in Christ, we are a new creation (A.V. creature); all things are become new:

> "Therefore, if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation; the old has gone, the new has come!" (II Cor. v. 17).

See also Gal. vi. 15.

To conclude, we have two further references in Ephesians:

> "For He Himself is our peace, Who has made the two one and has destroyed the barrier, the dividing wall of hostility, by abolishing in His flesh the law with its commandments and regulations. His purpose was to create in Himself one new man out of the two, thus making peace" (Eph. ii. 14, 15, N.I.V.).

The first reference is in the 'doctrinal' section of Ephesians, but the second is in the 'practical' section. It reads:

> "You were taught … to put off your old self … to be made new (A.V. be renewed) in the attitude of your minds; and to put on the new self (A.V. the new man), created to be like God in true righteousness and holiness" (Eph. iv. 22-24, N.I.V.).

Space does not permit us to enlarge on this important theme and we refer our readers to Letters From Prison by Stuart Allen, pages 49-52 (the new man), and page 94 (put on the new man).

Our Standing in Christ Jesus.

pp. 71 - 74

> "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit is no guile" (Psa.xxxii.1,2).

The apostle Paul suffered much and had many diverse experiences: yet he was always rejoicing. His state of mind is reflected in the words "Rejoice in the Lord always: and again I say, Rejoice" (Phil. iv. 4).

We have to admit that we do not always rejoice. We do not always radiate that joy and gladness which should characterize the Christian. To what extent is this due to a lack of faith? If we hold firmly to the faith, and have no doubts about our standing in Christ Jesus, should this not be reflected in our daily lives?

Where are doubts likely to arise?

Firstly, if we have accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as our Saviour, we should not doubt our salvation. Some may say, "There are times when I do not feel saved". Do we rely for our salvation on our feelings? Or is our faith based on the finished work of Christ? Our feelings, like the weather, vary from day to day. It may be that our health or circumstances cause us to feel 'down' at times, and if we tend to rely on our feelings, we shall be unstable.

David knew what it was to feel 'down' at times. He had sinned and he confessed his sin in Psa. li. In verse 12 of that Psalm he prays, "Restore unto me the joy of Thy salvation, and uphold me with Thy free spirit". Our salvation is certain and sure, but we may not always experience the joy of our salvation.

Secondly, our failure to rejoice every day may result from the problems of the pilgrim pathway. The classic example is the experience of Israel as they wandered for forty years in the wilderness. Were they always happy? Was their faith firmly based on the word of God? There are summaries of Israel's experiences in the Psalms, such as Psa.cvi.&cvii. Our personal lives may differ from the wilderness journey of Israel, but there may be a parallel. We may face the problem of meeting our material needs, or we may be worried about health; either our own health or that of a near relative or friend. If the burden seems too heavy for us it is not easy to "Rejoice"; but cannot we ride through the storm more easily if we have complete faith in the providential care of our Heavenly Father?

The object of this article is to consider the 'facts'. What is our standing? What are the conditions (or facts) that do not change with the varying experiences and circumstances of the pilgrim pathway? If we can establish the 'facts', we may have a firm foundation on which to build, and we shall not be tossed to and fro as we encounter daily problems.

The gospel message is very clearly set out in a leaflet written by Stuart Allen (What is a Christian) many years ago. Among the texts quoted is John iii. 16, and probably this verse is the first that comes to mind when we are asked to set out our faith. In this article we are looking at the evidence contained in Paul's letter to the Romans. He points out that the Jews were under the Law, but the Gentiles were led by conscience. He concluded that both Jew and Gentile were sinners. In Rom. iii. 10 he quotes from Psalm xiv., "There is none righteous, no, not one". We will quote from Rom. iii. 21-26:

> "But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all that believe: for there is no difference: for all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, at this time His righteousness: that He might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus."

As we read the above, we note that our own righteousness is of no avail. "But we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousness are as filthy rags …" (Isa. lxiv. 6). God's perfect righteousness is offered to all. It is "unto all". Alas, some will not accept this wonderful offer, so Paul adds "and upon all that believe". Then, note that God declares His righteousness in forgiving our sins. He is just, and the justifier. Jesus Christ shed His blood, He paid the price of our redemption, and therefore He is just when He forgives us.

So, when we 'face the facts', we see that however unworthy we are, we have been justified freely by His grace. His work is finished and complete and we cannot do anything to make His work more effective. We may not 'feel saved' but we must not add our feelings to the finished work of Christ. The debt that was ours has been paid in full, so that all that is left for us to do is to "Rejoice in the Lord".

Our debt was in respect of sins that we have committed. But sins are the fruit of the root cause of our sins. The root cause is sin itself. Eph. ii. 2 refers to the sons of disobedience, and that disobedience took place in the garden of Eden. The death and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ cancel both sin (arising from the disobedience of Adam) and our own individual sins. Paul writes:

> "For since by man came death, > by man came also the resurrection of the dead.
> For as in Adam all die, > even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (I Cor. xv. 21, 22).

In writing to the Romans (see chapter v.) Paul states that by one man sin entered into the world, and sin brought death, so death passed upon all men, for all have sinned. He argues that as by the offence of one, all are condemned; by the righteousness of one comes justification of life to all who are believers in Christ.

Paul goes further in showing that we are identified with Christ in His death and resurrection. If we study the epistle to the Ephesians, we read that we have been quickened together with Christ, we have been raised up together, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus (Eph. ii. 5, 6). We quote a few verses also from Romans vi.:

> "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into His death? Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection: knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin" (Rom. vi. 3-7).

If we continue to read this chapter, we come across the sentence, "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin", and we might pause to consider the word "reckon". It is the translation of the Greek logizomai which is translated in various ways, such as impute, reckon, count, (see The Berean Expositor, Vol. LI, p.201). For example, Rom. iv. 3 states that Abraham believed God and it was counted unto him for righteousness. Rom. iv. 8 quotes Psa. xxxii. "Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin". After writing about Abraham, Paul says:

> "Now it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him; but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on Him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead; Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification" (Rom. iv. 23-25).

Thus, as Abraham believed God and it was counted for righteousness, so our faith can be counted for righteousness. We reckon that we died with Christ and are dead unto sin (Rom. vi. 11). We enjoy a new life in Christ. The flesh (or the old man or old nature) is counted as dead, and we live in the Spirit, or put on the new man, or enjoy a new nature.

But while we believe we have been completely changed, we are conscious that we sometimes exhibit characteristics of the flesh or old nature. Paul admits that the flesh and the spirit are contrary to each other, as we find in Rom. vii. 14-25. For example he writes:

> "For I know that in en (that is, in my flesh), dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me: but how to perform that which is good I find not. For the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do" (Rom. vii. 18, 19).

Paul exclaims "O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" He replies, "I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord" (24, 25).

So we read in Rom. viii., about life in the Spirit. As a result of the life and sacrifice of our Lord, we are free from the law of sin and death. If we mind the things of the Spirit, we are spiritually minded and have life and peace. We are "in Christ", but Romans viii. 10, 11 speaks of Christ being in me, and His Spirit dwelling in me. Above all, in Rom. viii. 35-39 Paul confirms that nothing can separate us from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus.

Thus he ends with a note of confidence. Having admitted the conflict between the flesh and the spirit, which continues while we are in this present body, we are assured that in the sight of God, the flesh is dead and we share the resurrection life with Christ.

Our standing in Christ is therefore secure. Our feelings must be ignored for the work of Christ is complete. We are saved by grace through faith and our salvation is the gift of God (Eph. ii. 8). And should we be worried about material things we should see what Paul writes in Phil. iv. 10-14. May we say with Paul, "I can do all things through Christ Who enables me".

May our faith be strong and let us thank God for our full and free salvation. May we be strengthened so that we enjoy life in the spirit, being led by the Spirit of God day by day (Rom. viii. 14).

Prison Experiences

No.2. Joseph and his brethren.
pp. 95 - 99

"So now it was not you that sent me hither, but God …" (Gen. xlv. 8).

Israel sent Joseph to his brethren to find out if all was well with them, but as he approached them they plotted against him, and discussed how they might get rid of him. Reuben spoke up for Joseph and suggested that instead of killing him, they should put him in a pit close by, thinking that later he could rescue Joseph. But Reuben's plan was thwarted as the brothers soon saw some traders coming. Judah proposed selling Joseph for twenty pieces of silver, and the deal was made. Thus Joseph was on his way to Egypt.

This reminds us that when Jesus was a child, He took refuge in Egypt when His life was in danger. Also Christ was sold for thirty pieces of silver. Charles Welch points out that Judah, when translated into Greek, becomes Judas, and so there is another similarity in the story.

Joseph was sold to Potiphar, who was an officer of Pharaoh and a captain of the guard. We read that the Lord was with Joseph (Gen. xxxix. 2) and he was a prosperous man. An old translation of this reference reads "The Lord was with Joseph and he was a luckie fellow". He became an overseer in the house of Potiphar and was in complete control of all his possessions, both in the house and outside, in the fields or grounds. But the wife of Potiphar eyed Joseph and tried to tempt him. Although Joseph showed he did not wish to comply with the wishes of Potiphar's wife, she continued to try to engage him and one day, while trying to entice him, she held on to his garment. Joseph immediately ran away but the wife held on to his garment. Then she called the servants and said that Joseph had assaulted her. When Potiphar returned to the house, she again accused Joseph and of course, Potiphar was very angry. Joseph was sent to prison where the king's prisoners were bound. But once more we read "The Lord was with Joseph and showed him mercy" (Gen. xxxix. 21). The keeper of the prison viewed Joseph with favour and gave him authority over the other prisoners and we read:

> "The keeper of the prison looked not to any thing that was under his hand; because the Lord was with him, and that which he did, the Lord made it to prosper."

But Joseph was being punished for a sin which he did not commit.

One of the malefactors, who was crucified with Christ said:

> "Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds; but this Man hath done nothing amiss" (Luke xxiii. 40, 41).

And to complete the malefactor's statement, let us quote a verse from Isaiah:

> "But He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes, we are healed" (liii. 5).

The next event, recorded in Gen. xl., is that Pharaoh was angry with his butler and his baker. They were placed in prison with Joseph and were in his charge. Both had dreams but neither of them could interpret them. The butler told the details to Joseph and he explained the meaning, that in three days, he would be restored to his previous employment. This good news cheered the baker who then plucked up courage to tell Joseph about his dream. The interpretation was not favourable in his case, for in three days, the baker would be hanged. Joseph asked the butler to remember him when he saw Pharaoh and he hoped that he too might secure his release. However, the butler did not remember Joseph, but forgat him (Gen. xl. 23). The figure of three in this part of the story reminds us that Christ was three days and three nights in the grave.

We read that at the end of "two full years" (Gen. xli. 1) Pharaoh also had dreams, which he related to his magicians. They were unable to interpret them. The chief butler remembered how he had dreamed while in prison and how Joseph had given the interpretation. He said to Pharaoh, "I do remember my faults this day" and he told Pharaoh his story and how Joseph knew the meaning of his dream. So Pharaoh gave the order for Joseph to be released, and be brought to him. Joseph was hurried out of prison, given a change of clothes (and a shave), and brought to Pharaoh. Then Pharaoh told Joseph about his two dreams, the first being about seven fat kine which were eaten by seven lean kine, and the second, about seven full ears of corn which were eaten by seven thin ears of corn.

Joseph explained that there were to be seven years of plenty followed by seven years of famine and he continued to advice Pharaoh of the steps he should take to store food in the years of plenty, so that provision could be made for the famine which was sure to follow. Pharaoh immediately said that Joseph was the man to organize the storing of the corn and he gave Joseph a high position and authority to undertake his new duties. He was second only to Pharaoh and only in the throne was Pharaoh greater than Joseph. So Joseph rode in the second chariot and as he went, there was a cry before him, "Bow the knee".

We read that Pharaoh gave Joseph a new name, Zaph-nath-pa-a-ne-ah and then in Gen. xli. 46, we are informed that Joseph was thirty years old when he stood before Pharaoh.

Luke iii. 23 gives the age of our Lord at the beginning of His earthly ministry as "about thirty years". One of His titles as given in John vi. 48 is the "bread of life". Joseph's new name means "the abundance of life". He had been sent by God to preserve life. Thus, Joseph began his ministry of supplying the bread of life (natural food) when he was thirty years old, and Jesus Christ began His ministry of supplying the spiritual food, the true bread of life, when He was about thirty years old. The record that Joseph went about in his chariot as the cry went before him "Bow the knee" reminds us of Philippians ii. 10 which read "That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth".

At the end of seven years of plenty, Joseph had stored huge quantities of corn, so much that it became impossible to keep a record of the stock that had been accumulated. Then came the famine and Joseph opened the storehouses and began to feed the people. At first the people paid in cash, but as money ran out, they paid in cattle, and then Joseph took over land on behalf of Pharaoh.

The famine extended "over all the face of the earth" and so Jacob and his sons began to be in need of corn. Jacob, having heard that there was corn in Egypt, told his sons to go there to buy for their urgent needs. In Gen. xlii. 6 we read that "Joseph's brethren came, and bowed down themselves before him with their faces to the earth". So Joseph's dreams came true. Joseph recognized his brothers but they did not realize that the governor was Joseph.

The whole story of Joseph, his treatment of his brothers and the way he tested them is contained in three chapters. It would spoil the narrative to attempt to recount it very briefly. It is evident that the brothers were uneasy in Joseph's presence and they discussed their position in their own language, not realizing Joseph could hear and understand what they were saying. For example, in Gen. xlii. 21, the brothers were saying to each other, "We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us". This was exactly what Joseph wanted to hear. He wanted them to repent of their evil deeds (see also Acts iii. 19 where there is the plea by Peter for the repentance of Israel so that Jesus Christ could return).

So after testing his brothers, the time came when Joseph could no longer contain himself. He dismissed all the servants so that he could be alone with his brothers. Then he made himself known to them. What a shock for the guilty brothers! But Joseph hastened to reassure them. Let us read Gen. xlv. 3-8:

> "And Joseph said unto his brethren, 'I am Joseph; doth my father yet live?'. And his brethren could not answer him; for they were troubled at his presence. And Joseph said unto his brethren, 'Come near to me, I pray you'. And they came near. And he said 'I am Joseph your brother, whom you sold into Egypt. Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither: for God did sent me before you to preserve life. For these two years hath the famine been in the land: and yet there are five years, in which there shall neither be earing nor harvest. And God sent me before you to preserve you as a posterity in the earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance. So now it was not you that sent me hither, but God: and He hath made me a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house, and a ruler throughout all the land of Egypt'."

Joseph was put into prison for a charge of which he was innocent. The Lord was with him in every experience, both when he was in prison and later, when he was released to appear before Pharaoh and interpret his dreams. The prison experience was a link in the chain of events, leading to his being the one who provided food in the days of famine. "It was not you that sent me here", said Joseph, "but God".

What appeared to be a time of hatred and of trial, was in fact the beginning of a plan for the salvation of the whole family.

Joseph was a type of Christ and the brethren represented the nation, or children, of Israel. Joseph was rejected by his brothers who said "Shall thou indeed reign over us?" (Gen. xxxvii. 8). They hated him without a just cause. He was cast into a pit. He was sold for twenty pieces of silver. For two whole years the children of Israel were separated from Joseph, but then his brothers repented and Joseph manifested himself to them.

Christ was hated without a cause. He was betrayed and sold for thirty pieces of silver. The children of Israel rejected Christ and would not repent, and so Israel were set aside for a period which may be represented by the two years, which could be the picture of 2,000 years. But Christ, we know, will one day appear and be made manifest. "They shall look on Me Whom they have pierced" (Zech. xii. 10).

No.3. Samson and the Philistines.
pp. 105 - 110

"The Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart" (I Sam. xvi. 7).

In our second article, we have seen that Joseph had been accused of a wrong that he had not committed, and so was sent to prison. At the end of the story, we saw that God was in charge, and it was God Who ordered the events so that Joseph could be the means of saving life.

As we consider people who had prison experiences, it is remarkable that many suffered for their faith, or for the truth. We would expect a large proportion would have been sent to prison as a punishment for wrongdoing, but the references in the Scriptures concern chiefly those who were given a task to do, or a message to deliver, which needed courage and for which the prophet had to suffer.

SAMSON. We read the story of Samson in Judges xiii.-xvi. He judge Israel for twenty years (xvi. 31), so it is clear that in these four chapters only the most important events have been recorded.

The children of Israel "did evil in the sight of the Lord", so the Lord delivered Israel into the hand of the Philistines for a period of forty years.

There was a man of the family of the Danites, whose name was Manoah, and his wife was barren. The Angel of the Lord appeared to his wife, and told her that she should have a son. She was instructed to drink no wine nor strong drink, for her son was to be a Nazarite from the very first day of his life. No razor was to be used on his head, and his God-given task was "to begin to deliver Israel out of the hand of the Philistines" (xiii. 5).

The Angel of the Lord appeared a second time and confirmed to Manoah that his wife should indeed have a son, and he repeated the instructions given to his wife. Manaoh wanted to entertain the angel, thinking the angel was a man. The Angel refused to eat the meal that Manoah prepared but the Angel said it would be acceptable if the meal were offered as a burnt offering to the Lord. As Manoah carried out the wish of the Angel, the flames ascended from the altar and then the Angel ascended to heaven in the flame. So Manoah and his wife knew that the messenger was not a man, but an Angel of the Lord.

In the following chapters we read of the exploits of Samson and there are numerous examples of his great strength. He was so strong that he slaughtered many Philistines.

The cause of Samson's downfall was his love of Philistine women. In chapter xiv., we read that Samson went to Timnath and fell in love with one of the daughters of the Philistines. He returned to his father and mother and asked them to arrange a marriage with the woman. His parents rebuked him saying "Is there never a woman among the daughters of thy brethren, or among all my people, that thou goest to take a wife of the uncircumcised Philistines?" (xiv. 3). But Samson insisted and he had his own way.

At the marriage feast, Samson asked a riddle, "Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness". He gave seven days for the answer, but after three days no one had any idea of the solution. The thirty companions threatened the bride that if she did not tell them the answer, they would burn her and her father's house with fire. She wept before Samson until he revealed the secret. After killing thirty men to secure thirty changes of garments to satisfy his debt, he returned to his father's house in a fury.

Because Samson had left his wife, the bride's father gave her to a friend of Samson. So when Samson returned and announced his intention of being with his wife, her father would not allow him to see her. This annoyed Samson so much that he set fire to the cornfields, vineyards and olives which belonged to the Philistines. In their turn, the Philistines were angry and burnt the wife and her father. Samson said "Though ye have done this, yet will I be avenged of you, and after that I will cease" (xv. 7). So Samson slaughtered a great number of Philistines.

Then the Philistines came to the men of Judah and called for Samson. At that time, Samson had gone to Etam. Three thousand men of Judah went to the top of the rock Etam and told Samson that they had come to bind him and deliver him to the Philistines. Samson agreed that they could bind him on one condition, that they would not attack him when he was bound. The men of Judah agreed not to harm Samson when he was bound.

Samson was bound with new cords and taken to Lehi, where the Philistines were waiting. But the Spirit of the Lord "came mightily on Samson and the cords became soft and melted. In this way Samson was freed. He picked up the jawbone of an ass and slew a thousand Philistines. So the story of Samson continues, but we cannot repeat all the details. We pass to the last stage that is recorded in the book of Judges.

Samson fell in love with a Philistine woman named Delilah, and as might be expected the Philistines kept in close touch with her with the object of capturing Samson. They offered her money if she would betray him.

The lords of the Philistines told Delilah to find out what the secret of his enormous strength was. The full details are given in Judges xvi.

Samson told Delilah that if he was bound with green withs (or fresh bowstrings), he would be as weak as any other man. But when the Philistines brought the bowstrings and Samson was bound with them, when Delilah called "The Philistines be upon thee", Samson broke free and so his strength was not known.

Then Samson said that new ropes would make him weak, but they did not prevent him from breaking free.

A third trial was made by weaving his seven locks of hair and securing it with a pin. He was asleep, but at the usual call that the Philistines were upon him, Samson broke free and walked away with the pin of the beam still in his hair.

Delilah kept worrying Samson and declared that he really did not love her, as each time the secret was not revealed. Finally Samson, weary of her continual questioning, told Delilah that he was a Nazarite and that it was a condition that no razor should come upon his head. If his hair was cut and his head shaven, he would then be like any other man. So Delilah made Samson go to sleep on her knees, so that a man could come and shave him. Then once more she called the Philistines, and Samson not realizing what had happened, awoke and shook himself as at other times, but his strength was gone. The Lord had departed from him. He was as weak as any other man.

So the Philistines captured him, put out his eyes so that Samson became blind, put him in prison, bound him with fetters of brass, and there he ground corn.

But his hair began to grow again.

The lord of the Philistines decided to offer a great sacrifice to their god Dagon, who, they believed, had delivered Samson into their hands. So a great number of men and women, including the lords of the Philistines, gathered together in a large house. The immense size of the house is indicated by the statement that there were upon the roof about three thousand men and women (xvi. 27). As the people made merry, they called for Samson so that he could amuse them. Samson was brought out of prison to please the people, and as he stood before them he said to the boy who was leading him, "Suffer me that I may feel the pillars whereupon the house standeth, that I may lean upon them".

Then Samson called upon the Lord:

> "O Lord God, remember me, I pray Thee, and strengthen me, I pray Thee, only this once, O God, that I may be at once avenged of the Philistines for my two eyes", and Samson took hold of the two pillars which supported the house, and he prayed:

> "Let me die with the Philistines."

He bowed himself with all his might and the house fell upon the lords of the Philistines and on all the people, so that in his death he slew more people than he had killed in the whole of his life.

When Samson was born, the Angel said that he would "begin to deliver Israel out of the hand of the Philistines". This objective was to a great extent achieved, but Samson was betrayed by the woman he loved and so became blind and was placed in prison. He did not obey his father and mother who advised him to marry one of the daughters of his own race. Instead, he sought one who was a daughter of the Philistines; the enemy against which he had been called to fight.

Then he loved Delilah and possibly Delilah loved Samson, but she was bound to be on the side of the Philistines, and consequently she could not be faithful to Samson when the future of the Philistines was involved. It was therefore natural that Delilah should support her own nation, and when a large sum of money was offered as a bribe, she could hardly refuse. As a Nazarite, no razor should have been used to shave Samson's head, though it must be admitted that he was asleep when this took place. Samson loved Delilah and trusted her.

In reading the story, we may be surprised to find that Samson trusted her after she had made three attempts to betray him. But he had full confidence in his strength and did not contemplate the possibility of his hair being cut off. Samson was betrayed, and we may remember the words of the apostle Paul in II Cor. vi. 14, 15 when he told the Corinthians not to be unequally yoked together with unbelievers.

We are told very little of Samson's life in prison. As he ground the corn he had plenty of time to reflect on his condition, and the circumstances which had brought him to his present state. He may have thought about the advice he had received from his parents, and the risks he had taken in becoming involved with women associated with the enemy.

We may criticize Samson and regard his betrayal as evidence that he was a failure, or at least, a partial failure,

> "But the Lord seeth not as man seeth."

There is another point of view expressed in the epistle to the Hebrews:

> "And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthae; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets; who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens" (Heb. xi. 32-34).

So Samson is listed among those who lived a life of faith. No mention is made of his shortcomings. He was "to begin to deliver Israel from the hand of the Philistines". And he did make such a beginning.

No.4. Micaiah. Hoshea. Hanani.
pp. 137 - 140

"What the Lord saith unto me, that will I speak" (I Kings xxii. 14).

MICAIAH. After the death of Naboth, Elijah proclaimed God's judgment upon king Ahab, who then repented, rent his clothes, and put on sackcloth. Because Ahab humbled himself before the Lord, the evil which God had determined was postponed until the next generation.

In I Kings xxii. 1 we read that for three years there was no war between Syria and Israel. The king of Judah was Jehoshaphat, and he came down to the king of Israel. The two kings discussed the situation with Syria. The king of Israel pointed out that Ramothgilead ought to be held by Israel, but they had never gone in to possess it. So the king of Israel asked the king of Judah if he would join with him in battle against Syria.

Jehoshaphat was 35 years old when he began to reign and he reigned 25 years in Jerusalem. He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, although he did not halt the sacrifices offered in the high places. But clearly, Jehoshaphat did not want to do anything or engage in any enterprise unless he was assured of the blessing of the Lord.

So Jehoshaphat said to the king of Israel "Enquire, I pray you, at the word of the Lord today" (xxii. 5). The king of Israel gathered his prophets together, 400 of them, and asked them whether he should go up to Ramothgilead to battle, or not. All the prophets said "Go up: for the Lord shall deliver it into the hand of the king".

Jehoshaphat was not convinced, for he knew that the prophets were not prophets of the Lord. So he said "Is there not here a prophet of the Lord besides, that we might inquire of him?" The king of Israel said that there was yet one man, Micaiah, the son of Imlah, by whom they might inquire of the Lord, "but I hate him for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil".

Now the two kings, wearing their robes, each sat on their respective thrones, and listened to the 400 prophets as they prophesied. The messenger who fetched Micaiah told him that the 400 prophets were saying, "Go up and prosper, for the Lord will deliver it into the king's hand". And the messenger urged Micaiah to say the same words as the 400 prophets. But Micaiah said "As the Lord liveth, what the Lord saith unto me, that will I speak".

When they arrived at the place where the two kings were seated, Micaiah was asked whether they should attack Ramothgilead or not. Micaiah repeated what the 400 prophets had said; "Go up and prosper, for the Lord shall deliver it into the hand of the king". The king realized that Micaiah was just repeating what the 400 prophets said, so he replied "How many times must I adjure you to tell me nothing but that which is true in the name of the Lord?".

So Micaiah began to tell the king of Israel the truth, how he saw Israel scattered upon the hill. "These have no master; let them return every man to his house in peace" (17). This was a prophecy of the death of Ahab, for he would be killed, and there would be a proclamation "Every man to his city and every man to his own country" (36).

The king of Israel said to the king of Judah, "Did I not say that he would prophesy no good concerning me, but evil?" But Micaiah continued his declaration to the king of Israel. We will quote from the A.V.:

> "And he said, Hear thou therefore the word of the Lord: I saw the Lord sitting on His throne, and all the host of heaven standing by Him on His right hand and on His left. And the Lord said, Who shall persuade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramothgilead? And one said on this manner, and another said on that manner. And there came forth a spirit, and stood before the Lord, and said, I will persuade him. And the Lord said unto him, Wherewith? And he said, I will go forth, and I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And He said, Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also: go forth, and do so. Now therefore, behold, the Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets, and the Lord hath spoken evil concerning thee" (19-23).

The king of Israel ignored all the advice which Micaiah gave him, and he gave instructions that Micaiah should be carried back to Amon the governor of the city, and to Joash the king's son. Micaiah was to be put in prison, fed with bread of affliction and water of affliction, until Ahab returned in peace. But Micaiah answered the king: "If thou return at all in peace, the Lord hath not spoken by me. Hearken, O people, every one of you".

So Micaiah was put in prison for telling the truth, and faithfully delivering the message of the Lord. The prophecy of the 400 lying prophets was accepted, and the one true prophet was rejected. The full account of the battle is given in I Kings xxii., which records how Ahab died, and how the word of the Lord was fulfilled.

HOSHEA. We read of Hoshea being involved in a conspiracy in II Kings xv. 30. The king of Assyria fought against the king of Israel and took a number of cities, and all the land of Naphtali. Hoshea (the son of Elah) made a conspiracy against Pekah (king of Israel), and killed him. He then reigned in his stead.

When we come to II King xvii. 1, we are told that in the 12th year of Ahaz, king of Judah, Hoshea the son of Elah began to reign in Samaria over Israel. His reign lasted only 9 years. He did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord; however it is added "but not as the kings of Israel that were before him". Young's Concordance contains a note about Hoshea. It says "The nineteenth, last, and best king of Israel".

The king of Assyria fought against Israel again, and Hoshea was subdued and became a servant to the king of Assyria. He had to render tribute to him and it seems that Hoshea was responsible for the collection of tribute from the king of Egypt; he sent messengers to Egypt for this purpose. Once more Hoshea was involved in a conspiracy. Messengers were sent to Egypt but no tribute reached the king of Assyria. When the king of Assyria realized that Hoshea had been dishonest, he caused Hoshea to be bound and confined to prison (xvii. 4).

Then the king of Assyria besieged the land and took Samaria. The people of Israel were carried away in captivity to Assyria and placed in Halah and in Habor by the river Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes. So, because the children of Israel had sinned against the Lord and served other gods, the judgment of the Lord fell upon them and they began a period of captivity.

Hoshea's prison experience was a punishment for his conspiracy and dishonesty, but it was the worshipping of idols and Israel's turning away from the One and True God that was the cause of their going into captivity.

HANANI The Seer. The king of Judah enjoyed a period of peace, and we read in II Chron. xv. 17 that although the high places were not taken away (where idolatry was practiced), the heart of Asa (king of Judah) was "perfect all his days".

Then, we read in II Chron. xvi. 1 that Baasha, king of Israel, began to invade, and to build Ramah, with the object of blocking any communication with Asa, king of Judah. So Asa sent a present to Benhadad, king of Syria, who was at Damascus, invoking an agreement for mutual aid, and asked him to break his league with the king of Israel. Benhadad agreed, and sent his troops against the cities of Israel, and in consequence Baasha discontinued the work of building at the town of Ramah.

Then Hanani, the seer, came to see Asa, king of Judah, with the word of the Lord. Let us read from II Chron. xvi. 7-9:

> "Because thou hast relied on the king of Syria, and not relied on the Lord thy God, therefore is the host of the king of Syria escaped out of thine hand. Were not the Ethiopians and the Lubims a huge host, with very many chariots and horsemen? Yet, because thou didst rely on the Lord, He delivered them into thine hand. For the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to shew Himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward Him. Herein thou hast done foolishly: therefore from henceforth thou shalt have wars."

These words caused Asa to be very angry, so much so that he sent Hanani to prison. His rage extended to others as Asa oppressed a number of the people.

So Hanani is another prophet who suffered for declaring the word of the Lord faithfully. He needed much courage to convey such an unpopular message, and to declare God's judgment to Asa. To tell Asa that he was foolish in that he did not rely on the Lord his God, and would suffer in consequence, was a disagreeable task for the prophet Hanani.

He was faithful in his ministry, and he told the truth. But he suffered for it.

No.5. God's servants imprisoned for speaking the truth.
pp. 193 - 197

The Offence of the Truth. In writing to Timothy, Paul refers to those who "resist the truth" (II Tim. iii. 8) and to those who "turn away their ears from the truth" (iv. 4). When we read John vi. 59-66, we observe that some of the doctrines proclaimed by our Lord were described by many disciples as "hard" and could not be understood. Jesus Christ then asked them, "Doth this offend you?". The result was that many of His disciples "went back and walked no more with Him".

A study of prison experiences and the study of those where offended by the truth shows that the two subjects are linked, so far this article we turn aside to look at the offence of the truth. When studying the experience of Micaiah, the writer turned to The Companion Bible, and in looking at I Kings xxii. 27 where we read "Put this fellow in the prison …" a note was found which read, "One of the eleven rulers offended with God's servants, for speaking the truth".

> "But the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart and he would not let them go" (Exod. x. 27).

On referring to Exod. x. 28, there was a note which gave a list of the eleven rulers (or kings) who were offended by the truth. Some went to prison as a result of their faithfulness, but others did not suffer in the same way. But all knew what it was to be rejected because of their faithfulness to the truth. We will list the eleven scriptures and will only make brief comments.

Exodus x. 28. Moses pleaded with Pharaoh for the release of the children of Israel, but in spite of the many plagues Pharaoh would not let them go. Before the last plague Moses saw Pharaoh, and in the end his heart was again hardened and he refused to let the people go. He told Moses to depart and not return, for otherwise he would be killed. Moses agreed with Pharaoh, "I will see thy face no more". So Pharaoh rejected the word of the Lord and he also rejected Moses.

Numbers xxiv. 11. Balak was king of the Moabites. He had heard of the defeat of the Amorites and that Israel had taken over their land. Also that Og, king of Bashan, was defeated and killed. When the children of Israel moved forward and pitched in the plains of Moab, Balak was terrified, and he decided to approach Balaam for help. He was requested to curse Israel, so that in battle Moab could defeat them. We read that "the elders of Moab departed with the rewards of divination in their hand" (Numb. xxii. 7). God told Balaam not to go with these messengers, neither should he curse Israel for God had blessed them. Balaam did go with the men, and many efforts were made to persuade Balaam to curse Israel. There is also the story of the donkey who spoke to Balaam, see Numb. xxii.-xxiv. In trying to persuade Balaam, Balak said, "Let nothing, I pray thee, hinder thee from coming unto me: for I will promote thee unto very great honour …". Each time Balaam was asked to curse the people, he blessed them, and in the end Balak lost patience with Balaam. Balak said "I called thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast altogether blessed them these three times. Therefore now flee thou to thy place: I thought to promote thee unto great honour; but, lo, the Lord hath kept thee back from honour". So, although Balaam took some risks in not obeying the Lord—he did go with the messengers—Balaam did maintain a true witness in blessing Israel. So he and his message were rejected by Balak, and he did not receive the promised honour from Balak.

I Kings xiii. 4. Jeroboam, king of Israel, made two golden calves and set one of them up in Bethel. He ordained a feast and made offerings on the altar and burnt incense. A man of God came from Judah to Bethel and cried against the altar. He said that the priests of the high places would be offered on that altar. As a sign that this would happen, he said the altar would be rent and the ashes poured out. Jeroboam heard what the man of God had said and held up his hand against the man, crying "Lay hold on him". His hand dried up and he could not move it. Then the altar was rent and the ashes poured out. Afterwards, Jeroboam asked the man of God to intreat the Lord for him that his hand be restored, and the king's hand was restored. The king offered a reward which the man of God refused.

Jeroboam at first did not believe the word of the Lord and was going to punish God's servant; but the judgment of God, in causing his hand to wither, preserved the man of God. Nevertheless, the first reaction was the rejection of the word of God and the man of God.

I Kings xxii. 27. As we have already considered the experience of Micaiah, we will only quote the verse that is listed in The Companion Bible:

> "Put this fellow in the prison, and feed him with bread of affliction and with water of affliction, until I come in peace."

Thus king Ahab did not believe the prophet and thought he would return safely. He rejected the word of God and also the prophet Micaiah.

II Kings v. 12. Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, was a great man and a mighty man, but he was a leper. The Syrians had taken captives from the hand of Israel including a little girl. As a result of her testimony, Naaman went to Elisha hoping that he would cure him of his leprosy. We quote:

> "And Elisha sent a messenger unto him saying, Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean. But Naaman was wroth, and went away, and said, Behold, I thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the Lord his God, and strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper. Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in rage" (II Kings v. 10-12).

His servants came to him and persuaded him to obey the prophet, so Naaman dipped himself seven times in Jordan and was cleansed. There was an initial rejection of the word of God spoken through the prophet and Naaman turned from Elisha in a rage, thus rejecting Elisha. The whole narrative, including the judgment of leprosy that fell on Elisha's servant Gehazi, is recorded in II Kings v. 1-27.

II Chronicles xvi. 10. We have already given a brief account of Hanani the seer. The king of Judah feared Israel and asked Syria for support. Hanani told Asa, king of Judah, that he had been foolish and in future he would have wars. II Chron. xvi. 10 reads:

> "Then Asa was wroth with the seer, and put him in a prison house; for he was in a rage with him because of this thing. And Asa oppressed some of the people the same time."

Again, the word of God, and his prophet were both rejected, and the prophet put in prison.

II Chronicles xxiv. 21. Joash was 7 years old when he began to reign and he reigned 40 years in Jerusalem. He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord while Jehoiada was priest. A collection was made and the temple repaired. Jehoiada died aged 130 years.

The princes of Judah then came to Joash, king of Israel, and persuaded him to leave the house of the Lord God of their fathers and to turn to idols. God was angry with Judah and Jerusalem and He sent prophets, but they refused to listen.

> "And the Spirit of God came upon Zechariah the son of Jehoiada the priest, which stood above the people, and said unto them, Thus saith God, Why transgress ye the commandments of the Lord, that ye cannot prosper? because ye have forsaken the Lord, He hath also forsaken you. And they conspired against him, and stoned him with stones at the commandment of the king in the court of the house of the Lord" (xxiv. 20, 21).

II Chronicles xxvi. 19. Uzziah was 16 years old when he began to reign and he reigned 52 years in Jerusalem. He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord. He was very successful and "God helped him against the Philistines". A long list of his achievements is given in chapter xvi., but he became proud and transgressed against the Lord by going into the temple to burn incense. Azariah, the priest, followed Uzziah into the temple accompanied by 80 other priests of the Lord, and they withstood the king, saying that incense must only be offered by priests who were the sons of Aaron. The king had trespassed. Uzziah was wroth and he held a censer in his hand to burn incense, but as the king opposed the priests and was angry, leprosy rose up in his forehead. The priests thrust him out of the temple, but when the king realized he was a leper he also himself hastened to leave the temple.

Jeremiah xxvi. 21. Urijah was a prophet who prophesied against Jerusalem and against the land of Israel in agreement with all the words of Jeremiah. When the king heard what he had prophesied he sought to kill him. So Urijah fled to Egypt. The king sent men to Egypt who brought Urijah back to the king, and he slew him with the sword.

Jeremiah xxxii. 3. The king of Babylon sent his army to besiege the city of Jerusalem and Jeremiah the prophet was shut up in the court of the prison, which was in the house of the king of Judah. The prophet was shut up because he had said that the Lord would give the city to the king of Babylon.

Matthew xiv. 3. John the Baptist had told Herod that it was not lawful for him to marry Herodias, so Herod put John in prison. He would have put him to death, but he feared the people. John was executed later as Herod had promised the daughter of Herodias a reward for her dancing according to her wish. She consulted her mother and asked for the head of John the Baptist. The faithful witness of John the Baptist was rejected, as was John himself.

So in all eleven cases we find a similar feature, that the word of God delivered by His faithful servants was rejected, often in anger, and the prophet himself suffered rejection, and sometimes prison, or even death.

Random Thoughts

No.2. Christ the Wisdom of God.
pp. 15 - 17

"… in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God …" (I Cor. i. 21).

The word 'wisdom' (Gk. sophia) occurs 51 times in the N.T. Dr. E. W. Bullinger in his book Number in Scripture writes that 51 is the number of Divine Revelation. We observe that 51 = 3 X 17, and Dr. Bullinger says that the number 3 "stands for that which is solid, real, substantial, complete and entire". He points out that 17 is a significant number, being the sum of two perfect numbers 7 and 10, which are indicative of spiritual and ordinal perfection respectively. He therefore states that 17 is the number of "the perfection of spiritual order".

One third of the occurrences of sophia (i.e. 17) are found in the first epistle to the Corinthians. On two occasions Paul refers to the wisdom of God. For example, he writes:

> "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory: which none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory" (I Cor. ii. 7, 8).

There are two references to the Lord Jesus Christ as the "wisdom of God", and because of our union with Christ we enjoy the privileges which He confers on us. These two references are:

> "But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God" (I Cor. i. 23, 24).
>
> "… that no flesh should glory in His presence. But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, Who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption: that, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord" (i. 29-31).

The majority of the 17 references tend to be negative, referring to the wisdom of this world, the words of men's wisdom, or the wisdom of words, etc. Space does not permit us to quote them all, but we give a selection which shows how misleading our own wisdom may be.

> "For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect.
>
> For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God.
>
> For it is written, 'I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent'. Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?
>
> For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe" (I Cor. i. 17-21).

The wisdom of this world does not lead us to Christ; it is a remarkable statement that, in the wisdom of God, we do not come to a knowledge of Him through our own wisdom; but God in His grace blesses the preaching of His Word to those who believe the good news, and are saved.

When the apostle Paul came to Corinth he did not display his own wisdom, neither did he try to impress them by his style of speech. This is what he wrote:

> "And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God.
> And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God" (I Cor. ii. 1, 4-5).

Paul's comment that "your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God" is worthy of consideration and meditation. To become a Christian, no certificates of education or university degrees are required. An uneducated person can hear and believe the gospel. The exercise of simple faith does not depend on earthly wisdom. The Holy Spirit enlightens the mind and shows the need of a Saviour, and the power of God is at work when the gospel message is received. As we come to a realization that the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God (I Cor. iii. 19), we long for true wisdom. Our need then is Christ, the power of God and the wisdom of God.

There are two sides in this transaction: the part we play, and the part taken by God. The Lord asks us to believe and accept the gift of life through His Name. On the other hand, we would not be inclined to think about the gospel message unless the Holy Spirit revealed the truth to us. Paul says that "no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost" (I Cor. xii. 3).

When our Lord was on this earth, He began to "upbraid the cities wherein most of His mighty works were done, because they repented not" (Matt. xi. 20). After mentioning several cities including Tyre, Sidon, and Capernaum, which did not repent, He made the following remarkable statement:

> "At that time Jesus answered and said, I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in Thy sight" (Matt. xi. 25, 26).

In Paul's second letter to Timothy, he warns against striving about words to no profit, and against profane and vain babbling. Some had caused confusion by saying that the resurrection had already taken place. Paul then shows the two sides of truth:

> "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal:
> 'The Lord knoweth them that are His' and
> 'Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity'."
> (II Tim. ii. 19).

James wrote, “If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, That giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering” (James i. 5, 6).

When Paul prayed for the Ephesians, he desired that they might have the spirit of wisdom and revelation, so that the eyes of their understanding might be enlightened. So let us close by joining with Paul in his prayer:

> “That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him: the eyes of your understanding being enlightened (‘having been enlightened’—see Charles Welch’s In Heavenly Places, p.156); that you may know what is the hope of His calling, and what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of His power to usward who believe, according to the working of His mighty power, which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at His own right hand in the heavenly places” (Eph. i. 17-20).

No.3. Be renewed in the spirit of your mind.
pp. 31 - 33

> “be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind” (Rom. xii. 2).

When Paul wrote to the Colossians, he said “Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom” (Col. iii. 16). This is excellent advice, for if our minds are concentrated on heavenly things, and if we commune with our heavenly Father and the Lord Jesus Christ, surely this must affect our daily life. Our thoughts are like seeds which produce actions. Our Lord explained that a good man, out of the good treasure of his heart brings forth good things. The evil man, out of the evil treasure of his heart brings forth evil things (Luke vi. 45). In both Colossians and Ephesians we have references to what we were by nature, and what we are now by the grace of God:

> “And you, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath He reconciled in the body of His flesh through death, to represent you holy and unblameable and unreproveable in His sight” (Col. i. 21, 22).

In chapter ii. of Ephesians, Paul writes that in time past we walked according to the course of this world. He refers to the children of disobedience and describes the old manner of life, the desires of the flesh and of the mind; but through the rich mercy of God and His great love for us, we were quickened with Christ, raised up with Him and made to sit together with Him in the heavenly places.

In Ephesians there are several occurrences of the Greek word dianoia, which is translated “understanding”, although it is more often translated “mind”:

> “… walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind, having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart” (Eph. iv. 17, 18).

So here we have the state of unbelievers whose understanding is darkened, whereas by way of contrast the prayer in chapter i. is for "the eyes of your understanding being enlightened, that ye may know …" (Eph. i. 17, 18).

But the Greek word used more frequently is nous, which is sometimes translated "understanding", but more frequently rendered "mind".

In Eph. iv. 17 we quoted the phrase "the vanity of their mind", and once again we have a contrast as we read:

> "And be renewed in the spirit of your mind" (Eph. iv. 23).

Paul in his epistles does not hesitate to warn against those whose minds are corrupt or defiled. Here are some brief extracts:

> "Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth" (I Tim. vi. 5).
>
> "So do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith" (II Tim. iii. 8).
>
> "But unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure: but even their mind and conscience is defiled" (Titus i. 15).
>
> "Vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind" (Col. ii. 18).
> "God gave them over to a reprobate mind" (Rom. i. 28).

In Rom. vii. 14-25 Paul describes the strife between the flesh and the spirit. He often did things that he did not want to do, and the good things He wished to do, he failed to do. He found a law that when he would do good, evil was present with him (21). He delighted in the law of God after the inward man, but in verse 23 he says that he saw another law in his members, warring against the law of his mind. Later he says, "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin" (25).

In Rom. xii. 2 Paul gives some practical advice. We should not conform to the fashion of this world, but we need to be transformed so that we know what is the will of God. Our desire is to live according to His will. So our minds must be renewed. The whole verse reads thus:

Two other references to understanding (mind, nous) may be mentioned. In Luke.xxiv.45, after the record of the walk to Emmaus, when the risen Christ revealed Himself to the two disciples, we read that the disciples met in a room in Jerusalem and again Christ Jesus appeared. After speaking to them and explaining the Scriptures, He opened their understanding (minds) that they might understand the Scriptures.

The other reference is to the peace of God which passeth understanding:

> "Do not be anxious about anything, but in everything, by prayer and petition, with thanksgiving, present your requests to God. And the peace of God, which transcends all understanding, will guard your hearts and your minds in Christ Jesus" (Phil. iv. 6, 7, N.I.V.).

We have been studying references to the mind, but we find that sometimes in the A.V. the word "understanding" is used. This leads us to think of the understanding as well as the mind. There is a Greek word that occurs seven times in the N.T., and is translated "understanding" six times, and "knowledge" once. So let us conclude our random thoughts by reading four of the references:

"… by revelation He made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words, whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ)" (Eph. iii. 3, 4).

"We also … do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding; that ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing" (Col. i. 9, 10).

"That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ: in Whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" (Col. ii. 2, 3).

"Consider what I say; and the Lord give thee understanding in all things" (II Tim. ii. 7).

Behind these four references is the prayer that the Lord will grant an understanding of His plan and purpose and His will, and that after we have received the revelation of His will we might walk worthy of our vocation. The source of all knowledge and understanding is the Lord in Whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

No.4. Knowledge shall be increased.
pp. 197 - 200

"and knowledge shall be increased" (Dan. xii. 4).

If instead of jotting down some random thoughts on knowledge, we attempt to make a systematic study, we should have to review about 100 passages of Scripture in the O.T. and approximately 40 in the N.T. In these short articles, however, we will be content to choose just a few texts which we hope will provide a little food for thought.

The first time we read of knowledge in the Scriptures is in connection with the garden of Eden. God had planted a garden and in it placed Adam. He caused trees to grow in the garden and a river ran out of it to water the ground. In the midst of the garden was the tree of life, and God also planted a tree called the "tree of knowledge of good and evil". God instructed Adam to dress and keep the garden, and told him he could eat of the fruit of the trees except the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.

When we reach Gen. iii. we find that Adam and Eve did eat of the forbidden fruit: the great disobedience had taken place. Their eyes were opened and they knew both good and evil. This knowledge that they had acquired was a doubtful asset: it brought a new responsibility. Adam and Eve had the power of choice and already they had made one wrong choice. Now that they knew good and evil they had the problem of choosing in future between what was good and what was evil. If evil things were dressed up to look attractive, how easy it would be to make the wrong choice! So man was now in great danger. Already he needed a saviour and redeemer.

In the book of Daniel we read of many visions, and the interpretation that he was able to make of them. When we reach chapter xii., we are reading of the time of the end, and Daniel is told to seal the book with the prophecies until the time of the end. Daniel was told "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased" (xii. 4). In the present days this has become remarkably true. Travel is easier and many indeed travel all over the world with great swiftness. Knowledge also has certainly been increased. There are so many examples of this that comment is unnecessary. One result of this increase in knowledge is that we can manufacture items with a much smaller work force, and so our knowledge produces, or at least contributes to, high unemployment. But we do not seem to have the wisdom to solve the unemployment problem.

The book of Proverbs contains many references to knowledge: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge: but fools despise wisdom and instruction" (Prov. i. 7). The wise man warns his son about sinners and pleads with him not to be enticed by their evil suggestions, "Wisdom crieth without; she uttereth her voice in the streets" (i. 20), but those enticed do not heed the advice given: "How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity? and the scorners delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge?" (22). "Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded" (24). But in chapter ii. the wise man turns to his son with advice if he is willing to receive the words of wisdom. If the ear is inclined to wisdom, and the heart to understanding, then the prayer will be answered and "thou shalt understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God" (ii. 5). Solomon adds:

> "When wisdom entereth into thine heart, and knowledge is pleasant unto thy soul; discretion shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee: to deliver thee from the way of the evil man, from the man that speaketh forward things" (Prov. ii. 10-12).

In Ecclesiastes, the Preacher exclaims "Vanity of vanities; all is vanity". Having had experience of knowledge and wisdom, he arrives at the conclusion that no joy or happiness is obtained by the acquisition of knowledge. Yet, in the end he decided that the people ought to be taught knowledge. Here are the two conclusions:

> "And I gave my heart to know wisdom, and to know madness and folly: I perceived that this also is vexation of spirit. For in much wisdom is much grief: and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow" (Eccles. i. 17, 18).
>
> "Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher; all is vanity. And moreover, because the Preacher was wise, he still taught the people knowledge; yea, he gave good heed and sought out, and set in order many proverbs. The Preacher sought to find out acceptable words: and that which was written was upright, even words of truth" (xii. 8-10).

When we turn to the N.T. we find that about half the references to knowledge are in Paul's letters to the Corinthians. The first comment Paul makes shows that he regarded knowledge as highly desirable, but he was writing about the grace of God given them through Jesus Christ. He thanks God on behalf of the Corinthians for the grace of God which he says:

> "… is given you by Jesus Christ; that in everything ye are enriched by Him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge; even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you" (I Cor. i. 4-6).

In chapter viii. there are five references to knowledge in connection with eating things offered to idols. Some believers did not have the same knowledge as the members of the church at Corinth. In verse 7 he says, "Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge". Paul opens chapter viii. with the remark, referring to things offered to idols, "we know that we all have the knowledge" but he immediately adds the warning, "Knowledge puffeth up, but charity (love) edifieth". This warning is repeated in that wonderful chapter xiii., which we should always bear in mind:

> "And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity (love), I am nothing" (I Cor. xiii. 2).
> "Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away" (xiii. 8).

We should remember that it is the knowledge of the Lord that is vital, for if we get to know Him our whole personality is affected. Paul described this as a "sweet savour of Christ":

> "Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savour of His knowledge by us in every place. For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ …" (II Cor. ii. 14, 15).

The apostle Paul told the Corinthians that he did not preach himself, but Christ Jesus the Lord. God, Who caused light to shine out of darkness "hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" (iv. 5, 6). Paul was prepared to count everything he had as loss in order that he might gain the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus. He wanted to "win Christ" and he desired to "know Him" (read Phil. iii. 4-14).

Another statement that is precious is found in Colossians, "In Whom (Christ) are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" (Col. ii. 3).

Finally, we come to the prayer in Eph. iii., where Paul prays that we may be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man, that Christ may dwell in our hearts by faith. Again we have an emphasis on love (charity). May we also be rooted and grounded in love, and comprehend what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and > "to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that we may be filled with all the fullness of God" (see Eph. iii. 16-21).

The Right Time.

"and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" (Esther iv. 14).

pp. 212 - 217

The remarkable story of Mordecai and Esther is told in the book of Esther. King Ahasuerus was displeased with Queen Vashti who has disobeyed him, and after careful consideration a royal commandment was issued, declaring that Vashti was no longer Queen. A search was then made for young and fair virgins from whom the king could select one to be the next queen.

Mordecai was a Jew, being among those who were carried away from Jerusalem by the king of Babylon. Esther was the daughter of Mordecai's uncle but her father and mother were dead, and Mordecai had taken Esther and treated her as his own daughter. She was one of the virgins selected, and eventually was taken into the royal house where she made a favourable impression on the king, and all in the king's house. Esther found favour in the eyes of King Ahasuerus, and in due course the crown was placed on her head and she was declared queen.

In chapter iii. we read about Haman who found favour also in the eyes of the king, and he was advanced to a position above all other princes.

Haman knew that Mordecai was a Jew and no doubt Mordecai knew that Haman was an Agagite. The Agagites were a tribe of the Amalekites and there was enmity between the Agagites and Israel. When the king's servants bowed before Haman and did him reverence, Mordecai did not comply with the formality, no doubt because of the feeling of enmity. When Haman realized the attitude of Mordecai, he began to plot against him, and prepared the way in his conversations with the king. He told the king that there were certain people who obeyed laws different from the laws of the kingdom which Ahasuerus ruled; these people were disobedient, not recognizing his rule and should be destroyed. The king agreed and gave Haman his ring, so that he had authority to pass laws to give effect to his plan that the Jews would be exterminated. Scribes were told to prepare letters setting out the instructions and they were to be circulated among the 127 provinces from India to Ethiopia.

When Mordecai heard of Haman's plan and the order to kill the Jews, he put on sackcloth with ashes and came before the king's gate, although it was against the law to dress that way and sit at the king's gate. There was great mourning in every province with fasting, weeping and wailing.

Esther could not understand why Mordecai was dressed in sackcloth and ashes, so she sent messages to him. He sent her a copy of the decree so that she would know what had happened. He also sent a message to Esther asking her to speak to the king on behalf of the Jews.

Esther replied that if anyone came into the king's court without being called by the king, that person would be put to death unless he held out the golden scepter. She also told Mordecai that the king had not called her for the last thirty days.

Then Mordecai sent a further reply to Esther which we quote:

> "Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, 'Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews. For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?'." (Esther iv. 13, 14).

Esther called all the Jews to fast for three days and she and her maidens would likewise fast. Then she would approach the king and "if I perish, I perish".

But when Esther, dressed in her royal robes, stood in the king's court, the king held out the golden scepter and received her. She was very diplomatic, for Haman was still held in high esteem by the king, so she had to move slowly and discreetly. She asked the king, with Haman, to attend a banquet which she would arrange. The story unfolds gradually throughout chapters v.-ix. which we cannot relate in detail owing to lack of space but in the end, the king realized that Haman had plotted against Mordecai who had been faithful to the king. Mordecai was advanced and Haman was put to death; letters were sent to the 127 provinces reversing the previous orders, and the Jews were saved from persecution and murder.

Esther was raised up to protect and defend the Jews. She was indeed appointed queen "for such a time as this". Her coronation as queen was timed perfectly for her to act on behalf of the Jewish nation. It was the "right time" for such an appointment.

The coming of Jesus Christ to this earth, and all the details of His life on earth were according to God's plan and happened at the "right time". Paul writing to the Galatians confirms this:

> "But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons" (Gal. iv. 4, 5).

It is evident that Paul believed that God sent forth His Son at an appointed time; he says that when the fullness of the time had come God sent His Son, but he does not enlarge on this statement.

In the first chapter of Matthew, we have details of the generations of Jesus Christ, starting with Abraham. At the end of the long list we have the comment:

> "So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations; and from David until the carrying away into Babylon are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations" (Matt. i. 17).

One wonders why Matthew suddenly introduces this verse before describing the birth of the Lord Jesus. His method of counting presents a problem, and a note in The Companion Bible (page 1308) reads, "three fourteens are reckoned in a special manner". One can only conclude that Matthew desires to draw attention to the fact that the birth of Christ took place at a special time, after three groups of fourteen generations. Surely Matthew believed that Christ came to this earth at an appointed time.

In the Gospel of John we notice the phrase "Mine hour has not yet come", or "The hour is come …". For example, Christ told His mother when attending the wedding in Cana of Galilee that His hour had not yet come. In John vii. 30 and viii. 20 when Christ was in the Temple, "no man laid hands on Him, for His hour was not yet come".

However, beginning at chapter xii. we see that instead of a negative statement, the remark is now positive. After Jesus had ridden to Jerusalem on a young ass, some Greeks wanted to see Him, and He answered:

"The hour is come, that the Son of Man should be glorified" (xii. 23), and in the next chapter:

> "Now before the feast of the passover, when Jesus knew that His hour was come that He should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved His own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end" (xiii. 1).

Just as the birth of Christ happened at the appointed time, so His departure from this earth took place at the appointed time. In the account of the transfiguration we read:

> "and spake of His decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem" (Luke ix. 31, A.V.).
>
> "They spoke about His departure, which He was about to bring to fulfillment at Jerusalem" (Luke ix. 31, N.I.V.).

His death, or departure, was no accident, but the fulfillment of a plan carried out at the right time.

Our Lord spent some time in teaching the disciples and because He was Emmanuel (God with us), He knew what would happen in the future. For example, as they approached Jerusalem, He told them that He would be betrayed, ill-treated and crucified, and the third day He would rise again (Matt. xx. 17-19). On another occasion He said that no man could take His life from Him. He had the power to lay it down and the power to take it up again (John x. 18).

He also knew that the disciples would forsake Him and be scattered:

> "Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye shall be scattered, every man to his own, and shall leave Me alone: and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with Me" (John xvi. 32).

The next chapter, which contains the wonderful prayer of our Lord, commences:

> "These words spake Jesus, and lifted up His eyes to heaven, and said, 'Father, the hour is come; glorify Thy Son, that Thy Son also may glorify Thee'." (John xvii. 1).

The Lord knew that the appointed time for His departure had come, although it is remarkable that He does not refer to His great suffering and His death but speaks of His glorification. While on this earth He had glorified the Father, and He finished the work which the Father had committed into His hands (4).

We do not know when the second advent will take place, but we are sure that Christ will come again, at the right time, but at a moment known only to the Father:

> "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but My Father only" (Matt. xxiv. 36).

It would be interesting to seek other examples to illustrate how God intervenes at the right time; for instance the life of Joseph, who told his brothers that God sent him before them to preserve life. But space limits us, so we suggest that our readers make their own investigations of Scripture. In addition, it may be profitable to review events in our own lives where the providence of God, and His guidance, have met our needs at just the right time. If we have been blessed by God in this way, we should give thanks to Him and also tell others for their encouragement.

> "Let the redeemed of the Lord say so" (Psa. cvii. 2).

The writer became Hon. Secretary and Treasurer of the Berean Forward Movement following the death of Mr. Frederick P. Brininger in 1947. During the war, Mr. Brininger had prepared two books for printing, Just and the Justifier and Parable, Miracle and Sign. He was unable to get these books printed during the war owing to the paper shortage. We take up the story as recorded in:

JUBILEE!

The Berean Expositor 1909-1959

> Although he (Mr. Brininger) had approached many printers, none had the paper to enable them to execute the orders, owing to war-time restrictions. I was therefore asked to approach the Paper Control in Reading. The story is a long one, but briefly it worked out in this way. We obtained a permit for one ton of paper, with the right to call for a further supply later. I estimated that it would cost £1,500 to use one ton of paper, which was sufficient to print two books. We had a Reprint Fund of £800. How could we finance two books? We required at least a further £700. No appeal was made, but I waited for a brief period of about two months in which we received legacies and gifts of £800. Surely this was the hand of the Lord Who supplied the paper and the funds whereby the two books could be published.

This is only one example in the history of The Berean Forward Movement and The Berean Publishing Trust when the Lord supplied our need at the right time.

Running Away.

"But Jonah rose up to flee …" (Jonah i. 3).

pp. 110 - 113

In 1870-1880 voluntary organizations were set up to deal with the problem of children "on the streets". One society, now known as The Children's Society, set out to help the "waifs and strays". The basic problem remains today, for hundreds of children run away from their homes. It is not our object to discuss this enormous problem, but to recognize that in the Bible we find many examples of those who flee or run away. If a complete study were to be made, more than 200 references would have to be consulted.

The prodigal son left home by arrangement, but it seems he made no effort to keep in touch with his family so long as he had money in his pocket. It was only when he began to be in want that he thought of his home. Then he realized his error and repented. He returned to his father in a humble spirit and was accepted.

Onesimus was a runaway slave and Paul wrote a heart-stirring letter to Philemon, his former master, pleading for his acceptance, not only as a slave, but as a brother in the Lord. Paul admits that he was unprofitable, but now, says Paul, he is profitable to both Philemon and Paul. Evidently, Onesimus was converted and became a "brother". So both the prodigal son and Onesimus became changed men after they had run away and both returned to their respective homes.

One of the earliest examples of a person running away from home is found in Genesis xvi. 4-9. Sarai, the wife of Abram, had no children and it was agreed that Sarai should give her handmaid to Abram so that children should be obtained for the family. The handmaid was Hagar, an Egyptian. But when it became obvious that Hagar was to produce a child, there was jealousy and ill-feeling between the two women. Sarai treated Hagar harshly, and in the end she could stand the persecution no longer, and she ran away. Hagar fled from the face of Sarai, we are told (6). An angel appeared to Hagar and told her to return home and to be obedient to her mistress (9). Hagar did as she had been instructed. The angel told her that she should have a son and his name would be Ishmael. He would be the first among a nation that was too large to be counted. Hagar was not to be blamed for running away, but she was advised the correct way was to go back home and do her duty.

David became popular with the people of Israel, so much so that Saul was jealous. Indeed, Saul hated David and he gave instructions to his servants to kill him (I.Sam.xix.1). Saul tried to kill him by throwing a javelin at him but David was unhurt and escaped; he slipped out of Saul's presence and fled. He returned to his house and his wife Michal, but Saul sent messengers to watch outside the house, and kill David when he came out next morning. Michal was aware of the plot and let down David from a window, so David escaped (xix. 12). Was David wrong to "run away"? He had been anointed king of Israel. His life was in danger. Surely it was right that David should take reasonable steps to preserve his life in view of his duty to follow Saul as king of Israel.

Similar steps were taken to preserve the life of the baby, Lord Jesus. Herod wanted to kill Jesus, so Joseph was warned by God in a dream to take Jesus and his mother, and flee into Egypt. There they were to stay until the death of Herod. Clearly, it was right and proper that Joseph and his family should run away to Egypt, so that Jesus could grow up and fulfil the will of His heavenly Father.

Moses was also in danger, when Pharaoh heard that he had killed an Egyptian. We read in Exod. ii. 15 that Pharaoh sought to slay Moses and so Moses fled (or ran away) from the face of Pharaoh.

Jonah heard the word of the Lord when he was instructed to go to Nineveh and cry against it. But then we read that Jonah rose up to flee from the presence of the Lord, and went to Joppa where he found a ship going to Tarshish. So he boarded the ship, thinking that he could run away from the Lord's presence. He was wrong for two reasons, (1) It was impossible to flee from the Lord's presence (Psa. cxxxix. 7), and (2) He was disobedient to the Lord. He was to go to Nineveh. But the Lord dealt with the situation and eventually sent him to the city of Nineveh. But when he cried against the great city, he was amazed when the people believed the message and repented. God accepted their repentance and did not destroy the city.

Jonah did not like the first message he was given and so he ran away, but when he did give the message God reversed the plan to destroy the city, and that made Jonah angry. He did not understand his duty as a prophet, neither did he realize that the Lord is gracious and merciful (Jonah iv. 1-4).

Moses at first was like Jonah. He did not want to declare the word of the Lord to Pharaoh. He feared that the people of Israel would not believe that God had sent him. He made many excuses and asked God to send someone else. The Lord was angry with Moses (Exod. iv. 14) but agreed that Aaron could go with Moses and speak, while God would give the message to Moses who would pass it to Aaron.

The ministry of our Lord while He was on the earth had the effect of dividing His hearers into two groups: believers and unbelievers. Such a situation is described in John vi. 64-71. If we go back to verse 60, we find that some disciples said, "This is an hard saying; who can hear it?". Then, after a further discourse, we read:

> "From that time many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him. Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away?" (John vi. 66-67).

Peter, being the usual spokesman, assured the Lord that there was no other person to whom they could go, because Jesus had the words of eternal life. In view of this assurance, can we be sure that the disciples would never ran away? If we read in Matthew the account of the betrayal of our Lord, we find that all the disciples ran away:

> "But all this was done, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. Then all the disciples forsook Him, and fled" (Matt. xxvi. 56).

We do not often read about Archippus. It is evident that the Lord had given him a ministry to perform, but no details are given. There must have been a doubt whether he would be true to his task. Was there a temptation to run away from a difficult ministry? The apostle Paul tells him to complete it. We quote:

> "And say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it" (Col. iv. 17).

When we review what the scriptures tell us about those who either rejected, or at least disliked the word of the Lord, and how disciples left the Lord and no longer walked with Him, we begin to ask the question, 'Is it possible that some believers could run away from the truth?'. Now, we do not find such a phrase in the scriptures, but we do find statements in the Prison Epistles that are not far from the idea of running away from the truth. In II Tim. ii. 18 we read of those who "concerning the truth have erred". There are those who "resist the truth" (iii. 8). When we read II Tim. iv. 4 and Titus i. 14 that "some turn away from the truth", surely turning away from the truth is not very different from running away from the truth.

May the Lord give us grace, that we may obey the injunction given to Archippus, and fulfil the ministry that the Lord has given us.

I SAMUEL

No.12. viii. 19 - ix. 20.
pp. 18 - 20

The words of warning, alas, fell on deaf ears:

> "Nevertheless the people refused to obey the voice of Samuel; and they said, Nay; but we will have a king over us; that we also may be like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles. And Samuel heard all the words of the people, and he rehearsed them in the ears of the Lord. And the Lord said to Samuel, Hearken unto their voice, and make them a king. And Samuel said unto the men of Israel, Go ye every man unto his city" (I Sam. viii. 19-22).

This is a significant reminder of the words of the Psalmist who sums up the reason for the failure of Israel after the Lord had led them out of Egypt and miraculously provided for them as they journeyed towards their promised land: "They soon forgot His works; they waited not for His counsel, but lusted exceedingly in the wilderness, and tempted God in the desert. And He gave them their request, but sent leanness into their soul" (Psa. cvi. 13-15).

When we feel sometimes that the Lord has turned a dear ear to our prayers, it will be of considerable help to remember this in case we are praying for that which is not right. Also we should remember the words of the Saviour Himself, Who, when praying to the Father said, "nevertheless, not My will, but Thine be done".

The history of Saul.

The history of Saul occupies I Sam. viii. 4 - II Sam. i. 27, and can be divided into three sections, namely:

(1) I Sam. viii. 4 - xv. 35. The demand for a king. His testing and rejection.
(2) I Sam. xvi. 1 - xxvi. 25. The anointing of David and his persecution by Saul.
(3) I Sam. xxvii. 1 - II Sam. i. 27. Saul's sin and death.

I Samuel ix. opens with details of the family of the man chosen to be the first of the earthly kings of Israel, and then goes on to relate the circumstances under which he met Samuel:

> "Now there was a man of Benjamin, whose name was Kish … a mighty man of power. And he had a son, whose name was Saul, a choice young man, and a goodly: and there was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he: from his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people" (I Sam. ix. 1, 2).

Saul, a man in the prime of life, was distinguished among his fellow by his great stature and physical appearance. He was the son of a noble and prosperous farmer, living in a small town in the tribe of Benjamin. His father Kish had sent him, together with a household servant, to find some asses that had strayed away from the farm.

The word ‘asses’ in verse 3 signifies she-asses, and were probably valuable breeding stock. At this period in Jewish history the horse was forbidden, consequently asses would be in great demand. They were used not only as a means of transport, but also on the farm for agricultural purposes. They were therefore valuable stock, and Kish would be anxious to recover those that had been lost.

The word ‘servant’ used here in verse 3 is not that of an ordinary farm hand. It has the meaning of a trusted member of the household staff, one on familiar terms with his young master. We read of him giving wise advice to Saul in verse 6, he was in charge of the money (8), and in verse 22 we find that he was treated as an honoured guest at the sacrificial feast at Ramah.

Tradition has handed down the belief that this man was Doeg, the Edomite, referred to in chapter xxi. 9-18. If this is so, then he alone of all the chief captains in Saul’s army dared to slay Ahimelech the priest and his entire household and family for helping David unwittingly when Saul was hunting him down. This act of barbarous cruelty has labeled the man as one of the most callous butchers of O.T. history.

Having searched in vain throughout the whole region, Saul and his companion come near to Ramah, the town where the prophet Samuel lived. Maybe, the tower on the hill, Samuel’s famous residence known throughout Israel, could be seen by them. So the suggestion is put to Saul by his companion that they should go and enquire of Samuel. This may seem a strange thing to do, but it shows the close relationship that Samuel obviously enjoyed among the people. It illustrates also the old prophet’s kindly and unselfish disposition that they should take their problem to him and expect to receive help from him.

In verse 15 we read: “Now the Lord had told Samuel in his ear, saying …”. “In his ear”, literally “had uncovered the ear of Samuel”, indicating the pushing aside of the head-dress in order the more audibly to whisper. References abound in the Scriptures of the need for opened ears to hear the word of God. On eight separate occasions the Lord during His earthly ministry uttered the curious phrase “he that hath ears to hear, let him hear”, and the risen Christ eight times again uses this expression to the apostle John in the book of Revelation. Each of these occasions marks out something of special importance, as being sent to ears that the Lord had opened. Samuel was such a man, and his opened ear received the message from the Lord, as follows:

> “Tomorrow about this time I will send thee a man out of the land of Benjamin, and thou shalt anoint him to be captain over My people Israel, that he may save My people out of the hand of the Philistines: for I have looked upon My people, because their cry is come unto Me” (I Sam. ix. 16).

How wonderfully the grace and kindness of God shine through this verse. His displeasure at the rejection of Him as their King did not provoke Him into turning a deaf ear to their cry of deliverance from the Philistines who were harassing His people. Their request for a king “like the nations” is met by the provision of one so eminently suitable to be their leader against the Philistine invader. We ourselves may gain some reassurance from this surely, that though we may displease Him by our forgetfulness of Him, yet He will not turn away and be heedless of our cry to Him in time of trouble or difficulty.

On the morrow, as Saul was approaching Samuel we read in verse 17 that God said to Samuel, "Behold the man whom I spake to thee of!". "Behold the man" brings to mind a significant comparison with the cry of Pilate "Behold your King" as he brought forth Christ to the people (John xix. 14). Saul was accepted with relief. The Lord as the true King of Israel was once again rejected. The words "reign over" in verse 17 is a verbal form more often translated "restrain", which is an accurate forecast of the stern and severe rule that was characteristic of the reign of Saul—a very sharp comparison with the reign of the One Whose rule will be with true love and justice.

> "Then Saul drew near to Samuel in the gate, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, where the seer's house is. And Samuel answered Saul, and said, I am the seer: go up before me unto the high place; for ye shall eat with me today, and tomorrow I will let thee go, and will tell thee all that is in thine heart. And as for thine asses that were lost three days ago, set not thy mind on them; for they are found. And on whom is all the desire of Israel? It is not on thee, and on all thy father's house?" (I Sam. ix. 18-20).

No.13. ix. 21 - x. 7.
pp. 56 - 58

It may not have come as a surprise to Saul to hear that Samuel, the seer, knew of his coming, or that the asses for which he had been searching had been found, but what was obviously unexpected was to hear the words of deference and high honour concerning him and his father's house from the lips of Samuel:

> "Am not I a Benjamite, of the smallest of the tribes of Israel? and my family the least of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin? wherefore then speakest thou so to me?" (I.Sam.ix.21).

Saul would undoubtedly know what the words "the desire of Israel" (20) referred to. Although he was a countryman, living in the territory of Benjamin, and claimed that his father's house was "the least of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin", yet we read in verse 1 that his father Kish was "a mighty man of power (substance)". It is most likely therefore that they had heard of the intrigue to set up a king over Israel. Samuel, in answer, conducts Saul to a place of honour at the celebration feast, and makes him his guest for the night. In the morning he publicly anoints him before allowing him to return home. The faithfulness of Samuel to God's words and his obedience in carrying out every detail is plainly revealed in the preparations that had been made beforehand, so that when the man foretold by the Lord to his servant duly arrived, the feast had been prepared and the guests already invited. Even the double portion of honour for the one who should come had been set aside from the sacrifice held at the high place the day before:

> "Then Samuel brought Saul and his servant into the hall and seated them at the head of those who were invited—about thirty in number. Samuel said to the cook, 'Bring the piece of meat I gave you, the one I told you to lay aside'. So the cook took up the leg with what was on it and set it in front of Saul. Samuel said, 'Here is what has been kept for you. Eat, because it was set aside for you for this occasion, from the time I said, I have invited guests'. And Saul dined with Samuel that day" (ix. 22-24).

I Samuel x.

Saul had been shown the most fabulous honour and deference by the great prophet-judge of Israel. All was now to be revealed to the unsuspecting son of Kish, the unknown Benjamite. The gracious welcome as a distinguished guest, the courteous hospitality at the great man's house, then Samuel's long private talk and instruction into the night. The following morning he publicly pays honour to the young man by accompanying him to the outskirts of the city. One arrival there he says to Saul, "Bid the servant pass on before us, but stand thou still a while, that I may show thee the word of God". So we now come to the first verse of chapter x.:

> "Then Samuel took a vial of oil, and poured it upon his head, and kissed him, and said, Is it not because the Lord hath anointed thee to be captain over His inheritance?".

In the margin of The Companion Bible, Dr. Bullinger writes that some ancient scribe accidentally omitted the words, "and thou shalt rule among the people of Jehovah, and thou shalt save them out of the hand of their enemies, and this shall be a sign unto thee, that", this reading being preserved in the Septuagint and Vulgate. If this is so then the reading from verse 1 to 2 would be as follows:

> "Is it not because the Lord hath anointed thee to be captain over His inheritance, and thou shalt rule among the people of Jehovah, and thou shalt save them out of the hand of their enemies, and this shall be a sign unto thee, that when thou art departed from me today, then thou shalt find two men by Rachel's sepulcher …".

So Saul was anointed king of Israel in anticipation. He was set apart and sealed by the oil that God had instructed Moses to be made for the consecration of the high priest at his ordination (Exod. xxx. 23-33).

After his anointing, Saul was given three signs that would happen to him on his way home. These would confirm the honour and dignity placed upon him by Samuel and the anointing as captain of His people. In Eph. i., speaking of the 'prior-hope' and inheritance to which his readers had been predestinated, the apostle Paul says, "also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise". This sealing of the members of the church which is His Body is not confirmed today by any outward signs, or manifestation of the gifts of the Spirit, either 'prophesying' as in the O.T. and also gifts of healing, tongues, etc. during the Acts period. We walk by faith and not by sight.

Saul however, not living in this dispensation of the grace of God, evidence and proof of his Divine appointment were given him. Three events would befall him as he and his companion journeyed home at three places that held sacred memories in the hearts of all Israel. The first would be at the sepulcher of Rachel, beloved wife of Jacob and mother of the warrior tribe of Benjamin to which Saul belonged. There, men would meet him with the news that the lost asses had been found, and that his father was now sorrowing for Saul, saying "What shall I do for my son?".

Going on from there, the second sign would occur at the terebinth tree of Tabor, where Saul would meet three men carrying gifts on a pilgrimage to God at Bethel: one carrying three kids, another with three loaves of bread, and the third with a bottle of wine. The bottle would be goatskin, and therefore quite heavy. They would offer Saul two of the loaves which he was to accept at their hands.

The third sign would befall him as he approached his home, and would be the most important of the three. It would be at the famous holy place of prayer known as Gibeah, or "hill of God". As he approached the hill he would be met with a company of prophets coming down from the hill carrying musical instruments and prophesying. It was at this place that Samuel had sited one of his colleges for the training of young men. There were several in different parts of the country, and their foundation was one of the most notable institutions of this noble and patriotic man of God. These educational universities flourished during the period of Israel's monarchy, and contributed in no small measure to the moral, cultural, and mental development of the people. The arts were cultivated, and music was given special prominence. The four instruments mentioned in verse 5 are the 'psaltery', which was a 10-stringed lyre shaped like a 'V' and played with the fingers. The 'tabret' was a hand drum, or maybe a tambourine. The 'pipe'—a flute of reed, wood, or horn. The 'harp', a stringed instrument larger than a psaltery, and played with a plectrum (a small instrument of ivory, or quill, for plucking the strings). This last meeting would prove a turning point in the life of Saul:

> "And the Spirit of the Lord will come upon thee, and thou shalt prophesy with them, and shalt be turned into another man. And let it be, when these signs are come unto thee, that thou do as occasion serve thee; for God is with thee" (I Sam. x. 6, 7).

"They shall prophesy" and "thou shalt prophesy" in verses 5 and 6 do not necessarily mean "foretelling", but speaking in the name of the Lord. So the Spirit of the Lord came upon Saul as it had done upon Moses and Joshua, and on the men of Israel raised up during the time of the judges. As a result of this Saul was now a changed man, for God was with him.

No.14. x. 8 - 16.
pp. 79, 80

From verse 9 of chapter x. we discover that the three signs duly came to pass, and that God gave Saul a new heart that same day. Before departing from Samuel, however, Saul was told to go down to Gilgal and await seven days for the coming of Samuel, who would then offer burnt offerings and a sacrifice of peace offerings. This first test of the obedience of Saul to the instructions given by Samuel the prophet of the Lord seems to have been completed satisfactorily, although we do not read the sequel. Similar instructions were given to Saul by Samuel later in chapter xiii. 8-14, which seems to read as though it is the sequel to chapter x. 8. It is unlikely to be so, as this second occasion was approximately two years later when Saul's army was being threatened by a very large force of Philistines, and with the delay of Samuel in not coming to Gilgal within the seven days promised, Saul found that his army, losing heart no doubt, was melting away from him. In desperation Saul took it upon himself to offer the burnt offerings and sacrifices; a test of patience which we all need to learn at times. Samuel appearing almost immediately afterwards utters words of censure upon this disobedience, and tells Saul that his kingdom would not now continue, and that God had found a man after His own heart to be captain over His people. This will be dealt with more fully when we come to chapter xiii.

> "And Saul's uncle said unto him and to his servant, Whither went ye? And he said, To seek the asses: and when we saw that they were nowhere, we came to Samuel. And Saul's uncle said, Tell me, I pray thee, what Samuel said unto you. And Saul said unto his uncle, He told us plainly that the asses were found. But of the matter of the kingdom, whereof Samuel spake, he told him not" (I Sam. x. 14-16).

At this stage we see how the coming of the spirit of God into the heart of Saul influenced his behaviour. On his arrival back home it is not his father Kish that is mentioned here, only his uncle Abner. This was the one who later became second only to the king in Israel. He must have been a man of tremendous force and personality, for Saul made him his commander-in-chief, and there is no doubt he was a great soldier and leader of men. As we read of his deeds, we find also that he was a vain and ambitious man, crafty and utterly ruthless, as well as being dishonest. It could be that Doeg the Edomite, Saul's travel companion, in order to ingratiate himself with this influential member of Saul's family would inform him of the honour conferred upon his young master by the prophet Samuel. This information must have whetted Abner's appetite. Abner was the sort of man that could have plotted to put his own son on the throne of Israel.

Be that as it may, we read that Saul gave his uncle no inkling of what transpired between Samuel and himself. The honour conferred on him was very great, and it would have been only human for him to make the most of it on his return. It would have been very easy to boast a little, especially to this swash-buckling uncle of his. The Lord had given him a change of heart though, and led by His spirit he kept his counsel and told him nothing. In this instance he showed modesty and true humility, but above all he showed wisdom by his silence.

Modesty and true humility are the evidence externally of a change of heart. They are the hallmark of the true believer in Christ. We find the apostle Paul telling the elders of the church at Ephesus "Ye know from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons, serving the Lord with all humility of mind" (Acts xx. 18, 19). The Greek word tapeinos used by Paul here is used by him five times in his prison epistles, where it is translated "lowliness of mind", "humility", and "humbleness". Paul uses it also of Christ Himself in Phil. ii. 5-8 "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus … Who humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross". This is true humility, and we should always bear it in mind lest we be carried away with the gratifying of our own desires and forget the need for "lowliness of mind" in our own high calling. Great love and great blessings from God call forth an equally great response.

No.15. x. 17 - 22.

In verse 17 Samuel makes a public proclamation that a national assembly is to be held at Mizpeh. Princes and representatives from every tribe are to be present. Before demonstrating the appointment of Saul as king, he again reminds them of the way in which the Lord God had led them and delivered them in the past, and the folly therefore of rejecting Him and replacing Him by an earthly king:

> "And Samuel called the people together unto the Lord to Mizpeh; and said … Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, I brought up Israel out of Egypt, and delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all kingdoms, and of them that oppressed you: and ye have this day rejected your God, Who Himself saved you out of all your adversities and your tribulations; and ye have said unto Him, Nay, but set a king over us" (I Sam. x. 17-19).

It seems incredible that these people, who were given so much guidance and instruction by God never learned wisdom from their experiences. They seemed to be bent on their own destruction. But who are we living today that we should condemn them. The same blindness and hardness of heart that separated them from their covenant God separates the people of the nations today from the greater grace of God. It is a demonstration of the fact that the heart of man has not changed one scrap since that day. "We will not have this Man to reign over us" is still the cry today. Man will choose anything but the rule of the Lord Jesus Christ in personal and national life. Civilization has perhaps made us more cosy. Despite education, increased knowledge, scientific invention, etc. the heart of man remains estranged from God.

> "And when Samuel had caused all the tribes of Israel to come near, the tribe of Benjamin was taken. When he had caused the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, the family of Matri was taken, and Saul the son of Kish was taken: and when they sought him, he could not be found. Therefore they enquired of the Lord further, if the man should yet come thither. And the Lord answered, Behold, he hath hid himself among the stuff" (x. 20-22).

When the process of selection, presumably by lot, had finally settled upon the family of Kish and his son Saul, we read that "he had hid himself among the stuff". If this was shyness, then it is with dismay that we observe how Saul, once registering such shyness and humility should turn into the vindictive tyrant he was later to become. It is said truly that absolute power corrupts absolutely.

No.16. x. 23 - 27.
pp. 118 - 120

Perhaps Paul shrank from the glare of publicity that he would receive when the fact of his being the chosen king of Israel was made known. He may have recognized that there were some, especially among the princes of the tribes of Israel, who would be affronted that such authority and power should be bestowed on an insignificant person in the small tribe of Benjamin.

No sooner had the announcement been made, than the man himself was found to be missing. This evidently aroused some questioning as to whether the right choice had been made, for we read that a second enquiry was made of the Lord, to which came the reply "he hath hid himself among the stuff". At last Saul was found and brought forward.

"And they ran and fetched him thence: and when he stood among the people, he was higher than any of the people from his shoulders and upward. And Samuel said to all the people, See ye him whom the Lord hath chosen, that there is none like him among all the people? And all the people shouted, and said, God save the king" (I Sam. x. 23, 24).

There is no doubt that there would have been many stalwart specimens in Israel at that time, but Saul towered over them all. David, the sweet psalmist of Israel, later described Saul and his son Jonathan as "swifter than eagles and stronger than lions". Physically speaking Saul was therefore well fitted for the daunting task of tackling their Philistine enemies. Saul's armour would have fitted no-one else in Israel, and David found it a great encumbrance. Perhaps in offering it to him Saul was endeavouring to deter the young lad from going out against such a mighty warrior as Goliath.

God doubtless chose Saul for these physical characteristics, for apart from the Philistines there would be some of the most influential in the land who would be jealous of his appointment and seek to drag him down. So perhaps it is that God chose a man who could look after himself, command the respect of others, and be acceptable to the mass of the people who would naturally be influenced by his physical attributes. Also to a man brought up amid the simple duties of farm life, the intrigues of power and leadership might have seemed daunting, so that it would be necessary for him to command the respect and admiration of the mass of the people and so counter the "children of Belial" referred to in verse 27.

> "Then Samuel told the people the manner of the kingdom, and wrote it in a book, and laid it up before the Lord. And Samuel sent all the people away, every man to his house" (x. 25).

Just as Samuel had told the people what the "manner of the king" would do to them in chapter viii., so now here he gives them the "manner of the kingdom". This was probably in the form of a Magna Carta, limiting the prerogatives of the monarch, and doubtless drawing attention to the words of the Lord to Moses in Deut. xvii. 14-20. This would be the basis upon which the administration of the kingdom should be operated in the years to come. There is no doubt that in this respect Samuel was a man of great discernment and intellect: a truly great man. After the election of Saul as king, Samuel dismissed the representatives of the twelve tribes who had been gathered together for this purpose, and they returned to their homes. There is no doubt that he continued to be the guiding power behind the throne thereafter until the time of his death. As for Saul, we read that he also "went home to Gibeah; and there went with him a band of men, whose hearts God had touched" (I Sam. x. 26).

Here is an insight into the character of God. Despite the rejection of Him by the people as their King, He nevertheless does not entirely withdraw His mercy and care for them, so a band of men accompanied Saul to his home who had sworn allegiance to him and would serve as a loyal bodyguard through thick and thin. This was because God had "touched their hearts". He knew that Saul would need much support and encouragement in the days ahead by men prepared to lay down their lives in his service. There is no doubt that God had warmed their hearts to Saul, recognizing him as the king appointed by Jehovah, and thus willing to dedicate their lives to him. The Lord knew full well that Saul would need this support and strengthening in the early days of the establishment of his reign.

If ever a man had need of such loyalty, Saul did right now. His dramatic rise to fame and elevation to the kingship was bound to cause misgivings and jealousy in the hearts of not a few. One can imagine the feelings of some of the princes and rulers of tribes such as Judah and Ephraim, mighty tribes in Israel who had continually taken the lead in matters of national importance. How would they react to a king from the insignificant tribe of Benjamin? If Jehovah Himself had been rejected, how could Saul count on their loyalty to him? Those who considered themselves more fitted for the crown would moreover have their admirers and hangers-on to support them in their claims.

> "But the children of Belial said, 'How shall this man save us?'. And they despised him, and brought him no presents. But he held his peace" (x. 27).

"Children of Belial" here signifies evil or worthless men (or women) who care nothing for their God. Hannah used the phrase when she had been accused by Eli of drunkenness in the house of Jehovah, "Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial" (I.Sam.i.16). As regards Eli's sons, they are referred to as "sons of Belial; they knew not the Lord" (ii. 12). It occurs once only in the N.T. where the apostle Paul warns the Corinthians not to be unequally yoked in fellowship with those who are of Belial and not Christ (II Cor. vi. 14-16).

So we read the children of Belial in I Sam. x. 27 said, "How shall this man save us? And they despised him, and brought him no presents". Had he known it, Saul was in good company for these words were used also of Israel's rightful King, as David wrote in Psa. xxii. 6 "I am a reproach of men, and despised of the people". Isaiah saw also the same vision of the One Who would be "despised and rejected of men" (liii. 3). How well we know these prophecies were fulfilled most completely when the Saviour came to His own people: "He hath a demon, and is mad; why hear ye Him?" (John x. 20).

Saul held his peace, literally "He was as though he had been deaf". He wisely held his tongue when those who were bitterly opposed to him sought to provoke. Perhaps he realized that he must first prove himself to the nation and gain the people's respect before safeguarding himself from his enemies. This prudent conduct showed remarkable self-control on the part of the new king, so initially showing himself worthy to be ruler.

Saul's silence in the teeth of such provocation revealed considerable self control. We are reminded of the words of Solomon in the book of Ecclesiastes concerning the holding of one's tongue when it is expedient:

> "To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven … a time to keep silence and a time to speak" (Eccles. iii. 1-8).

No.17. xi. 1 - 6.
pp. 159, 160

In chapter xi. we come to the point where Saul wins his spurs in the eyes of the nation.

> "Then Nahash the Ammonite came up, and encamped against Jabesh-gilead: and all the men of Jabesh said unto Nahash, Make a covenant with us, and we will serve thee. And Nahash the Ammonite answered them, On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may thrust out all your right eyes, and lay it for a reproach upon all Israel" (I Sam. xi. 1, 2).

Ammon was the son born to Lot's younger daughter. As Dr. Bullinger says "Begotten in shame, he had a shameful history". His descendants were a constant threat to God's people. When Moses led Israel through the wilderness on their way to the promised land, they were commanded by God not to "distress or meddle with them, for I have given it to the children of Lot for a possession". Was this the very special relationship that Abraham had with God that Lot's descendants should receive this favour? On three occasions Abraham is referred in Scripture as "the friend of God". Who can tell?

Jabesh Gilead was a somewhat remote city on the east side of the river Jordan, although some miles from the Ammonite border. The Ammonites were a warlike people and had a powerful army. When Nahash came up he would have surrounded the city, so that it was completely cut off. The elders had no option but to accept the terms laid down. In order to save the people's lives, and their homes from being ransacked, they declared their willingness to pay tribute. The barbaric threat to "thrust out all their right eye" meant the men of Jabesh would never be able to bear arms again; for in battle it was the practice to cover the left eye by the shield.

> "And the elders of Jabesh said unto them, Give us seven days' respite, that we may send messengers unto all the coasts of Israel: and then, if there be no man to save us, we will come out to thee" (xi. 3).

A request by a beleaguered city or fortress for time or respite was usually accepted. They certainly were far away from any hope of rescue from the tribes on the other side of the Jordan river. It looked as though the city was doomed. Yet messengers got through the enemies' lines, and went straight to Gibeah where Saul's home was.

It is interesting to note that between the tribe of Benjamin and the city of JabeshGilead there had long existed the closest ties of friendship. This would have originated well before the terrible punishment of the tribe of Benjamin by the remainder of Israel recorded in Judges xx. The only city from the whole nation that did not send representatives to take part in the judgment meted out on that sad day was the city of Jabesh Gilead (Judg. xxi. 8, 9). Israel were summoned "as one man" by Phinehas, the grandson of Aaron, to exact vengeance on the tribe of Benjamin for the crime committed by the men of Gibeah (xx. 11, 28). Jabesh Gilead alone refused to comply with the imperious command. For this act of disobedience the city was razed to the ground and the inhabitants put to the sword. The girls of marriageable age were saved, however, and given to the sorely decimated tribe of Benjamin that their name should not die out in Israel. Jabesh Gilead had been rebuilt and had become once again a great city. Benjamin had produced the first king in Israel. No wonder then that the city in the hour of its sore need and deadly peril should send for help to Gibeah to Saul.

The messengers got through, and the people who heard of the tragic plight of their friends bewailed, and wrung their hands. Saul's anointing had made no difference to his manner of life, for we read that "he came after the herd out of the field". He carried on the duties on the farm and waited for the Lord to indicate His will as to when he was to take on the leadership in Israel. The time had now come. The news of the desperate peril of the people of Jabesh-Gilead, and of the distress of this ancient friend and ally deeply moved Saul. It was then that the Spirit of God came upon him, and he knew what he had to do.

No.18. xi. 6 - 15.
pp. 178 - 180

> "And the Spirit of God came upon Saul when he heard those tidings, and his anger was kindled greatly" (I Sam. xi. 6).

We often read of this Spirit of God coming upon His servants, preparing their thoughts and enduing them with wisdom, valour, and power from on high. We remember the changed lives of the apostles after Pentecost, and of that other Saul, who became Paul, on the Damascus Road. It was power from on high that enabled faithful men to carry out the will of the Lord.

> "And he took a yoke of oxen, and hewed them in pieces, and sent them throughout all the coasts of Israel by the hands of messengers, saying, Whosoever cometh not forth after Saul and after Samuel, so shall it be done unto his oxen. And the fear of the Lord fell on the people, and they came out with one consent. And when he numbered them in Bezek, the children of Israel were three hundred thousand, and the men of Judah thirty thousand" (I Sam. xi. 7, 8).

Suddenly Saul assumes command. He takes the necessary action required to order the nation to war. Israel responded as one man, and there assembled at Bezek a great army. This was in the plain of Jezreel in the tribe of Issachar's territory, where there was plenty of space for the gathering of this huge host. All the tribes must have responded to the summons of the young king by sending every man they could muster, with the exception of the mighty tribe of Judah. Evidently she still smarted that it was not from her sons that the choice of king was made. So a token army only was contributed from this proud people.

> "And they said unto the messengers that came, Thus shall ye say unto the men of Jabesh-Gilead, Tomorrow, by that time the sun be hot, ye shall have help. And the messengers came and shewed it to the men of Jabesh; and they were glad. Therefore the men of Jabesh said, Tomorrow we will come out unto you, and ye shall do with us all that seemeth good unto you" (xi. 9, 10).

Bezek was a mere twenty miles from Jabesh, so by noon deliverance would be at hand. To say the beleaguered city "was glad" seems to be a masterly under-statement. One can imagine the delirious relief and joy of the people as the news seeped through that help was on the way, and that the new king Saul was near at hand with a mighty army.

Saul evidently did not stop for sleep. Dividing his force into three parties he attacked "in the morning watch". This was the last of the three dividing the twelve hours of darkness into four-hour shifts. The morning watch lasted from 2a.m. until 6a.m., so Saul was better than his promise to the citizens of Jabesh-Gilead. In fact, by the time the sun was hot the Ammonites were defeated, and Saul had gained a triumphant victory. He became at once the 'darling' of the nation, a hero acclaimed from Dan to Beersheba.

> "And the people said unto Samuel, Who is he that said, Shall Saul reign over us? bring the men, that we may put them to death" (xi. 12).

The great weight and influence of Samuel among the people is strikingly shown by their turning to him, even in the first flush of Saul's great victory. It was Samuel to whom the people looked to bring to judgment the men who dared to question the wisdom of electing Saul as king.

> "And Saul said, There shall not a man be put to death this day: for today the Lord hath wrought salvation in Israel" (xi. 13).

A wise as well as generous decision. Vengeance then could well have been the cause of civil war and of future feuds and bitterness. So Saul began his reign with wise discretion as well as heroic valour. He had humbly acknowledged the merciful hand of God in the glorious triumph over the enemy, so it became impossible for him to seek personal revenge on those in Israel who sought his downfall. The mighty power of Jehovah had gained for Israel a glorious victory, and in view of the generous mercy of the Lord upon his rebellious and stiff-necked people, with the spirit of God within his heart he had no other option than to show clemency also.

> "Then said Samuel to the people, Come, and let us go to Gilgal, and renew the kingdom there. And all the people went to Gilgal; and there they made Saul king before the Lord in Gilgal; and there they sacrificed sacrifices of peace offerings before the Lord; and there Saul and all the men of Israel rejoiced greatly" (xi. 14, 15).

It was at Mizpeh, the site of the decisive battle with the Philistines that finally wrenched the initiative from these mighty foes of Israel, that Saul was elected and anointed king. It was at Gilgal that he formally became king. After his great victory and the deliverance of the beleaguered city of Jabesh-Gilead, his former anointing was ratified and he became in very deed king in Israel.

Gilgal, the place that held the most sacred memories for the people. When Jehovah rolled up the river Jordan to make a pathway for the armies of His people to enter into Canaan, the promised land, one man from each tribe was selected to carry one boulder from the brink of the river bed where the priests that carried the ark of the covenant stood firm. These twelve boulders were pitched in GILGAL for a memorial for ever to the children of Israel. Here their thoughts would be taken back to the power and majesty of Jehovah their God, His mercy and His faithfulness toward them.

Joshua had made Gilgal his capital city as God swept the Canaanites from the land before the hosts of Israel. It was a place of hallowed memory. It was the national shrine. It was of course in the territory given to the tribe of Benjamin. There Samuel and representatives of the whole nation crowned Saul as their king.

No.19. xii. 1 - 25.
pp. 217 - 220

Chapter xi. finishes on a high note for king Saul. He had begun his reign over Israel in splendid style for the Lord was with him.

When Nahash, the mighty king of Ammon, heard that the Israelites had appointed a king, he came and captured the city of Jabesh Gilead.

The Ammonites were descended from Lot and his younger daughter. They were an idolatrous and warlike nation whose kingdom lay to the north-east of Moab, and east of the tribes of Reuben and Gad. It was between the rivers Arnon and Jabbok, to the west of the river Jordan. In Deut. xxiii. 3-6 we read of God's command to His people Israel regarding these Ammonites:

> "An Ammonite or Moabite shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord; even to their tenth generation shall they not enter into the congregation of the Lord for ever: Because they met you not with bread and with water in the way, when ye came forth out of Egypt; and because they hired against thee Balaam the son of Beor of Pethor of Mesopotamia, to curse thee. Nevertheless the Lord thy God would not hearken unto Balaam; but the Lord thy God turned the curse into a blessing unto thee, because the Lord thy God loved thee. Thou shalt not seek their peace nor their prosperity all thy days for ever."

Jabesh Gilead was a town in the territory allocated to the tribe of Gad, and situated right on the border with the Ammonites. The inhabitants of Jabesh Gilead were forced to enter into a covenant with Nahash, who offered to spare their lives, but would have the right eyes of all the males put out. Fighting men would then be rendered useless by this inhuman act, as in battle the left eye was covered by the shield.

The elders of Jabesh asked for a seven day respite, and immediately sent word to Saul and asked for help.

Saul at once gathered an army together, and Jehovah gave him a magnificent victory, as we read in xi. 13:

> "for today the Lord hath wrought salvation in Israel."

What a boost for Saul this was at the very commencement of his reign!

In chapter xi. 14 and 15, Samuel summoned the nation to Gilgal and publicly presented Saul to all the nation, confirming his kingship. Sacrifices were offered to the Lord and a great coronation celebration was held.

In chapter xii. Samuel obtains witness from all the people of his uprightness in his office. No one could accuse him of accepting bribes, defrauding, stealing or abusing them in any way. It was a very wonderful record of a very distinguished servant of the Lord. He urged the people to remember how God miraculously delivered their forefathers from Egypt, the land of their terrible bondage, and had given them their land, a land that flowed with milk and honey. Yet, just as their fathers had done, this nation of Israel too had turned away from, and forgotten the One Who so graciously blessed them. They had demanded a king when the Lord God was their King. Their grievous sin in turning their backs on Him was to become like the idolatrous nations around them. Yet despite their wickedness God had not consumed them in His wrath, but mercifully forgave them on one condition. Both their king and the people must fear, serve, obey and worship only the Lord their God.

Today there are no strings attached to our salvation. For God has paid the price of sin and death in the Person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ. He has redeemed us from the dominion of sin, and if we accept His gift of forgiveness and by faith put our trust in Him, and believe that He rose from the dead in resurrection power, we too shall have eternal life in unity with Him.

In I Sam. xii. 14, 15, Israel are given a choice:

> "If ye will fear the Lord, and serve Him, and obey His voice, and not rebel against the commandment of the Lord, then shall both ye and also the king that reigneth over you continue following the Lord your God: But if ye will not obey the voice of the Lord, but rebel against the commandment of the Lord, then shall the hand of the Lord be against you, as it was against your fathers."

So the king and the people have to make a decision. It is quite clear-cut. Either they can honour and obey the Lord their God, or they can rebel against Him and His commands. In the early part of this chapter Samuel had reminded the people what had happened to their forefathers when they had forsaken the Lord and worshipped the idols of the heathen nations around them. Then in verses 16-18 God even condescends to give them visible evidence of His power:

> "Now therefore stand and see this great thing, which the Lord will do before your eyes. Is it not wheat harvest today? I will call unto the Lord, and He shall send thunder and rain; and ye may perceive and see that your wickedness is great, which ye have done in the sight of the Lord, in asking you a king. So Samuel called unto the Lord; and the Lord sent thunder and rain that day: and all the people greatly feared the Lord and Samuel" (I Sam. xii. 16-18).

In answer to Samuel's prayer He sent the thunder and rain at the time of the wheat harvest. In Prov. xxvi. 1 we read: "As snow in summer, and as rain in harvest, so honour is not seemly for a fool". It was unheard of for rain to fall at the time of wheat harvest and this miracle shocked these people into the realization of the sin they had committed against the Lord in demanding a king apart from Him. They now fear the judgment of God upon them and the punishment that surely will fall upon them. So they beseech Samuel to pray to "the Lord your God" that He will not destroy them in His wrath. They fear that He is no longer their God, and as they had forsaken Him, so He had forsaken them.

What gracious words God gave to Samuel to answer these faithless and stupid children of His! His patience and mercy are almost unbelievable. Read verses 20-25, especially verse 22 which gives us the reason for God's pardon:

> "For the sake of His great name the Lord will not reject His people, because the Lord was pleased to make you His own" (N.I.V.).

Surely these words echo down the ages and bring joy and hope to all His children in all dispensations and callings.

In the latter half of this verse the A.V. reads: "because it hath pleased the Lord to make you His people", or "a people for Himself". All the Prophets in the O.T. confirm this, as for example in Mal. iii. 16 and 17:

> "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before Him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon His name. And they shall be Mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up My jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."

The word "jewels" is translated elsewhere in the O.T. Scriptures "peculiar treasure". These words appear seven times in Scripture, and in every case refer to the future blessings God has reserved for His earthly people Israel.

In I Sam. xii. there is only one condition attached to God's blessings at this time, and that was that as a nation they feared the Lord and sought to serve Him in truth with all their heart. If however they forsook Him and continued to do wickedly, then they would be consumed, both the people and the king.

How can we ever fathom God's love and grace towards sinful men and women? The reason behind Israel's desire for a king was that they wanted to be like all the idolatrous nations around them, people who worshipped idols of wood and stone, and which included rites of unbridled lust and outrageous customs.

How true, and up to date, are the words of Prov. xxix. 18 where we read: "Where there is no vision, the people perish". We might add to these words the last verse of the book of Judges:

> "… every man did that which was right in his own eyes."

Worship.
pp. 230 - 233

> "O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our Maker" (Psa. xcv. 6).

How often do we read about worship in the O.T., but the references in the N.T. are less frequent, and there is hardly any mention of worship in the Prison Epistles.

The text we quote above is well known and contains an invitation to worship, to bow down and to kneel before our Maker. The reason is given in the following verse "For He is our God; and we are the people of His pasture, and the sheep of His hand". Our minds go back to Psa. xxiii., "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want".

Psalm xcv. begins "O come, let us sing unto the Lord", and the following verses, leading up to our text, form a basis and the background to our worship. Let us sing, and let us come before His presence (His face) with thanksgiving; because the Lord is a great God. We are reminded that He is the Creator and He formed the dry land, and the sea is His. So in our worship we come into the presence of the great God, and stand, or kneel, before His face. We come rejoicing and with thanksgiving, and we sing unto our Lord.

The most common Hebrew word that is translated "worship" is shachah and conveys bowing down. It occurs over 170 times. The first occurrence is in Gen. xxii. 5 and is in the context of sacrifice. Abraham was told to offer up his only son Isaac as a burnt offering. He took two young men with them and when they were in sight of the mountain where the offering was to be made, he told the young men to wait with the donkey, while he and the lad (Isaac) "go yonder and worship". Thus in this first occurrence there is a link between worship and sacrifice.

Other references containing shachah as examples are:

> "And the man bowed down his head, and worshipped the Lord" (Gen. xxiv. 26).
>
> "And Jehoshaphat bowed his head with his face to the ground: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem fell before the Lord, worshipping the Lord" (II Chron. xx. 18).
>
> "And Ezra blessed the Lord, the great God. And all the people answered 'Amen, Amen', with lifting up their hands: and they bowed their heads, and worshipped the Lord with their faces to the ground" (Neh. viii. 6).

In the book of Daniel, the Hebrew word segad appears 12 times and is translated "worship". It means to bow down or do obeisance. The phrase "fall down and worship the golden image" occurs several times, e.g. Dan. iii. 5. A remarkable event is recorded in Dan. ii. 46. Daniel has reminded the king of his dream and has given him the interpretation of it. Then we read:

> "Then the king Nebuchadnezzar fell upon his face, and worshipped Daniel, and commanded that they should offer an oblation and sweet odours unto him."

We might pause here to reflect on the English word "worship" which conveys adoration, honour, homage, reverence, and veneration. Its use in the old days was not so restricted as it is now. Wycliffe translated John xii. 26 "If any man serve Me, My Father shall worship him". This sentence now appears in the A.V. "If any man serve Me … him will My Father honour".

In Luke xiv. 10 we read in the A.V. "Friend, go up higher: then shalt thou have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee". The word is derived from the Anglo-Saxon with the sense of "worth" or "worthy". Worship might be rendered "worthy-ship" or an acknowledgment of worth. We see this connection as we read Revelation v. 12:

> "Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing", and in verse 14:

> "And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped Him that liveth for ever and ever."

So, in worshipping God, we ascribe to Him greatness as Creator; power, glory and majesty, etc.

We have mentioned shachah, but another Hebrew word also occurs many times. It is abad which, although sometimes translated worship, is more often given the sense of "to serve". If we made a detailed study of the use of these two words, we would encounter the problem of the association of these words. If we refer to An Alphabetical Analysis (part 5, pp. 416-435; pt.7-pp.376-392; pt.10-pp.367-374), we find that Charles Welch has studied the problem in depth. We quote from page 382 of Part 7:

> "We will not, therefore, be dogmatic, but so far as we have investigated, it would seem that there is not a single passage in the O.T. where 'serve' and 'worship' come together when the context is concerned with the worship of God! On the other hand, there are nineteen references where the two words come together in connection with the worship of other gods."

Space does not permit us to study the implications of these facts but we content ourselves with a quotation from page 383:

> "…in the observing of the feasts of the Lord, and the sabbaths, it is reiterated that 'ye shall do no servile work therein. 'Servility' and 'worship' cannot be thought of together…".

When we turn to the N.T., we find that the Greek word most frequently used is proskuneo and it occurs 60 times. Young's Concordance gives the meaning "to kiss the hand—to worship". C. H. Welch gives "to kiss the hand (towards) one, in token of reverence". In the O.T. examples may be found which associate kissing with worship. It is helpful to analyze the way this word is used in the N.T.:

In the Gospels: Matthew (13x), Mark (twice), Luke (3x), John (11x) . . . . . =	29
In the Acts Period: Acts (4x), I Corinthians (once), Hebrews (twice) . . . . . =	7
In the book of the Revelation	24
In the Prison Epistles	0
Total	60

The One Who receives worship in the O.T. is the Lord, sometimes referred to as "The Lord Thy God". In the N.T. (The Revelation) worship is offered to "God", or to "Him that made heaven and earth". But in John, when our Lord spoke to the woman at the well, He says that the "Father" seeks worship.

It is in John iv. that we have at last some instruction about worship. We need to read carefully verses 20-24. The Samaritan woman queries whether worship should be offered "in the mountain" or in Jerusalem. Christ replied that the time was coming when the place and ceremonial worship would no longer be important. God is Spirit and we should worship Him in spirit and in truth. The Father was seeking such to worship Him.

But when we come to the Prison Epistles, we cannot find the Greek word proskuneo. We do find however, the word "worship" in Phil. iii. 3:

> "For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh."

The Greek word for worship here is latreuo and it occurs 21 times, being translated worship 4 times but "to serve" 17 times. The word therefore could be translated "serve" to agree with many other passages. Phil. i. 1 describes Paul as the servant of God. Philippians ii. 17 refers to the "sacrifice and service of your faith". We continue to worship God the Father, Who is worthy, but we no longer worship with outward show. Our true worship is in spirit, and we commune with our Father in heart and mind. So let us seek to do the Father's will and to serve Him faithfully.

Practical Truth in Ephesians (6)

> "And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness (holiness and truth)" (Eph. 4:24).

The next section is described in the structure given by Charles Welch as "the New Man", as follows:

Doctrinal	D	2:11-19	The New Man Once alienated from the commonwealth
Practical	D	4:20-32	The New Man Once alienated from the life of God (see vs. 18)

The new man is a new creation. Let us remind ourselves of the four occurrences of the Greek word ktizo, create:

2:10 Created in Christ Jesus unto good works.
2:15 To make (create) in Himself of twain one new man
3:9 God, Who created all things by Jesus Christ.
4:24 And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness (holiness in truth).

The fact that the new man is a new creation is thus mentioned in both doctrinal and practical sections.

Paul, when writing to the Corinthians, said:

> "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature (creation); old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new" (2 Cor. 5:17).

When we read of what God has created, we are not reading about a gradual transition from one state to another. The old is passed away. All things become new. It is not evolution. It is creation.

Before proceeding further, let us take a bird's eye view of chapter 2 of Ephesians.

Ephesians chapter 2

Spiritual death	a 1-3	Once. Walk. Word and flesh
	b 4	But God. Mercy. Love
Spiritual Life	c 5-10	Made alive together Raised together Made to sit together
Gentiles Distant (in the flesh)	a 11, 12	Once. Gentile. In flesh. In world

Made nigh (in Christ Jesus)	b 13-18 c 19-22	But now. Nigh. One Citizens together Fitly framed together Builded together.

The first part of the chapter reminds us that in times past we were children of disobedience, children of wrath, but we learn the thanksgiving of God's grace (by grace we are saved), and the "exceeding riches" of His grace in His kindness towards us through Christ Jesus.

When we pass on to the following section, there is a dispensational aspect, for whereas we had been reading about Spiritual Death and Life, we are confronted with our distance from God because we are Gentiles in the flesh. The good news is that we are made nigh by the blood of Christ. We have been reconciled to God in One body by the cross. Whereas there were two: those who were far off (i.e. Gentiles), and those who were nigh (Israel), now there is a new company called "the both" or "the twain", which is a new man. We, as Gentiles, were distant from God, now we are made nigh. As Gentiles (uncircumcised) we were without Christ, aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, strangers from the covenants of promise, without hope, without God in the world.

But the blood of Christ Jesus has made all the difference. Christ Jesus our peace, and He has made "the both" one. The middle wall of partition has been broken down and the enmity has been abolished in His flesh; no longer is there division due to commandments and ordinances. We now have access by One Spirit to the Father.

Limitations of space prevent us from making a fuller expression of this theme and explaining in detail the meaning of the term "the middle wall of partition". This can be found in The Testimony of the Lord's Prisoner by Charles Welch, and Letters From Prison by Stuart Allen.

Let us now examine the practical implications of the New Man. This section commences with verse 20, which we quote:

> "But ye have not so learned Christ; if so be that ye have heard Him, and have been taught by Him, as the truth is in Jesus" (Eph. 4:20, 21)

Firstly we note that verse 20 refers back to the previous verses, which are of a negative character. The apostle Paul had been writing of the dreadful state of the Gentiles, who walked in the vanity of their mind, with their understanding darkened, and alienated from the life of God: ignorant, because of the blindness of their hearts. He goes on to speak of unspeakable uncleanness. It reminds us of Romans 1:18-25 where we read that "their foolish heart was darkened" (vs. 21) and "who changed the truth of God unto a lie" (vs. 25)

As we read this section therefore (Eph. 4:20-32) we shall not be surprised that there is a great emphasis on truth, and putting away lying (vs. 25). Charles Welch translates this "putting away the lie" which has a deeper meaning.

Before we pass on, let us have another look at verses 20 and 21: first, verse 20 "But ye have not so learned Christ". We might have thought that this is important to learn the truth, and indeed so it is: there are those things which we quite rightly wish to learn. But Paul concentrates on the essential fact that we need to "learn Christ". He is the Truth, and He is the Great Teacher. We need to know Him (as Paul wrote in Philippians 3:10) and be taught by Him. There is a phrase in verse 21 that may surprise us, for it reads, "…and have been taught by Him, as the truth is in Jesus". This is often misquoted as "the truth as it is in Jesus", but the actual words are "as the truth is in Jesus". The apostle Paul usually gives Christ His exalted name; Christ Jesus, the Lord Jesus Christ, or the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. But here he uses the name by which He was known while on earth. It brings to mind Philippians 2:5-11 where we read that He humbled Himself, became a man, and was obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. He defeated sin and Satan and overcame death. If we learn Christ we need to bear in mind all that He did when He came down to this earth. We are asked to put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to deceitful lusts (vs. 22).

Jesus Christ was both man and God, and it is as man that His example is set before us. The old man in us cannot evolve into a perfect man. By faith, we must reckon the old man, the flesh, to be dead. We died with Christ, Paul writes to Romans:

> "Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life" (Rom. 6:4)

We read in verse 6 of the same chapter:

> "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin".

To read "put off…the old man" is easy, but to put it into practice is a very different matter. Charles Welch says "No believer is told to put off the old man in an absolute manner". This is undertaking beyond the power of any living soul and nothing but the power of the cross of Christ can effectuate it. He goes on to quote Romans 6:6, which we have quoted above. He then comments further and we quote from page 149 of his book The Testimony of the Lord's Prisoner:

> "Three most important divisions of truth are presented in this verse (Rom. 6:6), and failure to apportion its teaching correctly has led some children of God to the brink of despair. The first statement refers to a work entirely outside ourselves: "Our old man was crucified with Him". The verb is passive – indicating something in which we ourselves had not part; it is aorist, an indefinite tense, in this case referring to the past, by reason of the added words, "with Him. No is ever told to crucify the old man; this was the work of the Son of God alone, and is finished. The second statement arises out of the first: "that the body of sin might be rendered inoperative". The body of sin being no longer dominant, the third statement follows: "that henceforth we may no longer be enslaved to sin".
> The "henceforth" of Romans 6:6 finds its parallel in Ephesians 4:17: "that we henceforth walk walk not as other Gentiles walk".

Verse 22 of Ephesians 4, which speaks of putting off the old man, is followed by "and be renewed in the spirit of your mind" in verse 23. Then we are urged to put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and holiness in truth. So in both getting rid of the old man and putting on the new man, we have the work of God. He renews the spirit of the mind and the new man is His creation. Charles Welch translated the latter part of verse 24 as:

> "…the new man which after God is created in righteousness and holiness of THE truth"

and in verse 25;

> "wherefore putting away THE LIE".

He also reminds us of Romans 1:25 where we read that they,

> "…changed the truth of God into a lie and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator ", (or as C.H.W. translates it "changed the truth of God for THE LIFE")

So in our practical life we are caught up in the battle that goes on between truth and error, between The Truth and The Lie. Satan is a "liar" and "the father of it" (John. 8:44). He is the great deceiver, and we must be on our guard lest we say the half truth, for our evidence must be "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth". We should speak "every man truth with his neighbor" for we are members one of another. No corrupt communication should proceed out of the mouth but our words should edify and ministry grace to those who hear. All evil speaking should be put away. What a high standard is set before us! It is not easy to let the unkind word or unacceptable remark pass our lips? The apostle James was aware of this problem when he wrote of the tongue being a little member, but it boasts great things: "Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth!" (James 3:5)

We come now to Ephesians 4:26, which is sometimes quoted as justification for "righteous anger" or "righteous indignation". One suggestion is that this could be read as a question. Can we be angry and sin not? If we are angry, Paul say s that the cause of the indignation should be settled before the sun sets. We should remember that in verse 31 Paul writes that all bitterness, wrath, and anger…should be put away. We should be kind, tenderhearted, forgiving one another as God as forgiven us for Christ's sake. If we are tenderhearted there is little room for righteous indignation.

So we come to the end of this part of the practical section. Le us meditate on the words "but ye have not so learned Christ". May we remember what Christ has taught us, all that He has done of us, and the truth as it is in Jesus. Christ told Pilate that one reason why He came into the world was to bear witness unto the truth, and added "Every one that is of the truth heareth My voice" (John 18:37)

May we be renewed in the spirit of our minds, and may we have grace so we do not grieve the Holy Spirit of God (Eph. 4:30). G.T. Foster

Practical Truth in Ephesians (7)

> "But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ" (Eph. 4:7)

We now have to consider the Temple and the Body, which appear under reference 'E' in the structure:

Doctrinal Section:	E 2:119-22	The Temple fitly framed together
		Apostles and Prophets Foundation Ministry
Practical Section:	E 4:7-19	The Body fitly joined together
		Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists
		Pastors and Teachers
		Adjusting Ministry

Throughout Ephesians there are groups of three, and these are set out for the whole epistle on page 13 of In Heavenly Places. It may be helpful if we set out the two groups in Section 'E':

The Threefold Union	The Threefold Measure
Citizens together	The Gift of Christ
Framed together	The fullness of Christ
Builded together	The measure of every part

As we begin to read Ephesians 2:19-22, we find that we must refer to the earlier part of the chapter, because of the word "therefore": "Now therefore we are not longer strangers and foreigners". We remember that in verse 12 it is recorded that we were aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise. This has changed and peace has been made; the both have been reconciled unto God in one body by the cross. We have access by one Spirit to the Father (verse 18). So now we are fellow citizens and we are linked with the "household" of God.

Charles Welch gives a structure of Ephesians 2:11-22 on page 92 of The Testimony of the Lord's Prisoner which is helpful:

Ephesians 2:11-22

A Once – Strangers and Aliens	\
B Now – Made night	| Body
C Unity – The two made one	|
D Access – In One Spirit	/
A No longer – Strangers and aliens	\
B But – Fellow – Citizens	| Temple
C Unity – Fitly framed together	|
D Habitation – In Spirit	/

The expression “fellow-citizens with the saints” in verse 19 does not at first present a problem until we realize that the Greek reads “fellow-citizens of the saints”. In translating there is another problem because the Greek can be translated ‘holy persons’, or ‘saints’, or ‘holy places’. In Hebrews 9:8 the Greek is translated “the holiest of all” and in 10:19 “the holiest”. In The Testimony of the Lords Prisoner, page 94, Charles Welch lists the passages that are affected by this new translation, and we quote them:

> “What the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the holiest of all” (Eph.1:18)
> “Fellow-citizens in the holiest of all” (Eph. 2:19)
> “For the re-adjusting of the holiest of all” (Eph. 4:12)
> “Made meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the holiest of all” (Col. 1:12)

We also have in Ephesians 2:19 the expression “household of God”, and this leads us to think of a house, or home. Six Greek words are used in verses 19-22 which include the word ‘house’ which in Greek is oikos. As there is so much emphasis on this in the original Greek we list them below:

2:19	Foreigner paroikos……Alongside the house
2:19	Household oikeios…….The family side of the house
2:20	Built epoikodomeo……To build as on a foundation
2:21	Built Together sunoikodomeomai…….To build together as a house
2:22	Habitation katoiketerion..A certain or durable dwelling

God has always desired to dwell with His people: this can be a lengthy study. This subject is covered by Stuart Allen and Charles Welch in their respective books. We are built into a building, fitly framed together, which grows to form a holy Temple in the Lord, and this is to be a habitation, or dwelling place, of God through the Spirit.

The Greek word for ‘temple in Ephesians 2:21 is not hieron which should indicate a temple as a whole, but naos, which means the innermost shrine, the holy of holies, and this is in line with what we have discovered about the translation of the Greek word epouraniois which can mane holy persons or holy places. We should bear this in mind in Ephesians 2:6 where we read “and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus”; and also in Colossians 3:1-4 where in verse 1 we read that we should “seek those things which are above where Christ setteth on the right hand of God”.

The reference to apostles and prophets in 2:20 should not be confused with the 12 apostles. It may help if we quote from Letters from Prison, page 54:

> “The ministry given through the new order of apostles and prophets of which Paul was chief, was a foundation ministry serving the people of God until the New Testament, the written Word of God was completed. This ministry rested upon the one foundation, Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 3:11) for other foundation can no man lay. He is the chief corner stone upon Whom the whole Temple building rests, and in fact the whole purpose of God embracing heaven and earth. Consequently Peter also speaks of the Lord with the same title (1 Pet. 2:6,7)”. (See also In Heavenly Places, pp. 255, 256).

The practical section begins with Ephesians 4:7 “But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ”. We are at once faced with a very personal responsibility to serve the Lord in the sphere in which He has placed us, using the ability and talent He has given us, and doing that task for which He has equipped us. He would not expect anyone to do that for which he (or she) is not fitted. We are members of the Church which is His Body, and just as our own bodies have parts with different functions, so in His body there are many members with different tasks. One has the gift of ministry, another can play the organ, another is suited to be treasurer, another has the ability to write letters which are helpful to others, and in the conduct of work in which we are all engaged.

It would be useless for one with no knowledge of music to attempt to play the organ, or for one who is hopeless with figures to offer his services as treasurer. Similarly, one who is appointed minister or teacher must have the gift and necessary knowledge. He must be “apt to teach”. So it is vital that we ask the Lord to show us how He desires we should serve Him. There are ways of serving the Lord that do not bring us into the limelight, but such work may be essential and important. So much vital work is done quietly and without outward show. Prayer support is like a power house, and those who hold up the work in prayer and intercession support the witness in the privacy of their own homes.

It is noticeable that once we have been shown our particular function, we have the grace given to us so that we may serve the Lord acceptably. But it is also according to “the measure of the gift of Christ”. We are like vessels of different shapes and sizes, so we should ask the Lord to fill our vessel, whether large or small and whatever its shape. We may have a large, or a small measure of the gift of Christ. If we have a large measure, then like the man in the parable who had five talents (Matt. 25:15) we have a greater responsibility, and the Lord will expect more than from one who has a smaller measure.

Before we leave this subject, let us observe the three references to “measure”:

4:7	The measure of the gift of Christ
4:13	The measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ
4:16	The measure of every part

We have concentrated so far on the gifts made to each one of us, but we must notice that in verse 11 we read, “And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers”. Paul was appointed to be “a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles”. He was a gift from God. He was specially chosen and fitted for the important office which he carried out so faithfully. We have already commented on the foundation ministry undertaken by the apostle Paul, and as he completed that work there is no need in these days for apostles. We do need however evangelists, pastors and teachers. Indeed, what a great need there is today for sound teachers! In many parts of the world (and even in our own country) there is much work awaiting the evangelist. For every sphere of service to God gives men, his gift to us, so that His work may continue. Each of these servants asks God to fill his measure.

In verses 12 and 13 we read that Christ gave the apostles, prophets, etc. for the "perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the Body of Christ". The word 'perfecting' means adjusting, mending, or equipping. After the setting aside of Israel there was a need for adjustment as the revelation of the Mystery was made known. The "work of the ministry" does not mean a service restricted to preaching and teaching. Ministry means serving, and therefore has a wider meaning which includes all the various ways of serving the Lord. So every member of the Body of Christ is included in the "work of the ministry", and each member should do his or her part in the building up and edification of the Body of Christ. This work goes on with the objective in verse 13:

> "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ"

Stuart Allen has pointed out that sometimes "faith" is used as the equivalent of a body of truth (e.g. 2 Tim. 4:7), and this verse indicates what constitutes the "good deposit". Knowledge here means full knowledge resulting from acknowledging all the claims that the Lord Jesus Christ has upon us. It is only by living with Him, and endeavoring to do His will that we grow in grace and in our knowledge of Him. Growth is indicated in the closing words of verse 13. The word stature may mean age as well as height, and represents full growth. What a tremendous statement it is, that we should reach the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ! Can we ever fathom the meaning of these words?

Let us pause to consider the references to fullness:

1:23……His Body, the fullness of Him that filleth all in all.
3:19……And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God
4:12, 13…..for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the Body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, and unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

We now come to some negative statements in verse 14:

> "That we be no longer children, tossed to and fro and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, in craftiness, after the wiles of error" (Eph. 4:14 R.V.)

These strong words are directed to those who do not grow up spiritually. As spiritual infants they are a target for Satan, and the system which is called "the Lie". If a person does not mature he is unstable, and easily attracted to the latest new idea. He is like the people of Athens who "spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell, or to hear, some new thing" (Acts 17:21). Stuart Allen comments in Letters From Prison, page 90:

> "These 'winds of doctrine' do not blow by chance. They are directed by the father of lies and so attractively presented by his dupes that the spiritual baby clutches at them readily and is completely deceived".

There are many warnings and helpful remarks by Stuart Allen also on pages 89 to 91, but space does not permit us to quote them here. Let us pass on, then, to verse 15:

> "But speaking the truth in love, may grow up in all things into Him, which is the Head, even Christ" (R.V.)

We are again faced with the truth (as opposed to the "lie"), and the importance of growing up. The words "speaking the truth" are literally "holding the truth in love". The sense is (as Stuart Allen states) "rather living and acting the truth that the Apostle has in mind. It is the antidote to the spiritual duplicity of the previous verse". We should be in union with the Head, so that we grow up into Him, becoming a mature Christian. But verse 16 follows verse 15 without a full stop:

> "From Whom all the Body fitly framed and knit together through that which every joint supplieth, according to the working in due measure of each several part, maketh the increase of the Body unto the building up of itself in love" (Eph. 4:16 R.V.)

The Body is "fitly framed and knit together". The Greek is the same as in Ephesians 2:21, which related to the holy temple, a habitation of God through the Spirit. In our bodies, if we are healthy, all the members fit together, are joined together, and work together. We are not conscious of all the members, unless one member is sick. Then, the member fails to work together as it should and there is pain, or the bodily function is impaired. The Body spiritual is similar. If we work together in harmony we are not conscious of each other, but if one member fails to work in unison there is irritation, trouble, or ill will. In Colossians 2:19 we read of "joints and bands", or joints and ligaments. These enable the body to be joined together as one body. Colossians 2:2 says "being knit together in love".

The joints themselves are not the origin of the supplies. The reason why we have the supply is because the Lord does the supplying. The joints act as channels through which the supply comes.

"Every joint supplieth" may be translated "through every joint of supply". The body functions "according to the effectual working in the measure of every part", and this effectual working is made possible by the life-giving energy, the resurrection power of God.

The climax comes in the last phrase "maketh increase of the Body unto the edifying of itself in love". The final result must be the growth of the Body, the building up of the Body, and in this growth every member must share and do its part.

So however small and insignificant we may feel ourselves to be, we each in our measure have a part assigned to us by God. We are given grace, according to the gift of Christ. Each on has been appointed to his or her personal task. It is indeed an honour to be thus employed by God to fulfill His purpose. May we be filled with all the fullness of God.

Practical Truth in Ephesians (8)

> "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith yea are called" (Eph. 4:1)

The apostle Paul is described in Ephesians 3:1 as "the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles" and in Ephesians 4:1 as "the prisoner of the Lord". So, in C.H. Welch's structure we have:

Doctrinal Section	F 3:1-13	The prisoner of Jesus Christ Three-fold unity (vs. 6)
Practical Section	F 4:1-6	The prisoner of the Lord Seven-fold unity (vs. 3-6)

No doubt most of us have read Ephesians so often that there is a danger that the import of come of the words may escape us. To read it in another translation might restore some of its freshness, so we will quote the first part of the Doctrinal section in the rendering by Moffatt:

> "For this reason I Paul, I whom Christ Jesus has made a prisoner for the sake of you Gentiles – for surely you have heard how the grace of God which was vouchasafed me in your interests has ordered it, how the divine secret was disclosed to me by a revelation
> (if you read what I have already written briefly about this, you can understand my insight into that secret was not disclosed to the sons o men in other generations as it has now been revealed to His sacred apostles and prophets by the Spirit), > namely, that in Christ Jesus the Gentiles are co-heirs, companions, and co-partners in the Promise. Such is the gospel which I was called to serve by the endowment of God's grace which was vouch-safed me, by the energy of His power…"

The words "For this reason" occur in verses 1 and 14, and in verses 2 to 13 we have a parenthesis, which contains an explanation why he was called "the prisoner of Jesus Christ (R.V. Christ Jesus) for you Gentiles".

In the Authorised Version verse 2 begins "If ye have heard which may imply some measure of doubt. Moffatt translates it "Surely you have heard", and other renderings are "If so be that" or "Seeing that doubtless". Thus, there is no question of doubt but rather that they are being reminded of something they had already heard.

We may be puzzled by the statement in verse 3 "as I wrote before in a few words", for we have no record of other writings by Paul to link with this statement. But it is probable that the "few words" are a reference to what he had written earlier in the Epistle to the Ephesians. If we look at chapters 1 and 2 we find at least seven phrases which tell us of God's wonderful grace and blessing, and these are revelations which were not known in his earlier writings.

Here are the seven phrases taken from chapters 1 and 2:

1:3	all spiritual blessings
1:3	in heavenly places
1:4	chosen in Him before the foundation (overthrow)of the word
2:6	made us sit together in heavenly places
2:15	to make of the twain one new man
2:19	no longer foreigners
2:22	a habitation of God

We might add two references to the headship of Christ:

1:10	He might gather together in one all things in Christ
1:20-23	Gave Him to be Head over all things to the Church

There are two mysteries (secrets) mentioned in chapter 3, and the brackets in the text of the Authorised Version appear in a different position in Moffatt's translation, whereas in the Revised Version the brackets are omitted. Moffatt therefore reads "how the divine secret was disclosed to me by a revelation…namely, that in Christ Jesus the Gentiles are co-heirs…" The interviewing verses are thus related to the mystery of Christ, which was not disclosed to the sons of men in other generations as it has now been revealed.

The Mystery (sometimes referred to as "the great secret" to distinguish it from other secrets) concerns our position as members of the Church which is His Body. When we think of our own bodies, some members are more important than others, but in the Body of Christ, all members are regarded as equal. The prefix sun is compounded with three Greek words in verse 6, which the Revised Version translates:

fellow heirs
fellow-members of the Body fellow partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus through the Gospel

It is difficult to make a good English translation to reflect the meaning of the prefix sun. One suggestion is to use the word "joint", and so we have joint-heirs, a joint-body, and joint-partakers.

Paul always felt unworthy of the great honour of making know the Secret, for the had persecuted the church during the early part of the "Acts" period. What a tremendous message it is! The Secret concerns wonderful blessing in heaven's holiest of all. But Paul acknowledged that he received the gift of the grace of God, by the effectual working of His power. His task was to preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable (untraceable riches of Christ. But what a great responsibility – to make all men see what is the fellowship (dispensation R.V.) of the Mystery (Secret) which from the beginning of the world (R.V. "which from all ages") hath been hid in God…

The amazing fact disclosed in verse 10 is that the principalities and powers in heavenly places are observing the church and learning "the manifold wisdom of God", according to the eternal purpose in Christ Jesus our Lord.

The section closes with another of our wonderful blessings, for in Christ "we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of Him". Wherefore, says Paul, I desire that ye faint not at my tribulations for you, which is your glory.

Having briefly surveyed the doctrinal section, let us examine the practical section which only occupies six verses. Ephesians 4:1-6 begins with the title "the prisoner of the Lord". On page 329 of In Heavenly Places Charles Welch refers to the sixteen occurrences of the title "Lord" standing alone in the epistle, and demonstrates that:

"In Christ" expresses our doctrinal position - our standing.
"In the Lord" indicates our practical relationship - our state.

Paul exhorts us to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called. The Greek for "worthy" is suggestive of a pair of balances and implies that our walk should balance our calling. When we consider the tremendous blessings which are described in the doctrinal section, we are conscious of the heavy responsibility that falls on us and we may doubt our ability walk worthy of our calling. But we recognize that we can only live acceptably by the grace of God and in the strength that He gives us. We remember Paul says in Ephesians 6:10 "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might".

The worthy walk is expressed in three ways:

Eph. 4:1 walk worthy of the vocation
Phil. 1:27 as becometh the gospel of Christ
Col. 1:10 walk worthy of the Lord

The essential attitude of mind is expressed by Paul in the words, lowliness, meekness, long-suffering, forbearance, and love. He follows this by urging us to endeavor to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace". To walk worthy of our vocations is not easy, but is it not just as difficult to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace? Paul wrote to the Corinthians about the divisions that had taken place. Some followed Paul, some Apollos, others Cephas, and some said "I am of Christ". We have to be faithful to the truth this may cause us to face difficulty in maintaining a spirit of unity. The hymn writer expresses it:

Believe not those who say
The upward path is smooth,
Lest thou shouldest stumble in the way and faint before the truth.

Did Paul himself find it hard to maintain unity? Read Acts 15:36-41. Paul did not think that Mark was suitable to join with him in ministry, but Barnabas took a different view. We read "the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder on from the other".

We note Paul wrote "endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit", and probably he was acknowledging that our "endeavors" may not always be successful. Yet we are all members of the Church which is His Body and we are fitly joined together. If there is a lowly spirit, if we forbear in love, we should not be divided one from the other, even if differences of opinion arise.

Paul now sets out the sevenfold unity in verses 4-6, and we give the structure:

A One Body
B One Spirit
C One Hope of the calling
D ONE LORD
C One Faith
B One Baptism
A One God and Father

If we are to walk worthily and in the unity of the Spirit, there must be a basis on which we unite. If we disagree on a vital issue, how can we be united? The prophet Amos said "Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" (3:3). In the list of seven we have our foundation of the unity which should hold us together. We can only deal briefly with the seven owing to the demands of space.

ONE LORD. The central feature in One Lord. Without our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, we would have no salvation. Without the risen and ascended Lord, how can we be risen with Him? And seated with Him? Not until we realize that Christ is the Head, can we see our position as members of the One Body. If we did not know Christ as the risen Son of God, how would we know the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ? All our hope rests on the Lord Jesus Christ. He is the centre, or better still we may say "all things were created by Him and for Him; and He is before all things and by Him all things consist" (Col. 1:16,17)

ONE BODY. The church of the One Body is a new creation and Christ as its Head; its hope is to be manifested with Him in glory, far above all. The Mystery which reveals the distinctive standing of the One Body, a joint body, is vital. It is a doctrine which we must hold, and truth that we must guard.

ONE SPIRIT. Let us remind ourselves of the references to the Spirit in Ephesians:

> "For through Him, we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father" (Eph. 2:18)
>
> "…ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. 1:13,14)
>
> "And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption" (Eph. 4:30)

ONE HOPE. Our One Hope is bound up with our calling as is obvious from the way is introduced in verse 4, "There is one body and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling". In chapter 2, Paul says we were raised up together and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, that in the ages to come He might shew the exceeding riches of His grace in His kindness toward us through Christ Jesus. In Colossians 3:4 we read, “When Christ, Who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory”.

ONE FAITH. The One Faith reflects the One Hope of our calling. Stuart Allen suggests that faith and truth go together and faith and truth are like two sides of the same coin. The One Faith is the “good deposit” of truth which was passed to Paul by the risen Christ, and Timothy was exhorted to guard it. In Ephesians 4:13, we read of the need to build up or edify the Body of Christ “till we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God”.

ONE BAPTISM. For a full exposition we refer our readers to the book entitled Letters from Prison by Stuart Allen. In the structure, One Baptism is balanced by One Spirit. In olden days, water baptism, or washing, was the rule. During the Acts period, water and Spirit baptism are in evidence. The One Baptism must refer then to the baptism by the Holy Spirit Who has sealed us unto the day of redemption.

ONE GOD AND FATHER. We have a problem here for Ephesians 4:6 reads “One God and Father of all, Who is over all, and through all, and in all” (R.V.) If “all” is equivalent to “universal” we approach the doctrine of the universal Fatherhood of God. But in John 1:12 we find “But as many received Him (Christ), to them gave He the right to become the children of God” (R.V.).

The word “all” must be interpreted according to the context and it may be limited thereby. In our text, as the context concerns the members of the Body, “all” must be interpreted to related to the members of the Body.

To include this article, we will quote from Letters from Prison, page 84:

> “Here then we have the first stage of a walk that is worthy of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, namely seven perfect parts of a perfect unity made by the Spirit of God, which we are charged to keep and guard, where Christ is pre-eminent, the Father is all in all and the Spirit gives the substance and reality of spiritual riches that are beyond the full comprehension of the human mind”.

Practical Truth in Ephesians (9)

“That ye may be filled unto all fullness of God (Eph. 3:19 R.V.)

A brief reference to the central prayer in Ephesians was made in the fourth article, but as this prayer is of such great importance, let us meditate upon it in our closing article on Practical Truth in Paul’s letter to the Ephesians.

In the structure given by Charles Welch, this prayer appears under item G, this:

G. Eph. 3:14-21 The Central Prayer
The love of Christ
The fullness of God

Verse 14 begins with the words "For this cause", with which Paul began in verse 1, but he had to pause in order to give the reason why he was "the prisoner of Christ Jesus in behalf of you Gentiles", and to enlarge upon "the dispensation of that grace of God which was given to you-ward (R.V.). So the introduction "For this cause" takes us back to chapter 2 where Paul speaks of a building, growing into a holy temple of the Lord, which will be a habitation of God in the Spirit. The picture in chapter 2 is of the whole church being built up, to become a temple, but when we come to chapter 3, we notice that it is the individual believer who is the object of prayer; for in verse 17 Paul prays that "Christ may dwell in your hearts through faith".

Before Paul utters the prayer in verse 17 he prays that the Ephesians may be strengthened, and a moment's reflection will enable us to realize that, if Christ is to dwell in our hearts through faith, then our hearts need to be prepared to receive such a visitor. In our daily lives, if we expect an important visitor, what great preparations do we make! Surely if we are to entertain the Lord Himself, suitable preparations are essential. Paul says, you will need power, through the Spirit, and later he says, we need to be strong if we are to apprehend (or comprehend) the four dimensions of the love of Christ. In this prayer, we are facing the fact that we need to have practical experience of fellowship with Christ in anticipation of the time when we shall be seated with Him at God's right hand. Is it not true that life on this earth is to prepare us for the life we shall enjoy hereafter?

The prayer is divided into three sections by the Greek word hina, which means "in order that". Charles Welch's structure brings this to our attention:

V Prayer i. v.14 Prayer to the Father
j. v.15 Every family in heaven and earth

W Threefold petition and threefold enduement.
k v.16 In order that \ According to the riches
l. vv. 16, 17 He may grant \ of glory. Strengthened k v.18 In order that | with might
l. v. 18 You may comprehend / To have strength enough k v.19 In order that \ Able to do according to l vv. 19, 20 You may be filled | power that worketh in us

/

V Doxology i v.21 Glory to Him
j v.21 All the generations of the ages of the ages.

"For this cause, I bow my knees unto the Father, from Whom every family in heaven and on earth is name" (Eph. 3:14, 15 R.V.).

We notice that the R.V. differs from the A.V. for the words in verse 14 "of our Lord Jesus Christ" do not appear in the Revised Version as they do not appear in various texts. Also in verse 15, instead of "the whole family", the Revised Version reads "every family", which is the literal translation.

> "That (in order that) He would grant you, according to the riches of His glory, that ye may be strengthened with power through His Spirit in the inward man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts through faith; to the end…(Eph. 3:16, 17 (a) R.V.)

If reference is made to the Englishman's Greek New Testament, it will be seen that hina (to the end) belongs to verse 18. In both the A.V. and the R.V. the last part of verse 17 needs to be linked with verse 18. So we will continue verse 17 and follow through:

> "…to the end that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be strong to apprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the love of Christ , which passeth knowledge" (Eph. 3:17 (b), 18, 19(a).

In Ephesians 1:19 Paul prays that the Ephesians may know what is the exceeding greatness of His power, according to the working of the strength of His might, which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead. Now, in this central prayer, it is this mighty power that is envisaged, "that ye may be strengthened with power through His Spirit in the inward ma". This shows the extent to which we need to be strengthened if Christ is to dwell in our hearts through faith.

Although this experience would seem to be the highest pinnacle to which we might aspire, when we examine the next verses and read about the love of Christ, we find that words can hardly express the greatness of that love. It is a love of four dimensions, and a love which "passeth knowledge" or it is the "surpassing knowledge".

We are to "apprehend" the breadth, length, depth, and height, and to "know" the love of Christ which passeth knowledge.

Also, in verse 19, there is a particle te which may be introduced in translation thus:

> "to know even that which surpasses knowledge"

Charles Welch discusses the "spiritual fourth dimension" in some detail in the testimony of the Lord's Prisoner, pages 101 and 102,* but we extract the headings to indicate the line of thought:

First Sphere	The earth	Two dimensions
Second Sphere	The New Jerusalem	Three dimensions
Third Sphere	The Heavenly Places	Four dimensions

We are "rooted and grounded" in love. At first sight these two figures seem to be strangely mixed. Rooted relates to a plan while grounded and founded relate to a building. If we refer to chapter 2, we find that the holy temple is being built up and the saints are built upon a foundation, Christ Jesus being the chief corner stone. The stones are alive, they are living stones similar to what Peter describes in a parallel passage in 1 Peter 2:5. So the two figures are quite suitable.

> "…that (in order that) ye may be filled unto all the fullness of God" (Eph. 3:19 (b) R.V.).

The Authorised Version reads “that ye may be filled with all the fullness of God”. It seems to be impossible that we should be capable of being filled with “all the fullness of God” and the Revised Version is a literal and correct translation. We have seen in previous studies that grace is given according to the measure of the gift of Christ (Eph.4:7), and the growth of the Body is “according to the effectual working in the measure of every part”. The capacity of each member differs; we are all like vessels of various shapes and sizes. So we are filled with the fullness of God according to the measure he has seen fit to give u. Stuart Allen has well expressed it by writing that we can be filled “to the brim”.

As we come to the wonderful doxology, may we pause, and go back to review again the threefold petition, which is linked so emphatically and increasingly with strength and power. The prayer leads us to such spiritual heights that we cannot contemplate them without the help of the Spirit of God, and we cannot experience those blessings unless resurrection power is granted us.

We have already commented that in verses 16 and 17, Paul prays that the Father would grant, according to the riches of His glory, that they may be strengthened with power through His Spirit in the inward man, and this strengthening is the essential preparation for the dwelling of Christ in our hearts. Then, as Paul proceeds in the prayer that they may apprehend the extent, and to know, the love of Christ, he prays that they may be strong. In C.H.Welch’s structure he uses a different translation, “may have strength enough”. The literal translation is “they ye may be fully able to comprehend”. It appears that to know how great and extensive is the love of Christ, we need extra strength.

Then we have the prayer that we may be filled unto all fullness of God, and immediately afterwards, in the doxology, we find the expression “according to the power that worketh in us”. He is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. What more could be said! How great is His power and how great is the power that is working in us! We certainly need that power if we are to be filled unto all the fullness of God. Let us join with Paul and ascribe to Him the glory: “To Him be the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations for ever and ever. Amen” (3:21).

For the benefit of those readers who do not possess Hymns of Praise, we would like to share hymn No.16, which was written by “A Friend” on Ephesians 3:19:

Filled with all the fullness, can it be
For Gentile strangers such as we?
We who the paths of sin have trod,
As aliens from the life of God.

Yes, ‘tis for us, for Christ has died,
Now quickened, risen, glorified;
Seated with Him at God’s right hand:
Complete in Him, by faith we stand

May the same mighty power to save,
That brought our Saviour from the grave,
Strength to our inward man inpart,
That Christ my dwell within our heart.

Then will all saints in every land
We’ll in some measure understand
The love of Christ, that shoreless sea
That saves and keeps eternally.

Final note.

In these nine articles we have endeavored to cover the practical sections of Ephesians, linking the appropriate doctrinal section with each practical section. To condense the material to match the available space it was necessary to omit a great deal but we hope that we have been able to include the most important points. If these articles encourage readers to study Ephesians in greater detail we shall have achieved our purpose. There is much helpful exposition in the following books:

(2) The Testimony of the Lord’s Prisoner (C.H.Welch)
(3) *In Heavenly Places (C.H.Welch)

The Ministry of Consolation

No.3

"Together, with them" (1 Thess. 4:17)

The view which the enlightened believer upon conversion receives of the carnal nature, often produces in certain minds an unscriptural repudiation of homely and domestic affections. To such their Lord is 'an austere man', and holiness is synonymous with mortification. To such the possibility of practical combination of holiness and natural affection does not seem possible. The Apostle when foretelling the apostate times of the end could place side by side, "unholy, without natural affection" (2 Tim.3:1,2) and could enjoin young widows to remarry (1 Tim.5:14).

To that man of God there was nothing carnal in the full appreciation of God's Fatherly care, and while being thoroughly conversant with the joys of independence in the midst of privation, he could nevertheless write of creature comforts, that God had given them "richly to enjoy".

There are many, who by the workings of the selfsame austerity, are deprived of the 'comfort of the Scriptures' with references to "that blessed hope". Waiving for a moment the dispensational position of 1 Thessalonians 4, and seeking from it the comfort for which it was primarily written, we would draw attention to one feature which has gripped our own hearts, and turned tears of sorrow into those of joy. The austere view, touched upon above, tends to rule out the God-given natural affection that should find a sanctified place in the hope of the believer. True it is that our hope is not to meet the Lord, be with Him and be like Him, whether the meeting take place on earth, in the air, or far above all.

Some there are who have become persuaded that the meeting once again of loved ones is not to be uttered in the same breath. Yet, we feel sure that many whose lips with all sincerity give utterance to these self-effacing words, will often feel their hearts crying out for the assurance that the hope of meeting their Lord need not banish into the background the hope of meeting their loved ones too.

It is here where the consolation of the Scripture is fuller and kinder than the conceptions of man. The Divine order we find in 1 Thess. 4:17 is "together with them…to meet the Lord". There will be no furtive glances, no aching hearts, when we enter into the presence of the Saviour. All we have loved and lost in the faith shall meet again, and TOGETHER WITH THEM (and not otherwise) shall we MEET THE LORD, and ever in unbroken unity be with Him.

"Wherefore comfort one another with these words" (verse 18).
